Officially coined "Punkin' Days," this annual celebration in Floydada honors one of the area's most unique crops: the pumpkin. The celebration takes place every year on the second Saturday of October, on the county courthouse square in Downtown Floydada.

With fall officially back in season, Punkin' Days is the perfect event to bring the family out and enjoy a day filled with a variety of yummy foods, games, a classic car display and show, arts & crafts booths, and relay races-all of which feature our renowned "punkin's". The festival starts on Friday night with contestants seasoning their entries for the BBQ cook-off and setting up for the Chili cook-off. Both contests are brought to you by the First National Bank of Floydada. The Floydada Friends of the Library will also be having their annual book sale going on at the Floydada Library from 9 am-5 pm.

The 5K Punkin' Run, sponsored by Floydada BPA, will begin at the high school on Saturday morning at 8:30 am. Participants can register the morning of the race at 8:00 am or online @https://tinyurl.com/y29ap2wl for a fee of $20. All proceeds will go the the Floyd County Historical Museum, punkin"

H & L Concessions will provide delicious fair foods such as: a footlong corn dogs, funnel cakes, potato ribbons, and so much more. Guests are guaranteed to leave with a full stomach to last through the night!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Floyd County has a rich history. Over the next two issues, we will take an in-depth look into the history of the county.

From its namesake to a rich farming history to a leader in wind energy, Floyd County natives have a lot to be proud of.

Floyd County is named after Dolphin Ward Floyd, who died on his 32nd birthday, March 6, 1836, defending the Alamo.

Floyd was a Private from North Carolina and a member of the Gonzales Mounted Ranger Company.

While it's doubtful Floyd ever laid eyes on the land that would be named after him, the county was visited by others well before Private Floyd ever stepped foot in Texas.

Floyd County was originally home to prehistoric nomadic

The 501: Bravado, caution and cows

"Whatever you're doing today, do it with all the And sometimes do. confidence of a 4-year-old in a Batman t-shirt."

A friend posted that blurb on Facebook. I'm skeptical. I'm inclined not to trust advice from anybody who spells T-shirt with a lowercase "t." Yet someone responded with almost the perfect illustration - a 2-year-old grandson dressed as a Ninja Turtle, ready to take on the world. The picture reinforced the message.

I'm still not buying it. HANABA

Confidence and bravado can MUNN sometimes take you a long way. WELCH But if the challenge of the day is to load cattle, other advice comes to mind: Be careful.

A friend of mine grew up in California and then moved to Texas, back to the town where his family had once lived. His ancestral ties to the place weren't strong enough to help him understand all the nuances of West Texas culture. He met three people in a row who ended their conversations with him with the same admonition:

Be careful.

He asked me if there was something he should know

I had to stop and think. Then I realized that's a typical ending to conversations in this part of the world. We say it automatically, unthinkingly. Be careful. No exclamation point.

Maybe it's because we live dangerously and walk among horned beasts that can toss us over fences.

You've been spared.

The Paperboy Keep local politics cordial hey say all politics is local. While that's not totally true, local politics can get tenuous at times.

I have seen a lot in my years of covering meetings in various communities, and not all of it was pleasant. Some of it was downright awful.

I have seen groups battle each other for power and direction and individuals nearly come to blows. And tears? Yes, l've seen those too.

With the dozens of people I've covered through nearly three decades in news, I've found that the most effective boards are the ones who can solve issues quickly and work toward common goals regardless of party affiliation.

Local politics needs to always be about local issues and working in the best interest of the taxpayer. That's what residents want CHRIS and often demand. Democrat or Republican, it doesn't really matter and it shouldn't matter. Instead of looking at it like that, look at it like you do the local school mascot. Everyone in town considers themselves a Cyclone, Longhorn, Tiger, etc... The point is, at the end of the day, our elected officials are all on the same team.

In local politics, not everything is done perfectly all of the time. I've had to personally tell elected officials that they've broken the law regarding an illegal meeting or inappropriate executive session. Nearly every time the mistake was inadvertent. Sometimes people simply don't know all of the laws and need to be educated.

Likewise, I've also seen mistakes made regarding allocation of funds and budgets. Again, the vast majority of the mistakes were innocent. Very rarely have I seen someone do something intentionally illegal regarding money.

Most of the local elected positions are basically volunteer. That means you have people in your community who sacrifice a lot of their time for the greater good. It takes effort and interest to hold these positions and the voting public should recognize and appreciate these officials' sacrifices.

If you serve on school board, city council, county commissioners court, or hospital board, you serve at the pleasure of the voter and should listen to questions when they are presented in an appropriate manner. You should also understand that you are in place to make your entity as good as it can possibly be. You owe it to your community to be a positive force for good.

Sometimes you'll have someone elected with a personal agenda or an ax to grind. I would remind these individuals of their oath of office and that they too serve at the pleasure of the taxpayer and not some faction or group.

The biggest issue with politicians in Washington is the fact they lose touch with their constituents over time. The next thing you know their interests start aligning with things that have little to do with those that elected them. That should never be the case locally.

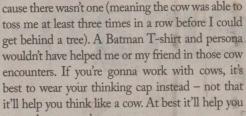

At the end of the day, local politics should be as cordial as possible and officials should always seek compromise when they disagree. Usually, if they will practice these two things, common ground can be met and the voters' best interests will be accommodated.

Kelton William Jared, 24 of Dallas, Texas, went to be with our Lord and Savior on Monday, September 23, 2019.

Kelton was born in Dallas, Texas, on October 4, 1994, and lived his entire life in Dallas. He attended the world renown Shelton School and developed into an avid reader throughout his life even though he had severe Dyslexia. While attending Shelton he developed numerous friendships and faculty relationships that he cherished his entire life. Kelton also suffered from Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy, and even though this was a crippling disease that required him to be in a wheelchair most of his entire life, he did not let his disease define him or determine his character. His pure caring spirit was an inspiration to others, and no matter his condition, he was always praying and concerned about the wellbeing of those around him. His faith, family, and love of his country were key elements of who Kelton was as Kelton was an avid gamer and loved going to the movies. His real passion, however, was anything related to Star Wars. This was a love he shared with his best friend and brother, David, and on multiple vacation trips to Disney World they were able to get up close and personal with their favorite Star Wars characters. Kelton was also a dog lover and will be missed by his Golden Retriever, Holly, who was always at his side or at his feet.

Kelton, in his short time with us, was a true inspiration and touched people with his boundless compassion, infectious laughter, See OBITS, Page 7

The Lord says, "When you pass through the waters, I will be with you; and when you pass through the rivers, they will not sweep over you." - Isaiah 43:2 (NIV)

In August 2016, south Louisiana experienced major flooding, causing widespread devastation. Many homes and businesses suffered major damage and people lost virtually all their possessions. The situation was stressful and depressing.

Yet all around us we also saw reminders of God's Spirit. It was common for people to pray together in driveways as they prepared for the difficult work ahead. Friends - and even people we didn't know - brought meals. We received relief packages from all over the country. Churches and relief came from near and far to help. A group from Los Angeles worked all day on my friend's house and gave her a new Bible. They then invited us to dinner at the church where they were lodging. These acts of kindness lifted our spirits and strengthened us.

Recovery is a long, slow process. But God worked through the actions of friends and strangers to sustain us materially and spiritually. It is hard to imagine that any of us could fully recover without the active work of God's Spirit. God brought many from far and wide to rescue us from the flood.

AGRICULTURE

Get to know the wild side of feral hogs

Special to the Hesperian-Beacon

Whether you refer to them as feral hogs or wild pigs, Sus scrofa is a species that is negatively impacting nearly every part of Texas.

Not only do wild pigs wreak havoc on pastures, fields and golf courses alike, they contaminate our water sources and destroy native species. They can also spread disease to both man and beast. Wild pigs cause widespread damage to agricultural lands by destroying crops, the depredation of livestock, and competing with wildlife for resources

A 2004 Texas A&M AgriLife Extension survey study estimated the annual damage done in Texas by these unwanted invaders as $52 million. Current estimates of the damage they cause nationwide range from $800 million to $1.5 billion annually.

Josh Helchel, AgriLife Extension associate with the Texas A&M Natural Resources Institute, NRI, recently shared some startling statistics about wild pigs and the damage they are doing to the state - as well as ideas, tricks and tips that may help us combat them.

Wild pigs are smarter than dolphins?

They may not appear to be the Einsteins of the animal world, but they are in fact smarter than many species we hold in high regard. Some experts and studies argue that dolphins, killer whales and elephants all have lower IQs than wild pigs. Pigs are widely considered among the brightest of species — and they do beat out man's best friend in the brains department.

Texas has an estimated 3 million wild pigs.

They say everything is bigger in Texas, and this includes our pig population. The U.S. is estimated to have 4 million wild pigs, and we've got well over half of the pig population in the Lone Star State alone, based on a 2012 study. That study had Texas at 2.6 million; current population models predict our actual figure is now closer to 3 million. Wild pigs are also largely nocturnal, which means you are more likely to see the damage they do than see the animals themselves.

You do not need a license to hunt wild pigs in Texas.

On May 31, Gov. Greg Abbott signed Senate Bill 317 into law. This permit allows any landowner, landowner's agent or lessee to take wild pigs without a hunting license. The only time a hunting license is required is on Texas public lands. Unfortunately, recreational but they may also carry 15 other hunting alone cannot control the wild pig problem.

Pigs are pretty much everywhere.

Over 79% of Texas is deemed a suitable habitat for wild pigs, according to NRI. Wild pigs can now be found everywhere, from farms to the lands surrounding suburban shopping malls. Sows, females, can roam a territory of around 2 miles, or 1,100 acres. That also means that if your neighbor or a neighboring county has wild pigs, odds are it is just a question of time until you do too.

We'd need to eliminate 66% of the population, each year, just to break even Experts agree that given current technology, complete eradication of wild pigs in Texas isn't realistic right now. It doesn't help that pigs are the most prolific large mammal when it comes to reproduction. A sow can average 1.5 litters a year and each litter typically produces five to six piglets. Even given mortality rates, we'd need to eliminate 66% of our wild pig population annually just to stop our population numbers from growing.

Wild hogs spread E. coli and other diseases.

our water resources with E. coli,

owls, clanging pans, rubber

diseases, some of which can be transmitted to people. Swine brucellosis and tularemia are two particular concerns to humans. There is also the threat of tick-borne diseases like Lyme and Rocky Mountain spotted fever. That said, when handling a dead pig make sure protective latex gloves and eye wear are worn and avoid bodily fluids. Like all pork, wild pig meat must be cooked to a minimum of 160 degrees before it can be safely consumed.

They learn to avoid traps quickly.

As we mentioned earlier, pigs are smart - really, really smart. If you set a trap that only captures one or two animals at a time, odds are pretty good you won't catch any other wild pigs that saw the earlier misfortune of their brethren. You need to have a trap large enough for the entire sounder, or group, or you'll be looking for alternative means to capture the pigs from the sounder that got away.

To learn more about wild pigs, AgriLife Extension has online courses available and links to informational videos. The Texas A&M AgriLife Research and Extension Center in Overton also Not only can wild pigs infect offers a thorough online wild pig abatement and education guide.

Protect your Winter Landscape from Hungry Wildlife

By Melinda Myers

Special to The Hesperian-Beacon

There's no doubt that managing critters in the landscape can be a challenge especially as food supplies start to dwindle or you change out your garden for the winter season. If you are battling with rabbits, deer, groundhogs or other wildlife, don't let down your guard as the growing season begins to wind down.

Be proactive. Start before they get into the habit of dining on your landscape. It is gardeners report success sureasier to keep them away than break the dining habit. Fence them out. Fencing is the best defense against most wildlife. A four feet tall fence around a small garden will keep out rabbits. Secure the bottom tight to the ground or bury it several inches to prevent rabbits and voles from crawling underneath. Or fold the bottom of the fence outward, making sure it's tight to the ground. Animals tend not to crawl under when the bottom skirt faces soap, handfuls of human hair away from the garden.

Go deeper, at least 12 to 18 inches, if you are trying to discourage woodchucks. And make sure the gate is secure. Many hungry animals have found their way into the garden through openings around and under the gate.

A five-foot fence around small garden areas can help safeguard your plantings against hungry deer. Some rounding their garden with fishing line mounted on posts at one- and three-foot heights. Break out the repellents. Homemade and commercial repellents can be used. Apply before the animals start feeding and reapply as directed. Consider using a natural repellent that's safe for people and wildlife. Scare 'em away. Blow up snakes, slivers of deodorant and noise makers are scare tactics that have been used by gardeners for years. Consider your environment when selecting a tactic. Urban animals are used to the sound and smell of people. Alternate scare tactics for more effective control. The animals won't be afraid of a snake that hasn't moved in weeks.

Combine tactics. Use a mix of fencing, scare tactics and repellents. Keep monitoring for damage. If there are enough animals and they are hungry, they will eat just about anything.

And most importantly, don't give up. A bit of persistence, variety and adaptability is the key to success. Investing some time now will not only deter existing critters from dining in your landscape, but will also reduce the risk of animals moving in next season.

Don't forget about nature. Welcome hawks and fox into your landscape. Using less pesticides and tolerating some critters, their food source, will encourage them to visit your yard. These natural pest controllers help keep the gardenmunching critters under con-

97, died peacefully on Monday, October 30, 2019, at Brookdale Westover Hills, with his loving wife, Jo-Hal (Wofford) Brown and his six children at his side, attending him during his last weeks and hours here on Earth.

Bill was a kind, patient, fun-loving and humble man. He never met a stranger and unfailingly believed that everyone he encountered would have these same character traits. He often told a story of a time when, as a young newly-wed, one of his coworkers borrowed his car to go pick up dinner for Bill and himself, but instead, stole Bill's car. On each telling, Bill ended this story laughing, and saying "He was the nicest guy you'd ever want to meet." Bill genuinely seemed to believe that about most everyone he met. Born in Floydada on May 20, 1922, "Billy Boy" was the youngest child of his doting parents William Edward Brown, Sr. and Bernice Beatrice (Wolf) Brown. He was predeceased by his brother, Martin Edward Brown, and sister, Gladys

His paternal grandparents, William Taylor Brown and Harriet (Fortenberry) Brown, were pioneers of Floydada who settled in town in the early 1900s and operated the Brown Bros. General Store' on Floydada's town square - an enterprise that Bill remembered fondly and with familial pride. Many of Bill's 'Fortenberry' and 'Brown' relatives populated Floyd and Lockney Counties throughout the 1900s and some remain in the Texas Panhandle today.

Ruth Badgett.

Bill attended Floydada schools, was a clarinet player in the Whirlwind Band, a FHS graduate, and after graduating, attended Texas Technological College (now Texas Tech) in Lubbock. At age 20, he became a member of the 'Greatest Generation'volunteering to enter the Army Air Corp on June 5, 1942 and requesting active service in Europe

William Edward "Bill" Brown, Jr., in November 1942. He became a their enduring marriage, despite all pilot instructor at Ellington Field, prior to being deployed for overseas duty. His most demanding air battles in Europe were in the Battle of Ardennes and the Battle of the Rhineland and the Conquest of Central Europe. For his service in WWII, Bill earned the Air Medal, the Bronze Service Medal, as well as the European, African, and Middle East Service Medals. He returned to the USA when the war in Eu> rope ended. After his military service, Bill returned home and farmed with his father Edd in Floyd and neighboring counties, but his true love was always flying. He started flying at an early age and continued to fly well into his 70s. Anyone who flew with him agreed he was a gifted pilot. From the air he could see for many miles and he loved what he saw. He regaled everyone with photos of 'patterns' made by the farmed and planted fields, by cloud formations that resembled animals or people, and of the Panhandle's subtle landscape of canyons and mesas. The excitement and wonder that Bill felt with what he saw in the moon, stars, sunsets and sunrises never flagged. As long as he was able, he carried a camera and filled boxes with photos of the beauty that he saw everywhere around him in the Panhandle of Texas and on his far-flung travels around the world with his beloved wife, Jo-Hal.

> Bill and Jo-Hal were married in Plainview, Texas on August 2, 1948, and had celebrated their 71st anniversary just a few weeks prior to Bill's passing. They were fortunate to be able to travel the world together, which was something they both enjoyed immensely. Through challenges, they were inseparable and devoted to one another.

In addition to Jo-Hal, Bill leaves six children, Rande Brown; Jo-Christy Brown and husband, Clay Smith; Web [William E. Brown, III]; Cary Meiners and husband, Roger Meiners; Thiess Brown and wife, Gina; and Tracy Brown. Bill also leaves thirteen grandchildren, Christopher 'Rocky' Johnston, Nikki-Em LaCour, Katy Brown, Amy Brown, Callie Kent, Billy Meiners, Joe Meiners, Molly Meiners, Jennifer McAfee, Jessica McKesson, William Brown, Juliann Brown, Jadynn Brown. There are also eight great children to carry Bill's legacy on for decades: Caden LaCour, Julien Johnston, Cora Kent, Catherine McAfee, Joseph McAfee, John McAfee, Marigold McKesson and Cora McKesson.

Bill and Jo-Hal moved from Floydada to Forth Worth in 2015 to be nearer their children in the Metroplex area, but Bill never stopped wanting to return to his hometown. He was so determined to return to Floydada that he managed to purchase and have two cars delivered to his assisted living facility - for his 'drive back to Floydada', though he hadn't driven in several years.

Bill's desire to come home to Flovdada was realized on October 4, 2019, at which time he was interred at the Floydada Cemetery. As he returned home, a breeze carried the refrain of 'taps' across the surrounding fields, a crop duster prepared for takeoff at the nearby Floydada airport - a place that Bill held dear - and his son, Thiess Martin Brown, led a brief graveside service for family and remaining friends. His absence will echo in our hearts forever.

10 THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2019 | THE FLOYD COUNTY HESPERIAN-BEACON

At 3080 feet, Quitaque Peak, located at the eastern edge of the county, has been a familiar landmark for explorers and Indians alike. José P. Tafoya, and other Comancheros (traders) from New Mexico, would come to Quitaque Peak to trade with the Comanches. At that time, the county laid on the southern edge of the notorious Valley of Tears, so named because white captives were separated among various Indian groups and ransomed by Comancheros.

believed to have traveled through

Floyd County.

In August of 1841, the Texan-Santa Fe expedition established Camp Resolution near the junction of Quitaque and Los Lingos creeks, in the county's northeastern part.

In 1871 and again in 1874, Col. Ranald S. Mackenzie's Fourth United States Cavalry came through Floyd County in pursuit of the hostile Quahadi Comanches.

Hide hunters out of Fort Griffin (near Albany) traded in the area but the dwindling buffalo population meant less and less trade for buffalo hides.

Ranchers entered the area with free-range cattle outfits in the mid-1870s. The Baker brothers and O.J. Wiren established the headquarters of the Quitaque (Lazy F) Ranch, later owned by Charles Goodnight. At one time, the ranch was part of the JA Ranch, on the banks of Quitaque Creek.

The firm of Owens, Marseilles and Duncan grazed both cattle and sheep on its H Bar L (later the TM Bar) Ranch in Blanco Canyon, located in the south-central part of the county.

Other pioneer ranches that had land in Floyd County included the Two-Buckle and the Matador.

On August 21, 1876, the Texas legislature officially formed Floyd County, named for the Alamo martyr.

Floyd County was one of 54 counties established from the Bexar and Young territories.

In 1884, Arthur B. Duncan and his family became the county's first settlers when they located in Blanco Canyon, a short distance above Henry Clay (Hank) Smith's ranch in Crosby County.

At that time, Floyd County was attached to Donley County for administrative purposes. The Duncans and other settlers had to travel to Clarendon to file on state lands for homes.

In the spring of 1887, Thomas J. Braidfoot and his family located on a section of school land that afterward was platted as the town of Della Plain. It was there that the county's first school was begun late in 1888.

The move to organize Floyd County produced a heated rivalry among its developing communities for the honor of being the county seat.

Lockney, which became Della Plain's chief rival, was founded in 1889. In the spring of 1890, J.K. Gwynn appeared on the scene as a representative of Carolina V. Price, a Missouri native who owned numerous sections in Floyd County. Gwynn had one of the prize sections platted as Floyd City, another candidate for the county seat.

Lockney combined with Floyd City, and in the organization election on May 28, 1890, Lockney and Floyd City won by a vote of 55 to 33. The election was subsequently contested in district court and later in the Supreme Court, but the validity of the election was sustained.

Floyd City was renamed Floydada in 1892, and has remained the seat of local government since.

A. B. Duncan served as the first county judge.

Although Floyd County had a population of 529 by 1890, droughts, financial panics and grasshopper plagues caused many settlers to vacate the region during the next decade. Some of the communities including Della Plain and Mayshaw were abandoned.

It looked as though Lockney too would be vacated, but it was revived in 1894 with the establishment of Lockney Christian College, which lasted until 1917.

Next week we will look at Floyd County through the 1900s and beyond.
