BSCSC residents enjoy community parade

By NATALIE PERMENTER
 Herald Contributing Writer

One of the biggest tragedies of COVID-19 has been the isolation of our most vulnerable citizens - the residents of our long-term care facilities. Since the onset of the pandemic, President Donald Trump issued an order that visitation to nursing homes, rehabilitations centers and the like would temporarily suspend visitation to try and keep the risk level low for those residents.

With visitation being temporarily suspended, healthcare workers have become creative in finding safe activities designed to engage the residents and give them some much needed fellowship. While no in-person contact visits have been allowed, numerous facilities have allowed visits through the window, had family members leave signs for their loved ones

That creativity expanded a little bit more this past week, as Big Spring Center for Skilled Care extended the call for support from their facility to community based. Big Spring Center for Skilled Care extended the invitation for resident's families, local businesses and community members to join together and take part in a special parade last Friday.

"Our residents were very excited to get out of the facility and enjoy some fresh air and sunlight to see a great parade given to them by our amazing community," Christy Brownfield, Marketing Director/ and Admission Coordinator, said.

The residents and health care workers were all smiles as they lined up with signs and balloons for the parade, with more than 15 cars in the mix, the heart of Big Spring was represented. As the parade started the participants drove by with handmade signs, offered a wave and a shout to the residents to let them know they are not forgotten.

"They were excited to see all the people who came to wish them well. They want to thank all the businesses that took the time to share their wonderful joy with them," Brownfield said.

OUR DOWNTOWN BIG SPRING OFFICE WILL BE OPEN SOON!

More virus testing taking place in Texas prisons, Houston furloughs 3,000

By JUAN A. LOZANO & PAUL J. WEBER

Associated Press

Texas will begin widespread coronavirus testing in state prisons where at least 30 people have died, officials announced Tuesday, and Houston will furlough about 3,000 workers as the economic shut down and unsteady oil prices wallops the nation's fourth-largest city.

Republican Gov. Greg Abbott also said he tested negative for the virus after his visit last week to the White House came on the same day that a valet to President Donald Trump tested positive.

Here's the latest in Texas:

MORE TESTS COMING TO PRISONS

The Texas Department of Criminal Justice announced that tens of thousands of COVID-19 tests are on the way to the state's prisons, where inmates have tested positive at a dramatically higher rate than the rest of Texas.

The tests are designed to be self-administered and a dozen "strike teams" are receiving training this week, agency spokesman Jeremy Desel said. It was the second announcement of widespread testing in Texas in as many days: Abbott on Monday ordered coronavirus testing for every nursing home resident and staff member in the state.

More than 1,700 prison inmates have tested positive, according to the agency. The sick has included include 10 inmates at the Pack Unit near Houston, where sanitary and health conditions are the subject of a federal class action lawsuit.

'UNSTABLE TIMES' IN HOUSTON

Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner said a city budget deficit of $169 million that's been exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic will force the city to furlough around 3,000 workers and empty its rainy day fund, and warned that could be problematic with hurricane season starting June 1.

Turner said Houston is expected to lose about $107 million in sales tax revenue this year and the same amount in the upcoming fiscal year, which begins in July. Houston is also being hit hard by the dramatic drop in oil prices due to plummeting demand from worldwide virus-related lockdowns.

"I don't think there's any question with the advent of COVID-19, that these are some unstable times economically for the city of Houston," Turner said.

To close the budget gap, about 3,000 city workers will have to be furloughed for a maximum of 10 days within the upcoming fiscal year, Turner said. The city has more than 20,000 workers. Police officers, firefighters and sanitation employees will not be furloughed.

Turner said the city will also have to empty its rainy day fund, which typically has about $20 million for emergency spending. This will put the city in a "precarious financial state" as officials won't have the fund to help Houston respond if a hurricane hits, the mayor said.

EL PASO ASKS TO PAUSE REOPENINGS

Leaders in El Paso are asking Abbott to delay more reopenings in their community amid worries over rising caseloads.

El Paso County Judge Ricardo Samaniego sent a letter Monday asking the governor to keep current restrictions in place around El Paso until numbers improve. Gyms have permission to reopen in Texas starting Monday, and Abbott could also allow restaurants to increase capacity. A spokesman for Abbott did not immediately return a message for comment.

El Paso's cases have climbed more than 60% over the past two weeks.

ABBOTT TESTS NEGATIVE

Abbott told Wichita Falls television station KAUZ that he tested negative for the virus Monday. He had visited the White on Thursday, the same day a member of the military serving as one of Trump's valets tested positive.

Texas has more than 41,000 cases and at least 1,100 deaths related to the virus. The true numbers are likely higher because many people have not been tested and studies suggest people can be infected and not feel sick.

For most people, the coronavirus causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness, including pneumonia.

Police video shows chaos in Texas park as gunshots erupt

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Newly-released police video of a weekend shooting in a crowded North Texas park shows a chaotic scene as gunfire erupted and five people were left wounded.

A police statement Tuesday said about 400 people were gathered in Village Creek Park in southeastern Fort Worth park about 5:30 p.m. Sunday, where they were riding all-terrain vehicles and drinking alcohol in violation of local ordinances. City officials had also discouraged such gatherings because of the coronavirus pandemic.

Police officers used patrol car loudspeakers and sirens to ask the crowd to disperse, with each request growing more urgent and demanding. The video then caught the sounds of numerous gunshots and showed the crowd scattering and fleeing as officers rushed to aid the wounded.

No arrests have been reported, and what prompted the shooting was not immediately known.

Police had initially estimated the crowd size as about 600 people. As of Sunday, a police spokesman said two of those wounded were in critical condition and three suffered injuries that weren't considered life-threatening. A police spokesman had no condition updates as of Tuesday.

Family of Guatemalan woman shot dead by border agent sues

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — The family of a 20-year-old Guatemalan woman shot dead in 2018 by a U.S. Border Patrol agent filed a civil rights lawsuit Tuesday against the agent and the U.S. government.

The family of Claudia Gómez González is suing in federal court in Laredo, Texas for unspecified actual and punitive damages.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Texas filed the lawsuit one year after filing a $100 million federal claim on the family's behalf. The claim was filed one year after the May 23, 2018, shooting.

Gómez González crossed the Texas-Mexico border with several other migrants when border agents confronted them in a vacant lot near Laredo. One agent shot Gómez González in the head, and she took moments to die, according to the lawsuit.

The lawsuit only refers to one of the 21 defendant agents by name, referring to the others as "Does 1-20." The lawsuit alleges that one of the agents, or a combination of them, were responsible for the woman's death and that she was the victim of excessive violence and a civil rights violation.

An email to the named agent seeking comment was not answered immediately.

Officials probe why man killed on Texas runway was there

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Investigators are trying to determine how a man with apparently no security clearance ended up on a runway at a Texas airport where he was struck and killed by a landing commercial jet.

Junin Ko, 22, died Thursday night when a Southwest Airlines plane struck him as it landed at Austin-Bergstrom International Airport, authorities said. Pilots had reported seeing a person while landing.

The Boeing 737 aircraft was arriving from Dallas with 53 passengers and five crew members, airport spokesperson Bryce Dubee said.

The man didn't have a security badge, which would have cleared him to enter the airport's secure side, Dubee told the Austin-American Statesman for a report published Monday.

Employees at the Austin Department of Aviation, airlines and concessions are required to have a badge, he said, adding that the man didn't work anywhere in the airport where a security badge is not required, such as a hotel or gas station.

"This type of thing is defined as a runway incursion," Dubee said. "This is the first time we've ever had a security breach of this nature."

Dubee didn't offer further comment on how the man got onto the runway.

The Federal Aviation Administration, the Transportation Security Administration, Austin police and the airport are investigating what happened, Dubee said.

The airport declined to provide details of how or if it would change its security protocols following the incursion.

Future Forsan basketball players should begin mandatory community service soon

By SHAWN MORAN

Herald Sportswriter

Over the past few years, Forsan's Head Basketball Coach Cory Richardson has made it a requirement for all of his players to complete at least five hours of community service before they are allowed to step onto the court and compete. Richardson believes that it is an important life lesson and a way for each student-athlete to give back to the community.

"We've always had a philosophy of serving and how it's a great way to teach you how to lead and how to be the best you can be," Richardson said. "Our whole mantra is 'Serve, Honor, Compete' and serve comes first. We believe we can serve our community and that we can serve each other and do what the team needs you to do. We always ask for a lot of help and this is a little way that we can give back."

There are many different things that can qualify for community service during this time and Richardson says there is "no task too small" for his players to complete. Whether it be mowing the lawn, cleaning up trash from the side of the road or helping out at the local church, the Forsan basketball team will be glad to help out.

Richardson even mentioned that last year the entire team helped serve food at a homeless shelter in Lubbock while out of town at a tournament. Even though the community service is required for Forsan basketball players, the community service does not have to be done within Forsan.

The coach not only believes that it is important to give back to the community that supports the Buffaloes at every home game but also that his team should set aside at least a couple of hours during a road trip to an out-of-town game of tournament each season to serve that community as well.

"We try to take one trip as kind of a bonding tournament and we'll go and spend the night. And when we do that, we try to find some way to serve a different community so that the impact of my program is not just felt in Howard County," Richardson said.

Last year, the Buffaloes volunteered as a team and it was a memorable experience for everyone involved. Some student-athletes take the community service into their own hands and help in whatever way they want to. In fact, Mason Hillger and his father even took a trip to Africa to help the many people in need over there.

One of the main reasons Richardson introduced the mandatory community service is so his players are not only learning how to be good basketball players on the court, but also how to be great young men off of it.

While five hours is not a lot of time to most people, it is a barrier for these young ballers to cross so that they are able to play the game they love so much. It also helps Richardson see who on his team is a natural-born leader and how determined they are to grow and succeed.

"One of our main goals in athletics is to grow young men, not just athletes," Richardson said.

"We always tell them that the man they'll become is way more important than they player they were. So, anything that we can teach them as far as helping others and having a view of the bigger picture helps with that."

The coronavirus pandemic has thrown things off since the middle of March and things are slowly getting back to normal now. There is still plenty of time for Forsan's basketball players to get their community service done, but it might be smarter to get it out of the way soon. Since many basketball players are multi-sport stars at Forsan, it will not be long after restrictions are lifted that the Buffs' will be back on the gridiron and their free time will be limited.

If you want to play with Forsan, you have to be willing to help out your friends.

High-tech devices help NFL teams keep players safe, in shape

By MICHAEL MAROT

AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Darius Leonard works relentlessly at his rural South Carolina home to prepare for another football season. He's also wary of pushing too hard, knowing a minor injury could become a major setback given the dearth of medical experts in his area.

So when in doubt, the Indianapolis Colts star confers with his coaches, who are creating safer, more efficient individual workout programs based on data collected the past few weeks.

It's all part of a changing NFL world: high-tech devices supplanting old-school creativity.

"We are getting a ton done," Colts coach Frank Reich says. "With the technology today, they all have heart rate monitors, so they do their workouts, it's all logged, it all kind of shoots to our system. This isn't, 'Hey, I'm watching you.' This is, 'Hey, I'm interested in you.' I'm a little bit of a numbers guy, so I like to see these charts. Then I'll show them to the team."

That fits neatly into the new guidelines for this year's revamped offseason program, too.

Teams can conduct classroom instruction and on-field activities through Zoom meetings or similar apps instead of at their facilities. They can meet virtually as much as four hours per day, four days per week.

Players also can voluntarily wear monitors to track workouts. Teams can send up to $1,500 to each player to purchase equipment.

Not everyone has followed the same script. New Orleans canceled its offseason program. But the Colts are taking advantage of their allotted time. Reich estimates Indy spends half its time in meetings and the rests monitoring workouts.

Technological advances are helping everyone cope with the COVID-19 pandemic.

"I understand a lot more about the NFL now than I did 10 years ago," new Dallas Cowboys backup quarterback Andy Dalton said, comparing the difficulty he faced during the 2011 lockout with today's circumstances. "So I guess the advantage now is there's still these virtual meetings, so you're able to connect and talk through the offense and talk through different things, stuff that I didn't have my rookie year during the lockout."

Social media also plays a part.

Detroit Lions coach Matt Patricia recently reminded running back Ty Johnson about training safely — after watching a video of Johnson pulling a Jeep while wearing a helmet.

"Obviously, I'm pretty sure there was someone in the car to hit the brakes in case he slipped," Patricia said. "I go to safety first. I mean it's a Jeep, so once you get it moving, the ball bearings kick in and the tires go. Some of that, I was busting his chops about."

Companies such as WHOOP and Myzone could become game changers even after things return to normal.

WHOOP, an online fitness company, partners with the NFLPA to provide wearable monitors for players. Nearly 1,000 players have used the service over the past three years as well as teams from Major League Baseball, the NBA, NFL and Major League Soccer.

The waterproof device can be worn around the wrist or bicep and tracks heart rate and strain during workouts and recovery periods. In addition to measuring heart rate variability, resting heart rate and respiratory rate, it provides information about sleep performance to give coaches the necessary information to ensure safe, efficient workout plans that won't over-stress the body.

"If you go too far and keep training in a state where you're not recovered, you're not making physiological gains at that point. You're just digging a hole," said vice president of performance Kristen Holmes, a former U.S. national field hockey player and NCAA title-winning coach at Princeton. "It's not about being and more and more. It's about being smart and managing load."

The results may even help in the fight against COVID-19. WHOOP has information showing customers who tested positive saw a spike in their respiratory rates just a few days before the onset of symptoms.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

Backward Luck of Jupiter Retrograde

ARIES (March 21-April 19). It's once again time to check in with yourself on the higher thinking levels. Stop and ask yourself what you believe. Sure, you've done this already, but things have changed, and so have you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). In a sea of retweets and homogenized opinions, you have a chance to put something out into the world that wasn't there before. People need to hear something that's not being said. You're the one to say it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You think of someone, but you're not exactly sure what you need to share about that thought process. Relationships are a dance, and you'd rather err on the side of not stepping on toes.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Everyone wants love, attention and credit where it's due. Some want passion, all the attention and all the credit, too, due or not. Place your effort where it's going to be reciprocated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). No one is you. You make sure that your work reflects this, too -- that no one will be mistaken for you. Self-critique and quality control will set you apart from the competition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Confirmation bias suggests that humans tend to believe first and then find supporting evidence second. This order makes it impossible to root out factual truth. Fight the phenomenon. Question your own motives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). For greater clarity and insight, consider the hedonic treadmill. Humans tend to stabilize to their own set point of happiness, despite the temporary highs and lows that life offers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You've been amenable to the suggestions of your crew, and occasionally, there are those who will take advantage. Now it's time to be particular -- difficult, even. What's in it for you?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You're not looking for validation, agreement or even support. You don't need anyone else to approve of you in order to approve of yourself. That said, you deserve respect. Don't accept less.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Maybe it's true that you already have all you need, though it doesn't exactly feel true today. Ironically, you actually feel like you need fewer things.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The criticism we have of others is self-criticism, and the same goes for the praise. When working on self-love is difficult, switch to other-love. It

BY HOLIDAY MATHIS will have the same effect.

PI-

19-March 20). Though you may be all too aware of the mistakes your loved ones have made, you're also loyal. With loyalty comes discretion and a willingness to focus on strengths as you support your tribe.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (May 14). You'll have two significant victories this year. One will come very easily, and the other will be hard-won. You'll enjoy taking part in communities, though you'll be connecting differently than how you once would. You'll share good vibes with a new person and by this time next year be fixtures in each other's lives. Capricorn and Leo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 27, 18, 44 and 29.

JUPITER RETROGRADE REPORT: Jupiter turns it around in Capricorn today, going for a four-month retrograde journey that is sure to shake up our ideas about luck. It's as though the planet of plenty wants us to know that all is well as he wastes no time forming auspicious angles to the other planets, beginning with a very positive angle to the sun in Taurus. Taurus is the sign of material possessions and stability, and when the sun is in this station, it roots for a robust abundance mentality.

Consider that individual humans, having a limited scope of destiny, may actually have no idea whatsoever what is good or bad about luck. As evidenced in "the lottery curse," people can get everything they want and have that occurrence be the worst thing that ever happened to them. The fable about the son who falls off a horse and breaks his leg (bad luck?), which, in turn, disqualifies him from a military draft (good luck?), comes to mind.

Perhaps it is best to define luck as simply the hand of fate, the intervention of destiny or random occurrences affecting the outcome and leave it at that. The point is not to know who it favors and how; rather, it's to leverage opportunity with the best and highest intentions and then observe what that does to the plot.

CELEBRITY PROFILES: Cate Blanchett is a critic's darling as the conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly in the recently released Hulu drama miniseries "Mrs. America." Blanchett's Taurus sun surrenders to Neptune, planet of emotional highs and lows, discontent and uplift. Her Mercury in the roving sign of Gemini makes her a keen observer and communicator of the human experience.

Helping Brother's Ex
Has Caused Family
Rift

Dear Annie: My brother was with his ex-wife, "Liz," for 13 years. They raised three wonderful children together until she left my brother. They've been divorced five years now. I've been the middle person in her and my brother's relationship ever since. Recently, I moved Liz in with me, along with her newborn son. She did not have adequate housing to go to, and she would have had her newborn taken from her if she did not have a safe place to live.

I moved them in with me knowing my brother and his wife would be very upset. I did it anyway because I thought it was the right thing to do.

Liz had many struggles with drugs after leaving my brother.

Yes, she's made a lot of mistakes. On a positive note, I believe that getting pregnant woke her up, and she's been clean for well over a year. I believe sometimes love and guidance are necessary to help someone be able to change for good.

My brother and his wife are mad at me beyond belief. They won't let me see my nephews who live with them. (My brother and his new wife have custody of the three children whom he and Liz had together.) I helped them raise those children and his new wife's children from a previous relationship. I've also loaned him a great deal of money that he hasn't paid back.

The other day, he said that I am no longer a sister to him but an enemy. We've always been close, so this is really tough. He hates me now and won't so much as talk to me. I've tried to explain to them that I did what I thought was right.

My heart is hurt. What do you think I should do to make things better? Will they ever get better? -- Sister in Sorrow

Dear Sister: Never feel bad for acting your conscience, no matter the blowback. Liz became family to you when she married your brother, and you've continued to treat her like family even after their divorce. To me, that shows you have a big heart.

Your brother does not hate you, but I know that doesn't make the words sting any less. I hope that, in time, as the dust of his anger settles, he can see the situation more clearly. In the meantime, take solace in knowing you've done the right thing in helping Liz and her newborn baby.

Dear Annie: Please allow me to add to your advice to "Concerned in Vestavia." This parent should indeed keep their child from being in such an environment, but what "Reba" and her daughter are doing could be considered a form of elder abuse, specifically financial exploitation. It is a crime for which Reba can be prosecuted in most states. I hope this parent will report what is happening to the authorities where she lives. -- Ruth in Memphis

Dear Ruth: I missed the boat in my response, and I'm glad to print your letter to correct the record. Thanks for writing.

Contract Bridge

By Steve Becker

Declarer has a blind spot

North dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

♠ J 8 3	♠ 9 7 5 4	♥ 6 3	♥ Q 5 4
♥ J 10 7 2	♥ 6 3	♦ Q 5 4	♦ K 10 6 2
♦ A K J 8	♦ 8 5	♣ K 10 6 2	♣ 8 7 4
♣ A 5	♣ Q 6 2

The bidding:
North East South West
1♦ Pass 1♥ Pass
2♥ Pass 4♥

Opening lead — queen of clubs.

Some deals contain built-in traps that may lure declarer to an unnecessary defeat. For this reason, declarer should carefully examine all his assets before committing himself to a particular line of play.

Take this case where South got to four hearts and West led the queen of clubs. Declarer won with the ace, cashed the ace of diamonds, drew two rounds of trump ending in his hand, then led the ten of diamonds and let it ride. East won with the queen, cashed the king of clubs and a club.

shifted to a spade, and West's A-Q of spades put the contract down one.

South bemoaned his bad luck in finding the queen of diamonds and both missing spade honors offside. With proper play, however, the contract was a virtual certainty from the outset.

The fault lay in South's becoming overly enamored of dummy's diamond suit and the potential spade discard it afforded. Had he instead looked at the hand a whole, he would have realized that his spade holding was actually an asset rather than a liability.

The correct approach is to draw trump ending in dummy and lead a spade toward the K-10. After East follows low, South can either finesse the ten or play the king, depending on where he thinks the ace is located.

As it happens, both spade honors are offside, so declarer cannot avoid losing two spade tricks. Nevertheless, the contract is assured.

For example, suppose West wins the ten of spades with the queen, cashed the queen of clubs and shifts to a diamond. Declarer puts up the ace and plays a second spade to the king and ace, establishing dummy's jack. Whatever West returns, South cannot be stopped from discarding a diamond on the jack of spades, and he winds up losing only two spades and a club.

Tomorrow: Test your play.

Here's How It Works:

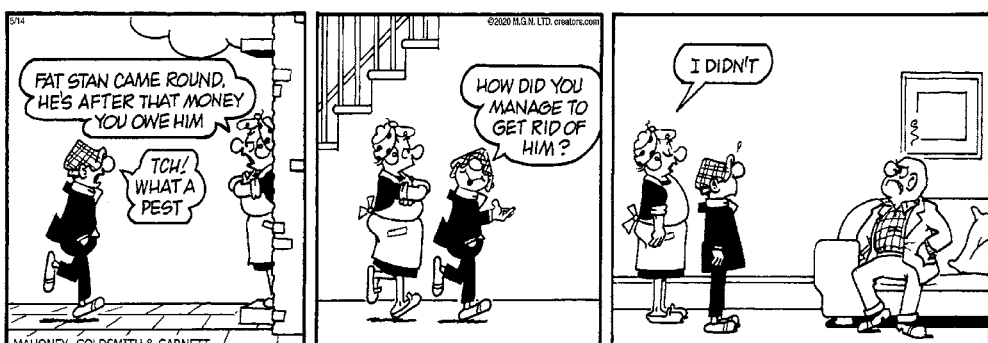

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Zebra Technologies has been using computer chips in shoulder pads and practice shirts since 2014. Now it has installed them in footballs. Radio transmitters at stadiums and practice fields transmit data that company officials say can track measurements within 6 inches of actual distance.

The results often appear on television broadcasts: how far or fast a player ran; how far a ball was thrown; or how much separation a receiver had from a defender. Those numbers came in handy when most pro days were canceled because of the pandemic.

"Not only did we track the Senior Bowl game, but we tracked all of the practice sessions. We captured all of the player information that week," said John Pollard, vice president of Zebra sports business development. "The teams apply it as a tool like any other training process or mechanism they may have in place. It can help with things like rehab, too."

But without the radio transmitters, Zebra cannot track workouts at home. WHOOP and Myzone still can, and their numbers help players like Leonard, a 2018 All-Pro, return to football healthy and prepared.

"I'm not going to say I can get enough out of it, but I can get a good bit," Leonard said of his modified regimen. "It sucks being from the country where you don't have a chiropractor, you don't have a physical therapist who can actually work on you day in and day out. So with me, a guy who loves to train hard and run fast every day, I can't do that now because if I tweak something I have no one here to help me out. So I really have to take my time and kind of do all the small things right."

NBA now up to 10 teams back for voluntary workouts

By TIM REYNOLDS

AP Basketball Writer

The NBA is now one-third of the way back, at least in terms of voluntary workouts.

With Miami re-opening its doors Wednesday, 10 of the league's 30 teams have gone forward with on-court individual workouts — the first permitted sessions since the league ordered teams to close their training facilities as part of the coronavirus pandemic response about two months ago.

Besides the Heat, the other teams that have opened so far are Portland, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Denver, Atlanta, Indiana, Sacramento, Toronto and Utah. More are expected in the coming days; among them, Orlando is close, and the Los Angeles Lakers are targeting Saturday.

And while there still is no decision about whether the season can resume — NBA Commissioner Adam Silver, according to a person with knowledge of the situation, has told the league's players he expects to make that call by mid-June at the latest — getting back to some semblance of work is generally being considered a positive step.

"We're kind of just feeling it out, playing it by ear, taking it day by day," said Toronto assistant coach Brittini Donaldson, who was in the gym with Raptors wing Malcolm Miller when the reigning NBA champions opened their facility again Monday. "Hopefully, you know, in a week we can start ramping it up a little more. But to start we're just keeping it very basic, very simple."
