La junta de los representantes de las diferentes organizaciones que se llevó a cabo en el Rogers Community Center el lunes pasado, dio principio con la aclaración del propósito de dicho evento.

El Sr. Bidal Aguero inició una serie de discusiones de los varios "Partidos"... Los que estaban de acuerdo por tener una fiesta en el parque "Rogers" así como el grupo que endorso semejante evento en el parque "Guadalupe". Cada grupo presentó un punto de vista, así como su punto de vista en referencia al porque les convenía tener una fiesta... ya sea aquí o allá. Naturalmente el tema que causó el disgusto el año pasado surgió de nuevo durante esta sesión, y fue así, como una vez más se discutió... a veces emocionadamente la idea de elegir una "Reina", que fue elegida por un sistema basado en principios económicos. La "Adelita", fue elegida por jueces, quienes juzgaron o basaron su predilección en un concurso para saber si la candidata se destacaba en algún talento y sabía algo acerca de la comunidad Mexicana.

Fue precisamente en este punto, que la delegación de los Brown Berets, dirigida por el Sr. Gilberto Herrera, disgustados con el apoyo de ciertas organizaciones hacia "La Adelita"... se marcharon de la junta... claro, después de "Hechar Piropos"!

Al cabo de algún tiempo sobre este tema, y siguiendo la sugerencia de varios de los representantes presentes, se sugirió que tales discusiones solían en vano; puesto que el propósito de la junta era para llegar a un acuerdo... quienes iban a participar, en qué forma y en qué sitio. Durante el curso de la junta se había mencionado el hecho que los planes para un desfile se habían ya formulado con la "Liberación # 19", como los encargados de este proyecto.

Por fin al cabo de algún tiempo y tomando en consideración lo discutido, se aprobó, a través del sistema electoral, de elegir una mesa directiva y varios comités de las personas presentes. El Sr. Lorenzo M. Sedeño, tanto como el Rev. Eliseo Aldape, fueron elegidos como presidentes de la nueva "Alianza", la Sra. Modesta Rodríguez, secretaria, el Sr. Andrés Cruz, tesorero, y como vocales: El Sargento (SFC) Lerma, el Sr. Luciano Pérez, y la Sra. Linda Anzuldua. Una vez elegido, dicho grupo se puso "Manos en Obra" en su tarea de unificar a los participantes, y tratar de formular un plan... para tener una sola "Fiesta Patria" unida.

Algunas de las organizaciones que estuvieron representadas fueron, COMA, LULACS (Ambos grupos; tanto caballeros como damas), GI Forum (También hombres y mujeres), El Consulado de México, Raza Unida Party, La Alianza Ministerial, Liberación # 19, Los Brown Berets, La Voz Chicana (CB-Club), La Base Aérea (Reese AFB), el centro "Guadalupe", el centro "Rogers", el comité "Fiesta's '75", y naturalmente un grupo de ciudadanos interesados.

Alfonzo Rodriguez fue seleccionado como Vice-Presidente del G.I. Forum Estatal. Felicitaciones de parte de LA VOZ.

Alice Day fue una de las personas más instrumentales en ayudar al G.I. Forum en tener su reina en el concurso estatal. Gracias de parte de el G.I. Forum y Felicitaciones de parte de LA VOZ.

Junta Mensual de COMA

La junta mensual de COMA que se llevó a cabo esta semana en el restaurante LUGO's LA MALINCHE, fue todo un éxito.

La junta que se llevó a cabo suficiente tiempo tuvo como huéspedes de honor a los señores T.J. Patterson, quien está afiliado con la escuela de negocios administrativos en la Universidad de Texas Tech, y Jose Ramirez miembro de la organización de COMA, quien ha sido nombrado recientemente a la mesa directiva de las escuelas de la ciudad de Lubbock. También, como huésped orador de improviso fue el Sr. Gilberto Herrera, más bien conocido como presidente de los Brown Berets. Los acontecimientos principales de su tema como siempre, fueron orientados hacia el mejoramiento de la juventud de la comunidad Mexico-Americana.

La junta dio principio como siempre, con una rica y sencilla cena de carne guisada, arroz y frijoles, preparada por el Sr. y la Sra. Roberto Lugo, que se destacan como cocineros de platillos Mexicanos así como miembros activos de la organización de COMA como suele suceder los asuntos preliminarios y reglamentarios fueron presentados por los cabezas de la organización.

Los puntos principales de la larga junta fueron como se han mencionado anteriormente, la presentación de los huéspedes de honor de honor, quienes tanto ellos como sus temas fueron diversos e interesantes. El Sr. Herrera presentó un proyecto para el beneficio y jóvenes del barrio. Este constituye un plan para incorporar deportes, tales como el "box", la lucha libre, y otros deportes que son populares con la juventud. El plan sería, entonces, de formar un programa semejante a lo que llaman la comunidad Americana "Youth Center". El señor Patterson le habló a la membresía presente sobre un interesantísimo programa efectuado en la Universidad de Texas Tech a través de las oficinas de OMBE (Office of Minority Business Enterprise). Para más información sobre este lea el artículo relacionado con este tema en este periódico, La Voz. Mientras que el señor Ramirez hizo una presentación estupenda sobre el tema de la educación de nuestros niños... de origen Mexicano. Sus comentarios y observaciones sobre el sistema de educación aquí en la ciudad de Lubbock fueron bien recibidos; puesto que esta fue la razón por la cual se le invitó como orador de honor.

En atención como huéspedes e invitados se encontraban las siguientes personas: La Sra. Cruz Vara, el Sr. Salinas (padre del bien conocido Lic. Salinas), y el Sr. Luis Trejo, quien hizo una presentación especial (una placa honoraria de parte de Northwest Little League) al Sr. Presidente, Gilberto Flores. La junta se clausuró con los comentarios del Sr. Flores, dando las gracias al Sr. Roberto Lugo por el préstamo del establecimiento para dicho evento, ya que normalmente el restaurante estaba cerrado en los Martes.

Jordan Se Dirige a AMAW

La Sra. Carolyn Jordan, más bien conocida por sus acciones (las cuales tienen fama de no ser siempre al favor de nuestra gente), tanto en la política como en el consejo de la Cd., a la cual ella pertenece, y los Srs., Mario Ramos y Bidal Aguero de LLANO ESTACADO, fueron los huéspedes de honor de la asociación de mujeres profesionales AMAW (Association of Mexican American Women).

Las personas mencionadas fueron invitadas para hacer una corta presentación a la membresía sobre dos programas de suma importancia para la Cd. de Lubbock en general. Siendo estos los programas bien conocidos: SPAG (South Plain Association of Governments, un programa fundado por algunos intereses econo-políticos y respaldado por los burocratas, y el programa ya mencionado, Llano Estacado; basado y orientado hacia el desarrollo y el progreso de los emigrantes y la gente verdaderamente humilde.

De acuerdo con la Sra. Eva Ramirez, Presidenta de la asociación, ambos partidos... la Sra. Jordan y los Srs. de Llano Estacado hicieron muy buenas presentaciones... interesantes e informativas.

Además, y unos de los puntos principales de la junta estuvieron, due a la elección de las siguientes personas: Juanita Aguero como Public Relations Chairperson, Nan Valdez Programs Chairperson y America Ramos como Chairperson, Nomination Committee.

COMENTARIO

por Jessie Rangel

Constructive criticism is good for one's health. For it is through this method of communication that we learn about ourselves as well as each other. It is imperative that we learn to take constructive criticism in a positive manner if we wish to work together "por el progreso de nuestra gente".

I have been involved in "el movimiento" too long to take a negative attitude in what little successes we have had up to now. Long ago, I committed myself to work "por el mejoramiento de nuestra gente". Maybe, we the adults of today will not reap the fruits of the seeds which we are planning, but surely the Chicanitos that are to come can and probably will. To take a negative attitude at this stage of the game would in essence be admitting defeat--which I will never do. It is interesting to note, though, that is the impression that a reader got in reading one of my "Comentarios".

It pleases me that someone takes the time to read my "Comentarios" (for whatever they are worth) but moreso for someone to take the time and effort to respond. If we are really sincere about changing the status quo and providing meaningful change; then, we must become involve in whatever endeavor we so choose and use el talento que nuestro Señor nos dio. Julie Storey, in her response to one of my "Comentarios" certainly used her talent (she communited, which is the first step towards understanding) and I compliment her.

As human nature would have it, though, each one of us, as individuals, will evaluate a situation or express an opinion according to our beliefs and values which we hold. Nothing else counts; nothing else matters. "No man is an island" is a proverb oftentimes quoted by many and we as Chicanos are certainly not alone in the political arena. We must compete and we will compete. We, however, must not be blinded or misguided by the camouflaging of issues or events. To do so would be very detrimental to our full understanding of the world of politics and thus our progress.

An objective analysis, as I tried to present with the recent election was exactly that, nothing more and nothing less. Statistics, as everyone knows, can be interpreted or misinterpreted to fit our own needs. We must, therefore, use our 'intelligentsia' to extract that data or information that is relevant to our cause. Otherwise, we are fooling no one but ourselves.

To quote Miss Storey, Mr. Salinas's June 5th victory was indeed a highly positive development in our city's recent history." I do not debate or question that statement. In my mind though, I wonder if this could have ever been possible. I do not think so. Miss Storey will be the first to admit that this victory certainly would not have been possible if by federal mandate, the city had not been divided into two separate districts. By doing so, Mr. Jones's, "a most formidable opponent" chances of winning were tremendously reduced while Mr. Salinas's were increased since 42% of District 75B are of minority origin.

To surmise that "the nomination of a minority candidate by a dominant political party can be viewed as no less than a most significant and positive development" is putting the cart before the horse. Was the division of the city into two parts really necessary? No doubt his margin of victory would have indeed been a positive development if he had achieved it within the confinement of the city of Lubbock rather than restricting his election to only a part of it. Then and only then could we have honestly stated that he was the choice of the majority of Democrats, whether they be Black, White, Brown, Purple or whatever. In addition, we could shout to the world that in Lubbock county, far removed from the valley where the majority are Chicanos, had truly elected a minority candidate based on his qualifications rather than his national origin. Then we would have cause to celebrate the "Bicentennial"

The mentioning of Congressman Henry B. Gonzales presents an interesting phenomenon for aside from him, there is only one other Spanish-surname individual serving in the U.S. Congress from Texas--Congressman de la Garza. (This is out of a total of 26) In both of their cases, it was only a matter of time. After all, one cannot continually ask "mejicanos" where they are in the majority, to vote in a particular party without giving something in return. His election in 1962 came eighteen years after the U.S. Supreme Court overruled the Democratic Party Executive Committee's resolution that the Democratic Party in Texas was not a "club" and thus must allow those wishing to participate in its politics to do so.

I agree that "nothing can be gained from making comparisons with the successful School Board election of Jose Ramirez" for my analysis was not with Mr. Ramirez but rather with Carlos Lovato. Carlos, an unknown, running at-large in the April elections pulled almost as many votes as Mr. Salinas did running in only one half of the city. And there is no way to convince me that Lubbock voters (mostly Anglos) want to see two Chicanos serving on the same school board.

When all is said and done, Julie, we must not assume or take anything for granted. We cannot sit on our laurels, pat ourselves on the back and say "te avasante". The ramifications that this past election will have will be many but we must not be satisfied with only one Chicano on the school board and one state representative. We must continually strive to improve socially, economically and politically the status of mejicanos.

THE LEGACY OF PVT. LONGORIA

By June 1945, the war in the Philippines had settled into a pattern. American infantrymen and Filipino guerrillas, advancing across the steep, green mountains of Luzon, were tightening their encirclement of the Japanese and driving them into the Cagayan Valley, near the center of the island. There, cut off from reinforcements and supplies, the Japanese would be forced to surrender or die. The liberation of the Philippines was just days away.

Units of the American 27th Infantry Division at first had had trouble gaining momentum against the enemy. On some days, dozens of men had been killed or wounded and only a few hundred yards gained across the rugged terrain. Many Japanese soldiers, honoring the ancient customs of samurai warriors, were choosing death over dishonorable surrender. Fighting fiercely in suicidal counterattacks and sniping from the trees and dense underbrush covering the hills, they were keeping the Allied advance slow and high-priced.

Felix Longoria, 38702692, Private, United States Army, had been in the Philippines three months when the final thrust towards victory began. He was a short, stocky, muscular rifleman, and the tropical climate did not bother him as much as it did some men in the 27th. Luzon's humidity and heat seemed to him little worse than summer; he had known growing up in Three Rivers, between San Antonio and Corpus Christi. He had gotten just as hot and sweaty working in the oil fields of Live Oak County and driving a truck. And as a youth he had helped his father, Guadalupe Longoria, the best fence-maker in the county, put down posts and string up barbed wire for South Texas ranchers. That, too, in summers, had been hot, hard work.

But sharp, wooded mountains were not familiar surroundings to Pvt. Longoria. Three Rivers sits in a shallow valley. The land around the town of 1,700 rises gently from the confluence of the Atascosa, Frio and Nueces rivers and rolls away in smooth waves too small to be called hills. The few trees mainly are low, stubby mesquites and the open countryside evokes a sense of spaciousness not felt in Central Luzon.

Felix Longoria, at age 25, had been drafted into World War II on Nov. 11, 1944, the 26th anniversary of the armistice ending World War I. Like any sudden soldier he had mixed emotions about going. He had a young wife, Beatrice, and daughter, Adelita, barely four years old, that he would have to leave. But he knew he would not have to leave them alone. The Longoria families of Three Rivers, tight knit in the Mexican tradition, took good care of their kin. Felix's parents, sister and brothers lived in the only two-story house in impoverished "Mexican Town," on the west side of Three Rivers between the railroad tracks and the thin Atascosa River. His father and an uncle had helped found and settle the town in 1913, and for years Longorias had worked in the local glass factory, a major industry until oil was discovered in Live Oak County in 1931.

Early in 1945, Felix Longoria was sent across the Pacific with other replacement soldiers. He had never been far from home and how he was on his way to the far side of the world to fight for his country. He had doubts that he would fight. He was a Longoria, and in South Texas that name was one of the oldest and most respected among Mexican-Americans and Anglos alike. He would do nothing to dishonor his heritage. He turned back on the 19th of April, 1945, on Luzon, a good soldier who did what had to be done.

A breakthrough had occurred into the Cagayan Valley and the trapped Japanese were falling back toward the Cagayan River. Somewhere in the gathering American assault, a sergeant called for some volunteers. A patrol was needed to locate a pocket of the retreating enemy. Felix Longoria was weary of battle as others in his company. But he had never turned his back on work, and somebody, he knew, would have to go. He picked up his rifle.

The patrol eased into the woods and brush and headed toward suspected Japanese positions. The day was the 16th of June, and rainy season had returned to the Philippines. In the past few days, booming monsoon showers had been forming against the western slopes of the mountains they were crossing. Suddenly, there were loud, short pops: Small arms fire. The patrol took what cover it could find and fought the ambush, but enemy bullets struck and Felix Longoria was among those killed.

He may have had a few moments to think before he died. To think of home perhaps. His wife and child and family. The narrow rivers and wide sky. The oil fields. Mexican Town. And the tiny cemetery where he had imagined he might one day be buried.

The cemetery. At first, Catholic Mexicans and Protestant Anglos had shared Three Rivers' cemetery, just as they had shared the founding of the town. Then, one day in 1924 - Felix was five then and too young to understand what such things meant - a delegation of Anglos approached his father, whom they looked upon as a spokesman for Mexican Town. The cemetery was getting "too crowded," they told Guadalupe Longoria, and would the "Mexican people" please set up a cemetery of their own?

The new "Mexican" cemetery adjoined the "crowded" one, which Anglos continued to use. Somebody erected a crude fence between the two burial grounds.

Felix Longoria was not buried at Three Rivers, as he might have wanted to be, but temporarily in a military cemetery in the Philippines. Then, in 1949, Pvt. Longoria was laid to rest in a hero's grave in Arlington National Cemetery near Washington, D.C., amid a storm of international headlines and radio broadcasts charging his hometown with racial discrimination. Three Rivers' funeral director had refused Longoria's widow use of his funeral chapel because "whites would object."

When Felix Longoria fell that hot June day on Luzon he could not have known that 29 years later he would be honored as a symbol of victims of racial discrimination. Or that in 1975 thousands of Mexican-Americans would remember him as a martyr who brought unity and momentum to civil rights movements in Texas and the United States.

"The Longoria-Three Rivers affair," wrote Tony Castro in his recent book, "Chicano Power: The Emergence of Mexican America," "aroused the anger of Mexican Americans in the state, and the next year a group met in Corpus Christi to bring together their protests of the Longoria incident and of other discriminatory treatment suffered by U.S. servicemen."

Dr. Hector Garcia, a World War II combat surgeon who later served as an alternate delegate to the United Nations under President Johnson, organized the American G.I. Forum which eventually became the largest Mexican-American organization in the country.

"Together with LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens), organized in 1929 also in Corpus Christi, the G.I. Forum set up as goals the social, economic and political rights of Mexican-Americans ... (and) both organizations became active in seeking changes through the courts and some of this litigation served as precedents in later school desegregation actions."

Dr. Garcia, 61, continues to practice medicine in Corpus Christi and to work with the G.I. Forum, which now has chapters in 28 states and the District of Columbia. Twenty-six years ago, when he learned through a patient that Beatrice Longoria had been denied use of Three Rivers' funeral chapel for Felix's services, Dr. Garcia sent 17 angry telegrams to the outside world. He sent them to senators, congressmen, military leaders, state officials and journalists. One reached the then-junior senator from Texas, Lyndon Baines Johnson, who quickly arranged for Longoria's burial in Arlington National Cemetery while the body still was aboard an Army transport ship en route from the Philippines to San Francisco. Johnson also responded with a telegram to Dr. Garcia stating that he "deeply regretted to learn that the prejudice of some individuals extends even beyond this life."

The patrol eased into the woods and brush and headed toward suspected Japanese positions. The day was the 16th of June, and rainy season had returned to the Philippines. In the past few days, booming monsoon showers had been forming against the western slopes of the mountains they were crossing. Suddenly, there were loud, short pops: Small arms fire. The patrol took what cover it could find and fought the ambush, but enemy bullets struck and Felix Longoria was among those killed.

Pvt. Longoria was buried in Arlington National Cemetery on Feb. 16, 1949, during a drizzling winter rain. Eighteen other soldiers killed in World War II also were reburied nearby during the mass ceremony. But the attention of the gathered press was focused on those standing near Felix's flag-draped casket. Mexican-American groups and Anglo friends in Three Rivers and Corpus Christi had raised more than $2,000 to fly the Longoria family to Washington. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, President Truman's blunt-spoken military aide, arrived early and told reporters he was there for the reburial of "that Longoria boy from Texas, which got all that unfavorable publicity because of the stupidity of that undertaker." Mexican diplomats and officers arrived bearing floral tributes. And Sen. Johnson, Lady Bird Johnson, U.S. Rep. John Lyle of Corpus Christi and a Mexican affairs specialist from the U.S. State Department, stood by as the flag was removed from Felix's coffin and presented to the tearful widow while "Taps" was played and rifle salutes were fired.

Pvt. Longoria's funeral was suitably covered that year by The New York Times.

Dr. Garcia now views the 1949 Longoria incident as "a turning point for many things." He says, "It was a turning point for the American G.I. Forum; it was a turning point for Lyndon Johnson - I think it pushed Johnson into national prominence; it was a turning point for the thinking of some Anglo Texans. It was a catalyst for the cause of Mexican-American civil rights."

People say Johnson followed President Kennedy's civil rights ideals. I can't argue that away, but I say Johnson would have pushed civil rights from the very beginning if he could have. He was like this. But of course, if you were like this in '48 or '49 and you espoused it before the Texas establishment, you were a dead duck politically.

"As it was," Dr. Garcia contends, "they started calling Johnson many bad names (as a result of his involvement in the Longoria incident). I think they insulted the man pretty much."

Garcia adds: "You've also heard it said that the Mexican-Americans are following in the black people's civil rights trail. I have only admiration and respect for the black civil rights movement. But for it to be said that we followed in the tracks, no, I think it was the other way around. We established points in law, precedents that they followed through."

"The Felix Longoria case helped us very much," he conc. des. "But I don't think anybody was victorious. It was a tragedy."

Tom Sutherland, now an English professor at The University of Texas at Arlington, was working in Austin as executive secretary of the Texas Good Neighbor Commission at the time of the Longoria incident. He received one of Dr. Garcia's telegrams. The Good Neighbor Commission had been established during World War II and sought to improve relations between Texas and Mexico and other republics in Central and South America. Sutherland recalls his initial response to the Longoria affair: "Newspapers called me and asked what I thought: 'Is this discrimination?' I said, 'Yes, it is.' I didn't bother to ask Gov. (Beauford H.) Jester what to think or say, because I considered that if I had been hired for the job (with the commission) not because of any political reasons but on account of my knowledge of Texas, Mexico, Mexicans and Spanish, then I know what to say. I said, 'Yes, it was discrimination.'

Angered by Sutherland's candor, Rep. J.F. Gray of Three Rivers urged the Texas Legislature to abolish the Good Neighbor Commission and called for an investigation into the rebuttal controversy. Five members of the Texas House were appointed to the committee which conducted hearings in Three Rivers.

Newspaper accounts of the hearings do not mention the tense atmosphere outside the Rotary Club building as Garcia, Sutherland, members of the Longoria family and others arrived to testify before the committee. Sutherland: "It was a dangerous atmosphere. It was like high noon in a Western movie. That's how ugly the attitude to the hangers-around was. One man showed a long Bowie knife. And other men said in loud voices so they could be overheard: 'You know, really, this Longoria bunch, they're just a bunch of lowdown greasers.'" Both Sutherland and Garcia recall that a South Texas sheriff with a reputation as a "killer of Mexicans" also was present. "just standing around with his gun on," Sutherland says, "and long and lean and looking just as mean as his 45."

The Longorias, Garcia and Sutherland all received threatening letters or telephone calls, and the wheels of one witness' car were loosened. But the act was discovered before it caused an "accident."

During the five days of hearings, funeral director T.W. Kennedy admitted he had said "whites would not like it" when Beatrice Longoria asked to use the funeral chapel, but denied he was prejudiced toward Mexican-Americans. Kennedy contended that there was considerable evidence "to the effect that there has been trouble" between the wife of Felix Longoria and the rest of Longoria's family, and that he was "referring to the fact that the 'whites' would not like the disgrace of a public disturbance at a funeral in the chapel." He said that he had suggested Beatrice use her home for the service, as Mexican-Americans in Three Rivers usually did. Kennedy later publicly apologized for his use of the word "whites."

Felix's widow told the committee she had been "mortified and hurt" by Kennedy's refusal of the chapel. And the Longoria family's lawyer, Gus Garcia, charged the committee with having made up its mind in advance "that denying the use of a funeral chapel because Longoria was of Mexican descent is not discrimination."

Amid the investigation, a new barbershop opened for business next door to the Rotary Club building. Juventino Ponce, then 29 and a veteran of World War II, walked in to the barbershop and asked for a haircut. The barber, Ponce later recalled, glared at him and said, "I'm sorry, but we don't serve Latin Americans."

On April 7, 1949, four of the five members of the committee filed a majority report with the House absolving Three Rivers and the funeral director of all charges of discrimination. State Rep. Frank C. Oltorf of Marlin filed a minority report disputing the majority's findings, and one day later Rep. Byron Tinsley of Greenville requested that his name be stricken from the majority report. Tinsley stated in a telegram to House Speaker Durwood Mangord, "it was my feeling that there was haste in making a majority report into the Longoria incident."

Also on April 8, State Sen. Rogers Kelley of Edinburg charged the majority report was "a slap in the face of the more than one million Latin American citizens of the state of Texas ... (and) a tragic blot on the democracy of Texas and the United States."

But the most eloquent and moving statement already had been made. Four days after Felix's funeral, a man who was now too old to build fences and who had lost a beloved son in a war, filed a notarized statement in Live Oak County. "If any embarrassment has been caused by this case to anyone," Guadalupe Longoria had written, "I'm sorry. But after all, I did not create a feeling of prejudice which seems to exist in many places in Texas against people of my national origin. Other people are responsible for that. I think that we would only be fooling ourselves to try to leave the impression that people of Mexican descent are treated the same as anyone else throughout the State of Texas."

The Consumer Alert

by John L. Hill

Austin — Many Texas consumers, like their counterparts in other states, are shopping for a vacation that will allow them to "get away from it all" at a reasonable price.

But saying goodbye to familiar surroundings for a few weeks often means saying hello to a big stack of bills on the return for many families.

Some consumers have found a way to enjoy a pleasurable vacation in picturesque settings far from home without going into debt, however. They "house swap" with another family living in an area they want to visit.

"House swapping" should be approached with care, our Consumer Protection Division attorneys say, since it basically involves allowing strangers full access to your home and belongings. But risks can be minimized by being fully informed and by taking certain precautions, they add.

Exchanging homes temporarily cuts the cost of a vacation considerably since hotel or motel prices are eliminated, leaving only transportation and food. And since a family can cook "at home" during their swap, food costs may be no more than if they had stayed in their own backyard.

House swapping vacations can be arranged within the United States or overseas during all seasons of the year, although the majority take place during the summer months.

Making contact with a potential house swapper in a popular vacation spot can be difficult, unless you start several months in advance. Some national publications have classified sections where house swappers advertise. And there are vacation clubs which arrange house exchanges as a special service for members. Members pay a fee to list their

While this written agreement might not prevent your best fishing rod from being snatched, or your coffee table from acquiring a cigarette burn, it may give you a better basis on which to decide whether to entrust your home to someone else.
