The availability to the gardener of a flower often depends solely on the supply of seeds. Such is the case with an oddity called Centratherum, Manaos Beauty.

It has been offered in a limited way for several years but there has been such a small supply of seeds that it was impossible to listribute it widely. This year there apparently is enough seed different flower. Because the bloom color is blue, it is bound to be a favorite when it becomes known. Other things to commend it are the leaves, which are deep blue-green and grow in rosettes, its lack of insect pests and its tolerance of any soil.

so many gardeners may try this Manaos Beauty grows 2 feet tall and plants in a row are so nearly the same in height that they form what appears to be a clipped hedge. This should make Manaos Beauty a valuable addition to any garden.

Indoors, too, it is valuable as t will bloom in a window garden during winter, in a green-
