Ask Us

Q—Why do we have to pay sales tax on garbage?
A—According to city officials, it is a state law.

In Brief

Gingrich deal

WASHINGTON (AP)—The White House criticized incoming House Speaker Newt Gingrich today for accepting a multimillion-dollar book advance. "I think it needs to be looked at," press secretary Dee Dee Myers said.

On her last day on the job, Myers raised questions about Gingrich's decision to accept advance payment from Harper-Collins for editing and writing two non-fiction books. The Washington Post, which first reported the deal in today's editions, said Gingrich will receive about $4 million.

"I think that it raises some very important questions. I think it needs to be looked at," Myers said.

Holidays: joyous for most, time of violence for others

While the holiday season brings happiness to many homes, the threat of domestic violence will hang over many homes in Scurry County, said Dee Wilson, Outreach Coordinator for Noah Project - West.

"During festivities around the Christmas and New Year's holidays, family violence involving domestic partners can occur more often," said Wilson. "If violent behavior already is one of a family's problems, it is more likely to recur during such emotional times as these."

The Noah Project serves as a shelter for victims of family violence and trauma and can be reached 24 hours a day by calling locally at 573-1822 or 1-800-444-3551.

"During these happy, but pressure-filled times," said Wilson, "people's emotions, their expectations and wishes, their disappointments and depression often intensify."

State officials say in order to perceive the seriousness of domestic violence at this time of the year, or anytime, one has to understand that many cases of injuries go unreported.

"While men are sometimes injured in domestic disputes, the victims are usually women," added Mrs. Wilson.

Five adults and 10 children were sheltered at the local facility in November while an additional five adults were counseled.

Wilson cited the following statistics on domestic violence from last year:

- * Nearly 156,000 incidents of family violence were reported to the police in Texas last year.

- * About 161 Texas women (about one every other day in 1993) were killed by their intimate male partner.

- * Throughout the U.S., an estimated one in five adult women has been physically abused at least once by a male intimate, a ratio which is the same among pregnant women who are assaulted by their partners.

- * About one-fifth of women's injuries requiring emergency room care are the results of battering.

Wilson said that domestic violence is a crime that often is repeated - usually in increasing severity - until either the victim seeks help or authorities intervene.

"Sometimes the victims feel trapped and fear the consequences of reporting the assault," added Wilson. "We hope those men or women who are in a situation like that will allow us to help them this holiday season or anytime."

Holamon residence wins Christmas lighting contest

The Bobby Holamon residence, located at 2903 36th St., took first place in the Goldcoats' 1994 Christmas Lighting Contest.

Twenty-six residences were entered in the contest, judged Wednesday evening.

Second place was won by Lynn and Billie Smith of West 37th St. and FM 1611. The Smith residence took first place last year.

Third place went to the Bill and Jill Edwards home at 2811 Ave. U.

Prizes were $50 for first place, $30 for second and $20 for third.

Others entering were Paul and Janie Tovar, 2001 Ave. E; Jr. and Brenda Ingram, 4200 Lubbock Ave.; Mike and Moria Lindsey, 1302 Lear St.; Max Vincent, 1283 N. Ave. P; Mr. and Mrs. O.K. Fletcher, 3004 Crockett; John and Becky Thomas, 2701 Ave. U; Mr.

Entities to close for the holidays

Scurry County citizens who have business to take care of should note that local financial institutions and government offices will be closed Monday for the Christmas holiday. Most county offices, including all of those at the courthouse, will be closed Friday through Monday. The county library and health unit will also be closed Friday through Monday and the Senior Center will close at 2 p.m. today for the Christmas holidays.

Scurry County Museum closed earlier this month and will not reopen until after the New Year's holidays. The museum is located on the Western Texas College campus, which is also closed for the holidays.

Most other government buildings will be closed Monday only. These include City Hall and the U.S. Postal Service. Mail will be delivered as usual on Friday and Saturday, postal officials said. The Farm Service Agency will be closed Monday only.

American State Bank, Snyder National Bank, West Texas State Bank and First American Bank will keep their normal hours on Friday and be closed Monday. Snyder Savings & Loan will close at 3 p.m. Friday and reopen Monday morning.

All local public schools are already out for the holiday period.

Request tabled...

Airport funds are grounded

Scurry Board of County Development on Wednesday approved funding some work at the Hermleigh Gin site and monies for advertising but tabled a proposal concerning Winston Field.

Project funding proposals and approval of previous minutes and financial statements were the only items of business.

The board considered three primary proposals — renovation at the county airport in the amount of $32,000, signage and surveying at the Hermleigh Gin site in the amount of $5,000 and advertising in the amount of $4,000.

Wednesday's meeting had been called as a result of confusion over whether funds left in the BCD account at the end of 1994 would carry over to 1995. Commissioner C.D. Gray Jr. was present Wednesday, and assured the board that the funds would remain in the BCD account.

"It stays with the BCD. You just have to make a budget amendment," said the commissioner.

Based on that knowledge, BCD board members elected to table the proposal for funds to renovate Winston Field until more information can be obtained.

"I think we need to get more firm numbers. I question whether $25,000 is enough to make it (the terminal) a usable facility," said board member Mark McCormick.

Board member Tim Riggan suggested the board wait on the project. "If we are going to consider it hard, we need to have somebody go in and give us some estimates so we know what we'll be getting into," he said.

Gray said the county may want to consider sharing in some of the expenses, particularly in the area of maintenance. He suggested the BCD request that the topic be placed on the commissioners court agenda.

The entire airport renovation project is estimated at more than $53,000, including a survey, terminal renovation, signage and painting.

The board approved $5,000 for work at the Hermleigh Gin site. The original proposal had requested paint, signs and a survey. However, the board decided to exclude paint in accepting the proposal. BCD members said they want the old equipment inside the facility removed before painting.

Several companies have already visited the facility as a potential site for manufacturing in the county.

The board also approved $4,000 to help the Development Corporation of Snyder in advertising costs.

In one other business item, the board rejected a request of $1,000 from the Upper Colorado Soil and Water Conservation District for events and promotion. BCD members said the district's program is a good one, but the request does not fall under BCD guidelines for promoting business and industry.

Donna Gray. Retiring board member Travis Bunch was also awarded a plaque. Fritz was honored for his service to the chamber as the manager for the past four years. He will begin his term as Scurry County Judge on Jan. 1. (SDN Staff Photo)

The SDN Column

By Roy McQueen

The feller on Deep Creek says, "Even this time of year, there are always folks looking for detour signs on the straight and narrow."

A guy in the coffee shop said he was ready for the rush of Christmas shopping to be over.

"Do you have all your shopping done?"

"Shore nuff," he replied.

The other fellows appeared impressed. "You mean you've already bought your wife's present?"

"Did it months ago," he said. "I did it when everything was on sale, when the stores were empty and the clerks were actually glad to see me."

He wasn't exactly without stress, however. "I made one big mistake. They didn't have any Christmas wrap in July, so I just tucked it away in the trunk of my car."

"Now I've got to fight the crowds and pay somebody to wrap it. Maybe one of my kids will come in early."

Yep, he had it paid for from the beginning and quickly added, "All I want for Christmas is a zero balance on my wife's credit cards."

But late shoppers may want to consider some of these unusual offerings:

For the golfer, you might look at the Greensfinder, a hand-held, battery-operated directory of U.S. golf courses that gives directions to the course, rates the facilities and keeps your score.

Or you can have two sterling-silver golf tees in a silver holder for a mere $125. Our favorite, however, is a driving range bucket with a dozen chocolate golf balls.

Other interesting last-minute gift suggestions include an Olympic brick with your name on it, to be used in a park in Atlanta for the 1996 Summer Games.

For the old soldier, $74 gets you boots with leather tops and rubber bottoms, just like those worn by army troops during World War II. Another military item is an authentic East German navy officer's coat, a cold war memento for $69.

For those stuck in a committee meeting, play a quick game of draw poker with a battery-operated poker game that doubles as a key chain.

Another favorite, a voice command phone that makes calls, announces callers or blocks unwanted calls with a busy signal. WTF work on Christmas bill collectors.

MOTT RECITAL — Students of Mrs. Virgil Mott and guests, director Melanie Smith and members of the Snyder High School a cappella choir, were presented in a Christmas recital on Dec. 11 in the Martha Ann Woman's Club. Facts about the Amazon rain forest and dry ice

By 3-2-1 CONTACT Magazine
Brazil Nuts
 Last summer, Elizabeth Gero, 10, of Bismarck, N.D., and Ashley Bowsman, 14, of Plymouth, Mich., won a free trip to the Amazon rain forest. Their pictures were chosen from thousands entered in the 1994 Little Green environmental art contest. Elizabeth, Ashley and three other winners fished for piranhas, spotted alligators at night by boat and swam with pink dolphins. "I will always have the rain forest in my heart," Ashley said.

What is Dry Ice?
 Dry ice is a "brrr-y" interesting form of carbon dioxide. Carbon dioxide is a gas that has no taste, smell or color. It's in the air you breathe and the fizzy bubbles you swallow when you drink soda pop.

Carbon dioxide gas can also be cooled and squashed to form a solid. This ice is "dry" because it doesn't melt into a liquid. Instead, it turns directly into a gas.
 Dry ice keeps large amounts of medicine and food cold without making messy puddles. It also makes the eerie fog you might see drifting across the stage at a play or rock concert.

Just do it. But then what?

By Phillip Alder

I took a day to go sightseeing while in Albuquerque for the World Bridge Championships. After driving four-and-a-half miles down a dirt road to see the tent rocks (rock formations formed by volcanic activity; they look like teepees with mushrooms on top), I returned to the main highway and noticed a sign requesting one to "Watch for Water." Fair enough, but what was I supposed to do if I saw some? In bridge, it is sometimes the same. Your partner signals with a six and you cannot tell whether it is high or low. But usually if partner does something weird (assuming you trust his bridge ability!), it will be apparent what he has in mind. Certainly Santanu Ghose, from India, knew exactly what was required of him on today's deal.

 After South had opened four hearts, West, Jaggy Shivdasani, bid four no-trump to show a minor two-suiter. North brushed this aside with his jump to six hearts.
 Now it was Jaggy's turn to lead. Presumably North wasn't looking at two losers in either minor. This meant that he had to have the club ace and a singleton diamond. If so, there was only one chance to defeat the contract. Jaggy led the diamond three.
 Santanu, more out of habit than anything else, put up his jack. And it won the trick! Now all became clear. Jaggy had to have a void and wanted a ruff. Santanu returned a spade and that was that: one down.
 Jaggy, no shy flower he, had risked looking foolish but had ended up the hero. After the opponents had left, he no doubt smiled unashamedly.

Senator criticizes extension of conservation measures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers and ranchers may have had their hopes falsely raised by the administration's decision last week to extend a popular but expensive conservation program, the incoming chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee says.

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., told reporters Wednesday that the decision last week to let producers extend Conservation Reserve Program contracts another 10 years creates a budget obligation that may not be achievable. He also said the decision makes it more difficult to reform the program to protect more water, topsoil and wildlife habitat.

The program pays farmers and ranchers to take environmentally fragile land out of production and plant trees or other cover for 10 years. Some 36 million acres are enrolled at a cost of $1.8 billion a year.

The first contracts begin to expire in 1995, and the future of the program will be a key issue in debate next year on the new farm bill.

Farmers and ranchers risk signing up for acres and having a future Congress fail to fund the program, Lugar said.

"I'm trying not to offer false hopes and furthermore to inflate the budget while we're busy talking elsewhere about the need for downsizing the government's budget," he said.

A department official agreed that budget writers will control the financing. "We made this announcement because we think it's really good for agriculture and the environment," said Tom Hebert, deputy undersecretary for natural resources.

"We hope they would recognize how important this policy is and take that into due consideration," he said.

Lugar has said he wants to scrutinize all farm programs in hearings next year on the five-year farm bill and to start the deliberations with a clean slate. Republicans also are looking for ways to cut federal spending.

By extending the program, Lugar suggested, the administration has quietly padded the agriculture budget. That's because the current costs are figured in the so-called baseline, the starting point for budget deliberations.

DATE BOOK

Dec. 22, 1994

Today is the 356th day of 1994 and the 2nd day of winter.

TODAY'S HISTORY: On this day in 1984 Bernhard Goetz shot four youths who had asked him for money on a New York City subway. All four of the alleged robbers had arrest records and three were carrying sharpened screwdrivers. When Goetz fled New York, a telephone number was established to track down leads; many called in support of Goetz and offered to pay his legal expenses.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAYS: Giacomo Puccini (1858-1924), composer; Connie Mack (1862-1956), baseball player-manager; Edward Arlington Robinson (1869-1935), poet; Claudia "Lady Bird" Johnson (1912-), U.S. first lady, is 82; James Wright Jr. (1922-), former congressman-Speaker of the House, is 72; Steve Carlton (1944-) baseball great-survivalist, is 50; Diane Sawyer (1945-), broadcast journalist, is 49; Maurice and Robin Gibb (1949-), singers, are 45; Jan Stephenson (1951-), golfer, is 43.

TODAY'S SPORTS: On this day in 1963, the Oakland Raiders beat the Houston Oilers 52-49 in a old-style last-possession-wins AFL game.

TODAY'S QUOTE: "When you are surrounded by four people, one of them smiling, taunting, demanding, terrorizing, you don't have a complete grasp or perfect vision." — Bernhard Goetz

TODAY'S WEATHER: On this day in 1970, Pensacola, Fla., reached 80 degrees for the first time in 90 Decembers. Three of the next eight Decembers also witnessed days that reached that mark.

Pharmacists are good resources

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: After reading your article on Feldene and Voltaren for control of arthritis, I felt obligated to write. I've taken Feldene for about 10 years for pain in my hands and knees. For almost as many years, I've been aware of numbness and tingling in my feet. Walking has become more difficult. After a move, my new pharmacist told me about the side effects of these drugs and I went off the Feldene. My blood pressure dropped and the numbness and tingling has lessened. Pharmacists are a wealth of information and patients should consult them often.

DEAR READER: Indeed they are and I unequivocally recommend that patients check with them about medications. Many anti-arthritis drugs, such as Feldene, cause side effects. Fortunately, most are rare. But, when they occur, they can be troublesome. Feldene does not usually cause the symptoms you mention; nonetheless, such symptoms are possible.

Even though your pharmacist may be correct in advising you, I urge you to review the situation with your physician: you shouldn't simply stop a medication or alter its dose without your doctor's approval.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Consumer Tips on Medicines." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Is there a medical condition that causes people to be grouchy when they are hungry? Our 21-year-old son-in-law is always grouchy in the morning until after he eats breakfast. He also gets grouchy later in the day unless he eats as soon as he gets hungry. Our daughter says he inherited this from his father and since it is caused by a medical condition, he can't help it. She feels we should ignore his belligerence and quick temper. We feel he needs an attitude adjustment.

DEAR READER: Hypoglycemia (low blood sugar) is a rare medical condition that causes faintness, tremulousness, and hunger, occurring two to three hours after a meal. This does not seem to be your son-in-law's problem.

Some healthy people do become irritable when they are hungry. However, this is no excuse to be unpleasant to others. I agree that your son-in-law needs "an attitude adjustment." Don't let him play the "victim game," by claiming that he "inherited" the condition, can't control it and is justified in making everyone around him miserable. This is nuts. So what if he feels grouchy because his breakfast is late? Big deal. Maybe he ought to consider the starving children in Africa, who don't get breakfast at all — or dinner either. Or lunch.

Part of growing up is learning to moderate and control one's feelings. Your son-in-law needs to "chill out" (as the children say) and stop being so juvenile. All he has to do is behave decently until someone feeds him. This doesn't seem to me to be an insurmountable problem.

I think that your daughter would be a lot happier if she didn't have to put up with her husband's moods — which, I'll bet, he learned from his father rather than inherited them. She's enabling him to continue behaving childishly. He certainly can "help it." He can change, and he ought to. With all the problems in the world today, we don't need more tall guys with short fuses and the conviction that they're not responsible for their own behavior. This is nonsense.

Don't ignore your son-in-law's actions. Show him my answer to your question — after he's had a big meal.

Environmentalists, industry may appeal court approval

SEATTLE (AP) — A federal judge disappointed both environmentalists and the timber industry by rejecting their challenges to a Clinton administration logging plan for the Northwest's national forests.

Lawyers for both groups said they may appeal Wednesday's decision by U.S. District Judge William L. Dwyer.

President Clinton, in a statement, expressed gratitude that he could move forward with a plan intended to end more than a decade of bickering over how many trees should be cut on more than 20 million acres of federal forests in Washington, Oregon and Northern California.

Conservationists argued that the government's plan allows too much logging and violates federal laws intended to protect fish and wildlife, including the threatened northern spotted owl.

Industry lawyers said the plan was prepared secretly in violation of open meeting laws and should be junked so a new plan could be developed with provisions for more logging.

The judge found no violations. "The question is not whether the court would write the same plan, but whether the agencies have acted within the bounds of the law," Dwyer wrote. The government has projected that the plan, known as Option 9, would result in about 1 billion board feet of logging annually in Northwest federal forests, about one-fifth the peak amount of the 1980s.

"I'm sure industry will not take that lightly," said Bill Pickell, general manager of the Olympia-based Washington Contract Loggers Association, representing about 600 companies. "We see it from the logging side as extremely biased and put together by the government clones."

Jim Pissot of the National Audubon Society in Seattle said his group was "disappointed the judge didn't take stronger action in response to our complaint."

But he said the ruling at least indicated the court would force the government to keep its promises.

Dwyer ruled in 1991 that the Bush administration was breaking environmental laws by failing to protect the owl and other rare species. He ordered a halt to logging across millions of acres of old-growth forests.

The Clinton administration held a forestry summit in Portland, Ore., to develop a compromise, announced in July 1993, that led to the logging ban being lifted earlier this year.

Doctors shouldn't encourage patients to drink, study says

SAN DIEGO (AP) — It's irresponsible for doctors to recommend even moderate alcohol consumption to prevent heart disease because some people will drink too much, the author of a new study says.

"If everybody could drink a glass of wine a day, period, that would be fine," Dr. Michael Criqui said Wednesday. "But everybody can't drink a glass of wine a day. So I think it is dangerous."

Criqui, a professor at the University of California, San Diego, is the author of the latest study to explore the so-called French Paradox: The French eat more fatty food than people in other countries but have the second-lowest rate of deaths from coronary artery disease, behind only the Japanese.

The study found that the French also consumed the greatest amount of wine and alcohol. For years, researchers have believed that prudent consumption of alcohol, especially red wine, can reduce the likelihood of heart problems. Red wine has been shown to slow blood clotting, which contributes to heart attacks. Doctors also believe it reduces the chances of a heart attack by increasing levels of HDL cholesterol, the so-called "good cholesterol."

But Criqui's study confirmed previous research that showed the French also have one of the highest rates of cirrhosis, a liver disease often caused by alcohol.

Three percent of the French population die from cirrhosis — twice the rate in the United States, Criqui said. Only Austria and Italy have higher rates.

Criqui's findings appear in the Dec. 24 issue of Lancet, a British medical journal.

Some researchers in the field disagreed with Criqui's suggestion that the public not be informed about the role of alcohol in the fight against heart disease.

"The best recommendation should be: If you choose to drink alcohol, it will reduce your risk of heart disease," said Dr. R. Curtis Ellison, a professor at Boston University School of Medicine. "I think it would be irresponsible not to let patients know that."

Criqui's study compiled alcohol, diet and mortality data from 21 developed countries for the years 1965, 1970, 1980 and 1988.

Ellison said the study, which had findings similar to a 1971 research project in Britain, contributes valuable data and provides an opportunity to stress the importance of moderation.

But he said Criqui goes overboard in his public policy recommendations.

"We have been told for a long time that if you say anything favorable about drinking alcohol, you increase the chances for abuse," Ellison said. "I don't think there is any data to support that."

SCURRY COUNTY LEMONS — It has been an unusually warm winter in Scurry County, so far, but has it been warm enough for a lemon tree to bear fruit? Apparently so as Ira residents Jack Darnell and Leona Wiggins look over a small lemon tree that has several full-size lemons and blossoms on it. Darnell, who is the pastor of the First Church of God in Ira, placed the tree in the Ira Post Office where it would be protected from the weather. Wiggins is the Postmaster at Ira and says the tree gets many comments. (SDN Staff Photo)

School prayer sparks furor

ECRU, Miss. (AP) — Ecrum, a town with five churches and no traffic light, is a place that's ready for Christmas. Nearly all the homes are adorned with wreaths and lights, and large colored lights hang from poles leading to downtown.

But a bitter religious dispute has risen up among the holly, plastic angels and wishes for peace on earth, pitting most of Ecrum's 700 residents against a woman who is suing to stop morning prayers and Bible classes in the public school.

Lisa Herdahl, a mother of six who moved down from Wisconsin last year, said she filed the federal lawsuit against the school district Tuesday "as a last resort to defend my family's religious freedom."

"I simply do not want the school telling my children how and when to pray," said Herdahl, who has children in kindergarten and grades 3, 4, 6 and 9.

Herdahl says her children, baptized as Lutherans, have been ridiculed by their classmates; her 7-year-old son, Jason, was called "football head" after a teacher made him wear headphones to drown out the prayers broadcast on the school's intercom.

But her yearlong effort to eliminate prayer and Bible study from her children's classes has few supporters at the North Pontotoc Attendance Center, which serves 1,300 students in kindergarten through high school.

"Without prayer I don't know how I'd make it through the day," said Jason Davis, a senior elected most likely to succeed. "I don't see why anyone in the world wouldn't want to study the Bible."

Many parents say Herdahl has caused conflict ever since she moved to their town, nestled in the hills of northeast Mississippi between Oxford and Tupelo, by speaking out at School Board meetings and complaining to the school superintendent about the prayer issue.

Her stance has rankled what Mayor Sam Newsom calls a very conservative community and put a damper on the holidays.

"I feel sorry this lady has got the attitude she's got," Newsom said.

At a convenience store several blocks from the tan brick school, Tommy Staggs sold fried potato logs and Slush Puppies, ringing up prices on a cash register emblazoned with "In God We Trust. All Others Pay Cash."

"I think they ought to have prayer," said Staggs. "They did when I was in school, and it didn't hurt me any."

The lawsuit comes at a time when school prayer advocates are gaining support nationally. Incoming House Speaker Newt Gingrich has called for a vote by July 4 on a constitutional amendment authorizing organized school prayer.

President Clinton outraged civil liberties groups by saying he wouldn't rule out the idea. The White House later clarified that Clinton would support a law allowing a moment of silence in schools.

Herdahl also won't get much support from state leaders. Public schools in Mississippi have traditionally allowed prayer over intercoms at the opening of the school day, saying they don't violate the U.S. Supreme Court's ban on government-sponsored prayers because students initiate them.

And the Legislature this year legalized student-initiated prayer any time in the day.
