Iraqi insurgents kill 22 in Baghdad

By Louis Meixler/Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Guerrillas fired a barrage of mortar rounds at Baghdad's largest prison Tuesday, killing 22 prisoners in an attack a U.S. general said may have been an attempt to spark an uprising against their American guards.

A U.S. soldier was killed by a roadside bomb in the northern city of Mosul, the 100th American combat death in April, the deadliest month since the U.S.-led invasion began in March 2003.

Ninety-two prisoners were wounded in the mortar attack on the U.S.-run Abu Ghraib prison, 25 of them seriously, said Col. Jill Morgenthaler, a U.S. military spokeswoman.

"This isn't the first time that we have seen this kind of attack. We don't know if they are trying to inspire an uprising or a prison break," Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt told The Associated Press.

All of the casualties were security detainees, meaning they were suspected of involvement in the anti-U.S. insurgency or of being part of Saddam Hussein's ousted regime. The prison houses some 5,000 security prisoners. U.S. Marines patrolling Baghdad discovered the area the mortars were fired from, but the insurgents had fled, Morgenthaler said.

The attack was the bloodiest against the sprawling prison complex in western Baghdad. In August, six security prisoners were killed in a mortar attack on the lockup, which was once Saddam's most notorious prison.

In addition to the 100th American killed, four U.S. soldiers were wounded in the roadside bombing in Mosul, Lt. Col. Joseph Piek said. Three Iraqi civilians also were wounded, he said.

At least 1,100 Iraqis have been killed in fighting since the start of the month, according to an AP count based on reports from hospitals and both Iraqi and U.S. officials.

Also Tuesday, Iraqi security forces, some wearing flak jackets and carrying weapons, moved back into the besieged city of Fallujah, part of an agreement between U.S. officials and local leaders aimed at ending hostilities. The accord calls on insurgents to hand in their weapons and allows civilians to return.

U.S. officials have warned that if guerrillas do not surrender their weapons, Marines are prepared to storm the city.

"If the peaceful track does not play itself out ... major hostilities will resume on short notice," U.S. spokesman Dan Senor said.

Announcements on U.S. military-run radio broadcast into the city called on residents to turn in machine guns, grenade launchers, missiles and other heavy weapons to Iraqi security forces or at the mayor's office.

Senor would not comment on whether any guerrillas had turned in weapons, but cautioned that "time is running out."

Marines were under orders not to fire on Iraqis carrying weapons but not aiming them in case they were heading to turn them in. Until now, Marines could shoot at anyone with a weapon or wearing the black uniform typically worn by insurgents, said Capt. Shannon Johnson.

One group of men was seen "actively brandishing" and loading rocket-propelled grenade launchers Tuesday, Marine Lt. Col. Brennan Bryne said. Troops hit the group with mortars, killing eight and destroying three vehicles, he said.

Fallujah was largely peaceful Tuesday, and there were cars filled with returning Iraqi police at a U.S. checkpoint.

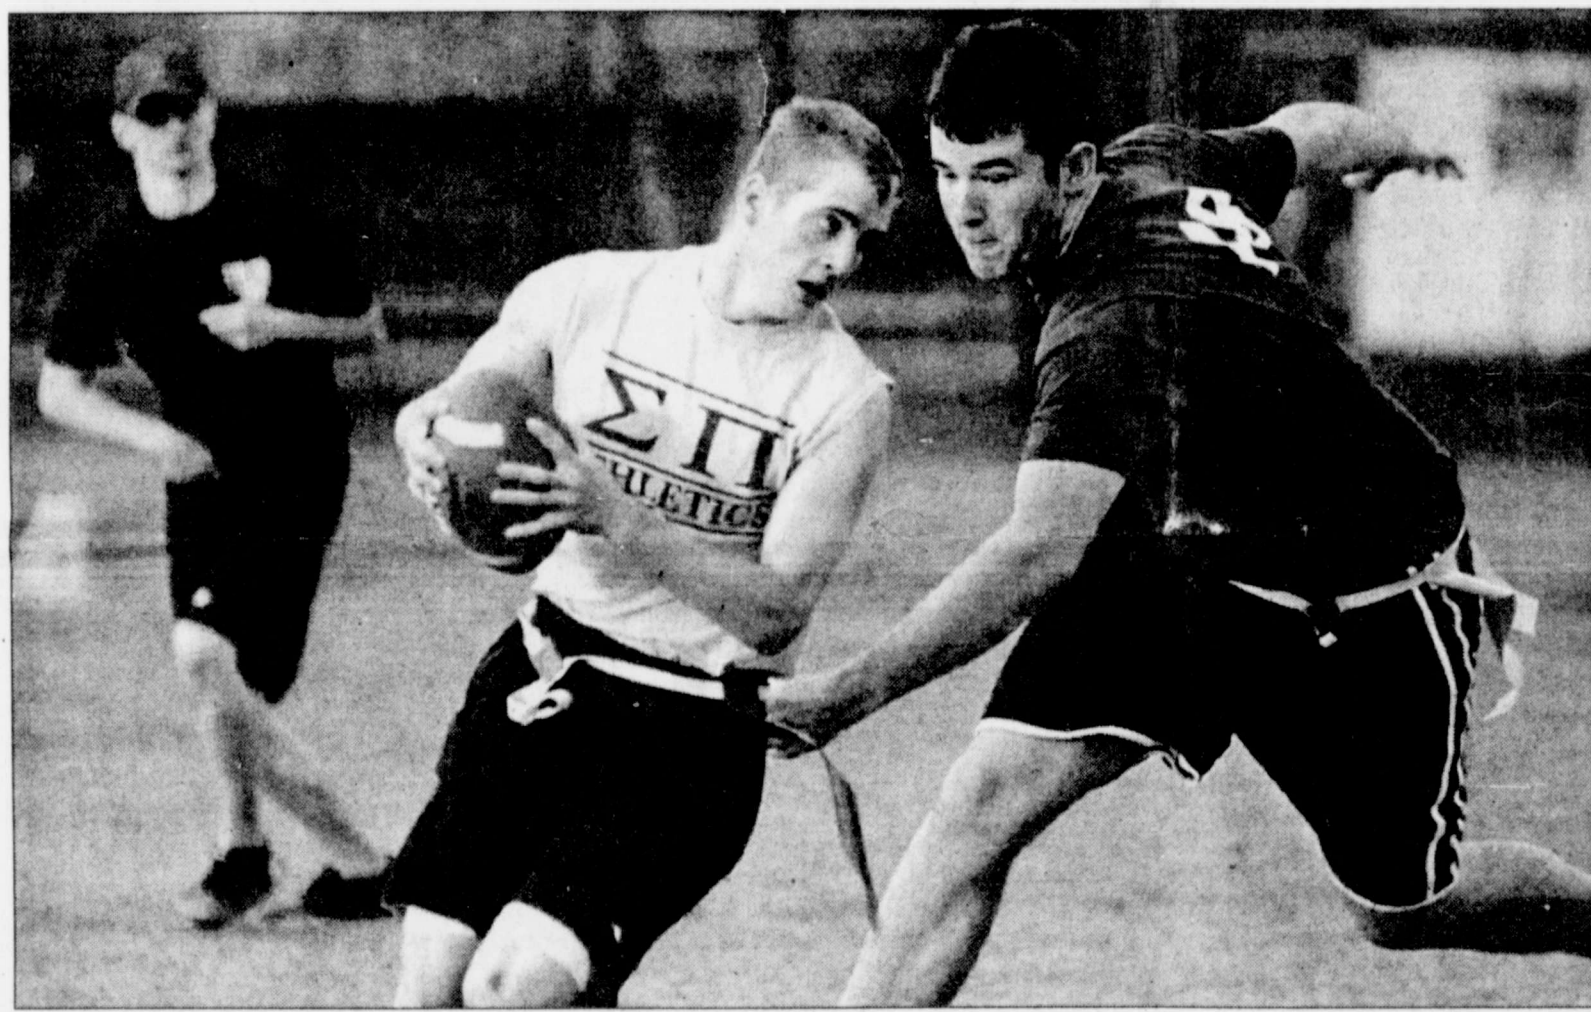

Iraqi families also lined up at the checkpoint. As part of a deal announced Monday, the U.S. military agreed to let 50 families a day back into the city, but the lines at the checkpoint were so long Tuesday that some 150 people had to be turned away, said Capt. Ed Sullivan.

Kimmitt acknowledged Tuesday that U.S. soldiers shot and killed two Iraqis working for

Lubbock sheriff's office investigating slaying of woman

By Andrew Bell/The University Daily

The Lubbock County Sheriff's Office officially opened a murder investigation after the results of an autopsy revealed blunt force trauma was a contributing factor in the death of a woman found west of New Deal.

On Monday morning, authorities were called to County Road 5700, which is located about 3 miles west of New Deal. A man on his way to work spotted the body on the road and made the call to authorities.

Deputy Paul Scarborough said the officers found the deceased body of Linda Trevino Carbajal, 21. Then, the authorities sealed the area off and began processing the crime report.

After the discovery, the investigators spent the rest of the day working with the medical examiner's office to identify the body, contact next of kin and conduct an autopsy, Capt. Bill Drewell said.

The autopsy revealed the contributing factor to Carbajal's death was blunt force trauma to the head. Authorities will not know more about the condition of Carbajal's body until more tests come back.

"Toxicology usually takes two to three weeks to get the complete report," Scarborough said.

Some in the county have expressed concern that the alleged murder of Carbajal is similar to an alleged murder that occurred in July. Cynthia Palacio, 21, was found dead in a rural area west of Slaton. According to the Sheriff's Office, no arrests have been made in connection to the case.

Scarborough said there are links to the two cases, but it is too early in the investigation to make any confirmed connection between the cases. The deputy said the similarity between the two is both were young, female prostitutes, but the office would need to investigate more before making any connections.

In the mean time, Scarborough stressed the need for anyone who had contact with Carbajal in the recent past should call the office at 775-1480 or 775-1406.

Iraqi leaders set up tribunal to try Saddam Hussein

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi leaders have set up a tribunal of judges and prosecutors to try ousted dictator Saddam Hussein and other members of his Baathist regime, a spokesman announced on Tuesday.

Salem Chalabi, a U.S.-educated lawyer and nephew of the head of the Iraqi National Congress, was named as general director of the tribunal, and he has named a panel of seven judges and four prosecutors, INC spokesman Entefadh Qanbar said.

The tribunal, with a 2004-2005 budget of $75 million, will also prosecute will members of Saddam's regime who are charged, Qanbar said.

A date has yet to be set for the trial of Saddam, who was captured by U.S. troops in December and has since been held by U.S. troops at an undisclosed location in or near Baghdad.

The court and prosecutors will determine charges against Saddam and his former officials, Qanbar said, adding that more judges will be hired for the tribunal.

The judges and prosecutors will undergo training, including in international law, war crimes and crimes against humanity, he said.

A committee of Iraq's Governing Council selected Chalabi as head of the court under a law passed earlier by the council and approved by top U.S. administrator L. Paul Bremer. The INC, headed by council member Ahmad Chalabi, has a seat on the committee.

Since Saddam's regime fell, some 300,000 bodies were found buried in mass graves, victims of his regime's persecution of political enemies, Kurds and Shiite Muslims, and other groups, U.S. officials say. Saddam's military also used chemical weapons against troops and civilians during the Iran-Iraq War in the 1980s and during a Kurdish uprising.

Flags lowered in memory of death

By Sally Gunter/The University Daily

The flags in Memorial Circle flew at half staff on Monday in memory of a Texas Tech student who died.

Brian David Wilson, a third-year Tech law student from Binghamton, N.Y., committed suicide April 9 in Plainview.

"It is a terrible tragedy for him and his family," said Sally Post, interim director of News and Publications and spokeswoman for Tech. "We feel deeply for his family."

Authorities said they believe Wilson could have been connected with a shooting homicide in Lubbock on April 8 involving his wife and a Lubbock male.

Timothy Graves Smith, 28, died at the scene from gunshot wounds suffered during the attack. Wilson's wife, Shelly Ann Wilson, was taken to University Medical Center. Patient information officials at UMC said Shelly Wilson was no longer in the hospital.

Lubbock police officers responded to a call at 10:40 p.m. on April 8 at 8204 Vernon Ave., according to the police report.

A witness told officers she heard shots fired following the end of the local news. The gunshot was followed by a female scream and four to five additional shots.

The witness ran to the window where she told police she saw a 6-foot tall white male weighing about 200 pounds fleeing the scene of the crime. The suspect was wearing blue jeans and a dark colored T-shirt, according to the police report.

Officials of the Plainview Police Department said a hotel clerk at the Days Inn called the department at 6 a.m. The clerk had recognized the description of the suspect of Lubbock murder as a person who had checked into the hotel at midnight.

Committees formed to analyze Tech's compliance

MONEY MATTERS: Groups organized to ensure university's accreditation.

By Michael Castellon/The University Daily

The process of earning and maintaining accreditation for a university is a challenging task. How a university is perceived and evaluated by its governing accreditation body plays a major role in how a university is perceived by potential students, faculty and funding dollars.

The review process serves to maintain and evaluate the quality of education offered by colleges and universities, and can have a major impact on the value of a degree offered by an institution.

At Texas Tech, two committees have been formed to analyze both the university's current compliance status, and determine what areas of compliance require improvement.

The Compliance Certification Committee will offer a final report in August, and will submit the report to the Southwest Association of Colleges and Schools, Tech's accrediting organization. SACS is expected to vote on the university's accreditation status in December.

One category Tech officials are hoping to improve on is student to faculty ratio. Earlier this year, Tech President Jon Whitmore announced a plan that would allow for the hiring of about 100 new faculty during the next three years.

"Making sure we have an adequate student to faculty ratio is an important part of compliance," Vice Provost Jim Brink said. "This is quality hiring that's going to be taking place. (Whitmore) has admonished to deans and department chairs to hire quality faculty."

Gary Elbow, a professor of geography and faculty representative to SACS, said the Compliance Certification Committee is currently identifying and addressing weaknesses that exist within the university's Operation Policies.

"Most of what we're doing is pretty technical stuff, like O.P.'s that need to be cleaned up and brought into line, but there are no crises," he said. "A

Priest sentenced for sex abuse convictions

LEITCHFIELD, Ky. (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest will serve eight years in prison after being convicted on charges that he sexually molested two boys 30 years ago.

The Rev. James Hargadon, of Louisville, was found guilty by a Grayson Circuit Court jury. The jury of five men and seven women reached the verdict Monday evening after about 90 minutes of deliberations. The penalty phase of the trial ended early Tuesday morning, Commonwealth's Attorney Kenton R. Smith said.

Hargadon, 76, was convicted on two counts of indecent or immoral practices with another, Smith said. He was sentenced to eight years on each count, but the sentences will be served concurrently, Smith said.

Hargadon's bond was revoked and he reported to the Grayson County Detention Center Tuesday morning, Smith said. He will be formally sentenced at a later date, Smith said.

The victims, Lawrence Thompson, 44, of Louisville and John Kaelin, 43, of Waxahachie, Texas, testified that Hargadon befriended them while they were students at St. Polycarp School in Pleasure Ridge Park, where Hargadon was pastor.

They testified that Hargadon plied them with alcohol and marijuana at a cabin at Rough River and later performed oral sex on them. The cabin was in Grayson County.

NASA launches test on Einstein predictions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NASA on Tuesday launched a $750 million satellite conceived during the Eisenhower administration to test two of Albert Einstein's fundamental predictions about the universe.

The Gravity Probe B satellite blasted off from an ocean-side pad at Vandenberg Air Force Base at 9:57 a.m. PDT. The launch, aboard a Delta II rocket, came one day after officials scrubbed an earlier attempt.

The satellite was to separate from the rocket and begin its 18-month mission 75 minutes after liftoff.

The launch of the 6,800-pound, Lockheed Martin Corp.-built spacecraft marked the end of the longest development period of any mission in the history of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Scientists first proposed what became Gravity Probe B in 1959, a year after the launch of the first American satellite and the creation of NASA. Over the decades, it weathered more than a half-dozen attempts at cancellation amid concerns over cost overruns and technical hurdles.

The Earth-orbiting satellite was built to test two of Einstein's predictions about the nature of space and time, and how the rotating Earth warps and twists the fabric that combines the two.

Scientists at Stanford University designed the spacecraft around four spheres of quartz the size of ping-pong balls. They are the most perfect spheres ever made.

Police fire tear gas at Haiti recruiting drive

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Police fired tear gas and U.S. Marines blocked the entrance of the police academy in the Haitian capital on Tuesday as hundreds of candidates stormed the building during a recruiting drive.

The police used batons to beat back recruits and called off the recruiting drive after several people reportedly were injured in the incident.

Haiti's interim government began the drive on Monday in an effort to replenish the nation's depleted police force. Hundreds of officers, fearing reprisal attacks because of their loyalties to ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, fled their posts when rebels launched an armed rebellion that ousted Aristide on Feb. 29.

The government fired 150 of the former officers last week for leaving their posts or for ethics violations. Dozens more have fled the country.

Most of Haiti's 8 million people are without jobs and live on less than $1 a day, fueling desperation among the masses.

"We were shoved back. The police attacked us," said Louis Hubert, 29, an electrician and plumber who was among the potential recruits. "There were lots of gun shots. There was also tear gas, plus they beat us with their batons."

Until elections are held next year, the interim government has said it will work to create much-needed jobs in the country.

Murder charges filed in death of boy found in oven

HOUSTON (AP) — A Beaumont man was formally charged with murder Tuesday for the death of a 6-year-old boy found in an oven.

Kenneth Lee Pierott, 27, is accused of killing Tre-Devin Odoms, who was left overnight in an oven at the boy's Beaumont home Thursday. The boy, the oldest son of Pierott's girlfriend, was found dead the next morning.

"Kenneth Lee Pierott, Jr. told (his brother) he placed Tre in the oven on 600 degrees and left him there all night," Sheila K. Barton, a detective with the Beaumont Police Department, said in an affidavit Tuesday.

According to the court document, Pierott believed the child was "draining the life" from his 2-year-old son, Jacory, and "he needed to kill Tre so that Jacory could breathe."

Preliminary autopsy results indicated the boy died of asphyxiation. He had no burn marks or visible injuries, Justice of the Peace Paul Brown said.

Osama bin Laden demonstrates resilience despite U.S. reassurances

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's top counterterrorism and intelligence officials have reassured Congress repeatedly about the significantly diminished capabilities of al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden.

Yet outside experts note that bin Laden has evaded capture during almost three years of hot pursuit by U.S. and other forces and remains able to communicate an increasingly sophisticated and targeted message to possible followers worldwide.

"I don't know how marginalized he is," said Brian Jenkins, a terrorism expert at the RAND Corp. research group.

"If you were giving a briefing in bin Laden's headquarters, you could say: 'We have had a difficult 31 months, to be sure. We have lost our training bases in Afghanistan. They have arrested a number of our brothers worldwide, including a number of our most talented operational planners.'"

At the same time, Jenkins added: "But you could go on to say: 'This is terrific. We have survived 31 months of an intensive global assault by the world's greatest power.'"

Bin Laden is believed to have been hiding for months along the rugged, ill-defined border between Afghanistan and Pakistan. Military leaders there expressed confidence early this year that they'd get the world's most wanted fugitive by year's end.

Officials at home were more circumspect. Now, even in the region, military officials have backed down from those claims.

Jenkins and other experts say this shows how nimble and elusive bin Laden actually is.

Consider, they say, bin Laden's unusual seven-minute audio message delivered to Arab television networks last week. In it, bin Laden offered European nations "reconciliation" — that is, a truce — if they would pull their forces out of Muslim lands and commit to ending attacks on Muslims or interfering in their affairs. In exchange, al-Qaida would stop operations against them, bin Laden said in the tape. The offer expires in three months.

Inside universities, think tanks and the government, bin Laden observers puzzled over his motives and aims.

One U.S. counterterrorism official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said U.S. officials think the message may be "a trial balloon of sorts." Unlike previous recordings, this one offers the peace deal with Europe.

Although the message contains tones and phrases often used by Islamic radicals, some who know bin Laden's rhetoric said the message lacks the poetic flourishes and historical references characteristic of many of his previous messages. This one, too, is relatively free of references to Islam, despite the usual militarist Islamic tones.

To show that he remains up on current events, even while apparently hiding out in desolate mountains at the Afghanistan-Pakistan border, bin Laden refers in the tape to Israel's March 22 killing of Hamas founder Sheik Ahmed Yassin.

Much of the message's focus on contemporary political arguments. For instance, bin Laden refers to opinion polls that indicate Europeans want peace, and he refers to war profits of Halliburton, once headed by Vice President Dick Cheney, and to the personal interests of the "White House gang."

U.S. officials contend that the existence of such a tape, with nearly month-old news, doesn't mean that the al-Qaida leader has access to high-tech communications. And that the tape is audio, rather than video, means fewer people and less security were required to produce it.

Nevertheless, it shows he still can communicate, many note.

And he may be trying to display his flexibility, testing to see if he can appeal to a new, broader audience of anti-war constituencies in Europe and the United States, Jenkins said: "Classic left-wing stuff."

"It is a pitch to the streets," Jenkins said. "This is good late '60s imperialist rhetoric."

European leaders, including those of Iraq war opponents France and Germany, rejected bin Laden's overture under the policy of no negotiations with terrorists. Many Europeans said they viewed the tape simply as an attempt to drive a wedge between the United States and its European allies by exploiting differences over Iraq.

U.S. Marine from Texas, among four killed in Iraq

HARLINGEN (AP) — A Marine from San Diego, Texas, was among four Marines killed in Iraq on Saturday, the Department of Defense said Tuesday.

Lance Cpl. Ruben Valdez, Jr., 21, was killed with his fellow Marines by enemy action in Al Anbar Province. The province includes areas in the Sunni Triangle where resistance to American troops had been fierce.

Also killed in the attack were: Capt. Richard J. Gannon, 31, of Escondido, Calif.; Lance Cpl. Michael J. Smith, Jr., 21, of Jefferson, Ohio; and Lance Cpl. Gary F. VanLeuven, 20, of Klamath Falls, Ore. They were assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 7th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, at Twentynine Palms, Calif.

Valdez had been awarded the Combat Action Ribbon, Good Conduct Medal, Presidential Unit Citation, National Defense Service Medal, and Sea Service Deployment Ribbon. He has been recommended for a Purple Heart. He had recently married a childhood playmate, Amy.

"He was a well behaved, respectful young man," said Luis Pizzini, principal of San Diego High School, where Valdez graduated in 2001. "He was always behaved, had a lot of friends — just a pleasant boy to be around. I knew the family well. He was an excellent son."

Valdez is the second soldier from San Diego to die in Iraq. "The mood is somber," Pizzini said. "This is the second soldier we've lost in 10 1/2 months, so everybody is saddened by the situation."

The other San Diego resident was Army Spc. Jose A. Perez, III, 22, who was killed in action in Taji, Iraq, after his convoy was ambushed on May 28.

Gunnery Sgt. Frank Patterson, a military spokesman, said information about the weekend attack that killed the four Marines was being kept vague for security reasons.

The Department of Defense also announced the death of another Texan. Army Pfc. Clayton W. Henson, a 20-year-old from Stanton, also was killed Saturday. His convoy was ambushed in Dwanayan, Iraq. Military officials said the ambush was still under investigation.

Family members had previously released information about Henson's death. Henson was assigned to the Army's 1st Squadron, 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment, in Fort Polk, La.

Henson's stepbrother, Lex Lewis, told the Midland Reporter-Telegram that Henson joined the Army because of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

"Once he said, 'If somebody doesn't do something about this, who's going to?'" Lewis said. "He had a strong sense of duty."

the U.S. funded Al-Iraqiya television station a day earlier, but said the two had been filming a military checkpoint in the central city of Samarra and failed to stop despite repeated warning shots.

Cameraman Jasssem Kamel, who was wounded, said the U.S. soldiers opened fire after the group finished filming police and security posts and were driving to film the city's spiral minaret.

"We were not filming. We were just driving in a normal car," Kamel said.

Kimmitt said U.S. forces fired warning shots three times.

"After more warning shots, the vehicle didn't stop and continued to approach the base's gate and were engaged with direct fire," he said.

The deaths raise to 26 the number of Iraqi and foreign journalists and employees for news organizations killed in Iraq in the past year, according to the Committee to Protect Journalists.

Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, the top commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, visited soldiers outside Najaf on Tuesday and indicated there were no immediate plans to storm the southern city and end

"The issue of Sadr is bigger than Sadr. It's about the Shiites and the holy shrines. That's the challenge I have," Sanchez said.

Similarly, the Quality Enhancement Plan Committee is reviewing initiatives that increase the quality of output the university is offering to its students, staff and faculty. A major focus of that committee has been finding ways to increase awareness of ethics at the university.

"We need to establish a solid ethical base," Brink said. "What we want to do is start having courses on ethics, speakers on campus who promote ethics, and create a campus conversation that would promote ethics throughout our lives."

The decision to improve on areas of ethics, Brink said, was established by the results of a questionnaire distributed to students, faculty and staff.

"We received a lot of feedback, especially from students, that stressed the need for academic integrity and similar areas," he said. "We thought ethics could be a huge umbrella for these issues."

In addition, Brink said the university will examine components of everyday operation to evaluate compliance.

"Are the courses we're offering sufficient enough? Do we have adequate library facilities? These are the types of questions we have to ask in this process," he said.

Class gives students experience in market

By Andrew Bell/
The University Daily

Two days a week, several students in the Jerry S. Rawls College of Business Administration sit down, examine the stock market numbers, and determine what they want to do with almost $2 million.

These are the students in the Student Managed Investment Fund course, a class that gives business students real-world experience in money management for large corporations or businesses. The money comes from an endowment created by a former Texas Tech regent, James Sowell, and the class members use it to create profit in the Dow Jones Industrial and the S&P 500.

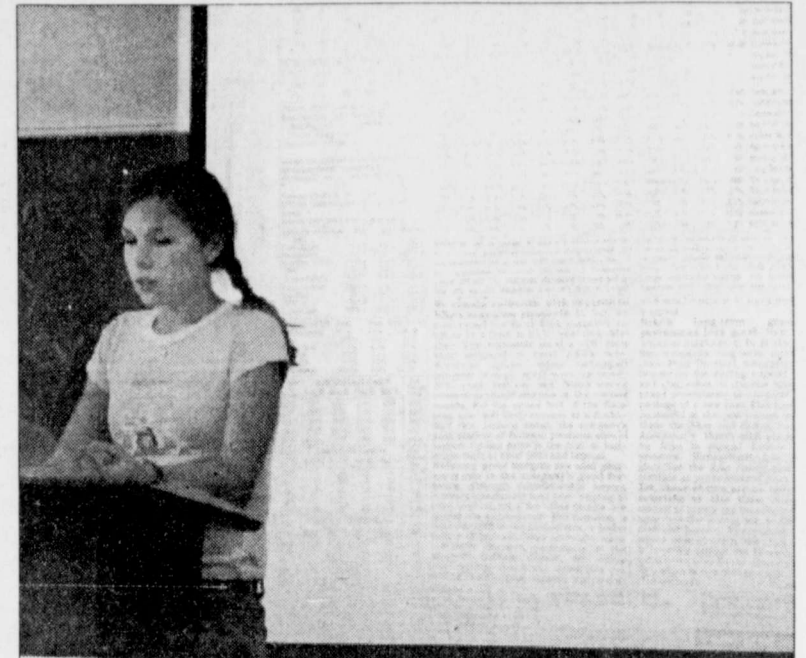

The class was formed in September 1997, and each group picks up where the previous semester's students left off.

William Dukes, the course instructor, said the class' year to date returns through February were almost 4.1 percent. The Dow, which is the most well known stock index for the stock market, showed returns at 1.24 percent, and the S&P 500 averaged returns of almost 3 percent, meaning the class made more money than the average investor in the market.

The numbers for last month were not as high, Dukes said, but they followed the trends for the market; most companies saw a decline in stock prices during March.

Students in the class make the decisions about how to invest the money, including what companies to invest in, how much to invest and what actions, if any, to take after the money is invested.

Dukes said undergraduate and graduate students can take the class for two semesters and receive credit for both. However, not everyone gets the experience of playing with a couple million dollars and getting credit for it. Only the best students in the college are given the opportunity to join the course, Assistant KELLY SPEARS, A junior finance and economics major from Waco, gives a presentation about what to look for when considering investing in certain companies. Spears' presentation was on Nike.

Dean for Finance and Administration Bob Rhoades said.

"Not many get to do this," he said. "Only the cream of the crop gets to join the class. There are only about 20 slots open for the course."

Additionally, making investment decisions is not the only thing participants do in the course. Each student is required to conduct research on a particular stock and present his or her information and recommendation to the class, Rhoades said.

During Tuesday's course, John Arrick presented his research on Barnes and Noble. As the world's largest bookseller, the graduate student from Odessa studying finance had to conduct a large amount of research to provide the numbers the class members needed to see.

The research included, but was not limited to, price strength, value, financial strength, projected growth and projected yield. The numbers also included the current debt of the company, all of which stockbrokers and analysts use to predict how the stock will behave and if it is a worthwhile investment.

In this particular case, Arrick said the investment was a good buy because the company is planning to open between 30 and 40 more stores in the next year, and the share offers wide capital gains potential over the next three-to-five-year period.

Class members make their decisions through voting slips that are handed out at the beginning of the class. Through the research and arguments the students provide, the class members decide to buy or sell stock within each company being considered.

Rhoades said the course is one that gives students real world experience with real world dollars. When the students decide to make decisions in financial matters, they directly see the effects of the actions, whether those consequences are good or bad.

Shane Smith, a second-year finance graduate student from Amarillo, said the class is probably the most realistic course offered by the college. Essentially, the course will provide him the information necessary to move into the field of security analysis after he graduates.

"If you are looking for a good quote," he said, "it is a good way to apply what we learn in the classrooms."

Hold Bush administration accountable

America's safety depends on our ability to question Sept. 11 'war on terror'

As the situation in Iraq became increasingly dangerous this month, I found myself wishing the Bush administration was right: Saddam was an imminent threat and invading and subsequently occupying Iraq best served the so-called war on terror.

More than 600 American soldiers died (more than 100 this month alone, making April this war's bloodiest), more than 10,000 Iraqi civilians killed, and now there is an increasingly volatile insurgency that seems to be escalating out of control.

The "imminent threat" that long ago deteriorated into "WMD programs" and then into "Operation Iraqi Freedom" is being re-examined in light of the current violence in Iraq. This brings into sharp focus the question of whether the Bush administration misled the American public into war in order to push an ideological agenda that is now finally beginning to come to light.

True to form, the Bushies are out in droves spinning euphemisms in order to assure the American public the insurgents simply "hate freedom" and are threatened by the impending "transfer of power" on June 30. To whom the power will be transferred remains a lingering uncertainty, but that is yet another minor detail in the minds of the men who went to war on false pretenses and had no plan for what to do afterward.

I find this an important point to raise on a campus such as this one. I am sure there are others that share my disappointment and disgust for what the Bush administration envisions for the country and the world. But alas, I am also sure we are in the minority.

For that reason, I will address attacks made on the credibility of the men and women who support the notion that Bush and his band of neocons had plans to invade Iraq long before 9/11 and attempted to "fit" intelligence to that purpose.

Over the weekend, news of Bob Woodward's book dominated the news and with it came more questions of the war plan prior to 9/11. Woodward had long been criticized for his credibility, as well as his usage of seemingly "insider" information. This does not mean, however, that all his assertions are unequivocally wrong.

The most notable before Woodward, of course, is Richard Clarke, the former counterterrorism chief for the Bush administration and a man who has worked for the last three administrations before them. Clarke's most striking characteristic is that although he was regarded as somewhat of a maverick or alarmist within the national security community, no one who knows him doubts his genuine contribution and service to this country.

As the administration feels the mounting pressure and more documents are declassified, Clarke's assertions of the administration's preoccupation with Saddam and lack of urgency in the fight against al-Qaida are indeed supported. What seems to matter here has less to do with Clarke's credibility than with what he's been saying: The same things many others have been saying.

Rand Beers, former counterterrorism advisor, recently retired Lt. Col. Karen Kwiatkowski who worked for the Pentagon, former intelligence analyst Greg Theilman, not to mention Paul O'Neill and Joseph Wilson ... they all have been outspoken in their criticism of the Bush administration's policies and tactics and have all been publicly attacked directly and indirectly by the administration.

Are they all wrong?

The general attitude of the White House, which was perfectly demonstrated by Rice's testimony in front of the 9/11 Commission is one of little accountability and lots of secrecy.

Rice masterfully "ate up" valuable time with her grand historical recounts during her intro. But, the same time she couldn't be bothered to remember whether or not she relayed infinitely important information to the president dealing with national security (she is only the National Security Advisor). She continued to take no responsibility for herself or the administration because of "systemic" problems in the government that prevented efficient sharing of intelligence.

The White House certainly had no trouble invading Iraq on shaky intelligence. But the now famous PDB on Aug. 6, 2001, entitled "Bin Laden Determined to Attack Inside the United States" wasn't enough. It was "historical" information apparently.

Do I think Sept. 11 could have been prevented? Probably.

Would I have acted appropriately had I been in the administration's shoes? Probably not.

For me, the issue is not to place blame on the current administration or any previous administration (however much some accountability is called for) for what happened on 9/11. What is more important is that we begin to hold our leaders accountable for TODAY and demand those entrusted with our security find what went wrong and work to create a viable plan for ensuring our safety in the future.

How can we expect such a thing from an administration that is notoriously secretive and suspiciously devoted to a plan that has less to do with terrorism than with a vision of real political domination and power?

In an era of international politics that demands creativity and cooperation with the rest of the world, can we as Americans depend on our current leadership? This is a time for our generation to stop being passive and apathetic. We are inheriting this world we live in. It is up to us to look discriminatively at our leaders and the choices they are giving us. We must then decide if they are what they say they are or if someone else's interests are being served.

Letter to the Editor

Fight for your freedom of speech rights

When I saw the heading "Freedom of Speech?" in giant text in the April 19 edition of The UD, I expected an intelligent discussion of Texas Tech's policy on this important subject — but then I saw it was in the sports section.

While the issue of profane chanting at sports events seems important to many students here, I believe they are missing the larger point.

Of all the state schools in the country, Tech has one of the most oppressive policies regarding student speech.

To quote the Student Affairs handbook, "For any free expression activities outside of the forum areas, a request must be submitted to the Center for Campus Life."

Universities should be havens of enlightenment through shared ideas and discussion; besides, this policy being contrary to the general goal of higher education, it is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States to so blatantly deny free speech rights to students.

Why is this so important? I mean, do real people feel compelled to get on soapboxes on campus just to preach their opinions to passers-by? I know I don't. However, as a student whose political opinions are in the minority at this school, it scares me that my ability to speak out when and where I want is entirely contingent on the administration's approval. If my right to speak out depended on the America I know, and I would not want to live here anymore. Should the standard be any different for a university administration?

I promise one day many of you will find yourselves in a situation wherein your viewpoint is being repressed, and you will have no choice but to speak out; but if you fight for free speech today, it will pay off tomorrow.

I won't remember 'The Alamo'

Movie about famous battle of the Lone Star State doesn't even deserve to be given one-star rating

I had anxiously awaited the debut of "The Alamo" for months. It came out the day after my 23rd birthday, and all I wanted as a gift from my friends was a free ticket to see this film.

Like the fat boy going to see the rivers of chocolate in Willy Wonka's factory, I entered the theater with much anticipation. This film was supposed to be the most dramatic and historically accurate depiction of Texas' most legendary battle. I looked forward to a pleasant deviation from the previously sensationalistic portrayals of this pivotal event in Texas history.

I was sorely disappointed. The UD's film critic, James Eppler, aptly gave the film a poor review, and he spoke with authority, calling it "bland and mediocre."

Then, Kenneth J. Kanipe wrote a letter to the editor that ran Monday, in which he described the film as both "very entertaining" and "historically accurate."

I believe Eppler already demonstrates in his review why the film is not that entertaining. As the film critic for three years, I think he is more than qualified to do so.

Now I'm going to tell you why it is not historically accurate, which is something I am qualified to do.

One such inaccuracy is in the casting of Jim Bowie. In "The Alamo" he is played by Jason Patrick, who stands at least a few inches shorter than any of his costars, none of which is an imposing figure himself.

Yet the real Jim Bowie was a daunting figure, probably about 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing in around 250 pounds.

Additionally, I think the movie overdramatizes the conflict of authority between Bowie and Col. William Barrett Travis. Their little squabbles play out more like an episode of "The Real World" than a discussion between two respected fighting men.

Though there certainly would have been conflicts of interest, Bowie would have understood that when Colonel Neill left because of illness, he left command in the hands of Travis.

The most persistent and almost comical inaccuracy, however, pertains to the use of artillery. As the Mexican army surrounds the Alamo, Davy Crockett comments that the Mexicans will likely bombard the Texans incessantly, so as to deprive them of sleep, a scenario that, had it played out that way, would have been quite realistic.

Then, amazingly, after one bombardment, not a single piece of Mexican artillery fires a shell for the remainder of the film. Then, despite the fact that a small Mexican band is the only thing depriving the Texans of sleep for 12 days (this number accounts for the one bombardment), the Texans still appear exhausted on the morning of the attack.

The next and most glaring pair of inaccuracies occurs during the apparently hastily filmed Battle of San Jacinto. In the film the Mexican army stares blankly as the Texans charge the field of battle.

Jason Lenz

Like the fat boy going to see the rivers of chocolate in Willy Wonka's factory, I entered the theater with much anticipation. This film was supposed to be the most dramatic and historically accurate depiction of Texas' most legendary battle.

Though the movie makes the viewer think the Mexicans were quite unsurprised, they are still routed handily.

In reality the Mexicans were initially caught entirely off guard at San Jacinto. The battle began at roughly 3:30 p.m., and thus most of the army was likely dosing through an afternoon siesta, and they had underestimated the willingness of Sam Houston's army to fight. These reasons, as well as a convenient topographical depression in the battlefield that shielded the Texans from direct fire, resulted in a victory for Texas in roughly 18 minutes (which I would venture to say is the amount of time spent on filming the scene).

Then, there is Houston's battle cry, consisting only of "Remember the Alamo!" However, if the film is going to take the time to take us all the way through San Jacinto, then it most decidedly should have depicted the massacre at Goliad, where roughly 350 captured Texans and immigrants from the United States were lined up and shot on March 27, three weeks after the fall of the Alamo. 28 of them escaped and told Houston of the slaughter.

Interestingly, Houston had wanted to shift attention away from the Alamo, and so he instead encouraged his army to avenge the deaths of those massacred at Goliad. Thus, "Remember Goliad!" would have likely resonated even louder than "Remember the Alamo!" did on the banks of the San Jacinto.

These are but a few of the historical inaccuracies that bother someone like myself who watches "The Alamo." Couple these shortcomings with cinematic failures such as a cheesy "They got me!" death scene with a friend of Davy Crockett who may or may not have had two minutes of dialog prior to his demise and you get a film worthy of a nothing more than a poor review.

Well done, Eppler!

Kwame capitalizes on being No. 2

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The real game has just begun for "The Apprentice" runner-up Kwame Jackson.

Any regret over losing a job with Donald Trump to competitor Bill Rancic was quickly salvaged by a rush of offers and by Jackson's own ambitions to make the most of his reality TV fame.

"This was basically a chance to have NBC pay for a 15-episode Kwame commercial in a business environment," Jackson said of "The Apprentice."

In a phone interview from New York, Jackson said he is weighing offers from another famous billionaire, Mark Cuban, as well as the KFC fast-food chain. He's also starting his own company.

The offer from Cuban involves handling an investment portfolio and working on operations for the Dallas Mavericks, the basketball team owned by Cuban, according to Jackson.

Being No. 2 is turning out to be as much a problem for Jackson as it was for "American Idol" runner-up Clay Aiken, who has outsold winner Ruben Studdard.

"My theme is, 'Don't cry for me, Argentina,'" said Jackson, 30, a Wall Street investment manager before "The Apprentice."

Even the antics of Omarosa Manigault-Stallworth, whose scheming may have cost Jackson the top prize — a $250,000, yearlong job with Trump — is something he shrugs off.

"I have moved on, and every new endorsement deal makes me happy," he said.

During Jackson's final "Apprentice" test, staging a concert with Jessica Simpson, Manigault-Stallworth flubbed transportation for the pop singer and appeared to fib about it.

Does Jackson think she lied to him?

"There's no 'think' about it. It's 100 percent on the tape. There's no need to think about it. It's like watching Rodney King get beat: How did the bruise happen?" he said.

Jackson is starting an entertainment company, Legacy Communications Group, to produce films, video games and live events with a focus on concert series.

"Something I think people don't realize about contestants on the show is that we are true business people, we're not reality show 'Hey, I'm happy to be on camera' people," he said. "We're people who are focused on the bottom line and commercializing this opportunity."

One of the first Legacy projects: helping raise $2.5 million for a documentary on Florida State football coach Bobby Bowden, a project by filmmaker George Butler ("Pumping Iron" with Arnold Schwarzenegger).

Jackson is working with longtime friend Dave Smith, who encouraged him to use television as a means to the end of business success.

"When he first presented the idea to go on the show he sent me a note saying this could be a big opportunity for us to be like Matt Damon and Ben Affleck," who used their success with "Good Will Hunting" as a platform for other projects, Jackson said.

The KFC deal, reported to be $25,000 weekly for his endorsement of new menu items, needs a bit of seasoning.

"It's not because of the $25,000. I'm not really up for a publicity stunt. I'm more focused on, 'If you want to do a true endorsement deal, treat me like a businessman and let's do it,'" he said.

If he had bested Rancic, Jackson says he would also have picked the chance to oversee a 90-story building project in Chicago over managing a Trump-owned California golf course.

"If you can look back at a city skyline and say 10 years from now, 'I redefined that,' that's a lifetime legacy and I think it's great for Bill," he said.

And what will people connect to Jackson a decade from now?

"A tropical drink, a tropical island, a happy man. That's what it's about, living well," he said.

the reality of REALITY TV

Red Raiders, professor shares thoughts on reality TV craze

By Beth Aaron/The University Daily

Reality television has taken yet another turn with shows such as "Extreme Makeover," "The Swan" and MTV's "I Want A Famous Face" documentary.

Extreme Makeover tells the story of people working to shed pounds in a set period of time. Contestants who loose the specified amount of weight, are rewarded with plastic surgery procedures of their choosing, ranging from liposuction, breast augmentation and cosmetic dentistry.

Aimee Allred, a junior advertising major from Lubbock, said she understands the desire to get reconstructive surgery more than the need for cosmetic surgery.

However, she said she does not see the harm in small improvements.

"Maybe if you have a big wart on your nose you can get it removed," she said. "But in general, I think people should just be proud of who we are because that's what makes us individuals."

Allred said she does not think people should want to look like someone else, let alone make the move to alter their bodies at college age.

"I just don't agree with the ones that are trying to look like Barbie," she said. "This is the time when you find yourself and establish who you are."

Stephen Cook, associate professor of psychology at Texas Tech, said he sees little redeeming value in shows depicting plastic surgery as a means of boosting self-esteem.

"The media's portrayals of our self image are damaging," he said. "Our body image is linked to eating disorders, for one thing."

Cook said because so many television shows and other media focus on physical beauty, it is difficult for people to gauge how they should see themselves.

"Media does effect our perception of what's acceptable for body image," he said.

Although it is not unhealthy to want to improve oneself, Cook said, people should concentrate on eating right and exercising, not on plastic surgery.

MTV's "I Want A Famous Face" documentary portrays young people on a quest to look like their favorite celebrities including Pamela Anderson, Brad Pitt and Elvis Presley.

These people subject themselves not only to traditional cosmetic surgery procedures, but also to buttocks implants, bone shaving and lip implants.

Cook said he has heard that MTV does a good job at portraying both sides of plastic surgery — the pain and the benefits.

He said such ideas should not be thought of casually.

"You better think twice about this because it's really going to hurt," he said. "I wonder if they went back six months later if they'd really say their lives are that much better."

Emily Thornhill, a freshman psychology major from Austin, said she has watched the MTV documentary, "I Want A Famous Face."

She said likes that the show highlights different perspectives on plastic surgery.

Thornhill said a positive factor about such shows may be found in the fact that after watching one, it is difficult to remain on the fence about plastic surgery.

"Some people don't know one way or the other how they feel," she said. "I've learned personally that it's not worth it."

Cook said he believes outer beauty is not worth obsessing about because it is subjective and fades with age. He said he found it sad that so much time and energy is invested in the subject of physical beauty.

"Those people, even if they get surgery to look like someone else, they'll still get old," he said. "It's an elusive goal to reach perfection of physical beauty."

Raiders' bats pound ACU pitching staff

By Joey Kirk/The University Daily

Although the pitching was not up to par for either team, head coach Larry Hays said Texas Tech made some important swings to take the 19-9 victory on Tuesday night against Abilene Christian.

"We did some good things on defense and a lot at the plate," he said. "We didn't pitch a clean game, but they had too many walks and it put us to sleep."

Tech (25-12, 6-5 Big 12) recently broke into the top 25 rankings in RPI, after moving up 10 spots from the sweep against Kansas State this weekend. But Hays said Tuesday's game shows how important the arm on the mound is.

"I'm glad we got in the game," he said. "But I hope it's a reminder to the players that pitching dictates what happens."

Abilene Christian took the early 1-0 lead in the first after its third batter hit an RBI-single to bring around the first runner. Tech did not make up ground later in that inning, sending the Wildcats into the second with the lead.

Junior right fielder Madison Edwards knocked a base hit past the first baseman in the second before junior catcher Matthew Coco hit an RBI-double to the left centerfield for to tie the score 1-1. Junior shortstop Cameron Blair blasted a grounder down the third base line to send Coco to score, allowing Tech to take the 2-1 advantage.

With junior Barrett Plier taking over the mound at the start of the inning, a Tech error began the third inning sending a runner to score and setting up runners on the corners. Plier gave up three runs, after a sacrifice fly and a double. In two innings pitched, Plier took the win, striking out two batters and having no earned runs.

Tech filled the bases after junior left fielder Michael Mask hit a single and ACU's pitcher hit the next two batters, with one out remaining. On a full count, Edwards hit a single into centerfield, bringing around two runners. On the play, the center fielder had an error allowing the last two runners to score, setting the Raiders' ahead 6-4.

With 13 hits in the game for the Raiders, Edwards said Tech still has to understand the importance of the outing.

"These teams coming in on Tuesdays may be D-II, but we don't take them lightly," he said. "It's a lot better than scrimmaging ourselves."

A triple by Edwards got things rolling for the Raiders in the sixth. Junior center fielder Cody Fuller was hit by a pitch, then Coco reached first on an error by the third baseman, loading the bases. Blair hit a weak grounder to the first baseman, but an error sent Edwards to score.

Junior designated hitter Dallas Braden made a sacrifice bunt to bring around Fuller, then junior first baseman Josh Brady hit a three-run shot over the fence, upping Tech's lead to 11-4. The Wildcats answered back with two runs in the top of the seventh, bringing it within five runs.

Brady said even though Tech put a lot of runs on the board, the players were not focused on the game, and that's how ACU managed to score nine times.

"A lot of runs were scored today," he said. "But I think we were looking ahead too much to this upcoming weekend and Oklahoma."

Senior Steve Gooch gave up two walks and a hit in the eighth, causing pitching coach Travis Walden to go to the bullpen for senior Juan Razo. He saw the bases loaded when he came into the game. A single brought around one runner, but two strikeouts helped Tech's effort. On the next pitch, another single sent two runners to score, making it three for the Wildcats in the eighth. In the bottom of the inning with the bases loaded, Blair stepped up to hit a grand slam over the leftfield wall to put Tech up by 10 runs.

HUTCH STILGENBAUER/The University Daily

Blair said there was no explanation for the grand slam except the West Texas wind.

"I just think the wind got a hold of it," he said. "There were a bunch of balls pitched, guys got on base, and I got it over the fence."

The last knock led the Raiders to the victory, along with Tech getting advantage thanks to six Wildcat errors.

It is the Raiders' seventh consecutive win this season.

Tech will look to extend the streak to eight against Big 12 opponent Oklahoma at 6:30 p.m. Friday at Dan Law Field. The Raiders will face the Sooners again at 2 p.m. Saturday and at 1 p.m. Sunday to wrap up the three-game series.

James claims NBA Rookie of the Year

CLEVELAND (AP) — More than 45 minutes late to a news conference, LeBron James was one teen who didn't need an excuse.

He's exhausted. "They had to drag me out bed to put this suit on," James said Tuesday, when he won the NBA Rookie of the Year award. "I didn't want to get out. I thought I was going to practice when they woke me up this morning."

Hey, saving the Cleveland Cavaliers is hard work, and the 19-year-old James put the final touch on a remarkable season by becoming the rookie award's youngest recipient.

"I knew I would make an impact this year," said James, who easily beat Denver's Carmelo Anthony, also 19. "And I guess I did."

The 6-foot-8 guard made the jump from preps to pros look easy, somehow living up to the unprecedented hype. The No. 1 overall draft pick did more than just post jaw-dropping statistics night after night: He transformed Gund Arena into a hot spot, and he gave Cleveland fans reason to hope.

"He proved to all of us that he is up for a challenge. He exceeded all of our expectations and just kept raising the bar," Cavaliers owner Gordon Gund said.

James received 508 points, including 78 of a possible 118 first-place votes, to become the first Cleveland rookie honored.

Anthony, who left Syracuse after leading it to an NCAA championship as a freshman, finished with 430 points, including the other 40 first-place votes.

"People are going to think what they want to think," Anthony said. "I don't really know what else I could have done."

Dwyane Wade of the Miami Heat was third with 117 points in balloting by sports writers and broadcasters. Players received 5 points for a first-place vote, 3 for second and 1 for third.

"I thought it could go either way," said James, who praised Anthony for having a phenomenal season. "I thought it could be a split decision."

In any other year, Anthony probably would have won the award for statistics similar to James' and helping the Nuggets go from 17 victories to the playoffs.

But this season belonged to James, from his 25-point, nine-rebound, six-assist NBA debut at Sacramento through his rebounding windmill dunk to close his season at Madison Square Garden.

James followed Amare Stoudemire of the Phoenix Suns as the second straight rookie honored after turning pro directly from high school.

But that's where the similarities end. No player entered the league to as much fanfare as James. And the Akron native delivered on the court, while his wine-and-gold No. 23 jersey led NBA sales and his image was marketed from coast to coast.

James averaged 20.9 points, 5.5 rebounds and 5.9 assists, joining Oscar Robertson and Michael Jordan as the only NBA rookies to average at least 20-5-5.

"He just has it. It's all his attitude," Cavaliers coach Paul Silas said. "He has a knack for doing and saying the right thing and not in an antagonistic way. That's just not in him. He's humble, and he's about winning more than anything."

France on Armstrong's mind most

MACON, Ga. (AP) — Lance Armstrong isn't getting too worked up about another chance at Olympic gold.

Maybe that's because the Athens Games are just three weeks after he envisions himself coasting down the Champs-Elysees with a record-setting victory in the Tour de France.

"That's what I wake up thinking about every day," said Armstrong, who is competing this week in another tour, the Tour de Georgia.

Nothing — not even the Olympics — can deter his focus from winning a sixth straight Tour de France, something no other cyclist has done. When the subject shifts to Greece, the tone of indifference is unmistakable.

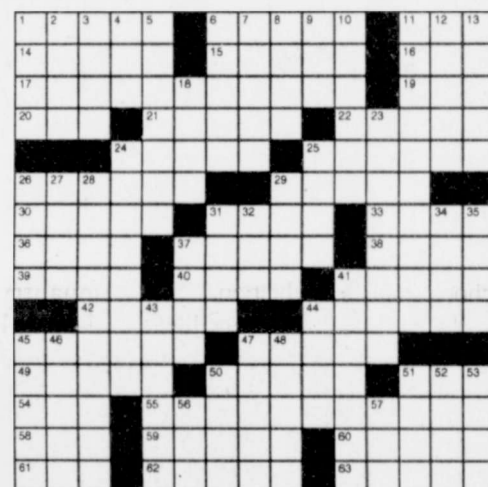

"No disrespect to the Olympics, but I'm focused on winning the Tour de France," Armstrong said Monday. "I'm committed to the Olympics, I guess. But to be honest, all the work I do on a daily basis is geared toward the Tour de France."

Armstrong hasn't had nearly the success in the Olympics that he's had in cycling's biggest event. He competed in the last three Summer Games — Barcelona, Atlanta and Sydney — but has only a bronze medal to show for it.

"The Olympics would be a highlight," he conceded. "I've always left disappointed. I would like to go back and fix the things that I thought I should have done better before."

Henderson running readily into 2004

DAVID JOHNSON/The University Daily

RUNNING BACK TAUREAN Henderson heads toward the end zone during Saturday's Red-Black Game for an 18-yard touchdown.

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

Each season Texas Tech football coach Mike Leach has been in Lubbock, the running game of Tech has increased in yardage. If that holds true for the 2004 campaign, running back Taurean Henderson may have more of a load to carry.

He bared the brunt of that load in the annual Red-Black Game this weekend with 50 yards in the scrimmage and an 18-yard touchdown run. He also played the role of receiver out of the backfield with five catches for 57 yards.

The 107 all-purpose yards could be just the tip of the iceberg for Henderson in 2004.

"I feel the sky is the limit. I gotta keep coming out there, keep my head focused, learn the plays, study the defense, keep in shape and listen to what my coaches tell me to do, and anything can happen," he said of any pressure mounting for the upcoming season.

His teammates saw how he played in Saturday's game, and quarterback Sonny Cumbie said Henderson did well and showed what to expect some fall.

"Taurean looked awesome," Cumbie said. "He's gonna be that way this fall. It's gonna be fun to watch."

What may have been fun to watch as the moves he put on defenders in the Red-Black Game.

Henderson is a fast, shifty back that can show power when he needs it, but his ability to make defenders miss may have played a role in his ascent to the No. 1 position in Tech's backfield. In fact, before the scrimmage Henderson watched a highlight film of himself during high school. It was just what he needed to relive the glory days and put the moves on Tech's defense.

"Seeing what I did in high school, I thought I could bring some of that out here (Saturday)," he said.

The junior running back from Gatesville brought the approach of wanting to contribute everything he could during spring workouts, much like the rest of the offense.

He said the defense came with the same mentality, so he is not the only one that is stepping up to the challenge set before them.

"The offense came out determined," he said. "We came out this spring with the determination to win and the determination to improve on both sides of the ball."

Improvement has been something on Henderson's mind.

His freshman year he ran for 793 yards and seven touchdowns. He added six more scores receiving and 633 yards. Last year he had fewer yards with 736 on the ground and 611 through the air, but he added three more touchdowns to his total from 2002.

He has also added weight each year. He is no longer the 175 pounds of his freshman year. He now weighs in at a beefier 200 pounds, but he has not lost a step on the field and is one of Tech's fastest players in the 40-yard dash.

Getting bigger and faster is part of becoming a better back in the Big 12 Conference, and Henderson is ready to take the heat from critics.

He also is ready and thankful for any praise he receives.

A local radio personality predicted at the scrimmage Saturday Henderson would be the best all-around back in the conference this fall. A bold prediction, but one Henderson is glad to hear.

"It feels good people are noticing my talent and my capabilities of what I can do on the field," he said. "It makes you want to come out there and work harder to better myself so when people come to watch the game you can give them what they came to watch."

"I feel the sky is the limit. I gotta keep my head focused, learn the plays, ... and listen to what my coaches tell me to do and anything can happen."

NFL eligibility rule arbitrary, unfair

The NFL is a hot topic in the judicial system this week and there isn't a murder or drug trial going on. How great.

In case anyone missed it, former Ohio State running back Maurice Clarett's case against the NFL was stayed by an appellate court meaning Clarett, and more importantly Mike Williams, cannot enter the NFL Draft this weekend.

Clarett had filed the suit to challenge the NFL rule barring players who have not been removed from high school three years from entering the league. He won his case and was allowed to enter the draft. The decision was appealed and stayed, and will next be heard by Supreme Court justice Ruth Bader-Ginsburg who will either deny Clarett's case or lift the stay.

So what does this all mean for the future of the NFL and under-21 athletes?

First of all, although Clarett's name is surrounding this set of events like a frat name to any type of cook-off, everyone needs to forget about him. The ramifications any decision will have on the future are more important than Clarett's career, or lack thereof.

If one does need a player to connect this with, connect it with Williams, the former USC All-American receiver who decided to leave college after Clarett's case was initially won. He hired an agent, borrowed lots of cash and subsequently won't likely be readmitted into NCAA athletics.

Kyle Clark

If Bader-Ginsburg sides with the NFL then Williams will have to watch from the couch for a year, trying not to bulk up on Lays potato chips while he watches Larry Fitzgerald and Roy Williams catch touchdowns. If she sides with Clarett the NFL will include Williams in a supplemental summer draft.

But the stakes for the NFL are much higher than for Williams. The NFL uses NCAA football. The NCAA serves as a training ground for prospective NFL players much the way Major League Baseball farm clubs serve to support the big league teams. The only difference is the NFL doesn't have to pay for it.

Instead of having to deal with immature, untested diamonds in the rough, the NFL has fully developed football players ready to make the leap to the professional ranks.

If the NCAA is being used, why don't they care? Because the pockets of the NCAA bigwigs are overflowing with money. College football is almost as much of a cash cow as the NFL. And in the current incarnation of both organizations NCAA football gets to keep its players for at least three years, allowing it to create superstars of players and benefit from their work in the process. Then it's off to the big league for players and the cycle begins again.

The NFL, during the span of this case, has made it clear it simply wants to protect younger players from the non-stop rigors of professional athletics and the bone-cracking hits pro athletes can inflict.

Get real. I know there are hits a 22-year-old can take that an 18-year-old can't, but players like Williams would not be any more prepared to wait a year after their sophomore season. What a patronizing idea.

I can see NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue stammering, "Hey Mike, I know you feel you're ready to play in the league but there are just some hits a 21-year-old body can take that a 20-year-old body can't. Sorry."

The NFL's number is completely arbitrary. The league simply likes the current system and does not want to change it. I can't argue with that much. I like the current system too, but it is not constitutional.

No business in the United States would make a rule stating applicants must complete three years of college. While many companies only select applicants who complete college, they don't have rules about it.

So why does the NFL need a rule? Why doesn't the NFL rely on its teams to not draft players that declare for the draft early?

Because the NFL isn't that stupid and neither are the teams in it.

Any team in the NFL would break its neck to draft Williams in the first round Saturday and league officials know it. The problem for the league is with players like Williams come hacks like Clarett and the gaggle of high school idiots who declared for the Draft this season.

Clarett and the high school runts aren't ready but Williams is. So to preserve a system that prepares runts to support a lucrative business, the NFL needs Bader-Ginsburg to agree with them.

Everyone has to play by the rules.

Fitzgerald impresses on, off field with manners

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Kevin Colbert could look out his office window the past two seasons and watch Larry Fitzgerald make the acrobatic grabs only a headed-to-the-pros receiver can.

The Steelers' director of football operations also saw Fitzgerald interact with his Pitt teammates, a sophomore by grade but an adult by nature. During games, Colbert noticed how Fitzgerald routinely flipped the ball to an official after scoring, rather than carrying out a choreographed celebration.

Still, for all the marvelous things Colbert saw Fitzgerald do up close and personal, what impressed him most was how Fitzgerald ate lunch.

He liked how Fitzgerald didn't rush through the food line, eager to eat quickly and be on his way, but took time to be polite. And Fitzgerald wasn't that way only with Steelers executives and Pitt officials, but also with the staff at the practice complex the two teams share.

"You see a kid like Larry Fitzgerald in the cafeteria, and how he acts around people, and you are impressed," Colbert said.

It was the same air of professionalism Fitzgerald invoked whenever he was in public, almost always in a neatly pressed suit and tie rather than the standard college athlete's sweat suit.

Raiders hit road after six-game homestand

By Adam Boedecker/
The University Daily

Many may associate being at home with feelings of comfort. Texas Tech designated player Elyssa Sigala, on the other hand, thinks a trip away from Rocky Johnson Field could be what the Tech softball team needs to get back on the winning track.

"Maybe being on the road is a change we need right now," the senior said.

The Red Raiders (19-30, 1-11 Big 12) will get the chance to go on the road for the first time in six games when they travel to Norman, Okla., to face the No. 18 Oklahoma Sooners (31-16-1, 5-6) in a doubleheader Wednesday with games at 5 and 7 p.m.

"We need to go there and build up some confidence to bring back here for Nebraska," Sigala said. "Maybe we need to get back on the road for a couple of games. Usually teams play better at home or sometimes on the road. That's what we need, I hope that's what we need anyway."

Head coach Bobby Reeves' softball background is in pitching, and when asked what the most important part of softball is, he gave a quick, abrupt answer.

"I think the No. 1 thing is we have to pitch better," he said. "The pitchers have to get in the circle and give us a chance to win. But we also have to play better defense for them."

Last week Tech suffered from sloppy defensive play, committing 15 errors in its previous three games and giving up 34 runs during the same time span.

After Sunday's 12-5 loss to Texas A&M, Reeves had his routine post-game meeting with his team in the outfield. After the team meeting Reeves let everyone go except his four pitchers who he kept for a more focused meeting — just about pitching.

"I just talked to them about our mindset and what their job is," he said. "They have to have confidence in their ability and not worry about what's going on around them. You just need to quit waiting for someone else to pick you up and go out there and take care of it yourself."

Reeves laid out the order of importance going into Norman in order for Tech to be successful.

"Going to OU we've gotta pitch better, play defense and score runs when we have runners on," he said.

Scoring with runners in scoring position was a problem last week for the Raiders as they left the bases loaded on numerous occasions, including three times in Sunday's loss to the Aggies — a game in which Tech got one less hit than A&M, but score seven less runs.

"It's a third base coach's worst nightmare," Reeves said, "getting them on base and not seeing them come home."

Reeves said the offense is in full swing right now and it is the least of his concerns.

"Any time you get 11 hits in Big 12 play, you're swinging the bats well," he said. "Some day those are gonna come around, it's all a mindset."

OU Catcher Heather Scaglione leads the Sooners with a .411 batting average, 13 homeruns and 38 RBIs, but Reeves said that is not all he is concerned with.

"The thing about OU is that they're a little down this year, but they know what it takes to win," he said. "Their main pitcher isn't 100 percent, but they have great hitters. They're struggling with errors like we are, but the bottom line is they don't make mental mistakes."

Center fielder Natalie Enderlin said the team is looking forward to the challenge of playing another ranked Big 12 opponent on the road.

"I think we're looking forward to OU," she said. "We'll be facing more good pitchers. We'll just have to cut down on our errors and get the pitching to work."

FIRST BASEMAN ELYSSA Sigala catches the ball for a put out during Tech's loss to Texas A&M on Sunday. The Raiders head to Oklahoma to take on the Sooners in a doubleheader.

Sparks flying as Cowboys prepare for draft

IRVING (AP) — Bill Parcells and Jerry Jones were still feeling each other out last year as they prepared for their first NFL draft together with the Dallas Cowboys.

Things are a lot more volatile this time.

"Some sparks have been flying," Jones said.

Don't get the wrong impression, though.

Far from being the clash of egos that some believe is inevitable, Jones describes the talks as "meetings with a lot of energy," generating the kind of healthy debate necessary to maximize the 22nd overall pick and four others in this weekend's draft.

He also quickly notes that scouts, assistant coaches and others in the organization are all part of the conversations.

"We've had some really good discussions," Jones said. "I really do feel we know where the values are. We know which players we have a chance to get or to pass up. When you weigh all that, we really ought to do one of our best jobs this year."

The Cowboys have glaring needs at running back, offensive line, cornerback and defensive end.

Running back is the most sizzling issue because of the team's legacy at the position. The Cowboys had just two seasons between Tony Dorsett's last carry and Emmitt Smith's first; this will be their second without Smith.

This draft lacks a can't-miss running back prospect, but it's worth remembering that Smith was the 17th pick in 1990. He also was the second RB taken.

The top candidates this year are Steven Jackson of Oregon State and Kevin Jones of Virginia Tech. Chris Perry of Michigan is generally considered third-best.

"There are probably six backs that can come in and make a contribution to the Cowboys in some manner," Jones said. "That's less likely to be on an every-down basis, but they can come in this year and make a contribution."

New England probably helped Dallas' chances by acquiring Corey Dillon on Monday. The Patriots have the pick before the Cowboys and no longer need a running back.

Whoever carries the ball for Dallas would certainly be helped by improvements on the line. However, Jones labeled this one of the weakest drafts in years for offensive linemen.

The Cowboys could use upgrades at guard and tackle on the right side, and possibly left guard, too, considering the way things are going with long-time stalwart Larry Allen.

Allen has been given permission to try finding a new team and already has visited Oakland and Detroit. Even if Allen returns, he's not the dominant player he once was.

Jones said the Cowboys can't focus on filling positions because they own no higher than the 20th pick in any round. Dallas was no lower than eighth the last three years.

"At the top of the draft, players usually distinguish themselves. You can point to something a player can bring to a team," Jones said. "When you get to where we are, their differences become more marginal."

That's why it is so important that every player is thoroughly evaluated. Jones believes the club has done a better job of that this year because Parcells hasn't been distracted by the startup issues he faced last year.

"We've got a good feel for the prototype of a player Bill and his staff prefer. That helps," Jones said. "Everyone is more candid and probably articulates their opinions better. I'd say there is less reservation on the part of any of our scouts or directors about disagreeing."

Jones said meetings have been extensive and intense the last three weeks. He spoke Monday while sitting at his desk looking at a list of every player likely to be taken the first five rounds.

"I know every one of them like the back of my hand," he said.

Rangers place Lewis on disabled list with stiff right shoulder

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers put starting pitcher Colby Lewis on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday because of a stiff right shoulder. Lewis is 1-1 with a 4.11 ERA in three appearances. The move was retroactive to Monday.

Georgetown hires Thompson III, follows father's footsteps

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Thompson III won't have to make a name for himself at Georgetown. "Pops" took care of that long ago. Ready to take on the pressure of living up to the legacy of his Hall of Fame father, Thompson III was hired Tuesday to coach the Hoyas back to national prominence.

"I am John Thompson's son. I have been John Thompson's son for 38 years. I'm pretty comfortable being John Thompson's son," said Thompson III, the coach at Princeton since 2000. "The pressure that comes along with that — no one's going to put more pressure on me than myself."
