Testimony begins in Gonzales murder trial

By Sally Gunter/Staff Reporter

Joe Gonzales

Witnesses for the prosecution took the stand Tuesday in the capital murder trial of Joe Gonzales in the 137th District Court.

Gonzales is the second Lubbock resident charged in the Aug. 14, 2002, murder of Texas Tech student Colin Schafer.

Susan Schafer, mother of Colin Schafer, was the first to take the witness stand Tuesday. She testified about the character of her son.

Testimony from two Lubbock Police Department officers concerning the scene of the crime followed Susan Schafer.

An employee of the 50th Street Caboose who was working the night of Aug. 14 testified following the LPD. The witness heard gunshots while on duty at the restaurant and saw a dark Cadillac parked beside a white Jeep at the Bank of America ATM. The witness testified finding Schafer's body in the Jeep and then calling the police.

Garland Timms, an identification officer for the Lubbock Police Department, gave an autopsy report of the victim. In a toxicology report, traces of marijuana were found in Schafer's urine, Timms said. He added that marijuana can stay in the system hours to weeks after use, and that it had no impact on Schafer's death.

The autopsy proved that Schafer died because of gun shot wounds to the torso, Timms said.

Two witnesses testified concerning the shooting at 5311 42nd St. on Aug.

22, 2002. Both agreed that Joe Gonzales and his cousin, Gabriel Gonzales, arrived at the house and began to argue with a person there.

Joe Gonzales then fired rounds outside of the house with a gun, one of the witnesses said. The witness identified the man on trial as Joe Gonzales, the shooter at the house.

A blood-stained red T-shirt belonging to Schafer was entered into evidence by the prosecution.

Wesley Shields, an identification officer with the Lubbock Police Department, testified that the holes in the T-shirt were caused by bullets.

Shields then verified that live ammunition and one 9 mm shell had been found during a search of Joe Gonzales' vehicle.

Shells from the Aug. 22 house shooting matched those from the Schafer murder, Aaron Fullerton, a fire examiner from the Texas Department of Public Safety, said.

According to the statement from Joe Gonzales, he and Gabriel Gonzales followed Schafer to his house, and then Gabriel Gonzales pulled a 9 mm gun on Schafer. He forced Schafer to drive the Jeep to the Bank of America ATM at 50th Street and Slide Road.

Joe Gonzales trailed Schafer in the Cadillac, the statement said.

After Schafer withdrew $300, Gabriel Gonzales walked around to the driver's side of the Jeep and shot Schafer twice in the upper chest. He and Joe Gonzales then left the scene, the statement said.

According to a police report, the two suspects went to the house at 5311 42nd St., where they were involved in an argument with another person. One of the men then took the gun, used during the murder-robbery, out

Field of 3,412 flags to honor 9/11 victims

One field, 3,412 flags. One community honors those who lost their lives Sept. 11, 2001.

American State Bank is sponsoring "An American Tribute," a memorial to the victims of the 9/11 attacks and a tribute to first responders.

Tonight marks the beginning of the tribute, held at Kastman Park at Lynnhaven Drive and South Loop 289, which is between Memphis and Indiana Avenues. Lubbock is one of five U.S. cities hosting tribute fields, modeled after a similar event held last year in Salt Lake City.

Susie Moore, American State Bank senior vice president of marketing, said more than 3,000 flags, each representing a person who died in the Sept. 11 attacks, will be set up in a field that is a little less than two acres.

Therapeutic Riding Center gives children with special needs a chance to enjoy life on a saddle

By Beth Aaron/Staff Reporter and photos by Andrew Weather/Staff Photographer

The University Therapeutic Riding Center is moving its sensory trail to the Caprock Equestrian center at 8005 County, Road 6930, said Kaki Goodwyn, a pediatric physical therapist at the University Medical Center.

The sensory trail is a stretch of land where children with special needs riding the horses can stop from time to time and use and appreciate their different senses, such as listening to running water in a stream, like they do at the current trail at the Ranching Heritage Museum.

Goodwyn said the group is always looking for more Texas Tech students to become involved in the program. Heidi Brady, director of the riding center, said the program is a rewarding experience.

"I think students should do this program because it is an example of an emerging trend of service-based learning class that incorporates a college curriculum with community service," she said. "They get a chance to give something back to these kids."

Volunteers who train for the course learn how to saddle a horse, how to help children mount a horse, emergency dismount techniques, how to guide a horse and spot the child on horseback, and other horse safety skills.

"Basically, we'll teach you how not to get killed around the horse," Brady said.

Training consists of eight hours of hands-on training, as well as lectures on safety. Terrah Manross, an occupational therapy major from Perryton, is taking the course for the second time. This time she is helping to prepare new students and volunteers to help children with their hippotherapy.

Manross said she began taking the class because she needed another elective, and her adviser suggested it.

"I really like this class; it's a really good experience," she said. "It gets you involved and lets you know what you'll be doing later. Plus you get to work with children."

Manross said hippotherapy is a good way for children to receive the help they need because the environment is more positive.

"This is different from a hospital environment," she said. "The rhythm and touch of the horse brings out something different in the child that he or she wouldn't get anywhere else."

SGA officers plan to 'raise the standards'

By Jennifer Prieto/Staff Reporter

The Student Government Association is starting out the new year with new faces and a new slogan.

Jeremy Brown, SGA president, said under the slogan of "Raising the Standard," each officer will work hard to achieve his or her personal goals in their committees. He trusts his student committees to take action and help the students they represent.

He said he wants to serve the community and have new programs that will benefit the students, but his main goal is to listen to and serve the students.

"We can implement a lot of programs," Brown said. "But we can't easily forget about students, and this is something we don't want to do."

He said he wants to reach every student organization on campus, including attending at least one meeting from each organization.

Every meeting he attends, Brown will introduce himself and ask students what they do not like about Tech and what he can do to make Tech a better place.

"How can you serve the students, if you don't know what they are doing?" Brown said. "The most

Safety concerns surface after alleged hit-and-run

By Adam Boedeker/Staff Reporter

A Texas Tech student was injured in a hit-and-run incident Thursday in front of the Jerry S. Rawls College of Business Administration building.

Leslie Thompson, a senior management and marketing major from Austin, said she was at the tail end of a group of students crossing Flint and all the cars in north and southbound traffic were stopped at the crosswalk to allow the students to cross.

"I was three-fourths of the way through the crosswalk and all the sudden a little silver car accelerated," Thompson said. "I don't know if they didn't see me or what, but they hit my right knee and it spun me around."

People came up asking if I was OK and the car just drove off."

This was the latest of a number of accidents that have happened on campus.

In February a man in a motorized wheelchair was hit crossing the same crosswalk on Flint Avenue. Maj. Gordon Hoffman of the Texas Tech Police Department said these problems will continue if drivers and pedestrians do not follow the traffic laws set forth.

"I want to tell everyone to be careful because there will be more traffic with the higher enrollment," Hoffman said. "Those who choose not to use crosswalks are putting

Texas governor calls third special session

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican Gov. Rick Perry on Tuesday called a third special session of the Legislature to take up a congressional redistricting plan that has twice been derailed by walkouts by the Democrats.

Perry said the session would begin on Monday.

During two previous GOP attempts to redraw Texas' congressional districts, Democratic lawmakers fled the state, depriving the Republicans of the quorum needed to conduct business.

The governor's announcement came after 10 Senate Democrats who have been in New Mexico boycotting the Legislature relented and announced that they would return to Texas and take part in an expected third special session.

Judge allows 9/11 suits against airlines

NEW YORK (AP) — The crashing of a hijacked jetliner was the kind of "foreseeable risk" that the airline industry should have guarded against, a judge ruled Tuesday as he permitted lawsuits related to the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks to proceed.

U.S. District Judge Alvin Hellerstein said negligent security screening could have contributed to the deaths of 3,000 people in the 2001 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon and the crash of a hijacked plane in Pennsylvania.

"The aviation defendants controlled who came onto the planes and what was carried aboard.

They had the obligation to take reasonable care in screening," he wrote.

Several injured in Iraq car bombing

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A car bomb exploded Tuesday outside an office used by U.S. soldiers in northern Iraq, private CNN-Turk television reported. Several people were reported wounded, but it was unclear if Americans were among them.

The wounded included Iraqi Kurdish guards and children from nearby houses. Firefighters rushed to the scene.

U.S. military officials said they could not immediately confirm the report.

Authorities in Irbil, the administrative capital of Kurdish-controlled northern Iraq about 200 miles north of Baghdad, called to residents over loudspeakers to donate blood for the wounded, CNN-Turk said.

Northern Iraq has been the most stable part of the country since the ouster of Saddam Hussein.

$85M deal made in church abuse suits

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Archdiocese agreed Tuesday to pay $85 million to settle more than 500 lawsuits from people who claim Roman Catholic priests abused them, a lead attorney in the cases told The Associated Press.

It's the largest known payout by a U.S. diocese to settle molestation charges.

The deal, finalized after months of negotiations, marks a major step toward quieting the crisis that has torn at the fabric of America's fourth-largest archdiocese for nearly two years and spread throughout the country and beyond.

Under the agreement, victims will receive awards ranging from $80,000 to $300,000, said attorney Roderick MacLeish Jr., whose firm represents nearly half of the alleged victims.

Award amounts will be decided by a mediator, based on the type of molestation, the duration of the abuse, and the injury suffered.

Parents who filed lawsuits claiming their children were abused will receive $20,000.

"The deal has been signed. The deal has been done," Marcia Brier, a spokeswoman for MacLeish's firm called out to reporters awaiting word on a settlement at Suffolk Superior Court. The pact comes about a month after the archdiocese put a $55 million offer on the table, leading to intensified talks among a small group of lawyers who were negotiating on behalf of 552 alleged victims.

Many of the final details of the deal were worked out during a closed-door meeting Sunday night among lawyers — attended by Archbishop Sean O'Malley — that went into early Monday morning.

"There's no way that you can possibly compensate people for what has been taken away from them," MacLeish said.

U of H law dean discusses job's challenges

By Andrew Bell/Staff Reporter

The students and faculty of the law school at Texas Tech had the chance Tuesday afternoon to listen to one of the few and the proud.

But she is not a Marine. She is one of the few and the proud female deans in the country.

Nancy Rapoport, dean and professor of law at the University of Houston Law Center, came to Tech to speak about her experiences as a female dean.

Rapoport is one of 33 female deans in the history of institutions of higher education. Her speech, "Images of Women Lawyers in the Media and Why Those Images Matter," was held in the forum at 12:30.

Anthonette Okorodudu, a second-year law student from League City, came to Rapoport's speech because of the dean's status in the nation.

"I came for the fact that there are very few women deans in academics," she said.

Rapoport's career in law began at Stanford, where she received her J.D., she said. After she received her degree, she went to San Francisco to practice bankruptcy law. Rapoport explained how practicing bankruptcy law is similar to her job as a dean.

"Bankruptcy is similar to being a dean in that you have to deal with a scarce resource and the people who are fighting for that resource," Rapoport said.

Rapoport's first university job was with Ohio State University.

"Being a law professor is the world's best job. As a professor, you can put a stamp on a student's education ...

You get to be behind other people's success. It is one of the most satisfying feelings in the world," she said.

The next job Rapoport held was associate dean for student affairs for Ohio State.

This led the way to her job as dean and professor for the University of Nebraska College of Law in 1998, she said.

Rapoport said the transition to Nebraska was hard but it was beneficial. As a newcomer, she did not know any of key officials in the state. However, she said she was given the benefit of the doubt.

"The year before I (became) dean, there were only 13 of us. Four others began to dean the same year that I did," she said.

In 2000, Rapoport returned to Texas to become dean and professor at the Law Center at Houston. She said the move to Texas was a dream come true.

"Houston is home for me. I would have never dreamed that I would have been able to do the things that I have done from growing up where I did," Rapoport said.

During her speech, Rapoport discussed what it takes to be a successful female dean.

Just as any other dean, she is a representative to constituents and regulates law school policies. One of the most important aspects of her job is alumni support.

"I will go to Las Vegas soon to have breakfast with a group of alumni. Then I will be going to New York for the same thing," she said.

She also said it can be a lonely job, because her job includes having to fire faculty and make important decisions that affect the school.

Although some aspects of the job can be lonely, others have led her to people and places she might not have seen.

"I've thrown the first pitch at a Nebraska baseball game. I also got to fly a shuttle simulator," Rapoport said.

As with any job, she finds some things frustrating. One of Rapoport's passions has always been teaching. Now that her responsibilities are split, she is only able to teach one class, she said.

"Being a dean is a large job. I work about 80 hours a week and I haven't slept eight hours a night since I don't know when," she said.

The job also affects the way she conducts everyday life.

Long hours and constant meetings will not allow time for a family, she said.

"If I had children, I wouldn't be able to do my job," Rapoport said. She also loses out on personal contact.

Rapoport said she no longer socializes with faculty one on one. If she has a serious appointment with a faculty member or anyone else, she always has a witness present.

Rapoport said it is necessary to recognize certain things about the real world and oneself in order to be successful.

"Stereotypes will be there, but everyone has stereotypes thrust against them. As you go out to succeed, face them or be aware of the stereotypes," she said.

She also said it is important for people to understand their personas in order to pass any barriers or conflicts that may get in the way.

Rapoport is also working on achieving her ultimate goal of becoming a university president.

Despite her long hours with the Law Center in Houston, she is in the process of writing a book.

"Stereotypes will be there, but everyone has stereotypes thrust against them. As you go out to succeed, face them or be aware of the stereotypes."

Hoffman said. "Those who choose not to use crosswalks are putting themselves in danger, and I strongly encourage people to use them."

"The drivers also need to be watchful of any unexpected pedestrians stepping off the curb and be good defensive drivers. It should fall both on pedestrians and drivers and both need to use common sense to be safe."

According to the Tech Police Department, there have been 13 accidents with injuries on campus since Jan. 1. and 108 without injuries.

Manager of Operations for Traffic and Parking Eric Crouch said people need to be especially careful on campus, since it is generally more congested than driving in the Lubbock community.

"The people just need to be aware of pedestrians with all the traffic," Crouch said. "It's not like driving in city streets, it's the one place we don't need distracted drivers, or pedestrians for that matter."

Any witnesses with details regarding the Thursday's accident are asked to call Sgt. Waincott of the Tech Police Department at (806) 742-3931.

After the silver car, occupied by two females, drove off, Thompson said strangers began coming up and asking if she was injured. She said a friend happened to drive by right after it happened and helped her on the bus to go to their cars in the commuter lot.

According to the police report, the car failed to yield the right of way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and also failed to stop and render aid.

"I was able to drive to a friend's house that works in the ER at UMC," Thompson said. "He looked at it and said I definitely needed to go to the ER."

Thompson said before the accident occurred she was wary of the safety for pedestrians on campus.

"I would think there is not enough safety on campus even before this happened," she said. "There's so much traffic, even though it is a pedestrian campus. Every car thinks they have the automatic right of way."

Thompson made it to the ER and was there until early morning on Friday. She said she went back Friday afternoon and the orthopedist told her she needed to have surgery after suffering a broken bone in her leg and a torn meniscus in her knee.

"On Saturday morning I had surgery for a plateau tibial fracture and they put two screws into the broken bone," she said. "I left the hospital Sunday afternoon and came back to class today (Tuesday)."

Thompson said she cannot walk on her leg for six weeks and has to rely on crutches and a wheelchair to get around. She said they would determine in six weeks whether she needs surgery for the torn meniscus.

"I know it was an accident," Thompson said. "But it would've been courteous to at least stop and see if I was OK. I guess they were too scared or they honestly didn't know that they hit me, which I find hard to believe."

If found guilty of capital murder, then Joe Gonzales will serve a capital life sentence in prison. The death penalty is not being sought in this case.

Gabriel Gonzales, 17, is currently serving life imprisonment for the murder of Schafer. He pleaded guilty Jan. 10 to capital murder. He will become eligible for parole in 40 years.

Cheers to alcohol on Tech campus

Legalization cause worth drinking to

Although I've always been a supporter of legalizing alcohol on campus, it has never been a cause I've felt the need to champion, since I've always lived off campus.

It's never really affected me.

Until now.

Here's the story:

My roommate and I go to visit some friends who live on campus. We bring a shade under $60 worth of beer.

Our plan was to have a few at her place and take the rest home when we left.

But, we were operating under the woefully mistaken assumption that the higher-ups had actually made the intelligent decision to permit of-age students to have alcohol on the Texas Tech campus.

We soon discovered our folly. A student assistant, wielding a walkie-talkie and patrolling the building like a sentry, stopped us.

We thought we were legal and so being surreptitious was not a priority.

It should have been.

Apparently, this guy thinks he is Kevin Costner from "The Untouchables."

With a "Let's do some good" attitude, he orders us into his office and confiscates our beer.

After beer was taken and put in someone else's booze collection and we had relayed this ridiculous turn of events to the friends we were going to visit, we walked out to my car, still fuming about what had happened.

God, however, has a sense of humor. I looked down on the ground and said "Well, maybe life isn't so bad after all."

I had found a $20 bill.

Although God tried to reimburse us for our loss, it does not remedy the greater problem here.

My roommate and I, as well as the friends we were going to visit, are all 21 or older, and we had beer taken away from us like a couple of high schoolers on a band trip.

The idea that alcohol on Tech property should be illegal is outmoded and stupid.

The rule prohibiting alcohol on campus is as effective as a cheap, 7-year-old condom in preventing the influx of alcohol into the Tech campus.

It takes morons like my partner in crime and I who've never lived on campus to actually get caught.

Furthermore, the inspiration behind the rule stems from a greater cultural phenomenon in the country.

Alcohol is synonymous with evil in this country — especially in West Texas.

We operate under a collective fear of alcohol instead of developing a healthy respect for what it is and what the consequences of its misuse might be.

Additionally, alcohol is the ticket to

Jason Lenz

The rule prohibiting alcohol on campus is as effective as a cheap 7-year-old condom in preventing the influx of alcohol into the Tech campus lower student fees and cheapen tuition. Not only should the university permit the possession of liquor and beer on campus, they need to be the ones distributing it.

Take the dilapidated eyegore that is the old Dairy Barn (this architectural marvel stands just north of the Foreign Language building) and convert into a bar.

Call it the Beer Barn or something. Heaven only knows how much money that place would rake in each day.

Let's also start selling beer at sporting events.

I am currently working the concession stands at football games to fund the German Club's return trip to Germany during Spring Break.

I can't help but think though that I might procure more money by standing next to the spotlight at 98th and Highway 87 holding a sign that reads: "Germany or bust."

However, if a huge Miller Lite beacon were shining above our concession stand like a lighthouse guiding ships into the harbor, we would have our entire trip to Germany paid for with just the Texas A&M game.

This column is meant to demonstrate an outmoded and, more importantly, inefficient method of thinking.

Permitting alcohol on campus could ease so many of the financial burdens at Tech, and I doubt there would be too many casualties.

After all, since when did money stop talking, or, perhaps more accurately, since when did we stop listening.

70% OF TECH STUDENTS THINK "WALT THE WEATHERMAN" IS A WEAK CONCEPT.... AND SO DO THE REMAINING 30%!!!

Let's kick off all signs of school spirit

If there's anything we need less of at Texas Tech, it's definitely school spirit. All this hoopla about our athletics programs has got to stop.

And that's why Tortilla Boy should have been kicked out of the first football game.

He's taken something administration frowns on and put it in the limelight with humor and tact.

If we're not allowed to throw tortillas, why not be tortillas?

This kind of creative outrage cannot continue at Tech.

That's why I feel the little 3-year-old girls in their cute little cheerleader costumes should be next.

Kick them out.

Send them home crying.

They can't watch the game because of their joy for Red Raider football.

Let them go kicking and screaming to the police station while their mommies and daddies watch the Red Raiders win.

While we're removing people from the stands, how about the students who get to the games an hour before the gates even open to be in the front row so everyone can see "Go Tech!" spelled across their chests. That is unacceptable behavior.

They should be sent home with their clothes on.

Next, the elderly women who wear the Double T earrings and red shoes with their black pants. That's too much spirit.

After the old ladies, the season ticket holders because they have way too much spirit.

They spent thousands of dollars to have those seats, and only people with spirit would do that.

Then the students.

They are already being deprived of one of their favorite traditions in throwing tortillas, and now the Big 12 Conference has come up with a zero-tolerance policy for postgame activities. That just spoils all sorts of fun for Red Raider faithful, so why should they even be allowed to go?

They're just going to want to tear down a goal post or two, yell "Bull excrement" when they disagree with a call, get their guns up and chant Wes Welker's name when he goes back for a punt return.

But that would mean showing spirit.

David Weichmann

That's why I feel the little 3-year old girls in their cute little cheerleader costumes should be next. Kick them out. Send them home crying.

The bottom line here is people are trying to hold back enthusiasm for Tech sports.

In a day and age when the administration wants to make the university bigger and better, the students are restricted on showing their love for this university.

How can we promote more students to come here, when the ones who are already here are not allowed to enjoy being Red Raiders?

When will Tortilla Boy be allowed to go to a game? When will the students be allowed to tear down the goal posts after an upset?

We're talking about spirit at sporting events. This is not the Westminster Dog Show.

This is football, basketball, baseball and volleyball.

This is Texas Tech, and if a uniform that says Texas Tech on it is going to be encouraged to plunder, destroy, kill, maim and wreak havoc on its opponent, then don't make an attempt to regulate support.

There is nothing sophisticated about weekend warriors bounding each other for 60 minutes. So why should the fans show up to the game in a tuxedo?

This has gone too far, and the administration needs to get on the ball with spirit.

It's not a bad thing. It's good. It proves to you that your students actually like the university they are attending. Try to please them in every way possible. Let spirited people attend the game. There is no rule against dressing like a tortilla, just throwing them. From what I've heard Tortilla Boy was quite a hit at the game.

Do us a favor and don't try to control school spirit. If you do, we may have to change to the Fight Song to, "Run Raiders Run. Run Raiders Run. Run from the team that wants to beat you."

Letters to the Editor

Homosexuality not big deal

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to Spencer Ingram's Tuesday column titled, "God does not change mind"

I'm glad to see The University Daily continues its proud tradition of using the opinion page as a forum for the unrestricted denunciation of homosexuals in the guise of moral opinion.

Ingram's fascination with gay people consumes him to such an extent he regards this harmless minority as such an overwhelming evil that it must be singled out above all the other evils in the world today.

With all of the problems in the U.S. today, Ingram's statement that America's great dilemma is "its obsession with sex," particularly its "fling with homosexuality," should strike every reader as outrageous.

Why this pointless obsession? The Bible only mentions male homosexuality three (maybe five, depending on the translation) times and lesbianism once, and Jesus never said a word about it.

References in the Bible to divorce, poverty, hate, laziness, murder, selfishness, greed, hypocrisy, theft, untruthfulness, and gluttony abound, and yet Ingram fanatically zeroes in on a sliver of passages to give comfort to his own prejudices.

Get your priorities right, for heaven's sake! Gay people are not going to end the world any time soon!

Can we all agree there are more serious problems in the world than two women kissing in the video music awards show, like American soldiers dying on the same day?

—Jared Davis, third-year law student from Lubbock

Show some respect on road

Dear Editor,

With any prestigious institution of higher learning, proper etiquette and a friendly disposition are expected of, and habitually practiced by, both the faculty and student body. Unfortunately, some exceptions do exist to this unwritten policy, as was seen first-hand Thursday when a friend of mine was hit by another Tech student's vehicle while crossing the street near the Business Administration building.

The driver, knowingly hit another student, yet did not even have the courtesy to stop and check the scene, much less make an attempt to assist my friend in finding medical attention.

Although she was injured, it appears she will recover, albeit through a painful rehabilitation process.

While I am disappointed with the situation, I feel confident that this particular driver's actions would not parallel those of the majority of Tech students should the situation have occurred to another individual.

I ask everyone driving through or around campus this semester pay close attention to pedestrians, and show the courtesy to others we are all entitled.

Your pills are where????

Try the birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective.

Not only is it 99.7% effective, but you need just 1 shot every 11 to 13 weeks to protect you from pregnancy. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera is not your every day birth control.

Depo-Provera does not protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant or if you have had any unexplained periods. You should not use it if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a loss of some of the bone mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. Some women using Depo-Provera have side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months. You may gain weight when using Depo-Provera. About two thirds of the women in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 lb during the first year of use.

Human Sciences to host organizational fair

By Brent Young/Staff Reporter

For all students who would like to make their college career more productive and meaningful, the College of Human Sciences is offering an opportunity.

"Research shows that students who get involved in campus organizations are more successful throughout their entire academic career," said Steve Harris, associate dean of the College of Human Sciences.

Involved students also foster better relationships with their peers and with more people than students who do not get involved, he said.

The college will open its doors today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. for students interested in getting involved in and leading any of their many student organizations.

The organizational fair will be held in El Centro, the college's main lobby, across from the dean's office on the first floor. The fair's purpose is to increase student organization membership, said recruiting adviser Cindy Villegas.

"We do everything from University Day to the State Fair," she said "not only for the College of Human Sciences, but for the university."

The fair helps attract new members and new leaders for the organization.

"We need strong leadership in all of our organizations," she said. "We shoulder a lot of responsibility."

This is the fair's first year, and the entire college is excited about the opportunities it will provide, both for the students looking to join the organizations and for the organizations themselves, said Stephanie Sierra, coordinator of development for the college.

Despite the lack of history for the fair, Sierra said planning the fair has been a very smooth process thanks to the dedication and commitment of everyone in the college.

The First Annual College of Human Sciences Organizational Fair will consist of student-run booths featuring each of the organizations.

"Each organization has different responsibilities and different pursuits," Sierra said. "There truly is a place for everyone in a student organization in the College of Human Sciences."

Sierra would especially like to encourage students involved in other organizations on campus to attend the fair.

"Their knowledge and experience could really help us further our programs and organizations," she said.

According to information from the College of Human Sciences, a variety of organizations for students of all major will be there.

The American Association of Family and Consumer Sciences will be present.

It is the professional organization for all human science disciplines. It sponsors professional development and interaction between students and professionals and is open to all COHS majors. The association is a great way for students to make contacts in their career field.

The Human Sciences Dean's leadership council, which acts as the voice of all other student organizations to the dean, will also be present.

The council is also responsible for leading Human Sciences Week and Homecoming activities.

This gives students a great behind the scenes look at one of the most festive celebrations on campus.

The Human Sciences Recruiters serve as college ambassadors by aiding the recruitment adviser in efforts to bring outstanding students to the college in order to improve the caliber of the college as well as the university.

Alpha Sigma Beta is responsible for providing opportunities for Restaurant, Hospitality, and Institutional Management majors to build networks with RHIM peers and professionals and provides a great avenue towards employment after graduation.

The American Society of Interior Designers will have a booth constructed at the fair for all students interested in a national affiliation that promotes better understanding of the industry and the profession of interior design.

The Tech Council on Family Relations, a non-profit educational and resource education dedicated to promoting healthy families will also be present and intends to extend the reach of their efforts by adding more students to their organization.

For all students who would like to help get their friends out of debt, Red to Black will be accepting new members as well.

The organization offers counseling and educational programs to individuals and student organizations.

The organization also promotes a greater understanding of counseling related issues through guest speakers and roundtable discussions.

"We need strong leadership in all of our organizations. We shoulder a lot of responsibility."

press conference to publicize the event, and officials set up 30 flags in Kastman Park, Moore said. Even then, people pulled over their cars wanting to know what was going on, she said.

"Just 30 flags was pretty awesome. I think it's just going to be goosebump time," Moore said. "Anybody who's patriotic stirs a little just walking by a flag, even at a football game. Especially knowing what (these flags) are going to represent, that's going to be touching."

Corbin Pemberton, Lubbock Parks and Recreation director, said the flag ceremony will begin at 6 p.m. Wednesday, and a candlelight service will be held at 8 p.m.

"They will begin to put out the flags at 6 p.m.," he said. "As each flag is put out, a name of the deceased of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks will be read."

Lights will be on the flags 24 hours a day until Sunday, Pemberton said.

Citizens may walk through the field any time while the flags are up, but park curfew is at midnight.

Unishippers is the company in charge of coordinating delivery of all the flags, said Debbie Brown, Unishippers communications program manager.

The company also got the banners to go on the trucks delivering the flags, she said.

Brown said communities got involved in the memorial through national communication.

"The communities that are hosting this got it through word of mouth," she said. "They heard this from friends who were in Utah last year."

The fields are a way that communities can get together and honor the victims and heroes of Sept. 11, Brown said.

"They were trying to find a way to graphically show the sheer magnitude of the lives lost," Brown said. "They wanted to do it in a way that children to adults can understand this better without all the gruesome details."

Even the truck drivers delivering the flags are excited, Brown said. They call and say although they are not making the fastest time, they have never had more fun driving a shipment, she said.

"Every time they stop for gas, people want to take pictures," she said. "As they drive down the highway, people are beeping their horns and putting their hands on their hearts as they pass."

American State Bank came up with the tribute field idea because a person on the staff knew about the field in Salt Lake City, Moore said.

"Someone did a little research and gathered news clips on the healing field," she said. "We looked at the news clips and thought, 'This is something we have to do.' I could barely keep from crying; it was so inspiring."

Jamie Jenson, a junior physics and political science major from Houston, said she believes the tribute field is a great idea.

"I think that people need to move on, but I don't think people need to forget," she said.

Instead of calling the field of flags a healing field, officials are calling the Lubbock field a tribute field, Moore said.

"I feel like people were more sensitive at that time than now, so that's why Salt Lake City named theirs a healing field," she said. "It had only been one year, so people still needed healing."

Moore said they are selling the flags used in the field for $25 each.

All proceeds will go toward scholarships for nursing students at Texas Tech, Lubbock Christian University, Covenant School of Nursing and South Plains College.

Not only will the tribute field commemorate the victims of the 9/11 attacks, but Sept. 11 is First Responder's Day, Pemberton said.

Children of all ages and all forms of disease benefit from this type of therapy, she said, including children with Down's syndrome, epilepsy, autism and schizophrenia.

"There are older ones, one as old as 30," she said. "But most of them are children."

Manross said the therapy itself consists of volunteers playing games with the children, helping them to stretch their muscles and work on motor skills.

Michelle Garcia, a speech pathology major from Victoria, said she fell into the class as well.

"I had no idea what this was," she said. "It's a great class to take, though. The first class just excited me."

Brady said she has seen positive reactions from many of her students.

"This class changes everybody who takes it," Brady said. "It gives students a different prospective other than the regular college student outlook. They learn about disabilities, and the fact that there really are some other important things to think about."

Nathan Newsom, an agriculture education major from Lubbock, said taking the class just made sense.

"I've worked in both ways - with animals and kids," he said. "I was around horses every summer, and I'm an education major, so, it just works."

Newsom said he would encourage students to take the class or volunteer at the center.

Brady said along with the therapeutic program itself, the group is looking into possibly joining with the Equestrian Special Olympics.

Anyone interested in volunteering for the program should contact Kim Guay at (806) 742-2825.

important thing is for me to know what students want."

Brown said he is involved in the decision-making process regarding next semester's tuition, and he wants to make sure students are informed.

"We want to do something like a 'coffee with the president,'" Brown said. "We might rent out Starbucks and have students come join us."

Brown said he wants to establish a vice president for graduate student affairs. This will be introduced to the Student Senate at its first meeting Sept. 18.

"I want someone to represent our graduate students," Brown said. "I want to make sure they are all well represented."

Colton Batchelor, SGA external vice president, said his main goal is to inform students about all the services Tech has to offer.

"Students need to know what's offered to them," he said. "They need to take advantage of all the opportunities in campus."

He wants to improve the transportation system and encourage students to use the Safe Ride program.

"I would be ecstatic to know that we saved one Tech student's life," Batchelor said. "I would love to see that we are preventing students from getting a DWI."

Batchelor also is excited about the Take a Kid To a Game program, he said.

The program is for children who do not have the opportunities that other children have, and the SGA wants to give them an opportunity to do something fun while spending time with Tech students.

Batchelor said he wants to close the gap between the students and the community.

"We have a lot of programs that we want to do and will do," Batchelor said. "The main concern is how they are going to be implemented, and how to get people aware of them."

Batchelor said the main difference with the SGA this year than past years is the growth of students and the increase of opportunities they have to make a bigger difference among students and the community.

"The SGA, last year, did an excellent job," Bachelor said. "They just paved the way for us to continue and try to make things better."

He said he encourages students to come and talk to him or any other SGA member about problems, concerns or ideas they might have.

Jacque Steinmetz, SGA internal vice president and president of Student Senate, said her main goal is to diversify the Freshman Council.

"In the past years, the Freshman Council has been predominantly Greek," Steinmetz said. "We want to reach other students, and hopefully they will like to be part of us."

She wants to teach the senators about all the different committees so they will be a better resource to others, and they will have a better over view of what is going on.

"I want to expose them to as many things as possible," Steinmetz said.

She wants students to know they can attend any of the Senate meetings.

Students will not be able to partake in the decision-making process, but they will be informed of what decisions are being made.

Depo-Provera[®] Contraceptive Injection

medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA[®] Contraceptive Injection (medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension, USP)

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given as an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttock or upper arm once every 3 months (13 weeks). To continue your contraceptive protection, you must receive your next injection promptly at the end of 3 months (13 weeks). DEPO-PROVERA contains medroxyprogesterone acetate, a chemical similar to (but not the same as) the natural hormone progesterone, which is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely for pregnancy to occur.

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The efficacy of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (see "How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?"). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first get DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection, you must receive your first injection promptly at the end of 3 months (13 weeks) of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely for pregnancy to occur.

The following table shows the percent of women who got pregnant while using different kinds of contraceptive methods. It gives both the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the rate expected in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancy (which includes women who became pregnant because they forgot to use their birth control or because they did not follow the directions exactly).

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Not all women should use DEPO-PROVERA. You should not use DEPO-PROVERA if you have any of the following conditions:
• if you think you might be pregnant
• if you have any vaginal bleeding without a known reason

• if you have had cancer of the breast
• if you have had a stroke
• if you have or have had blood clots (phlebitis) in your legs
• if you have problems with your liver or liver disease
• if you are allergic to DEPO-PROVERA (medroxyprogesterone acetate) or any of its other ingredients

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
You will have a physical examination before your doctor prescribes DEPO-PROVERA. It is important to tell your health-care provider if you have any of the following:
• a family history of breast cancer
• an abnormal mammogram (breast x-ray), fibrocystic breast disease, breast nodules or lumps, or bleeding from your nipples
• kidney disease
• irregular or scanty menstrual periods
• high blood pressure
• migraine headaches
• asthma
• epilepsy (convulsions or seizures)
• diabetes or a family history of diabetes
• a history of depression

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital herpes, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
DEPO-PROVERA is a long-acting birth control method. It takes some time after your last injection for its effect to wear off. Based on the results from a large study done in the United States, about half of those who become pregnant will do so in about 10 months after their last injection; about two-thirds of those who become pregnant will do so in about 12 months; about 83% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 15 months; and about 93% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 18 months after their last injection. The length of time you use DEPO-PROVERA has no effect on how long it takes you to become pregnant after you stop using it.

What are the risks using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
1. Irregular Menstrual Bleeding
The side effect reported most frequently by women who use DEPO-PROVERA for contraception is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA, you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting, an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding, or no bleeding at all. Unusually heavy or continuous bleeding, however, is not a usual effect of DEPO-PROVERA; if this happens, you should see your health-care provider right away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA, bleeding usually decreases, and many women stop having periods completely.

In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA, 55% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding (amenorrhea) after 1 year of use, and 68% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reason that your periods stop is because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly, the regular monthly growth of the lining of your uterus does not occur, and therefore, the bleeding that comes with your normal menstruation does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA, your menstrual period will usually, in time, return to its normal cycle.

2. Bone Mineral Changes
Use of DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The rate of bone mineral loss is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use, but after that, it begins to resemble the normal rate of age-related bone mineral loss.

Studies of women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used DEPO-PROVERA for contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast, ovary, uterus, cervix, or liver. However, women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health-care provider.

3. Unexplained Pregnancy
Because DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method, the risk of accidental pregnancy for women who get their shots regularly (every 3 months [13 weeks]) is very low. While there have been reports of an increased risk of low birth weight and neonatal infant death or other health problems in infants conceived close to the time of injection, such pregnancies are uncommon. If you think you may have become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception, see your health-care provider as soon as possible.

4. Allergic Reactions
Because DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection has reported severe and potentially life-threatening allergic reactions known as anaphylaxis and anaphylatoid reactions, symptoms include the sudden onset of hives or swelling and itching of the skin, breathing difficulties, and a drop in blood pressure.

5. Other Risks
Women who use hormone-based contraceptives may have an increased risk of blood clots or stroke. Also, if a contraceptive method fails, there is a possibility that the fertilized egg will begin to develop outside of the uterus (ectopic pregnancy). While these events are rare, you should tell your health-care provider if you have any of the problems listed in the next section.

What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Call your health-care provider immediately if any of these problems occur following an injection of DEPO-PROVERA:
• sharp chest pain, coughing up of blood, or sudden shortness of breath (indicating a possible clot in the lung)
• sudden severe headache or vomiting, dizziness or fainting, problems with your eyesight or speech, weakness, or numbness in an arm or leg (indicating a possible stroke)
• severe pain or swelling in the calf (indicating a possible clot in the leg)
• unusually heavy vaginal bleeding
• severe pain or tenderness in the lower abdominal area
• persistent pain, pus, or bleeding at the injection site

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
1. Weight Gain
You may experience a weight gain while you are using DEPO-PROVERA. About two thirds of the women who used DEPO-PROVERA in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 pounds during the first year of use. You may continue to gain weight after the first year. Women in one large study who used DEPO-PROVERA for 2 years gained an average total of 8.1 pounds over those 2 years, or approximately 4 pounds per year. Women who continued for 4 years gained an average total of 13.8 pounds over those 4 years, or approximately 3.5 pounds per year. Women who continued for 6 years gained an average total of 16.5 pounds over those 6 years, or approximately 2.75 pounds per year.

2. Other Side Effects
In a clinical study of over 3,000 women who used DEPO-PROVERA for up to 7 years, some women reported the following effects that may or may not have been related to their use of DEPO-PROVERA: irregular menstrual bleeding, amenorrhea, headache, nervousness, abdominal cramps, dizziness, weakness, or fatigue, decreased sexual desire, leg cramps, nausea, vaginal discharge or irritation, breast swelling and tenderness, swelling of the hands or feet, backache, depression, insomnia, acne, pelvic pain, no hair growth or excessive hair loss, rash, hot flashes, and joint pain. Other problems were reported by very few of the women in the clinical trials, but some of these could be serious. These include convulsions, jaundice, urinary tract infections, allergic reactions, fainting, paralysis, osteoporosis, lack of return to fertility, deep vein thrombosis, pulmonary embolus, breast cancer, or cervical cancer. If these or any other problems occur during your use of DEPO-PROVERA, discuss them with your health-care provider.

Should any precautions be discussed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
1. Missed Periods
During the time you are using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception, you may skip a period, or your periods may stop completely. If you have been receiving your DEPO-PROVERA injections regularly every 3 months (13 weeks), then you are probably not pregnant. However, if you think that you may be pregnant, see your health-care provider.

2. Laboratory Test Interactions
If you are scheduled for any laboratory tests, tell your health-care provider that you are using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception. Certain blood tests are affected by hormones such as Cytochrome (aminoglutethimide) is an anticancer drug that may significantly decrease the effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA if the two drugs are given during the same time.

3. Nursing Mothers
Although DEPO-PROVERA can be passed to the nursing infant in the breast milk, no harmful effects have been found in these children. DEPO-PROVERA does not prevent the amount of producing milk, so it can be used by nursing mothers. However, to minimize the breast of DEPO-PROVERA, it is passed to the infant in the first weeks after birth, you should wait until 6 weeks after childbirth before you start using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception.

How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The recommended dose of DEPO-PROVERA is 150 mg every 3 months (13 weeks) given in a single intramuscular injection in the buttock or upper arm. To make sure that you are not pregnant at the time of the first injection, it is essential that the injection be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period. If used following the delivery of a child, the first injection of DEPO-PROVERA MUST be given within 5 days after childbirth. If you are not breast-feeding or 6 weeks after childbirth if you are exclusively breast-feeding. If you wait longer than 3 months (13 weeks) between injections, or longer than 6 weeks after delivery your health-care provider should determine that you are not pregnant before giving you your injection of DEPO-PROVERA.

Singles, stay hopeful: You are not alone

FRANK VACULIN/Graphics Editor

Even with more than 27,000 students at Texas Tech and some students might not understand why they are still single. To some, the dating scene at Tech remains a complicated situation.

Some students might ask questions like "I have a great personality, why isn't anyone asking me out?" or "What's wrong with me?"

Lane H. Powell, assistant chair for human development and family studies, said society puts too much pressure on single people on the idea that there is supposed to be someone for everyone.

"We have this idea that there is this right person and we think bells are going to ring or stars are going to explode in the sky when we meet them," she said.

And this is not true, Powell said, adding that love grows over time. "I believe people are expecting too much and if it doesn't happen, they just move along," she said.

College is a great place to meet people. But for single students looking to find a companion, they need to get involved in extra-curricular activities, Powell said. To find someone with the same values but are open to new things, date several people and take it slow.

But Bobby Korah, a sophomore biology major from Houston, said dating is not that easy.

"A lot of times, I feel like I don't know what going on through a girl's head," he said.

Many times, he said girls think they are being obvious about liking a guy but they are not.

"Guys are really different from girls; we're really dense," he said. "This girl liked me for the longest time - she kept hinting to me and I didn't even notice."

Korah said he believes girls should be more assertive when it comes to dating.

"Throw the idea out, let the guy pick up on it," he said.

Andrew Rohe, a freshman political science major from Rockwall, said girls should make a move so guys do not face the scary possibility of being rejected.

"If a girl rejects you, it puts a damper on your confidence," he said.

Girls should be straightforward and should not play games, he said. He believes a girl can simply get any guy she wants if she put her mind to it.

With classes and school activities, Kacie Daves, a junior restaurant hotel and institutional management from Mertzton, said she is content being single and does not have time to have a relationship. Although she dates, she sees a few major mistakes guys make.

"They push me away," she said. "They ask me what I'm doing tomorrow and seem desperate."

Guys need to be more patient and confident, Daves maintains.

"I can look at a person and tell if they are confident," she said.

Before someone starts searching for a companion, Powell said the first stage for a guy or girl is the love readiness stage. A person has to be ready to fall in love or the possible partner will not be receptive.

If someone is single, Powell said that person need to look at one's past relationships.

"If you've had several relationships that didn't work out," she said. "What is it that is causing you to get in the same cycle?"

Powell's advice to students is simple. Let the process develop and do not be too anxious to rush into a relationship.

RIAA actions an affront to students' freedom and music's intent

Although it was not the first shot fired in the war between music listeners and the music industry, what the RIAA did on Monday was by far the most symbolic.

Monday morning found 261 music lovers all across the United States woke up to discover that they had been sued by the music industry. The RIAA filed suit against them because they had illegally downloaded and shared thousands of copy-written files of songs put out by the major label recording companies that it represents.

This is a crushing blow that the RIAA has dealt, but I think in the end this will prove to be a war that was better left un-fought. In fact, it may be the very ideals of rock and roll - the reasons that rock has spoken such volumes to younger generations - that in light of this latest debacle, will be their eventual downfall.

Though the forms of rock and roll have changed through the years, one thing has always remained constant; the ideal of us versus them. There has always been a sense that rock and roll is the outlet for the frustrations of the oppressed. Whether it is African Americans in the early 20th century Mississippi Delta or middle-class teens in Seattle, there has always been some oppressor that has united music lovers under the banner of rock and roll.

The music our parents grew up on was fueled by a distrust of policies of the American government. The music that their parents grew up on questioned the cultural taboos that were placed on the youths of their age. Youth angst is always red hot and looking for an enemy - but in recent years that enemy has become hard to find; there is an 'us', but who is the 'them'?

The fast-paced lifestyle of the Information Age has made social change occur at broadband speeds. This head-spinning effect has left a muddled field of possible targets of angst. Do teens really care about declining perceptions of America in the Middle East, or that the economy is leaving many college graduates without jobs? I doubt it. Though these concerns may play a role in many young adults' lives, the speed at which these problems are propelled past them does not leave much time for sentiments to boil over.

All this may have changed Monday, as the RIAA has proclaimed itself a clear and present enemy to young adults all over the country. In one fell swoop the Recording Industry has proclaimed itself the 'them' that our generation has so badly desired.

I want to first point out that I am making a pretty broad generalization; to label all file sharers as young adults - but I think it's fair enough. Sure adults file share, but I find it hard to believe that they were responsible for its success. Napster spread through the country in less than one month, and it did so historically through college campuses.

In fact, Napster represented a need for revolution whether students realized it or not. In this case the revolution was against high CD prices and a 'hit single'-minded music industry. The music industry had beefed up

Online textbook buying offers alternatives

By Nikki Siegrist/Staff Reporter

High prices and long lines to buy books may seem normal for the average college student during the beginning of a semester, but there may be an alternative -- online book vendors might offer the same books at lower prices.

With the online trend moving upward, DeWayne Campbell, assistant manager of the Barnes & Noble bookstore at Texas Tech, said he believes problems may arise when students decide to purchase their texts online.

"Students I have talked with found online shopping, despite the savings, less convenient," Campbell said.

"Overall, I think students prefer to go on-campus and work with a person who might know the professor and has a feel for the campus than just the textbooks."

Textbook sales rake in the millions of dollars at bookstores in the Lubbock area, and sales continue to grow annually. The Barnes & Noble bookstore at Tech brings in, per semester, more than $3 million, according to their recorded sales. Double T bookstores bring in more than $2.5 million, said Double T textbook manager Brent Davis.

Some of the online sites that sell textbooks include BigWords.com and eCampus.com. Some sites such as amazon.com have sections dedicated to textbooks.

Grant Duffy, a sophomore business major from Midland, said he used online shopping, and it was not a pleasant experience.

"Last spring, 'save money' was the slogan," Duffy said. "I bought my math book online because they didn't have it here, but they sent the wrong one. They advertised the right book but sent the wrong one, and it was in black and white."

Duffy said even though he initially saved the money, he ended up spending about the same with shipping and received less money when he went to sell his books back.

"The way to go is to an established store and not to buy from individuals," he said.

Duffy said he bought his book from an individual seller on eBay.

Blaine Coffer is a sophomore business major from Wylie who also bought books online last semester. He said the book was cheaper online.

"I needed a brand new textbook, and it was online and cheaper," he said. "I got the right book, but I had trouble selling it back because you have to pay to ship it there. Arrived a couple weeks into class."

Coffee said the books were an average of $5 to $20 cheaper online. He said he used eCampus.com to buy his books.

"The extra you pay in town is basically for the convenience of buying it here, but in the same situation, I would do it again," he said.

Rivas said he hasn't seen any real affect from online buying in his store's sales. "Some people go online but it hasn't affected us," he said. "I think people like dealing with other people and customer service."

Rivas said he knows that people are moving toward Internet buying, but the hassle involved sometimes is not worth the trouble.

But online book buying has increased, according to the online bookstores.

Roger Weaver, vice president of sales and marketing for eCampus.com, said Texas had the second largest sales in the nation, and that sales were increased 40 percent since last year. And while sales are up, prices are down.

"We've seen anywhere from 10 percent to up to 40 percent," Weaver said. "We sell new and used books. In fact, over a third of our stock is used."

Sending students the wrong book is not likely since eCampus.com implements a triple check system before any book leaves the warehouse, Weaver said.

"That's not mistakes can't happen, but it's very unlikely," Weaver said. "More than likely, the mistake would be an ordering error."

eCampus.com is starting a new program to contract with schools and become the school's online bookstore, Weaver said.

"We encourage people to shop around and check it out," he said. "We're book people doing business on the Internet."

Students also can use a referral service such as BigWords.com to find the cheapest prices of books.

BigWords.com looks at all prices from all Web sites and gives the customer the best possible combination of prices with shipping, said CEO Jeff Sherwood.

"We referred over $4 million," Sherwood said. "That's over the $3.5 million of year before."

Texas is BigWords.com's largest user after Boston and California. What makes BigWords.com unique is that the customer decides which merchant to purchase from, and that's how they save money, Sherwood said.

"Saving students an average of $68 on two or more items with shipping," he said. "It's not uncommon for people to save $150. Last year we saved students over $2 million."

Sherwood said slow shipping and wrong books should not be a problem.

"Slow shipping is over if the student pays attention," he said. "As long as students have their ISBN number, which is unique identifier for the book, they won't get the wrong book."

Sherwood said the goal at BigWords.com is to help students save money.

"Our motto is, 'protecting the universe from high textbook prices,'" he said.

When he wrote the lines of code that united college students - and other teens - all over the country. To have that technology taken away by a bunch of suits because it affected their profits is outrageous. The industry could have harnessed the uniting power that p2p sites created - but instead they knee jerked away from it and in doing so they have created for themselves a problem worse than declining profits.

The final result of this action by the RIAA and the major labels that it represents is that they have turned a confused group of students and teenagers and focused their attention - and ultimately their angst - in one direction. It seems that in the end that same teen-angst that fueled the record industry through the past decade may now prove to be its downfall.

their profits by focusing all of their attention on the 'hit single' instead of the 'album,' and students responded by only downloading that one song, instead of buying the whole album. What the industry had working in its favor was the fact that students probably didn't realize that they were revolting against industry practices -- they just wanted the music. At that point it wasn't really a fight between good and evil.

Initially the RIAA fought file sharing in the best way that they could; they embraced pay sites like Apple's iTunes, while simultaneously fighting p2p sites like Napster and Morpheus. There was some anti-RIAA sentiment, but nothing that would constitute a full-scale upheaval. Over time this technique would have worked fine to slowly get users to start paying for their online music, but that wasn't enough for the industry. Frustrated by continuous profit losses the RIAA decided to strike out against those who share music.

On Monday, message boards on Web sites such as www.boycott-riaa.com were flooded with angry music fans fed up with the RIAA. As a further slap to the face of music listeners the RIAA has offered what it calls an "olive-branch" to the public in the form of an amnesty agreement which asks that file sharers admit their wrongdoings and promise to stop, and in return the RIAA will not pursue them in future suits. Admit that they are wrong? Are you kidding me?

Like Santa Anna massacrating Texans at the Alamo, the RIAA has scored a heavy blow, but has rallied the opposition. In a twist of fate, the music industry has just placed itself at the center of teen angst.

What is even more infuriating is that the RIAA is reacting to a decline in profits - not a loss of money. In other words, the music industry is still bringing in more money than it spends, it is just no longer the cash cow that it was in the past.

The best way to piss off students in the Information Age is to take away the only technology they can really call their own. Shawn Fanning (Napster's creator) was a freshman

Young downloader sued by RIAA

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 12-year-old girl in New York who was among the first to be sued by the record industry for sharing music over the Internet is off the hook after her mother agreed Tuesday to pay $2,000 to settle the lawsuit, apologizing and admitting that her daughter's actions violated U.S. copyright laws.

The hurried settlement involving Brianna LaHara, an honors student, was the first announced one day after the Recording Industry Association of America filed 261 such lawsuits across the country. Lawyers for the RIAA said Brianna's mother, Sylvia Torres, contacted them early Tuesday to negotiate.

"We understand now that file-sharing the music was illegal," Torres said in a statement distributed by the recording industry. "You can be sure Brianna won't be doing it anymore."

Brianna added: "I am sorry for what I have done. I love music and don't want to hurt the artists I love." The case against Brianna was a potential minefield for the music industry from a public relations standpoint. The family lives in a city housing project on New York's Upper West Side, and they said they mistakenly believed they were entitled to download music over the Internet because they had paid $29.99 for software that gives them access to online file-sharing services.

Soccer seniors stick together

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

Stepping out on the soccer field at 9 years old, they never knew that one day they would be playing together for the Red Raiders.

Growing up in the vicinity of the Dallas/Fort Worth Metroplex, the three seniors on the Texas Tech soccer team always had the chance to face one another.

Kerri Campbell, a midfielder from Duncanville, said she has played with and against the other two seniors prior to coming to Tech.

"For the longest time, I was on a club team with Katie (Arsenault), and we used to play Tiana's (Boyea) team," she said. "Now we are here at Tech playing on the same team with one another."

In the past three seasons, Tech has come out unsuccessful against their preseason and Big 12 opponents and all of the seniors have lived through these rough eras.

With three losses under their belt, Campbell said this season is beginning the way it has in the past.

"It's disappointing," she said. "The past few seasons haven't been any better by any means, and I hope that we can end on a better note this year."

Boyea, defender from Plano, said, at her last year at Tech, the team shows more potential than in the past and knows the will to win is higher.

"The team is a lot closer and I think that we want it more than in the last seasons," she said. "I am optimistic about this season."

During the course of three games in the past two weeks, Arsenault, a defender from Keller, said she has seen improvement.

"We lost against Oral Roberts 3-0 and then SMU 2-0," she said. "But each game, we step it up and against TCU, we went into overtime but lost 1-0."

Coach Felix Oskam said he has noticed a difference in all three players during the course of the years.

"This year, we have had the most leadership we have had in a long time," he said. "Most of them are natural, vocal leaders and others lead by example."

A quiet Boyea, Oskam said, is one that is a role model from her performance on the field.

"She is the most consistent player we have seen so far," he said. "She is a more laid back kind of person and that's her personality."

After switching her position several times, Oskam said Boyea is a natural at the defender spot.

"She is having her best year so far," he said. "We didn't start her at defender, where she is now, when she came to Tech but playing at midfield and forward, she did a great job."

Boyea said she remembered taking her recruiting trip as a senior in high school to Tech.

"I came to Tech with Kerri (Campbell) when we were about to be freshmen," she said. "And now, we are the only ones left from the original group."

Oskam said Campbell has grown over the years to a full-breed leader of the team.

"Campbell is a great kid, and she knows to accept her responsibility," he said. "Her level is the best since being at Tech and she is a tremendous leader."

After playing at Syracuse for a year as a freshman, Arsenault returned back to her home state to join Tech's squad. Since then, Oskam said she is a dangerous threat on goal.

TEXAS TECH COACH Felix Oskam watches as senior defender Katie Arsenault moves upfield in a scrimmage during practice last week. Arsenault is one of three Tech seniors on the team. Tech is 0-3 this season after losing games to Oral Roberts, TCU and SMU, to extend its losing streak to 20 games in a row. Tech will get its next chance to break the streak against the North Texas Eagles on Sunday at 1 p.m. in Denton.

"At forward, Arsenault is a fighter and hustler," he said. "She has taken the role upon herself to lead the team and she tries to make good decisions."

This season marks the end of their soccer careers at Tech, but Oskam doesn't fear for less leadership once they are gone.

"With only two juniors, I can't force them to be leaders but I know that some of the younger players can fill these roles and I won't limit it to only seniors," he said.

Clarett charged for falsification

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Maurice Clarett was charged Tuesday with lying about items stolen from his car, and Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said the school is ready to cut ties with the star running back.

Clarett was charged with misdemeanor falsification, city attorney spokesman Scott Varner said. If convicted, Clarett would face up to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine. But probation is likely the harshest sentence a judge would impose, city prosecutor Stephen McIntosh said.

Tressel said he does not expect Clarett to return this season to the defending national champion Buckeyes. He would recommend that Clarett be released from his scholarship if the request was made by Clarett, the coach said.

Clarett has already been suspended indefinitely from the team, and probably will not play for the Buckeyes this season. He is also being investigated by the NCAA.

Tressel was asked if it was time for Clarett to move on.

"I think that he needs to make, along with his family, whatever decision he thinks is best for him," Tressel said.

If Clarett's career at Ohio State is over, the running back's last carry would rank among the most memorable in school history.

Aycock remains constant for Raider defense

JAIME TOMÁS AGUILAR/Staff Photographer

TEXAS TECH SAFETY Ryan Aycock runs downfield after an interception in the first half of the Raiders win against New Mexico Lobos on Saturday. The safety had two interceptions against the Lobos bringing his season total to three. Aycock and the Raiders are off this week and play again Sept. 20 against North Carolina State in Raleigh, N.C.

By David Wiechmann/
Staff Reporter

Those who don't take Texas Tech strong safety Ryan Aycock seriously, learn to do so.

That's because the senior safety said it's all business when he puts on the red and black.

"All I'm doing is playing my position and doing my job," he said. "I'm just trying to get the defense off the field and put the offense on the field."

Aycock has three interceptions in two games to lead the nation in interceptions per game. The safety also recovered a fumble in Saturday's 42-28 win against New Mexico.

Although he has made a habit this season to get the ball back to the Raider offense, he said he does not look to do it.

"If a play comes to me, then I'm going to make it," he said. "That's how I look at things. I don't think about getting interceptions. I don't think about causing fumbles or making tackles. All I do is I prepare for the game. I get ready to play, and I get out there and play."

Aycock's teammate and long-time friend Mike Smith said Aycock's fire and knowledge on the field set him apart from the rest and enable him to make the plays he does.

"He's a smart player and real aggressive. That's why he makes a lot of plays," he said. "Some people may think all he does is make big hits, but he's quick on his feet; he's real smart, and he knows what the offense is running. He does lots of film study. He knows where the ball is at, and he just knows football."

Smith said Aycock's strong play also makes him an asset on defense and dates back to their days in high school as Lubbock Coronado Mustangs.

"He's just physical," he said. "He has that real tough attitude. It's that Coronado attitude. He just likes to play; ever since we were little, he's always been trying to hit someone."

"He's never changed; he's always been the same person. He never shows you something different, and he's always working hard and doing the best he can."

That hard work has made Aycock a leadership figure on the team as a captain, and Smith said the other players recognize it.

"He's a big leader," he said. "He's been playing the longest on our defense. He's the oldest one on defense; he knows what's going on so he kind of has to take the role of knowing what to do."

Aycock has known the way of the defense, and Smith said he has seen it for as long as he can remember so it's nothing out of the ordinary.

"Ever since high school I've seen the big plays he makes, so I'm kind of used to it," he said. "I expect him to do stuff like that because he's always done it. It's nothing new to me."

Aycock, who is a Jim Thorpe

Award candidate this season, said the way he gets things done on the field is simply a part of his attitude.

An attitude Aycock says is conducive to playing good football.

"I'm one of the most intense people I've ever known, and that's just my personality," he said. "When I step out on the field, I'm out there to make plays. It's business. I've been that way since I was little. When I'm on the field, it's time to take things seriously."

His work ethic can be credited to his success as well.

Aycock is not the biggest player on the field, but he said his hard work and determination have made him a better player.

Big 12 quarterbacks plagued by injuries

(U-WIRE) LINCOLN, Neb. — It happened faster than Brad Smith turns the corner on the option.

After running out of bounds to complete a 16-yard scramble in the second quarter of Missouri's 35-7 win over Ball State, the Tiger quarterback was belted by a Ball State defender.

The hit left the All-American candidate with a concussion and no memory of the first half of the game.

Missouri coach Gary Pinkel went back to Columbia, Mo., wondering how to more effectively teach his star quarterback discretion while running with the ball.

"Obviously, I didn't do a very good job of reigning him in," Pinkel said Monday.

Pinkel said teaching Smith, who is considered one of the best run-pass threats in the country, to only use his legs sparingly presents a hefty challenge.

Running with discretion, Pinkel feels, goes against an instinct that quarterbacks like Smith have.

The impulse to run aggressively is a big part of what makes Smith and other speedy quarterbacks so dangerous, Pinkel said.

"He has a chance to change a game," Pinkel said. "Not only with throwing the football, but also with his feet."

The compulsion to run is an asset, Pinkel said, but so is the wisdom to know when to hold back and throw the ball away or to slide before taking a big hit.

Pinkel felt in Missouri's previous game against Illinois, Smith did a good job of avoiding unnecessary contact. But against Ball State, he said Smith ran with less regard for his body.

"You have to pick your moments," Pinkel said.

Kansas State coach Bill Snyder can empathize with Pinkel.

In the second quarter of K-State's 55-14 win over McNeese State, Snyder lost his own speedy signal caller when Ell Roberson went down with an injured left hand.

And although Roberson's injury came while he was trying to throw the ball, it put the Wildcats in the same situation as Missouri when Smith went down.

"We don't have a quarterback who can do what Ell can do," Nebraska coach Frank Solich knows as much about mobile quarterbacks as anyone in the Big 12. He said while he understands the danger of having a quarterback run with the ball a lot, he doesn't see a running quarterback as more prone to injury than a quarterback who throws a lot from the pocket.

"I don't think running quarterbacks take any more hits than passing quarterbacks do," Solich said.

In his five seasons as NU coach, Solich has seen relatively few serious injuries to his signal callers, despite running an offense that relies heavily upon the quarterback running with the ball.

On the contrary, Solich said he thought quarterbacks who threw from the pocket were more at risk from blindside hits while they are standing still.

"Those are as dangerous of hits as you are going to have," Solich said.

Longhorns rekindle old rivalry with Razorbacks

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN — The Texas-Arkansas rivalry will start with the two men who defined the rivalry — former Texas head coach Darrell Royal and Arkansas athletic director and former head coach Frank Broyles. The two combined for 311 victories in their careers and will participate in the opening coin flip.

Broyles is much more revered in Austin, Texas, than current Arkansas coach Houston Nutt, who is still remembered for doing the Horns down sign near the end of the fourth quarter of the 2000 Cotton Bowl, when Arkansas defeated Texas 27-6.

As they get their equipment for practice this week, Texas players will be looking at an 8-by-11-inch motivational tool, a picture of Nutt doing the sign.

"I see that all the time, and it didn't surprise me to see it, but I've never seen a coach do it, so that surprised me," Texas head coach Mack Brown said.

Nutt, who played quarterback for Arkansas in 1976-77, defended doing the sign by citing the history and tradition of the Razorbacks.

"One thing that I think the fans have to realize [is] that we being from Arkansas, it was such a joyous time and emotional time," Nutt said. "People know I would never do the dehorn sign to a UT player, coach or fan. The bottom line was that it was at the very end of a ballgame, I just won probably one of the biggest games of my life. Since the age of three, when I could remember going to a Razorback game, every fan around me at a Texas game always did the Hook' Em Horns sign downward."

"At the end of the game, you look in the stands, and there were 45,000 fans left doing the sign down, and all I did was answer them back in a joyous time, not a demeaning time to coach Brown and his players."

Even though Arkansas won the Cotton Bowl, Texas would gain a victory a month after the game.

Soccer team disappointed after close calls

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech soccer team played a game of cards they could not win. With several players still under 100 percent in health, they had a hard time beating the royal flush of SMU and the full house laid by TCU.

Coch Felix Oskam said this past weekend's performance was an improvement over the first game, but the team has a long way to go.

"We created more scoring opportunities, which was our goal, but we still have to finish the job," he said.

Each game, Oskam said, the team continues to show progress in decision making.

"I am happy with our development in attacking," he said. "By changing our format from two to three forwards at the TCU game, we gave ourselves a better chance, and I am pleased with the performance."

Kerri Campbell, a senior midfielder from Duncanville, said she took the losses personally.

"There were several bad calls by the referees in both of the games against TCU and SMU," she said. "I know that the crowds would agree, but they were tough opponents that came out on top."

Senior forward Catie Renaault of Keller said their performance spoke for itself.

"The score doesn't reflect how we played," she said. "Each week, we step it up another notch and play together."

With a low number of players, Oskam said the fatigue factor set in during the overtime half at TCU.

"They had better energy than we did," he said. "It was a hard-fought game, but I think TCU wanted it a little more than we did."

Tech has several games remaining to follow the two losses from Friday and Sunday, and Campbell said the team must look toward those future games.

"We just can't lose anymore because our confidence level will drop tremendously," she said. "Our friends and friends came to watch us and we want to give them a win even if we are on the road."

Oskam said the team can learn from the loss, but had a great chance to gain a victory.

"We played well enough to win both of the games," he said. "SMU was just a tough opponent and TCU came out on top because they wanted the win more than we did."

The soccer team continues their road games 1 p.m. Sunday against the North Texas Eagles.

Long yardage plays becoming trademark of Sooners offense

(U-WIRE) NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma quarterback Jason White showed at Quarterback why he's one of the Sooners' offense and why he's a playmaker. After the Sooners' first two games of the 2003 season, OU coach Bob Stoops is seeing something he has always said he wanted.

"We strive to make big plays on this team," Stoops said. "We need our guys to go out there and be playmakers in every game."

A fake punt in the third quarter of OU's 20-13 win over the Oklahoma State Sooners on their way to being the playmakers that Stoops has in mind.

"That Oklahoma team sound like people who they are ranked No. 1 tonight," Alabama coach Mike Shula said. "They had some big plays, like that fake punt, to put a lid on their lead."

The play, a 22-yard pass from punter Blake Ferguson to defensive back Michael Thompson to convert a fourth-and-11 situation, gave the Sooners the confidence that they were lacking at that point in the game.

SOCCER NOTEBOOK

The Tech soccer team's losing streak stands at 20 games. The Raiders have 14 more opportunities this season to break the streak. The team's last victory came against Syracuse Sept. 9 2002. The victory was the Raider's second of the 2002 season after finishing against Colgate University. Tech's next opportunity to break the streak is 1 p.m. Sunday in Denton against the North Texas University Eagles.

2ND Annual Caprock Adventure Race

The Outdoor Pursuits Center and Mountain Hideaway are teaming up to put together Lubbock's first adventure race. Here is your chance to leave the safe confines of your couch and experience the thrill of adventure racing. The race consists of two member teams. Each member will climb two routes on September 20 and then canoe 2-miles, bike 7-miles, and run 2.5-miles on September 21. Teams member can choose to do all activities together or split the bike and run between members. Registration deadline is on September 17. The entry fee for Tech students is $30 per team. Please checkout the Rec Sports web site at www.recports.ttu.edu for an entry form and more information.

Heartbeats

A quick pulse around the Rec Sports world...

Ultimate Frisbee

FRISBEE PLAYERS

WANTED!!! If you have ever picked up a Frisbee then we want you to take part in this event. The Intramural/Special Event Department of the Student Rec Center has the return of Ultimate Frisbee. The spring league was a success with 15 teams. There will be 2 available leagues - competitive and recreational. Recreational leagues are for beginners and 1st time players. Ultimate Frisbee is similar playing football, but at a basketball pace. The rules of the games are simple. First team to reach 9 points is the winner, teams consist of a 5 male / 2 female format, and it is self-officiated like all Ultimate Tournaments. To sign up, come to the Student Rec Center room 202. You can sign up NOW until Thursday, September 25th at NOON, play begins on Friday, September 26th. If you do not have a team we can find you one. For more information contact George Juarez at 742-3351. Hope to see you there.

Weight Watchers
