Bush says 'difficult work' remains in Iraq

By Scott Lindlaw/Associated Press

ABOARD THE USS ABRAHAM LINCOLN (AP) — President Bush, on an aircraft carrier homebound from the Persian Gulf, told the nation Thursday that Saddam Hussein's defeat "is one victory in a war on terror" that still goes on.

"Major combat operations in Iraq have ended," Bush said from the deck of the USS Abraham Lincoln, which sent thousands of jets into war. "In the battle of Iraq, the United States and our allies have prevailed."

Bush flew to the carrier on a Navy jet and made a screeching stop as his plane was snagged by a cable stretched across the deck. He changed out of his flight suit to address thousands of cheering Navy personnel dressed in yellow, green and powder blue crew shirts and crowded aboard the sun-dappled deck to hear their commander in chief.

"The liberation of Iraq is a crucial advance in the campaign against terror," the president said. "We have removed an ally of al-Qaida and cut off a source of terrorist funding. And this much is certain: No terrorist network will gain weapons of mass destruction from the Iraqi regime because that regime is no more."

Bush sought to give the nation a closure to the fighting while avoiding a sweeping claim of overall victory. He said much still needed to be done, including bringing order to the country, finding weapons of mass destruction, creating a democratic government and pursuing leaders of the fallen regime, including Hussein.

"The battle of Iraq is one victory in a war on terror that began on Sept. 11, 2001, and still goes on," he said. "Our mission continues. Al-Qaida is wounded, not destroyed. The scattered cells of the terrorist network still operate in many nations, and we know from daily intelligence that they continue to plot against free people. The proliferation of deadly weapons remains a serious danger. The enemies of freedom are not idle, and neither are we."

Bush stopped short of declaring victory or an end to the war. Such declarations could trigger international laws requiring the speedy release of prisoners of war, limiting efforts to go after deposed Iraqi leaders and designating the United States as an occupying power.

The USS Abraham Lincoln, returning from the Persian Gulf, was about 30 miles from San Diego when Bush landed. A former pilot, he got a turn at the controls, flying about a third of the way. Bush emerged in a green flight suit, carrying his helmet, and shouted to reporters. "Yes, I flew it!" He said he had only steered the plane "straight ahead" and was not tempted to try to land it.

It was a made-for-television day sure to be replayed during Bush's re-election campaign. With a wide grin, the president lingered on the deck with crew members, shaking hands and posing for pictures. "Good job," he shouted to sailors. The ship was slowed so Bush could

HSC professor files motion to amend bond

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech Health Sciences Center professor who got into trouble with the plague in January filed a motion Wednesday, stating his bond conditions were "fundamentally unjust" and needed to be amended.

According to the motion, Dr. Thomas Butler's conditions do not allow him to travel outside of Lubbock County or talk to anyone who could be related to his case, requires him to wear an electronic monitor and other conditions.

The motion requests several amendments be made to those conditions, either to help Butler prepare his defense or allow him to continue his research as much as possible. He should be allowed to travel freely throughout the continental United States on his own recognizance and should be able to contact potential witnesses in the presence of his attorneys.

Additionally, he should not be subject to electronic monitoring and should be allowed to own a computer and have access to e-mail and the Internet.

The motion argued that Butler is a well-respected physician and researcher who was doing scientific research on the plague. He has no prior criminal history and intends to return to work at Tech when this is taken care of, if possible.

Floyd Holder, Butler's attorney, said he initially agreed to the conditions when Butler was still in jail, but he now believes his client is subject to humiliation because of the conditions.

"I'm just like a woman," he said. "I changed my mind."

When Butler was arrested in January, the U.S. Congressional race likely to end in runoff

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

One factor is going to make a difference in the May 3 special election that determines the next U.S. representative from District 19.

"It'll come down to a lot of candidates getting their particular supporters out to the polls," assistant professor of political science Brian Collins said. "Each of the candidates has their own support system, and they'll be trying to get them out."

Seventeen candidates are vying for the seat of U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, who is retiring at the end of the month. There are 11 Republicans, two Democrats, one candidate each from the Green, Libertarian and Constitution parties, and one independent.

Nine are from Lubbock, four are from Midland, two are from Odessa and there is one each from Denver City and Kermit. That breakdown also could prove to be significant in determining who makes it to the runoff, Collins said.

"What's interesting about this particular race is they've redrawn the boundaries, and there are two major metropolitan areas that are very independent of each other," he said.

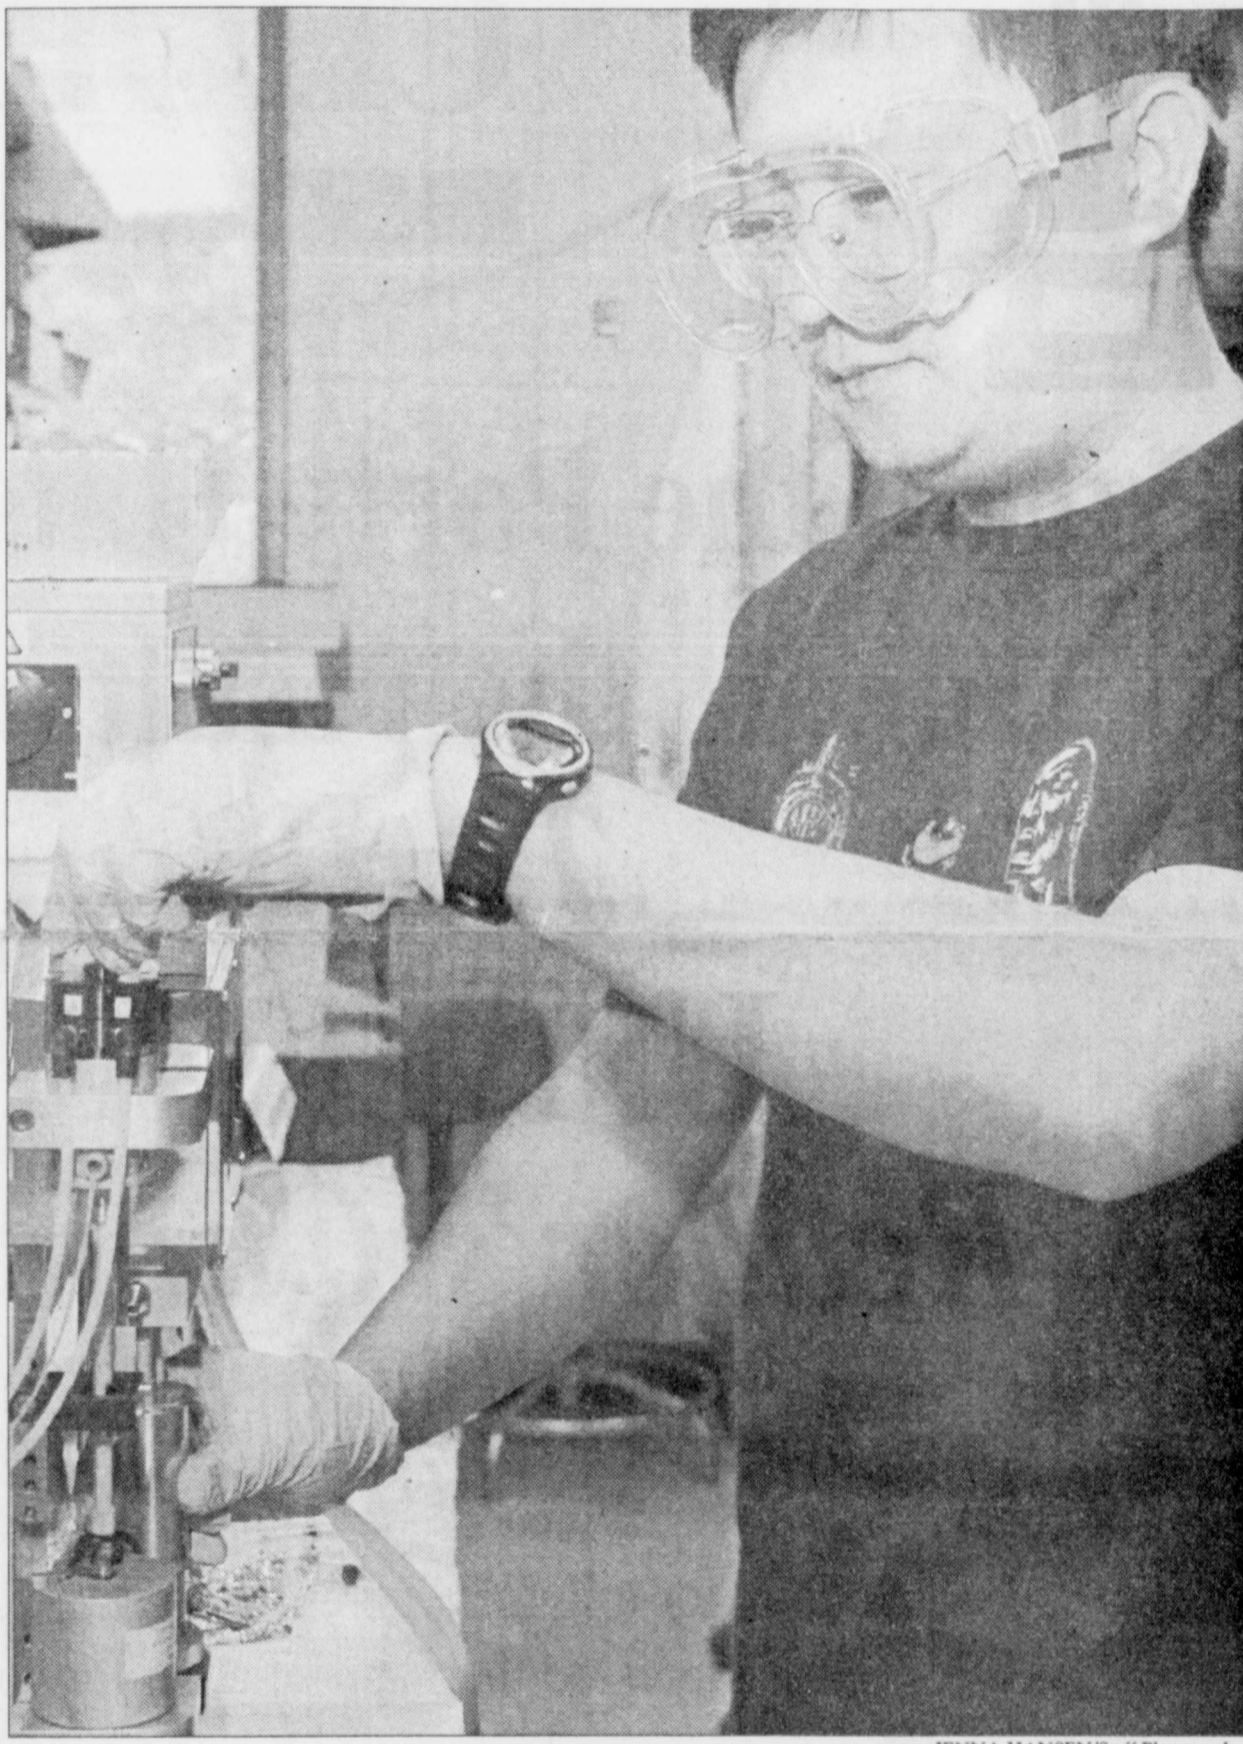

One candidate has to get at least 50 percent of the vote to win. Because of the number of candidates, this is unlikely in the first election, he said. The top two vote getters will have a runoff election to determine who will win the election.

Assistant professor of political science Cherie Maestas said this could have an effect on who is in the runoff. The Midland/Odessa area is focusing primarily on one candidate, while in Lubbock there are several strong runners. Because of this division, there may be one candidate from each area in the runoff.

She also said the number of candidates in 17 candidates vie for congressional seat

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

Saturday night, 15 congressional hopefuls will go home without graciously accepting a position in Washington, D.C., lifting glasses of champagne in celebration or receiving congratulatory calls from friends and family.

The remaining two will smile, thank their supporters and all who voted for them, and then go back to the grind of campaigning as they prepare for the runoff election that will decide who will replace U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock.

Regardless of the odds, all 17 candidates are ready for the big day.

Republican Dr. Richard Bartlett of Midland could not be reached for comment.

Republican John Bell, an oil consultant from Kermit, said he will work on the energy policies, something close to his heart.

"I think energy prices going from one extreme to another is hurting the national economy," he said. "I really believe I can bring some common sense solutions in all the issues."

He also said he wants to focus on education, including getting rid of unfunded mandates from the state, he said.

Odessa Republican Jamie Berryhill said education and strengthening the economy are two things he wants to focus on while in office, as well as returning the nation to how it used to be.

"The real core of our campaign is to see this nation restored to its founding truths," he said.

Berryhill, a business owner, said his best quality is he would not represent the people of District 19 alone.

"My commitment is I will not work in my own strength; I will work in the Lord's," he said.

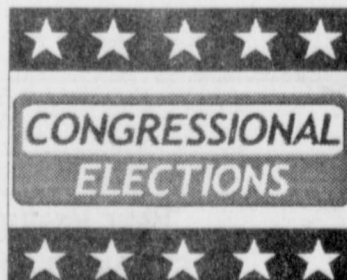

Republican Bill Christian said while in office, he would work to limit the federal government's role.

"The most important issue for me is for the government to stick with the things it does best," the Midland public servant said. "It is my goal to get the federal government out of our pockets and off of our backs, with lower taxes and fewer regulations."

He has the most congressional experience of all the candidates, he said.

"If the people of the 19th District think experience is important as I do, then I'm their candidate," he said.

Mike Conaway, a certified public accountant with 30 years of experience, said strengthening the economy would be his top priority in office. He plans to get President George W. Bush's stimulus plan through Congress.

"We can get that money left in the hands of small businesses, so they can hire more people and buy more equipment," the Midland Republican said. "It's the process of creating new tax-

Girl wrecks 18-wheeler, killing three

HOWE (AP) — An 11-year-old girl was apparently the driver of an 18-wheeler loaded with automobile parts that crashed into a highway overpass guardrail, burst into flames and fell onto the road below, police said.

Nicole Marie Gonzales, her father Luis Gonzales, 35, and her brother Nicholas Eugene Gonzales, 3, burned to death in the early Friday morning wreck on Highway 75 in Howe, Police Chief Roy Keesy said.

Keesy said he expected to wrap up the investigation Friday.

Howe police Sgt. John Cherry said Luis Gonzales drove from Michigan to Muldrow, Okla., the day before the accident, then spent about five hours at his house before setting out again, taking two of his children with him in the 2000 Freightliner tractor-trailer.

"The father in this case had not had much sleep, so it is possible that he had her drive while he rested," Cherry said.

It appears 11-year-old Nicole was driving the rig, he said.

"She was behind the wheel," Cherry said. "She had the steering wheel in her hands when she was removed."

Luis Gonzales' body was found at the edge of the mattress in the cab's sleeper compartment, but it was unknown whether he had been in the compartment when the accident happened, Cherry said.

No one in the vehicle was wearing a seat belt, and the 3-year-old whose body was found on the floorboard was not in a child safety seat.

Two men arrested in rural triple homicide

LONG PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Two men arrested in a triple homicide in rural town also are suspects in two deaths in their hometown of Minneapolis a week earlier, police said Thursday.

Police said they knew of no link between the suspects and any of the victims, and said the motive in both cases appeared to be robbery.

"The bottom line here is money," Minneapolis Police Chief Robert Olson said.

The bodies of Holly Chromey, 49, and her children, Katie Zapalka, 18 and Jerrod Zapalka, 16, were found Monday in their home in Long Prairie.

Murder charges were expected later Thursday against Christopher Earl, 20 and Jonathan Carpenter, 21.

He and Long Prairie Police Chief Chuck Eldred also named the two men as suspects in the deaths of William Schwartz, 88, and his daughter Claudia Schwartz, 50, in their north-eastern Minneapolis home.

Their bodies were found April 17. Olson said they had been severely beaten and stabbed and their throats slashed. Cash also was taken, perhaps including rare old silver dollars and half-dollars, police said.

Olson said both suspects were known drug users but his department had found only minor crimes on their records.

Eldred gave no further details about the Long Prairie killings, saying he was still waiting for autopsy results.

Dave Bjerga, a special agent with the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension, said he did not know why the suspects had been in Long Prairie.

Villagers block roads to new SARS hospital

BEIJING (AP) — Nervous villagers around China's capital blocked roads with dirt and stones to keep out people with SARS, and ambulances delivered the first group of patients to a hastily built 1,000-bed SARS hospital outside Beijing.

Millions stayed home for the May Day holiday after officials cut short a week-long vacation in an effort to curb the spread of the disease. Travel agencies were told not to take people out of their home provinces.

At a half-dozen farm villages visited by an Associated Press reporter on Beijing's northern outskirts, barricades lay across roads into the communities. Signs told outsiders to stay away. Residents were allowed to leave, but volunteer guards sprayed their vehicles with disinfectant when they returned.

It was not clear whether the barriers were considered a violation of an order by China's central government this week banning local communities from blocking traffic from Beijing and other hard-hit areas. One township official said his government had authorized the barriers.

At a cluster of farmhouses within sight of the new, hastily built SARS hospital, set amid cornfields north of Beijing, a chest-high pile of dirt spread beyond the edges of the road. A hand-lettered sign in red on a scrap of plywood said, "SARS Prevention, No Entry."

"We'll stay here and keep this roadblock up until the threat of SARS passes," said a 30-year-old farmer dressed in cloth shoes and a worn military-style jacket who was guarding the roadblock with two neighbors.

College of Arts and Sciences creates electronic newsletter

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech College of Arts and Sciences has created an electronic announcement system for all faculty, staff and students.

Mary Jane Hurst, associate dean for the college, said it is the first of its kind in her department.

"In the recent past, we have not had a newsletter or magazine that was printed for everyone," she said. "We wanted to have a way to communicate with the students and faculty about achievements and anything occurring in the college."

The program was part of the college's "strategic plan and an effort to plan ahead," Hurst said.

Todd Rasberry, senior development officer for the college, said the new program is a way to present reports of activities.

"It is a way to disseminate information, and it is the easiest way," he said. "It is cost effective and also at people's convenience."

The announcement Web site is set up to display all accomplishments of professors and students within the College of Arts and Sciences while providing information dealing with current events, Hurst said.

"We are trying to recognize things that are happening at our college, and our faculty are doing great tasks like many book publications that should be acknowledged," she said.

Lady Brown, director of the University Writing Center and a professor in the English Department, said she thinks the new system is remarkable.

"I can get it through my e-mail by just opening it up, and I think that it is great because it is more immediate and keeps everyone informed about what is happening," she said.

After winning a Professing Excellence award, Brown said she loves what the site does for her esteem.

"I love it. Fame is always good," she said. "And it is very nice to be recognized for awards and honors that anyone is receiving."

One of the major factors that helps the college is the efficiency in cost, Hurst said.

"It is very low cost, and we don't have to spend the extra money on printing a newsletter and postage," she said. "Also it is quick, almost instantaneous."

Brown said the new system is user-friendly and has a certain aesthetic appeal to it.

"I like the design of it," she said. "The headings are very clear and offer a brief description of the story. The format is easy to understand and allows the user to go to archives files as well as news stories."

All faculty and staff received the announcements automatically, Rasberry said.

"We have it set up where the faculty and staff members already get the newsletter through e-mail," he said. "Our idea was to highlight major events in the college and individual departments, not just general information."

The announcement Web site can help build relationships not just in the College of Arts and Sciences, but also around Tech's campus, Hurst said.

"People can sign up and see what other people are doing with this new Web site, and it helps to open up opportunities to do new things like research," she said. "It can also help the media out with events happening."

To receive the College of Arts and Sciences E-Newsletter apply at webapps.itds.ttu.edu/, as announcements/ and follow the directions.

Cinco de Mayo festivities to begin with annual parade

By Matt Muench/Staff Reporter

In an effort to honor American troops at war and observe historical celebration, Fiestas del Llano, a corporation in Lubbock, will hold its Cinco de Mayo parade at 10 a.m. Saturday.

The route begins in the parking lot of the First Baptist Church, located on Broadway and Avenue V. Participants will march to the parking lot of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

Teresa Herrera, parade chairwoman, said the purpose of the parade is to kick off the Cinco de Mayo celebration and open the door for other festivities taking place in Lubbock this weekend.

She said the parade will have no grand marshal.

"Everyone is important in this parade," she said. "This parade is important because we are Americans, but we care about our heritage. We want our generation and future generations to not forget where our ancestors came from."

She also wants to educate people on the purpose of the holiday. She said some people think Cinco de Mayo is celebrated for the day Mexico won its independence. She said that is false.

"This day is to celebrate one of the battles Mexico won during the revolution," she said.

The day commemorates when Mexico conquered French forces in Puebla, Mexico in 1862.

This year's theme is "Si Se Puede," which means "it can be done."

Herrera said the theme was chosen to signify everyone can be created equal.

"We can all work together and not look at someone different because of the color of their skin," she said. "We are all one. We are all equal."

She said people attending the parade are encouraged to show their support for the military.

Among the floats participating is the Texas Tech Hispanic Student Society.

Miguel Lopez, the organization's contact, did not return phone calls immediately.

Another fiesta taking place Saturday is the 13th annual Cinco de Mayo festival that is put together by Magic 93.7 KXTQ-FM and TV station Telemundo.

The celebration will be at the Big Backyard, located at 904 East Broadway. The event will include food, a car show and live music headlined by Jimmy Gonzales, who is a two-time Grammy winner. Chuck Heinz from Magic 93.7 is helping coordinate the event.

"We just want to keep culture of the music and heritage alive for the Spanish community," he said. "This is a great way to hang out with family and friends and have a good time."

Doors open at noon, and tickets cost $10 in advance and $15 at the door. Tickets can be purchased at all area United Supermarkets.

Tech requiring new students to read Armstrong's book

By Angela Timmons/Staff Reporter

This fall's incoming freshmen will face some new experiences at Texas Tech that past freshmen did not.

The Center for Campus Life, in conjunction with the English Department and several others on campus, has instituted a new program requiring incoming freshman to read a novel before classes begin.

This summer's selection is "It's Not About the Bike — My Journey Back to Life" by Lance Armstrong.

Tara Higgins, coordinator for Campus Life Programs, said the program has been used at other universities with positive responses. The book will be brought up in many freshman-level classes, particularly English classes. In addition, the program has been founded with the hopes of giving incoming freshman a sense of community, she said.

"It gives all incoming freshman a common connection," Higgins said. "They're all reading the same book, they're all reflecting on it, and they're all experiencing the transition into college."

The novel, Higgins said, deals with life transitions, which is a pertinent theme, as incoming freshman experience major transitions in their first year at college.

"These kids are going to be experiencing different challenges and issues in college, and they'll make it through it," Higgins said. "They'll stick with it. That's the whole purpose of the summer reading program."

Incoming freshman will be expected to purchase the book independently and complete the reading during the summer. They will receive a brochure before their Double-T Days explaining the expectations of the program, Higgins said.

In addition to drawing the book into academic settings, the Center for Campus Life is in the process of coordinating programs with residence halls in which resident assistants will have hall discussions about the book with their freshman residents.

Double T Crew members and Red

Raider Camp counselors also will be responsible for reading the book before their jobs this summer in order to discuss the novel with freshman. Higgins said the campus library will also be promoting the novel.

These auxiliary programs are targeted at freshmen who do not have to take freshman-level English courses.

Higgins said she believes the incoming students will read the novel.

"I really do think they'll read it; I think we can encourage students to read," she said. "For the freshman that don't have to take that English class, we're hoping to get them in the residence halls. It's best to get as many students as we can. It's hard to reach every single one, but we're going to do our best to reach every single one."

Higgins said the new program is important for freshman to get used to college life.

"We're setting some new expectations and introducing them to their intellectual life at college," she said.

Sam Dragga, professor of English and chairman of the department, said he thinks the program will be positive overall.

"It's a book I think will be of interest to incoming freshman students," he said. "We've had a lot of good input and real effort to get a number of different opinions in order to come together on this choice."

The novel is a story of triumph over adversity, Dragga said adding it should provide opportunity for meaningful discussion.

"We're hoping for a high readership rate and hoping students will want to read," he said. "I think it is interesting and engaging."

Some student opinions, however, did not follow.

"That sucks," Justin Davis, a junior advertising major from Lubbock, said of the program. "I don't think people will read it."

Jenny Wallace, a resident assistant in Chitwood and junior public relations major from Albuquerque, N.M., said she does not think the residence hall discussion about the book will work well.

"Nobody would come to a book meeting," she said. "I have a hard time getting people to come to things anyway, and I don't think RAs are going to read it."

Lauren Henckel, a junior advertising major from Carrollton, said she believes the program needs more.

"If they threw in a free keg, they might get people to come and talk," she said.

Andrew Strand, a senior telecommunications major from Duncanville, said he believes it is a good idea.

"I think so, I think it's a good idea, but I don't think a lot of people will do it," he said.

The summer reading program is not the only new experience incoming freshman will face. The university is reviving an old tradition at Tech that was lost in the 1960s called convocation. Higgins said convocation is a welcoming ceremony for the freshman and will be held in the United Spirit Arena on Sept. 3.

"I see it as a time to bring all our incoming students to the university, welcome them to their new home, their new Texas Tech family, and help them feel connected to the university," Higgins said. "I think it will be a good time to let them know the expectations set for them, academically and in their co-curricular life, ahead of them. It's important they feel welcome and connected and get them pumped up for the year ahead."

The convocation will involve some speakers and will be somewhat formal. Higgins said attendance will be expected.

It gives all incoming freshmen a common connection.

Strong quake kills at least 100 in Turkey

CELIKSUYU, Turkey (AP) — Rescuers dug frantically in the rubble of a middle-school dormitory Thursday, hunting for more than 100 children believed trapped after a powerful earthquake rumbled through southeastern Turkey. At least 100 people were killed and 1,000 injured, officials said.

The headmaster said 198 students were sleeping in the building when the quake hit. Rescuers found the bodies of 11 children and one teacher in the flattened building, but 72 children were rescued, officials said.

Many others were feared dead, but youngsters could be heard screaming in the rubble, rescue worker Muhsin Balgi said.

"We hope another 50 students will be saved," Balgi said.

A civil defense official at the site said at least eight children had been located alive. One child's feet were crushed, but the others were in good condition and had received water from rescuers, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"My friends are waiting for help in there," 12-year-old Veysel Dagdelen was quoted as saying by the Anatolia news agency after he was rescued. "They were calling for help as they were pulling me out."

Hundreds of terrified parents prayed and screamed, waiting for news.

"Oh my God! Oh my God! My son is lost, he is lost, he is lost! I cannot take the pain any more!" cried out Sefika Celik, whose 14-year-old son, Alican, was trapped.

Rescuers also dug through a destroyed apartment block in an effort to get people out. One man carried a dead baby into a hospital.

The magnitude-6.4 quake struck at 3:27 a.m. and was centered just outside Bingol, 430 miles east of Ankara, the Kandilli seismology center in Istanbul said.

A bridge and at least 25 buildings collapsed in the center of Bingol, a city of 250,000 inhabitants, Mayor Feyzullah Karaaslan said. Damage could be seen throughout the city, where the streets were filled with terrified residents.

The earthquake also damaged power and telephone lines. More than 100 aftershocks hit the region, and rescue workers were unable to reach many villages.

Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan said nearly 100 people were killed, while Housing Minister Zeki Ergezen said the death toll could be 150 throughout the region.

In Bingol, 90 people died and close to 1,000 were injured, said Sevket Turan, a city official.

Soldiers, rescuers and local residents worked their way through the debris using cranes and jackhammers, desperately trying to save surviving students. Many injured students were being treated on mattresses laid out near the building.

The quake, which lasted 17 seconds, was felt in the nearby provinces of Erzincan, Tunceli, Bingol, Erzurum, Kayseri and Sivas.

government tried to deny bail, but an agreement was reached after several days.

Butler paid a $100,000 bond, gave the government his passport, as well as several other conditions, including the ones now contested.

"When he got out of jail, he had one charge," Holder said. "Now he has 15."

He declined to comment further on the issue.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Dick

Baker said the terms of the bond agreement were negotiated on and agreed to by both the defense and the prosecution.

The United States did not proceed on a motion to retain Butler because it was felt that the conditions set forth adequately addressed the government's concerns about flight risk and community safety.

"Those were agreed to by the defense, and now the defense is moving to change them, despite the agreement," he said. "I cannot address the allegations in the motion because the United States tries its cases in the courtroom, not in the press."

Butler was not available for comment to The University Daily.

Butler was indicted on 15 counts, including smuggling Yersinia pestis into the United States and illegally transporting it to Fort Collins, Colo., and Tanzania, lying to federal agents, and filing a false income tax return.

The indictment came from an incident in January when Butler reported 30 vials of the plague bacteria missing from his lab.

He later admitted the vials had been accidentally destroyed.

the race was discouraging to voters.

"This is a race with a lot of candidates but not a lot of information about the candidates," she said. "When it's hard to distinguish one candidate from another, there's less incentive to go to the polls."

While the number of candidates is daunting, only a few are viable candidates, Collins said. All of them are Republicans.

"The only thing you can say for certain is there will be two Republicans in the (runoff)," he said. "Who those two candidates will be is up in the air."

At this level of election, name recognition is the biggest factor in winning, he said. The issues are not the important aspects in this race.

"For most of the candidates, there's not a lot of distinction in the message," he said.

Whoever has the most money also has an advantage in the name game, Maestas said.

"Money is going to play a big part in a race with this many candidates because name recognition is very important, and money is used to buy name recognition," she said.

One candidate, however, is looking at the issues. He's just not looking at the expected ones, Collins said. David Langston, a Lubbock Republican, is the only candidate who has raised any issues that are not typical of the Republican Party.

There is a reason for this, Collins said. Langston is probably trying to appeal to the Democratic base in Lubbock. Several months ago, he switched from the Democratic Party to the Republican Party, saying his new choice fits his beliefs better.

These issues Langston is raising, such as free trade and globalization, are traditionally Democratic ideals, Collins said. Langston may be hoping he will rally Lubbock Democrats to vote for him, and the Republican votes will split enough to get him into the top two. It is a long shot, he said, but it is a possibility.

State Rep. Carl Isett, R-Lubbock, probably has the most name recognition because he has represented a large part of the district for several years. Republicans Mike Conaway of Midland, and Randy Neugebauer, of Lubbock, are running the most advertisements, Collins said.

Unfortunately for all of the candidates who have spent the last five months raising money, shaking hands and giving speeches, voter turnout is expected to be low, something Collins said is bad for American democracy.

"The people who get elected make policy that actually affects our lives," he said. "The way people vote does have a direct impact on public policy, and public policy does have a direct impact on people's lives, including students."

Dr. Donald May, one of the congressional candidates who will be on the ballot, encouraged younger voters to take advantage of this election and get out and vote. The voter group between the ages of 18 and 25 do not vote enough, he said.

"What's being voted on now is going to affect them 10, 20, 30 years down the line," he said.

Candidate Stace Williams agreed.

"Only 5 percent of folks younger than 23 vote," he said. "Five out of 100 is not very good."

spend the night on board before it docked Friday, officials said.

He watched fighters roar off the ship one last time on the way to home bases.

The president's speech marked the end of combat in Iraq and a re-focusing on the economy at home.

With the shores of California in sight, Bush said dangerous work also remains in Afghanistan. Hours earlier, Defense Secretary Donald H.

Rumsfeld said major combat had ended in Iraq, where U.S. troops had routed the Taliban months ago.

"In the battle of Afghanistan, we destroyed the Taliban, many terrorists and the camps where they trained," he said. "We continue to help the Afghan people lay roads, restore hospitals and educate all of their children. Yet we also have dangerous work to complete."

"And as I speak, a special operations task force, led by the 82nd Airborne, is on the trail of terrorists, and those who seek to undermine the free government of Afghanistan. America and our coalition will finish what we began."

The focus of his speech was Iraq.

"We are helping to rebuild Iraq, where the dictator built palaces for himself instead of hospitals and schools for the people. The transition from dictatorship to democracy will take time, but it is worth every effort," Rumsfeld said.

payers in lower rates."

His approach to solving problems makes him a good candidate, he said, and his CPA experience makes him qualified to handle problems related to the agriculture and energy industries.

Thomas Flournoy, a self-employed repairman from Midland, said he wants to restore the Constitution to the practice of government.

"That's what our founding fathers had to work with," the Constitution Party member said. "They made sure they had the proper role."

He said he encourages people to vote for him because he is familiar with the Constitution, which is what the United States is based on.

"If they want to retain freedom and sovereignty in the United States, they're going to have to have somebody like me who knows the Constitution," Flournoy said.

Odessa Democrat Kaye Gaddy said her goal in office is unity.

"I will represent all of the people of the 19th District and the issues that affect each and every one of them to the best of my ability," she said. "They say that you cannot be all things to all people, but I say you can be."

Gaddy, a former newscaster, said she wants to combine her efforts to support both the major issues of the district and her personal beliefs that many people in the district share, such as being against abortion and homosexuality.

Retired farmer E.L. "Ed" Hicks, an independent, could not be reached for comment.

State Rep. Carl Isett said his focus in office would be stimulating the economy, including fighting for the entire economic package Bush proposed.

"You have to work on it as soon as you get there," he said.

The Lubbock Republican cited several experiences that qualify him for Congress, he said. He is in the U.S. Naval Reserve, has worked with small businesses for several years and has been elected to the Texas House of Representatives for four terms.

"I think that my record is what differentiates me from the other candidates," Isett said.

Lubbock Republican David Langston said the most important issue for him is health care. He said he wants to improve the delivery system by encouraging competition in the industry.

"We must make quality health care affordable and accessible to everyone," the local lawyer said.

What makes him a good candidate for this race is his independence from traditional party ideals, he said.

"The next representative needs to be willing and able to listen to the people of this district, and then be strong enough to go to Washington and vote issue by issue based on what's best for the district, and not by strict party lines," Langston said.

Dr. Donald May, of Lubbock, said while in office he plans to remain in contact with the residents of the district so he can represent them best.

"The most important thing in the race is the people in the 19th District and the people in the United States of America," the Republican physician said.

He plans to hold 10 meetings a year throughout the district so residents can come to ask questions, voice their opinions or just talk to him, he said.

Lubbock land developer Randy Neugebauer said he could not pinpoint one issue because all the issues are significant. However, one quality stood above the rest.

"The No. 1 issue in this race to me is who can go and be the most effective congressman for the 19th District," he said.

While in office, Neugebauer, a Republican, plans to support the farm bill and get a comprehensive energy plan, and also work on homeland security, taxes and coalition building, something he is experienced in through his work as Ports-to-Plains chairman, he said.

"That's the record we're running on and the message we've been sending," he said. "We feel very good about the message, both to the messenger."

Green Party candidate Julia Penelope said her biggest issue in the race is what to do about the worsening water problem.

"It's going to involve a lot of change in how we approach agriculture and our resources," the free-lance photographer and copy editor from Lubbock said.

Her biggest strength is her political independence, she said.

"I am not associated with either of the major parties, and I don't owe anyone anything," Penelope said.

Lubbock Libertarian Richard "Chip" Peterson's biggest concern is Social Security because the government has overestimated how much money is actually available, he said.

"Something needs to be done about this deficit before it undermines foreigners' confidence in the U.S. and causes a fiscal crisis here," he said. "By voting for me, people can send a message to Congress to fix Social Security now."

Jerri Democrat-Asmussen, a Lubbock Democrat, said her experiences make her qualified to be the next representative from the district.

"I have gone through all the pertinent issues happening right now personally," she said. "I'm for the rich, the middle class, the lower class and the minorities. I think that's what sets me apart from the Republicans."

The local business owner said she is concerned about the environment and opposes Alaskan oil exploration, but she supports off-shore drilling.

Texas Tech law professor Vickie Sutton said she would work hard to protect the farm bill recently passed, as well as make sure there are no regulations on the energy industry.

The Republican educator has her eye on education, too.

"Education is the backbone of communities in West Texas," she said. "Texas Tech is the flagship of West Texas."

She also has senior-level government experience already, knows what needs to be accomplished and is prepared to use her experience to get it done, Sutton said.

Lubbock lawyer Stace Williams said he would focus on fixing the tax system.

"I'm a big proponent of the flat tax," he said. Even if a flat tax is not adopted, the brackets in the United States has a six-tier system, and he would like to see it reduced to at least two brackets.

Williams, a Republican, said he prides himself on being for the people.

"I think I'm the only candidate that is truly representative of the working class, the common man and woman," he said.

'Confidence' boasts in character, plot

Confidence" is a movie that is both the same and different from other caper films. It is the same in the way that audiences generally know what to expect: double crosses, mistaken identity and more than a few twists. But it is different in that it plays the con-movie game with a sense of style and charisma.

Director James Foley has shot a sharp yet smooth-flowing film, while writer Doug Jung has written some characters that are just as interesting as the plot itself.

The film's focus is Jake Vig (Edward Burns), who we first meet in an alley. He is on his knees and being held at gunpoint while he relates the events of the last three weeks to the gunman.

The beginning of his story features Jake and his crew running a scam on an accountant for a briefcase full of cash. Herein lies the movie's biggest mistake in that it overplays its hand way too early in the movie. The audience will be fooled by a certain turn of events in seeing how this little con is

FILM REVIEW

James Eppler
jeppler@hotmail.com

'Confidence' does a relatively good job of keeping the suspense throughout. But the real fun in this film lies in the confidence of the direction by Foley.

played out.

After this scene, the audience will be on its guard for the rest of the film doubting everything that it sees. Is this a set-up? Did he really get shot? Those kinds of questions.

But even though the movie may have revealed a little too much about how it will work, rest assured there are still a few surprises that audiences may not see coming.

As it turns out, this poor wretch they conned at the beginning of the movie was actually a bagman for a major crime boss who calls himself "The King."

Sure enough, one of Jake's crew ends up with a bullet in the head, so Jake decides amends need to be made with King.

King is played with hammy excellence by the great Dustin Hoffman, and it is obvious that Hoffman is relishing every moment of his screen time.

King's offices are within a sleazy strip club. But King is not without scruples. He fiercely scolds a pair of sisters who strip together for not being "tasteful" in their stripping act. (Take that, Roxanne and Nichole from "The Real Cancun".)

King gives Jake his new mark: a money launderer for the mob (Robert Forster), who is worth millions. The con will be a difficult one, and King insists that Jake incorporate Lupus (Franky G), one of his thugs who will oversee the operation and watch for any funny business.

Jake's crew includes Gordo (the always reliable Paul Giamatti) and Miles (Brain Van Holt), and he has recently added a pretty pickpocket whom he fancies named Lily (Rachel Weisz).

Complications in the plot include a government agent (Andy Garcia), who has been on Jake's trail for years and is consumed with bringing him down. Jake also has to contend with two corrupt cops who want a piece of the action in exchange for keeping Garcia off his tail.

The movie, like most heist films, soon turns into a game of who's playing whom and whether things are really as they appear. In knowing this, audiences will question everything but may indeed drive themselves crazy trying to make up their minds as to what's really going on.

"Confidence" does a relatively good job of keeping the suspense throughout. But the real fun in this film lies in the confidence of the direction by Foley, which looks like something Guy Ritchie ("Snatch") would have done in his pre-Madonna work. Credit also belongs to the cast made up of some talented character actors.

Salley, Arnold face harassment charge

(AP) — A hairstylist on Fox Sports Network's "The Best Damn Sports Show Period" has filed a sexual harassment lawsuit against co-host and former NBA player John Salley and others involved with the show.

Lisa Brescher "was subjected to an environment of unrestrained sexual harassment," according to a Superior Court lawsuit filed Wednesday.

Fox Sports Network said in a statement Thursday that an internal investigation could corroborate none of Brescher's claims.

Brescher, 29, left on a disability claim in February, the lawsuit says; it was unknown whether the disability was because of the alleged harassment or some other injury.

Messages left for Salley at Fox were not immediately returned.

The lawsuit also names News Corp., Fox Entertainment Group, Fox Sports Net, and producer and co-host Tom Arnold.

It alleges that Salley made unwelcome sexual advances.

When Arnold learned of the alleged problem, the lawsuit says, he replied that "he didn't care."

Neighborly Nurturing

Ritchie, roommates' selfless nature creates lasting relationship

By David Wiechmann/Sports Editor

HEATHER DOUGHERTY/Staff Photographer

(LEFT TO RIGHT) MEGAN SIMONEAU, A senior exercise sports science major from Clyde, Natalie Ritchie, a junior communications major from Amarillo, Joy VanKeuren and Janae Watley, a senior exercise sports science major from Gruver, help each other in as many ways as they find possible. The selflessness of all involved has made an impact on each one of their lives.

On the court, she is a hero to hundreds of young girls who dream of one day being a Lady Raider. Her bright smile when she makes a 3-pointer makes their day, but her actions off the court tend to go unnoticed.

It is Natalie Ritchie's commitment to helping others that sets her apart from the crowd, and she has two partners in crime in spreading love to a special person.

Ritchie and her roommates, Janae Watley, a senior exercise sports science major from Gruver, and Megan Simoneau, a senior exercise sports science major from Clyde, make a daily effort to brighten the day of their neighbor Joy VanKeuren, and it has impacted more than just these four.

"It's really helpful to know there's someone if something happens to her," said Jennifer Turner, one of VanKeuren's granddaughters attending Tech. "It's just another set of eyes and ears to look out for the people you love."

Jennifer is a freshman international business major from Abilene. Ritchie, Watley and Simoneau help VanKeuren, 71, with small tasks around the house, and in return, dinner or a nice chat will result. VanKeuren had knee replacement surgery in October, and the group visited her in the hospital. They brought her flowers and even carved a jack-o-lantern.

Ritchie said it was just something they felt they needed to do for their neighbor they've come to love as family.

"I just try to live my life helping to serve others," she said. "I know I'm here to play basketball, but through basketball I've been able to meet so many different people and see so many different types of people, young and old. I think the most influential thing you can do throughout life is show love and love somebody, so that's what I try to do."

The love the three students show is felt and returned by VanKeuren.

"They are everything you would wish for young girls of that age to be," she said. "I've felt so blessed to have them next door. Every one of them has been great, and I've adopted them."

A 71-year-old woman living by herself might strike some fear or concern in one's mind, but not in this case. VanKeuren said she knows she can depend on her neighbors to help her if her grandchildren are not available. "I don't mind living by myself because they give me a feeling of comfort," she said. "You don't ever know when you're going to need help."

Sabrina Turner, a senior landscape architecture major from Abilene and granddaughter of VanKeuren, said she feels good knowing her grandmother can find help when she is not available.

"In my field, I'm very busy, and it's hard to get over there and help her with little stuff," she said. "But I know she can call up Megan, Janae and Natalie to watch her house when she goes out of town or to water her plants. It feels really good knowing that I never have to worry about my grandmother."

VanKeuren said the group moved next door at the right time because she was going through some tough times, and having them as neighbors helped her tremendously.

"This has been a horrible year for me," she said. "My husband died, I totaled my car, and I had surgery, but if I fall, I know these girls are over there to help me out."

Watley said moving next door to VanKeuren came at a good time for her as well, and the two of them shared a lot of time to recover from recent losses last summer.

"Joy basically was a huge blessing at the best time," she said. "I had just lost my grandmother, and her husband had just died. That's nothing but the Lord's hand in that."

Jennifer and Sabrina have not had the opportunity to sit down and talk with any of VanKeuren's surrogate grandchildren, but both know what they would do if they had the chance.

"The first thing I would do is give them a big hug and say thank you," Jennifer said.

Sabrina expressed similar sentiments. "I would thank them for all the little things they bring into my grandmother's life without even realizing it," Sabrina said.

Ritchie and her friends do everything they do for the sake of knowing they are helping someone and to let VanKeuren know they are thinking about her. There is no personal agenda for the three of them.

"I think when you do things to get recognition, that's when you mess up and when you're not doing it out of the goodness of your heart," Ritchie said. "The best things you can do is when people don't even know, and it's just between you and that person. I think that's the most special thing, and I think that's the greatest thing when you're doing something not for the attention, but it's just about the love of that person."

Sabrina said with tears in her eyes that God put Ritchie, Watley and Simoneau next door to her grandmother, and that is a large weight lifted off her shoulders.

"They are a gift from God," she said. "They really are."

VanKeuren is having her other knee replaced June 28, and she told Watley that the gang would have to bring festive decorations to the hospital again.

"I'm having surgery again on June 28, you know," she said. "So you girls will have to bring me a big firecracker."

Track and field excited about home meet

By Jason Lenz/Staff Reporter

After a good showing at the Drake Relays last weekend in Des Moines, Iowa, the Texas Tech track and field team is ready for a weekend at home.

The men, who are ranked No. 15 in the nation according to Trackwiring, and the women are both competing in the Texas Tech Open on Saturday at R.P. Fuller Stadium.

Booker said the team accomplished its goal, and he is ready to look to new events.

"We set a goal, and we went out and accomplished it," he said. "We did what we wanted to do: be undefeated in that event. It's over now. The best thing now is to come back here and try to run well in my individual events like the 400 and the 200 (meter dashes)."

Looming on the horizon for the Raiders is the Big 12 Conference Tournament scheduled to begin May 12 in Austin. After that, the NCAA Regional takes place in Lincoln, Neb., starting May 30.

"I think everybody's looking forward to getting to conference," Booker said. "It's in a good place; it's down in Austin. We're all pretty used to that track, so we're hoping to do pretty good."

Booker also said he thinks the men's side cannot stay satisfied with a No. 15 ranking.

"We just want to go out there and compete to the best of our ability," he said. "We want to prove to people that we're not No. 15; we're a little better than that."

Head coach of the track and field team Wes Kittley said the team is riding the momentum of three weeks of good performances.

"We've had a good three weeks. You take Texas Tech, even UTEP and then Drake," he said. "I'm feeling really good about our group. I'm so proud of how we went to Drake and competed really well. The men's and women's teams. A lot of them did their personal best. The sprint medley team has been a highlight all year. Everybody's starting to run faster and compete better."

Kittley said the team should be competing this well at this stage in the season.

"That's the way it ought to be at the end of the year," he said. "You ought to be getting better. I've told the kids to believe it. They're going to run better late. That's what's been fun to see: everyone improve. I think we have something like 25 regional qualifiers."

On the women's side, freshman distance runner Katie Leonard said she has noticed dramatic improvement during the course of the year.

"I think that, especially for the distance crew, things are looking up," she said. "Everyone has just improved by leaps and bounds all season."

Leonard said the team has accomplished most of its objectives, but the Raiders could always use improvement.

"Right now, we're looking for (personal records), she said. "Pretty much everyone has qualified for regionals. We're just trying to get some good runs before the conference meet."

Although competing on the road has its benefits, Leonard said the Raiders always enjoy the comforts of competing at home.

"Traveling is enjoyable," she said. "You get to run on different tracks and run against different competition, but it's always nice when you get a weekend when you can stay in Lubbock."
