Bush to face Sept. 11 commission questions

By Terence Hunt/Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush has a good idea about the questions he'll face and who will ask the toughest ones when he steps behind closed doors Thursday to respond to the commission investigating the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. His central theme is expected to be that he had no hint about when or where terrorists would strike.

The White House said the session would not be adversarial. "This isn't something where it's a game of gotcha," spokesman Scott McClellan said Wednesday.

Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney will meet jointly with the commission beginning at 9:30 a.m. EDT for what is expected to be several hours of questioning at the White House.

One of the most pressing issues is the allegation that the administration failed to make terrorism a top priority in the face of what CIA Director George Tenet has said was a system

"blinking red" with warnings.

Why didn't terrorism have a higher priority, "given the threat levels in spring and summer 2001?" former Indiana Rep. Timothy Roemer, a Democratic member of the commission, said in an interview.

Republican commissioner Slade Gorton said, "We're going to ask about the pre 9/11 attitudes and policies ... and what took place on 9/11 in terms of response and what each of them did."

One key question is how Bush dealt with information a month before the attacks that said al-Qaida seemed interested in hijacking a plane and planning attacks with explosives within the United States. Bush has said previously there was nothing in that Aug. 6 memo that "something is about to happen in America."

Unlike the commission's televised hearings

Tech honors its largest donor with statue in Business Administration building

By Michael Castellon/The University Daily

The largest donor of a cash gift to Texas Tech now has an additional fixture at the college named for him.

On Wednesday, Jerry S. Rawls' contribution of $25 million was honored during a ceremony at the Jerry S. Rawls College of Business Administration.

The sculpture, located in the first floor rotunda of the Business Administration building, is a stainless steel rendition of Rawls emerging from a wall measuring approximately seven feet high by five feet wide. Etched into 18-inch black granite tiles is text written by Rawls, as well as a view of the universe.

Created by artist Rosie Sandifer, the statue honors Rawls, who graduated from Tech with a bachelor's degree in engineering in 1967.

"It's interesting having a sculpture of yourself," Rawls said. "Rosie showed up, and she made me walk back and forth while she took between what seemed like 50 to 100 pictures of me, then she put calipers on my head. We all have high hopes for the College of Business ... high hopes and high expectations are what we're all shooting for."

Rawls co-developed a low-cost method of technology involving the production of optical communications, which eventually impacted the industry by dramatically lowering the cost of optical links for local networks and earning him a fortune.

The monument will become the centerpiece of the college's Hall of Honor, which will adorn a part of a new building, which is expected to be completed within the next five years.

Tech granted $18 million for research

MEDICAL MONEY: Grant part of three-year plan to investigate foreign animal science.

By Beth Aaron/The University Daily

Texas Tech is joining in a homeland security effort with Texas A&M by aiming to keep the agricultural food supply safe for consumers.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security granted Tech $18 million for research on foreign animal science on Wednesday. The designation is for a three-year span and is largely shared with Texas A&M.

Alberto P. Cardenas, Jr., director of federal relations for Tech in Washington, D.C., was elected in June 2003 by Chancellor Dr. David Smith as the lead liaison for homeland security research.

"I've been working on this for a year almost," Cardenas said. "Obviously we're very excited about this."

Other partners in the alliance are the University of Texas Medical Branch, the University of California at Davis and the University of Southern California. Cardenas said Tech's part in the effort will be to monitor the dairy, cattle and beef and swine industries in the High Plains area.

"What Tech's role in all this means is that we are helping to secure the food supply from terrorist attacker use," he said.

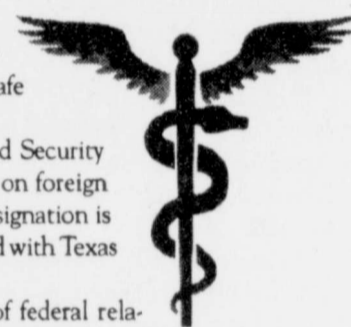

According to the press release, the university also will play a key role in communicating results of the research done by the alliance to producers and the general public.

"In addition to federal money," he said, "This will allow Tech to partner up with private industries to get more money to make the country and the food supply safer."

Cardenas said research will focus on foot and mouth disease but not on mad cow disease. Rift Valley Fever and avian influenza, also known as the bird flu, also will be closely examined.

Hoof and mouth disease can be carried by animals including cattle, swine and sheep and can be transmitted through consumption of the animal's meat. According to the World Organization of Animal Health, hoof and mouth disease is classified by lesions on hooves, tongue or nostrils. Animals suffering from the disease may become lame or die.

Sunni insurgents battle U.S. troops in Fallujah

By Jason Keyser/Associated Press

FALLUJAH, Iraq (AP) — A U.S. warplane fired its cannons on targets in Fallujah for a second straight night Wednesday after a day of fighting between Marines and Sunni insurgents in parts of the encircled city.

The American operations, carried on live television with images of fiery destruction, brought new international condemnation, and joint patrols by Marines and Iraqi police that were to have started

Thursday were delayed by a day.

The nighttime attack from an AC-130 gunship raised smoke and flames above Fallujah.

During the day, fighting broke out in at least three parts of the city. In the afternoon, U.S. forces dropped 10 laser-guided bombs — mostly 500-pound bombs and one 1,000-pound bomb — on buildings that guerrillas were firing from, Lt. Col. Brennan Byrne said.

Marine units moving into a position in southeast Fallujah came under fire, wounding one American in the shoulder, Byrne said. Warplanes were called in and dropped the laser-guided bombs, he said.

Insurgents also fired on Marines in northwestern Fallujah near a train station, and helicopter gunships were called to join the battle, Kimmitt said.

"What's going on are some terrorists and regime elements have been attacking our forces, and our forces have been going in and killing them," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld testily told reporters af-

Alcohol sales topic of discussion at Student Community meeting

By Sally Gunter/The University Daily

The purchase of alcohol within the city limits has become a new focus of the Texas Tech Student Government Association.

Members of the SGA and Lubbock residents gathered in the SGA office Wednesday evening for the Student Community Committee meeting to discuss the potential impact of alcohol sales within Lubbock.

Four alcohol-related deaths and more than 240 accidents occurred in 2001 on the path to the Strip, said Vance Ginn, SGA city issues committee chairman.

The long distance to the Strip from the interior of Lubbock is the main reason for this, he said. If alcohol was sold within the city, Ginn said the number of alcohol-related accidents in the area would decrease.

"It's not just for students here at Tech but citizens around Lubbock," he

Offices placing satellite desks throughout campus

By Andrew Bell/
The University Daily

In life, many people do not get a second chance to make a good first impression. To make the best impression on incoming and current students, Financial Aid, Student Business Services and Student Affairs at Texas Tech will aim to be available to students throughout the summer and fall.

Vice President for Student Affairs Michael Shonrock said Tech students have invested many resources and expenses to the university. In return, the campus should be willing to show they are serious about the student body and invest right back into the student population.

In order to accomplish this, the various departments will improve communications among them and set up stations and phone banks to answer the concerns and questions of Tech students and parents.

Before the fall semester began last year, Paul Blake said there were operational phone lines open for people to call and ask questions.

Essentially, the assistant director for the Office of Student Financial Aid said, parents or students could call the phone line after 5 p.m. When a representative answered the phone, that person would transfer the call to the department who could answer the caller's question. This worked because representatives from some departments would stay to field questions.

"We had call-ins with representatives from all over campus," Blake said. "Students could call after 5 p.m. and still get answers."

This aspect of customer service is something each department said they would like to incorporate. With information from a national survey, Shonrock said 14 percent of people leave an establishment, whether a store or a university, because of bad service or a bad product.

An inferior service or product is something the university is able to fix and, because of the investment each student puts in the university, Tech is working to develop more customer service for the students in the future, Shonrock said.

Mostly, students in focus groups or those who had conversations with the Student Government Association or President Jon Whitmore would like to alleviate the problem of the Tech Shuffle. Essentially, the Tech Shuffle refers to the walking students have to do throughout campus to get answers from various departments, such as Financial Aid and Student Business Services.

To alleviate the number of students shuffling in the fall, Shonrock said the Student Union Building should become a Texas Tech outlet store at the beginning of each fall. By this, the SUB would become an outlet for a number of departments to help students in the transition of college life during the week prior and the first week of school.

Blake said the best method for the Financial Aid office is to give the best possible information to the students when they need it. In the past year, the office has been able to do this through advertising in The University Daily and by attaching inserts to tuition bills.

However, Blake realizes the importance of making the office more accessible through the Internet. During the summer, the office is still on target to utilize the wireless Internet capabilities of the SUB to create stations where students can have financial aid questions answered, Blake said.

In the station, the office would like to have an individual who is trained in financial aid and student business services information. When the individual would not be able to answer a question, there would be a phone available so the student would not have to partake in the Tech Shuffle, Blake said.

Currently, Financial Aid and Student Business Services have a direct phone line between one another to answer student questions as quickly as possible. Also, by January 2005, the office expects to enhance the current Web site by incorporating a tuition calculator, among other things, to get students to access as much information as possible.

Who's Who selects Tech law student as year's outstanding

By Andrew Bell/
The University Daily

By serving the Texas Tech School of Law, the city of Lubbock and making an outstanding contribution to the study of law, Mark DesNoyer was selected by Who's Who: American Law Students as the Outstanding Law Student of the Year in America.

DesNoyer is the first student in the history of the school to win the award. The School of Law Dean Walter Huffman said the organization publishes the best and brightest from law schools throughout the nation.

The publication chooses the winners after collecting nominations from law schools throughout the United States. Huffman said DesNoyer was nominated because of the hard work and determination he has shown through all of his work at the school and at the university.

"What separates him is his extraordinary involvement with different activities and services in the law school and throughout the community," Huffman said.

As DesNoyer has spent the past few years contributing to the school and Tech, Huffman said the award is more significant because DesNoyer's role as a non-traditional student.

At the age of 17, DesNoyer enlisted in the Marines, where he spent the next 20 years in service for his country. During that time, he served in Operation Desert Storm and still managed to get the college degrees he needed to enter law school, DesNoyer said.

After traveling the 1,600 miles from North Carolina to Texas, DesNoyer began the dual roles of family man and law student, he said. Since his arrival, he has won a number of awards and participated in organizations through the school.

DesNoyer sits on the executive board of the Board of Barristers. The board organizes the events that take place at the school, he said.

In the past year, the school has hosted a number of inaugural events.

In particular, Huffman said the School of Law hosted the International Moot Court Regional Competition and the National Conference of Law Reviews for the first time.

Also, he served as the president of Phi Alpha Delta. The organization is the largest legal fraternity in the nation. One in six students at the School of Law are members of the organization, which makes it the largest student organization in the school and the largest chapter of the fraternity in the state, DesNoyer said.

Most recently, DesNoyer was awarded Linda J. Kamp Service Award and the Judge Meade Griffin Award. According to the Tech School of Law, the Judge Meade Griffin Award is given to a graduating student who through industry, perseverance, integrity and character has best utilized the law school experience to improve and prepare for service to the profession and to mankind.

Now, DesNoyer has the Outstanding Law Student of the Year in America, which was given to him for his service to the school, the community, his contributions to the study of law and conducts a pursuit of a career despite prohibiting factors, he said.

However, he would not have gotten to this point in his life if it had not been for his family, which consists of his wife Catherine and their two children.

"My family has been real supportive of my efforts," DesNoyer said. "I couldn't have done as much without my family."

While DesNoyer could be more worried about Tuesday, when he finds out the results of his score on the bar exam, he said he is more focused on his son becoming a Cub Scout this weekend.

Since DesNoyer will be graduating in the next month, he said he has realized how great of an experience he has had at Tech.

"Dean Huffman and all of the faculty create an environment here that fosters excellence and growth," he said. "There is no other law school I would rather have gone to."

Comcast drops bid for Disney

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The cable giant Comcast Corp. is dropping its takeover bid for The Walt Disney Co., saying Disney management has made it clear it has no interest in putting the two companies together.

The decision was announced Wednesday by Brian L. Roberts, president and chief executive of Comcast, who said the Disney stance led him to conclude it was time to abandon the proposed merger.

Philadelphia-based Comcast, the nation's largest cable company, stunned the industry Feb. 11 when it offered stock valued at $54 billion at the time for the media and entertainment powerhouse.

Disney rejected the offer, saying it was too low. Disney shares have been trading higher than what Comcast was offering, a signal that the original offer would not succeed.

"We have always been disciplined in our approach to acquisitions," Roberts said in Wednesday's statement. "Being disciplined means knowing when it is time to walk away. That time is now."

Later in a conference call, Roberts said Comcast would look at other acquisition targets, including bankrupt cable company Adelphia Communications Corp., but didn't feel pressured to expand.

"The Adelphia situation did not factor into today's announcement," he said. "That's a new situation for sure. We've always looked at cable systems so I suspect we'll look at those."

Roberts said the company wants to be "opportunistic, entrepreneurial," but added, "With 22 million customers, I think we are in the position where we don't have to make any acquisitions."

Calls to Disney spokesman John Spelich were not returned Wednesday.

In early trading Wednesday on the New York Stock Exchange, Disney shares fell 28 cents to $23.90 while Comcast A shares rose 89 cents, or 3 percent, to $30.86.

HE SAID SHE SAID

Battle of the sexes

Hey princess, you're a royal pain

Listen ladies, I'm not trying to be bitter. I'm just trying to say something your boyfriend won't.

There are a few things you need to hear, so sit down, open your mind and write this down, or cut out this column and hang it up on your bathroom mirror as a reminder.

I polled several guys, and these are the top responses I got about why you make us confused, frustrated and angry with the "little things" you do. You might consider yourself a princess, but I won't hold your crown or bow to your throne, if you continue to act like this.

Phone Faux Pas

I usually use my phone for one of two reasons: work or calling buddies to make a trip to the Strip for me. Other than that, I'm never on it for more than three minutes at a time. So, don't call me to talk about every little thing that happened on your awful day. Guys don't want to hear it in our ears through a meaningless device. If you want to talk, come see us or we'll come see you.

Also, don't expect guys to call you all the time. The phone works both ways. On your cell phone, there's a send button, and I'm pretty sure our numbers are somewhere on speed dial. So push 2, and send if you want to talk. Because being the man of the relationship does not mean we have to call you every time you feel like you want to talk, cause we don't really know when that is.

Diva Drama

Guy punches another guy, and they say, "cool," and go have a beer together. Girl fights with girl, and they hold a grudge for years. Drop the drama. I know somebody might have hurt your feelings but let it go. If it's in the past, get over it. There's no reason to hate that person until you're on your deathbed.

The same goes for guys that broke your heart. Your new boyfriend really doesn't like to hear what the last guy did right or wrong. So, don't say it. Leave it be, and tell us what we're doing wrong, not how we can be like the last one.

Unpleasing Teasing

I have a big problem with this. If you're gonna make a small move, make it. Don't pretend to be into somebody, then turn around and say no. You act as if you want a certain something out of us, and then you shoot us down when we ask for it. There goes every guy's self-esteem. There's no love in flirting, if you are only trying to tease a guy.

Another part to this teasing subject is something I can't complain about, but I will. As the temperatures rise, so does the temptation when you're lying around the pool sunbathing. Like a better, there you are, on that devilish your "skin" to develop a serotonin. You begin to shed your fat and other guys love scandalously dressed women, but when you flaunt it around, showing off what we can't have, you piss us off beyond belief.

Make a Move

Women have equal rights. You can work and get paid the same as men. So, I figure you can have the same responsibilities. We always have the obligation of making the first moves. But guess what? You can do the same. There's not a guy out there that would complain to a girl grabbing him and kissing him on the first date or later. If you really want something, you can go after it.

And that's time! The game is over; both sexes put up quite the fight. In a minute we'll go to our judges to find out who wins. But first, let's break down each side's strengths and weaknesses.

Joey came out of the gate strong, pointing out all of the things he and others of the male persuasion can't stand about the fairer sex. His performance stayed at a high level throughout, scoring points with his phone faux pas, making a move and getting to the point.

He hit the ball out of the park with his diva drama, though; anyone who has ever so much as shared breathing space with a woman knows how intense the drama in her life can be. That performance really helped Joey on the scoreboard.

He may have lost some points, though, for his dirty play. Unpleasing teasing? Teasing is not limited to women — plenty of men are professionals in this sport. Same with being friends with benefits. These actions have plenty of people, male and female, frustrated. Joey's antics on these two plays were definitely below the belt.

After laughing my head off about the Biter, I have to commend Angela for her extreme commitment to the sport of relationships. Her desire to practice as much as possible

He said:

Joey Kirk

So, when you ask us to change and grow up, take a couple of steps to alter the way you treat us and then we probably won't act as much like kids.

Friends Without Benefits

I have attractive girl friends. But, evidently me being their boyfriend is not an option. And, that's fine. But, when I listen to them complain about another guy treating you badly, why do they keep going back to him? Tell me please so I can understand. Either way, ladies, stop telling your "just friends" about your bad boyfriend or your current crush; we don't like being the middle man.

Blah, Blah, Blah

This goes along with the phone calls we receive telling us about every minute of every day and what happened at each specific time. Just get to the bottom line. We don't want to sit there trying to figure out your main point. It's not a game show or a lecture. There's usually not a prize waiting at the end of the story, and we can't just sleep through it like a boring class. Please, just tell us what that you think, what happened or what you want.

I like to watch the Chappelle's Show on Comedy Central every Wednesday. We hate to act like Lil' Jon over and over again asking, "WHHAAAT!!! WHHAAAT!!!"

Material Girl

If you care what we drive, what we wear and how much popularity we have, you've got a problem. I'm like everybody else: you have to be attracted to a person, but the material things in life are only extra. Don't base who you're gonna date on what kind of car they have. Some guys don't have the cash to buy a brand new Escalade. Instead, they choose to buy something affordable like a faded red '87 RX-7.

Whether the clothes come from Abercrombie or the Wal-Mart special clearance aisle, I don't think it should matter. You should appreciate somebody who takes care of himself, but you need to understand we're in college.

So when you ask us to change and grow up, take a couple of these steps to alter the way you treat us, and then we probably won't act as much like kids.

■ Kirk is junior journalism major from Wylie. E-mail him at joey.kirk@ttu.edu. Princesses need not respond.

One day after class, I overheard two giggly girls chatting about how futile they thought their studies were.

"I'm gonna get married after college anyway," one of them said in her valley-girl voice. "So like, I won't have to work or know any of this stuff."

It made me think. And I worried, because if this girl and others like her are looking for security in the majority of the guys here, I have sad news for them — Better hit the books, girls.

For all the girls out there, I invite you to share in some of my regretful run-ins with members of the opposite sex who refuse to grow up.

The Lady and The Tramp

He was sweet, kind, generous, and gentlemanly — the opposite of most of the guys I had known in New York. I thought I had struck a gold mine of polite, small-town guys when I met him. I let my friends back home know they were missing out by not moving to Texas.

He was everything my dad — a native Texan — always said I should want in a boy. After much persistence on his part, I finally gave him a shot. I gave in to his seemingly sweet, innocent, polite Texan ways. What I overlooked was this: although in college, he failed to get rid of the "who was popular in high school" mentality.

We valued different things. I found that although he was into me, he really was into a lot of other girls, too.

For him, I summarize with this — this is not high school anymore. Life is not all about looks, the letters you wear, or how many girls you can juggle at one time. If you think so, your life may turn out to be pretty empty. But empty is one thing — breaking someone's heart is just bad karma.

To Bite or not to Bite?

The most laughable character in my tale of guys is probably the Biter. Besides being the complete opposite of me in every way, this guy was a random biter.

I suppose we all encounter people in our dating lives who do things we didn't anticipate. I've heard of some people being into strange displays of intimacy, but had luckily avoided it. But this biting was not reserved for intimate moments. It was anytime he felt like doing it.

So, there I was one night, just chilling, thinking I had met a guy very different from me, but relatively cool... And then came the bite. What do you do with that?

After the bite, I had one simple thought — Please tell me the rest of the guys here had been taught biting is not nice? I had thought so, but when I voiced concern about the habit, he disappeared, never to bite again. Be wary, girls — this guy, and other predatory sorts, are very much around us.

Tough Talker

You all know the guy at every party with the big attitude and even bigger talk.

Hey, whatever. Maybe a lot of guys have the agenda of being a badass. I don't really know. Whatever it is, he made me laugh. He was funny, loud, and said whatever was on his mind.

She said:

Angela Timmons

For all the girls out there, I invite you to share in some of my regretful run-ins with members of the opposite sex who refuse to grow up.

So we became involved.

Until a religious holiday rolled around, when he began to feel guilty about staying from goodness. Sorry to inform you, but girls, not cool guys, are supposed to be fickle.

So, for all you wanna-be macho men: consider your actions before you act. When you pull your John Wayne ways, you aren't alone: there are other people affected by the tough-guy act.

Indecent Proposal

So, after all my experiences with Tech guys, my mom encouraged me to open up to religious guys. But apparently, enrollment at a religious institution does not guarantee decency. The details of a few sleazy suggestions from these hypocritical holy-rollers should stay in confession.

So the religious boys were not the purity party I hoped they would be. Apparently, teenage fantasies are very much a reality among some of these fake God-fearing fanatics.

So who is safe?

Between the pageantry, semi-cannibalism, and hypocrisy I've encountered, I am not sure. But my friends who have found happiness with guys are the ones who have discarded what they once thought was important: looks, money, popularity.

There is more to some guys. Some guys really are men in the most unexpected places. The best men may not have brawn, but brain; not popularity, but decency.

Like I've said so many times to my friends: I wouldn't care if the love of my life played a violin on a street corner for nickels the rest of his life, as long as he was worth it.

Guys, do us a favor — make your intentions known. Don't back down from how you feel because you're scared of the repercussions. I listen to so many of my girlfriends who complain of the same thing: "He just wasn't up front with me." If these guys had just stepped up and been men, they would have saved me many nights of wondering.

So, girls, date around, but carefully. Maybe you'll find some of the jerks who turn themselves around and end up worth it. Just be careful, and take care of yourself first.

BATTLE BREAKDOWN

certainly shows at game time as she wows the crowd with her descriptive dating disasters. Her versatility in the field also is impressive, making her quite the all-star dater.

Her interesting insight into the sad-but-true lives of too many women also earns her points. Girls, even if you get married right out of college and never hold a job, your education is still important. Either way, you need to teach your children, run a household, and keep up with the news. Value your opportunity to further your education.

Angela's performance did have some errors, however. While her antics made me laugh, I'd like to see one or two positive experiences with men. Come on, give them some credit. They can't be all bad.

And now to the judges. Who walks away with the title of most bitter, most negative experiences with the opposite sex, most likely to never get a date as long as they live in Lubbock and angry men and women remember these columns and see red?

And the winner is ... absolutely no one. In my vast (read: rather small) experience, no one wins when both sides don't understand the other. Disappointing finish after two stellar beginnings, I know. Our expert analyst suggests some better communication and understanding from both teams in the future. Until then, maybe Angela and Joey can hook up, since scoring a date might be difficult for both of them after this debate.

that produced some sharp exchanges, Thursday's meeting will not have cameras or a stenographer in the room and there will not be any record of what was said beyond note-taking. That eliminates the possibility of anyone playing to the television audience, as some analysts say happened with witnesses and commissioners in earlier sessions.

"If they thought it would help him, they'd televise it," James Thurber, director of American University's Center for Congressional and Presidential Studies, said of White House advisers. "And obviously they don't think it will help him, and so they are not."

A lingering problem for Bush, however, is how the commission — in a final report this summer — judges what he did or didn't do in response to warnings that al-Qaida was getting ready to strike.

"The president is basically placing his re-election on the argument that he is the commander in chief of the war on terrorism and John Kerry couldn't do as good a job," said Brookings Institution political analyst Thomas Mann. "Anything that calls that into question is potentially damaging."

The commission's televised hearings, particularly its three-hour session with National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, provided a preview of what Bush will be asked and who will press him. Democratic commissioners Bob Kerrey and Richard Benveniste were among the most aggressive.

"What Bush should expect is a lot of questions trying to reconstruct what the government and what the president knew and when he knew it about the threat from al-Qaida, about the potential threat from airplanes, about potential hijackings, about the presence of terrorists in the country, about any sense of urgency going on out there," said Norm Ornstein, a political analyst at the American Enterprise Institute. "And if it's stuff that he didn't know, why does he think he didn't know it?"

Roemer called the Aug. 6 memo — known as the presidential daily brief — the "tip of the iceberg." "Should there have been other warnings that would have alerted you before that?" he asked. "Or at the least, why didn't the Aug. 6 PDB cause more people to be at battle stations in the month of August rather than having meetings with the CIA director drop off the cliff?"

Other issues Bush and Cheney are expected to confront:

—Iraq. Both Bush and Cheney have been accused of being distracted by Iraq in the months before Sept. 11, making them inattentive to warnings pointing to a terrorist attack. In newly released books, Bob Woodward and former White House terrorism coordinator Richard Clarke separately contend that Bush and Cheney were fixated on finding an Iraqi link to the attacks. The administration has denied it.

—The lack of military retaliation for the USS Cole attack. Former President Clinton told commissioners that he didn't order strikes after the bombing of the ship in October 2000 because he could not get a "clear, firm judgment of responsibility" from U.S. intelligence that came later during the Bush administration.

Rawls' gift, made in December 2000, will enable the college to establish five faculty chairs for the recruitment of nationally recognized scholars. The remaining funds will be used to promote faculty development and maintain technological improvements within the college's facilities.

Chairman of the university's Board of Regents, Tech Chancellor Dr. David Smith and Tech President Jon Whitmore were on hand to honor Rawls.

"This is an opportunity for us to say thanks, and we mean that deeply," Whitmore told the audience. "We have big visions for this university and for this college."

Sandifer said the idea for the sculpture was born after looking at a NASA photo of hotspot activity on the sun.

"The goal of my job was to create a sculpture honoring Jerry Rawls, who has created such a hotspot of activity at the university, and that's when the idea came to me," she said. "I chose stainless steel because the sculpture had to be out of the ordinary. Creating the sculpture was certainly something I enjoyed doing."

ter briefing lawmakers on Capitol Hill.

Despite three straight days of battles and nighttime attacks that produced dramatic TV video, U.S. officials said they were pushing ahead with negotiations to resolve the standoff rather than launch an all-out offensive.

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt said the cease-fire was continuing and Marines were not taking offensive actions but were "in a series of defensive responses" to the insurgents.

"We're going to continue to push the political track as far as it's going to take us. And if it doesn't take us far enough, we're prepared to use military means," Kimmitt told ABC's "Good Morning America."

Nevertheless, the new fighting was sharply criticized by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan.

"Violent military action by an occupying power against inhabitants of an occupied country will only make matters worse," Annan said. "It's definitely time — time now for those who prefer restraint and dialogue to make their voices heard."

He said that if the U.S.-led occupation is seen as harming civilians, "the greater the ranks of the resistance grows."

At the White House, President Bush said "most of Fallujah is returning to normal."

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Rift Valley Fever is a fever-causing viral disease that affects livestock and humans, and is commonly associated with mosquito-borne epidemics.

Smith said in relation to homeland security, it is important to protect what people eat, breathe and drink.

He said experts in the School of Agriculture and the university's location make it a prime spot for this type of effort.

"We have some of the largest dairies within a 200-mile radius of Tech," he said. "We are geographically in the right position."

Smith said Tech faculty members have been interested in becoming active in serving the American government in its attempts to make the nation safer since terrorist attacks began in 2001.

"Our faculty has been saying since 9/11 that they've wanted to help," he said.

Texas A&M and congressional representatives such as Senator Kay Bailey Hutcherson, U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Abilene, and U.S. Rep. Randy Naugebauer, R-Lubbock, also have been instrumental in helping Tech draw in this designation and funding, Smith said.

Tech President Jon Whitmore is scheduled to speak with Texas A&M President Robert M. Gates about the designation via conference call Thursday.

An increase in tax revenue also would benefit the community as a whole, as the revenue of the Strip in 2003 was $10 million, Ginn said.

Members of the SGA said they are calling for the legalization of beer and wine sales inside the city. Liquor is not included in the discussion, Ginn said.

The tax revenue for beer and wine sales within Lubbock would be about $900,000, and part of it could go to support the local education system, said Colton Batchelor, 2003-2004 external vice president.

"We wanted to talk about the alcohol issue in Lubbock," he said. "It seemed to catch a lot of eyes."

The issue will be approached in the same manner as the housing ordinance, restricting no more than two unrelated people from living together, Batchelor said.

A petition to change the alcohol ordinance would require 35 percent of the number of voters in the most recent gubernatorial race.

The Lubbock residents present at the meeting expressed support for the SGA's interest in changing the ordinance.

"This isn't the first time this has been tried," said Susan Owens, a Tech Terrace resident.

An important part of getting a petition signed and an election authorizing the in-city sale of alcohol is getting the support of churches and that of the Strip, Owens said.

The community members suggested students gather statistics researching other cities that changed from being a dry city, such as Huntsville.

The statistics should address crime rate and profit rate changes.

In-city sale of alcohol could put bootleggers out of business, and Lubbock resident Ruth McClendon said that is the most important issue to her.

Lubbock resident Roger Settler said he filed an intent to file a petition on Wednesday that authorized the sale of alcohol in Justice Precinct 3.

Settler gave advice to the SGA about how to obtain information concerning changing the ordinance.

A press conference will be held at 2 p.m. today in the free speech gazebo regarding the petition drive for precinct 3.

Goodwin said the pilot project for the housing ordinance that was discussed during the February meeting is stalled. Neighborhood associations are not as prominent, which makes it difficult to find one willing to be involved in the pilot program.

Other neighborhood issues were presented to the group by Rob Allison of Lubbock business and neighborhood development. He explained the Stabilization/Revitalization Master Plan for the Core Neighborhoods of Lubbock.

GouldEvans of Kansas City, Mo., will organize two steering committees to provide information for the company's independent study of the central corridor of Lubbock.

A public forum meeting will be held at a later date to gather input from the residents and deliver a final product in October or November.

"We're very early in the process right now," Allison said. "We just want to make sure to include Tech as a part of that."

Johnson seeks third consecutive Big 12 title

By Adam Boedeker/
The University Daily

Texas Tech 800-meter runner Jonathan Johnson recorded the second fastest time in the world in a race two weeks ago in California, but his mind is now on another unprecedented feat — winning his third consecutive Big 12 Championship in the event.

"I'm real confident right now," Johnson said. "Everything's going my way right now. I kinda fell back a couple of times early on, and I wanted to go out to Mt. Sac, (Calif.), and really put down a good time. That's what I did and right now this is the most confidence I've ever had in my career. I just want to come out with another Big 12 championship."

Johnson and his Red Raider teammates travel to Norman, Okla., where decathlon and heptathlon events will begin today with the remaining events beginning Friday and Saturday.

Coach Wes Kittley said this year's edition of the meet could be the most competitive in recent memory.

"We finished fourth in men's last year," he said. "That was a big jump for our program. It's gonna be unbelievably close in the men's side. Nebraska is out there on paper in front of everyone else."

Kittley said his goals for the meet are for the men to score 100 points and the women about 70. He said his team along with Texas, Texas A&M, Kansas State and Baylor will all be battling for second through fifth place.

"I feel like (100 points) is a really good barrier to break," he said. "You've gotta have luck and some bad things happen to other people. I hope more bad happens to them than to us. When I took over the program in 1999, we were scoring 12 points at this meet, last year we had 90, so to score 100 would be great."

Kittley said he is looking to a handful of events to score valuable points for the team.

"The pole vault is a huge event," he said. "I'd rather pick events than individuals. The quarter hurdles is a big event for us. In the 800, I'm sure Jonathan will take care of business. Albert Booker is the big key for us, he'll be running the 400, 200 and two relays, it's a huge weekend for him. Matt (Stewart) may run the 400 and 200, too, every point is so valuable."

Kittley said because of Booker and Stewart's busy weekends the A-team 4x400 relay may not compete.

"It depends on everyone's standing," he said. "If Booker runs two 200s and two 400s and a sprint relay before that and Matt does the same it's gonna be tough.

Booker did that last year so we know he can, but Matt has not done it."

The women will likely finish anywhere from third place to seventh place, Kittley said, and there are a few athletes who could do some damage for the Raiders.

"On the girls' side I'm really looking for Loretta Sibley (in the 200 and 400)," he said. "I'm really hoping our 4x400 does some damage. I think we've just got to struggle a little here and there. We're just trying to get three to four points in a lot of events. The pole vault is also big with Dana (Rosenblatt) and Kelley (Schutz); we just want a lot of top 5 finishes."

He said the men have a better chance and more weapons to utilize.

"I can't leave Jason Young out," he said. "He's big in discus and hammer. There's a lot more keys for the guys. I think we have a little more ammo there."

JAIME TOMÁS AGUILAR/The University Daily

ALBERT BOOKER (LEFT) runs for the finish line against competition in the Red Raider Invitational earlier this season. Tech will compete in the Big 12 Conference Championships in Norman, Okla., beginning today.

Raiders hoping to oust Longhorns from Big 12 tournament

By Joey Kirk/The University Daily

Postseason is a time when players step up to become heroes and legends. Junior Jakob Paulsen said the Red Raiders will not experience the same disappointment when they last met the No. 32 Texas Longhorns.

"They were lucky last time, and I don't think we will choke two times in a row," he said.

The Texas Tech men's tennis team dropped the match by one point, 4-3, to the Longhorns on April 2, at the McLeod Tennis Center. Now, the Raiders get the chance to make it up against No. 3-seed Texas in the first round of the Big 12 Championships. But head coach Tim Siegel said it is not the thought of revenge that keeps the Raiders pumped.

"We're not looking at revenge," he said. "We want to win a match against a team we lost to, and we should have won that one."

The first conference match against Texas was one of three close matches Tech failed to capitalize on. The Raiders lost to both Oklahoma State on April 17 and Oklahoma on April 18 in matches with a 4-3 final score.

Siegel said most teams experience one close loss, but Tech has had to deal with the horror three times.

"Most teams may have one heart-breaker during the season. We had three. And it's easy for coaches to say that their teams were close in matches," he said. "But in our case, we lost three very close ones that should have been wins."

If it had not been for those losses to the Big 12 opponents, Siegel said the Raiders could be higher in the rankings.

"The fact is we are sixth in the conference at 2-5," he said. "We could easily be 4-3 with those two close matches, and be ranked fourth or even higher. Rankings don't show what this team can do or what it has done."

Even with the rankings the way they are, Siegel said Tech and several of its players have the chance to prove to the entire Big 12 Conference that it is no longer a doormat in the sport of tennis.

"I like the matchups we have with Texas, in singles action," he said. "If we can play better in the middle of the lineup, we will be set."

At No. 1, Siegel said he has no doubt that Paulsen can get the job done on the court against his Longhorn opponent. "Jakob (Paulsen) is ranked No. 55 in the country, and he's on the bubble of getting into the NCAA Tournament. He'll play someone ranked ahead of him, and he's beat him before."

The challenge awaits Paulsen in Norman, Okla., at noon Friday, when he faces the nationally ranked Antonio Ruiz for the second time this season. Paulsen has no reservations about the rematch.

"I'm ready to kick his ass once more," Paulsen said. "I'll be disappointed if I don't win."

In order to accomplish that feat, Paulsen said he has to keep going at Ruiz with everything he has.

"At these top positions, if you slack off just a little, they'll take it to you," he said.

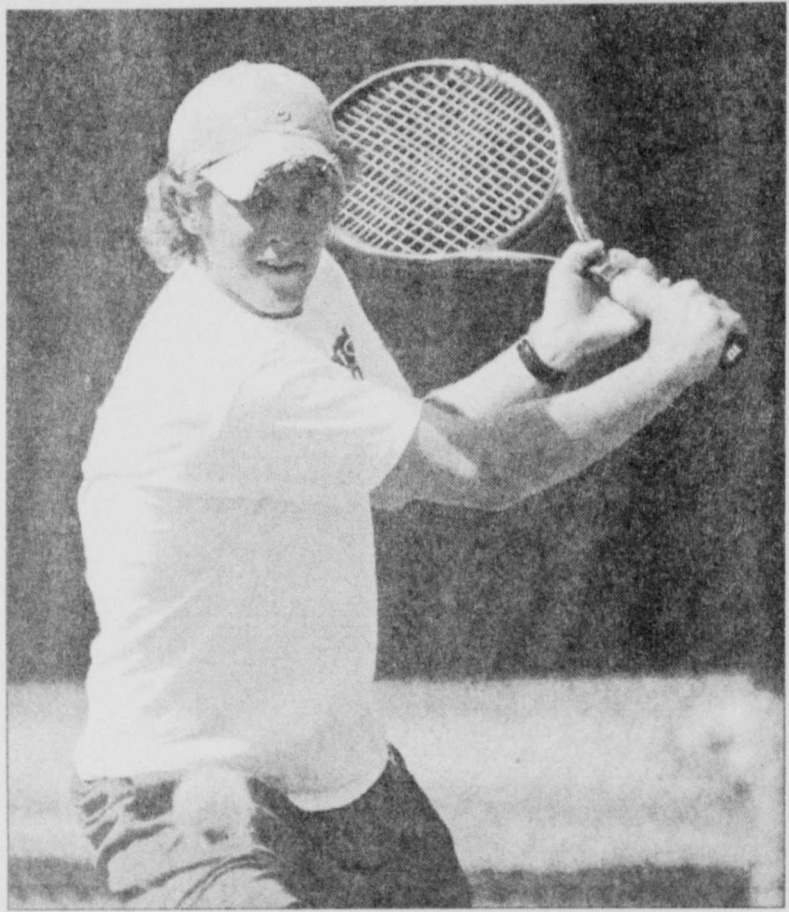

Junior Esat Tanik said Tech has one chance to prove its worth or demise in the Big 12 tournament, and it occurs on Friday.

"We have to understand that there's no coming back," he said. "We have to get the best out of it against Texas."

One thing Tanik said will help the Raiders fight to win is the thought they are lower in the rankings than they should be.

"We're disappointed about rankings, so we have to take care of business," he said. "These guys beat us, and they didn't deserve it."

If the Raiders win, they will face the winner of Texas A&M and Colorado at 11 a.m. Saturday.

Golden Bear might retire

TRAVELERS REST, S.C. (AP) — It turns out Jack Nicklaus might be finished with more than just the Masters.

He spoke Wednesday about giving up a game he once dominated, winning 73 PGA Tour events and 18 major titles. "I'm about done playing golf," the 64-year-old Nicklaus said at the Nationwide Tour's BMW Charity Pro-Am at The Cliffs. He's competing here with his four sons: Jackie, Gary, Steve and Michael.

"I haven't made up my mind whether I'm going to play anymore this year after the Memorial tournament" in June, Nicklaus said.

At the Masters this month, the six-time champion said it was likely that he would not play at Augusta National in 2005. And that was before he shot consecutive 75s to miss the cut.

Nicklaus has struggled with arthritis, injuries and a faltering game the past few seasons.

"I know I can't compete at the level I used to compete," Nicklaus said. "If I go out and finish in the top 10, and that's a great week, then I know it's time to hang up your spikes."

Gary Player, 68, empathized with Nicklaus.

"It's hard spending all your time playing golf, like you did when you were a young man," said Player, here with his son Marc.

A year ago, the Golden Bear was the only Nicklaus around for the Nationwide event's final two rounds. He won the pro-am competition with son Steve and briefly scared the younger pros when he got to within five shots of the lead after 36 holes. Nicklaus left with a smile on his face, happy he was close to again playing successful, competitive golf.

Tech wants an upset in Big 12 tournament

JAIME TOMÁS AGUILAR/The University Daily

IRINA TERESCHENKO VOLLEYS the ball to her opponent during a match at the McLeod Tennis Center. The Raiders will take on Kansas at 10 a.m. today in Norman, Okla., in the Big 12 Championships.

By Joey Kirk/The University Daily

Prior to the season's beginning, the Texas Tech women's tennis team was not thought of as a threat in the Big 12 after a 3-17 record in 2003.

But sophomore Tara Browning said all that changed, and the Red Raiders carry a stigma that frightens even the best.

"A lot of players didn't expect much out of us this year, but we put them in their place," she said.

The Raiders finished the regular season at 11-9 overall, with a 4-7 record in the conference. Now, Tech looks forward to the Big 12 tournament, and Browning said the Raiders will continue to surprise the rest of the conference.

"At the tournament, there's always one team to watch out for," she said. "There's always an upset, and we're the one to do it."

With the sights of her last matches closing in, senior Kendall Brooks said it is a time to be or not to be the best in the Big 12.

"It's pretty much like our March Madness," she said. "If we win, we advance, and if we lose, we go home."

The chances of leaving Norman, Okla., after the first round are slight, Brooks said, and that is because of how Tech has competed this season.

"We've proved we're not the same team this season," she said. "Nobody expected it either."

Like every other team in the tournament, the Raiders will face a team they have played once before during the season.

Tech will play Kansas at 10 a.m. today, and Brooks said the 6-1 victory against the Jayhawks on March 14 will not play to Tech's advantage this time around.

"We had a win earlier against Kansas in the season. But this is a different situation. We're not gonna take it for granted," she said. "Teams change, and you never know what can happen. That's why we keep playing these tournaments."

Head coach Cari Groce agreed with Brooks, and Tech has to stay on top of Kansas to win.

"They beat Nebraska, and we lost to Nebraska," she said. "We're a close team in our abilities, and it will come down to whoever is more prepared."

Preparation is one thing the Raiders can control, but Groce said the other factors during the match are a different story.

"We can only control the controllables, and I preach that," she said. "We can't worry about anything outside our control."

One thing Tech has been able to control is its level of play, Groce said, and the consistent play began close to the end of the season, which is perfect going into the Big 12 tournament.

"Our level of play is peaking at just the right time," she said.

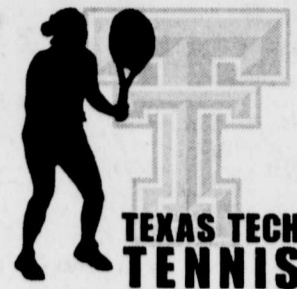

If the Raiders reach the peak of their performance against Kansas in the first round and the rounds following it, Browning said they can expect to keep practicing.

"Depending on how we do in the tournament, we can still have three weeks left in the season," she said. "That's what we hope to do."

Brooks said it is a big possibility that Tech could win, and going in as the No. 8 seed will only make them work harder during the tournament.

"I'm excited we're going in as the underdog," she said. "That just means we'll have to play our hardest."

If the Raiders win against the Jayhawks, they will face the No. 1 seeded-Texas Longhorns at 9 a.m. Friday in the second round.

Mavericks-Kings series turning defensive

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — When this playoff series began, defense seemed certain to be a dirty word. After all, the Mavericks and the Kings were the NBA's two highest-scoring teams — and usually two of the most indifferent on the other end of the court.

But in the three games since the Kings' 116-105 win in the opener, points have been shockingly scarce. What's more, two games turned on heady last-second plays by Peja Stojakovic, who isn't exactly known as a defensive stopper.

The Kings could end the series with a home victory in Game 5 Thursday night even though they're missing an unusual number of shots, laboring in their half-court offense and averaging nearly 17 turnovers per game.

And though the Mavs have shot even worse, they're on the brink of elimination despite leading Sacramento in most other statistical categories.

So what in the name of Mark Aguirre or Reggie Theus is going on? The Mavs and the Kings both say their fans don't recognize them because this strange series has been governed by defensive excellence, not offensive ineptitude.

Though the Kings are in control, coach Rick Adelman bristles when he still hears dismissive comments about his team's defense.

"Because of the way we play during the regular season, it seems like some people just (believe) that our two teams don't do some of the things that other teams do," Adelman said. "It's a crock. ... It's such an easy thing to do. It's such an easy way to talk, and when it's proven wrong, no one remembers it."

The Kings believe they've proven their defensive mettle by holding the NBA's third-best shooting team during the regular season to 38 percent in the playoffs. Six of the Mavericks' top seven scorers are below their regular-season averages, with only rookie Marquis Daniels raising his game.

Stojakovic, the NBA's second-leading scorer, rarely has been offensively assertive since Chris Webber returned from a knee injury nearly three months ago. He hasn't been dominant in the playoffs, either, averaging just 17 points — but his defense helped to quell two late Dallas comeback attempts.

In Game 2, Stojakovic tipped the ball out of Michael Finley's hands as the Dallas star went up for a potential game-tying shot in Sacramento's 83-79 victory. In Game 4, Stojakovic didn't allow the Mavericks' pick-and-roll to confuse him, and he forced Steve Nash into a terrible shot to end the Kings' 94-92 win.

"I can't say I'm a great defender, but I'm getting better," Stojakovic said. "Both teams are not shooting the ball well. I know people expected high-scoring games, but I guess we got something else: more high-intensity games, more low-scoring games."

The Mavericks have just one more chance to improve their late-game execution, which has deserted them twice. Though Dallas' Big Three has been together for six seasons, Dirk Nowitzki, Steve Nash and Finley have exhibited little chemistry when it matters most.

"We've done it before," Finley said. "It's not like it's the middle of the season, and we're searching for our offense. We know what our offense can do. It's just about finding it again. I'm not ready to go home and put this season away, and hopefully my teammates feel the same way."

A day after the Mavericks acknowledged being deflated by their dire circumstances, Dallas' spirits picked up. Several players spent the final minutes of their workout at Arco Arena playfully trying to fling a basketball from the court into the luxury boxes.

"You guys can look at the numbers and say a lot of things, but we think we've played really good defense," said forward Antoine Walker. "If we can win this one, we can really put them in a bind."

Three seniors to say goodbye to 'The Rock'

By Adam Boedeker/
The University Daily

Three Texas Tech softball players' careers at Rocky Johnson Field will come to a close today. For at least one senior, first baseman Andrea Joachims, it will be an experience of mixed emotions, but one in which the Red Raiders (19-34, 1-15 Big 12) need to be victorious.

"It'll be special and pretty sad," Joachims said. "There will be a lot of things going through my head. It'll be my last home game against a team we know we should beat. We have to get those two wins."

That team is Northwestern Oklahoma State University, an NAIA squad that replaces the scheduled Oklahoma City University, which had to drop the doubleheader because of over-scheduling. The games are slated for 2 and 4 p.m. today at "The Rock."

Joachims said the doubleheader against a team the Raiders should beat could do some good for the team's confidence, having not won a game since March 31 against New Mexico State.

"Hopefully it will boost our confidence," she said. "We don't really know what it's like to win anymore. I hope it will boost our confidence going into Missouri (May 1 and 2). That could only do us good."

Pitcher Erin Crawford said the games against the Rangers (32-12, 12-7 Sooner Athletic Conference) could be a good change from the Big 12 competition the team has played against the past month, and a good final home game for the three seniors.

"It'll give us a good chance anytime you get to play someone new," she said. "It's kind of like a refresher."

Do not ask Crawford to recite the Rangers' lineup, however.

"I know nothing about them," she said. "So I'm gonna go ahead and say we should beat them."

The Rangers appear to be stacked on offense with five batters hitting more than .300 on the season, led by Lisa Woods (.372) and Bryanna Hutton (.356).

The squad is led in the circle by Ashley Taylor, who sports an ERA of 1.56 with an 18-6 record and 113 strikeouts.

Tech head coach Bobby Reeves agreed with Crawford and Joachims in saying the two games against the NAIA opponent are games Tech must win.

"Without anything against Northwestern Oklahoma State University, we've got to win those games," he said. "It could be huge for us, but it could also be detrimental if we don't. It's the seniors' last home game, and we've got to win."

Tech is swinging the bats well right now, but has had recent troubles putting pitching and defense together with the hitting, Reeves said.

Tech is led at the plate in season average by left fielder Kelly Rhyne, who is batting .358 on the season and senior designated player Elyssa Sigala, who is hitting .350 with 11 homeruns and 33 RBIs. She is also near the top of the Big 12 in free passes, with 37 walks.

Reeves spoke individually about each of his three seniors, Joachims, Sigala and second baseman Britney Stolle, and said today would be a special afternoon for the seniors as well as the fans and himself.

"Stolle and AJ have been here with me for four years," he said. "Sigala has been here for two, and they have all been super kids. It's gonna be sad to see them go. With all three of them you knew what you had every day. They would come to the field and give it their all, and it's gonna be hard to replace that."

Cornhusker soccer star killed at party

From Staff Reports/
Colorado Daily

(U-WIRE) BOULDER, Colo. — University of Nebraska officials confirmed Sunday that soccer player Jenna Cooper died Sunday evening after being shot at her home in Lincoln, Neb., early Sunday morning.

Lincoln police told ESPN.com the shooting occurred when two men got into an argument. A bullet struck Cooper, 21, after hitting one of the men, Nolan Jenkins, 22, in the head. Jenkins was reportedly in fair condition Sunday night. Another 22-year-old man was arrested in connection with the shooting, according to ESPN.com.

Cooper, a three-year starter for the Huskers and one of the top defenders in the Big 12 Conference, was a junior majoring in mechanical engineering.

Nebraska head soccer coach John Walker said in an NU press release, "Jenna was a great, great person, teammate and player. It was an absolute pleasure to have her on the team and to know her as a friend and teammate. She had an unbelievable work ethic. She was kind and generous, well respected by her teammates."

After leading the Cornhuskers with 14 assists and ranking second on the squad with 18 points, Cooper earned First Team All-Big 12 honors in 2003.

She started 69 of 70 career games for Nebraska and helped lead the Huskers to three consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances, scoring 33 points on four goals and 25 assists.

The Louisville, Ky., native earned First Team All-Big 12 honors this past season after being named to the Big 12's All-Newcomer Team as a true freshman in 2001. She earned a spot on the 2002 Big 12 All-Tournament Team after scoring the game-winning goal in Nebraska's championship game victory over Texas A&M.

Cooper played with the U.S. Under-20 National Team in 2001 and the U.S. Under-21 National Team in 2002. Services are pending.

Jinx to be tested at Kentucky Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Richard Mandella is taking aim at a jinx that long has stymied horses in the Kentucky Derby.

He will saddle Action This Day, last year's Breeders' Cup Juvenile winner, on Saturday in the 130th Derby. The Juvenile winner has never won on the first Saturday in May in 19 tries.

"I don't pay any attention to that kind of stuff," Mandella said. "I'm not going to offer to give the Breeders' Cup Juvenile back for it. We'll just do the best we can."

Helping Mandella's bid to win the Derby for the first time is his other starter Minister Eric, second in the Juvenile last October.

A Derby victory would cap an impressive five-month run for the 54-year-old Mandella, who won four Breeders' Cup races last year at his home base of Santa Anita. He also saddled Pleasantly Perfect to victory in the $6 million Dubai World Cup in March.

"The Derby is a special race. It's not supposed to be easy to win," he said. "I've trained for 30 years now and haven't got close. Maybe there's a jinx on me."

Action This Day and Minister Eric will be Mandella's fifth and sixth Derby starters. His best finish was fifth in 1994 with Soul of the Matter.

Mandella believes Action This Day is flourishing after failing to win in three starts this year. The colt was last year's 2-year-old champion.

Action This Day had an especially bad trip in the San Felipe Stakes in March, where he was seventh, beaten by 9 1/2 lengths by Preachinathebar, who won't be in the Derby. Action This Day was cut on his right ankle in a traffic jam on the first turn.

Then he finished sixth in the Blue Grass Stakes. Action This Day experienced soreness in his back and hind quarters, so Mandella pampered him in an effort to ease the pain.

The colt underwent chiropractic adjustment, acupuncture, ultrasound, massage, steam bath, and sauna.

"It might have been sneaking up on him after he got cut down in the San Felipe Stakes. It was just subtle enough that we couldn't catch it and after the Blue Grass we did," Mandella said. "He's responded very well. I think he'll run his best race this weekend."

He still wishes he could get one more start before Saturday.

"They won't move the Derby back for me," he said.

Minister Eric also has raced three times this year. He won just once, in an allowance race at Keeneland on April 14. Mandella chose the soft race as a final prep for Minister Eric because the colt had already earned enough money to guarantee a spot in the Derby.

"Minister Eric has kind of got his legs under him now and is in his best form," Mandella said.
