Gonzales found guilty for murder of Schafer

By Sally Gunter/Staff Reporter

A jury in the 137th District Court found Joe Gonzales, 20, guilty of capital murder Thursday. Joe Gonzales was on trial for the murder/robbery of Texas Tech student Colin Schafer on Aug. 14, 2002.

Judge Cecil Puryear sentenced Joe Gonzales to life imprisonment. He will be eligible for parole after he serves 40 of his 60-year sentence.

The jury deliberated for four hours before issuing a verdict at 2:30 p.m. Thursday. Joe Gonzales remained calm while the verdict was being read.

Colin Schafer Joe Gonzales
However, his wife, Jessica Gonzales, left the courtroom in hysteria.

The parents of Colin Schafer, Scott and Susan Schafer, were permitted to say a few words to Joe Gonzales after the verdict was read.

"You're a father too, and you know that you have taken away the opportunity for me to raise my son," said Schafer. "You did that, and you helped do that."

Scott Schafer told Joe Gonzales there is a heaven and that he has the opportunity to go there someday and join Colin, if he puts his faith in Christ.

Scott Schafer later commented that if he had been given the opportunity to speak to Joe Gonzales' cousin, Gabriel Gonzales, he would have offered him the same advice that he gave to Joe Gonzales.

Joe Gonzales cried during Scott Schafer's remarks in the courtroom and then thanked him.

Susan Schafer then spoke to Joe Gonzales about the pain she had endured.

She said Colin was her baby, and because of his murder, she feels like someone stapled a rubber band to Aug. 14. She said she has moved on, but there is tension, which builds up until it slaps back to that day.

"You're not the only one in prison," she said. "I have been in a prison that is made out of loss of being without Colin."

Acting District Attorney Matt Powell said he believes that the randomness of this crime is what is scary.

"This could have been half-a-dozen people driving on Slide. It could have been a handful of other people," Powell said.

Joe Gonzales has the right to an appeal because he entered a plea of not guilty. He has 30 days to do so. Council for the defense was unavailable to comment after the trial.

According to the statement from Joe Gonzales, Gabriel Gonzales followed Colin Schafer to his house, at which time Gabriel Gonzales pulled a 9 mm gun on Colin Schafer. He forced Colin Schafer to drive his Jeep to the Bank of America ATM at 50th Street and Slide Road. Joe Gonzales trailed in the Cadillac, the statement said.

After Colin Schafer withdrew $300, Gabriel Gonzales walked around to the driver's side of the Jeep and shot him twice in the upper chest. Gabriel Gonzales and Joe Gonzales then left the scene, Joe Gonzales' statement said.

According to a police report, the

Memorial honors the 9/11 first responders

By Adam Boedeker/Staff Reporter

The sun shone through broken storm clouds Thursday morning as area citizens paid tribute to first responders at a memorial service at Kastman Park, where 3,412 American flags flew to honor each person killed on Sept. 11, 2001.

The morning began with a the Hallelujah Quartet singing a medley of patriotic songs, including "This Land Is Your Land." Then the many people in attendance recited the Pledge of Allegiance and sang the "Star-Spangled Banner."

The first speaker was W.R. Collier, president of American State Bank, which sponsored the event. He said he took great pride in being able to put on the event and wanted to especially thank the 2,500 volunteers who helped put the service together, including the placement of thousands of flags.

"We're all here because we wanted to be here," Collier said. "No one asked us to come; no one is checking attendance; no volunteer names will be read or printed; no one will receive a thank-you gift - except the gift of satisfaction that you did what you could to honor the fallen and show your love for your country."

Collier said he believed the reason so many people showed up was because of the feeling of unity people receive in grieving times.

"Any of us could've stayed away," Collier said. "But there's nothing more compelling than standing up and saying 'I pledge allegiance,' standing up and singing 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'"

Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst, who also is on the state board for homeland security, compared the staying power of the events of Sept. 11 to the day in November 1963 when President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Habitat for Humanity to build seven homes

Local companies sponsor building of $40,000 houses built from ground up

By Megan LaVoie/Staff Reporter

With the anniversary of Sept. 11 and the patriotism and unity it brought fresh in the country's minds and hearts, this Saturday is an opportunity for Red Raiders and the citizens of Lubbock to give back to their community.

This opportunity is one well-known—the Lubbock Habitat for Humanity, which is having its first Build Blitz Saturday at the 500 block of North Avenue U.

Lubbock Habitat for Humanity has been building houses for the less fortunate citizens of Lubbock for the past 16 years. In those years, Habitat has built 80 homes; this year they plan to build a playground in the subdivision of North Lubbock, the area where the homes are built.

Lane Arnold, the Civic Involvement Coordinator for the Lubbock Habitat for Humanity, said Habitat would be building seven houses this year.

"We are building seven houses from ground up and hopefully will be able to finish two of those houses within a week and the rest of the houses by the middle of October," Arnold said.

Arnold said the production of each house cost $40 per square foot and the total cost averages $40,000 per house.

"Local companies sponsor the building of each house to help with the cost. United Methodist Church and Wells Fargo will be sponsoring one of the houses that is being built this year," Arnold said.

Lubbock Habitat for Humanity chooses families to build homes for based upon a system called the "Three Criterion," Arnold said.

"The criteria is based upon need, ability to pay a mortgage and the willingness to take part in the building of their home," he said.

After the home is built the owners have to be able to afford a mortgage and the upkeep of the house, Arnold said.

Arnold said he takes great pride in the rewards he receives from his job.

"It is so satisfying to see the how positive contributions can influence and touch people," he said. "The results are phenomenal because people are not just giving their money, they are putting their time into something and they get to see the end result."

Celia Hernandez, a speech pathology major from Fort Worth, worked for the Lubbock Habitat for Humanity this summer, earning community service hours.

"There are so many things that go on behind the scenes. It made me very

English department deletes CLEP testing

By Brent Young/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech department of English will no longer allow students to obtain credit for English 1301 and 1302 through CLEP tests, Sam Dragga, professor and chairman of the department, said. Which means students now have to take the class, by attending it.

There are, however, a few loopholes. Students may obtain credit for the classes through standardized test scores or completion of the courses through a different institution, he said. An SAT score of 710 on the verbal section will exempt students from both introductory composition classes. On the SAT II, a score of 680 will be required. A composite score of 28 on the ACT will be accepted, as credit for both courses, and an Advanced Placement test score of four also will be sufficient.

According to information from the department, the Freshman College Composition examination measures the skills required in most first-year English courses. The exam has approximately 90 questions to be answered in 90 minutes. An optional essay section also is available.

Dragga said the reason the department is no longer accepting this test for English 1301 and 1302 credit is that a 90-minute, 90-question test is not sufficient to determine a student's ability to write.

"That is like claiming you can drive because you know the parts of a car," he said.

Tech does not continue to accept the test for credit and simply add the optional essay section, Dragga said, because the department does not have the extra professor to grade the essays. If someone outside the university were to grade them the scores would be

Ex-Enron treasurer Glisan pleads guilty

HOUSTON (AP) — The first former Enron executive to go to prison was led away in handcuffs and ankle chains after admitting he conspired to cook the books in the scandal that ran the company into bankruptcy and rocked Wall Street.

Former Enron treasurer Ben Glisan Jr. made no deal to implicate higher-ups such as former chairman Kenneth Lay but prosecutors said his five-year sentence — the maximum under the law — should send a “somewhat chilling message.”

Glisan, 37, admitted helping design financial deals that enriched him and illegally kept investment losses off Enron's books.

“I think I would simply like to say I take full responsibility for my actions,” Glisan softly told U.S. District Judge Kenneth Hoyt.

He agreed to forfeit nearly $1 million in profits from a $5,800 investment in an off-the-books deal at Enron and agreed to not seek a refund of $412,000 in income taxes he paid on that profit.

Rebuilt trade center to form in 10 years

NEW YORK (AP) — After two tumultuous years, World Trade Center developer Larry Silverstein is looking ahead.

“Within a 10-year time frame, I fully expect to see the site fully developed,” Silverstein said in an interview at his Fifth Avenue office where a conference room wall was covered with designs for rebuilding the lower Manhattan site.

“The entire development is going to be unlike anything that one could have envisioned prior to 9-11,” the 72-year-old private developer said. Silverstein said he expected rebuilding to proceed without problems — despite an ongoing fight with insurance companies and the concerns of the victims' families.

The cornerstone for the 1,776-foot Freedom Tower should be laid next summer, he said, with its steel structure in place by Sept. 11, 2006.

The tower, centerpiece of the redevelopment, will be the first building to be constructed at ground zero. Plans call for a collection of jagged modern buildings with office and retail space, cultural centers, a memorial and transit hub.

Pope begins four-day trip to Slovakia

BRATISLAVA, Slovakia (AP) — Pope John Paul II put his age and infirmities to the test Thursday, embarking on a four-day visit to Slovakia under heavy security on the second anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Five thousand police officers and 500 special guards were deployed nationwide to secure the frail 83-year-old pope and his entourage during the trip, his third visit to the ex-communist country and the 102nd foreign pilgrimage of his papacy.

Slovakia's president, prime minister and cheering well-wishers waving small Vatican flags greeted the pope as his plane touched down at Bratislava's airport. Among the crowd were gay and lesbian activists protesting what they contend is a growing intrusion of the church in public and private life.

John Paul, who suffers from Parkinson's disease and crippling hip and knee ailments, has appeared short of breath and his voice has been weak during recent public appearances. He has remained seated in a throne-like chair wheeled by aides.

On the eve of his visit, he asked for prayers that it would be a success and help usher in “a renewed springtime of faith and progress” for Slovaks.

Hinting that the country's turbulent past would be a theme, the pope hailed it as “a land enriched by the witness of heroic disciples of Christ who have left eloquent prints of holiness in the history of the nation.”

On Sept. 11 anniversary, ground zero turns to children

NEW YORK (AP) — Two years after the prodigious horror and grief of Sept. 11, the small voices of children are at the center of its remembrance, charged with reading the names of loved ones killed in the attack and joining in song at ground zero.

Across the nation, the tolling of bells, the laying of wreaths and, in many places, moments with no words at all were planned for the second anniversary of the terrorist assault that killed more than 3,000 people.

In lower Manhattan, at the site where the World Trade Center once stood, 200 children whose relatives were among the 2,792 who died there were assigned the solemn, careful task of reading the names of the victims in a morning ceremony.

“I know I'm very proud of my children,” said Lynn Morris, whose husband, Seth Allan Morris, died Sept. 11, 2001, and whose two children, 11-year-old Madilynn and 9-year-old Kyle, were to read names.

Debate team loses funding from school

By Jennifer Prieto/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech speech and debate team lost its annual funds from the university because of the state budget deficit.

Joe Gantt, speech and debate team graduate assistant coach, said many organizations at Tech have lost their funding.

"All through the teams' fund have been cut," Gantt said. "This is not necessarily upsetting us, but we are just going to have to work harder to get the money we need."

He said the university has been helpful through the years, and he understands the reason the cut happened.

Gantt said the speech and debate team is going to have two types of fund-raising projects. The team will be asking for donations of 50 cents to $3 for their first fund-raiser, and they need about 5,000 donors to meet their monetary goal.

"Some students will be asking for donations around school," Gantt said. "But they are mostly going to ask their families and friends."

Students also will do a fund-raiser called Adopt-a-Debater. The team will ask law firms, corporations and individuals to sponsor a student.

The team's goal is to have about $30,000 to make sure they can cover all their expenses, which is the amount of money the team had when they got the university funding.

"We need that money for us to have a comfortable year," Gantt said. "We need to make sure students have everything paid."

He said the Student Government Association gives them a sizeable amount of money, and its contribution gives them a good starting point for the year.

"I don't really know how much money the SGA gives us," Gantt said. "But I know we still have to do a lot of fundraising."

Gantt said each tournament is costly. The team has to pay for entry fees, food and hotels.

"We are trying to go to as many competitions as we can," Gantt said. "The more competitions we go to, the better we will do at nationals."

He said Tech's speech and debate team has been around since the 1930s. It has been the only speech and debate organization to last this long.

The debate squad placed in the top 20 in both the National Individual Events Tournament and the National Parliamentary Debate Association Tournament. Two students won the Individual National Championship for the past two years.

"Debate is one of the most educational activities in campus," Gantt said. "This is something students can use when they get out of school."

He said speech and debate team members learn about current events, historical facts, philosophy and critical thinking. The team speaks about many subjects that are taught in the different academic departments at Tech.

Gianpaolo Macerola, vice president of the debate team, said debate has prepared him for the future.

"I have learned how to speak better," Macerola said. "I know a lot more about a variety of subjects that I didn't know about before."

He said one of his main goals this year is to give Tech its third national title. Macerola said he is proud of the debate's coaching team.

"They are the only way we can get a national title," Macerola said. "They support us and teach us everything we need to know to compete."

He said the funds cut have not made a big impact on the team.

"Last year it was more of a care-free environment," Macerola said. "This year we have to make sure we do our fund-raising, and make sure that we keep getting better at what we do."

He said this year it is going to be a double burden because the focus is not just on doing well at nationals; the team also has to worry about school and fundraising.

Macerola said he emphasizes the importance of academics to his team members.

"The activity is not going to get you the job," He said. "It will only be an experience."

He said if the team wants to compete, fundraising is going to be a main priority.

Peter Martinez, a sophomore general business major from Houston, said he hates hearing that organizations' funding are being cut because of decreased state funds.

"Our tuition is going up, we get charged for everything and our organizations' funds get cut," Martinez said. "What else is going to happen? I think it is a good idea the debate team is having fund-raisers, and they are not quitting their national tradition."

New form of birth control may make contraceptives easier

By Beth Aaron/Staff Reporter

The FDA recently approved a new form of birth control called Seasonale.

The pill still contains the same active ingredients found in other oral contraceptives, but is taken for 12 weeks at a time instead of three, said Dr. Kelly Bennett, chief of staff at Thompson Hall.

Essentially, this means women taking Seasonale would have only four periods a year.

Bennett said doctors have been aware of the ability to use the pill to help women bypass the inconvenience of severe menstrual symptoms such as migraine headaches and cramping.

"Playing with pills' 'off label' (without approval) has been going on for years," she said.

Bennett said when the pill was introduced in the 1960s, manufacturers had to come up with a way to mimic the body's natural cycle so women would not be leery of the product—hence the three weeks of active pills and one week of placebo pills.

"There is nothing special about having a period every month," she said. "Seasonale will keep people from wasting so many inactive pills every month."

Bennett said before the FDA's approval, it was difficult for doctors to prescribe two consecutive pill packs because insurance companies would not give two pill packs together.

"There is nothing new about this pill," she said. "Coming out this way will just make it easier for people to take two pill packs together."

Birth control ranges in price from $12.50 to $35 a pack at Thompson Hall. Because Thompson Hall is a university medical facility, prescription companies tend to cut special deals, Bennett said.

She expects the Seasonale pill to be available at Thompson Hall within the next two to three months. The price of the prescription is still unknown.

Bennett said Thompson Hall provides birth control for thousands of women at Tech.

Amy Kennedy, a pre-nursing major from Clyde, said the pill has a low rate of failure and not having to deal with a period every month would be nice.

But she does not like the idea of having to wait 12 weeks for the normal cycle to determine if she is pregnant.

"I wouldn't like it because I wouldn't want to have to wait 12 weeks to find out whether I was pregnant or not," she said. "It's a little scary."

Kristen Truby, an art major from San Antonio, said the idea did not bother her, and not having to deal with the normal menstrual experience appealed to her.

"I like the idea because then you wouldn't have to worry about the hassle of having a period every month," she said.

An alternative to the birth control pill is the Ortho-Evra birth control patch, which looks similar to a nicotine patch.

Bennett said the patch is available at Thompson Hall.

Other alternatives to oral contraceptives include Lunelle, a birth control injection, and the Nuvaring, a ring containing estrogen and progesterin.

These are the same chemicals found in traditional birth control pills released throughout the body over 21 days.

"The ring is great for people who can't remember to do anything—take a pill, change a patch," she said. "It just stays put, no matter what."

Bennett said the birth control shot has temporarily been taken off of the market because of manufacturing problems.

"The shot really didn't go over very well anyway," she said. "No one likes getting shots, let alone coming in every month for one."

Bennett said it is important for anyone taking any kind of chemical contraceptive to be aware that tobacco use can increase the chance of heart disease and stroke.

In college-aged women, these instances are not common, but nor are they impossible.

America more lucky than smart

Today, there still is a gaping wound in the sky over New York. The attack galvanized our nation and changed the way we think about ourselves.

The victims have been commemorated with cards, plaques, concerts and an endless stream of bad country songs.

The attack caused a dramatic shift in foreign policy, spurring American intervention in Afghanistan and Iraq.

We took down the Taliban in hopes of finding Osama bin Laden, and 70 percent of Americans still think Saddam Hussein was connected with the attack.

We've fought two military conflicts over this, and we have achieved some measure of success. The Taliban is gone. Saddam has been deposed. Al Qaeda has been crippled, and our national monuments remain unmolested.

We have faced terrorist attacks this year, but most of them have been launched at targets outside the U.S., and the most effective of them was carried out by an American Muslim, sniping from the shadows in Washington and Virginia.

Thousands of people have been killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, and thousands of prisoners are still being held in Guantanamo Bay.

On the eve of the attack, America garnered sympathy from all over the globe.

Two years later, we are hated as we have never been hated before.

We have defied the U.N. and earned the contempt of Europe, in our frantic pursuit of vengeance and security.

After the attack, America enjoyed a groundswell of patriotism.

Two years later, our intellectuals are calling us fascists, and our celebrities are ashamed to be from America.

Meanwhile, in 9 to 5 America, there are clocks to be punched and diapers to be changed, and the War On Terror is just another drama on the evening news.

Saddam is hiding in a palace somewhere, and bin Laden is huddled in a cave, nursing what's left of his kidneys.

Billions of dollars and thousands of lives and what have we accomplished?

Do you feel safer than you felt two years ago? Do you feel safe knowing the government is guarding your airports?

Do you feel safer now, knowing that our sons and daughters are being killed in Iraq?

Do you feel safer now, knowing America stands alone?

I don't feel safe. I feel surprised.

Surprised that the terrorists haven't hit us again. Surprised that the Washington monument, the Statue of Liberty and the Golden Gate Bridge are still standing.

The 9/11 attacks were a huge wakeup call for me. It made me feel exposed and vulnerable.

It highlighted the openness of our society and the incompetence of our government.

Every day, I turn on the news expecting to hear about a bomb or a nuke or a chemical attack on Washington, D.C.

We have escaped major catastrophe, but I'm afraid we've been more lucky than smart.

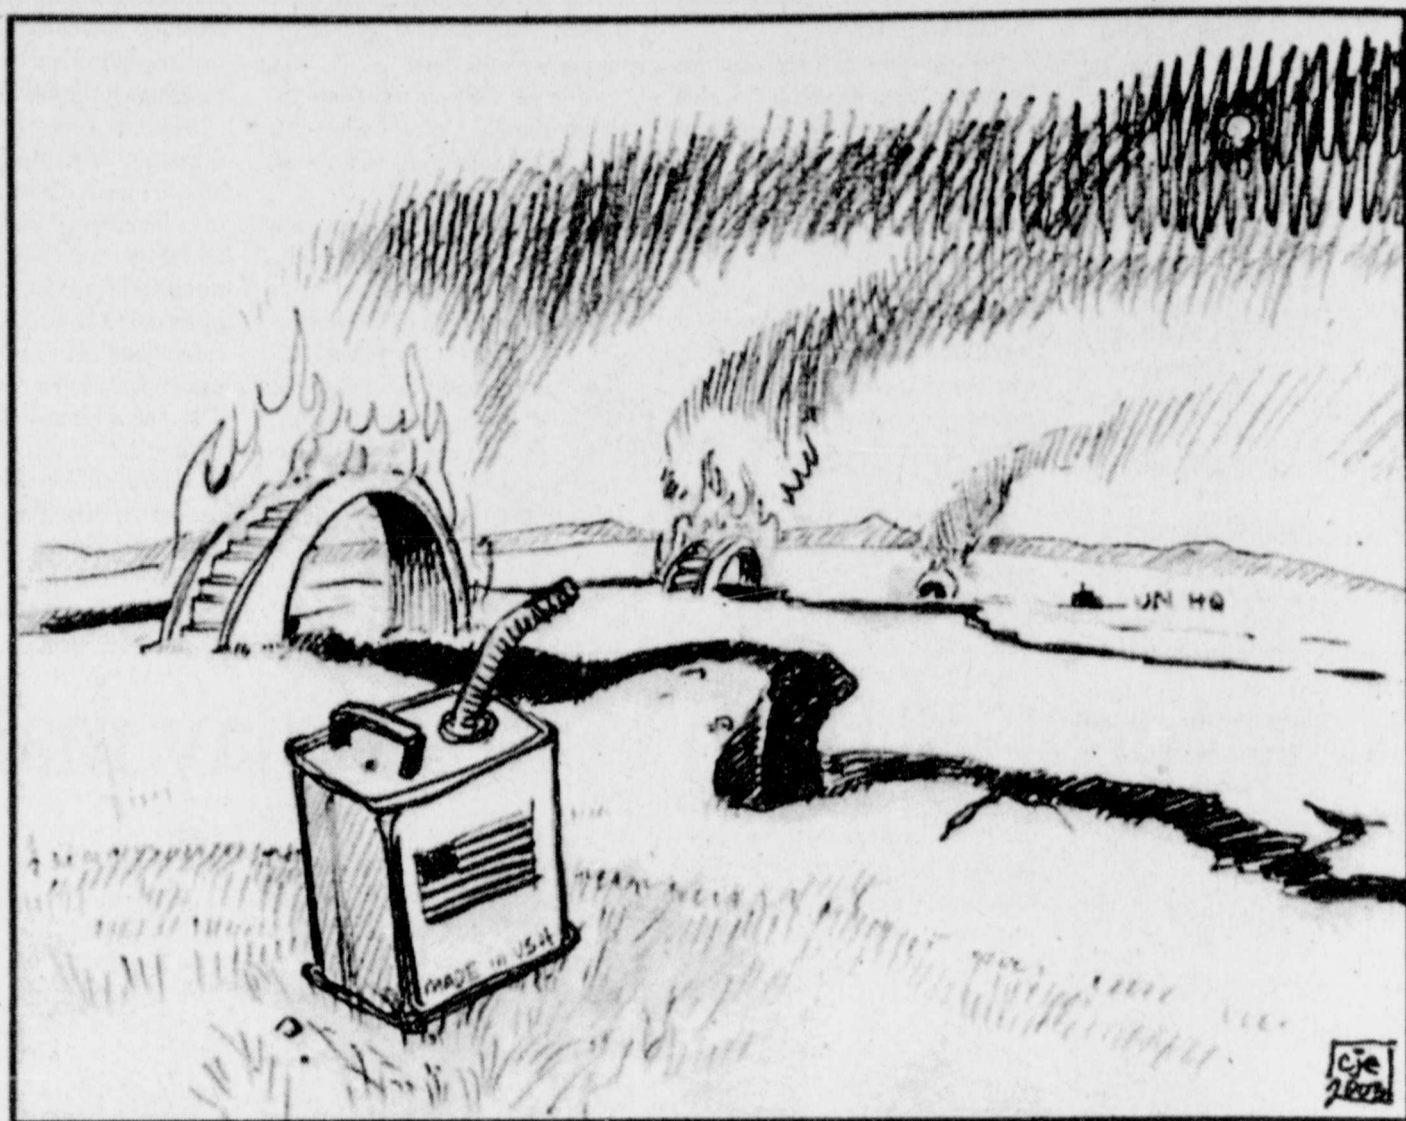

Far from making us safer, I'm afraid our intervention in the Middle East will inspire more fanatics to take arms against us.

We're trying to impose Western values on a medieval culture and I'm afraid our effort is doomed.

Our nation is vulnerable, our liberties are threatened, and our children are being killed overseas.

Force or fortune has kept us safe so far, but I can't help thinking, there had to be a better way.

Television tasteless, but we still watch

With approximately 12,700 television stations airing all across the world, there's still nothing being televised to entertain us.

Whether you have satellite, cable or broadcast television, you're still unsatisfied.

Why is this? The answer is simple—Television is tasteless.

However, no matter how horrible a program is, if it involves sex, drugs, alcohol or money, we feel compelled to watch.

This coincides with the priorities of today's society.

After seeing Britney Spears and Madonna "mugging down" on MTV's Video Music Awards, I was horrified, to say the least.

Many people I have talked to haven't had the same reaction.

The response that I have heard most often is "that was so cool!"

But what makes it cool?

If the on-screen fling had been Spears' ex-boyfriend,

Justin Timberlake and Madonna's husband, Guy Ritchie, I suspect the public response wouldn't have been quite the same.

Spears and Madonna are both huge pillars in the music industry.

Even though they come from separate generations, both have a large number of fans of all ages.

One of Spears' fans is my 10-year-old niece.

I would prefer not to see her looking up to such a tactless individual.

Spears tries to condone her actions by stating that she is trying to teach her fans self-expression is OK, and that everyone should feel comfortable with themselves no matter what.

That is the most irresponsible thing

Levi Ham

I think I have ever heard a public figure say.

When I see the way my niece acts when she "is Britney Spears," I am disheartened. I am sure many of you readers can relate.

Stop and think about this, folks. Is this what television viewers long ago expected to be watching years later?

To see Americans throwing themselves into the spotlight for their five minutes of fame?

Whatever happened to good quality television? Forgive me if I sound trite; however, I can join the older generation and say today's television programming is repulsive.

I view most of today's reality show contestants as fame-craving, money-grubbing lunatics. I may be overstepping my boundaries with that statement, but that is essentially what they are being made out to be.

Take "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-millionaire," for example. This program was one that depicted 50 young women hoping to marry a wonderful man who would make all their dreams come true and give them the security they needed.

Get real! Who marries for love today anyway? Every single one of those ladies had dollar signs in their eyes, and made no attempt to hide it.

On the last show, Rick Rockwell and the "lucky lady" Darva Conger were joined in "holy" matrimony on national television. The next day their horror stories of each other were made public and they were soon divorced.

I found this extremely amusing. Everyone gets what is coming to them, but I think that these two individuals got more publicity than they could handle.

After a week, I found hearing about the mismatched couple to be very tiresome.

Are these the values we want to teach the next generation?

Get married after knowing each other for a few weeks, then decide a couple of months later you are not compatible and get divorced or have the marriage annulled?

Since the airing of the show, there have been many more to follow. I think the whole idea of reality TV is cliché and overrated, to say the least.

I no longer have cable television because there is nothing on it to expand my mind or make me think. I follow current events through the Internet on the news Web sites.

This seems to be the best way.

At least without subjecting myself to the juvenile diversion commonly called entertainment.

Letter to the Editor

Ingram judgmental in views on homosexuality

This letter is in response to the Sept. 9 column "God does not change mind," written by Spencer Ingram.

Spencer, although I am not homosexual, as the daughter of an Episcopal priest and a student who works for the Episcopal bishop of Northwest Texas, I was deeply offended by your column on Tuesday.

First of all, the link you made from our country asking God for assistance in a time of need to the issues of the Episcopal Church was weak.

I think you just wanted an excuse to explain your views on homosexuality.

Because you obviously know nothing about it, I'd like to vaguely inform readers about the Episcopal Church and its beliefs about homosexuality.

Gene Robinson, an openly gay Episcopal priest, was nominated for bishop.

Episcopal priests and other lay people in his diocese (of New Hampshire) voted, and Father Robinson won by majority.

If the people in his diocese who have worked with him for 27 years love him, want to be governed by him and do not believe his being gay will affect his job performance, who is anyone to say that he isn't worthy of this position?

The Episcopal Church does not promote the idea of "create your own God" as you say.

It preaches tolerance and acceptance toward everyone. To your credit, you seem to recognize that neither you, nor the denomination you belong to, are more loved by God because you are not "tainted" with homosexuals.

Unfortunately, you and your church are missing out on the wonderful contributions from homosexuals whom, like you said, "Jesus loves more than you will know." You state that Bishop Robinson, should be thankful for God's everlasting mercy. I'm sure he is, just as every Christian is, and because of your judgmental attitude, just as you should be.

Retired law professor named legend in environmental law at state conference

By Andrew Bell/Staff Reporter

Last month during the 15th Annual Texas Environmental Superconference, retired Texas Tech law professor Frank Skillern was announced a "Legend of Texas Environmental Law."

"I wasn't even prepared for it," Skillern said.

He was surprised, he said, because this was the first time the sponsors of the event, the Environmental and Natural Resources Law Section of the State Bar of Texas, had ever presented the award.

Skillern received the award to honor his retirement and the contributions that he made to Tech, the law school, the State Bar of Texas, and environmental and water law, former colleagues said.

"The award was extremely well deserved. There is no one more dedicated than him," Charles Bubany, Tech law professor, said.

Skillern began his career at Tech in fall 1971.

He soon became involved with many members of the faculty and worked with many in their mutual interests, Bubany said.

Many of Skillern's interests involve environmental and water law. When Skillern began writing one of his books, "Environmental Protection Deskbook," he combined his interests with other faculty, including Bubany, to help write the book.

Law professor Dan Benson also helped contribute to Skillern's book. Benson helped write chapters 12 and 13, which involve the constitutional issues of environmental protection law and the criminal enforcement of the laws, he said.

"Once it was done, the book was quite big. It's 984 pages and I believe it is still being used in the profession," Benson said.

In 1979, Skillern helped to begin the Environmental and Natural Resources Law Section of the State Bar of Texas.

For his work in helping the section begin, he was elected to the chair of the section in 1983, he said.

Involvement with the section helped to begin an annual job fair the section sponsors. As the section began to grow, Skillern helped to set up the speakers for the event.

During the remainder of his tenure, he worked as a law school liaison to the section, he said.

During his tenure, Skillern was presented with the George W. McCleskey Professor of Water Law for his work with water laws, something Bubany said was well-deserved.

"The McCleskey award was given to him because of his contributions to water law," he said.

Skillern's other work with water law included many written works. Skillern said he wrote a water law book and many articles dealing with the subject.

One thing that has made Skillern such a well-respected professor is his interests in seeing people succeed, law professor Bruce Kramer said.

"He has always been very interested in seeing students succeed," Kramer said.

Skillern set up a counseling program that is committed to bringing in students to the law school, Kramer said.

Saudi religious leaders call equality efforts anti-Islam campaign led by Americans

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Prominent Saudi clerics and academics warned Wednesday against calls for equality and increased rights for women, saying such efforts aim to make Muslim women more like "infidel" Western types.

Efforts to give women greater rights are part of an anti-Islamic campaign spearheaded by the United States, said 130 Saudi sheiks and academics in a statement obtained by The Associated Press Wednesday.

Women in Saudi Arabia are segregated in public places, they cannot drive cars, and they must be covered from head to toe in public in this strict conservative society.

Islamic laws protect women and their rights, the statement said.

It said efforts to change such traditions are "a vicious campaign from (the Muslim community's) enemy, led by the American government, to divert it from its faith."

U.S. criticism of Saudi Arabia's lack of democracy and support for militant Islam in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States have forced the government to open up somewhat.

Newspaper and magazine articles and television programs began to discuss reform, and even host women, something that used to be taboo here.

The statement said equality between men and women is not possible under Islam.

"Any calls for absolute equality is an illegal and illogical call," the statement said.

It said allowing women to drive, a repeated request in the kingdom, would lead to "many evils."

Phelan appointed committee chairwoman

By Andrew Bell/Staff Reporter

Marilyn Phelan, a Texas Tech law professor, has recently been appointed chairwoman of the International Taxation Committee.

The committee is a section of the American Bar Association that deals with international law. Faculty and administration at the law school were happy to hear of Phelan's appointment.

"Having a distinguished faculty who brings recognition to themselves helps bring that recognition to Tech," Brian Shannon, assistant dean of academic affairs for the law school, said.

Phelan has had a distinguished career at Tech. She has received three of her four degrees at Tech.

For her undergraduate work, Phelan graduated from the College of Arts and Sciences with a political science degree.

Her master's and doctorate were both through the College of Business Administration in accounting, Phelan said.

She earned her law degree at the University of Texas.

Shannon said the number of degrees she has was an accomplishment in itself.

"It is very distinguished to be able to say that you have a Ph.D. and a law degree," Shannon said.

During her tenure, Phelan also became board certified in tax law by the Texas Board of Legal Specialization.

The qualifications to being certified required Phelan to practice five years of law with half of that time into her specialty, tax law. The final process is an extensive and comprehensive test, she said.

"The exam takes one and a half to two days. The test covers just the area of specialty," Phelan said.

When she returned to Tech, she taught accounting until she went to law school.

Since the transfer, Phelan has taught many different courses dealing with tax law. She has even found the time to direct a tax clinic, she said.

The tax clinic represents people who otherwise would not be able to pay for the services.

Law students work on the cases with Phelan as the adviser and supervisor. Currently, the clinic is working on 22 cases, Phelan said.

The clinic would not be available without the help of Phelan, Shannon said.

"When the clinic was reduced due to expenses, she volunteered to take it on as an overload to her schedule. It has been a huge positive for the community," he said.

In the mid-1980s, Phelan was general counsel for the university. As general counsel, she handled all legal issues involving Tech and the Health Sciences Center.

This included legal work for the Board of Regents, vice presidents and the president. Phelan said the job was not always easy.

"The most difficult aspect of the job was representing all the different kinds of clients," she said.

She also has worked with the National Conference of Committees on Uniform State Laws.

The conferees requires that each state appoint delegates who review model legislation from the country. The appointments come in terms and only from the governor of the state, Shannon said.

"Phelan was appointed by two different Texas governors; first by Gov. Richards and then by Gov. Perry," Shannon said.

Her most recent post came when she was appointed chairwoman of the International Taxation Committee. Phelan said that the position will include helping businesses that are involved in the global market place.

"International lawyers aren't told about the taxes involved with international transactions. There can be tremendous tax costs if the process isn't structured accordingly," she said.

To speed the process up, Phelan said she will set up seminars, that will include professors and other experts, to inform lawyers of the different issues involved with tax law. Shannon said this will help people throughout the state see how Tech and the law school are growing.

"Tech doesn't have a poor reputation, but sometimes people don't know about the things going on around campus. This is a huge opportunity to let people know we are out here and doing good things," Shannon said.

Phelan will be seen in November's issue of Texas Monthly. She was recently named one of "Texas' Super Lawyers."

humble and appreciate what I have," she said.

"People who are in dire need wait for donations from people that don't even have to donate," Hernandez said.

Jon Mallory, executive director, believes those involved with the organization will feel a great sense of pride and satisfaction.

"The satisfaction people, myself included, get in making such a difference for folks who never had any hope of owning a home is tremendous," Mallory said.

Mallory thinks the experience is just as special for the families receiving the home.

"It is a once in a lifetime experience for the families because they are helping to build the home they will live in and it gives them pride and also skills that they can use in the future," he said.

South Plains Islamic Center and Cumberland Presbyterian Church sponsored the building of a home called the "House of Abraham" on Sept. 11 of last year.

"We had a moment of silence to remember Sept. 11, and after the silence was over members of the different churches hugged each other, it was extremely moving," he said.

Breakfast, lunch and dinner will be served at the build, which starts at 7 a.m., and lasts until 9 p.m. For more information call (806) 763-4663.

two suspects went to 5311 42nd St. on Aug. 22, 2002, where they were involved in an argument with another person. One of the men took the gun used during the shooting out of the trunk. The gun was shot several times at the house. No one was injured.

This shooting helped the Lubbock Police Department link the two suspects with the death of Colin Schafer eight days earlier.

Gabriel Gonzales pleaded guilty to capital murder and was sentenced to life imprisonment on Jan. 10. Gabriel Gonzales was tried as an adult; however, he was a juvenile at the time of the murder and could not get the death penalty.

According to the prosecution, the verdict in Joe Gonzales's trial was just.

"We never contended at any time that Joe Gonzales was the shooter in this case," said Powell. "We charged the shooter several months ago, but it was our contention that, but for this young man, the murder wouldn't have taken place."

Joe Gonzales was as guilty as Gabriel Gonzales in the murder, Powell said.

"He had just as much to do with Colin's death as if he pulled the trigger," he said. "We do believe that justice was done today."

Costs adding up for Texas 11 in absence

AUSTIN (AP) — The tab for more than a month on the lam in New Mexico: about $100,000 and counting.

For now, Texas Democratic senators are paying some of their bills by whipping out their own Visas or Mastercards. But it looks like a good chunk will be reimbursed from donors sympathetic to their boycott against congressional redistricting.

Eleven senators fled Texas on July 28 to thwart a Republican-backed plan to redraw congressional boundaries and give the GOP the majority in the state's congressional delegation. They returned to Texas on Wednesday after one of their members defected and it was clear they could no longer block a Senate quorum.

For a month and a half, the Democrats divided their time between two Marriotts in Albuquerque, where they and staff members lived out of hotel rooms or suites, worked out of large conference rooms and held routine news conferences.

Along the way, they met with a veterans group, toured Indian reservations and visited with state lawmakers from Colorado and New Mexico.

Some had family in from Texas. Some exercised. Two met Willie Nelson backstage at a concert. Others racked up tabs at the hotel bar. One senator, Judith Zaffirini of Laredo, went ice skating and broke her shoulder.

Friendly forces delivered them beer and peaches and barbecue brisket, ribs and beans. Supporters mailed them cookies and chips and salsa.

Sen. Leticia Van de Putte of San Antonio, chairwoman of the Senate Democratic Caucus, estimated Wednesday the Democrats' stay will cost each senator between $7,500 and $10,000.

unreliable. He said he is confident the classes will benefit even the best writers and that the elimination of the CLEP test is no pitfall for students. He can guarantee students they will be better writers after a 15-week course than after a 90-question test and that their ability to write will determine their success in whatever career field they choose to pursue.

"The further you progress, the more you will be writing and the more you will be responsible for your subordinates' writing," he said. "The only way to get better at writing is to write."

Many students do not agree that the elimination of the CLEP test will be good for students, or that the classes will make students better writers.

"If a student is knowledgeable enough to pass the CLEP test, they should be allowed to move onto courses that will challenge them," said Jeremy Woods, a sophomore business major from Lubbock.

"Challenging yourself is supposed to be what college is all about."

Classroom size will not be affected by the elimination of the CLEP examination, Dragga said. The department has hired 10 additional part-time instructors to handle the increased enrollment. The department also has instituted an online course manager that will allow the same number of students to be taught with greater efficiency.

Not all feedback on the decision has been positive, he said, but that is not unexpected. Ordinarily people blame public institutions for being too slow, he said, but that was not the case in this situation. Some people said they did not have a chance to exempt in time because the decision was made so quickly. The department has been considering this step for some time because it is unsatisfactory in determining writing ability and thus did not hesitate to decide.

"We noticed a situation that needed to be improved, and we improved it as quickly and effectively as we could" said Dragga.

The department has no intention of reinstating the program, he said.

First Enron executive pleads guilty to cooking the books, gets 5-year sentence

HOUSTON (AP) — The first former Enron executive to go to prison was led away in handcuffs and ankle chains after admitting he conspired to cook the books in the scandal that ran the company into bankruptcy and rocked Wall Street.

Former Enron treasurer Ben Glisan Jr. made no deal to implicate higher-ups such as former chairman Kenneth Lay but prosecutors said his five-year sentence — the maximum under the law — should send a "somewhat chilling message."

Glisan, 37, admitted helping design financial deals that enriched him and illegally kept investment losses off Enron's books.

"I think I would simply like to say I take full responsibility for my actions," Glisan softly told U.S. District Judge Kenneth Hoyt.

He agreed to forfeit nearly $1 million in profits from a $5,800 investment in an off-the-books deal at Enron and agreed to not seek a refund of $412,000 in income taxes he paid on that profit.

U.S. marshals escorted Glisan outside the courthouse to be taken to a federal lockup. His suit jacket was slung over his handcuffed hands, and ankle chains forced him to take small steps.

Twenty-three counts against Glisan were dismissed, including money laundering and fraud.

He will serve probation for three years upon his release from prison.

Glisan pleaded innocent in May to 24 charges as part of a 109-count indictment mostly against Andrew Fastow, former Enron finance chief.

Fastow is accused of masterminding schemes that led the Houston energy-trading company's failure in December 2001 amid disclosures of inflated profits, hidden debt and questionable accounting. He is awaiting trial in April.

Lay resigned as chairman and chief executive.

Responders

"We will always remember where we were and what we were doing when we realized those jet aircrafts had slammed into the World Trade Center," he said.

Dewhurst said that day made Americans realize how vulnerable people can be and how the day was painful to him because America lost its innocence. He then said the two years since Sept. 11 have proven why America is so great.

"From the ashes of 9/11 emerged symbols of the American freedom," he said. "These 3,412 flags right behind you represent the precious lives that were lost on 9/11. To me, looking at them just a minute ago, they represented that picture that is indelible in my mind, as I'm sure it is in yours, of the rubble near Ground Zero when that firefighter took that flag and stood on top of all that rubble."

Dewhurst paid tribute, in particular, to the courage of the first responders of not only New York City, but of the entire country.

"We watched firefighters and police officers during 9/11 rush into burning buildings to put their own lives at risk for people they never knew," he said. "The courage of our rescue workers, it seems to me, is a stark contrast to the cowardice of the terrorists who gave their lives so others might die."

Next at the podium was Lubbock Mayor Marc McDougal, who read the proclamation naming Sept. 11 as Texas First Responders Day, which will be recognized on an annual basis. After the mayor spoke, Jack Booe of Lubbock gave his personal account of that day.

Booe spoke of the events that transpired when he was the principal of Lubbock Coronado High School. He said it was just another normal day until the news broke. He said he was shocked at how well, and how quickly, the young people came together — as did the rest of the country. He told a story of the students putting together a "patriotic pep rally" on 48 hours' notice.

"What I noticed at that pep rally was 1,700 students who totally changed their normal demeanor into a focused demeanor," he said. "Just as the first responders in New York City came together to save peoples' lives. The main thing I observed from that pep rally, ladies and gentlemen, was that our young people will take care of any problems like that (9/11) in the future — America is in good hands."

Rose Chase, the mother of a first responder who died on Sept. 11, read excerpts from "Let's Roll" by Lisa Beamer, the widow of Todd Beamer, who was in a group that reportedly thwarted an attack attempt in the skies over Pennsylvania.

"Even now, in the midst of great sorrow, there is much to be grateful for — a great family, wonderful friends and a strong community of faith," the book says. "I try to appreciate my blessings every day."

Many first responders from the area were on hand for the service, which was done in tribute to them.

"I think it's pulled everyone together," Dawne Stone, an EMT from the Post EMS, said. "It's pulled us together as Americans, as an entire community instead of city by city or state by state. I feel more protected (since 9/11) and a stronger need to better protect my friends, family members and even strangers on the street."

Tramp Ball, a Lubbock resident, said the main reason he attended the memorial service was just as a means of reflection.

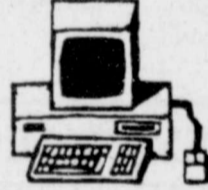

"I felt that I needed to remember what Sept. 11 really meant," he said. "All the people who died need to be remembered, it's not something you need to just forget about."

Ball said it felt good to see everyone who came out to attend the ceremony.

"Patriotism kind of comes and goes," he said. "I know that's a bad thing, but it takes reminders like this to bring it back."

Texas West Fest appeals to Tech students

By Nikki Siegrist/Staff Reporter

This weekend, Lubbock will be home to something one might expect to see on Austin's Sixth Street or in the Deep Ellum district of Dallas.

But this is home-grown entertainment. Hub Club Entertainment is coordinating the Texas West Music Festival in the Depot District.

"We wanted something for the Tech students and the whole community to be involved in," said Chris Harden, events coordinator of Hub Club entertainment. "We wanted to throw a fun event that wasn't Greek oriented. We've thrown events in the past, but we thought it would be a good opportunity to help our clients."

Harden said this event should help bring back some of the business the Depot District has lost since the opening of Graham's Central Station, a new Lubbock hot spot.

The event is bringing together 19 bands, most of them local and some regional. The headliners are Drop Sky, Blue October and Dexter Freebish. The bands will perform in six venues along Buddy Holly Avenue, which will be blocked off to prevent through traffic.

Harden said the event will be comparable to a block party.

"Lubbock has a need to spark," Harden said. "We were talking and threw ideas around. We came to a consensus that we would have it in the Depot District. We hope to make this an annual event like South by Southwest."

Bassist for the band Nosmo King, Trevor McGrew, said he is excited about playing at the festival and the other performing bands should be as well.

"It's great to get stage time for that many people," said McGrew, a former Tech student. "I like the idea of using the whole Depot District. It's fun to play for that many people."

McGrew said students should take this opportunity to hear these bands live for the low price of $10.

"I can't think of any other way to see 20 bands for $10," he said. "It should be a really good time and a great way to spend a Saturday."

Janelle Bradshaw, a freshman communications major from Lubbock, agrees with McGrew and said students should go to the festival.

"This is a great opportunity for the Lubbock people to go and see live music," Bradshaw said. "It's going to be a lot of fun and it's good exposure for the local and regional bands."

Bradshaw said this is an opportunity for Lubbock's local music scene to grow and become better known.

"Towns like Austin and Dallas have great festivals we travel to,"

Bradshaw said. "If this goes well, Lubbock might have one. People might travel here."

Bradshaw said she looks forward to the festival and encourages other students to attend.

"Everybody should go out and show support for this," she said. "If it goes well, it's great for future events like this. It's going to be a lot of fun for people who go and cruise around and go from band to band."

Tickets are on sale at Ralph's Records and online at HubClubEntertainment.com. Tickets are $10 in advance or $7.50 for Hub Club Card holders, and $13 at the gate or $10 at the gate for Hub Club Card holders.

Some of the proceeds go to the March of Dimes in Lubbock, said Star Crawford, campaign coordinator for the March of Dimes.

Crawford said she was hoping the event would get the March of Dimes name and logo more publicity.

"This is one of four main events we do," she said. "We are happy they thought of us when there are hundreds of other non-profit (organizations) to give to."

"We wanted something for the Tech students and the whole community to be involved in."

Fitzgerald flapper romance found out

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A diary and letters written by the debutante regarded as F. Scott Fitzgerald's first love have been donated to Princeton University.

The writings were given by descendants of Ginevra King, often viewed as the model for such characters as Rosalind Connage and Isabelle Borge in "This Side of Paradise," and Daisy Buchanan in "The Great Gatsby."

"For Fitzgerald, she was more of an archetype: the representation of the wealthy, cool, aloof woman who was key to the American dream," Don Skemer, curator of manuscripts at the Princeton University Library, said Wednesday.

The romance began in 1915, when Fitzgerald was a 19-year-old at Princeton and King, three years his junior, attended Westover School in Middlebury, Conn. They met in Fitzgerald's hometown of St. Paul, Minn., where King was visiting her Westover roommate during Christmas break.

They began an intense epistolary romance, although "they didn't see each other very much, and when they did they were chaperoned," said Matthew J. Bruccoli, professor of English and curator of the F. Scott Fitzgerald collection at the University of South Carolina.

"The romance was far more literary than it was physical or actual," Bruccoli said. King filled her letters with underlines, exclamations and fanciful punctuation, as well as occasional misspellings.

In her first letter, dated Jan. 11, 1915, she asks for a photograph of Fitzgerald: "I have but a faint recollection of yellow hair and big blue eyes and a brown corduroy waist-coat that was very good-looking!"

The letter, signed "Yours Fickley sometimes but Devotedly at present," set the tone for the relationship in which she alternately beckoned and pushed away the novelist.

"He was certainly the more smitten of the two," Skemer said.

King also wrote of Fitzgerald in her diary. In a Jan. 4, 1915, entry, she gushes after meeting Fitzgerald, "Scott perfectly darling," following with "Am absolutely gone on Scott," the next day.

By February, King wrote "I am madly in love with him." The relationship ended by January 1917, and King destroyed Fitzgerald's letters. He kept hers and had them typed up and bound.

Fitzgerald died in 1940. Ten years later, the novelist's daughter, Scottie, returned the letters to King, who died in 1980 at age 82. Her daughter and granddaughter recently donated them and King's diary to Princeton, the repository of Fitzgerald's papers.

The letters, barely mentioned by Fitzgerald's early biographers, have been unavailable for decades. The diary has never been viewed by academics, except Penn State University English professor James L.W. West III, who is preparing an essay on the donation to Princeton.

"People knew of their existence, but that's about it," Skemer said. "They haven't been studied."

Although the diary and letters were not written by the novelist, Bruccoli said that their value most likely will be as literary documents, not biographical ones.

Fitzgerald practiced his art through the correspondence. The letters document his apprenticeship, Bruccoli said.

Power of Prayer Helps Ill

CORPUS CHRISTI — On the wall of the Rev. Isaac Rodriguez's office at Segunda Iglesia Bautista there is a prayer: "I expect to pass through this world only once. Any kindness that I can show to any fellow being let me do it now. Let me not defer it or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

But the Lord, Rodriguez said, did let him pass this way again. And his revival is both a miracle and a lesson — there is power in prayer.

"Praying is not just saying words," Rodriguez, 65, said. "Praying is believing and believing is the only way to open the door to the miracles of God."

On Sunday, Rodriguez celebrated his 19th anniversary with his church. Nineteen isn't a special number as far as milestones go, shuffled insignificantly somewhere between 10 and 20 but for Rodriguez to stand in front of his congregation and preach one more time is cause to celebrate.

At the end of March, Rodriguez fell gravely ill. Some suspected he had SARS, the respiratory infection that was claiming so many lives overseas and doctors were sure he was going to die.

Feeling helpless and afraid, his congregation did the only thing they could — prayed.

Nonstop, from the day he entered the hospital, members of Segunda Iglesia Bautista got down on their knees, posted petitions across the nation and held vigils in people's homes. It was those prayers, Rodriguez said, that brought him back from the edge of death.

Going abroad: studying with advantages

By Erica Gonzales/Staff Reporter

Texas Tech student Michael Pate received a pre-honeymoon with his fiancé. But this was more than a vacation. He got the opportunity to travel to Denmark for 15 months for an internship with Texas Instruments. One more perk: Texas Instruments supplied financial support.

Pate, a doctoral student studying electrical engineering from Lubbock was chosen to upstart the program. More students will follow in the future. Pate said his experience was more than what he expected.

"Working with TI in Copenhagen taught me a lot more than I could have learned in the classroom," he said.

Pate received this opportunity because a dual degree program has been created to allow master's degree students studying computer or electrical engineering to receive two master's degrees in Denmark while interning with Texas Instruments. The program was developed by Kwong Chao, professor of electrical engineering. After a visit to the Technical University of Denmark on a sabbatical leave, Chao saw the great relationship between the university and Texas Instruments. When he came back to Tech, he had an idea to develop a dual master's degree program between the university and Tech, he said. Chao said Texas Instruments in both Copenhagen and Dallas agreed to provide an internship to qualifying students.

"It's a great opportunity for students to gain experience in international education," Chao said.

Pate agreed. After 15 months in Denmark, he defended his thesis in August.

"I think it's fantastic," he said. "I feel so grateful to be chosen to participate, it was the best experience of my life."

The work Pate did in Copenhagen was more beneficial than what he could have gained in a normal academic setting, he said.

"Working with TI in Copenhagen taught me a lot more than I could have learned in the classroom," he said.

This is a great opportunity for the engineering graduate students and he encourages more students to look into the new program, he said.

The program also allows a student from Denmark to attend to Tech to study.

Klaus Krogsgaard, a graduate student studying electrical engineering from Denmark is attending Tech through the program. He said even though he has only been in Lubbock since August, he is enjoying the opportunity to study here.

"It's a good program," he said. "It gave me international experience."

Krogsgaard will spend this semester at Tech and will live in Dallas during the spring semester. He will intern at Texas Instruments in Dallas and return to Tech in the summer.

Ralph Ferguson, assistant academic dean for Tech's graduate school, helped set up the degree requirements between Tech and the Technical University of Denmark.

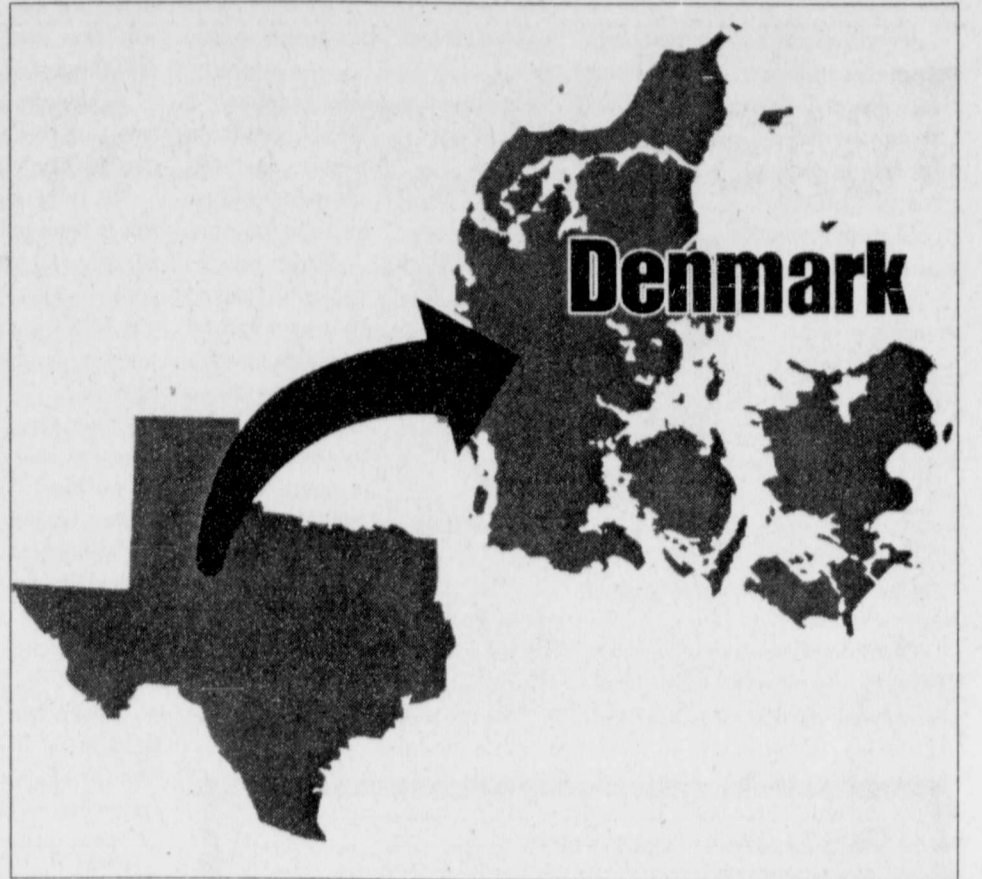

Some day, Ferguson said, these graduate students will be community or corporate leaders.

"The broader the education we can give them, the more valuable that student is going to be in the marketplace and community," he said.

He hopes the program will expand and thinks it is important for graduate students to have a global perspective.

Tanja Karp, an assistant professor for the electrical and computer engineering department, said she is glad to see this opportunity for electrical and computer engineering students. Last year, Karp said she went to the university to see what the electrical engineering department was doing concerning research and was impressed by what it offers students.

Qualifying students must be a graduate student studying computer or electrical engineering and have an excellent academic record.

Spade's 'Dickie' just can't hold up in theaters this time

David Spade has made a career out of playing sarcastic, smug and genuinely unlikable characters.

In "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star," Spade plays a washed-up childhood star whose days of celebrity are all but long gone.

But what starts out as an occasionally clever premise soon turns childish and smarmy like an early episode of "7th Heaven."

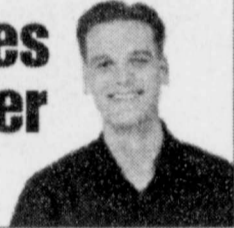

That's not exactly what Spade fans would be expecting. After watching him in Saturday Night Live and in films going all the way back to "Tommy Boy" and "Black Sheep" to the abysmal "Lost and Found" and his role on TV's "Just Shoot Me," (which was recently cancelled), Spade has proved that he is a one-trick pony.

That's not to say that I don't like some of Spade's work—the two films he did with Chris Farley were fun, and he did a good job with the hilarious animated "The Emperor's New Groove," but he's still peddling the same routine.

"Dickie Roberts" is somewhat of a different animal because Spade is still doing the same shtick, but then he tries to pour on the sentimentality like thick syrup.

The film opens with a mock "E! True Hollywood Story" about Roberts and his emergence and subsequent failure as a celebrity.

He now works as a valet, parking celebrities' cars.

The family he finds are the Finneys—a typical suburban family with a distant father, an estranged mother, and two cute kids.

George, the dad (Craig Bierko) is a car salesman in debt that desperately wants to make this situation with Dickie work for a $20,000 payday.

Grace, the mom, (Mary McCormack) is less than thrilled about the prospect, and the two children Sam (Scott Terra) and Sally (Jenna Boyd) don't love the idea of Dickie moving into their room.

Once moved in with the family, many of the scenes will appeal to kids in the audience. There are laughs to be had.

But the gags misfire more often than not, and Spade's attempt to make us cry doesn't quite wash.

Overall, I did not like this movie, but there were some sparse good things that I did like about it.

The importance placed on family values are well-meaning, and the cameo appearances by real child stars—Danny Bonaduce, Dustin Diamond, and a bunch of "Bradys" are fun.

The end credits feature a choir loft-full of former child stars singing a song poking fun at themselves.

Those end credits only come after a super-smarmy ending that feels like getting eight sugar-snowballs rammed down your throat.

Raiders prepare to counter Eagles' team speed

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

Any victory puts another number in the win column. Zero will change to one. But for Texas Tech soccer coach Felix Oskam, a victory against his alma mater, North Texas, would mean even more. He is facing his old stomping ground.

"It is always nice to go back to Denton because I haven't been there in a while," he said. "A win would be great against my former team but we want to win, and it doesn't matter who it is."

After losing three consecutive games, Tech will have to take a few steps to compete with the Eagles Sunday, Oskam said.

"They are quick at every position they play," he said. "Denton is a tough place to play and North Texas is a very athletic team."

Sophomore Karen Stephens, a midfielder from Denton, said worries are not a factor for her in this game.

"I was recruited by North Texas and I just want to show them that I made a really good choice of coming to Tech," she said. "I really want to win this game."

With Big 12 Conference play coming up in three games, senior midfielder Kern Campbell of Duncarville said they have to get a win.

"We are a better team than in the past and we have gotten better each game," she said. "But we have to get a win before starting in the Big 12 so our confidence stays high."

Coming from Dallas/Fort Worth area, Campbell said she expects a large crowd of family and friends.

"A lot of us players come from that part of Texas and I know that a bunch of family and friends will come out and support us like they did last weekend at SMU and TCU," she said. "So, I want to win to show them that we appreciate all their support."

After three games and no goals, Stephens said the primary objective against North Texas is to change their momentum into scoring opportunities.

"We have to capitalize on our attacking and get better shots at the goal," she said. "We have made big improvements and by working hard, we can take the next step."

Oskam said Tech's major obstacle stands at 5'7" in North Texas midfielder Marilyn Marin of Dallas, who led the nation in goals last season with 26.

"Marin is their best player by far," he said. "And we have to stay focused on her and make sure she doesn't distribute the ball, get the final pass and take our people on."

In order to make sure these things do not happen in favor of North Texas, Oskam said Tech has to play better on defense and offense.

"We have to play off the ball better," he said. "We need the players to take the initiative to make something happen."

Being out-scored 6-0 in three games, Oskam said his team has been hesitant instead of practical.

"We're still a team that reacts to things," he said. "We have to be proactive instead of trying to wash out the ball from the goal. We are still in the process of gradually improving, but we have a chance to compete with North Texas."

North Texas is returning back to action after a 4-2 loss against Tech's Sept. 19 opponent, Stephen F. Austin. Looking to regain confidence, Oskam said the Eagles will provide great competition with their speed and cause a problem in Tech's game plan.

"They have a lot of speed and we have to find a way to cover that weakness," he said. "By doing that, we will have to be compact in defending and play more as a team."

Fightin' Irish, Wolverines ready to renew gridiron rivalry

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Don't look for a flea-flicker or fumblerooski when Notre Dame visits Michigan on Saturday.

The two winningest football teams in college football teams in the old-fashioned way, especially against each other.

And that's the way the players want it.

"We're both kind of smash-mouth teams," Irish safety Glenn Earl said. "West Coast teams, Pac-10 teams like to spread you out, and use bubble screens and all that ruffraff. Teams like them and us like to line up and just see who is tougher, who is the better man."

The teams have been lining up off and on since a few Michigan students traveled to South Bend in 1887 to teach the game to Notre Dame students. Though they don't play every year, the rivalry is as intense as any.

And with Michigan ranked No. 5, and Notre Dame No. 15, it's the biggest game this weekend.

In other Top 25 games Saturday, it's Fresno State on No. 1 Oklahoma; East Carolina on No. 2 Miami; No. 24 North Carolina State at No. 3 Ohio State; Hawaii at No. 4 USC; Arkansas at No. 6 Texas; Massachusetts at No. 7 Kansas State; No. 25 South Carolina at No. 8 Georgia; and Georgia Tech at No. 10 Florida State.

Opening mailbag solves college football puzzle

Between taking time out to explain my summer, examine the particulars of Mike Leach's contract and to dissect what looms ahead for the Red Raiders, I have found myself falling away from the general public. That's why I decided to give the regular Joe's of the world a chance to ask me some of the things that have been going through their heads.

Thus I reached deep into my mail bag and pulled out a few queries sent in from the fine folks that ready my columns and I took the time to give them an honest answer.

Without further adieu I present my first question and answer time with the public.

Hey, Kyle, I noticed the way the Nebraska defense has been playing, and I happen to know you are a Nebraska fan. So are the Cornhuskers going to keep it going against Penn State Saturday? Bill from Tuskegee, Ala.

So you've cracked my code and found out about my undying love for Nebraska. Congratulations Bill. Yes the "Blackshirt" defense has been on a tear as of late with Nebraska linebacker Demorris Williams tearing through offensive linemen like Kansas coach Mark Mangino through a pack of Chewy Chips Ahoy. The Nebraska offense though is lacking in the passing game and the game against Penn State should be exciting. If Penn State loses the Nittany Lion fans might force coach Joe Paterno to retire to Florida, where he could enjoy a life of screwing up voting ballots. Anywho, I'll pick the Cornhuskers to come up with the win in this game.

Kyle did you catch that Florida vs. Miami game Saturday? It was awesome. Don't you wish Florida would have won?

Hank from Columbus, Ohio.

Well Hank I think that anyone with at least half a soul was pulling for the Gators to get the upset win. As for myself, I only caught the tail end of the game and was fortunate enough to see Florida third-string quarterback Gavin Dickey display his inadequacies to the world. Surprisingly Trev Alberts said it right earlier this week when he said Florida coach Ron Zook should have stuck with freshman Chris Leak at quarterback. Zook has to learn that just because his predecessor Steve Spurrier flopped quarterbacks like pancakes, it doesn't mean he has to as well. And if Zooks need myself and Trev Alberts to tell him that Florida might be in big trouble.

Hey Kyle, do you still hate Trev Alberts? Trev from Bristol, Conn.

Trev there is no longer any animosity between Mr. Alberts and myself. He is a good natured man who says some very stupid things from time to time, but who doesn't wait a second. Your name is Trev and you're from Bristol? Alright how did I let a letter from Trev Alberts get in here.

Kyle, what's up with Auburn? I thought they were supposed to be good. Jamie from Billings, Mont.

That's precisely the problem Jamie. Everyone thought Auburn was supposed to be good without actually taking the time to wait until the season started and make sure. People have to stop taking preseason predictions so seriously. Pre-season predictions are made up by magazine writing morons in their underwear, formulating their rankings by who has the hottest cheerleaders. I'm not saying I don't love reading all that junk, but I don't take it too seriously. And Auburn is an embarrassment.

Kyle, I seem to have this rash on my special area. What should I do? Mikey from Akron, Ohio.

I'm not touching that one with a ten-foot pole Mikey. No more questions.

Penn State preparing for cheap shots against Huskers

(U WIRE) UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — The Nittany Lions will be seeing red this Saturday, in the literal sense of the phrase. A lot of it.

In a battle between two teams trying to regain national prominence, the head-to-head matchup of Penn State and Nebraska will feature no love lost. Even the fans — the sea of red — will be in on it.

If some of the on-field events of last year's 40-7 trouncing of the Cornhuskers at Beaver Stadium are a foreshadowing of the Lions' upcoming trip to Lincoln, Neb., then the chance of some physical mixups on the field is certainly a possibility. The combination of fans who bleed the Nebraska red and white, along with many returning players from last year's Cornhusker squad, provides the Nittany Lions with their most daunting task thus far.

"Nebraska, they try to intimidate you a lot," Penn State defensive end John Bronson said. "We're practicing against the scout team and they've been told to hold, clip and personal foul in order to try to mentally prepare us for the game. I hope nobody gets kicked out, but Nebraska is one of those teams that does take a lot of cheap shots."

Last year, Penn State defensive end Jeremiah Davis and Nebraska offensive lineman Richie Incognito were ejected from the game after getting into a scuffle after a Richard Gardner interception return for a touchdown.

Eagle district attorney has photos of accusers injuries

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — A prosecutor outlined the sexual assault case against Kobe Bryant for the first time Wednesday, saying there are photographs of injuries to the woman and a videotaped statement from her.

In a court brief, Eagle County District Attorney Mark Hurlbert said he planned to present the evidence at the Oct. 9 preliminary hearing that will determine whether the NBA All-Star will stand trial.

Tech course opens with celebrity tourney

By David Wiechmann/
Staff Reporter

When the grand opening for the Jerry S. Rawls Red Raider Golf Course was being planned, men's basketball coach Bob Knight stepped forward to head up the celebrity list.

The championship golf course has brought dozens of celebrities to the Texas Tech campus to join Knight in celebrating the opening of the new course and have some fun in a celebrity event at 10 a.m. today.

"I think it's going to be great," said Managing Director Jack North. "We've got a lot of great comments. People are real pleased with the number of celebrities we're going to have, and I think this is the biggest thing to happen in Lubbock for many a year."

Tickets for the celebrity event will be $10 to the general public and $5 for Tech students with their ID and children under the age of 12. Tickets can be purchased at the gate.

The grand opening will continue on Saturday with a junior clinic taught by course pro Leon van Rensburg and Senior PGA Tour player John Paul Cain. A nine-hole exhibition will follow the clinic with members of the 1958 Texas Tech men's golf team, which won the Southwest Conference that year. Tickets for the exhibition will be the same price as Friday's tickets for the celebrity event.

North said the list of celebrities does not stop at former athletes.

"We have 17 hall of fame basketball, baseball and football players," he said. "As well as actors and singers."

Texas country music star Pat Green will play a round of golf before performing a concert Friday night. Former country music stars Mac Davis and Charley Pride will join Green in the event.

North said two people that played large roles in the golf course's construction will be at the event as well. Rawls will play in the first group along with course designer Tom Doak.

Knight used his Indiana connections to get a number of his former players to the event as well as other basketball greats.

Quinn Buckner, Jay Bilas and Bill Russell are just a few of the basketball stars to make the trip to Lubbock.

With celebrities flocking to the Rawls Course, one may think a lot of money could be made with such an event, but North said the grand opening will not be a money-maker but merely a way to promote the golf course. He also said he is thankful for to Knight to bring such an impressive celebrity list together.

"We're not making any money with this event, but we could not get this much exposure with any amount of money," he said. "We owe a big debt of thanks to coach Knight. Coach Knight got a good bit of the celebrities that we will have."

Adam Sandler confirmed coming to the event, but had to cancel late Wednesday because of family emergencies.

The course staff is still anticipating a great reaction to the course and lots of attention tied to the grand opening.

"It will definitely be good publicity for our golf course," North said.

THE JERRY S. Rawls Red Raider Golf Course officially opens to the public this weekend. The opening festivities will begin with a celebrity golf tournament today at 10 a.m. Tickets to the event are $5 for Tech students with a valid Tech ID and $10 for the general public. Children under 12 will be admitted for $5. The opening of the course comes after more than a year of construction and planning by course designer Tom Doak.

"And we definitely want publicity for our golf teams, and we want to advertise that we have a championship golf course."

North also said the goal of the grand opening event is to give the public the opportunity to have fun and meet some of their favorite celebrities and prove Tech has a top-notch golf course.

"We would like to see everyone have a good time, and see a lot of high-profile celebrities, and I think people that are not golfers will see we have a great golf course out here," he said. "I think this course will be unmatched for hundreds of miles, and it will be one of the finest links courses in America."

Today is also Jerry Rawls Day in Lubbock. Mayor Marc McDougal said he and the City Council believed it would be a worthy honor considering what Rawls has done for the university.

"That is an outstanding facility," he said. "It is a beautiful golf course, not like any other in this area, or region for that matter. It would have been possible to have a facility like that without the support of Jerry Rawls."

Tech volleyball winning streak snapped by Aggies

The Texas Tech volleyball team competed against New Mexico State Wednesday in Las Cruces, N.M. The Red Raiders lost in three games to the Aggies, 30-18, 30-25, 30-22, giving Tech its first loss of the year and bringing Tech's season record to 8-1.

Tech was led by junior Kelly Johnson, who had 12 kills, and junior Jessy Herrera, who had 12 digs.

The Raiders also defeated the Texas-El Paso Miners in five games Tuesday in El Paso.

The Red Raiders won 22-30, 21-30, 30-27, 30-27, 17-15 to put the team at 7-0 on the season.

Johnson had 26 kills to lead the Raiders. She also had 12 digs against the Miners.

CFL waiting for Clarett to decide future

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - If Maurice Clarett wants to play in the Canadian Football League, he'll have to make the first call.

The Montreal Alouettes own the CFL rights to the suspended Ohio State running back, but general manager Jim Popp won't pick up the phone to start negotiations.

"If he has any intent of giving up college, hires an agent and automatically becomes a professional, or it is deemed he can't play in college anymore ... then this organization will wait for him to contact us," Popp said Thursday.

Indeed, Popp thinks Clarett should stay in school and weather the season-long penalty handed down Wednesday.

"I'm a true believer that all players should try to get their college education," Popp said. "They can only play pro football so long. He needs to get his degree. That's the best thing that can happen to him."

It's among Clarett's options. He could stay at Ohio State and go to class while on scholarship, waiting for his suspension to end. He also could ask to be released from his scholarship and transfer to another school. Clarett would still have to sit out at least the mandated suspension season.

If he moved to another Division I-A school, he would have to sit out a transfer year. If he transferred to a school in Divisions I-AA, II or III, though, he would not have to sit out the transfer year.

The NFL isn't a possibility unless Clarett challenges the league's rule that requires players to be out of high school at least three years.

The CFL doesn't have that sort of requirement. The Alouettes (9-2) have the league's best record and lead their division by 4 1/2 games. Then again, they also have two established tailbacks.

Popp selected Clarett for the Alouettes' negotiation list this summer, shortly after word of the player's off-field problems arose. But while acclaimed NFL rookies can get millions of dollars in signing bonuses, the CFL is not nearly as lucrative.
