

Surging Tech looks for sweep of Sooners

RECORD SETTER:
Tech shortstop Gera Alvarez seeks record-hitting streak tonight.

By Matt Muench/Sports Editor

Texas Tech officials are slating tonight's Red Raider baseball game as "Operation Sell Out."

Tech first baseman Bryan Smith has another idea — "Operation Sweep."

Both operations begin tonight when the Raiders square off with Oklahoma in the first game of a crucial Big 12 Conference series at 7 p.m. at Dan Law Field. Game two is scheduled for noon Saturday and the finale is set for 1 p.m. Sunday.

Smith said a sweep is definitely what Tech wants, but it is important Tech does not look too far ahead of themselves.

"We know every game is must win, but we can't say we are going to win every game or not," Smith said. "We are playing at home, and if we play like we can, we should come out of here with a sweep."

For the record, Tech shortstop Gera Alvarez has another operation going. He is working on a 28-game hitting streak and has a chance this weekend to tie and set the school record of 29 games set by Keith Ginter in 1997.

A humble Alvarez said he is not focusing on the hit streak as much as the Big 12 standings, but if the record happens, he will take it. If the record does not get set, he will not worry about it.

"Hopefully, the ball keeps coming my way," he said. "If I can do it, it's an amazing thing I can do. But if I don't, it's no big deal. I'll still be playing the next day."

Tech enters the weekend in seventh place one slot behind Oklahoma.

How crucial is this three-game set? Smith said it is the most important series for them to date.

His reason? Tech needs to help its chance of reaching the NCAA regional tournament next month.

"From here on out, every game is a playoff atmosphere because we know wins and losses are going to depict if we make regionals or not," he said. "We feel the Big 12 race is out of our hands. But as long as we go to regionals, that is when the good stuff starts to happen."

Tech is on a six-game winning streak after sweeping Texas A&M-Corpus Christi last weekend. The winning streak is the most string of victories since a six-game stretch in mid-February.

Alvarez said Tech has not been this confident entering a series since Big 12 action began.

"We are playing hot right now, and hopefully, we will take that momentum into the series against Oklahoma," he said.

The Sooners have not played a Big 12 series in two weeks since losing two out of three against first-place Texas.

However, since then, the Sooners have won four of their last six games.

The Sooner pitching staff has struggled, though.

They have the second worst ERA in the conference.

But Smith said Tech does not worry about that.

He said they pitch in the Big 12 and every pitcher is going to bring it at them this weekend.

"They are in the Big 12, and they are starters," he said. "They are going to be good pitchers. Hopefully, we can catch them on a bad day and take advantage of them. That is our goal."

Following the OU series, Tech has six more games remaining on the regular season schedule. Tech has a three-game non-conference series against Texas-Pan American May 10-13.

The Red Raiders conclude the season with a three-game Big 12 set against Baylor May 17-20. All six games will be played at The Law.

I give to you the inaugural Raider Strongman Awards

The end of the year is near. Hey, that rhymes in time.

It is time to reflect back on my first year at The UD and see what has been great and not so great about it.

I give you the Strongman Awards. Winners can be proud to have an imaginary statue of me — The D-Man on their mantle.

The first category is for the coolest thing I saw all year: The winner is Jia Perkins (I think). After a pre-game warm-up for the Lady Raider-Rice game Dec. 5 Perkins shot a ball from the tunnel as the team exited the court. Michael Jordan could not have made that shot, but Jia managed to hit nothing but nylon. My friend Jason and I had to be the only people in the United Spirit Arena that saw this amazing feat. I bet she could not hit that shot again if she had a whole rack of balls to shoot.

Richard Crabtree from the men's tennis team gets an award for Quote of the Year. Richard said about the team's match with UT-San Antonio, "We basically want to kick their ass." Beautiful, Rich. Congratulations. You kicked ass.

The Sheep Award goes to the Aggies and Tech administration. Everyone assumed the goal post melee was the fault of Tech students. Tech apologized before realizing it was not Tech's fault. Smart move — admit your students did it without knowing the whole story. It is a shame some Tech officials got sucked into the cult-like behavior of the Aggies. One friend of mine who attends A&M still claims the Lubbock media "doctored" the video to make it look like Mike McKinney initiated some of the activity. Tech followed the crowd because it did not think there was another option.

The Best Sporting Event: Tech volleyball vs. Baylor (Nov. 21). This match went the distance with Tech winning 3-2. It was tight all the way to the end. The team was emotional and more fired up than I noticed all season. A personal rivalry seemed to emerge between Angela Mooney and Stevie Nichols of Baylor as the two traded blows all night. Angela stuffed Nichols a number of times. Each time Mooney would stare her down and let Nicholas know who's the boss. Look out for their next in-town match up Nov. 13.

The Upright and Need to Learn to Take a Joke Award lands on every Cowboy fans' fireplace. To all those who were outraged with my first column, be aware of the fact that many of you are just like sheep as well. The need to question my manhood or call me an "ignorant m***** f*****" are all uncalled for. Just because I do not hold your team with as much regard as you, you found it necessary to barrage me with hotheaded comments that were not well thought out.

Congrats to all the winners. Maybe next year you will get a likeness of me to show all your friends.

Tech seniors disappointed at season as careers end

By David Wiechmann/Staff Writer

It has been a roller coaster ride, but this weekend it will be over.

The Texas Tech softball team will play its final series of the season Saturday at 2 p.m. and Sunday at noon against the No. 4 Nebraska Cornhuskers.

The Red Raider seniors said it will be a tough series, and they hate to see their careers come to an end.

"I'm not ready for it to be over yet," second baseman Rebecca Eimen said. "Especially because of the way this season has gone. You never want your last season to go the way this one has."

Leftfielder Eva Harshman said she wished the end would never have to come, but everyone has to move on.

"This is it," Harshman said. "It's sad that it's going to end, but it has to sometime."

First baseman Carmen Grindell said the hardships the team suffered this season make it more difficult to play the last game of her career.

"This has not been a particularly good year, and you hope that your career will not end that way," Grindell said. "But the girls were still awesome all year, and we got through it. It will still hurt, though, knowing that will be our last game."

Harshman also said the team's unity helped her, and the rest of the Raiders get through the tough times.

"This has not been a storybook season," Harshman said. "But I had storybook teammates. That helped a lot that the team came together and never got down. I think that helped us all get through the season."

Eimen said if Tech can take a win from Nebraska, that would be a huge boost of confidence for the Big 12 Tournament and be a good ending for her last season on the diamond.

"This is a season I really want to forget," Eimen said. "You always want your last game as a senior to be a win." Win or lose, Harshman said she wants to get out of feeling her team gave its best effort.

This has not been a storybook season. But I had storybook teammates.

— EVA HARSHMAN
Texas Tech Outfielder

"Everybody wants their senior year to end on a positive note," Harshman said. "That positive note doesn't necessarily have to be a win. If we play to win and have a good game, I'll be happy."

Tech is bringing some momentum into this weekend's series. The Raiders are coming off a 9-1 victory against Missouri. The bats came alive with 13 hits. Pitcher Maggie Ayres threw her second consecutive complete game as all three aspects of the game clicked for the Raiders.

Offense, pitching and defense have had trouble working well on the same day for Tech this season, and Harshman believes their last win is a sign of what the Raiders can do this weekend.

"That recent win reminds us of what we can do," Harshman said. "We really destroyed Missouri, and that's a great feeling. I think we can use that going into this weekend."

Grindell said the team proved it can play with any team in the conference, and Nebraska should not be any different.

"It doesn't matter who we play, like the Texas game, they're No. 1 in the conference, and we came out and gave them two good games," Grindell said. "It just depends on what we do."

Tech volleyball pair selected to be on U.S. Under 20 team

By David Wiechmann/Staff Writer

Some Texas Tech students go home for the summer. Some get internships. Two Tech volleyball players will get to play in Europe as members of the U.S.A Under 20 Select Team.

Kelly Johnson and Angela Mooney both were named to the team and will be traveling in Italy for 10 days this summer.

Mooney said it will be a good opportunity to stay in shape and be ready for Tech's season in the fall.

"I think this will be a very good experience for Kelly and I," Mooney said. "We will still be able to play all summer, and we will have some added confidence when we come back for the fall."

Tech coach Jeff Nelson said it is an opportunity the two should not let slip away.

"I think this is a great opportunity for them, and it will be a great experience," Nelson said. "Anytime you get to play internationally is awesome, and playing in Italy where the volleyball is great will be good for them."

Mooney said she was happy to hear of her selection and was definitely going to accept the offer.

"Coach Nelson told me I made the team and asked if I would take it," Mooney said. "It's the opportunity of a lifetime, and I don't know why would you want to turn down an opportunity like that. I'm really excited about it."

Sixteen women have been named to the team, and with two Red Raiders on the squad, Tech's name will be spread even more, Mooney said.

"I think this shows that our program is on the uprise, and we are competitive," Mooney said. "We may not have been a team that finished in the top of the conference, but we do have good players that come here."

Nelson said this is nothing new for Tech, but it is still good exposure for Tech.

"Coleen (Smith) did something similar playing internationally," Nelson said. "I think this is the next step to involving more people in our program. Kelly and Angela are hard workers, and they're intense, so I see this as a great opportunity for them to go and do well."

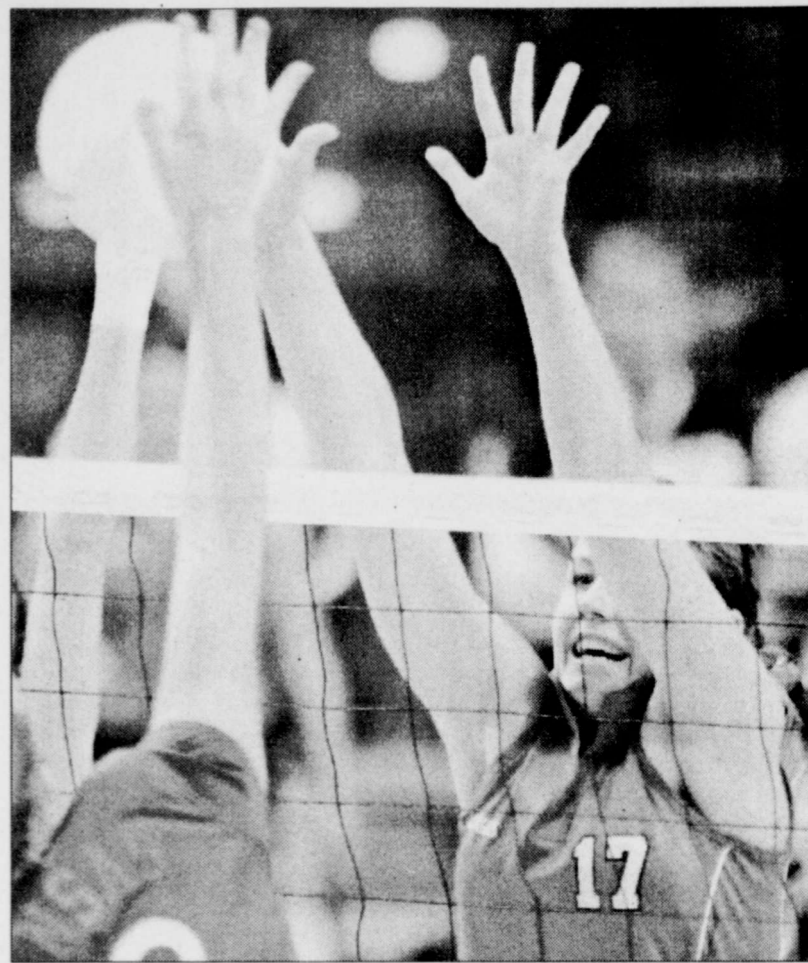

Johnson and Mooney may be able to take their hard work with them and come home better than when they left, Nelson said.

"I don't think in a week or two they can't technically become better players," Nelson said. "But if this gives them more confidence, that will make them better players. That is what we want to happen with this."

Mooney thinks the experience will be able to carry over into the fall as well.

"The European style is very different," Mooney said. "Their players are more mature, and I think playing over there will help us for next season, especially on defense. It's an elite class of athletes over there."

Johnson could not be reached for question and comment.

UMC planning $32-million expansion project

By Jenny Klein/Staff Reporter

University Medical Center hopes to expand its facility by two floors with a proposal being presented to the County Commissioners Court for the issuance of $32 million in revenue bonds to fund the renovations.

The Hospital District Board of Managers approved the plans for the expansion Monday, and the proposal is expected to go before the County Commissioners Court May 13.

UMC wants to add a fifth and sixth floor to the structure to make room for more beds, said Tony Whitehead, Hospital District Board of Managers chairman. The hospital has been experiencing a shortage in adult beds for about two years.

"We've had a real strain on adult beds and trying to make adjustments to accommodate the patients. We wanted to see if the demand was only temporary, but it turns out it wasn't," Whitehead said.

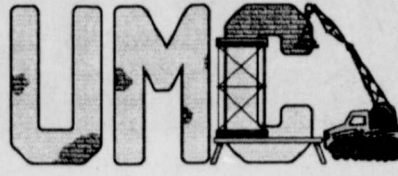

The fifth floor would contain an additional 45 adult beds to the 360 already in the facility, Whitehead said. The sixth floor would be "shelved in" for future constructions.

David Allison, chief executive officer at UMC, said it is time for growth because of the increase in patients over the past year.

"Everybody's sick. On certain days, we would have to turn patients away," Allison said.

The hospital did its best to accommodate the patients, but there just was not always enough room, he said. Not having enough room to treat patients who need to be hospitalized is a pressing issue that needs to be addressed. The extra beds will take some of the pressure off the hospital and patients.

Allison said he does not expect those beds to fill right away, but just to have them there when an abundance of patients come in is a source of comfort. The beds will help meet the hospital's peak demand during the cold and flu season, which runs from October to March.

During this year's cold and flu season, Allison said, the hospital was "out of beds more often than not."

Though the UMC has gained the support of the Hospital Board, the commissioners still have to approve the plan. Allison said he expects the full support of the commissioners because the hospital has kept them updated on the bed shortages over the past year.

"I anticipate they will approve," Allison said. "We would not bring something like this forward if we didn't have some insurances that it would get passed."

Patti Jones, county commissioner in Precinct 4, said the proposal is on the agenda for the May 13 meeting and a presentation is expected from UMC officials.

"They are presenting all the plans for the facility expansion and renovation. We will make a decision that day, either one way or another," Jones said.

The plan includes the issuance of the $32 million in bonds, which does not have to be approved by the taxpayers because it will not cost them anything, Jones said. The project will be funded through revenue bonds, which are repaid through the revenue of the hospital from the expansion.

The projected cost of constructing the additional floors is $18.6 million.

First Senate meeting outlines expectations

REPRESENTATION:

Senators are expected to find Tech students' needs for the Fall term.

By April Tamplen/Staff Reporter

The 38th session of the Texas Tech Student Senate met Thursday in the Student Union Senate Room to discuss rules and expectations for the next year.

Jeremy Brown, internal vice president for the Student Government Association, serves as president of the Student Senate.

Brown said he expects the new senators to take their job seriously because they are elected by the students.

"The new senators need to realize they were elected to represent the students," he said. "I know some senators in the past have not taken this job as seriously as they should. I expect them to do more than just come to meetings; they need to hear what the students want."

Brown said the reason for the first Senate meeting is to have the oppor-

"I thought the first meeting went really quick but well," he said. "We had no resolutions, but it showed the new senators how things will go next year."

MARCHING IN THE RAIN

Students and Lubbock citizens brave the rain to protest violence

By Jenny Klein/Staff Reporter

Tammie Stansel was just like any other 18-year-old, freshman college student in 1998.

She had just finished her second semester at Texas Tech and was gearing up for finals, and like so many other students at Tech, she went out to have a good time the evening of April 29, which was Dead Day.

Little did she know the night would end with her being sexually assaulted by a man she met at a bar that night.

Stansel and all the other rape victims around the world are the reason why members of the Tech and Lubbock community gathered Thursday evening to march down Broadway to the Tech campus in the pouring rain for the second annual Take Back the Night March.

"Rape doesn't stop for the rain so neither should we," Jessica Patton, president of the Tech Feminist Majority Leadership Alliance and organizer of the event, said.

Though only 14 people participated in the march, others joined them in Holden Hall to listen to tales of rape and facts as presented by a representative from the Lubbock Rape Crisis Center.

"It really means a lot to me and other survivors for people to come out to this event," Stansel said.

After a night of drinking and mingling with friends, Stansel left a bar with a man she barely knew. The man suggested they go riding around to get to know each other a little better, Stansel said.

Stansel had been talking to the man throughout the night so she said she felt safe enough to go with him. The man drove her about five miles out of town and raped her.

"We were just riding around, and the next thing I knew, we were outside of town," Stansel said. "I didn't fully think I was in danger, but it was just like a feeling of weirdness and feeling awkward."

Though Stansel repeatedly told the man to stop, it was like "I was talking to a zombie," she said.

"I grabbed his face and looked him right in the eyes and said 'I'm not having sex with you,' but then it happened anyways," Stansel said.

Guiliani to address company shareholders in Lubbock

By Jenny Klein/Staff Reporter

Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani is going to be in Lubbock today for a private luncheon at Lubbock Country Club.

Plains Capital Corp., the holding company for PNB Financial, invited Giuliani as a guest to speak to the company's shareholders.

"He's just a public figure head we had chose to be our guest speaker," a PNB executive director said. "We want to honor him as a guest of this company."

PNB officials were unable to comment on further detail of Giuliani's low-key visit because of the terms of his contract. The luncheon will be a private gathering and Giuliani will not stay in Lubbock afterward.

The contract is very explicit, PNB officials said. No media coverage is allowed, and the event is not open to the public.

Giuliani was named Time magazine's Man of the Year for his leadership and poise during the World Trade Center disaster Sept. 11.

Committee to present ideas to improve campus for students

By April Tamplen/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech Student First Committee will present a list of student recommendations on May 1 to Tech's chancellor, president and deans at the Health Sciences Center.

Barbara Terry, HSC director of customer service, said 13 students were recommended by deans at both campuses to form the Student First committee, whose purpose is to make recommendations to improve Tech.

"David Smith (interim chancellor for Tech and HSC president) wanted a group of students to make Tech the most student-friendly campus in Texas," Terry said. "The students have been working to find student issues and problems."

The committee started meeting twice a month in December.

Smith said when he takes the role as chancellor at Tech, he wants to turn the Student First program into a year-long process.

"Student First is student driven and supported by the faculty," he said. "I want to work with student groups and student government to really improve on communication."

Smith said Tech's customers are the students.

Terry said the committee has conducted surveys on campus, held promotions at the United Spirit Arena and gathered information at the regional campuses, located in Amarillo, Odessa and El Paso.

Courtney Youens, president of the HSC Student Senate and co-chairwoman of the Student First program, said the committee has worked hard to get the student perspective. "It's like we got the chance to shoot for the stars," she said. "It was more like a wish list; we get to say what the students really want."

The committee also worked in sub-committees covering departments on campus and meetings with Lubbock City Council members, Terry said.

"They really worked hard to improve the students' quality of living," she said. "We hope the chancellor, deans and president implement these recommendations."

More than 30 recommendations are being made.

Terry said the recommendations range from having an article in The University Daily promoting Student First facts to building a new restaurant on Tech campus.

"Most of the recommendations are not a big cost issue," she said. "We have noticed that students are upset about

Perspectives

Graduates should keep hopes, integrity high

COLUMN

DANIEL WHITE

For some of you, this may well be one of the last full issues of The University Daily that you will ever read as a student, and it is my honor to congratulate you on your achievement of graduation.

Yet, as you take this monumental step in your overall success, I would like to remind you that in your pursuit of the wealth, the prosperity and the position this world can offer, do not forget the intangible treasures of life that are often demeaned in value.

This is about a little something called purpose in life. It is easy to stay here for four or five years at Tech, earn a degree, move on into the professional job arena for about 40 years, retire and live off of the wealth of stocks, bonds and mutual funds.

However, I challenge you to search for some deeper meaning in life than that of the materialistic substance that seems to be the apple of today's business world's eye. College days may be over, but your journey in life is merely beginning.

The philanthropy of your college years is nothing more than memories. Many people across this nation will never have the opportunity to hold the certificate that you will soon possess, but that which ultimately makes you successful is not the zeroes that have been added to your bank account as a result of that degree by the end of your career. It is what you have done with the opportunity that you have been given to help those that cannot help themselves.

Sure, the wealth, the status and the material stuff will come with hard work, but true purpose in life is not found in the monetary fruits of the stock market.

The truth of the matter is each and every one of us came into this world with no possessions, and we will leave this world that very same way. With this in mind, it is a wonder that these possessions have become the area in which we place the most value in life.

The reality of life is you do not have time to work to give your life purpose tomorrow; you must make moves today. Sure, the wealth, the status and the material stuff will come with hard work, but true purpose in life is not found in the monetary fruits of the stock market. And that is what this life is about. That which gives your life true purpose is as intangible and invaluable as the smile upon your face.

In fact, I would go so far as to say you would never truly reach your full potential of happiness until you capitalize on the opportunity that you have to share that which you have with someone who could never repay their indebtedness to you. So, who will accept the challenge of making their life count for more than just a paycheck every two weeks and some stock options?

This world is now yours for the taking. Yet, in your quest for success, never lose sight of the importance of living your life count for some greater purpose than the superficial substance of this world. To all graduates, I say congratulations; I wish you the best and God bless.

Friends make life worth the ride

COLUMN

RACHEL RICHMOND

Another semester flies by, and some of us are preparing for bigger and better things.

Some will stay in Lubbock for summer school, some will travel, some will return home to greet old friends after the first time away from home and some will take that long awaited walk across the stage in the United Spirit Arena to finalize this chapter of their lives.

As this semester comes to an end, I look back to remember just how great it really was. My classes were actually interesting, and I must say I enjoyed attending most of them — which never happens — my Spring Break trip was amazing — nothing unbearable took place, and both jobs were enjoyable with only a small amount of mishaps. But, what really made this semester spectacular were my friends.

The majority of my friends, and the closest to me, are making that life-changing walk across that stage this May. They will all be closing the college chapter in their book of life and will be turning the page to a clean slate to start the next.

I am sad to see my friends go — they have been my rock and my sanity for my entire college career. We have all grown together, and some apart, to become the young adults this society calls for. I have one last year to mold myself as an individual and to prepare for what lies ahead.

College has prepped so many ahead of me for the real world. I'm still currently in the process. But, since the end of my college career is in plain sight, I realize I have already learned more than I bargained for. My college life experiences have taught me more than I will ever learn from a textbook.

I have learned to handle all sorts of situations and different types of people. I have learned not to take myself so seriously and to lighten up. I have learned it is OK to fail, and something good comes out of every situation. I have learned how to get what I want by speaking my mind. None of which could be possible without the love and support of my friends.

I have realized college is more than books. It is more than class. It is more than professors, labs, projects and organizations. College is the gift of life experiences wrapped up in a pretty package begging you to open it. This is a time to live your life regret free — for a tuition price.

It is a time to get to know you and realize who you really are and what you really stand for. It is a time to get to know others and realize it is possible to love others more than you love yourself. Be your peers, not just a stuffy old professor, be your teachers. They know more about life than you think. And if they don't, then learn about it together.

Friends are vital to have in this world, whether you believe it or not. Friends will keep you sane and give you the support you so desperately need. Friends will stand aside and support all that you do but will stand in your way when you are headed in the wrong direction. Friends will talk to you on the phone for hours, even though you might live down the street.

Friends will show you love and teach you how to love others. Friends will be your partner in crime with no regrets and help bail you out of sticky situations. Friends will be your watchdog, your mom and your dad all rolled up in one — but only because they care.

Friends will hold your hair back when you've had too much to drink; they will dance with you on a table; they will stay up with you all night to see the light of day; they will join you in song during a car ride; they will share your neurotic tendencies, and they will hold your hand when times are tough.

So, to all my friends: thank you for being my rock, my sanity, my shoulder to cry on, my ear to listen, my cheerleader, my partner in crime, my buddy and my teacher. You have all taught me to be patient, to care, to laugh and to love others more than myself. For this, I am forever grateful. Have a great summer — see you in the fall.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Time to get involved

From the first time you step foot on campus until the time you graduate you are considered to be a part of a community. Everything that takes place on campus from events to fees affects your life as a Red Raider. You can choose whether or not to take an active role in the Texas Tech community or just watch as Tech grows and changes before your eyes. Here is your chance to take an active role.

My name is Kelli Stumbo, and I am your newly elected student body president. Each year, the president of the Student Government Association is responsible for appointing more than 100 students to various committees and executive branch and judicial positions. The list of committees are academic council, athletic council, Big 12, campus and student life, communications, customer service, cultural diversity, fund raising, honors and awards, spirit, conduct advisory, code of student conduct, convocation, enrollment management, ADA compliance, international affairs, library, Masked Rider, parking violation policies, parking violation appeals, sexual harassment, student financial aid and scholarships, student media, teaching and learning, and technology. Student Union advisory, discipline appeals.

Also, for the first time, our past SGA administration has created an External Cabinet that will be headed by the newly elected external vice president, and there are also committees to get involved in through that branch as well.

The main topic that was discussed during campaign season is students didn't feel like their voices were being heard.

These committees are an awesome opportunity for you to have a say in what goes on in the Tech community and also to take ownership in your university.

My main goal this year is to better the communication between the SGA and the students through their involvement in these committees and the development of other programs such as the Student Organization Advisory Congress.

If you have a particular interest in any of the committees, applications may be picked up in the Student Government Association office in Room 230 in the Student Union Building. The application's due date has been extended to May 8, which is the last day of finals. I am excited about this year and honored that you elected me to serve as your representative and voice.

If you have any questions regarding the application or the committees, please feel free to call the SGA office at 742-3631 or come by the office.

Kelli Stumbo
SGA president

Formby chose wrong

To the editor: While attending Texas Tech, I enjoyed reading Brandon Formby's articles day in and day out, but I disagreed with his opinion on the "Most Shafted Student." Masked Rider Katie Carnuth did not work with Black Phantom long enough to get attached to him as reported in the previous three Masked Riders and their assistants.

I was an assistant to Masked Riders Travis Thorne (1999-2000) and Lesley Gilbreath (2000-2001) and worked day in and day out with the riders and Black Phantom Raider. I personally saw how both of these riders became best friends with the horse due to the amount of time they devoted to representing Tech. Katie's three months with Black Phantom Raider is nothing compared to a full year!

I completely understand what Katie and her assistant went through as that day was traumatic, but they were not the only ones affected. The Masked Rider is not the only person that makes the program work. There are a dozen behind-the-scenes people and great sponsors that make sure the horse and the rider have everything they need. After the death of Black Phantom Raider, these people are devoting more of their time to finding a new horse that can adapt to the new environment it will be placed in.

Anyone that has dealt with the Masked Rider program or with horses would realize that finding a new horse to replace a horse like Black Phantom Raider will not happen overnight. To end, good luck to the new Masked Rider and make the best of your year, and thanks to all the behind-the-scenes people that are enduring all the criticism and working hard to find a new horse.

Greg Darbin
Class of 2001

It works both ways

To the editor: Loren Bell's recent column about professors is obvious provoking but contains an obvious fatal flaw. You make the erroneous assumption that the entire responsibility for student learning rests with the teacher. The learning experience is, in fact, a two-way street. While there are many excellent students that recognize this, there are also many students who believe "I pay my fee, I should get my degree."

This type of student can undermine the classroom learning experience. They believe if something is not on an overhead slide or in a textbook, it is somehow irrelevant. They are disinterested in being intellectually challenged and prefer to spend their time begging for grades, explaining that their outside work/fraternity/social commitments account for their poor performance and their grade should be increased through curves or extra credit. Such students depend on rote-learning and memory-based regurgitation of "facts."

They demand examinations that perfectly mirror class examples and that are effectively pre-announced through "hint" sessions masquerading as reviews. Sadly, they have not learned in college that people must be self-motivated to succeed. They will, however, learn this the hard way when they enter the workforce.

If you are writing a column discussing the shortcomings of the learning experience, you need to give equal attention to these issues. Classes can be dominated by a critical mass of ill-focused students who negate the efforts of even the most dynamic instructor. In contrast, classes characterized by diligent and intellectually inquisitive students eager to be challenged will foster the academic environment you desire. We challenge you to address these issues in a follow up to your recent column.

The Rundown

Saudi prince meets with Bush in Crawford

CRAWFORD (AP) — President Bush and Saudi Crown Prince Abdullah met Thursday to confront the rising tensions over Israel, Iraq and Islamic terror that are straining their nations' 70-year alliance.

The crown prince bore a warning to Bush that U.S. backing of Israel — and seeming tolerance of Israeli military offensives against Palestinians — had damaged prospects for Mideast peace.

Nail Al-Jubeir, a spokesman for the Saudi embassy, said the crown prince brought a frank message: "The message is, Sharon has been acting up, and the U.S. government needs to rein him in. We cannot maintain the peace process with this stuff going on."

Man gets five years for supplying designer drug

SHALIMAR, Fla. (AP) — A man accused of supplying a designer drug to a woman who later drowned in a hot tub was given five years in prison.

Benjamin Alexander, 22, was sentenced Wednesday after pleading no contest to third-degree murder and possession of a controlled substance.

He also agreed to testify against the victim's husband, who is set for trial next month on the same charges.

Andrea Leigh Nichols Brooks drowned in January 2001 at her Fort Walton Beach home after taking Butanediol with Alexander and her husband. The substance cause euphoria and loss of consciousness.

Church leaders express regret for sex abuse

VATICAN CITY (AP) — American cardinals headed home Thursday from their summit at the Vatican, carrying plans for new policies to remove priests involved in sexual abuse — but facing a tough sell from some U.S. Catholics seeking a stricter stance of zero tolerance.

During the extraordinary two-day meeting, U.S. Catholic leaders navigated through sometimes contradictory guidelines set by Pope John Paul II in their bid to stem the sex abuse scandal that has rocked the American church.

John Paul insisted there was no place in the priesthood for those who would endanger children.

Rescue effort for dog adrift in Pacific calls Coast Guard, costs $48,000

HONOLULU (AP) — An almost comically ineffectual effort to rescue a dog stranded aboard a tanker adrift in the Pacific has people in Hawaii and beyond asking: What is a dog's life really worth?

The extraordinary operation to save 2-year-old Forgea already has cost $48,000 in private funds, and the Coast Guard is prepared to spend taxpayer dollars on what has become one of the most expensive animal rescues ever.

"I think it's ridiculous," said Cyndi Damo, a dog owner from Huntington Beach, Calif., visiting Honolulu. "There's many ways the money could've been better spent — there's still children that go to bed hungry."

"I think it's cool," Honolulu resident Darryl Uekawa said. "It's the right thing to do."

Forgea, a 40-pound white terrier mix, has been alone on the crippled tanker Insiko 1907 since April 2, when the cruise ship Norwegian Star rescued the captain and 10 crew members. An engine room fire aboard the Indonesian tanker March 13 killed one crew member and knocked out power and communications aboard the ship, which serviced fishing boats with fuel and supplies.

As of Thursday, the tanker was more than 600 miles southwest of Honolulu.

It is unclear why Forgea was left behind during the rescue, but the Taiwanese captain — the dog's owner — said there may have been a language barrier between himself and the rescuers from the cruise ship.

A Norwegian Star passenger's remark about the dog on the local TV news prompted viewer calls to the Hawaiian Humane Society, which launched a rescue effort on April 5 that was called off two days later when the Insiko could not be found.

Coca-Cola president speaks to COBA students

J. ALEXANDER DOUGLAS Jr. (Sandy), president and chief operating officer of the North American division of Coca-Cola Co., speaks to students, faculty and administrators in the Rawls College of Business Administration on Thursday.

By Preston Files/Staff Reporter

Texas Tech's Rawls College of Business Administration held a Chief Executives' Roundtable Luncheon on Thursday at the Market Alumni Center.

The special guest honored was J. Alexander Douglas Jr. (Sandy), president and chief operating officer of the North American division of the Coca-Cola Co.

Students, faculty, staff and administrators attended the luncheon.

Bob Phillips, associate professor of management at Tech, founded the Chief Executive Roundtable in 1991.

"Anytime we get a fortune 50 president or CEO, we try to do that because of who they are," he said.

Phillips said the luncheon highlights three keynote speakers in the fall and four in the spring, usually from business, to enhance or enrich the curriculum of the college.

Douglas said as he interacts with Red Raider alumni, advisers and friends of the university, he cannot help but notice the significant commitment from everyone to Tech.

"This is vibrant and growing place — it is really incredible what everyone is doing here and the way that this school is growing, and you can feel that level of energy in everything," he said.

Douglas said growth does not happen serendipitously but as a result of a commitment.

"Clearly this school, these students, this state has all those characteristics and I think as much as anything possesses a great future," he said. "So, for me and on behalf of the Coca-Cola Co., we are just glad to be a part of this."

In 2000, Douglas was named executive vice president and chief operating officer, and one year later he was named president of the North American Division. Douglas has management responsibility for the concentrated business in North America, including regional and national sales, consumer marketing, technical and quality service and other communications development.

The Coca-Cola Co. was founded in 1886 and holds more than 230 beverage brands. The Company's corporate headquarters are in Atlanta, with local operations in nearly 200 countries worldwide.

Phillips said there were a lot of students in attendance.

"We hope the students take from this whole program the opportunity to see a view of business from the top," he said. "They are going in at the bottom of corporations but have a chance to hear someone who is in charge of the corporation."

Phillips said students can hear what it is like to have gone through a career in business and to see what some of the pressures they are faced with at the top.

Phillips said the roundtable has had a variety of programs and speakers. He said there are 25 members and each member of the roundtable pays $2,800 a year. He said the money helps support programs of the college, scholarships and other initiatives.

Typically, the business college has the speakers interact with students in the classroom, however, because of Douglas' appearance at the alumni luncheon in Dallas on Thursday morning, time did not permit the classroom interaction.

Jeff Sicking, a graduate finance student from Lindsay and College of Business Administration ambassador, said he believed the opportunity to hear from the chief operating officer of Coke was a good chance to get a feel of how to become a strong leader.

tempted suicide, low self-esteem, drinking and using drugs, Stansel said she can finally stand up and talk about her experience to educate others about rape.

According to René Ramirez, assistant director for the Lubbock Rape Crisis Center, 84 percent of those attacked know their attacker. More often than not, the likelihood of an attacker being a stranger is the exception to the rule.

"There's no good reason for anybody to be sexually assaulted, and there is no reason for anybody to commit a sexual assault against somebody else," Ramirez said.

People who have the courage to stand up against sexual crimes are "fighting the good fight," Ramirez said, which is exactly what the marchers were doing.

April Poeling and husband Steven attended the meeting to show their support for the cause.

April, now 25, also was a victim of rape when she was 18. The march is really important because it gives women a sense of empowerment and a strong support group, she said.

"This is our opportunity to bring awareness of the issue. It's like we're reclaiming the streets. We won't be victims. We won't be silent," April Poeling said.

Steven Poeling said he was there to show support for his wife and all the other victims of sexual assault.

"I'm not doing this for myself. I'm doing it for the people who have been in situations because they happened to be in the wrong place. There shouldn't be wrong places," Steven Poeling said.

Ramirez said it is important for people to take a stance on rape because "sexual assault is one of the most under-reported crimes there is." Only half of the incidents are reported.

"Our job is not done, and that's why we're still here," Ramirez said.

Psychologist calls Lewisville boy's death grim

LEWISVILLE (AP) — Jackson Carr was like a lot of other first-graders, an eager, happy pupil, passionate about his Hot Wheels cars and riding his bicycle.

He played with his brother and sister in the woods behind their home, where a well-worn path led from the back yard to a creek. The children often hid in a red tent pitched near the water's edge.

For six years Jackson's life was hardly extraordinary. But his death last week set him apart. Police say his 10-year-old brother and 15-year-old sister have confessed to fratricide — a crime practically unheard of even among the 1,200 murders committed each year in Texas.

"I've researched this for 20 years, and I don't know of another case that is quite so grim in its facts," said Charles Patrick Ewing, a New York forensic psychologist who wrote a 1990 book called "Kids who Kill."

Jackson was reported missing around

5 p.m. April 15. His brother said they had been playing hide-and-seek.

After police and neighbors had searched for hours, the girl led police to the body, buried under 2 feet of mud in the creek bank. Police say she confessed to stabbing the boy in the neck. The 10-year-old told police he helped hold his brother down.

While police have not disclosed a motive, public records and accounts from neighbors indicate the family was long troubled.

Expansion

Other renovations are in store for the facility as well, Whitehead said.

About $8 million of the $32 million in bonds will go toward expanding the Southwest Cancer Center, Whitehead said. The center is running out of space, and UMC plans on doubling the facility in size.

Allison said Lubbock is responsible for providing an adequate place for cancer patients in West Texas.

"It is the need of the community to have to be able to treat more cancer patients in this area," Allison said. "A lot of people diagnosed with it have to go to bigger cities to get treated, partly because there is a shortage in the facility here."

Another $1.2 million will go toward renovating the administration suite of the hospital.

"It has outgrown in size and functionality," Whitehead said.

The rest of the funds will pay for parking lot and street renovations, he said.

The project is expected to begin in September and will last anywhere from 18 to 24 months.

new fees and issues because they do not have the right information. We need to communicate more."

Smith said the committee is just the first step in reaching Tech's goal of becoming student friendly.

"Tech needs to grow; we have to impact that growth," he said. "We have a lot to do to make Tech more student friendly. We do have a head start though because we are West Texas friendly."

former chief of staff for the SGA; Michael Shonrock, vice president for Student Affairs and Melissa Guest, editor-elect of The University Daily.

Wright said over the last year the technology committee has improved the Raiderlink portal by adding class schedules, discussion groups, professor evaluations and Traffic and Parking.

"Technology has really improved for Tech over the past year," he said.

"We want to continue improving throughout the next year."

Tech will host the Big 12 SGA Leadership Conference from Sept. 26 to 29. The theme is "Working Together for a Better Big 12."

Cervantes said 12 SGA students from each Big 12 school are coming to Lubbock to bring all their ideas for next year together.

"This means 144 students are coming, and we want to show them how to have fun in Lubbock," she said.

Cervantes said the conference's main goal is to write legislation for an honor code for the Big 12.

"The honor code will be for sportsmanship in the Big 12 so things like the goal post incident will not happen," she said. "The Big 12 commissioner will come, and we will present the legislation to him. After it passes with every student senate in the Big 12 conference, a copy will be sent to the commissioner."

Brown said holding the conference at Tech will give Tech a better impression.

"We want to show the Big 12 schools we are better than them. Just joking," he said. "This is a good opportunity to show other schools how the SGA works at Tech."

The next Senate meeting will be Sept. 5 at the Student Union Senate Room.

ROTC wing commander named for Fall

By Jenny Klein/Staff Reporter

Air Force ROTC announced a new wing commander for next year at a ceremony Thursday afternoon.

Robert Schoenberg was named wing commander, which is a position that can only be held by a senior, for the Fall 2002 semester.

The change of command ceremony is held every semester during April and December, Maj. Lester Ball said. It is a formalization of the change of leadership, from outgoing leadership to incoming leadership.

"The wing commander is the top student in charge of the entire organization," Ball said. "They are responsible for all the other 115 students in the organization."

Ball said the wing commander arranges student activities and is involved in the planning process of fund-raisers and general events involving ROTC.

The wing commander sets the tone for the cadets. He or she acts as the liaison between the actual Air Force officers, who are on active duty, and the cadets, he said.

Senior cadets apply for the position, and the ROTC officers interview each applicant. This year, Schoenberg was the only applicant, but generally, three to four seniors apply, Ball said.

"We look for the cadet that shows leadership and enthusiasm and who shows the ability to represent our program to the rest of the Tech community," he said.

Schoenberg was the best candidate for the position because of his stature in the organization, Ball said. Students expressed their feelings of confidence in Schoenberg to do a good job, and the overall consensus was he was the best person to fill the position.

Being appointed wing commander is a goal Schoenberg said he had set for himself when he first entered the program.

"As a freshman, it was something I really looked forward to doing," Schoenberg said.

Wing commander is a competitive position and many qualified candidates apply for it each year, he said.

Nicklos Beihl, wing commander for Spring 2002, said he hopes Schoenberg's experience will be as good as his own.

Beihl said he had no intentions of becoming a commander when he entered the organization, but it turned out being too difficult a job, for it turned out he was wrong.

"I thought it would be too hard and too time-consuming. But if people don't try to achieve what's, quote unquote, too hard, they will never succeed," he said.

As it happened, Beihl said he learned valuable skills in time management and how to relate to other people.

The position is really one of being able to communicate effectively with others, he said. Duties as wing commander included organizing blood drives, keeping the cadets up to speed, making sure the cadets are getting their school work finished and attending dawn patrol, but the wing commander doesn't do it all alone. A group called the top five is appointed to help with the daily tasks of the commander.

The wing commander chooses the top four cadets to help. While these cadets perform the minor duties, the commander ties it all together, Beihl said.
