SGA lobbies against tuition deregulation

By Rachel LaFerney/Associate News Editor

Student Government Association President Kelli Stumbo and Internal Vice President Jeremy Brown, along with 28 members of the Student Senate traveled to Austin on Tuesday to lobby legislators against the deregulation of tuition for Texas public universities.

The SGA entourage traveled to meet with representatives and senators about their positions on the deregulation of tuition.

"We're doing our best, and hopefully, the senators and representatives will see how education has an affect on all our lives," Brown said. "Hopefully, they will remember what it was like when they were in school and how hard it is to pay for it."

Brown said they are stressing to legislators how detrimental the deregulation of tuition could be to Texas Tech and higher education in Texas.

He said if tuition was deregulated, it would mean less state funding for higher education, and students will have to make up what funds the state lacks. "This will affect middle-class students the worst," Brown said.

Middle-class students are ineligible for Pell grants and other types of financial aid, and their incomes would not be able to support the deregulation of tuition, Brown said. Seventy-five percent of Tech's student population is middle class, and a rise in tuition could mean they cannot attend Tech.

Stumbo also emphasized the "snowball effect" deregulation could create. If students must take out more student loans to pay for school, such actions would adversely affect the economy because after students graduate, they will not be contributing to the economy by buying cars, houses and other amenities. Instead, their incomes will go toward their student loans.

This effect, along with fewer students going to college because of higher prices, would lead to a downturn in the state's economy.

7 soldiers killed near Karbala

HELICOPTER DOWNED: U.S. Army Black Hawk brought down by enemy fire.

(AP) — A U.S. Army Black Hawk helicopter was shot down in southern Iraq Wednesday, killing seven of the 11 soldiers aboard, Pentagon officials said.

The helicopter was downed by small-arms fire near Karbala, the site of fierce fighting between the Army's 3rd Infantry Division and Iraqi troops, including Republican Guard forces.

The other four soldiers on board the Black Hawk were wounded, officials said.

They were rescued by American troops, the officials said.

The Black Hawk was the second U.S. helicopter to go down in combat. An Army Apache assault helicopter went down March 24 during an assault on Republican Guard forces; its two pilots were captured by Iraqis.

The UH-60 Black Hawk is one of the Army's main utility and troop transport helicopters. Each one is flown by a crew of four and can carry up to 11 soldiers.

The helicopters are equipped with advanced avionics and electronics, such as global positioning systems.

A Black Hawk crashed in a remote, wooded area of Fort Drum, N.Y., during a training exercise last month, killing 11 of the 13 soldiers aboard.

In February, a Black Hawk crashed during night training in the Kuwaiti desert, killing all four crew members.

The Kuwaiti military said sandstorms were reported in the area at the time the chopper went down.

In January, an MH-60, an adapted version of the Black Hawk, crashed during training near Bagram Air Base in Afghanistan, killing four members of an elite aviation regiment.

Troops closed to within 30 miles of Baghdad Wednesday, and U.S. forces seized bridges over the Tigris and Euphrates rivers and swept past battered Republican Guard units. Two of

Santos named dean of College of Education

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech College of Education is undergoing a change in leadership. Sheryl Santos has been named as the new dean of the college.

Since 1998, she has served as a professor and dean of the School of Education at California State University at Bakersfield. Prior to that position, she served as a professor at Arizona State University and at Texas A&M University at Commerce.

Gerald Skoog, interim dean of the college, was asked to fill the office after Gregory Bowes resigned from the position last year.

"I served as the dean for the College of Education for a one-year term after Dr. Bowes departed from his office," he said. "I think that (Santos) will be a great asset to the College of Education."

Santos was one of 26 applicants for the position. Karen Jacobsen, the director of external relations for the College of Education and a member of the search committee, said she had a part in helping select a candidate.

"I was on the search committee, and we worked in conjunction with William Marcy, who is the provost of the university, to find a worthy candidate," she said. "There were three people who were interviewed of the 26 applicants, and we are looking forward to having a person as qualified as her."

Marcy said he believes Santos provides the necessary experience for the position and promises to be loyal to Tech.

"She has the best record and credentials for the job, and she will bring great things to Tech," he said. "Santos is a delight to be around and a highly energetic person that is committed for a long time, and assures us that she will meet the goals and objectives set aside."

Some of the goals and intentions for the College of Education include the improvement of performance compared to state measures for certification, community outreach and improving diversity among faculty and students within the college, Marcy

Student organizations see increase in funding

By Matt Muench/Staff Reporter

As the economy continues to take a dive, Texas universities suffer the damages of budget cuts, and many people are feeling the consequences of receiving less cash.

However, student organizations at Texas Tech are sitting on the other side of the spectrum.

They are receiving more money, and more organizations are benefiting from it this year.

The reason? Student Government Association Internal Vice President Jeremy Brown, who is also SGA president elect, and President Kelli Stumbo pushed for more money.

Check the numbers.

This year's student organizations were given money from a fund of $211,800. For the next academic year, $255,000 was allotted to fund organizations. More importantly, Brown said, more organizations will be receiving funds.

"This is a good thing," he said. "We have to remember a lot of universities don't find this privilege that we have at Texas Tech. More organizations are forming. More students are coming here, and we have to help them through funding."

Here is the proof. This year, 126 organizations received money. Next year, that number has increased to 149, and more can still receive money when they go through the appeals process during the third reading of the Student Organization bill at the Senate's next and final meeting of the year on April 10.

Chancellor's report: Law school gets high rankings

By Angela Timmons and Harvey Mireles/Staff Reporters

The publication of the 2001-2002 chancellor's report states the Texas Tech School of Law ranks with the best in the nation in graduate placement and bar exam pass rate.

This information was cited in National Jurist magazine, which also cited Tech's law school as third in the nation for program achievement ratings and 11th in the nation for bar pass rate.

Bar Pass rate, U.S. News & World Report ranked Tech's law school in the fourth and lowest tier. The magazine ranks according to tiers as the first being the best and fourth the lowest. (Information available at <http://www.usnews.com/usnews/edu/grad/rankings/law/lawindex.htm>)

Associate Dean of the law school Brian Shannon said U.S. News & World Report ranks educational institutions annually according to the tier structure. Shannon said he does not believe the rankings are good or the researchers are aware of the caliber of the Tech law school.

"One of our priorities is to have folks get a better knowledge about the Texas Tech law school," Shannon said. "Our problem is we don't get the information out there."

Shannon said the ranking is disappointing, adding it does not accurately reflect the law school and its programs.

Texas Senate debates insurance reform bills

AUSTIN (AP)—The Senate began considering legislation Wednesday that would overhaul the way Texas regulates homeowners and auto insurance by forcing insurers to seek approval when they want to raise rates. Supporters say the bill will result in lower homeowners insurance rates.

Under the legislation, Insurance Commissioner Jose Montemayor would be required to set new rates soon after the bill is signed into law. Montemayor has said he believes rates for the state's largest companies are as much as 25 percent too high, depending on the individual company.

Homeowners have told lawmakers that their insurance premiums have increased dramatically since 2001. In a report released this week, Montemayor said rates have increased, on average, about 45 percent since 2000.

Pentagon seeks to lower war expectations

WASHINGTON (AP)—As U.S.-led forces neared Baghdad, the Pentagon sought Wednesday to lower expectations that the Iraqi capital could be taken quickly or easily.

"We are planning for a very difficult fight ahead in Baghdad," Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal told a Pentagon news conference. "We are not expecting to drive into Baghdad suddenly and seize it."

Defense officials, updating the war toll, said 49 Americans have died, seven have been captured, 15 are missing and 154 have been wounded.

U.S. military officials have weathered criticism over the past week as commanders, other Pentagon officials and outside analysts said the war effort had been slowed by unexpectedly stiff resistance and a plan that may have relied on too few troops.

Bombing in Philippines kills 13, wounds 30

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—A bomb exploded Wednesday near a bustling wharf in the southern Philippine city of Davao, killing at least 13 people, officials said.

More than 30 people were wounded in the second bombing in this city in less than a month. On March 4, a bomb killed 21 people outside Davao's airport in an attack blamed on Muslim separatists.

Wednesday's bomb exploded at about 7 p.m. as a passenger ship was about to depart. It occurred near the gate to the wharf, an area where people catch taxis, Radio Mindanao Network said.

Health official Dolores Castillo said many victims were vendors and children at nearby food stalls and restaurants.

Larry Laura, 39, said he was driving a van about 100 yards away when "there was a loud explosion."

People were "shocked, speechless, crying and just watching bodies scattered on the ground a few seconds after the blast."

Lt. Col. Danilo Servando, the chief military spokesman, cited initial reports as saying at least 13 people were killed, including two children.

EXPERIENCED NEW MANAGEMENT TEAM

Congressional candidate seeking to replace Rep. Combest

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

Congressional candidate John Bell is planning a run to Washington, D.C., based on his background in agriculture, oil and education, the region's three primary concerns.

"Washington, D.C., is full of really brilliant, bright people, but very few have been out in the field and experienced what they're trying to regulate," the oil producer from Kermit said.

Bell recently announced his candidacy for the 19th Congressional District, currently held by U.S. Rep. Larry Combest.

He will join more than a dozen candidates on the ballot May 3.

He has several qualities he said puts him above his competition. He is tenacious and focused on the issues that are central to West Texas and the residents of the district.

"I understand problems and see solutions," he said. "I have the solutions to answer some of the problems in the energy business because I've been in it, worked in it and understand it in detail."

Too many people only have superficial training or classroom knowledge on a subject, which is not sufficient to properly represent these industries, he said. He has on-the-job training in many fields. Bell is the president of the school board in his area.

He has spent much of his time in this office fighting numerous mandates the state Legislature has handed down to school districts throughout the state without funding. If an issue is important enough for Congress to pass legislation on, it should be important enough to provide funding for, he said.

As the representative from this area, he does not plan to support underfunded mandates or mandates without funding, which campaign committee member Brian Swisher, a Texas Tech graduate, said is important for his campaign.

"He seems to have a good understanding of it, since he's president of the school board and his wife's a teacher," Swisher said.

Bell is currently involved with pushing the Legislature to take responsibility for these mandates.

He organized a rally in February on the Capitol building steps to discuss the problems created by the lack of funding by the Legislature.

His largest area of expertise is the energy business, as he is an oil consultant and owns an oil and gas company. Bell wants to focus on keeping oil prices constant, where both producers and consumers get fair prices.

"The backside of $10 a barrel is $30 a barrel," he said. "The backside of $30 a barrel is a recession."

He wants to bring these issues to light to affect everyone, not just Texans, he said. Oil prices affect airlines, motor vehicle producers and many other industries.

"There's got to be a way to enact a stable, long-term solution, and I believe I have those answers, and I can bring congressman, not just from oil producers, but from all walks of life," he said.

Bell is not without the agricultural background typical of many West Texans either. He grew up on a cotton farm, has spent time working in the fields and is comfortable with the issues involved with agriculture.

The most important thing on the agricultural forefront is water. The Ogallala aquifer is drying up quickly and will run out completely if another source is not found soon, he said.

Bell has a plan to pump water from the Capitan Reef, near the Guadalupe Mountains, to relieve the stress on the aquifer, Swisher said. He is actively working to solve the problems, a quality Bell's daughter Laura discussed as well.

"He is aware of and concerned about the issues that farmers face here," the senior human development and family studies major said. "He wants to try to do what he can to help out the people in the area with the problems they're facing."

She is excited for her father to run, she said. Before he made his decision, they talked about it as a family, and everyone feels good about it.

While Bell has not run for any political offices of this magnitude, he has been involved in politics for years. He wrote his first letter to the president in junior high and has been arguing with political leaders since then, staying informed about issues. Nor has Bell forgotten about Tech and the other colleges in the district.

He helped Combest get a $1.6 million grant for Midland and Odessa colleges and oilfield training.

"I have been actively involved in making these changes and doing things over the past few years," he said.

Bell recognized the need for unity in the representative's office and said he hopes the candidates in the race who do not win will continue to support the new representative.

"We've got to all get on one page after this is over and get together and work together and make a team," he said.

Saddam Hussein's key Guard divisions "were no longer credible forces," the Pentagon said.

Farther south, U.S. commanders said Iraqi soldiers were shooting from inside a revered mosque in Najaf. American soldiers withheld return fire.

Soldiers on the front lines and relatives 6,000 miles away in West Virginia rejoiced over the bold, middle-of-the-night rescue of Pfc. Jessica Lynch from captivity at an Iraqi hospital that was housing a military command post. The commandos who freed her also retrieved 11 bodies, some of them are believed to be American soldiers.

Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal told a Pentagon briefing Wednesday that U.S.-led forces moved to within 30 miles of the Iraqi capital, and were meeting only "sporadic" resistance from the Republican Guard.

The Guard's Medina and Baghdad divisions are "no longer credible forces," said McChrystal, vice director of joint operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Army's 3rd Infantry Division and the First Marine Expeditionary Force launched a two-pronged attack toward Baghdad, and both reported breakthroughs as units entered the so-called "red zone" within range of the guns and missiles defending the capital. U.S. officials say Iraqi resistance will be the most tenacious in this zone and have warned of the possible use of chemical weapons.

In an attack launched at midnight, 3rd Infantry units surged past the strategic city of Karbala, targeting an estimated 2,000 paramilitary fighters. Karbala, which sits on the main approach to Baghdad from the southwest, was encircled and hit by night-long bombardment from U.S. artillery and warplanes.

Also Wednesday, the 3rd Infantry seized a bridge over the Euphrates River at Mussayib, about 40 miles southeast of Baghdad as it advanced through the Karbala Gap. The bridge, taken with little or no resistance from Iraqi forces, had been rigged with explosives, but engineers defused them.

Bill could cause uranium proliferation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A provision in draft energy legislation would ease restrictions on the export of highly enriched uranium, raising concerns among nuclear nonproliferation groups that it might make it easier for terrorists to get the material.

The language in the House bill would rescind strict conditions that were imposed by Congress in 1992 on the export of weapons-grade uranium for use as "targets" in the making of radioisotopes for medical purposes.

The export restrictions were enacted to try to get manufacturers to shift away from using weapons-grade uranium for research reactors or for making medical isotopes.

An easing of the restrictions "needlessly undermines an important non-proliferation law and increases the risk of terrorists acquiring nuclear weapons," said Edwin Lyman, president of the Nuclear Control Institute, a private nonproliferation advocacy group.

The draft energy bill is being considered this week by the House Energy and Commerce Committee, by Rep. Richard Burr, R-N.C.

PERSPECTIVES

Financial aid takes planning, preparation

Many students view the Texas Tech Financial Aid Office as a mysterious place filled with confusing forms and deadlines.

You know what? Very often the employees in the Financial Aid Office feel the same way.

So what should we do? After all, students need financial aid in order to stay in school, and Tech needs the millions of dollars brought in by the Financial Aid Office to fund everything.

That's right, without the money brought into Tech by the Financial Aid Office, there would be almost no money to pay for tuition, fees, housing, dining, athletics and whatever else students pay for on this campus.

The importance of this office cannot be understated.

The Tech Board of Regents has even hired an outside consultant to review and evaluate the Financial Aid Office, and I'd like to offer a few suggestions to help improve things for everyone involved.

First, I'd like to say that I've seen a great deal of improvement in the Financial Aid Office in the few years that I've attended Tech. A couple of years ago I had a legitimate complaint that was corrected with the involvement of the president's office.

One thing the Financial Aid Office must deal with is constantly changing regulations. They get it from two directions, Washington and Austin. Financial aid is always a hot political topic for politicians and bureaucrats in the capitol.

I believe since additional training is constantly needed for Financial Aid employees, the number of employees in the office needs to increase to adequately cover for necessary training.

Cutting back on hiring in this office could result in direct financial consequences throughout the Tech system. Employees need to be fully updated on all changes regarding financial aid in order to properly do their jobs and get the maximum amount of assistance for Tech students.

Better employee training is a good first step, but there must be an understanding by students regarding their role in the financial aid network. Students must take ultimate responsibility for their own financial aid.

So what can students do? Be smart; make sure that all paperwork is in as early as possible and double check on it. Employees can make mistakes and the earlier you discover any errors, the sooner you can get them corrected.

If you won't be taking summer classes, get your fall paperwork done now. If you are taking summer classes, then make sure you have everything covered. Waiting until the last minute will only result in time wasted in the back of a long line.

If you are waiting for your parents to file paperwork, keep checking up on it. These things may slip your parents' mind so let them know you need them to do their part accurately, and as quickly as possible. And file for financial aid even if you don't expect to be eligible for anything.

I've often heard students incorrectly blame the Financial Aid Office for the lack of scholarships on campus. If you feel there should be more scholarships available to outstanding Tech students, don't blame the Financial Aid Office.

Remember it is not the job of the Financial Aid Office to raise money for scholarships. The departments and colleges should be taking the lead in this area.

The most important thing for everyone to remember is working together is the only way we can make sure financial aid is awarded to everyone who qualifies.

The Financial Aid Office needs to continue improvements in customer service, and students (with their parents) need to stay on top of paperwork requirements and deadlines.

Dealing with financial aid is an important, but often overlooked part, of getting from freshmen seminar to graduation. It can be frustrating, but instead of getting angry, everyone needs to work together to improve the financial aid system.

Replace 'French' with 'freedom' in many phrases

The Congress of the United States of America recently took the first bold and necessary step to distance Americans from the unfortunate cowardice and hypocrisy of one of our unreliable historical allies.

No longer does one order a supersized order of french fries. They are now "freedom" fries.

Additionally, many emboldened and frustrated Americans have commenced a boycott of French goods.

Granted, boycotting French goods may not be a tremendous sacrifice, but it is still necessary.

That tasty Evian water needs to stay on the shelves in supermarkets.

Refrain from buying French wine. After all, the Italians and Germans fare well enough in that field as it stands.

Although I know you probably really wanted to purchase that snazzy Citron, you do your country a disservice if you do not choose another vehicle.

These steps, however, only represent the beginning.

We need to revamp our language to rid it of as many terms purely derived from the French language as possible and all items preceded by the adjectival qualifier "French."

This renovation may take some getting used to, and so I have compiled a list of examples of the new terminology everyone will now be using.

The next time you go to IHOP, be sure to sample the new stuffed "freedom toast." I hear it's pretty tasty.

If you swing by a bakery, give the "freedom bread" a try.

The next time you experience a glitch in the Matrix, refer to it not as DeJa-Vu, but instead a "freedom recollection."

When you wear a black belt with brown shoes, don't call it a faux pas. It's a "freedom foul."

You know that hideous dog looks like a glorified rat? It's a "freedom poodle."

Don't order food a la carte. Get "freedom extras."

Screw following proper etiquette.

Jason Lenz lenz016@hotmail.com

Worry about "freedom manners."

The majority of people in this country now find themselves in a new social class. Hereafter, the members of the bourgeoisie are now members of the "freedom class."

Economic theory needs to make an alteration to one of its principles. A laissez-faire economy equals "freedom economy."

For all the ladies out there, don't buy another tampon. They're now called "freedom necessities."

Don't plan a rendezvous. Plan a "freedom meeting."

Stick with Miracle Whip. And why have mayonnaise when you can have the new "freedom dressing?"

A person delivering a product will from here on out be called a "freedom messenger," not a courier.

I'm no longer a sports reporter. My new nomenclature is "freedom athletic events reporter."

It's no longer an orange. It's a "freedom fruit."

Those people down in Austin now wear burnt "freedom color."

I hope the next time I go out with a girl I can be privileged enough to engage in a "freedom kiss."

The upstarts in France have already helped us a little bit in this effort. Champagne is already required to be termed sparkling wine. Tack on the word freedom and that task is complete.

There are a handful of terms that need not be disposed of given their level of applicability to French culture.

One term can remain in the English language, rout. The concept of disorderly retreat is one the French understand better than anyone, thereby making the use of this word quite appropriate.

By the same token, mutiny can remain an integral part of English. No one has better demonstrated an unwillingness to fight or follow orders than the French have over the course of their history.

The word umpire also can stay. After all, people tend to hate umpires almost as much as they hate the French.

I suppose torture does not have to be removed either. It gives English speakers a good reminder of what co-existence with the French has meant for centuries.

Furthermore, some French words are just plain fun to say, especially in a French accent. The next time you disagree with someone, don't simply say no, but add some flavor to it by saying "Non!" My friends and I theorize that French intransigence is a byproduct of how much fun it is to say "Non!"

In the end, all the French anyone should ever need to learn is this simple statement.

Remercier Dieu. Je ne parle pas FranÁais.

Letters to the Editor

Thank you for an elite season

I would like to say thank you to Lady Raiders and Red Raiders for a truly enjoyable season.

The Red Raiders, after a slow start in the Big 12 regular season, have truly come on strong the last few games, and the Lady Raiders, while always impressive, played a very tough game Monday night. While it was heartbreaking to see the ladies not advance to the Final Four, I know great things are yet to come for this group. I would like to say, "Great job, coach Sharp, coach Weese, coach Redding and coach White." Also, to coach Knight and his staff, for once again giving us a lot to cheer for. I look forward to many great basketball seasons ahead for the Lady Raiders and Red Raiders.

Haragan's observations not known to exist

Being a proud student of Texas Tech, I would like to personally thank Interim President Donald Haragan for his column's bureaucratic edict regarding diversity.

As a student of the majority, I had no idea my fellow peers and I have been creating an unwelcoming climate for minorities on the Tech campus. From my personal observations, I have watched all types of students interact, study and strive for a higher education.

However, according to Haragan, my three years of observation must be a utopian mirage as most minorities at Tech "are not knowledgeable of university life and the rules of campus culture."

I was also surprised to learn that because my parents accessed higher education, I can easily fit into the "dominant culture" (whatever that means) and have mentors at my disposal.

In the future, I will try to be more aware of my ignorance and innate educational blessings, which, until Donald Haragan's keen observations, I never knew existed.

Registration ends today for May 3 election

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

Thursday is the final day to register to vote for the May 3 special election, when a new city councilor and a new U.S. representative will be selected from the area.

Laura Perez, a voter registration clerk in the county tax assessor-collector's office, said in order to register to vote, residents of Lubbock County need to get an application, either from that office, the post office or the Department of Public Safety.

The application must be turned in by 5 p.m. Thursday, or if mailed, must be postmarked by Thursday, she said.

There are only two positions up for grabs, Perez said.

The Lubbock city councilor from District 6, which was recently vacated by Ty Cooke, is open for election, as is the representative from Congressional District 19. U.S. Rep. Larry Combest's resignation, announced one week after he was re-elected, goes into effect May 31.

It is important for everyone who can vote for several reasons, Martin Edwards, said.

"Good common sense and good taste dictate that you can't grip about an election in which you weren't involved," he said.

Additionally, while one vote may not count unless it is a close race, it is still necessary for people to participate in government and let their voices be heard, he said. "Voting is like a lottery," Edwards said. "If you don't enter, you can't win."

He said it is especially important for college students to vote to lessen the monetary load on themselves and their families.

While Texas Tech is not going to get any money from the state, there is still federal money out there for universities, and students should be interested in picking a legislator who will actively pursue those dollars.

Combest particularly has gotten millions of dollars for various Tech research and other projects and students should want to continue that tradition, Edwards said.

Funding

Brown said the increase of funds brought to the SGA to disperse is not because of the increase of the transportation fee or athletics fee, which are two separate fees that were formerly part of the student services fees.

"We knew what we were going to get well before the fees were finalized," he said.

Vice President for Student Affairs Michael Shonrock agreed.

He said the main reason for the larger sum of money is because of the enrollment increase.

"This is a win-win situation for students," he said. "There are two reasons why there is additional funding. One, they're a lot more student organizations, and two, there are a lot more requests. This shows a lot more involvement from students."

Also, since more students are enrolling, more students are paying.

"There are a lot more resources available," he said. "More students are getting their money's worth."

Stumbo, who is the chairwoman of the student services committee, said the reason for the increase of money is simple: more students, more organizations.

"We try and increase it every year," she said. "We are going through an increase in organizations. And in order to accommodate the needs for their income, we had to demand more money."

And who said the SGA does not do anything for the students?

"Exactly," Stumbo said.

Brown said he hoped to get $300,000, but $255,000 plus $20,000 set aside for emergencies next year is a good load of money for Tech organizations.

Since students pay all the money that goes toward organizations, Brown said this is one of the most important duties of the Senate.

"We look at this very closely," he said. "This sort of works in a circle because students pay these fees, and in a way, they are getting their money back if they join an organization."

Graduate school Senator Jeff Moss, who is the chairman of the budget and finance committee, helped head the money dispersal process this year. He takes it seriously, he said.

That was noticed at the last Senate meeting when the second reading was heard and numerous appeals were brought up. Moss amended almost every appeal to receive less money than was asked and was usually successful. He said he does not want to give more money than deserved.

"We are very careful," he said. "The fact that the economy is in this certain position, everybody has their eye on every penny. (Our committee) is trying to be as fair as possible to the organizations who received money last year and the new organizations this year."

He said most organizations that applied for funding would receive something.

"This is a good thing," he said. "This is a bright note for student organizations."

Deregulation

Along with deregulation, Public Bill 3015 would also allow public universities to base the amount of tuition a student pays on the income of them or their family, Stumbo said. This would result in each student having a varying tuition rate, depending on the level of income they claim.

The deregulation of tuition would put the Board of Regents in charge of tuition, and state funding would dramatically reduce, depending on what the Legislature decides. They could decide to completely deregulate, which would drop off state funds severely, or they could cap tuition at a certain level. Either way, students would compensate for the drop in state funding, Brown said.

Stumbo said the problem is education was formed by the government and was considered an investment, but now it is no longer a priority compared to other governmental agencies. The legislation is using deregulation as an easy solution to their budget shortfalls.

"(Legislators are) clearly telling students that they're not their priority anymore," Stumbo said.

Stumbo said that the chancellor of the University of Texas system is pushing for the deregulation to make up for his institution's mistakes. UT has enrolled too many students too quickly and is trying to compensate by raising tuition.

"(UT is) turning higher education into elitists, and higher education will be left out," she said.

Vice President of Student Affairs Dr. Michael Shonrock, who met the students in Austin on Wednesday, said Tech's student leaders are trying to let our legislators know the concerns about the rising costs in higher education.

"Primarily (this is) an opportunity for college students to be a voice in Austin and share the types of things that are important to a student at Texas Tech University," Shonrock said.

Education

Garry Owens, dean of the College of Visual and Performing Arts and the chairman of the search committee, said he has met with Santos and believes she is the best candidate for the position.

"I got a chance to meet her several times and attend some events with her," he said. "She is very enthusiastic and understands the issues the college is facing. Her background gives her the recommendation for the job, and she is willing to be engaging by getting people involved with area schools."

Santos will start her term of office beginning July 1. Chancellor Dr. David Smith said she will be an educational presence on the university.

"Santos is a great addition to our faculty, not only in an academic sense but in the community as well," he said.

Santos could not be reached for comment.

Law

"We need to get the word out around the country about what a solid program we have here," Shannon said. "That ranking relates to other academics' and judges' opinions of the school. We need to get better known."

Kay Fletcher, assistant academic dean of the law school and director of the school's career services, said Tech's law school is regional in its prestige.

"We are a regional law school and are well known in Texas and the surrounding states," Fletcher said.

Both Fletcher and Shannon said the law school has nationally recognized faculty and programming to be proud of, as well as high pass rates on the bar exam.

Shannon added the school will need to put more money into increasing recognition, as well as sending more professors on the road to present their expertise within academia.

In the face of budget concerns, Shannon said the school will probably increase its efforts to find private funding.

The law school boasts several program areas to be particularly pleased with, Shannon said, including the Center for Bioterrorism and Law, as well as many clinical programs and strong programs for students to learn practical, hands-on skills.

"Our graduates, once they complete their degree, are ready to go to legal practice as soon as they step out the door and join a firm," Shannon said.

Donation drive benefits Goodwill, community

By Harvey A. Mireles/
Staff Reporter

Spring-cleaning time is here, and the Texas Tech Miller Girls and Delta Tau Delta are helping to move some of Lubbock's unwanted items.

The Miller Girls and Delta Tau Delta are beginning the inaugural Drop 100 pounds with Goodwill Donation Drive today with all proceeds benefiting Lubbock Goodwill. Items will be collected at five different locations in the South Plains area.

The goal is to collect 42,000 pounds of donated goods within the four days set for the drive. The money raised through the sales of the donated goods will be used for Goodwill's training and work programs, creating an estimated 20 jobs for people who may face barriers to employment.

Those who stop at any of the Goodwill donation sites or Goodwill retail stores will receive a free raffle ticket for a chance to win prizes including a computer, a one-year membership to a BodyWorks 24 hour gym and a gift certificate to the South Plains Mall.

Allison Ulliman, a senior interior design major from Fort Worth, is the civic committee head for the Miller Girls.

She said she first contacted Goodwill at the beginning of the fall about doing a service project.

They're excited to do the service work for an organization that is truly in need and very appreciative.

— ALLISSON ULLIMAN
CIVIC COMMITTEE HEAD
FOR THE MILLER GIRLS

"(The donation drive) will be a great thing for Goodwill and the local economy by creating jobs and helping the Lubbock community," she said. "We've already got a great response from the community, and with the five sites that are convenient and spread in different locations, I think we can accomplish our goal."

Ulliman said a member of each organization and an employee from Goodwill will be at each of the donation sites during the drop-off hours.

"The bulk of the work will be on the shoulders of the members of the organizations," she said. "The (Miller Girls) as a whole have been really excited and supportive for the donation drive. They're excited to do the service work for an organization that is truly in need and very appreciative."

Michael Fisk, a freshman accounting major from Dallas, is the community service chairman for Delta Tau Delta.

He said the event is about turning the items donated into jobs for people with disabilities.

"Usually, not many of my fraternity brothers are looking forward to being receiving e-mails from a lot of them saying that they are really looking forward to this one," he said. "This is one of the biggest charitable events I've seen."

In preparation for the event, Fisk said he has been meeting with Goodwill and Miller Girls every week for about two months.

"The Miller Girls and Goodwill have been really good to work with," he said. "It kind of brings everyone together."

Fisk said the donation drive benefits everyone involved.

"Whether you help out the people or are helping out yourself in a tax write-off, I just hope everybody gets something out of it," he said. "It will show the Miller Girls and my fraternity brothers the big effect community service has on the community."

Susan Moeller, the community relations coordinator for Goodwill, said she was excited when Ulliman first contacted her.

"I just couldn't believe it," she said. "They were looking forward to a project and we had one for them. It's been a wonderful match."

Moeller said she had the idea for the project and was intending on making a few calls to Tech organizations about doing it when she received the call.

"Those groups have a wealth of experience for helping out non-profit groups and that is invaluable," she said. "Lubbock, traditionally, is a very giving community and they are going to give it their best shot."

The donation drive will end at 6 p.m. Sunday.

TV Guide celebrates 50th anniversary, looks to future

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — At age 50, TV Guide is showing signs of maturity. Circulation is down amid competition from newspapers that offer their own listings and TV shows that provide a stream of celebrity news.

TV Guide also has adapted to the changes in the media business in recent years, with online listings, an interactive program guide and a television channel that make the most of its instantly recognizable name and logo.

Founded by Philadelphia publisher Walter Annenberg, the television viewer's bible debuted April 3, 1953 in 10 Midwest and East Coast cities with Lucille Ball's young son Desi Arnaz Jr. on the cover. Now owned by Gemstar-TV Guide International Inc., it has 209 regional editions nationwide and just over 9 million subscribers, according to the latest figures from the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

As more home technology developments around the television screen, TV Guide's mission is to help readers make the most of their leisure time, not just tell them what to watch, said John Loughlin, president of the TV Guide Publishing Group. To that end, the company plans a redesign of the magazine to make the listings easier to read. It also will have shorter stories and expanded coverage of home-entertainment products, such as DVDs and high-definition TV sets, Loughlin said.

'Spirited Away' animation lands perfection

There are certain elements that a movie must possess in order to be great: an involving story, fascinating characters and intrinsic beauty. Notice, however, that live action is not one of these components.

Hayao Miyazaki's "Spirited Away" recently won the Oscar for Best Animated Film. It beat out mainstream competitors like "Lilo and Stitch" and "Ice Age," and rightfully so. Miyazaki's film is one of the most original and phenomenal animated films since Disney's "Beauty and the Beast" back in 1991.

In these times when animation studios have run out of ideas and have been reverting to bastardizing original films like "Cinderella" or "101 Dalmatians," "Spirited Away" is the movie we have been waiting for.

In the movie, we meet Chihiro, a 10-year-old girl who, with her parents, is moving to a new neighborhood in

FILM REVIEW

James Eppler
jeppler@hotmail.com

the woods. But when her dad takes a "short cut," they stumble upon an abandoned theme park. Although seemingly deserted, they find an eatery that still serves fresh food.

While her parents begin to gorge themselves, Chihiro wanders off to find a bathroom. She is met by a young man who tells her to flee immediately. But when Chihiro goes back, she finds her parents have turned into pigs.

When night falls, the theme park begins to fill with strange creatures. The young man from before, named Haku, tells her she must now get a job working somewhere in this world or she will perish. In order to get out alive, she must play by the rules.

Chihiro finally lands a job at the bathhouse, who runs by a witch named Yubaba, which steals the names and identities of people after they sign her contract. Chihiro is given a new name, but if she ever forgets her original name, she will be lost forever.

The story appears to have somewhat of an "Alice in Wonderland" feel, but it is so much better than that. We follow Chihiro as she tries to adapt to life in this world and winds up getting involved with saving a friend from a curse and battling a grotesque monster.

The story is wonderfully told, and the animation will keep your eyes glued to the screen. Miyazaki's, whose previous work includes "Kiki's Delivery Service" and "Princess Mononoke," proves he is not only a masterful artist, but also an excellent storyteller.

Miyazaki's characters are most are not always what they seem. One of the most interesting is a "faceless spirit," who sees the genuine goodness in Chihiro.

Although his character has few spoken lines, there is a significant change in his character that is a direct result of his contact with Chihiro. He's a very deeply woven character.

The movie incorporates certain aspects of Japanese mysticism, but at its core, "Spirited Away" deals with very simple ideas like love, dedication and humanity. It's the blend of these factors that make the story so rich.

Miyazaki, who is known for drawing thousands of frames by hand, fills the movie with lush scenery. It's like spending two hours looking at a gorgeous painting.

There are scenes in this film that nearly took my breath away, which is something that rarely can be said about an animated film these days.

Tech looking for answers to road troubles

OUTFIELDER SEAN ALEXANDER slides into second base against Southwestern Texas. Tech hopes to improve on the road this weekend at Missouri.

By Jason Lenz/Staff Reporter

In its three road-series against TCU, Baylor and Texas, the No. 20 Texas Tech Red Raider baseball team has come away with one win per series.

Following last weekend's series at Texas, the Raiders (20-11, 4-5 Big 12) are on the road again at Missouri. This is the first time this season Tech will play consecutive weekend series away from the confines of Dan Law Field.

Junior pitcher Juan Razo said the Raiders cannot use the road games as a crutch. It is their responsibility to play well no matter where.

"We can't use that as an excuse," he said. "We have to go out on the road or at home and play with the same intensity. It doesn't matter where we play. It's pretty much up to us."

Head coach Larry Hays said he considers the difficulties on the road more a reflection of the caliber of opponents than a reflection of Tech's struggles.

"Look who we've played," he said. "Baylor and Texas are both top 10 teams. That has as much to do with it as anything. The road deal can be used as an excuse because that's what everybody does. I think we matched up pretty well."

Hays said a good example of this match-up was the Texas series. Tech lost game one 6-5 in 12 innings and game two 11-5 after what Hays described as "a horribly pitched inning" in the eighth. Tech won game three 5-2 and led at some point in every game of the series.

Regarding Tech's sub .500 record in the Big 12, Hays said he needs to wait and see how other teams fare against similar tough opponents.

"Let's see how everybody else does against Baylor, (Texas) A&M and Texas, and then 4-5 might not seem too bad," he said. "Let's see how many other teams go 4-5 against those three. Hopefully, these guys are smart enough to realize they've been through a tough part of the schedule, and at the same time realize that every week is going to be the same."

Given the unpredictability of baseball, though, Hays said jokingly he might be mistaken.

"I'll be surprised if very many teams go 4-5 against those three, but then I may be wrong," he said. "By the end of the year, everybody may have done better than that, but I don't think so."

Sophomore rightfielder Madison Edwards said the Raiders have had to face some tough road opposition, but that is only one factor.

"We've had a little dry spell in hitting," he said. "At times, we'd leave the bases loaded. Pitching a little bit, a little of defense; it's pretty much been a little of everything."

Junior pitcher Corey Gerstner said the Raiders have recently begun to gel together well as a team, but the pitchers need to keep every game in the Big 12, road or home, as close as possible if Tech hopes to improve its 4-5 record.

"I think mostly what we've got to do as a staff is to keep games close," he said. "Let our hitters battle and let our defense play so we'll have a chance at the end of the ballgame. We've done that a lot this year. If we could just start doing that on a consistent basis, we'll be set pretty good."

Red Raiders travel to face off with rivals

By Kyle Clark/Staff Reporter

With two matches this weekend against top 15 teams, the Texas Tech men's tennis team is getting exactly what it wants.

The team said wins last week over top-ranked teams would inch it closer to the goal of an NCAA Tournament berth, and this weekend, Tech will receive two opportunities for an upset against rivals Texas A&M and Texas.

The Red Raiders face Texas A&M on Friday in College Station and will then travel to Austin to face Texas.

With two matches against good teams, the Raiders said there is nothing but excitement for the weekend.

Senior Alfonso Perez said this weekend's road trip has potential written all over it.

"A&M and Texas are both top 10 teams," he said. "Their programs are always good, and they're both great atmospheres to play."

Although most teams on Tech campus face rivals A&M and Texas at different points during the season, Perez said there is no reason to feel at a disadvantage facing the two teams in one weekend.

"You just have to look at it a different way," he said. "We have a chance to beat two top 10s in the country this weekend. We can surprise somebody."

Last weekend, Tech had defeats on a road trip in California to California-Santa Barbara and San Diego. Tech was without No. 1 player Diederik de Groot in the matches because de Groot was benched and later kicked off the team by Tech head coach Tim Siegel.

Despite not having de Groot at the No. 1 spot Siegel, the team rallied against San Diego, which was ranked in the top 30.

"This is a great group," he said. "They almost came back the next day after losing to UCSB and beat a top 30 team in San Diego."

Siegel said the reason for his team's showing at San Diego was the unity between the players.

"I think this team believes in each other and believes in their coaches," he said. "The guys believed they could beat San Diego."

After losing to San Diego, the team knows there is still a matter of knocking off a top 40 team to get ranked high enough to get into the NCAA Tournament.

Perez said the team will concentrate on continuing to play the way it has all season, and the higher ranking will come.

"We've had a great season," he said. "We just have to do our work, and the rankings will take care of themselves."

Siegel was singing the same tune about the rest of the season and just wanted to see his team work hard and continue on the road it is on.

"I just want them to go out there and compete well," Siegel said. "They're fired up about playing tennis."

Men play in consolation game at NIT

Bob Knight will finish his second year as head coach of the Texas Tech men's basketball team when the Red Raiders face Minnesota in the consolation game of the National Invitational Tournament at 4:30 p.m. today in New York City's Madison Square Garden.

Tech lost its opportunity of playing in the title game after blowing a 10-point lead in the second half that led to a loss against St. John's 64-63 Tuesday night. The Red Storm will play Georgetown, who beat Minnesota 88-74 for the championship after Tech's game with the Golden Gophers.

Today's game also will be the last in Raider uniforms for seniors Will Chavis and Kasib Powell. The collegiate career for other senior Pawel Storzynski, who has been hurt for two months, also will end.

It will be the second time this season that the Raiders (21-13) will face Minnesota.

In the first meeting, Tech won 99-89 in overtime on Dec. 28 in Minneapolis, Minn.

During the win, Tech center Robert Tomaszek had his best game of the season with 28 points and 16 rebounds. Raider leading scorer Andre Emmett added 21 points to contribute to the win. Emmett leads Tech this season with 22 points per game.

The Golden Gophers are led by forward Rick Rickert and guard Maurice Hargrow, who average 15.8 and 13.4 points per game, respectively. During their loss to the Raiders, Rickert scored 22 points and Hargrow added 24 points to lead Minnesota.
