The Taft governmental commission sent to the Philippines to both legislate for and govern the islands claim to have pacified and established civil government over a large part of the islands, but it seems from Gen. MacArthur's report as well as from uncensored news from the islands that the civil authorities have to be supported by the military arm. That sort of civil government is a fraud and a farce.

This individual spent thousands of American dollars fitting out an ambulance corps for the British war against the Boers. He never spent a penny when the United States was fighting the Spanish. It was right that he should not spend anything in an American war, for there is nothing American about him except some money which he got by marrying a woman whose ancestors bought cheap land on Manhattan Island. The Americans who presented the medal to King Edward of England had helped to fit out a hospital ship to take care of the British soldlers shot by the Boers. Those same Americans had done nothing had shown no interest, when their own country was at war in a righteous cause except to go about prating that England "sympathized with us" in our war against Spain.

William H. Hunt, who will succeed Charles H. Allen as governor of Porto Rico Sept 1, has been secretary of the island under Governor Allen and is thoroughly familiar with its affairs. He was born in New Orleans fortyfour years ago and is the fourth son of the late William Henry Hunt, who was Secretary of the Navy in the cabinets of Presidents Garfield and Arthur, and minister to Russia. The greater part of his life, however, has been passed in Montana, where he has held prominent political positions ever since he was 27 years old. Mr. Hunt was equeated at Tale, but ill health prevented the completion of his course. As a recompense for this loss of a degree and as a tribute to his later successes. It is stipulated that either party may terminate this agreement by giving six months' notice, and there is a demand in certain quarters that our eral roat. government give this notice and resume the right to build war vessels on the lakes without restrictions of any kind.

ROAXING THE YOUNG LADIES. This story comes from Milan. A young nobleman of that city, of marriageable age, and master of a fortune of ten thousand francs a year, not long ago came to the conclusion that it was time for him to look out for a wife, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. He advertised his want in a newspaper requesting that every answer to the advertisement might be accompanied by the portrait of the lady who replied.

A collateral result of this notice was that two or three of the best photographic artists of the city had more work on their hands than they attend to. The direct could result was sixty-five letters, with as many fair maidenly countenances as would fill a good-sized album. The answers were in some cases accompanied by parental certificate, setting forth in touching language the charms and virtues of the daughters. The young man replied to each of his correspondents that, before coming to a final decision, a personal view would be of advantage. To each of the ladies, without the knowledge of the others, he sent a ticket for an orchestra stall in the Scala Theater, announcing that he himself would be in a particular box, the number and sitation of which he stated. A few evenings later the play-going public of Milan were perplexed to explain the appearance of one of the rows of stalls in that immense building. A long line of beauties in toilettes of extreme elegance, unbroken by single black coat, was observed. Furtively, and with trepidation, did each damsel from time to time raise her opera glass to that box-the cynosure of many bright eyes-in which the graceful youth reposed.

Suspiciously, and with darkened brow, did each damsel turn to the long file of her neighbors, and wonder at the magnetism which drew each glass to the one central spot. By and by the audience, to whom some hint of the secret had leaked out, began to give audible signs that they enjoyed the joke. The sporadic laughter of the theater increased the confusion of the young ladies, and the contagion of fun turned the sporadic mirth into a gen-

More on Cross-Fertilization of Kieffer. From Farmers' Review: I have been reading in the Farmers' Review the many opinions on the cross-fertilization of Kieffer. Now it does seem to me that if cross-fertilizing is so necessary and useful among our large fruits I should have trees loaded to the ground with apples and pears nearly every year. If 500 varieties of bearing trees in a forty-acre orehard is not enough to insure cross-fertilization, for farming and other circumstances rengoodness sake how many are necessary? Again wouldn't you suppose that where a hundred varieties are grafted on one tree, and the tree filled with such grafts had reached a spread of thirty feet, there is a good chance for fertilization without adding any more grafts? This tree should be pretty full of fruit, shouldn't it, ye scientific men?

Well, it did bear three or four bushels of fruit one year, but it never so over-did itself before, nor has it since. I have several such trees and they do not bear a bit better than the other trees of my orchard. How much does the orchard bear? Well, I will tell you. From a thousand and more of bearing trees we have not had enough apples for family use nine months in the year for several years, and I am not expecting enough this year. The family is quite large it is true, but I do think, that, counting in this great benefit of cross-fertilization, we should have enough to eaf for ten months in the year. I am striking for an extra

Notes on Sugar Beets.

One of the hardest things about the growing of sugar beets is to get a uniform stand. It is evident that if there are spaces in the field not covered by the beets the losses will be considerable. This irregularity comes often from poor preparation of the land and also from putting in the seed too deep so that it does not germinate at all, or if it does germinate, does so at a period so far anterior to the other beets that the new plants have little encouragement to develop. Lack of moisture at planting time is also responsible for much of this unevenness in stand. When fertilizers are used it would seem quite necessary to be sure that their admixture with the soil is perfect, to make an even feeding ground for the plants and thus ensure a uniform development.

The most common cause of failure among beginners, according to William Headden, is a lack of thorough preparation of soil. He advocates plowing in the fall and subsoiling to a depth of 18 inches. In the spring harrowing is all that is necessary. That, however, is for Colorado. Subsoiling may not be so necessary for some other states, and in fact there are places where it would certainly be a detriment. The ground, however, should be well pulverized or be by nature porous enough to permit the beet to make a downward and uniform lateral growth. We have seen sugar beets planted on soils of a clayey nature and where the ground had been poorly prepared. The result was beets of irregular growth, many of them undersized, and large numbers of them developed so much above the ground that they were of little value.

What is the cost of raising an acre of beets for the sugar factory? The answer will vary according to conditions, and one of these conditions is the price of labor. A great deal of labor is necessary, as the bests must be thinned and otherwise given attention. The cost runs from $30 to $45 per acre, estimated. This will make the cost of growing the beets range anywhere from $2 to $4 per ton, if an The price of medicine in Prussia to average yield of 11 or 12 tons per acre regulated by the state.

the growing of sugar beets requires quite an outlay, and that if the crop be a partial failure it will be very easy for the cost per ton to exceed the receipts per ton, which are usually from $1 to $5. We do not say this to discourage any from growing sugar beets, b t that they may not forget to take these things into consideration when preparing to grow beets.

England's Supply of "Store Cattle."

The rearing and selling of store cattle is one of the most important and lucrative departments of Irish stockbreeding, says the English Live Stock Journal. "The trouble and excesse of raising young cattle" have little to do with it. Though we always advise breeding in preference to buying it must be recognized that in parts of England and Scotland the system of der it more convenient to buy than to breed store cattle. The expense is probably as great to buy the stores as to breed them-at any rate, the farmer who buys and feeds a large number of stores is, as a rule, a capitalist, and the plan suits him best. The agriculturists of Canada and the United States would certainly like very well to oust Ireland from this profitable market. The extensive pasture lands of Ireland enable the farmers of Great Britain, and especially those of Scotland, "to forego, to a great extent, the trouble and expense of raising young stock." The frames of the store cattle exported from Ireland are built up out of the Irish grass lands, the animals being fattened and "finished" in Great Britain. "This interesting instance," it is stated, "of a territorial division of labor, within the sphere of agriculture, between different countries, affords evidence, for one thing, of the fine bone-producing qualities of the great limestone plains of Ireland At the same time so great an expansion of the export trade in store cattle and grass, which are mown and the as has now taken place involves an crop left on the ground, mowed twice a exhausting drain on a great natural resource of the country.'

Muck.

The correct use of the word muck, which means dung in a moist state, has been entirely lost in England and is applied without much discrimination to any bog earth derived chiefly from decaying vegetable matter. The term as used includes materials ranging from a bog meadow mud to quite perfect peats. Large deep bogs containing true peat are comparatively few in New England, but small, shallow depressions, containing impure peats, occur everywhere. The gravelly soils of New England need the addition of large amounts of organic matter and these impure peats have been thus used for generations under the general name of "muck." While the use of the word in this sense is provincial and perhaps not to be encouraged, it will be so used here for lack of a better term. By "peat" is generally understood a somewhat similar product in which the decomposition has not advanced so far. Such material is usually brownish in color and when dry has considerable fuel value.

These peaty soils or mucks are the results of the partial decay of vegetable materials. They are found in swampy places filled with stagnant water. The successive growth of sphagnum and other water-loving mosses, as well as the forest leaves falling into the water, are changed by decay into the black earths and impure peats. Mucks thus formed contain appreciable amounts of insoluble nitrogen and usually but little mineral matters, unless sand, clay or silt has been washed into them during thir formation. Mucks owe their peculiar properties to this decomposed vegetable matter, which constitutes the humus of the agricultural chemist.—Bulletin 74, Maine Experiment Station.

of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, says that seeds in both a dry and damp state were tested with different strengths of gas and for different periods of time. In the case of dry grains and seeds it was found that they were able to withstand for several weeks an atmosphere of hydrocyanic-gas many times stronger than that required for the destruction of insect life. Under these conditions a slightly accelerated germication was observed, and the subsequent growth of the seedlings was slightly above normal. Seeds that had been soaked in water were very sensitive to the presence of the gas. Three onehundredths of a grain of potassium cyanide per cubic foot used in generating gas destroys the germination of seeds that have been soaked for 24 hours in water. The resistance of seeds to this gas seems to be somewhat in proportion to the length of time in which they had been previously soaked

The Little Lady of the Tenement.

BY EDGAR WELTON COOLEY. Author "The Life in Her Veins. Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co) This is a story of a man who had talent and a woman who had hope. His name was-but what matters it? To those who met him most frequently he was known as the Silent Man. He lived in a rear room on the third floor of a tenement house, and kept distance by writing for the press. She was known as Old Simpson's tomboy, for the reason that in her younger days, when she wore short skirts and was rather negligent in matters of tollet, there wasn't a boy on the block who could outrun ber, or scale a six-foct fence in less time than she could. Old Simpson, her father, was the cobbler, who pegged away on other people's shoes in the basement of the tenement, and allowed his daughter to wear shoes that were out at the heel and toe.

The Slient Man was silent because he was lonely. For years he had been lonely, until, one day, out of he gloom and the dreariness, with a smile on her face and a song on her lips, she came to him and laid her hand in his. Of evenings, after that, they were wont to walk, arm in arm, down to the brink of the river and listen to the murmur of the ripples and see, across the water, the silver line traced by the moon, which she always spoke of as the path of glory leading out into the afterwhiles.

She, alone of all the world, knew of the goodness of the Silent Man; but that was only because she understood him better than did any one else. She believed in his greatness and called him her genius.

If the Silent Man had ever met Success, it must have been in the darkness, for Success had passed him by unnoticed. So, whenever she rested her hands on his shoulders and smiled up into his eyes, where the shadows of disappointment and despair constantly lingered, and said: "Courage, dear, courage. Some day you will be famous and the world will know you and love you as I do," he would stroke her hair and smile sadly, calling her his angel with the dreamy eyes of hope.

"For some day," she would con tinue, "you will write a story through which the warm blood of your heart will go pulsing and its throbbing will catch the ear of the great, busy world. and it will pause to listen and will say, 'this is the work of a genius.' "

An interesting link between past and presents exists in Oliver Hopkinson, the oldest living graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, who celebrated his 89th birthday anniversary recently. He is the son of Joseph Hopkinson, who in 1798 wrote the word: of the national song, "Hail Columbia." It was written at a time when war was daily expected with France, and no song ever attained a more immediate popularity. FALSE NOTIONS ABOUT REAL RELIGION CORRECTED.

"Of Spices Great Alandance: Neither Was There Any Such Spice as the Queen of Shehn Gave King Solomon." II Chronteles IX: 9.

(Copyright, 1901, by Louis Klopach, N. Y.) Washington, Aug. 4 .- In this discourse Dr. Talmage corrects come of the false notions about religion and represents it as being joy inspiring instead of dolorous. Text II. Chronicles ix., 9: "Of spices great abundance; neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave King Solo-

What is that building out yonder gilttering in the sun? Have you not heard? It is the house of the forest of Lebanon. King Solomon has just taken to it his bride, the princess of Egypt. You see the pillars of the portico and a great tower, adorned with 1,000 shields of gold hung on the outside of the tower-500 of the shields of gold manufactured at Solomon's order, 500 were captured by David, his father, in battle. See how they blaze in the noonday sun!

Solomon goes up the ivory stairs of his throne between twelve lions in statuary and sits down on the back of the golden bull, the head of the huge beast turned toward the people The family and the attendants of the king are so many that the caterers of the palace have to provide every day 100 sheep and thirteen oxen, besides the birds and the venison. I hear the stamping and pawing of 4,000 fine horses in the royal stables. There were important officials who had charge of the work of gathering the straw and the barley for these horses. King Solomon was an early riser, tradition says, and used to take a ride out at daybreak, and when, in his horses of all the realm and followed by mounted archers in purple, as the cavalcade dashed through the streets thing worth getting up at 5 o'clock in the morning to look at.

Seeing for Oueself. Queen Balkis was so pleased with "I'll just go and see him for myself." Yondon it comes—the cavalcade horses and dromedaries, chariots and charloteers, jingling harness and clatflying ensigns and clapping cymbals. The place is saturated with the perfume. She brings cinnamon and saffron and calamus and frankincense and all manner of sweet spices. As the retinue sweeps through the gate cry the charioteers, as the wheels grind the gravel in front of the pillared portico of the king. Queen | than it is for the good that you can do Balkis alights in an atmosphere bewitched with perfume. As the dromedarles are driven up to the king's storehouses, and the bundles of camphor are unloaded, and the sacks of cinnamon and the boxes of spices are opened, the purveyors of the palace discover what my text announces: "Of spices, great abundance; neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon.

Well, my friends, you know that all theologians agree in making Solomon a type of Christ and in making the queen of Sheba a type of every truth seeker, and I will take the responsibility of saving that all the spikenard and cassia and frankincense which the queen of Sheba brought to King Solomon are mightily suggestive of the sweet spices of our holy religion. Christianity is not a collection of sharp technicalities and angular facts and chronological tables and dry statistics. Our religion is compared to frankincense and to cassia, but never to nightshade. It is a bundle of myrrh. It is a dash of holy light. It is a sparkle of cool fountains. It is an opening of opaline gates. It is a collection of spices. Would God that we were as wise in taking spices to our Divine King as Queen Balkis was wise in taking the spices to the earthly Sol-

Christ Brings Cheerfulness.

How any woman keeps house without the religion of Christ to help her is a mystery to me. To have to spend the greater part of one's life, as many women do, in planning for the meals and stitching garments that will soon be rent again and deploring breakages and supervising tardy subordinates and driving off dust that soon again will settle and doing the same thing day in and day out and year in and year out until the hair silvers and the back stoops and the spectacles crawl to the eyes and the grave breaks open under the thin sole of the shoe-oh, it is a long monotony! But when Christ comes to the drawing room and comes to the kitchen and comes to the nursery and comes to the dwelling, then how cheery become all womanly duties! She is never alone now. Martha gets through fretting and joins Mary at the feet of Jessus. All day long Debora is happy because she can help Lapidoth, Hannah because she can make a coat for young Samuel, Mirlam because she can watch her infant brother, Rachel because she can help her father water the stock, the widow of Sarepta because the cruse of oil being replenished. O woman, having in your pantry a nest of boxes containing all kinds of condiments, why have you not tried in your heart and life the spicery of our holy religion? "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her." I must confess that a great deal of the religion of this day is utterly insipid. There is nothing piquant or elevating about it. Men and women go around humming psalms in a minor key and cultivating melancholy, and their worship has in it more sighs than raptures. We do not doubt their piety. Oh, no! But they are sitting at feast where the cook has forgotten to season the food. Everything is flat in their experience and in their conversation. Emancipated from sin and death and hell and on their wry to a magnificent heaven, they act as shough they were trudging on toward an evertany Bay. Religion does no

Put in More Spices.

I have to say also that we need to put more spice and enlivenment in our | midst of the throne shall lead them to religious teaching, whether it be in the prayer meeting or in the Sunday school or in the church. We ministers need more fresh air and sunshine in our lungs and our heart and our head. Do you wonder that the world is so far from being converted when you find so little vivacity in the pulpit and in the pew? We want. like the Lord, to plant in our sermons and exhortations more lilies of the field. We want fewer rhetorical elaborations and fewer sesquipedalisn words, and when we talk about shadows we do not want tosa, adombration and when we mean queerness we do not want to talk about idiosyncrasies, or if a stitch in the back we do not want to talk about lumbago; but, in the plain vernacular of the great masses, preach that gospel which proposes to make all men happy, honest, victorious and free. In other words, we want more cinnamon and less gristle. Let this be so in all the different departments of work to which the Lord calls us. Let us be plain. Let us be carnest. Let us be common sensical. When we talk to the people in a vernacular they can understand, they will be very glad to come and received the truth we present. Would to God that Queen Balkis would drive her spice laden dromedaries into exhortations!

More than that, we want more life and spice in our Christian work. The poor do not want so much to groaned over as sung to. With the bread and medicines and garments you give them let there be an accompaniment of smiles and brisk encouragement. Do not stand and talk to them about the wretchedness of their abode, white apparel, behind the swiftest and the hunger of their looks, and the hardness of their lot. Ah, they know it better than you can tell them. Show them the bright side of the thing, if of Jerusalem I suppose it was some- there be any bright side. Tell them good times will come. Tell them that for the children of God there is immortal rescue. Wake them up out of their stolldity by an inspiring laugh, the acuteness of Solomon that she said, and while you send in help, like the queen of Sheba, also send in the spices. There are two ways of meeting the poor. One is to come into their house with a nose elevated in disgust, tering hoofs and blazing shields and as much as to say: "I don't see how you live here in this neighborhood. It actually makes me sick. There is that bundle. Take it, you poor, miserable wretch, and make the most of it." Another way is to go into the abode of the poor in a manner which seems to the armed guard inhales the aroma, say: "The blessed Lord sent me, He was poor himself. It is not more for the good I am going to try to do you me." Coming in that spirit, the gift will be as aromatic as the spikenard on the feet of Christ, and all the hovels on that alley will be fragrant with the spice.

It is not a matter of preference. It is a matter of religious duty. Oh, for fifty times more the volume of sound than has ever yet rolled up from our churches! German chorals in German cathedrals surpass us, and yet Germany has received nothing at the hands of God compared with America. And ought the acclaim in Germany be louder than that of America? Soft, long drawn out music is appropriate for the drawingroom and appropriate for the concert, but St. John gives an idea of the sonorcus and resonant congregational singing appropriate for churches when in listening to the temple service of heaven he says: "I hear a great voice as the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings. Hallelniah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!" Join with me in a crusade, giving me not only your hearts, but the mighty uplifting of your voices, and I believe we can through Christ's grace sing 5,000 souls into the kingdom of Christ. An argument they can laugh at, a sermon they may talk down, but a 5,000-voiced utterance of praise to God is irresistible. Would that Queen Balkis would drive all her spice-laden dromedaries into our church music The Remedy for Sorrow. Why did you look so sad this morning when you came in? Alas, for the loneliness and the heartbreak and the load that is never lifted from your soul! Some of you go about feeling like Macaulay when he wrote, "If I had another month of such days as I have been spending. I would be impatient to get down into my little, narrow crib in the ground, like a weary factory child." And there have been times in your life when you wished you could get out of this life. You have said "Oh, how sweet to my lips would be the dust of the valley!" and wished you could pull over you in your jast slumber the coverlet of green grass and daisles. You have said: Oh, how beautifully quiet it must be in the tomb! I wish I was there." I see all around about me widowhood and orphanage and childlessness; sadness, disappointment, perplexity, If I could ask all those in any audience who have felt no sorrow and been buffeted by no disappointment-if I could ask all such to rise, how many would rise? Not one. A widowed mother, with her little child, went west, hoping to get better wages there, and she was taken sick and died. The overseer of the poor got her body and put it in a box and put it in a wagon and started down the street toward the cemetery at full trot. The little child-the only childran after it through the streets bareheaded, crying: "Bring me back my mother! Bring me back my mother! And it was said that as the people looked on and saw her crying after that which lay in the box in the wagen, all she loved on earth-it is said the whole village was in tears. And that is what a great many of you are doing-chasing the dead. Dear Lord, is there no appearement for all age, 550 lives a vene.

The Most Magnificent Temple. Have you read of the Taj Mahal, in India, in some respects the most majestic building on earth? Twenty thousand men were twenty years in building it. It cost about $16,000,000. The walls are of marble inlaid with carnellan from Bagdad and turquoise from Tibet and jasper from the Punjab and amethyst from Persia and all manner of precious stones. A traveler said that it seemed to him like the shining of the enchanted castle of purnished silver. The walls are 245 below with flutes and drums and harps are testing that echo, and the sounds from below strike up, and then come down, as it were, the voices of angels all our sermons and prayer meeting all around about the building. There is around it a garden of tamarind and a heavy growth of green, blue grass, banyan and palm and all the floral glories of the ransacked earth. But that is only a tomb of a dead empress, and it is tame compared with the grandeurs which God has builded for your living and immortal spirit. Oh, home of the blessed! Foundstions of gold! Arches of victory! Capstones of praise! And a dome in which there are echoing and re-echoing the halleluiahs of the ages! And around about that mansion is a garden, the garden of God, and all the springing fountains are the bottled tears of the church in the wilderness and all the crimson of the flowers is the deep hue that was caught up from the carnage of earthly martyrdoms and the fragrance is the prayer of all the saints and the aroma puts into utter forgetfulness the cassia and the spikenard and the frankincense and the world

Two Passengers' Distikes. A lady of a truly masculine spirit, accompanied by a small poodle, is said to have failed sadly the other day in an attempted reformatory movement. She entered the smoking car of a suburban train and sternly refused, when approached by the conductor, to go into another car, observing that her presence would keep the other occupants from smoking. One thickskinned wretch, however, insensible to the claims of refinement and reform, began to enjoy his accustomed cigar, which was suddenly snatched from his lips with the remark in a high treble: "If there is anything I do hate it is tobacco smoking!" For a time the offender was motionless, then, gravely rising, amid the curiosity of the assembled smokers, he took that little poodle out of the lady's lap and gently threw him through the window, sighing: "If there is anything I do hate it is a poudle."-Chicago Tribune.

It was here I built a chicken house of such mammoth proportions that it resembled a snowshed on the Northern Pacific. It was built on the most improved plan of architecture. I gathered my ideas from personal visits to all the poultry farms in the country that were worth while, and every time I visited a new one I came home and changed my plans. There was an entire suite of rooms for every particular grade of chickenkind. There were drawing rooms for the aristocratic and hospitals for the feeble. There was a souvenir building for the Plymouth Rocks; there were temples for renowned spices which Queen Balkis the Brahmas, improved foot-baths for of Abyssinia flung at the feet of King | the White Leghorns and china closets for the Cochin Chinas. I hired a small boy to do the scratching for them, so they might sleep during the early morning hours. I built a stable for my horse and delivery wagon, sunk a well, fitted up an office and bought a burglar-proof safe in which to keep the eggs pending a rise in price. Then I began to look around for tenants. This was difficult. At that time all hens looked alike to me. my plant, one who knew the hen business, and give myself a needed vacation. I employed a man who came to me well recommended-by himself. He claimed he had made the chicken business a life study; that he was on speaking terms with every hen in Knox county: that he knew every ill that chicken flesh is heir to: knew all their little troubles, their faults and their accompaniments. When thought of all he said he knew, wondered how I got him so cheap. As soon as he entered the place he became a universal favorite. Day after day the hens grew more fond of him. They would eat from his hand, climb upon his knee and permit him to shampoo them and manicure their toenails. I turned the whole business over to him and went away on a two nonths' vacation, thinking that the next hen census would show a remarkable increase, and that the absoute control of the egg market of the world would be in my grasp. But I reckoned without my host, also with out my manager. When I returned to the scene of my labors, bringing with me the latest style of cash register to figure up the profits, I found out of 1,260 happy, well-contented hens, only 27 were gathered to welcome me. My manager assured me that the great majority had passed into the dim. hasy unknown.

Slop or Dry Feed for Swine. At the Indiana Experiment station several tests were made to determine whether slop or dry feed were most profitable and to determine in what proportion to solid food water should exist in the feed. The figures reported also bring out the fact that pigs weighing 60 pounds, fed dry feed, consumed on an average of 2.35 bounds of water daily, and that this amount increased nearly constantly until these same pigs weighing 218 pounds consumed 11.07 pounds per day. It is also shown that pigs fed water in their food as a slop, when weighing about 60 pounds consumed either 2.42, 4.25 or 5.79 pounds of water per day, while these same pigs weighing 213 to 225 pounds consumed either 8.17, 14 or 18 pounds of water per day. Undoubtedly much of this water was consumed unnecessarily and certainly one lot was given much more water with its grain than was required. There was no material difference in the appearance or the pigs in either lot, so far as quality tem by which all persons may be propis concerned, and so far as this one experiment goes, the use of about two times the weight of water to grain indicates a satisfactory proportion. In view of the fact that the pigs fed dry port may, upon application, have the grain made slightly the best gains, it would appear that there is really no and quality, provided they are above gain in feeding the pigs a slop instead minimum grade, yet to be fixed." of a dry grain excepting as a feeder may regard it a matter of convenience.

WHITTLES CHAINS OUT OF SINGLE PIECES OF WOOD.

A little while ago George A. Jones of Philadelphia challenged the world to produce his equal as a whittler, The challenge brought a reply from B. F. Clay of Fernwood, who offered in evidence a wonderful display of his work. Mr. Clay is 75 years old and a machinist by trade. In the illustrations given here are shown two varieties of chains each of which he cut out of one piece of wood, Thirty years ago Mr. Clay started to whittle, after seeing an exhibition of whittling in Barnum's museum. He has completed single, double, triple, quadruple and anchor chains. One chain is composed of links, within each of which there are eight other movable links. A walnut triple chain is marked with ornamental bits, including a revolving globe on a fixed axis, all cut out of one stick of wood.

The five-sided link, or anchor chain, shown is of cedar. The idea was taken by Mr. Clay from a watch chain. Another section of this chain is the eightlink production referred to above, with a fancy bit forming a pentagon, the hollowed-out inside containing a double loop knot made of the stick's core.

A chain made of links, each containing six links, is of the twist variety and lays flat. Mr. Clay has made many articles besides chains, such as tweezers, pincers and furniture sets, but he has made a specialty of chains and believes that in that line he stands

I. S. War Vessel to Be Christened in Memory of Commodore Trusten - Won Many Victories Over the British in the War of Independence,

The honor of christening a war vessel of the United States navy, which is to perpetuate the fame of a revolutionary hero, Commodore Thomas Truxton, belongs to the beautiful granddaughter of the celebrated fighter, isabel Truxton of Norfolk, Va. Making his way to Philadelphia, he was made a lieutenant on the Congress, the first private armed ship fitted out by the colonies.
