Students feel affect of enrollment growth

Parking spaces fill quick; Alternative spots available Long lines, faces form outside Financial Aid office

By Sally Gunter/Staff Reporter

With commuter lots filling up quickly, Texas Tech students are being forced to find alternative parking areas such as nearby businesses, churches and streets. The administration, however, does not see parking as a problem, but they are still looking for avenues to increase parking availability.

"On the first day of classes, I normally get tons of hate mail if there are problems," said Vice President of the Office of Operations Max Hinojosa. "My assumption is that it is going good."

Hinojosa said the Office of Traffic and Parking does sell more permits than there are parking spots.

"We base the oversale rate on how many cars there are per lot," Hinojosa said. "There are guys that count the cars in each lot."

Students who have not found parking spaces on campus have been forced onto other properties to park. Several businesses and churches around campus are willing to help out with the parking overflow.

The First Christian Church, at 2323 Broadway Ave. has established a new program that allows Tech students to park in the church parking lot during school hours. Partners in Parking is a donation-based program where students pay about $5 for a semester permit. Parking is crowded, though.

"We give out more permits than spaces because it turns over during the day," Tommy Jones, university minister, said.

The First Baptist Church also allows students to park in the far west parking lot, as long as the cars are gone by Wednesday evening and Sunday.

Saint John's United Methodist Church, at 1501 University Ave., will begin selling permits to students for $25 on Sept. 11 at 6:30 p.m. If the permits do not sell out, then they will be for sale on Sept. 15 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., said Donna Lindley, Saint John's secretary.

Students are allowed to park in the south half of the Hastings parking lot near 4th Street. The pavement is sectioned off by color.

Texas Tech students are encountering problems with the Office of Financial Aid, and many are worried about their financial status at Tech.

Paul Blake, assistant director of the Office of Financial Aid, said students are not getting their financial aid on time because some of them applied late.

Blake said there are students that applied for academic loans and do not meet the academic criteria. The Office of Financial Aid has to wait until those students meet their academic standards before awarding the money. He said all students are being helped.

"Students on the phone and the ones that stand in line will be helped,"

Blake said. "We will try to answer all of their questions."

Blake said the same number of students as last year are receiving awards, and all financial aid has been given to students that have qualified.

According to a press release, the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board informed universities that while the Texas Legislature added more than $50 million to the Texas Grant Program, this is not sufficient to cover all eligible incoming students.

Blake said he advises students that need to check their financial status to use the Internet.

"They will not waste their time coming up to the office and making the lines if they check their status online," Blake said.

The office has three additional stations working to ensure all students are being helped and to speed up the process, he said the office will be open until 6 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday to extend their services to the students.

"The number of students we have right now is pretty typical at the beginning of each year," Blake said. "Students just need to wait for their turn and know that other student's concerns are as important as the one they might have."

Kimberly Castillo, a sophomore social work major from Lubbock, said the entire financial aid process has been frustrating.

"I've been here twice today," Castillo said. "They keep telling me

WALK WITH A BUDDY

Tech graduate inducted into Buddy Holly Walk of Fame at annual event

Alvin Davis hasn't forgotten his roots, but he still looks toward the future. Davis, a Texas Tech graduate of 1951 and newest inductee to the Buddy Holly Walk of Fame, continues to stay active with the school that helped him get where he is today.

As he stepped to the podium to receive his award, his West Texas upbringing shone through. He donned a Texas flag vest, cowboy boots emblazoned with the symbol of times forgotten, the longhorn and a tan cowboy hat. He spoke in a drawl and first thanked God for giving him life on the earth and then his family for helping him along the way.

"It took many, many people to make my accomplishments possible," Davis said. "Thank you for being here and rejoicing with me today."

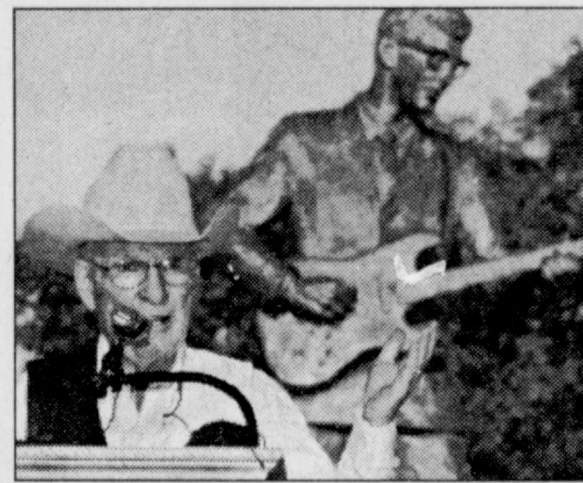

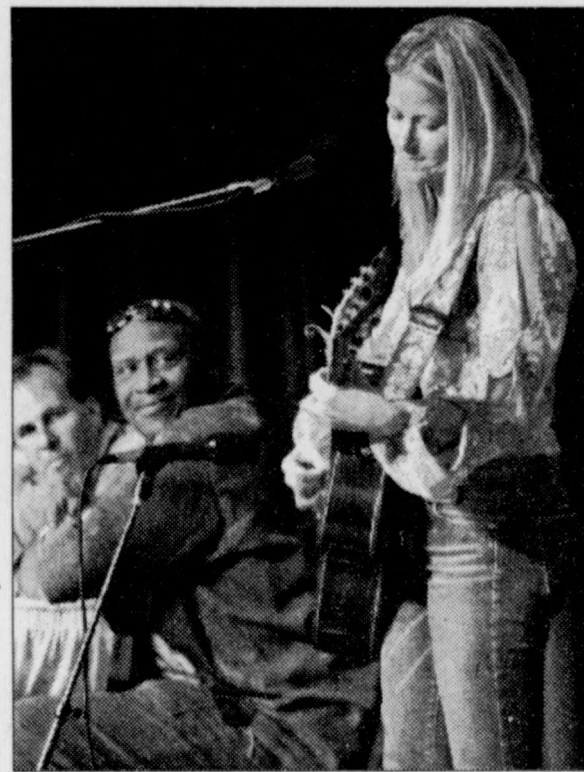

Davis' resume is lengthy, with such accolades as being named in the top 10 of Texas in '55. He is an author and editor and has given more than 1,000 presentations of his cowboy poetry in more than 30 states and 12 countries, as well as for the White House.

"There are lots of things you still haven't learned when you graduate," Davis said. "But because you have a degree, so many more doors are open to you. When the doors open, you sneak through."

The Buddy Holly Walk of Fame was made for those West Texans who have received national or international recognition in the field of the arts, said Lubbock Councilman T.J. Patterson.

Davis was inducted with country music legend Billy Walker on Thursday.

New rule bans fans from field

ZERO TOLERANCE: Big 12 puts rules in place for safety and security

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

Several incidents resulting in damages, injuries and even deaths have occurred during the past years because of post-game celebrations at college campuses. To contain these problems, the Big 12 Conference has instituted a new policy that forbids fans to enter onto the field or courts following these athletic events.

Texas Tech Athletic Director Gerald Myers said the NCAA has handed down the guidelines for crowd control issues.

"Over the last three to four years, incidents across the nation has forced the NCAA and the Big 12 to start this rule," he said. "Several of these incidents have turned into major problems."

Riots erupted last fall in Columbus, Ohio, after Ohio State defeated Michigan, giving them a 13-0 record and a bid to the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., for the national championship. The destruction ended with 10 students being expelled for their involvement and a reputation for Ohio State.

Myers said the primary reason for the new rule is ensure the safety of all the fans.

"The NCAA called a summit all across the nation that included athletic directors, commissioners and student-athletes to develop the guidelines," he said. "It is the responsibility of each college to setup a program that promotes safety and security of the fans as well as players and coaches."

Working with Tech to begin the program, the Tech Police Department is using all personnel at the game to cover the possibility of pandemonium.

Maj. Gordon Hoffman said the Lubbock Police Department is helping with traffic duties to allow more campus police to be at the games.

"The Lubbock PD is taking over most of our traffic locations to let us put more people on different locations on the field," he said. "Other than having more police presence from last year, there is not much change in the way we are working things."

The guidelines stated in the Big 12 updated policy are: "No one is allowed on the field or court after the game unless they have a purpose and credentials to be there. Violators will be subject to possible penalties, including judicial proceedings or loss of ticket privileges. Institutions have an affirmative obligation to structure local security and game management procedures to enforce Conference standards."

After 42 years, Freshman Convocation returns as tradition

By Megan LaVoie/Staff Reporter

Texas Tech is reviving an old tradition today. Freshman Convocation, which means "coming together" will be held at 5 p.m. today in the United Spirit Arena.

The convocation, sponsored by the Center for Campus Life and the Office of the Provost, was last held in 1961. The convocation's purpose is to unite both faculty and new students and welcome them to the Texas Tech family.

Key speakers at today's festivities are Tech's new president Jon Whitmore, who, before coming to Tech, served as provost and professor of theater arts at the University of Iowa since 1996. Chris Carmichael, a former Olympian, founder of Carmichael Training Systems and coach of five-time Tour De France champion and cancer survivor Lance Armstrong, also will be a guest at the ceremony.

"Convocation is just another part of our first-year experience program," said Tara Higgins, coordinator for The Center for Campus Life. "We are excited about welcoming our new students to the Texas Tech family."

The first student convocation was held at Tech in 1925.

It continued on throughout the years until 1961 where the last convocation was held on the Administration Building's lawn. Higgins said the reason the convocations ceased to be held after 1961 is unknown.

"I didn't even realize that Tech used to have a convocation tradition until I started to research," Higgins said.

Freshman students were told about the comeback of the convocation at new student orientation and Red Raider Camp this summer. The Center for Campus Life also has been working with community adviser and they will be accompanying the new students who live in the residence halls to the convocation.

"The first year for students is difficult. We have over 4,500 freshman students and we have done our best to get the word out about the convocation and keep the students informed," Higgins said. "We have an expectation that they will go to the convocation and plus it is a neat opportunity to hear the (Tech) president and Chris Carmichael speak."

Higgins was very excited about having Carmichael address the students.

"Chris will be talking about the transition from high school to college and how it relates to Lance's experience," she said.

Also a part of The First Year Experience Program was the assigned reading of "It's Not About the Bike: My Journey Back to Life" by Lance Armstrong and Sally Jenkins for all freshman students during the summer months. The Center for Campus Life and the Tech department of English joined together to make this novel a part of freshman English class assignments and discussions this fall.

New students will be recognized at the convocation and also will receive a special gift to welcome them and make them feel like they can call Tech their home.

Higgins hopes that this year's convocation is a success. "The idea is that this year's freshmen can go out and welcome next year's freshman and share their experiences," she said.

Michael Banks, a freshman environmental engineering major from San Angelo, said he was excited to attend convocation. He heard about it through other students.

"It should be fun," said Banks. "It is something that Democratic senator: ready for exit plan

AUSTIN (AP) — One of the boycotting Democratic senators spent the Labor Day weekend in Houston and was returning to New Mexico on Tuesday to consider an end to the group's self-imposed exile over congressional redistricting.

"After being in my district for five days, I have concluded my constituents are opposed to redistricting, but they also believe the fight should be on the Senate floor," said Sen. John Whitmire, a Houston Democrat. "I am returning to New Mexico today to keep my commitment to the Texas 11. I will discuss with my colleagues that we need an exit plan and we need it now."

Whitmire, the Texas Senate's longest serving member, said his departure was not a "bolt from the group," but a planned departure after the end of a second special legislative session on redistricting.

Eleven boycotting senators stymied redistricting during the most recent special session by staying in an Albuquerque, N.M., hotel and preventing a quorum on the Senate floor until the end of the 30-day session.

A return by just one senator would give the 31-person Senate enough members to conduct business if a third special session is called.

Guards' testimony allowed in Malvo case

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — The judge in the capital murder trial of Lee Boyd Malvo will allow the testimony of two prison guards who say the sniper suspect bragged to them about committing several of the shootings.

Defense lawyers had sought to suppress the testimony of Maryland prison guards Joseph Stracke and Wayne Davis. The defense team argued that Malvo had already invoked his right to remain silent by the time he had spoken with the guards.

Circuit Judge Jane Marum Roush ruled Tuesday that the testimony can be heard at trial.

"Although Malvo was in custody, and the prison guards were law-enforcement officers, Malvo initiated the conversations, and the guards did nothing deliberately to elicit any incriminating statements," Roush wrote.

Malvo, 18, and fellow suspect John Allen Muhammad, 42, have been charged with 13 shootings, including 10 deaths, during a three-week spree that terrorized the Washington area last fall. They are also suspected or charged in shootings in Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, Arizona and Washington state.

Council member demands U.S. leave Iraq

NAJAF, Iraq (AP) — A member of the U.S.-picked governing council angrily denounced the American occupation in a eulogy for his slain brother before 400,000 Shiite mourners Tuesday, demanding U.S. troops leave Iraq and blaming them for lax security that led to the revered cleric's assassination.

Abdel-Aziz al-Hakim in the holy city of Najaf at the funeral of his brother, Ayatollah Mohammad Baqir al-Hakim. Men clad in white robes and dark uniforms brandishing Kalashnikov rifles stood guard along the roof of the gold-domed Imam Ali mosque, where the cleric was killed Friday in a car bombing.

Shortly before the funeral started, a car bomb exploded in central Baghdad outside police headquarters, killing one police officer and wounding up to 13 people, an Iraqi police officer said. It was the latest attack apparently targeting Iraqis working with the U.S.-led occupation.

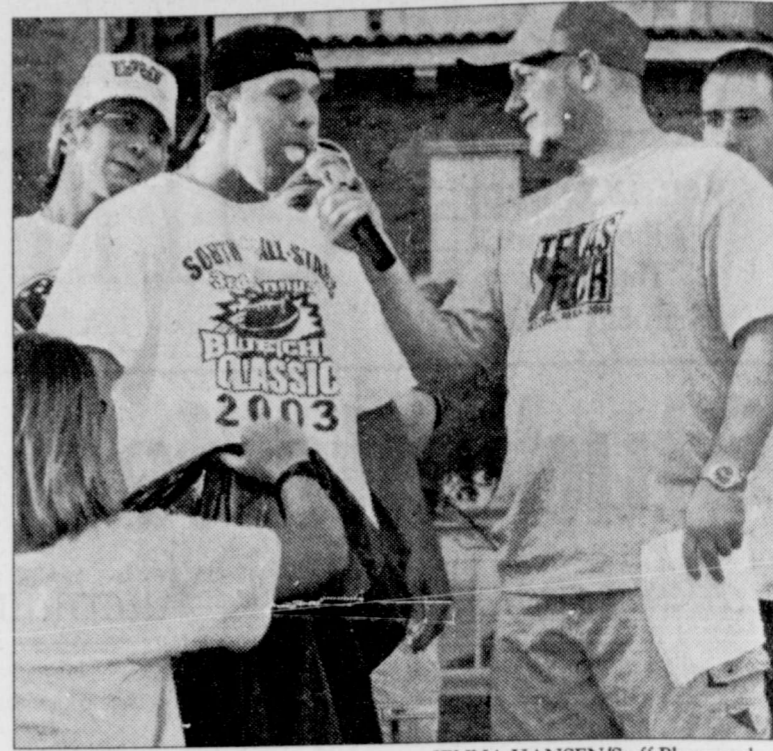

Also Tuesday, a Black Hawk helicopter crashed south of Baghdad, killing one U.S. soldier and injuring another in a "non-hostile" incident, said U.S. military spokesman Spc. Anthony Reinos. The military also announced that two U.S. soldiers were killed Monday by a roadside bomb in southern Iraq.

The deaths raised to 286 the number of American forces killed in the Iraq war. Of those, 148 died since President Bush declared an end to major fighting on May 1. Seventy soldiers have died in combat since Bush's declaration.

L. Paul Bremer, the U.S. civilian administrator for Iraq, who cut short his vacation because of the Najaf bombing, said Tuesday that coalition forces want to share responsibility for national security with Iraqis.

"We have seen... the influx of both foreign fighters and foreign terrorists in the last months and it shows that Iraq is one of the battlefields in the worldwide war against terrorism," Bremer said.

Coughing hard could hold off heart attack

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Coughing vigorously until an ambulance arrives could save the lives of people having a type of heart attack brought on by rapid and erratic heart beat, a doctor said Tuesday.

Dr. Tadeusz Petelencz, a researcher in Poland, said the technique, called cough CPR, forces blood to the brain while the heart is starting to fail and keeps patients conscious long enough to call for help. It may also rectify their heart rhythm, he told a meeting of the European Society of Cardiology.

He recommended Cough CPR be taught to the public, but other experts said while the concept is provocative, it needs more study.

Every year about 300,000 people in the United States die from sudden cardiac death.

Most of the time, the culprit is a type of heart attack brought on by a sudden problem with the heart's rhythm — ventricular fibrillation.

In three-quarters of cases, the attack happens at home, often when the victim is alone. Circulation stops, the victim faints and brain damage occurs within minutes. Death usually follows in about 15 minutes.

"Since the onset of the loss of consciousness is very rapid, they usually don't have enough time to call for help," said Petelencz, a professor at the Silesian Medical School in Katowice, Poland. "However, if victims could maintain consciousness until circulation is restored or help arrives their chances of survival would greatly increase."

Electric shock to the heart, known as defibrillation, is the only real treatment.

Airplane makes emergency landing after nose gear fails

NEW YORK (AP) — An American Airlines plane was forced to make an emergency landing at Kennedy International Airport on Tuesday after its nose landing gear malfunctioned, officials said.

No one was hurt as Flight 1048 — bound for Newark, N.J., from Dallas-Forth Worth — came down on the tarmac, using the landing gear under the middle part of the aircraft, said Todd Burke, an American Airlines spokesman.

All 128 passengers and the crew of five used normal exits to leave the aircraft, said Tiffany Townsend, a spokeswoman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which runs both Kennedy and Newark Liberty International Airport.

Flight 1048, which had taken off from the Dallas-Forth Worth International Airport, landed at Kennedy at 11:36 a.m., Townsend said.

Fire-retardant foam was sprayed around the plane after landing as a precautionary measure, she said.

people are going through at the same time.

We are all going through the same thing. It should help bring us (class of 2007) together."

Jeremy White, a freshman civil engineering major from Plano, agrees and said he believes Carmichael and the book were a good idea.

"The book was interesting," he said. "He (Armstrong) is someone modern you could actually relate to."

White believes convocation will help many of the freshmen bridge the gap from high school to college and beyond.

"It will help introduce us to the real world by seeing through other peoples experiences," White said. "It will help in the transitioning from college to the real world and from high school to college."

Rachael Lantz, a nursing major from Austin added that the event will make Tech students feel more like Raiderland is their home.

"Convocation is a great wat for students get acquainted to Tech and make them feel like Tech is their home."

Buddy

Though he has many life achievements, he continues to stay involved with Tech and the Lubbock community.

"I don't have monetary wealth to give monies, but I give of myself and my time," Davis said. "I ask God to give me a few more years."

Davis has given of himself by donating 11 Appaloosa mares and a stallion to the College of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources, as well as helping charter the Tech Rodeo Association.

The induction ceremony was part of the Third Annual Buddy Holly Music Festival and Symposium that took place this weekend.

Maria Elena Holly, Buddy Holly's widow, said she is excited the program was going to help educate upcoming and aspiring artists in the music business.

"This is an educational program for everyone interested in music and how to go about it," Holly said. "Lots of musicians don't know about the business of music. This is something he (Buddy Holly) always wanted and he enjoyed helping upcoming musicians."

There were five panel discussions on topics varying from songwriting and Lubbock's regional musical identity to the business of music. These were free with a valid Tech ID card for students.

"It was his dream to open studios here, knowing the talent so he could help upcoming musicians," Holly said.

The festival also featured music that wailed throughout the weekend.

Shelby Morrison, Buddy Holly Museum shop and sales manager, was the contact for the artists and some of the panels.

"We tried to bring all types of cultures together especially from here," Morrison said. "We have all types of music. People coming want '50s but we really would like to get all kinds (of people) together."

The bands ranged in style from rock and tejano to blues and country and lasted throughout the weekend, with Sunday dedicated to music. Bands played on two stages at the Buddy Holly Center from morning until evening. Even Maria Elena Holly got into the act and joined Patricia Vonne on stage, dancing and playing the castanets.

"Buddy was interested and influenced by all types of music and would promote all types," Morrison said.

The festival brought people to Lubbock from all over the world.

"People came from all over the world," Education Coordinator for the Buddy Holly Center Rachel Crockett said. "Especially from England and Australia, but also Europe."

Crockett said Tuesday although turnout numbers for the event were uncertain, estimated attendance of the festival from the four days was over 7,000.

The symposium was sponsored by Tech in conjunction with the Buddy Holly Center.

Parking

The lighter gray area students can park on; however, the dark black pavement is for Hastings customers only.

"We will post warning notes. I don't really want to go into the towing situation," said David Ramirez, Hastings store manager. "Tech students are a livelihood."

Chimy's, at 2417 Broadway, normally has a problem with students parking in their restricted lot.

A sticker is placed on the vehicle window as a primary warning, and the car is towed after a second offense.

"It is usually a concern and a problem, but today has been good," said Chimy's owner Kyle Wright.

A few students have already experienced problems with finding a parking spot.

Christine Teaff, a graduate student from Lubbock receiving a teaching certificate, drove around the commuter parking lot for about 30 minutes until she finally gave up and parked in a church parking lot.

"Parking has always been a problem here," said Teaff. "I am a grad student now and when I was an undergrad it was a problem too."

Sixteen cars were towed on Saturday during the football game because they were parked in the area reserved for the Red Raider Club members.

All of the owners were contacted and warned prior to the towing of their vehicle, said Hinojosa.

Traffic and Parking has implemented a new program, which does not take effect until the end of the fall semester.

Park 'n Ride is a program that will allow students to park in a lot southwest of the University Medical Center. They will then be bused to campus.

This program will add 1,500 more parking spots for students.

Ten Commandments create controversy

In the name of tolerance, take God out of the closet | Moore must keep religious roar behind church doors

Well, well, look at what we have here: A bunch of angry Christians shouting, "God-haters!" at the top of their lungs while they pound the pavement and pout over their precious monument.

I have to commend the national media for doing such a sickeningly good job of portraying every Christian as a backward zealot just because they protested the Ten Commandments being removed from the Alabama Judicial Building in Montgomery, Ala.

A recent CNN-USA Today-Gallup poll showed 77 percent of 1,009 Americans disapproved of the removal of the 5,300-pound monument last week.

So, I guess it's not just a few fanatics who feel strongly about the decision that flies in the face of religious freedom.

Chief Justice Roy Moore installed the sacred stone in the building's rotunda two years ago, but a federal ruling forced it to be moved far from the public eye.

Tony Perkins, president of the Family Research Council, put the situation in perspective perfectly at a rally right after the removal.

"The symbolism as well as the substance of this moment cannot escape us," Perkins said. "One federal judge has placed the Ten Commandments in a closet. That came after the United States Supreme Court recently welcomed everything else out of the closet."

This whole struggle began when the monument offended three lawyers. I suppose we should change the history of our nation also, since that must be offensive to them.

Our nation was founded by men of God, who acknowledged its birth as a blessing from Him.

But many Americans do not recognize religion as having a part in our history. This has occurred because any traces of religion in our heritage have been left out of textbooks and do not match the true facts of our history.

Students are taught a censored, more acceptable, "tolerant" version.

Thou shalt:

Somehow, whenever society clamors for separation of church and state, there's always a public reference to God or a Christian monument taking the fall.

They are trained not to think of religion as an important factor in our founding.

Moore calls the Ten Commandments "the moral foundation of our law." Anyone who reads the Commandments and then examines our laws can see that statement is true.

In that case, since the basis of our system of laws is offensive, let's just throw out the whole thing and start over, or rather, why have laws at all?

It's pretty ironic that, while District Judge Myron Thompson condemned Moore for his monument of the Ten Commandments, the justices of the U.S. Supreme Court weighed justice as they sat under a depiction of the Ten Commandments in their own courtroom.

The Court's ruling held the religious rock was in violation of the establishment clause of the First Amendment of the Constitution.

The clause in the amendment reads: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Thus, there is nothing said concerning Moore's display, so let's stop reading words that aren't there.

It's addressing Congress and restricting the government from establishing a national religion.

Besides the fact that this is a state issue, the monument doesn't create any laws or prohibit freedom of religion.

America has twisted the phrase "separation of church and state" to allow for the removal of anything religious in the public forum, in order to improve tolerance and increase overall "acceptance."

Strangely, I remember being taught the seven pillars of Islam and the eightfold path to nirvana in high school, but not the Commandments, or anything else related to Christianity. That sounds pretty tolerant to me.

If the principle of separating church and state is about maintaining neutrality, we have long ago crossed the line into promoting an anti-Christianity stance.

America has already established a national religion: secularism.

Somehow, whenever society clamors for separation of church and state, there's always a public reference to God or a Christian monument taking the fall.

People should just stop kidding themselves and change the phrase to "separation of Christianity and state."

Ingram is a sophomore journalism major, music minor from Mesquite. Send comments to James.S.Ingram@ttu.edu

It's a great credit to the Roman Empire that the practice of feeding Christians to lions in a coliseum has remained, clearly, such an enduring and compelling image.

Indeed, persecution by those in power against those who think, act, or behave differently than the majority is something to always be wary of, especially in a land where we so value individual freedoms.

However, things have changed in 2000 years: the Roman Empire has fallen, and in America at least, it is now the Christians who are in charge.

Still, they remember the lions and remain vigilant against attacks on the practice of their religion. But freedom to practice religion is not boundless, and modern-day Christians need only to look in the mirror to face the lion.

Chief Justice Roy Moore of the Alabama Supreme Court grossly overstepped the bounds of his office when he ignored a federal order to remove a 2.6-ton God-fearing granite monument of the Ten Commandments from the rotunda of the Alabama Judicial Building.

The self-appointed "Ten Commandments Judge" took it upon himself and a personally hired moving crew to march up the steps of the courthouse in the middle of night.

It's described in court briefs as "a consecrated place, a religious

Thou shalt not:

Regardless of what the framers of our constitution felt or believed, they are dead, and what we are left with are their words. And, my friends, their words prohibit state endorsement of any religion.

sanctuary, within the walls of the courthouse," but just as a giant golden Star of David has no place in a post office, a monument to God has no place in the front of a courtroom.

And make no mistake: that's just what the monument is.

Carved to resemble a podium, supporting an open bible, the piece is inscribed on all sides with quotations asserting the authority of God. The First Commandment, "I am the Lord thy God," is writ large preceding the list. (Followed, naturally, by "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me.")

And when taken with Moore's constant assertion that the Judeo-Christian God is the wellspring for U.S. law, the message is clear.

It's unconstitutional as well. The establishment clause of our Constitution prevents the government from endorsing any religion. When an actor of the state, imbued with powers and authority of the state, uses said power to aggrandize his own beliefs, he violates that clause.

Protestors miss the point, while fighting imaginary lions: Moore is not being censured for merely affirming a belief in the Christian God, but for using state property to proselytize.

Moore has refused the placing of non-Christian symbols in the rotunda, and in other courthouses there are depictions of the Commandments in less evangelical contexts.

Regardless of what the framers of our constitution felt or believed, they are dead, and what we are left with are their words.

And, my friends, their words prohibit state endorsement of any religion.

To the chagrin of many Christians, attempts to contradict this directive will be roundly squashed.

Christians, you are not being persecuted. In this country, yours is no longer a fledgling cult, hiding in shadows, afraid of being routed out and tortured for your beliefs. There are millions of you. Stated adherence to Judeo-Christian beliefs is a near requirement for election to higher office here.

You're in charge now, and those who do not believe as you do are tired of your insistence on ramming your beliefs down their throats, abusing your power and trampling the Constitution as you go.

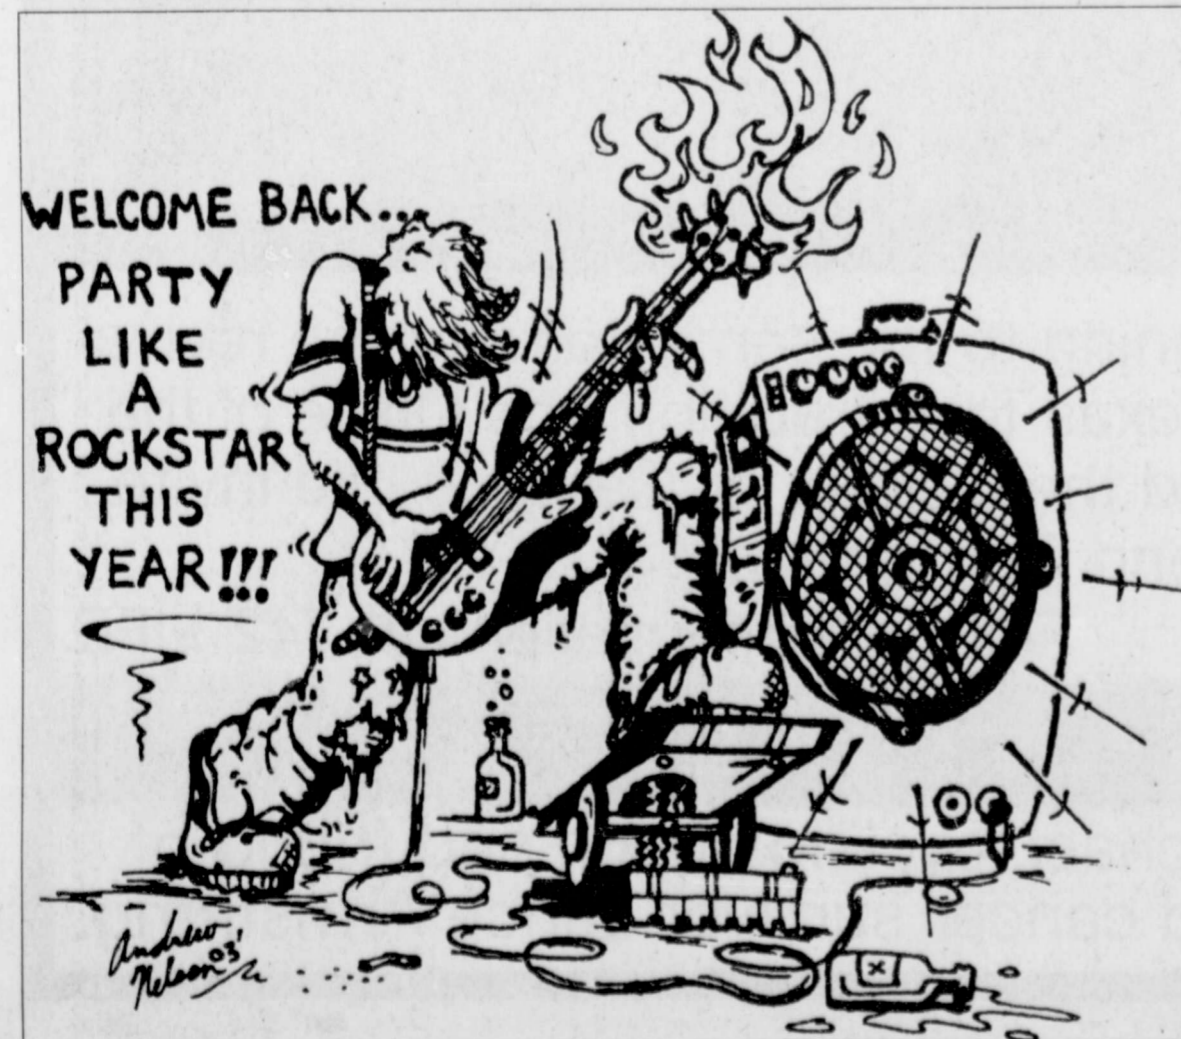

I prefer to live in a land devoid of your Norman Rockwell fantasies, one free of 24-hour PAX TV and Creed albums. A place where I am not beholden to a code of living handed down some two millennia ago, rewritten and retranslated over the ages to suit the needs of those in power.

We demand not your condescending "tolerance," but respect. The place to worship God and express faith is church, and they're easy to find. There are 14 on every block in Lubbock alone. No one is trying to stop you. It's safe to come out.

The lions aren't after you anymore: They are you.

North Korea willing to resolve nuclear dispute through dialogue

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — North Korea said Tuesday that it is willing to resolve the dispute over its nuclear program "through dialogue," in an apparent softening of its stance following last week's six-nation talks in Beijing.

After last week's landmark talks in the Chinese capital, North Korea angrily dismissed the need for more talks and threatened to strengthen its "nuclear deterrent force," casting doubt on the prospects for future meetings.

On Tuesday, the North's state-run news agency, KCNA, repeated North Korea's threat to increase its nuclear capabilities unless the United States changes its policy and signs a nonaggression treaty with the communist state, but also said North Korea is willing to continue the six-nation talks.

"The DPRK's fixed will to peacefully settle the nuclear issue between the DPRK and the U.S. through dialogue remains unchanged," KCNA said in an English-language commentary monitored in Seoul. DPRK stands for Democratic People's Republic of Korea, North Korea's official name.

Last week, representatives from the United States, the two Koreas, Japan, China and Russia met in Beijing to discuss ways to end the nuclear crisis. After the meeting, China, North Korea's only remaining major ally, released a statement saying all the six countries agreed to continue to talk. North Korea later said it no longer had "interest or expectations" for such talks.

Despite the North's threat to boycott future meetings, other participants said that the six parties reached a tentative agreement to meet again around October.

North Korea says the United States must sign a nonaggression treaty, open diplomatic ties and provide economic aid before it can feel safe enough to dismantle its nuclear program.

The United States insists that North Korea first scrap its nuclear program before Washington can consider providing security guarantees and help for its moribund economy.

KCNA said last week's talks "were reduced to an arm-chair argument" because of the United States.

"The U.S. is demanding the DPRK accept its demands while it is not moving even a step. It is asking the DPRK to drop its gun first while it is still leveling its gun at the DPRK," it said.

The head of the U.N. nuclear watchdog International Atomic Energy Agency, Mohammed ElBaradei, said any settlement issue should address concerns of both the United States and North Korea, but urged the communist state to return to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

"They cannot operate on the basis of nuclear blackmail — that would be the worst thing one can see," ElBaradei said after meeting German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer in Berlin.

China's Foreign Ministry spokesman Kong Quan on Tuesday urged new talks to discuss the crisis between Washington and North Korea.

Earlier Tuesday, North Korea warned of rising tensions along the disputed western sea border with South Korea, accusing the Southern navy of infiltrating the North's territorial waters with warships.

South Korean warships crossed into communist waters on five occasions on Tuesday morning, North Korea's state-run radio Central Broadcasting Station said, quoting "unidentified military sources."

"The situation in the waters is getting tenser everyday because of the repeated violations," the radio dispatch said. The North Korean broadcast was monitored by Yonhap.

Supreme Court urged to take Guantanamo case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court was asked Tuesday to consider whether the Bush administration has violated the Constitution by holding 660 terrorist suspects in Cuba without charges or access to attorneys.

The appeal was being filed on behalf of some detainees at the U.S. military prison in Guantanamo Bay, and their families.

The government is interrogating the prisoners, who were captured in Afghanistan and elsewhere, before determining whether they should be sent back to their homelands or face military tribunals. They are suspected of ties to the al-Qaida terrorist network or Afghanistan's ousted Taliban regime.

Without court oversight, the government could abuse the inmates, the Supreme Court was told in the appeal, "or it may simply forget them, in the vain hope the world will as well."

An appeals court in Washington ruled earlier this year that the inmates have no rights to hearings in American courts, or other constitutional protections, because they are aliens held outside U.S. territory.

to go downstairs to do something they could do on their own computers."

Castillo said it would be faster for students if the Office of Financial Aid could answer all questions instead of moving students from place to place.

Blake said there is a new loan program as well, where students that qualify are sent an e-mail.

"Students just need to get online and fill out their paperwork," he said. "Students have to make sure they check their e-raider e-mail, or to keep their e-mail address up to date."

He said students need to take a moment and read their bills and letters sent to them from the office and make sure there is a need for them to panic.

"Many students come here with a bill that says zero balance," Blake said. "And they still ask to see what their status is."

Helen Parker, the scholarship coordinator, said students often encounter problems with scholarships from outside sources because the money has not arrived.

"We cannot award money that we don't have," Parker said.

She said some students have full scholarships and the scholarship office has to wait until the whole package is in.

"We are doing very good with passing out the scholarships," Parker said. "As soon as we get one, we award the money to the student."

Kevin Thomas, a junior finance major for Dallas, said he has not had any problems with the financial aid office, but it has been frustrating waiting in the long lines.

"I have been waiting for about an hour," Thomas said. "I know they will send me somewhere else or tell me they can't help me, once I get up there."

Thomas said all students are frustrated, but they all need to relax because everyone needs some help.

Rule

Traditionally, Tech football players have invited fans onto the field following wins at home to give them souvenirs and autographs, Myers said.

"We are not allowed to do our long-standing tradition anymore," he said. "After the near catastrophic incident with the goal post against Texas A&M in 1999 and 2001, we have to watch what happens."

For added security, the Big 12 conference requires all colleges have cameras on the field taping the action during the post-game.

Myers said the surveillance cameras would be used as extra evidence to determine proper punishment of out-of-hand problems.

"With those, we can look at what happened and determine the cause of the incident," he said. "The National Football League has had it enacted for years and it is nothing to dampen the spirit. We want the fans to enjoy the game but just don't carry it onto the field afterwards."

Hoffman said the police protection is not to hinder the spirits of fans but abide by the Big 12 rules and provide a safe environment.

"We want to promote sportsmanship and allow everybody to enjoy the game," he said. "But we have to stress a safe atmosphere among the stadium, especially with the addition of seats and attendants."

The rules came into effect because of changes within college football but also because of the changing times, Myers said.

"Across the nation, things have gotten bad," he said. "Times have changed and the game has too so we have to make sure we are safe."

Governor's office gives funds to Community Health Center

The Community Health Center of Lubbock received a federal grant of more than half a million dollars from Gov. Rick Perry's office, which will enable the health provider to continue care for under-funded Lubbock residents.

The award is part of a $3.9 million grant made to Texas health centers by Perry. The awards, which went into effect Aug. 25, are part of Perry's health care plan.

Matt Driskill, an administrator with the Texas Tech department of ophthalmology, said the grant will affect Tech indirectly, allowing the department to continue aiding the Community Health Center in serving patients who otherwise would have trouble gaining access to the eye care they need.

"The benefit of this for Tech and the HSC is the continued relationship with the Community Health Center of Lubbock and the ability to serve the population in giving them access to good eye care that they haven't had in the past," Driskill said.

The additional funds would help take immediate financial stress off of the Community Health Center of Lubbock, he said. Before, the center had to generate its own income.

"It has been difficult for the center to cover costs," Driskill said. "They pay us a flat fee every month to provide staff, supplies and equipment. This grant gives them additional revenue to continue to work with us to provide eye care services."

The amount of revenue Tech receives for the program will not change, he said.

"The John Bessler Eye Clinic is a collaborative effort between the city of Lubbock and Tech to provide primary care to the under-served population of Lubbock," Driskill said. "To my knowledge, there is no other eye care facility east of Avenue Q."

Tech provides the center with the staff, supplies and equipment needed to help patients. Clients with serious eye problems are referred to specialists at Thompson Hall, Driskill said.

"This collaboration really is a needed effort," Driskill said. "They actually lost money providing care. The additional revenue will enable them to work with us to provide eye care services."

"The likelihood of them being able to continue has been improved. The Community Health Center of Lubbock most likely won't be looking to make cuts or reduce services in the near future."

Hearing in Laci Peterson case delayed to give defense more time

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — The preliminary hearing in the Laci Peterson murder case was postponed Tuesday to late next month to give the defense more time to review evidence.

The hearing, at which prosecutors are expected to lay out their case against Scott Peterson in the deaths of his wife, Laci, and their unborn son, was originally set for Sept. 9.

Judge Al Girolami rescheduled the hearing for Oct. 20 after Peterson attorney Mark Geragos said he needed more time to review thousands of pieces of evidence.

Prosecutors did not oppose the delay. Prosecutors said they have turned over to the defense documents, including video and audio tapes.

Peterson, 30, could get the death penalty if convicted.

His pregnant, 27-year-old wife disappeared from her home Christmas Eve. The two bodies were found in April along the San Francisco Bay.

Last week, the defense fought to close the preliminary hearing to the public, arguing that the proceedings would taint prospective jurors. A state appeals court upheld a judge's ruling keeping the hearing open. The judge banned cameras.

Civil engineering chairman retires after almost four decades at Tech

By Andrew Bell/Staff Reporter

Jim McDonald has worked for Texas Tech since 1966 in many different positions in the College of Engineering.

Friday, McDonald worked his last official day with the university as chairman of the civil engineering department, so he could begin to enjoy his retirement.

After almost 50 years, he said he can still remember his first semester of class at Tech. McDonald enrolled as a freshman in the fall of 1953, and freshmen were required to wear green beanies called slime caps, he said.

When McDonald graduated with a bachelor of science degree in petroleum engineering in 1958, oil was $3 a barrel, he said.

"Because of the price of oil, there was not much opportunity in petroleum engineering," McDonald said.

McDonald's interest leaned toward civil engineering, and Tech hired him to instruct a civil engineering surveying and an engineering mechanics course. He taught for two years before going back to school.

He went to Purdue University to get his master's and doctorate degrees in civil engineering. In 1966, McDonald returned to Tech to work as a professor, he said.

When he returned, Tech was making the change to a teaching and research university, McDonald said.

Doug Smith, an associate professor of wind engineering, said when McDonald came back to Tech, the civil engineering program was much smaller than it is now. McDonald and some of the professors came together and helped develop the graduate program.

"The first years of research were interesting," he said. "I began to work in structural research. The research got the university to add structural testing labs, which was one of the best in the country at the time."

The 1970 tornado that hit Lubbock caused him to question how little people knew about tornadoes, he said, so he went out and started looking at damage, from the 20-story metro tower to the small houses.

"It was the first research grant produced the first systematic study of tornado damage from an engineering point of view," McDonald said.

The grant opened the door to more grants for research, he said. Future grants helped to study more wind events throughout the state.

"Tech has sent teams to study the damages of 130 tornadoes and other wind events," McDonald said.

McDonald's research has made him well-known worldwide, Smith said.

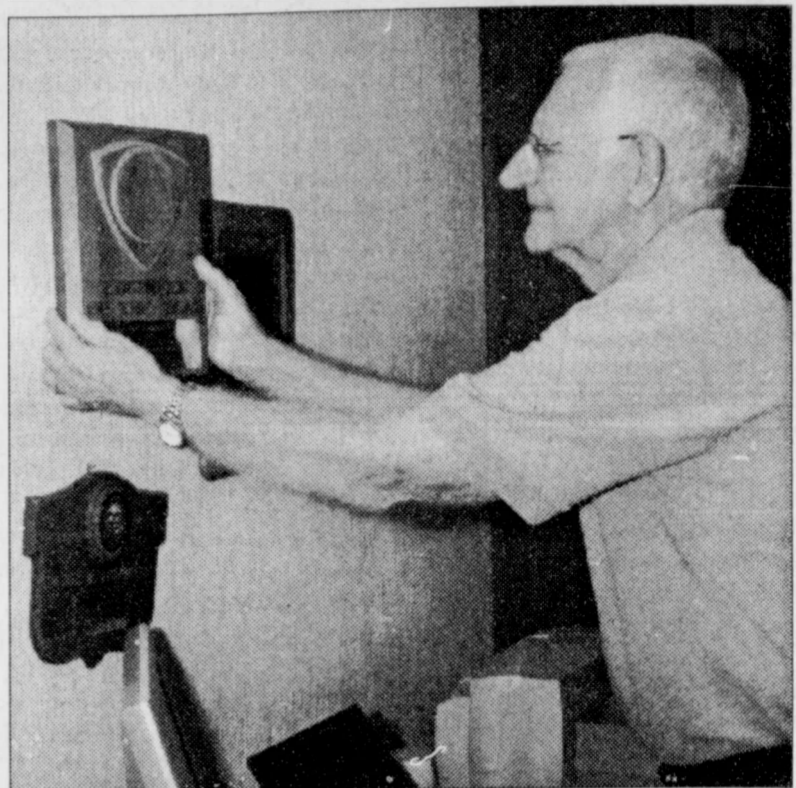

"Dr. McDonald is world renowned in tornadoes and tornado structure.

When discussing wind science and the engineering program, you think of McDonald," he said.

During the 1970s, people did not have a safe place to go when a tornado hit. This started the idea of in-residence shelters and other types of shelters to protect people from tornado's debris, McDonald said.

In order to simulate the damage from a tornado, McDonald began work on structural dynamics, which is the study of wind and the impact of missiles, with a missile cannon, McDonald said.

"The cannon shoots a three-inch steel pipe, weighing 75 pounds, at 75 mph into a 12-inch, heavily reinforced slab of concrete," he said.

In the past few years, McDonald has worked on a project that he believes will improve and enhance the Fujita scale, he said, which is used to measure the intensity of tornadoes. McDonald believes the project will make it easy to apply the scale consistently, and Smith agreed.

"The recalibration of the Fujita scale is a technically and politically large task. Mainly because it will require people in the field to reapply a scale that hasn't ever changed," Smith said.

McDonald said he hopes to finish the project in the next month. Once it is finished, he will take his project to a steering committee of six people. After a forum of 25 people approves it, the finished product will be taken to the Washington, D.C., division of the National Weather Service.

"If accepted, it would be implemented three to six months after its acceptance," McDonald said.

During McDonald's tenure at Tech, he has served as an assistant professor and chairman for the department of civil engineering. From 1988 to 2000, McDonald served as the director of the Institute of Disaster Research. In his career, he has written about 100 publications dealing with the professional and technical aspects of engineering. McDonald said he hopes to continue his writing during his retirement.

"I would like to apply the knowledge that I have gained for future generations," McDonald said.

His other plans include playing golf, traveling and becoming more active in the community, McDonald said.

Scott Norville, a colleague of McDonald's for 23 years and professor of civil engineering, will be chairman of the civil engineering department. Norville will be the interim chairman for one year while the department selects a new chairman.

"I would like to apply the knowledge that I have gained for future generations."

Tech safe place to be, prepared for terrorist attack

HOMELAND SECURITY: Terrorist attack unlikely in South Plains, but city ready should event happen.

By Adam Boedeker/Staff Reporter

Texas Tech Vice President for Operations Max Hinojosa said while it is unlikely a terrorist attack will happen in the South Plains, the Lubbock and Texas Tech police departments are aptly prepared, should something happen.

This was in response to a recent study in USA Today, which said more than 50 percent of school police departments have no specific protocol to follow in the event of an attack or if the alert level is increased.

"When a new level is issued, the (Tech) police department is our first point of contact," Hinojosa said. "They in turn are able to get in touch with Homeland Security and the FBI."

Hinojosa said there is no better place to be than Lubbock with regards to safety in such an event.

"If something happens in terms of mass evacuation, it could be handled easily with the Tech Police Department, Lubbock Police Department and Student Affairs," Hinojosa said. "The bad thing is that we have the threat levels, but the good thing is we're in Lubbock, Texas. The emergency management in Lubbock is the best I've ever worked with."

Maj. Gordon Hoffman of the Tech Police Department said they are on top of things when it comes to campus security.

"We're as prepared as we could possibly be," Hoffman said. "We have all the procedures and resources necessary. Even if they're outside resources, they are available."

"We have procedures for bomb threats and stuff like that. We are constantly notified by Homeland Security both on a routine basis and when the terror alert is raised. We're staying in the loop; we talk with the FBI weekly. We are definitely not in the dark about this stuff."

Hoffman said his department works closely with many law enforcement agencies in a collaborative effort to see that Tech students are always safe.

"We notify administrators, and if an evacuation is necessary we will coordinate that," Hoffman said. "In the case of a bomb, we'd utilize the bomb dog, the ATF and the emergency ordinance disposal from the LPD and the sheriff's office. We have many resources and stay very well informed in my opinion."

One student said she feels safe at Tech and has no real concerns with terror attacks happening in Lubbock.

"There was a bomb threat at Chitwood last year and I thought they handled it very well," Lindsay Smith, a sophomore education major from Plano said. "I feel real safe and secure here. They did a good job of not scaring everyone but at the same time evacuated everyone that needed to be evacuated without causing a big scene."

Vice President for Student Affairs Michael Shonrock said there is a detailed plan to be carried out in the event of a terror attack.

"When we're notified of a problem, our top priority is notify students through our various departments, and we would notify areas with large populations like the Student Union, the Rec center, and even Citibus in case they would need to re-route their buses for any reason."

Shonrock said the overall focus of all of the involved agencies is the safety of people, particularly students in this case.

"We maintain excellent communication with all the agencies and the students on our campus," he said. "It is all in the best interest of the students and their safety."

Bank hit by suspected serial robber

By Beth Aaron/Staff Reporter

A suspected serial robber hit a local bank during the holiday weekend.

The American State Bank branch in Albertson's on 50th St. and Indiana Ave. was robbed at about 11 a.m. Monday.

Police described the suspect as a black man in his early to mid-20s, approximately 5 feet 8 inches tall, wearing a white shirt and blue wind pants, said Sgt. Tony Gribben of the Lubbock Police Department. Gribben said the suspect also was wearing a baseball cap with a "PlayStation" logo on it, along with a white rag under the baseball cap, covering his neck.

Gribben said the suspect threatened to have a weapon, but one was never produced and no one was hurt in the incident.

"He carries a yellow plastic Dollar General bag to put the money in," Gribben said.

He said he cannot disclose the amount of money stolen.

The suspect is thought to have committed other robberies at an Albertson's in Ponca City, Okla., on Aug. 17; at a United Supermarket in Wichita Falls on Aug. 20; and a United Supermarket in Amarillo on Aug. 27.

"It looks like this guy has gotten around in the past week or so," Gribben said.

Other similarities other than location include the robber's method of operation and his attire.

He routinely wears the same style of clothing each time he attacks, Gribben said. The same suspect may have committed a similar robbery last year, but police are not positive.

Gribben said the security cameras did catch images of the suspect, but lost him once he got through the southwest side of the store's parking lot.

"If anyone happened to be around the bank around 11, and saw a black male running toward the west side of the store and then speed out of the southwest side of the parking lot in some kind of vehicle, we would love to speak with them," he said.

Tom Allen, security officer for American State Bank, said he was called after the robbery. He said he was relieved to know that no one was injured and that branch employees followed the correct procedures.

"When situations like this occur, we certainly have to re-evaluate," Allen said.

The security office plans to re-examine the branch's current security situation and take precautions against another robbery.

Anyone with information regarding this or any of the previous robberies should contact Gribben at 775-2820 or the Crime Line at 741-1000. Callers wishing to remain anonymous may do so.

Bodies of man, woman missing in Kansas flood found in search

EMPORIA, Kan. (AP) — Searchers Tuesday found the bodies of two people missing since floodwaters swept their vehicles off the Kansas Turnpike over the weekend, including a woman whose four children drowned in the high water.

The body of Melissa Rogers, 33, of Liberty, Mo., was found around in a pond about 2 miles from Interstate 35, Fire Chief Jack Taylor said.

Another body, preliminarily identified as Al Larsen, 31, of Fort Worth, Texas, was also found Tuesday, Taylor said. He was missing from a separate vehicle.

Larsen and the Rogers family drowned after heavy rain sent torrents of floodwaters over the Interstate 35 late Saturday. Melissa Rogers' husband, Robert, 37, survived.

On Sunday, searchers found the bodies of the four Rogers children. Zachary, 5; Nicholas, 3; and their little sister, Alenah, 1, were found strapped into their car seats in the family's overturned minivan. The body of the older daughter, 8-year-old Makenah, was found three-quarters of a mile away.

On Monday, Robert Rogers said that when the wall of water first hit the turnpike, he thought his family was safe because the van was pushed up against a large concrete barrier.

That heavy barrier and others eventually gave way, sending the van off the turnpike. Rogers said he kicked out the window in a desperate and frantic effort to save his family.

He was quickly pulled by the rushing water from the vehicle, found on its roof Sunday about 1 1/2 miles from the highway in south-central Kansas.

Rogers described his four children as "beautiful gifts."

"We will get through this," he said Monday. "We will rise above this. And by God's grace, good will somehow come from this."

Kansas Highway Patrol Capt. Mark Conboy said he was present shortly after Rogers was told his wife's body had been found.

"He was extremely strong," Conboy said. "People were breaking down around him; he was holding onto them."

Authorities have said Larsen called his wife, Elizabeth-Anne Larsen, Saturday evening, told her his Jeep had stalled and asked her to come get him. She went to the scene but had not heard from him since the call.

Family sues dental clinic after teen dies

DALLAS (AP) — A wrongful death lawsuit filed by a Dallas family alleges that a dental clinic took advantage of low-income patients after their teenage son died the morning after he had his wisdom teeth pulled.

The family of Rodney Owens, 16, said South Texas Dental used a "quick turnaround" scheme to maximize the number of patients and the amount of Medicaid payments.

The suit came days before a state cap on malpractice damages took effect. It seeks $10 million for wrongful death.

Rodney's parents found him dead in his bed on Aug. 9. The Dallas County medical examiner has not determined a cause of death.

On Thursday, the family sued the dental clinic, charging that it negligently went through with the surgery despite warning signs that something was wrong.

Representatives of the clinic, South Texas Dental, said that it's too early to conclude that the surgery caused Rodney's death and that they stand by their procedures.

"Like the family, we want to understand how this tragedy happened and are awaiting that determination," the clinic's founders, Barry Gomel and Todd Istre, said in a statement. "We continue to have great faith and confidence in the professionalism and commitment that our dentists and employees show our patients."

Rodney Owens would have been a junior at Kimball High School this year. The brawny 6-foot-1, 347-pound defensive tackle hoped to play for the University of Florida and maybe even in the NFL.

According to family members, the teen's parents took him to the clinic to get his wisdom teeth pulled on the advice of the family orthodontist. They said they were alarmed that the dentist, Alan Nguyen, recorded Rodney's blood pressure as 155 over 43. A typical blood pressure reading for people his age is 120 over 80.

"I doubt that's an accurate blood pressure," said Lee Oneacre, an oral surgeon and president of the Dallas County Dental Society. "That should have been retaken and verified. ... I think their blood pressure cuff was off."

The Owens' lawsuit says the clinic should have delayed Rodney's surgery to make sure the reading was accurate and to check the teenager's physical health and medical history.

South Texas Dental said Nguyen, who is on administrative leave, is a qualified dentist.

Gwendolyn Nguyen said when they returned home, she gave her son the prescribed painkillers and antibiotic, and he went to sleep. When she checked on him the next morning, he was dead.

RAIDERS on the SPOT

What is your opinion of the parking situation at Texas Tech?

"It's pretty bad. They could have more parking garages on campus or make the bus route more clear."

•Kelly Mehlenbacher, sophomore mass communications/public relations major from Austin.

"I park in the parking garage. It is awesome."

•Lacie Springster, sophomore undecided major from Waco.

"The parking garage really didn't help anything. The university has grown so much since I first came here that I don't know where they would expand where it wouldn't be a greater inconvenience to walk even farther."

•Pamela Lopez, senior general studies major from Corpus Christi

"I got a ticket for parking in the baseball parking lot, and I'm a baseball player."

•Ryan Riddle, sophomore business major from Midland

"The bus takes longer than if you drive, but you don't have to worry. You can just sit back, relax and you don't have to walk as far when you get off."

•Brian Fuchs, junior broadcast journalism major from Georgetown

"I didn't buy a parking pass. $100 is ridiculous. I parked across from a church. I hope they didn't tow it. They could make parking passes cheaper."

•Christopher Lollis, sophomore psychology/advertising major from Lubbock

100 death sentences tossed out in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court threw out more than 100 death sentences in Arizona and two other states Tuesday because the inmates were sent to death row by judges instead of juries.

The case stems from a 2002 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court, in which the high court found that juries, not judges, must render death sentences. But the Supreme Court left unclear whether the new rules should apply retroactively to inmates awaiting execution.

In an 8-3 vote, the San Francisco-based 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said all condemned inmates sentenced by a judge should have their sentences commuted to life in prison.

The ruling applies only to Arizona, Idaho and Montana, the only states in the 9th Circuit that have allowed judges to impose death sentences.

Two other states, Nebraska and Colorado, have also allowed judges to sentence inmates to death. But the federal appeals courts that oversee them have yet to rule on the issue.

"By deciding that judges are not constitutionally permitted to decide whether defendants are eligible for the death penalty, the Supreme Court altered the fundamental bedrock principles applicable to capital murder trials," Circuit Judge Sidney R. Thomas wrote for the court.

Defense attorneys hailed the verdict. "This is fundamental justice," said Ken Murray, a federal public defender in Phoenix.

Murray estimated that the decision affects at least 100 inmates on Arizona's death row alone.

The Arizona attorney general's office did not immediately return calls seeking comment. But lawyers involved in the case said the ruling is likely to be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The case the appeals court used to decide the issue concerned Arizona inmate Warren Summerlin, who was found guilty of murder in the 1981 slaying of Brenna Bailey, 36.

The Tempe finance company administrator's body was found in the trunk of her car a day after she visited Summerlin to check on money he owed. Summerlin was convicted in 1982 and a judge sentenced him to death.

Center to host open house

Career center to connect with students and inform about programs and services

By Megan LaVoie/Staff Reporter

Texas Tech's Career Center will host an open house on Sept. 3 and 4 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Free lunch will be served on both days with Buns over Texas serving Wednesday and Double Dave's Pizza on Thursday. Along with free lunch, the Career Center also will give away free T-shirts. All students are welcome.

The Career Center moved from West Hall to the Wiggins Complex during spring of last year and they are using this open house as a springboard to gear up for their career expo Sept. 10. More than 100 companies, including IBM and Exxon Mobile will be featured at the career expo, said the Associate Director of the Career Center Jay Killough.

Killough said he is excited about showing off the Career Center's new facilities.

"Students know that the Career Center is here for them, but some students don't realize how beneficial the center is in helping them with their resume, interviews and job offers," he said.

The Career Center has a program called SIGI Plus, which along with counselor advising can help students choose a job field that matches their personality and interests. The Career Center also features the services of mock interviewing and resume critiques to help students portray that extra something in a difficult job market.

"I think the career center is an excellent resource provided to the students at Tech," said Kayla Kiser, a sophomore psychology major from Arlington.

The new complex features 9,000 square feet of facilities, including a state-of-the-art corporation presentation room, conference rooms, changing rooms for students to use to prepare for interviews on a tight schedule, and online student and employer registration. All of the services provided by the Career Center are free and organizations looking for places to hold meetings are welcome to use the career center's facilities if they make prior arrangements, Career Center directors said.

"We are the middleman between companies and students," Killough said. "It is important for students, especially seniors, to get out here and meet with us before heading out into the job market."

If students are not feeling ready to head out to the workforce,

ANDREW WEATHERI/Staff Photographer
COLE KUYKENDALL, A junior pre-Veterinary major from Sour Lake, schedules and appointment to see a career counselor with Clerk Specialist Assistant, Tiffany Rubio, in the Career Center at the Chitwood-Weymouth Wiggins Complex on Tuesday afternoon.

Killough said the Career Center could also help students find internships locally and nationally.

The Wiggins Center is behind the Chitwood/Weymouth complex with the Career Center located on the south side of the Wiggins Center. Trolleys will be running from the Chitwood/Weymouth bus stop to student's classes to take them to and from the open house. For career advising, contact the Career Center at (806)742-2210.

Pancho Villa legacy to return via television

EL PASO (AP) — Long before the reality TV craze, Mexican revolutionary Pancho Villa fought battles with an American camera crew in tow in 1914.

He hoped his $25,000 deal with the Mutual Film Co. of New York would get him good publicity in the United States and money to buy arms and supplies.

The battlefield footage became the first U.S. newsreel. But like most reality shows, all was not as it seemed. Certain battles and executions were staged for the cameras. Villa's skin was lightened and his hair was styled to make him more appealing.

How Villa used the studio and the studio used Villa is the theme of "And Starring Pancho Villa as Himself," an HBO movie (9:30 p.m. EDT Sunday) starring Antonio Banderas.

"For a man with very little education, Pancho Villa was a public relations genius," executive producer Josh Maurer said in El Paso at a screening of the film written by Larry Gelbart (the TV series "M-A-S-H" and "Barbarians at the Gate") and directed by Bruce Beresford ("Driving Miss Daisy").

Along with boots and artillery, Mutual supplied 5,000 Confederate Army uniforms for Villa's scruffy soldiers because the studio wanted to make them look better.

Villa, who often transported his troops by train, reserved cars for reporters and a special car for Mutual that allowed its employees to develop and edit film.

All sides in the Mexican Revolution used the media - establishing their own newspapers, censoring legitimate media reports, paying money to reporters, editors and newspapers with the expectation of positive coverage.

Villa's bold personality and military victories played well in the United States, even as the country eyed the happenings in Mexico with suspicion and unease.

"Villa enjoyed a good relationship with the American media," said Fred Morales, an El Paso historian who specializes in the Mexican Revolution. "One time he delayed an attack on Juarez because the World Series was on."

For Mutual, publicity and propaganda meshed.

According to Mark Cronlund Anderson's book "Pancho Villa's Revolution by Headlines," Mutual President Harry Aitken told the media: "I found him a very different man from the uncouth bandit he has been painted. ... He is a serious dignified man who conducts the affairs of his army in a systematic and orderly manner, which would do credit to a much older and experienced military man."

In El Paso, people would gather on the top of buildings to watch the fighting in Mexico. Metz said a cannon was perched on a road that traverses high on the southern flank of the Franklin Mountains to return fire if the hostilities spilled over the border.

Things went well for Villa until his army suffered a string of military defeats at the hands of another, more moderate revolutionary leader with whom he had broken ranks. Then the U.S. media began to ignore him, Anderson says.

Ultimately, the United States recognized Villa's opponent, Venustiano Carranza, as Mexico's president.

The Carranza general responsible for Villa's defeats, Alvaro Obregon, was later elected president and some believe had a hand in Villa's assassination in 1923.

Villa, driving with some of his men to witness the baptism of a friend's son, was ambushed and died in a hail of bullets.

Latin band draws on inspirations to land their success

MIAMI (AP) — The chorus of Bacilos' hit song "Mi Primer Millon" makes it clear: "I only want to hit it on the radio, so I can have my first million."

The multinational rockers could have their first Latin Grammy when the awards show is broadcast live Wednesday on CBS at 9 p.m. EDT.

"Mi Primer Millon" is a story about Bacilos' success, highlighting the risks of dropping everything to chase fame without compromising art. It's become an inside joke in the Latin music industry.

"It's realistic and it's really honest," said Jorge Villamizar, who wrote the song with producer Sergio George. "It's so honest, it's beyond being tacky or hip. More than the market, it has touched the industry."

The Miami-based band is Colombian guitarist and lead singer Villamizar, 32, Brazilian bassist Andre Lopes, 26, and Puerto Rican percussionist Jose Javier "JJ" Freire, 31. They have three nominations, and Villamizar has three more on his own for his work as a songwriter. George, a native New Yorker who produced two songs on the album, leads all nominees with six.

"Mi Primer Millon" is from the eclectic CD "Caraluna," which won a mainstream Grammy in 2002 for best Latin pop album. Bacilos' debut eponymous album, released in 2001, netted two Latin Grammy nominations.

The name Bacilos literally means "bacillus," or bacterium in English, though there's also a reference to a "vacilon," or a big, wild party.

Despite their recent success, the trio hasn't reaped big money yet. Critics fawn over their acoustic fusion, an alternative to the homogenized, prepackaged sounds of Ricky Martin-inspired Latin pop.

"We're still alternative. We're not fully members of the top 10 club yet," Villamizar said.

While Bacilos has joined Juanes, Molotov, and acts from Surco records as part of a wave of alternative Latin rock, they began eight years ago as three young guys in a hard-sounding power trio. That's a far cry from their more mature, organic sound of today.

"The whiskey, the beer, and the electric guitar tends to bring out a more raw and punkish sound," Freire said.

They soon adjusted to the venues they were playing - restaurants and bars with little need for huge drum sets or loud amplifiers - by going acoustic.

"People would tell us that when we played acoustically, we had this special energy," Freire said. "Yeah, it's softer, it's different, but there's still intensity and it's still fresh. We revealed and projected our Latin roots more effectively."

The band was forming a base that today fuses several musical styles - rock, cumbia, ska, reggae, soca, bossa nova and others - with layered sounds of the violin, cello and brass instruments.

Bacilos' musical diversity is born from the nuances of their cultures and the mixed salad of Latin American influences that permeate Miami.

"Each one of us brings their own roots," Lopes said. "More than that, because we live in Miami, there's no way you can turn on a radio and not listen to maybe a Mexican ballad, Argentinian or Mexican rock, then there's a salsa or a merengue, then some pop. It's very hard not to be influenced by everything you listen to and hear."

Welker one return closer to NCAA record

JAIME TOMAS AGUILAR/Staff Photographer

WELKER SPRINTS FOR his record tying punt return in the second half of the Red Raider victory Saturday. The receiver now needs only one more punt return for a touchdown to be the out right NCAA career leader in punt returns for a touchdown. Welker will get his next shot at the top spot against New Mexico 6 p.m. Saturday against New Mexico.

By David Wiechmann/
Staff Reporter

Texas Tech fans may have grown accustomed to seeing Wes Welker find a crease and streak down the field on punt returns. Nevertheless they got to see the feat one more time Saturday as he tied the NCAA record for career punt returns for a touchdown.

For the seventh time in his career the Red Raider fans got to see Welker take it to the end zone, and he said he is just performing part of his job.

"It's just something that happened," he said. "I think our whole punt return team expected it to happen. It's something I'll look back on and be proud of, but right now we've got the whole rest of the season to play."

His reputation as a punt returner who has returned several punts has sparked the student section to chant his name every time he awaits an opponent's punt.

With hype like that every time he touches the ball, Welker said he doesn't feel any added pressure from the love he gets from the fans.

"I don't really look at it as pressure," he said. "It kinda gets me pumped up; it gets my blood flowing.

there are more people than just his teammates to play for.

"Anytime you go out there you don't want to let the students down," he said. "You don't want to let your teammates down; you don't want to let the coaches down; you don't want to let your family down. You gotta go out there every play like that and play hard every play."

In the past Welker has found a way to gain positive yards on punt returns. With the NCAA dropping the halo rule to protect returners this season Welker's numbers could have been hard to reproduce, but he proved he could still produce in the season opener against Southern Methodist University on Saturday.

Welker had four punt returns for 63 yards, an average of 15.75 yards per return.

He said the halo rule never really helped him, and he is not worried about not having that protection.

"I really see didn't much sense in it," he said. "It's nice to have to know you're not going to get blasted as soon as you catch the ball, but my teammates did a great job of protecting me so I'm not worried about getting hit or whatnot."

Special teams coach Ruffin McNeill said Welker is something special and to be reckoned with on the field. He would want no one else returning punts for him because he believes "The Natural" is the best.

"Wes Welker is Wes Welker. What else can you say," he said.

McNeill said the best part about coaching Welker is not having to coach him.

"The thing about coaching Wes is you just try not to mess Wes up," he said. "We ask him, 'do you have your shoes? Do you have your helmet? OK here we go.' He comes to every game that way and practice that way. Every day is the same. ...Wes Welker is one of a kind. ...I love that guy."

With his name on top of the record books Welker said he is looking forward to widening the gap between the competition.

"There's always going to be great players coming through and making great players. I don't know if I'll stay on top of the record book. All I can do is go out there and try to score a few. But all I'm worried about is trying to put the offense in good field position."

Nebraska defense stands strong against OSU

(U-WIRE) LINCOLN, Neb. — By the end of Nebraska's 17-7 win over No. 24 Oklahoma State on Saturday, one T-shirt spoke volumes about the Huskers' future with one statement about the past.

"Last year was Bohl shit," read the hand-written lettering on the back of the shirt belonging to Diego Hiebner, a Nebraska senior. The slight on Nebraska's last defensive coordinator could be one of the final remnants of frustration released against Craig Bohl and the ghosts of porous defenses past for one reason.

The new Blackshirts' boss, in his game day debut, had the Cowboys giving away the football, going nowhere and pulling their hair for the last three quarters of Nebraska's 18th straight season-opening win, although the last 17 were nowhere near this big. With their win, the Cornhuskers (1-0, 1-0 Big 12) moved into the AP poll at No. 23 — NU's first appearance in the top 25 since game five of last season's 7-7 campaign.

"I wasn't sure what to expect when we came out today," defensive coordinator Bo Pelini said after the Huskers' first Big 12 win in its last three tries. "This was a new system and these (Oklahoma State) guys presented a lot of challenges. I wasn't sure how we'd respond."

Although it's early, the Huskers now sit alone atop the Big 12 North for the first time since November 2001, prior to their 62-36 loss at Colorado — the first game of NU's recent demise that led to the hiring of six new assistants, including Pelini.

The coordinator's career got off to an inauspicious start before things picked up.

The Cowboys strolled 52 yards on their opening drive to go ahead 7-3 on a 4-yard touchdown catch by Rashaun Woods before Pelini's men in black responded by allowing OSU only 131 yards of total offense in the next 51:23.

With his mixing of zone and man coverages, Pelini schemed his defense into stifling the same Cowboy offense that picked apart the Blackshirts of a year ago in a 24-21 OSU win. As it was in 2002, Josh Fields was at quarterback, Tatum Bell was in the backfield and Woods, everybody's All-American pass catcher, was out wide.

And Nebraska's defensive personnel were pretty much unchanged, too, except for the man calling the shots. "I thought our defensive staff," Nebraska coach Frank Solich said, "was outstanding in making preparations for this game."

The Cowboys also felt they prepared well, but they just didn't get the results. Woods caught only five passes for 47 yards, Fields struggled to complete 13-of-28 throws and Bell's 87 rushing yards were almost half of OSU's total output.

Buckeye running back Clarett unexpectedly pulled from practice because of investigation

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — In an abrupt reversal from 10 days ago, Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said Tuesday that star running back Maurice Clarett will not be allowed to practice with the team until questions about his eligibility are answered.

Tressel said the underlying reason for keeping Clarett out of practice was that Clarett's suspension appears to be "significant."

Clarett was suspended from the team for misleading investigators looking into alleged off-the-field NCAA violations, but he worked out with the Buckeyes last week.

Tressel was asked near the end of his weekly news conference Tuesday if the tailback's status would change this week.

"It appears to me, without having seen anything official or any black-and-white indications, that the suspension is going to be significant. It's going to be long," Tressel said. "The decision I talked about with some of our staff here just this morning was that until we get a definitive decision there I don't think I'm going to have him practice."

New volleyball team members get into mix

By Jason Lenz/Staff Reporter

The sun has set on the first volleyball tournament of the year. Now several of the Red Raiders are rising. Texas Tech volleyball welcomed three newcomers and one redshirt freshman for the 2003 season.

Each of the four saw their first action in the Islander Invitational this Friday and Saturday, where the Raiders went 4-0 to start the season. Tech coach Nancy Todd said she was pleased with the way the new members of the team performed.

"They did a great job," she said. "Each time they play, they're gaining more and more experience."

Redshirt freshman middle blocker Nina Miller led the team in blocks with six and scored 10 points in Tech's match versus North Carolina A&T. Miller sat out last season because of a broken leg. Todd said the experience she gained would help her add confidence.

"From the beginning of the tournament to the end, she had to gain that confidence and feel comfortable," she said. "(Miller) had to sit out a little bit during two-a-days this part of the season. That's the whole thing. She just has to get comfortable out there and get with the flow of the game, and I think she'll do it. If anyone has to sit out for a year, they're fired up."

The playing time was of tremendous benefit, Miller said.

"It definitely puts a lot more confidence in myself, so when conference (play) rolls around, I'll be ready," she said.

Freshman Kiley Lyons led the team in kills during the match against Texas A&M-Corpus Christi Saturday with 15.

Lyons said she had no idea she was faring so well in the match against A&M Corpus-Christi.

"While I was playing, I didn't notice, but afterwards I was kind of surprised," she said.

Another freshman who had the chance to play was middle blocker Raven Garrett. Todd said Garrett, like Miller, needs to get more experience to sharpen her playing ability.

"She's one of those girls, again, who just needs the experience and the confidence," she said. "She has the potential to do some nice things, and I think she will. It seems like she really wants to do it. Luckily, with our whole group, I think most of them are pretty competitive."

Part of the key to any freshman's success is the help she receives from the veteran players, and Todd said the team's upper classmen helped the newcomers gain confidence.

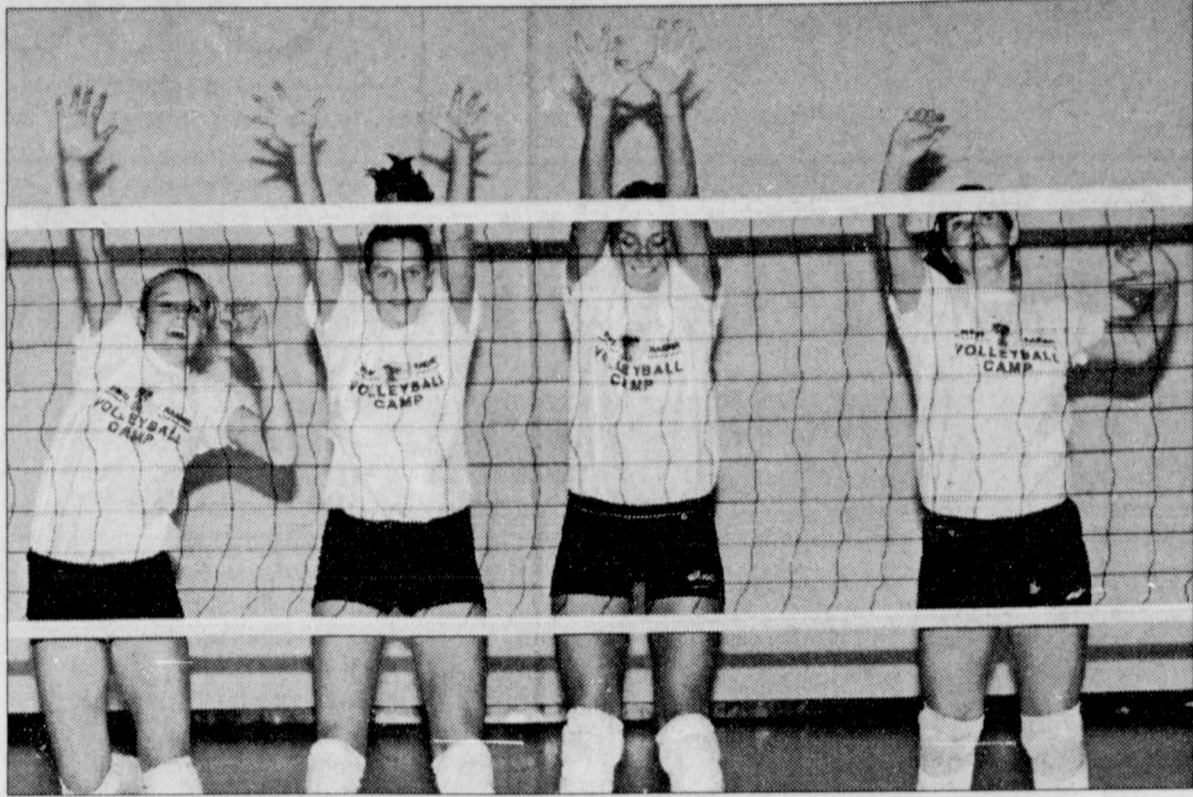

"I really think the older girls did a good job of helping them and having them used to being part of the team, kind of bonding with them" she said.

One final freshman who saw limited playing time was outside hitter Robyn Bucy. Todd said she sees potential in Bucy.

"She got limited playing time," Todd said. "She has the potential to get more playing time. She has the chance to do a lot of things."

Of all the experiences the freshmen had in their first official competition, Garrett said the best was finally becoming one unit.

"I think the best part was just coming together as a team and getting to play a different school instead of just each other in practice," Garrett said.

The four freshmen saw their first action as Red Raiders during competition at the Islander Invitational Friday and Saturday. The Raiders went 4-0 in the tournament to begin the season with wins against North Carolina A&T and A&M-Corpus Christi. Tech will return to play this weekend in the Big Orange Bash in Clemson, S.C.

Volleyball team racks up four victories at tourney

The Texas Tech volleyball team is 4-0 after competing in the Islander Invitational tournament in Corpus Christi Friday and Saturday.

Friday the Red Raiders defeated Sam Houston State in four sets, 30-27, 30-26, 27-30, 30-27, as junior setter Laura Grote recorded a career high 16 digs.

In Friday's second match the Raiders beat Southern Mississippi in straight sets, 30-25, 30-25, 30-17. Senior outside hitter Angela Mooney led the team with 16 kills, and junior outside hitter Kiley Johnson contributed 14 kills.

Saturday the Raiders continued their streak, winning in straight sets against North Carolina A&T, 30-16, 30-16, 30-25. Johnson led the team in kills with 16, and freshman middle blocker Christina Miller led the team with six blocks.

In its final game of the tournament, Tech beat Texas A&M-Corpus Christi, winning again in straight sets 30-14, 30-15, 30-17. This time freshman Kiley Lyons led with 15 kills and a hitting percentage of .538.

Johnson and Grote were both named to the All-Tournament team, and Johnson was named tournament MVP.

Soccer team begins season with loss

Tech traveled to face Oral Roberts, in Tulsa, Okla., Sunday for their first, full game of the season, which resulted in a 3-0 loss.

Tech again managed to have six saves versus the Lady Eagles in the first half bringing a 0-0 tie at the half. The second half proved to be prominent for Oral Roberts with three goals. Tech took a total of seven shots with only three shots-on-goal while the Lady Eagles had nine shots-on-goal and 24 total.

Oral Roberts were put ahead by goals in the second half by Heather Hall and Tamara Walker. Walker's goal ended the scoring with the Lady Eagles ahead by three.

After starting the first half of their season opener at R.P. Fuller Stadium Friday night tied at 0-0 against New Mexico, the Texas Tech soccer team did not get a chance to see their first victory of the season.

Since 2001, Tech has not lost a season opener game. Following a short ceremony to honor defender Allison Horn, who was killed in an automobile accident last spring, the teams took the field beginning the 2003 season.

Once the teams broke for the half, a 30-minute delay began and after an hour of waiting, severe weather in the area resulted in a cancellation of the game.

Because New Mexico is lacking an open date in their schedule, Tech coach Felix Oskam said the game would not be made up at a later time.

Before the action was ceased, New Mexico had a total of six shots, with four on goal. Sophomore goalkeeper Megan Knauss managed to get four saves in the first and only half of the game while the Red Raiders had no shots on goal during the 45-minute period.

The team will next face SMU at 7 p.m. Friday in Dallas and TCU at 1 p.m., Sunday in Fort Worth as part of the team's North Texas road trip.

Kansas State receiver gets surprise with blowout victory

(U-WIRE) MANHATTAN, Kan. - A rare thing happened to Jermaine Moreira during K-State's 41-5 win over Troy State on Saturday. He played.

The wide receiver is one of few true freshmen to ever see playing time under Coach Bill Snyder. When he looked out the window before Saturday's game he had some doubts whether he would get his chance.

"When it was raining I was thinking we might run the ball," Moreira said. "I'd be blocking all day, but it kind of surprised me that we threw it so much in the rain. It was good to give me that opportunity."

Moreira got his opportunity Saturday night, and he ran with it. In fact, he ran all over Wagner Field, showcasing the skills that could make him the Wildcats' newest, youngest weapon.

"Jermaine is a guy with tremendous talent," quarterback Eli Roberson said. "He just runs great routes. The biggest thing for him is to grow up a little bit. He played good in his first game."

Moreira played without touching the ball versus California, but on Saturday things were different. He hauled in two passes for 42 yards and ran the ball once on a reverse gaining 11 yards and showing some slippery moves.

Moreira also replaced Darren Sproles returning punts. Even though tight coverage and poor punts by Troy State didn't give him much of a chance to showcase his skills in that role, he is confident he can surprise Wildcat fans.

He also is aware that the punt returning position comes with big shoes to fill. The Wildcats have had stellar punt returners each year since David Allen tied the national record for career returns-for-touchdowns in 1999.

"Just give me a little opportunity and I can do a lot of things," Moreira said. "That's why they put me back there tonight. I didn't get much of a chance, but it's going to come eventually."

While many might have been surprised to see Moreira on the field already, he said the opportunity to play early was a major factor in his decision to come to K-State.

From the sunny South to soggy

Midwest, it took some getting used to, he said.

"I'm from Florida. There are a lot of things to do, a lot of places to go," he said. "Manhattan's a nice town. You can play football, but there's not a lot to do."

Snyder said Moreira can spend that extra time learning how to play football at the Division-1 level. For now the wideout is getting by on raw skills. To live up to his potential, though, he will need to continue to practice hard and polish those skills.

"Jermaine is learning," Snyder said after the Troy State game. "A work in progress — that's exactly what he was tonight. That's what a freshman is going to be. The nuances he doesn't have finely honed yet, so he's still a ways away. I wanted to get him about 40 snaps and my guess is that he probably got pretty close to that."

Aggie kicker feeling more comfortable this year

COLLEGE STATION, (AP) - Todd Pegram is often forced to remember his introduction to big time college football but he'd like to forget it.

As a true freshman, just months removed from his high school graduation at Plano West High last season, Pegram stepped in as Texas A&M's place kicker and missed four of his five attempts.

Instead of being crushed by his debut, Pegram fought through a rough first season, finished 12-for-21 for field goals and was ready for the challenge Saturday when he kicked four field goals in the Aggies' 26-11 victory over Arkansas State.

"It's (the difference) between thinking or hoping that it's going in to knowing that it's going in," Pegram said. "That's what it's about when you line up. You know that this sucker is going to fly through the uprights."

Pegram kicked field goals of 42, 32, 35 and 30 yards, all against the wind on Saturday. He now is tied for the national lead in field goals per game and his 14 points ranks 11th nationally.

Pegram made only three of his first nine field goal tries last season in his first four games. He was benched for the next game against Texas Tech before rallying to hit nine of his last 12 field goals and lead the Aggies in scoring.

His turnaround came in A&M's 11th game last season when he kicked a 40-yard field goal that forced a second overtime. Missouri still won the game in the second overtime, but it was a breakthrough for Pegram.

"I hate talking about last year but people always ask," said Pegram, who knows his first unsuccessful kicks for A&M will forever remain on his collegiate stat sheet.

"It's kind of surreal, like you're in a dream world. You're out there all by yourself and you've got all those eyeballs on you and you've never been in that situation before. There's a lot of adrenaline you've got to learn to control."

Coach Dennis Franchione took over in December and after watching Pegram in spring drills, predicted a good season for his young kicker.

"There was a tremendous transformation for him to get through and Todd will tell you he's so much more confident," Franchione said. "He comes in here last year and probably had kicked before 8,500 and now he's kicking before 85,000."

Franchione could see in the spring that Pegram was ready to make his move.

"I can go to the (golf) range and tell when I'm hitting the ball good and you can go to the practice field and tell when the kicker is hitting the ball good, the way it pops off his foot," Franchione said.

Pegram worked over the summer at getting a consistent motion on his kicks and special teams and tight ends coach Mark Tommerdahl has kept him to that same motion.

"It's kind of like you're golf swing, you mold it over time and get a final product," Pegram said. "This has been the first summer where I found something, stayed on it and didn't let myself change. Coach Tommerdahl has me doing the same thing every day."

Tech fans experience stadium renovations

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

Like a child waking up on Christmas morning to a room full of toys, Texas Tech officials and football fans were bright-eyed Saturday evening during the first home game against Southern Methodist University and the grand opening of Jones SBC Stadium's new renovations.

With the addition of the press box, Jones SBC Stadium can accommodate approximately 55,000 people and maintains the Spanish Renaissance architecture appeal.

The 58-10 win over SMU proved to be a great way to kick off the new season as well as the stadium's face lift, Tech football coach Mike Leach said.

"The ribbon was going to get cut one way or another," he said. "But I'm impressed with the effort of the team and they did a great job, but we still have plenty of work to do for the rest of the season."

Several students felt a sense of pride for Tech as well as the football team. Laurie Welch, a sophomore psychology major from Munday, said the transformation of the stadium helps the appearance of Tech.

"The new facilities give off a greater sense of pride, I think, to all of us students," she said. "It really shows the true spirit of Tech."

By staying with the same exterior facade look of the campus, Brooke Baughman, a freshman from Canyon studying nursing, said she believes it brings the campus together.

"It looks more like the United Spirit Arena," she said. "It helps to tie the whole campus and all of the buildings together."

Going from a makeshift concrete, structure serving as a press box to a Big 12 quality structure, owners of the new suites seemed impressed by the service and eminence of the structure.

Patrick Cummins of Lubbock said the atmosphere of the entire place was outstanding.

"This is really nice and I had a great time," he said. "The people really helped me out to find the suite I was in and sitting on the 30-yard line is just great."

Club seats added 1,070 more attendees at the game and several people from around Texas and the nation came to enjoy them.

Larry Gill of Abilene said Tech Athletic Director Gerald Myers deserves a lot of the credit.

"He worked real hard to get this to the way it is," he said. "It is wonderful for Tech, the Big 12 and I'm amazed at how nice it is and the great view."

The Raiders continue their season at home once again Saturday against the University of New Mexico. Kick-off is at 6 p.m.

TECH FANS PACK into the newly renovated Jones SBC Stadium before the SMU game. The game was the first opportunity for all fans to have the chance to see the inside of the stadium. The facility features a new press box and club seating level, which span across the west side seating of Jones SBC. The stadium, now sporting a Spanish architectural look seats 55,000 fans. Tech fans will have their next opportunity to fill the stadium when the Red Raiders face the New Mexico Lobos 6 p.m. Saturday.

Sooner quarterback proves strong against North Texas

(U-WIRE) NORMAN, Okla. - In the most dominant performance of his college career, Jason White's best play didn't count.

In the third quarter, the Oklahoma quarterback scrambled to avoid the North Texas pass rush.

Running to his left, White threw to his right and found sophomore receiver Travis Wilson. Wilson broke a tackle and scampered into the end zone for an apparent touchdown. The fourth-down play was called back due to holding.

"I loved seeing Jason having fun and gaining confidence with every throw," coach Bob Stoops said. "He executed an excellent game both throwing and running." Though his rushing numbers didn't show it, White was very mobile. He used his feet to get out of trouble and find his receivers. They were the same type of plays he injured his knees on in the past.

"He has more ability to avoid people and create some space so he can throw than people realize," Stoops said. "Hopefully, that will continue." While the rushing game faltered, White had the OU passing game firing on all cylinders. White connected with eight receivers

Saturday night, finishing with 248 yards passing. His three touchdown passes included a perfectly placed 64-yard strike to Brandon Jones.

Heartbeats

A quick pulse around the Rec Sports world...

Experience The Glory!

For those of you who have time to kill before tailgating begins on Saturday Sept 6th, why not make it a day packed with action! The action will start at 9am on the Rugby field, when the Men's Rugby Club hosts a one day tournament that include teams from San Angelo State University, Midland Men's Rugby Club, Cannon Air Force Base, Hardin-Simmons University, and Midwestern State.

Also the Men's and Women's Soccer Clubs will be hosting the Baylor Bears Club teams. The women's club kicks off at noon on the field located next to Carpenter/Wells, and the men's club kicks off at 4pm on the field located west of the women's gym.

Weight Watchers

Weight Watchers will be in the Rec Center on Mondays at 6:30 pm beginning Sept 8. All Tech students pay $9. Show up to room 206 in the SRC for this class. For questions please call 742. 3828.

Fun In The Sun!

Stop by the Aquatic Center while the top is still off for some lap swimming, water volleyball, basketball or just laying around. The roof goes on Sept 27th.

Locker Sales

There will be an extra table set up on the Main Level of the Rec Center (by Racquetball Ct. 7) for locker sales. This table will be set up today and tomorrow, starting at 6:00 am and closing down at 5:00 pm. After then all locker sales will occur in the equipment issue room of the SRC.

Palo Duro Day Hike

Come join us on a day hike through the Palo Duro Canyon on September 27. This trip is a great hike in one of the most scenic areas of West Texas. This trip includes transportation, access fee, lunch, and a trip coordinator for only $15. The sign-up deadline for this trip is September 24.

FitRaider Club

FitRaider is a program for resident halls students to participate in group exercise classes and compete for prizes. It's simple—every time you take a class, sign in at the fit/well center. You and your floor are then in the running for great gifts. The kick-off aerobics class is Friday, September 5th at 4:00 p.m. in room 114. There will be prizes and a great workout. You do not need to attend the kick off to enroll in Fit Raider; just drop by the Fitness and Wellness Center to sign up. It's fun, it's free and it will keep you coming back!

Free drop-in classes begin September 2nd. The Rec offers over 40 FREE classes each week. Stop by to pick up a schedule, or check it out on our website.

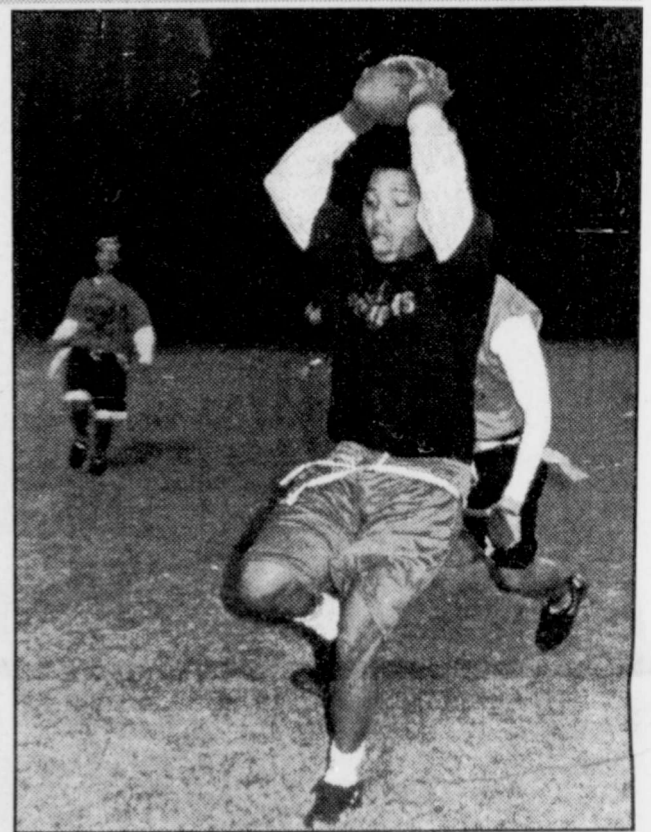

INTRAMURALS

Flag Football - Get Involved!

Now is the time to get organized and get registered for intramural flag football. More than 350 teams will take to the fields in men's, women's and co-rec play. Registration begins at 8am on Tuesday, Sept. 9 and will end at 5pm on Thursday, Sept. 11. Team captains should bring a list of players (with social security numbers) and a $30 refundable forfeit fee to register. Texas Tech Intramurals uses an instant scheduling system so the sooner you register, the more time and day options are available. Don't wait until the last day!

For those new to flag football, it is a fast-paced-wide-open game. There is only screen (non-contact) blocking allowed so quick pace and action are the name of the game. Teams are 7-on-7 but teams may have as many players on the roster as they wish.

Individuals who do not have a team may come into the intramural office in the Rec Center and fill out a "free agent" form and we'll get you on a team.

Flag Football Officials Meeting Monday!

Monday, September 8th is your chance to become part of the biggest event this semester has to offer. Over 360 teams (4,300 students) will compete in a grueling two-month season. But before it all begins Rec Sports is hiring 60 - 80 students to become Intramural Flag-Football Officials. Officials are paid $10 per game. There are also paid clinics scheduled to assist perspective employees. The first clinic will be Monday, Sept. 8th at 5 PM in room 201 of the Student Rec. Center. If you have any questions regarding employment feel free to call 742-2945.

OUTDOOR PURSUITS

2ND Annual Caprock Adventure Race

The Outdoor Pursuits Center and Mountain Hideaway are teaming up to put together Lubbock's first adventure race. Here is your chance to leave the safe confines of your couch and experience the thrill of adventure racing. The race consists of two member teams. Each member will climb two routes on September 20 and then canoe 2-miles, bike 7-miles, and run 2.5-miles on September 21. Teams member can choose to do all activities together or split the bike and run between members. Registration deadline is on September 17. The entry fee for Tech students is $30 per team. Please checkout the Rec Sports web site at www.recports.ttu.edu for an entry form and more information.
