Extra Week Of Summer Vacation Is Planned

Floydada school students will enjoy an extra week of summer vacation this year, according to an announcement made this week by the Floydada School Board of Trustees.

School Begins Sept. 8

The extra week of vacation as announced by the trustees will be due to a later opening date than usual, the date for the beginning of the schools being set for the second Monday in September.

Another important announcement made by the Trustees this week was the addition of a Physical Training Department to the High School.

A complete list of the teachers employed in the Floydada Public School system during the coming year, and the faculty assignments for the term, was also released this mid-week.

According to the program worked-out by Supt. Patty and members of the Board, A. D. Cummings will be principal of the High School, Troy H. Jones, principal of the R. C. Andrews Ward School and J. M. Teague, principal of the East Ward School.

Mr. Cummings, new principal of the high school, has for the past two years been principal of the Andrews Ward School. In addition to the principalship, Mr. Cummings will also teach Civics and Economics.

J. M. Teague is at present a student at Texas Technological College, Mr. Teague holds a Bachelor of Arts Degree, and comes to the Floydada school system highly recommended.

In the high school division of the school work, Miss Deltis Rea, newly elected Dean of Girls, will teach History. Miss Rea has been teaching History in the high school in this city for a number of years, and has been employed in the local school system longer than any other member of the faculty.

Miss Studie Miller, who last year taught in the Andrews Ward School will teach History in the high school this year. O. K. Davis, who last year taught History, General Science and Algebra in the high school will teach these subjects again this year.

Jim Willson, on high seas, writes back home. Jim Willson, who with his wife and a party of friends, left in the earlier part of June for a tour of several countries of Europe, Asia and Africa, wrote recently while on the high seas to members of the local Rotary Club, a note telling of a pleasant trip to date.

Remember me kindly to friends and the people of that section," he added in a postscript.

His trip will be completed sometime early in September upon his arrival back in Floydada.

Officers Unable To Locate El Paso Man After Jail Escape

Bob White Abandons County Car At Carlsbad; Convicted of Burglary.

Peace officers of the Panhandle section and Southeastern New Mexico have been unable to locate Bob White, El Paso youth convicted of burglary, who made his escape from the Floyd County jail Saturday morning of last week.

The abandoned car in which the fugitives made his escape was found Sunday at Carlsbad, N. M., and was undamaged but the meager clues left have proved of little value in apprehending the young man.

Jerked Out Bar

He made his escape from the jail here about 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning while J. M. Wright, jailor, was in another part of the building.

Mr. Wright had placed White and two other prisoners in the run-around on the second story while the cells were being cleaned up and had gone to another room. In the meantime White jerked out one of the iron bars in a window on the east side of the jail, "squeezed" through the narrow opening, and jumped 15 feet to the ground.

The bar which he jerked out had replaced one sawed out about three years ago and had not been securely installed, it was thought.

After gaining his freedom, White jumped into a Model A Ford car owned by the county and made his escape before Mr. Wright could get the other prisoners back in their cells and give the alarm.

Sheriff Stegall, who was in Lockney at the time, was notified and he rushed home to conduct a search but was unable to find a trace of the convicted man until a report was made Sunday that the car had been found at Carlsbad by officers there.

T. B. Hill, deputy at Lockney, went after the car immediately. Sheriff Stegall wired Carlsbad officers to spare neither time nor effort in attempting to locate White.

White was convicted week before last in district court here for burglary on the night of August 6, 1929, of Barker Bros. Garage and was sentenced to 2 1/2 years in the penitentiary. He is 18 years old weighs 115 pounds, Sheriff Stegall stated.

Fire Destroys House Of Historic Interest

The Gilliland family moved into the residence Tuesday, and only awoke in time to save themselves from the flames Tuesday night. The house, estimated to be worth $3,000, carried about $2,000 in insurance and the household effects of Mr. Gilliland were also partially covered by insurance.

He has two sets of teeth, both upper and lower, but this is offset by his having no palate nor sense of taste. Vic eats and drinks like a duck, and whistles with his mouth open like a duck. He is the feature attraction of the shows, singing, whistling and entertaining.

Customers Standing Up Under Price Handicaps

Figures Compared With June 30, 1929, Not So Bad

Notwithstanding the tremendous slump which has affected adversely the income of the agricultural interest of Floyd County during the past eight months following the crash of October, 1929, and has cut deep into the prices of all commodities, the condition of Floyd County is not so bad, if bank reports of condition reflect these conditions as they are believed to do.

As a matter of fact the figures of the combined statements of loans, deposits and cash on hand for the four banks of Floyd County made public as required by the Comptroller of the Currency on June 30, show that people of this section are standing up under the punishment of severely reduced prices for their commodities in a way that is remarkable. Considering that a smaller percentage of the crop of wheat has been marketed on this date than on the same date last year, and that in between has come one of the biggest debacles ever known in the business world, the showing is impressive.

In the first place, people of Floyd County have borrowed from the four banks $155,863 less than they had on the call of June 30, 1929. Figures for last year for the four banks gave a total of $1,282,000 borrowed, whereas the combined loans shown this June 30 were $1,126,137, and a slump of less than $450,000 in deposits is noted. Total deposits on June 30, 1929 were $2,109,000 as against a total this year of $1,653,934, and the available cash in the four banks on June 30 of this year is $646,234, a fall-off from last year of $312,666, when the cash on hand in the four banks was barely short of a million dollars.

While no interests are trying to discount the fact that the low prices for the farm products of the county this season are making difficulties for the farming population, the bank statements indicate that a broad program of home production of home needs on the part of a very large percentage of the population must be in effect, to aid in stabilized business conditions such as hardship could have been believed possible a year ago.

Figures for the four banks of the county, as shown by their reports just made public are: First National Bank, Floydada, loans $365,880.74; cash on hand $227,616.47; deposits $536,313.01.

Floyd County National Bank, Floydada, loans $422,538.18; cash on hand $215,336.11; deposits $607,100.29.

First National Bank, Lockney, Loans $200,208.63; cash on hand $131,790.30; deposits $310,299.35.

Security State Bank, Lockney, loans $137,510.00; cash on hand $71,461.55. Deposits $200,221.55.

Total loans four banks $1,126,137.60; total cash on hand $646,234.43; total deposits $1,653,934.23.

The Mazoroff Mystery

by J.S. Fletcher

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Mervyn Holt, bachelor world war veteran, is engaged, in London, by a man calling himself "Salim Mazaroff," as a traveling companion. After a short tour the "Salim" puts up at the Woodcock Inn, on a "badle" motor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Miss Merchison, and later, Mazaroff informs Holt that they are his wife's daughter, who have long believed him dead. Mazaroff's right name, he tells Holt, is Merchison. He had left his wife shortly after their marriage, before the birth of the girl, of whose existence he had been unaware. That night Mazaroff fails to return to the hotel, and there is no explanation of his disappearance.

CHAPTER II.—Holt meets Miss Merchison—Sheila—and with her goes to her cousin's (Verner Corkerdale) shooting box, hoping to learn of Mazaroff's whereabouts. At Corkerdale's is a man named Armintrude and a London doctor, Eccleshare. They know nothing of Mazaroff. Police Sergeant Manners and a newspaper man, Bownas, question Holt. Mazaroff is found in "Rayner's den." He has been shot. The dead man's lawyer, Crole, with Maythorne, private inquiry agent, arrives. Crole having heard of Holt's daughter's disappearance. He tells Holt Mazaroff carried diamonds worth a large sum, and was in the habit of making a display of them incognito. Neither the diamonds, nor anything of value, are found on Mazaroff's body.

CHAPTER III.—Mrs. Elphinstone starts at the idea that Mazaroff is Merchison, and produces apparent proofs of his death. Maythorne finds something at the scene of the murder, and "picks it up." A pocket found near the spot is identified as the property of Mazaroff, landlord of the Woodcock Inn. It had been stolen from him.

CHAPTER IV.—Evidence at the inquest proves "Mazaroff" was Merchison. His will, made a few days before his death, leaves all his money, an immense amount, to Holt. Mazaroff had the will in his possession, and it is missing. A shiftless character named Parslave is found to have left Marrasdale Moor hurriedly. From Mazaroff's papers it is learned that Herman Kloop, then in London, has been a close friend of Mazaroff's in South Africa.

CHAPTER V.—Kloop tells Crole "Mazaroff" had two remarkable diamonds in his possession. It is learned that he had offered to sell these to Lord and Lady Loelke. Lord Loelke says "Mazaroff" had one of these stones and Armintrude the other. Maythorne brings his clerk, Cottingley, into the matter. As an investigator, Sheila comes, alone, to Holt's rooms, in London. Maythorne is there.

CHAPTER VI.—The girl has Merchison's missing will, which she has "stolen" from her mother. Her explanation seems to link Mrs. Elphinstone with the murder. Maythorne produces a brooch, the object he had found at the scene of the murder. Sheila does not recognize it.

CHAPTER VII.—Parslave is seen on the street and followed to Eccleshare's house. A photograph is kept on the place. Mr. and Mrs. Elphinstone come to London. The latter refuses to make any explanation as to her possession of Mazaroff's will. Armintrude explains he bought two rare diamonds from "Mazaroff," at Marrasdale Moor, and gives the chase price to Holt. "Mazaroff's" heir.

CHAPTER VIII.—Sergeant Manners and a Scotland Yard man, Corkerdale, visit Maythorne. Manners tells him Parslave was seen the night of the murder, with Eccleshare, near where Merchison's body was found. Eccleshare's explanations completely exonerate himself and Parslave, and he, however, declares they saw Mrs. Elphinstone at the scene of the murder, that night.

CHAPTER IX

Missing!

IT NEEDED no more than a glance at the two policemen to see that this announcement produced an effect on their officially trained minds which was equivalent to letting in a sudden flood of illuminating light on a hitherto dark subject. Corkerdale looked at Manners. Manners stared at Corkerdale; then both turned on the selector.

"Mrs. Elphinstone!" exclaimed Manners. "In possession of the missing will?"

But Corkerdale's first remark was in a quieter tone. "That'll need some explanation," he said, with a significant look. "As I understand matters, the will was in Mazaroff's pocket when he was murdered."

"As far as is known, it was," replied Crole. "He carried it away from Postlethwaite's office at York, in his pocket, anyway, and it certainly wasn't amongst his effects at the Woodcock, which we examined after his death. Explanation, yes! But I'll tell you how we came to find out that Mrs. Elphinstone got it." He went on to narrate the happenings of the previous night but one, on which Sheila came to me with the missing will. "Now," he continued, "the thing of course, is—how, where, under what circumstances did Mrs. Elphinstone get hold of that will? Last night, after Mrs. Elphinstone arrived in London, Maythorne saw her and tried to get an explanation out of her. He got nothing!"

"Not a word!" said Maythorne. "She showed nothing but defiance. I pointed out the inference that might be drawn; the suspicion that might be thrown upon her—all no good! She refused to say anything."

"And that makes me think," remarked Crole, a little eagerly, "that Mrs. Elphinstone, after all, may have a proper and reasonable explanation to give. I can't think that a woman of any common sense—and she's a shrewd, clever, hard woman!—would be so foolish as to behave in this fashion unless she knew she was safe. You hinted that you'd have to give information to the police, didn't you, Maythorne?"

"I did!"

"And it produced no effect on her?"

"Not the slightest! Her whole attitude was that of—mind your own business!"

Crole began to drum the table with his fingers, looking around at the rest of us as if he wondered whether anybody had got any suggestion to make. As nobody spoke, he made one himself.

"I wonder if Mazaroff, or Merchison, as he really was, met Mrs. Elphinstone, or Mrs. Merchison, as she really is, at any time while he was at the Woodcock before his death?" he said. "Possible!"

"I don't think he did," replied Maythorne, at whom Crole was looking particularly. "There's nothing whatever to suggest it. Of course, if Mrs. Elphinstone could be got to speak it would clear up a tremendous lot."

"From what little I saw of Mrs. Elphinstone at Marrasdale," observed Crole, "she's the sort of woman who will not speak—until it pleases her to do so! A hard woman—d-d hard!"

"Where is Mrs. Elphinstone to be found?" asked Corkerdale.

"Short's hotel," replied Maythorne.

"Then I think Manners and I had better go there and see her," said Corkerdale. He turned to Eccleshare. "You spoke of leaving England, doctor? When?"

"I've not quite settled the exact date," replied Eccleshare. "It thought about the end of the week."

"Better put it off a bit, doctor," suggested Corkerdale, quietly. "As far as I can see, your evidence will be wanted—and so will your man's. Now," he continued, "I suppose Parslave there is a native of this place, Marrasdale? Just so—then he's very well acquainted with the personal appearance of Mrs. Elphinstone?"

"Known her a good many years, sir—ever since she came to live at Marrasdale tower," replied Parslave.

"You'd be in the habit of seeing her regularly, Parslave?" suggested the detective.

"Most every day, sir—here and there."

"And you've no doubt that it was Mrs. Elphinstone you saw that night, coming away from the place where you heard the shot fired, and where Mazaroff's dead body was afterwards discovered?"

"Not a doubt about that, sir! Take my solemn 'davy' twas Mrs. Elphinstone."

"And you've no doubt, either, doctor?—though you, of course, being, I gather, a mere visitor in these parts, would not know Mrs. Elphinstone so well?"

"I've no doubt," replied Eccleshare. "Although I was only a visitor, I know Mrs. Elphinstone well enough. My host, Mr. Courthope, and my nephew, Mr. Armintrude, and myself dined at Marrasdale tower two or three times during my stay. I often met Mrs. Elphinstone out on the moors, or in the village. I'm positive she is the woman Parslave and I saw coming away from Reiver's den."

Corkerdale turned to Manners. "I think we'd better go round to Short's hotel," he remarked.

"That's what I think," agreed Manners. "Can't be left where it is."

"We all got up. There was a brief silence. Crole was just going to say something when a knock came at the door. Eccleshare's housekeeper put her head inside.

"There's a young man outside, sir, wants to know if Mr. Maythorne is here?" she said. "Come in a taxi, sir, with an old gentleman. The young man said—if Mr. Maythorne's here which his name is Pickles."

"One of my clerks," muttered Maythorne. "Excuse me!"

He hurried out—to return within a minute or two with Mr. Elphinstone. And, for the first time since the beginning of my acquaintance with him, Maythorne showed evidence of something close akin to excitement.

"Here's a new development!" he exclaimed as he came into the room. "Mr. Elphinstone has been to my office and followed me here to tell me that Mrs. Elphinstone has disappeared!"

We all turned on Mr. Elphinstone. He was shaken out of his usual dreaminess; he looked perturbed, dismayed, puzzled, wholly at a loss. Standing there a little within the doorway, blinking at us as if unable to make us out or reckon us up, he nodded automatically at Maythorne's announcement. But he was sufficiently master of himself to confirm it, in words.

"Since last night!" he said. "Disappeared—completely! Most extraordinary—and unpleasant—and embarrassing—I really do not know what to think—or do!"

ing the news, pushed forward the newcomer.

"Sit down, Mr. Elphinstone," he said. "Perhaps we can help you a bit. When did Mrs. Elphinstone disappear?"

Mr. Elphinstone dropped into the chair, and looked round us again.

"Just so!" he said. "The fact is, the whole thing is really most confusing. Last night, of course, I went to Miss Apperley's flat and went to Short's hotel. We had dinner on our arrival. In our own private sitting room, it was some little time after that that Sheila came. She—"

"Oh!—Miss Merchison came there, did she?" interrupted Maythorne.

"Miss Merchison—Sheila—my stepdaughter—yes. She came. She and her mother went into the adjoining bedroom—to talk. I heard them talking. I—I went away—downstairs, you know—I thought I'd smoke a cigar in the smoking room. I was down there, perhaps an hour. I foregathered with a man who turned out to be something of an archeologist—interesting conversation. Perhaps I was a little longer away. Then I went up to our rooms again. There was nobody there—nobody at all! I thought perhaps Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila had gone into the drawing room, and I went there, but they were not to be seen. I waited some time. Then, as they didn't come, I made some inquiry. And I found, from the hall porter, that Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila, and Alison Murdoch had all gone out of the hotel some time before, evidently soon after I had gone down into the smoking room. And—"

"Pardon me, Mr. Elphinstone," broke in Maythorne, "but—who is Alison Murdoch?"

Mr. Elphinstone looked at his questioner pretty much as a man looks who wonders that anybody shouldn't know as much as himself.

"Alison Murdoch?" he answered. "Oh, ah!—you're not a Marrasdale man, of course. Alison Murdoch is a sort of foster-sister of my wife's. Brought up together, as children, you know. Then at one time she was for many years my wife's maid—still acts in that capacity when we go traveling, as in this instance. But for some few years she has lived in a little house at Marrasdale—Birnsdale, really—on her own means—a little competency, you know. An active woman, though—in the tourist season, for instance, she helps them at the Woodcock with their cooking—clever, bustling woman!"

"And she went out last night with Mrs. Elphinstone and Miss Merchison?" asked Maythorne.

"So I learned from the hall porter. He said that Mrs. Elphinstone and her maid—they know them both well enough at Short's for we are always up, all three of us, two or three times a year, and Miss Merchison, whom, of course, they also know—will all went out together about—I think he said half past nine."

"Did he call a cab for them?" demanded Maythorne.

"No—he said they turned to the left, down the street—walking," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "Dear me—I really can't think why they should go walking at that hour of the evening!"

"But the point is—did they, or any one of them, return?" inquired Crole.

None returned," said Mr. Elphinstone. "I waited up till midnight—eventually I retired—very much puzzled. And—I was so fatigued I fell asleep at once, and slept soundly until morning. To my great amazement, I found that neither Mrs. Elphinstone nor Alison Murdoch had come back—Sheila, of course, I supposed to be at Miss Apperley's. So, after getting a little breakfast, I drove to Miss Apperley's, and just caught that young lady as she was leaving for her classes. To my still greater amazement she knew nothing whatever about Sheila. Sheila, she said, had suddenly remarked, after sitting in silence for a long time the previous evening, that she would go to Short's hotel and have things out with her mother, and had set off there and then—and had never returned! So," concluded Mr. Elphinstone, waving his silver mounted cane. "There it is! All three have vanished!—in London! I thought of Mr. Maythorne and went to his office—and was brought along here to him. And I was going to ask you, Mr. Maythorne—do you think it possible they have been kidnaped?"

No one laughed. Mr. Elphinstone's simplicity was too apparent. He was very grave, too, in his simplicity, and Crole was equally grave in replying to his ingenuous question.

"No, Mr. Elphinstone, no, I don't think it possible for three women to be kidnaped, even in London," he answered. "I think you'll find that they went out on some business of their own, and that they had good reasons—again of their own!—for not returning. But let me ask you for a little more information—when your wife and her daughter went into the bedrooms to talk in private where was Alison Murdoch?"

Mr. Elphinstone considered this for a moment.

"Probably," he replied at last, "probably in the next room to that—a dressing room, which she used as a bedroom. We always have the same rooms when we stay at Short's. There's a sitting room, a dressing room; Alison Murdoch always has the dressing room. I should say she'd be in there when my wife and Sheila went into the bedroom."

"Did you find out from the hall porter if they took anything away with them?" inquired Crole. "Any light baggage—anything of that sort. As if they, or one or other of them, meant to stay away for the night?"

"I didn't inquire," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "But I'm sure they didn't. The hall porter—an intelligent man whom I've known for many years—told me this morning that he had no opinion, when they went out—well, in short, one that would never have occurred to me."

"And that was—what?" asked Crole.

"He said he thought the ladies were going to have what he called an hour at the pictures," answered Mr. Elphinstone. "Of course, I didn't understand him. He explained that just around the corner from Short's, in the direction they took, is one of those new-fangled cinema theaters, where, I am told, moving pictures are shown. But I can't think—"

"I think we may take it that they didn't go there," remarked Maythorne. He glanced significantly at the two policemen. "This'll have to be gone into carefully," he murmured. "Your line!"

"We don't know that Mrs. Elphinstone mayn't be found at Short's—when Mr. Elphinstone goes back there," said Crole, glancing at his watch. "It's now noon, and—"

"We don't," interrupted Maythorne. Then, in an undertone, he muttered: "But, I guess he won't! Mr. Elphinstone!" he continued, raising his voice, "I want to show you something—something that I have in my pocket. Here it is," he went on, producing the cairngorm brooch, and laying it on the table. "Tell me!—have you ever seen that article before?"

Mr. Elphinstone peered carefully at the brooch and then looked up—quickly.

"Where did you get this?" he asked. "In surprise. 'To be sure—it belongs to my wife!'"

Maythorne bent over the table toward Manners and Corkerdale and for a moment or two spoke to them in a whisper; I gathered that he was telling them how and when he got the brooch which he had just exhibited. Again he turned to Mr. Elphinstone.

"You've no doubt that this is your wife's brooch?" he asked. "After all, I suppose that one of these things is very like another."

"That's my wife's property!" affirmed Mr. Elphinstone with more decision of will and manner than he usually showed. "I bought it for her myself, years ago, in Inverness. It is one of two—they are pearls—made by the stones of a rather uncommon sort of cairngorm; the silver mountings are old. I bought the pair in a sort of odds-and-ends shop in Inverness—I remember the circumstances very well. But to be sure—I haven't seen either brooch for years."

"Mrs. Elphinstone didn't wear them, then?" suggested Maythorne.

"She thought them old-fashioned and rather too heavy," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "She looked on them, I think, as curiosities—she said they'd been used, originally, for fastening plaids—men's plaids, you know, at the shoulders—and she put them away. I don't remember that she ever did wear them—but I have no doubt whatever that what you show me is one of the pair. Now, where did you get it?"

"Let it suffice for the moment, Mr. Elphinstone, to say that I found it, accidentally," answered Maythorne. "Picked it up, you know—when I was at Marrasdale. Never mind more, just now."

He replaced the brooch in his pocket and rose, looking round at the rest of us. "Well?" he said. "What next?"

Nobody made any suggestion. The next words came from Mr. Elphinstone.

"I wish I knew what has become of my wife!" he said, plaintively. "Can no one think of anything to do?"

"She'll have to be sought for, sir," said Corkerdale. He nudged Manners. "We'd better be doing something, I think," he murmured. "The hotel first, eh?"

Maythorne turned to Eccleshare. "I suppose you're on the telephone?" he said. "Just so!—let us ring up Short's and find out if Mrs. Elphinstone has returned there."

He went out into the hall with Eccleshare; the rest of us waited until their return a few minutes later. Maythorne shook his head.

"No news!" he answered. "They haven't been back there—up to now. But—as they set out from there I suppose that's the best base from which to conduct operations?"

"We're going there, anyway," said Corkerdale. "Mrs. Elphinstone's will come with us?—we may hit on some clue from something that's been left."

We left the house. Outside, across the street, Johnson was still loafing about. He caught Maythorne's eye; what Maythorne did in the way of signaling to him I did not make out, but Johnson loafed away, and still further away, and faded out of sight.

"No need to keep that chap hanging round," observed Maythorne. "Now for Cottingley—I think I shall put Cottingley onto the track of Mrs. Elphinstone—he'll find her a lot quicker than any professional police will."

"Where's he going to pick up a clew?" asked Crole, sarcastically. "Leave that to Cottingley!" retorted Maythorne. "He'll see a clew where no one else would. All he wants is clear—and concise—instructions to start out on."

We found Cottingley at the top of the street. He was eating an apple, in supplement to his lunch of bread and cheese. Pilegmatic as ever, he turned with us toward the nearest cab-rank. Maythorne talking to him as we went along.

"What next?" asked Crole as we reached Edgware road again.

"I'm just going round by Short's hotel," answered Maythorne, "to hear if those chaps have made any start out, and to give Cottingley a thing. Better come, both of you."

"I won't," said Crole. "I must get back to my office. I can do no good at Short's, and you can ring me up if you've any news. Oh, by-the-by," he added, as Maythorne signaled to a taxicab driver. "I forgot to mention it before, Holt. Armintrude's check duly arrived this morning. So that's all right, and I suppose we've finished with his part in all these mysteries."

"Finished with nothing, Crole!" exclaimed Maythorne. "The curtain is still up—well up!—on everything. Coming, Holt?—you'd better!"

I went with him. I was not so much concerned about Mrs. Elphinstone as about Sheila. That some new and very serious situation had arisen when Sheila called on her mother the previous evening there could be no doubt—nothing else, I was sure, could have occasioned the strange departure and disappearance of which Mr. Elphinstone had told us. What was it?

It took little time to run round to Short's, a famous, if somewhat old-fashioned hotel in the West end, greatly in favor with country family people. While we rode there Maythorne occupied himself in posting up Cottingley in all our doubts that morning, and especially about the disappearance of Mrs. Elphinstone. Cottingley soaked it all in without saying a word; he was still eating apples, and he munched them steadily while his employer talked. But as Maythorne made an end Cottingley also finished his last apple, and tossing the core out of the cab window, rapped out a word or two.

"Steamship offices!" he said. "Likeliest place, first."

"Good!" assented Maythorne. "There may be something in that. All right! you get on to it. But first, we'll see if anything's turned up here."

We left the cab a little way from Short's, and walked along towards the principal entrance. Manners and Corkerdale were just coming out as we reached it—I thought I saw in their manner that they had heard something.

"Well?" asked Maythorne as we joined them. "Any news?"

"Nobody's returned," replied Corkerdale, "and there's nothing in Mrs. Elphinstone's or the maid's rooms to suggest why they ever went away. But we have heard a bit that the old gentleman hadn't found out when he set off this morning."

"What's that?" asked Maythorne. "Odd circumstance, to be sure!" answered the detective. "I'd like to know what it means. Got it from the under hall porter. He says that some little time after Mr. and Mrs. Elphinstone and the maid arrived last night—he knows all three well enough, he says, as they come there two or three times a year—a man came into the entrance hall and asked him if they—naming them—were stopping there? He said they were, and he believed they were then having dinner. The man went away. But this under hall porter also says that he noticed the same man hanging about the hotel front after that, and that he was there, as if watching when Mrs. Elphinstone and her daughter and the maid went out—in fact, he's positive that the man followed them down the street and round the first corner. And—that's all!"

"And a good lot!" remarked Maythorne. "Could he describe the man?"

"Oh, yes! A little thin man, about thirty or so; slight brown mustache, wore spectacles; very respectably dressed; wore a Trilby hat—looked like a clerk or commercial traveler—something of that sort," replied Corkerdale.

"Did he say anything to the under hall porter as to why he wanted the Elphinstones?" asked Maythorne.

"No—the man asked him if he could take up any message," said Corkerdale. "He replied no—it didn't matter; he wouldn't disturb them if they were at dinner; he'd look in again."

"And he didn't look in again?"

"No—the last the under hall porter saw of him, he was following the three women down the street." Maythorne remained silent for a minute or two.

"Well," he said at last. "I suppose you'll follow things up in your own way. If I can be of any help, let me know. If I hear anything, I'll let you know, Corkerdale. May as well help each other." He turned away, Cottingley and I following him. After going a short distance, he motioned to the clerk.

"Try your line—the shipping offices, Cottingley," he said. "May be some good."

Cottingley went off, and Maythorne and I walked on in silence for a while.

"This is a queer business, Holt!" he said after some time. "That Mrs. Elphinstone is either guilty or is privy to somebody else's guilt seems dead certain! But—where on earth has she disappeared to? And when and where are we going to get news of her?"

Back Quit Hurting

"I was in a very weak condition from a serious sickness," writes Mrs. I. Leonard, of 571 Joseph St., New Orleans, La. "I was so weak I wanted to sleep all the time. I did not have strength to do anything. My back ached nearly all the time. I was just in misery."

"My mother told me I must ather myself from the sleepiness, and take something to help get my strength back. She had taken Cardui and had been helped, so I decided to take Cardui, too. After my first bottle, I could see that it was helping me. I took four bottles at this time. My strength came back and I gained weight. Pretty soon, I was my old self again. My back quit hurting, and I haven't had any more trouble since I took Cardui."

Citizenship and Patriotism

THE WORLD WAR again proved to all nations the intense patriotism that dwells in the heart of every American. There is an increasing appreciation of the rights of citizenship on the part of American citizens, though the records show that the majority of towns and cities are lacking in the spirit of citizenship in local affairs and elections.

The crying need in our community life is that every citizen become an ACTIVE citizen; for a community can rise no higher than its citizenship.

Many residents are not registered, probably not one in three so-called citizens vote in primaries, in school or judicial elections. The vote is generally small in local elections. In other words, many of us are not "good" citizens—we do not exercise our franchise of citizenship.

A community cannot be well governed—cannot hope to have an efficient and economical administration of many of the most vital aspects of its life, if its citizens are not actively civic minded. More than one-half the taxes are raised for local distribution. Yet, normally, more people vote in national and state elections than vote in local elections.

Is that good business?

The least a citizen, man or woman, can do is to show an intelligent interest in public affairs, both national and local. The chief direct responsibility for the majority of us is to attain citizenship, establish residence, register, vote, serve on juries, be loyal and strive for an American standard of living.

Our town officials welcome awakened interest in civic affairs. It means much to our business men and property owners. All residents benefit by a renewed surge of civic energy.

As "two heads are better than one" so are "many heads better than a few" in the matter of local citizenship and patriotism. Remember, a town can be no better than its individual citizens.

Local citizenship and patriotism are deserving of a large amount of consideration on the part of all of us. In these we can SHOW the superiority of

Kentucky Woman Proves Successful As Operator of Her Own Ferry Boat

Folks in Spottsville, Ky., got the surprise of their lives seven years ago when quiet Anna Stewart quit her job in the general store to buy the Spottsville ferry, a clumsy craft which plied between the banks of the placid Green river, for $15,000. It took her two hours to decide.

Townpeople gasped. It was a foolhardy venture because, they thought, it was no job for a woman and, secondly, there was talk of building a bridge over the stream. And where, they wanted to know, did this small-salaried unmarried woman get the money?

Money indeed! Anna Stewart had little of it, but she had ideas. In leisure moments she pondered such an investment. She studied river traffic, checked the number of vehicles which crossed on the ferry, considered the business of competing ferries operating up the river. She would make a bid for it when the time came.

Two hours to decide. And that time, strangely, came soon. When the announcement was made that the Spottsville ferry was for sale the astute store clerk was one of the first to search out the owners. They thought to bowl her over by asking $15,000 and further to add to her consternation by declaring: "There are others bargaining for it. We can give you two hours to decide and no more."

Before the time had elapsed this naive bidder confronted the owners and said: "Close the deal. Make out the proper papers transferring the ferry franchise and equipment to me."

The money had been loaned her by two friends whom she convinced with the argument that since the ferry had been operating profitably the past 100 years it would continue to do so under her management.

Today her backers and fellow townsmen found she prophesied correctly, for seven years after the deal she has made enough nearly to liquidate the loan and, as she herself says, "to support myself."

Has an Assistant. The ferry is operated day and night. The small launch which propels the craft back and forth is operated in turns by the owner and her assistant, a man.

Recalling her purchase, Miss Stewart declared recently: "People here said I was crazy to buy it. They talked about the possibilities of a bridge and about other ferries which were operating in this district."

"But I never regretted my buy. In these seven years I've almost paid off my loan. Within a short time, I'll be free from debt and everything I take in will be profit."

So I don't think I've done so badly."

Strategically operated, the ferry links the sizeable cities of Henderson and Owensboro, Ky., and it is the shortest route between them. As a link in highway 60, Anna Stewart's ferry is part of a coast-to-coast network of government and state roads.

ROAST LAMB SERVED IN NUMEROUS COMBINATIONS

Custom has placed special emphasis on two accompaniments to roast lamb—peas and mint sauce. But there is no rule, social, culinary, or dietary, requiring this combination, or preventing the use of other relishes and vegetables. Variety in the menus and contrast in flavor, color, and texture are assured by changing occasionally to other combinations, says the Bureau of Home Economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Vegetables which in themselves are pronounced in flavor are especially appropriate with a roast of lamb. The same is true of lamb chops, stuffed breast of lamb, and other lamb dishes. In a lamb stew, onion, green pepper, and turnip, all having decided flavor of their own, give zest to the meat flavor. And when roast lamb is reheated there is the fine and unusual relish obtained by making a curry sauce, which seems to be especially adapted to lamb.

For the roast relishes like currant jelly, spiced conserves and pickles, and horseradish cause are all good, in addition to any vegetables served. English cooks sometimes have caper sauce or mint sauce, both of which are made with vinegar to give a pleasant mild acidity of flavor. American cooks seem to like their mint occasionally in the form of a green-colored jelly made from apple pectin and flavored with mint, or as mint gelatin served as a salad or a garnish.

There is no logical reason why other vegetables may not be served in place of peas or to accompany them. For a change, the home-economics specialists suggest buttered shredded string beans, or quick-cooked spinach, or onions, baked or boiled or creamed, or asparagus, or turnips, white or yellow, or cauliflower. Nor should the possibilities of good salad flavors be overlooked. Plain lettuce with a tart dressing is sufficient for a dinner salad; tomato, cucumber, and lettuce, in season, is always an appetizing salad with any meat and excellent with roast lamb; kumquat, endive, and watercress salad is unusual and colorful enough for a company meal; grapefruit and lettuce, too, is a good tart dinner salad. As roast lamb with a gravy is somewhat rich a light French dressing is preferable to a heavy mayonnaise with all these salads.

BARBED QUILLS PROTECT PORCUPINE FROM FOES

A mouthful of porcupine quills is anything but a savory dish for any enemy of this self-confident animal. Misguided and overzealous attackers, such as coyotes, often lose their appetites and even starve after collecting some of the tenacious and finely barbed quills in their noses or mouths, or in their tongues or cheeks. Frequently at water holes in forests range cattle will sniff at a porcupine and, in return, receive a noseful of quills from a flip of the heavily barbed tail. The sharp quills imbed themselves more deeply with each attempt to remove them, causing intense suffering and sometimes death.

Thus protected the porcupine usually goes its way unhindered, and in its quest for food it may destroy young fruit and forest trees, or vegetable crops, or wallow down alfalfa. According to Leaflet 60-L, Porcupine Control in the Western States, by Ira N. Gabrielson and E. E. Horn, of the Biological Survey, issued recently by the United States Department of Agriculture, the porcupine in many areas has branded itself as a pest that must be controlled. But in many parts of its extensive range it does no serious harm and is tolerated because of the interest that attaches to a native wild animal.

Porcupine in the Northwest winter in the cliffs and lava rims of the mountains. In the Southwest they go to the lower forests for the winter. This makes it possible to find them close to their dens when snow is on the ground and to shoot them, often in sufficient numbers to effect satisfactory control. In summer it is easy to locate their winter dens by the grided trees. Taking advantage of the porcupine's fondness for salt, foresters, ranchers, and rodent-control workers of the Biological Survey bait them near

"ABANDON MILLIONS OF ACRES," SAYS HYDE

Millions of acres of farm land in the United States should be abandoned at once by farmers, both for their own benefit and for the benefit of agriculture in general, according to Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde.

The land, Secretary Hyde declares, is a detriment to the country, and should preferably be forested. If not, it should be allowed to lie fallow until the soil has built itself up.

"There are millions of acres of lands in the United States," says the Secretary, in an article in the July number of The Country Home, "which, because of location, soil exhaustion or natural infertility cannot be made to produce a living equal to the American standard. These are known as sub-marginal lands. From the stand-point of natural agricultural efficiency, they ought not to be farmed. They tend to lower the standard of living and educational standards of the farmer who tills them. They should be taken out of production, reforested and held until some coming generation needs them."

"To farm these now returns no profits to the farmer but serves in the aggregate to increase the surplus and depress prices, whereas they might be valuable to future generations if properly preserved."

SIDEWALKS ARE TOO GRIM

With the progress of modern machinery we have been getting underfoot all too much of the gray flatness that oozes from the concrete mixer.—Woman's Home Companion.

Treatment with borax or hellebore will destroy many of the stable fly and house fly larvae that breed in manure. Use the powdered form of borax at the rate of 1 pound to each 16 cubic feet of manure, scattering it over the pile and then sprinkling it with water. Hellebore costs more than borax. If it is used, soak one-half pound of the material in 10 gallons of water for 24 hours and use this quantity to treat about light bushels of manure. Neither borax nor hellebore will injure the fertilizing value of manure if applied in these quantities and if not more than 15 tons of the treated manure is applied per acre.

Range where growing poultry has been kept continuously is likely to be in poor condition in late summer. If the range or yard is bare, the chickens should be changed to fresh land, or the soil should be spaded up or cultivated. Equipment such as feed hoppers and drinking vessels should be moved if the space around them has become bare. Land to be used for raising the pullets should not be fertilized with poultry manure, as this may spread worms or diseases to the growing stock.

The type of house best suited for rabbits depends principally on the climate, but the essential features of any rabbit house, wherever located, are light and fresh air. A moderate-sized house is preferable to a very large one, as rabbits kept in small units are less likely to contact disease. The United States Department of Agriculture will send on request Leaflet 15-L, containing drawings and bills of material for a rabbit house, two types of hutches, a portable nest box, and a colony-growing house.

Many brick masons say that all flues leak, but agricultural engineers of the U. S. Department of Agriculture assert that a flue can be made tight and that it should be subjected to a smoke test before a heater is connected to it. Build a paper, straw, or wood fire at the base of the flue and when the smoke makes a dense column, tightly block the outlet at the top by laying a wet blanket over it. The blanket must be kept wet as long as it is in place. Flues tested in this way often prevent serious leaks into adjoining flues directly through the walls, or between the linings and the walls.

Do you ever cook cucumbers? They are delicious when peeled, cut in halves or quarters and steamed; or cut in lengthwise sections, stuffed with a vegetable mixture, and baked.

A few grains of pop corn on top of a plate of corn soup gives an attractive appearance. A spoonful of whipped cream is a good garnish for clear and cream soups, and adds to the food value.

Woodrow Wilson as Perpetuator of Real Democracy Eulogized in Talk

Rev. Chas. Field Speaks At Church

"Woodrow Wilson has made us more thoroughly to understand love and strive to perpetuate real democracy in our own land and in all the earth," declared the Rev. Chas. S. Field in an address Sunday night at the First Methodist Church on the subject of "Woodrow Wilson, His Ideals and Principles."

The speaker was introduced by Geo. A. Liden. The Rev. Field left the first of the week for Petersburg. He has been invited to make a talk on the same subject before the Kiwanis Club members in their weekly meeting at Lubbock soon. He planned to visit points in New Mexico before returning to his home in Dallas.

For several years he served as superintendent of Sunday School work in the Central Texas Conference and has been engaged in church work for many years. He was pastor of several of the leading pulpits in Central Texas before he retired from the pastorate. He has made an extensive study of the life of Wilson.

Following is the address in full given by the Rev. Field Sunday night:

"A majestic river does not burst from the bosom of the earth at one spot. It is the result of the confluence of many which rise in obscure places and mingle in their onward flow to the sea. Into the life of Woodrow Wilson flowed the streams of intellectual, moral and religious culture from his forbears. A line of authors, editors, educators, ministers and reformers help us to account for and interpret his wonderful ideals and principles. The blood of the Scotch Covenanters flowed in his veins. His ancestors were stalwart men and women, who lived the simple frugal life in things material, but aspired to the highest in things spiritual. I would not detract from his personal labors and accomplishments. He had a rich inheritance from his ancestors, but he multiplied and exalted the gifts which nature lavishly bestowed upon him. His character and accomplishments admonish us that we should live and labor for our contemporaries and for succeeding generations. Thus compounded in an unknown ratio from age to age, humanity will attain that high destiny for which we are created.

Christian Ideals and Principles

"Christ's motive, his example are every man's key to his own gifts and graces." (Wilson) Sired by an honored and gifted minister of the Gospel, born in a Presbyterian manse, breathing from infancy the very atmosphere of christian culture, instructed in christian precepts and principles, trained as a child in the way he should go, when old he did not depart therefrom.

"All lofty principles, all lofty ideals must be incarnated. Wilson's character and ideals become a living epistle known and read of all men." The precepts of the Nazarene run through the warp and woof of his writings like threads of shining gold. His ideals were definitely christian. In his voluminous writings, addresses and orations we can trace the development of these and their application to every problem, social, industrial, educational and political that he endeavored to solve.

"That great christian statesman, Gladstone, declared that the intelligent application of the principles of the Gospel would solve every problem of the day.

"Wilson's character and career in a large measure exemplify this truth.

Fundamental Principles

"We are the champions of the rights of mankind." (Wilson) If you look through the files of our treaties with foreign nations from the days of Washington to the present you will note that the citizens of most foreign countries are spoken of as 'subjects', where as our own people are referred to as 'citizens' and never as 'subjects' of anyone. There are two views of the relation of the individual to government, one the ancient and autocratic view that man was made for the government, the King ruling by divine right, that the system is a sacred thing; the thing to be protected, strengthened and perpetuated at the expense and often at the sacrifice of the 'subjects'. They assumed that man was made for the State, the Church, the Sabbath, made to be in perpetual servitude to the law, made for him and not by him. Christ was truly democratic; he discovered the individual, he proclaimed that 'man was not made for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath made for man.' None of these things are to be man's master, but all of them merely agencies to serve and to free him.

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." (Jesus) There is but one thing on earth of real intrinsic value, Man! "The things we call sacred are made so from the fact that they serve a sacred purpose. Their sanctity is not absolute but relative. They are sacred as agencies to serve man in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness and in the development of a high individual, social, industrial and civil life. This is the christian view and Wilson's ideal.

"This accounts for his fight to democratize Princeton University, to abolish class privileges, stamp out and put down all fictitious standards, that the poorest student might have the same opportunity as the most opulent, that the universities of America should serve the youth of America and serve all impartially. His struggle to dem-with the beauty that must make it shine forever,' the whole world is transformed into a class room and all men learn of him.

Altruism Versus Egoism.

"I recently strolled by the banks of a river and an eddying whirlpool on the brink circled to a center and drew the refuse from the channel and held it in its self-centered embrace. A repulsive and offensive sight!

"I wandered on and came to a sparkling fountain, gushing from the base of a huge boulder; it lifted the silvery pebbles and made its course fragrant with wild flowers. It freely gave itself and was ever replenished from the unending fountain beneath the everlasting hills. I thought of Wilson's words of Lincoln.—'He is like some great reservoir of living water, which you can quaff but can never exhaust.' 'He that believeth in me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water.' (Jesus)

"His love and sympathy for mankind, and especially for the weak and defenseless, gave to his words an irresistible charm and force. Of Mexico he said, 'If I am strong, I am ashamed to bully the weak.' His ideal was the debt of strength. That all power, individual and national was held as a trust for the benefit of those who needed help. The 'strong bearing the infirmities of the weak.' 'America should treat Mexico as she would wish Mexico to treat her.' (Wilson) His conviction was that 'the golden rule of Christ will bring the golden age of Man!'

A Man of Peace And A Man of War

"I will not cry peace so long as there is sin and wrong in the world." (Wilson)

"On an occasion when Wilson was invited to address a great Peace Congress, his reply was, 'Yes, if I may speak in favor of war.' He explains that he did not mean that unreasonable form of war, the senseless destruction of human life and property, but the war with human passions and the war with human wrongs. But even the war which involves the shedding of blood may become a sacred thing if it be necessary in order to vindicate human rights. The strife to which the Master referred when He declared, 'Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth, I came not to send peace but a sword.'

Ideal of Patriotism

"The patriots of '76 who signed the Declaration of Independence, knowing that probably they were at the same time signing their own death warrants, while a cynical world smiled at their audacity, illustrated real patriotism for all time. The true patriot will stand for the right when he knows that 'Half the world is against him.' The real patriot, and indeed the real man, is the one who 'finds himself' and comes to understand his true relationship with his fellows and 'catches a glimpse of the great ideal which Christ lifted when He was elevated upon the cross.' (Wilson)

"An incident reveals Wilson's high sense of honor. Having formed a law partnership in New York, the office there was approached by a gentleman and a handsome retainer offered to represent him in business to which the government might become a party. Wilson was consulted in Washington by phone before an answer was given and he replied in substance that he did not think it in accordance with sound public policy for any man who had been honored with high office to accept a case when the interest of the government may become involved. He had declared that our 'first concern should not be to make a living, but to make a life.' In this mercenary age he calls us to the paths of honor, 'and by it being dead yet speaketh.'

A Seer

"Wilson was a man of vision, so were the old prophets, the great poets. Like Moses from Pisgah, he looked into the promised land of peace, justice, security and freedom for mankind. By faith he saw the day when our own Declaration of Independence would become universal in its application, and our flag, symbolizing human liberty purchased by blood, should in spirit become the flag of humanity.' He saw again the vision of the old prophet when 'they shall beat their swords into plow shares, and their spears into pruning hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more,' they prophecy of the poet of the day when the war drums would be silent and the battle flags be furled in the Parliament of man, the federation of the world.' He saw the day when the nations of earth should in concert plan for peace and not for war. Having this vision he lived and died with the assurance of final victory. In all that is just he inspires us to labor and confidently wait.

"He declared that 'Christianity had liberated the world by its revelation of the power of unselfish love.' He well knew that we might search history from the beginning, coming by the Cross two thousand years ago and we would not find one name that is embalm- ed in the heart of humanity who had not lost sight of self in service for others.

"When Raphael painted his immortal pictures, he arranged his easel so that no shadow of his own body would be reflected on his canvass to mar the fine light and shade thereof.

"The needle never pointed more directly to the pole than his unconquerable will held him to his purpose. Until he was stricken he put over every important measure that he recommended to Congress. We may apply to him the lines of Dr. Samuel Johnson.

"A soul of fire,
No dangers fright him,
And no labors tire."

Last Days.

"Sweet are the uses of adversity."

"In the long days of patient suffering, the earthly house shattered and tottered to its fall, the indomitable spirit, shining out with increasing lustre, with steadfast faith in God and in the final triumph of his ideals.—'Not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and was persuaded of them and embraced them; * * * he endured as seeing Him who is invisible,' and met the grim monster without fear or remorse with the words,—'I am ready.'

"Let me summarize and say Wilson's ideals as revealed in what he said, did or attempted—his ideals of dauntless courage, steadfast faith, open candor, unflinching patience, sublime fortitude in suffering, universal love, self sacrifice, peace with honor, eternal warfare against wrong, absolute integrity, true patriotism, democratic education, freedom for all mankind, all blend in his life like the strains of well modulated and 'harmonious music, and as the lyre of Orpheus delivered the ancient voyagers from the fatal spell of the Sirens, so the charm of these ideals will tend to drown the tumult of evil passions and overcome the seductive influence of all that is low and debasing. This is the immortality of the good.

A World Citizen
"A thousand years from today and in succeeding time, three names will be conspicuous in American history—Washington, Lincoln and Wilson!"

"Washington will be remembered and honored as the leader in the emancipation of the few struggling colonies.

"Lincoln struck the shackles from the hands of the slaves, because the air of America is too free for a slave to breathe!"

"But, for all time, Wilson will stand forth as the champion of the rights of humanity, as a leader in the emancipation of mankind from every form of autocratic, arbitrary and despotic rule! His work and his watchword, sounded to the ends of the earth,—'Break every yoke and let the oppressed go free.'"

Dr. Field stated that he would be glad to have the names and addresses of any persons who entered essays in the Woodrow Wilson Prize Contest a few years ago. His address is P. O. Box 1401, Dallas, Texas.

HAPPY MOTHER ENTHUSIASTIC ABOUT KONJOLA

Relates How New And Different Medicine Did Wonders For Her Little Boy of Twelve.

HARMON GLAZE

Results are what count, and Konjola can be counted on for results. Sufferers want relief, not promises. Konjola has made a matchless record simply because it does the things it is designed to do. Take, as a typical example of Konjola at work, the case of Harmon Glaze, 12, whose mother, Mrs. Annie Glaze, Route 4, Lonoke near Little Rock, Ark., says:

"My boy, Marmon, 12, had typhoid about five years ago, and his health since then was not good. He frequently had fever and had attacks of nausea. He had no desire to play and his appetite was poor. Nothing I gave him seemed to do any good. Konjola had helped me so much that I decided to give it to Harmon. Today, he is like a different person. He eats, sleeps, and plays like other children and is no longer subject to fevers. I am still giving Konjola for it has done so much for both of us."

So it goes: victory after victory wherever Konjola is given the chance to prove its merits. You can put your faith in Konjola feeling that you will be rewarded abundantly.

Konjola is sold in Floydada, Texas, at Floydada drug store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.

TO THE VOTERS OF FLOYD COUNTY

Most of my time is spent holding court, and the duties of a district judge are such that I have not been able to call on all the people of the district to ask for their votes. I have held the office as judge by appointment only half a term and hope that the people will feel that it is right to elect me this time. If elected I will do all that a judge can do to speed up the administration of justice. I cannot perform the duties of my office and at the same time see all of the ten thousand voters of this district, but I want you all to know that your vote and influence will be appreciated.

Yours truly,

By the "hot pack" in home canning is meant a method of filling the jars or cans, not a method of canning. If the food is put into the jars boiling hot it reaches the temperature for processing more quickly in the canner and heat penetrates better to the center of the jar. The hot pack insures a product of better texture and appearance and shortens the time of canning.

H. W. Dumas left this week for Big Spring, Texas, where he will be located for several weeks while making an installation of weather strips for a large building under construction there.

THE VALUE OF SOUND DESIGN

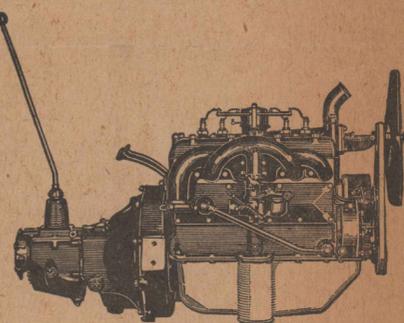

New Ford engine gives outstanding acceleration, speed and power without sacrificing reliability or economy

THE good performance of the Ford car, so apparent on every highway, is due largely to the sound mechanical design of the engine.

It has outstanding acceleration, speed and power, yet that is only part of its value to you. Greater still is the fact that it brings you all these features without sacrificing either reliability or economy.

That is the reason the Ford car has given such satisfactory service to millions of motorists all over the world and has been chosen by so many large companies that keep accurate cost figures. In every detail of construction it has been carefully planned and made for the work it has to do.

The design of the compression chamber is an important factor in the efficiency of the Ford engine. It is built to allow free passage of gases through the valves and to thoroughly mix the fuel by producing turbulence within the cylinders during compression. The spark thus flashes quickly through the whole fuel charge, resulting in quieter and more effective engine performance. Other factors are the direct gravity gasoline feed, the specially designed carburetor, the new hot-spot manifold, aluminum pistons, chrome silicon alloy valves of larger diameter, statically and dynamically balanced crankshaft and flywheel, the simplicity of the electrical, cooling, lubrication, and fuel systems and accuracy in manufacturing.

"I'll guarantee you tire performance" that no other tire can equal... and you'll admit it"

J. M. Gullion

SIX YEARS AGO THE FIRST BALLOON tires came out. They were easier-riding than hard, high pressure tires—but they delivered insufficient mileage. To insure mileage, the makers then added more material, more bulk, thus lessening the cushioning.

In the new-type Federal, Federal engineers have changed all this. They have eliminated excess weight—increased the air cushion by 12%—a real achievement. They have made side walls longer and more flexible yet much stronger. Added a new full contact Rim-Wide Tread which gives faster pick-up, less gas consumption, easier steering, faster stopping—all because there is no needless tire weight dragging on the engine. And the new Federal De Luxe, for example, gives thousands of miles more of this kind of service.

Now that's a lot to claim for a tire, and I know it. If it seems like a dream, just read this—

"Money-Back" Guaranty

"If after 30 days' use you are not fully convinced that these new-type Federal Tires give you more luxurious, air-cushioned, riding comfort, better acceleration, easier steering, firmer braking, and the assurance of maximum mileage, return them and your money will be refunded."

Auditorium Is Re-Seated

With the completion of the facilities of the three schools, and a few changes in seating and other changes that will be necessary in the buildings, everything will be in readiness for the school opening on September 8, Superintendent Patty stated this week.

Probably the most important change in the building arrangements in the school system, has been in the high school, where the auditorium has been re-seated with opera chairs and plans made to use this space for chapel and other meeting purposes. The auditorium was converted into a study hall two years ago, but a new plan of work has been worked out that will not make it necessary to use the auditorium again this year. Mr. Patty stated. The installation of 248 new steel lockers in addition to those already installed in the building, will give the students ample room to keep their books, it was stated.

The re-arrangement of the auditorium, and the careful arrangement of seats will also provide a make-shift gymnasium for the newly created Physical Education Department, it was pointed out.

In making special announcements concerning the school work, Superintendent Patty stated that since this year school children who are six years of age are being admitted to the schools free of all costs, there will probably be no arrangements made for under-age tuition students.

Palace To Have Lower Prices All Next Week

10c and 25c Price is Experiment To Find Most Popular Admission Price.

Admission prices to the Palace Theatre for the coming week have been reduced from 15c and 35c to 10c and 25c, as an experiment to determine the most popular priced theatre entertainment in Floyd County, it was announced today by J. G. Deakins, manager of the Floydada Theatres. The present reduction in price will be effective next week, only, Mr. Deakins stated, but if the reduced prices prove popular, it is planned to continue these lower prices.

Although the prices have been reduced, there has been no let up in the high type of pictures booked by the Palace Theatre, he said. Some of the most popular pictures released in this section at the present time, have been booked for the Palace next week.

Included in the week's program is the comedy picture, entitled "Hot For Paris" which has proven to be louder and funnier than the "Cock-eyed World." "Hot For Paris" features Victor McLaglen and Fifi Dorsay, and will be shown at the Palace on Sunday matinee, Monday and Tuesday.

On Wednesday and Thursday, John Gilbert is booked to appear at the Palace in "Redemption" and on Friday and Saturday, the Palace will present "Romance of Rio Grande," featuring Warner Baxter. Talking comedies and Fox News events are also scheduled for each night.

By Mrs. W. D. Newell

July Named For Julius Caesar
July, named after Julius Caesar who was born in this month, is now the seventh month of the year. The earliest Roman Calendar made it the fifth month and gave it the name of Quintilis, which means fifth. When the calendar of Julius Caesar went into effect the month was re-christened for him. Previous to Caesar's time it had only thirty days, but he added an extra day to give it the same length as the longest months. The July flower is the Water Lilly and the Gem for the month is the Ruby.

Dog Days

The intense heat of July led to a superstition among the Romans: They conceived that this heat and the diseases and other calamities flowing from it, were some, how connected with the Star Canicula—"The Little Dog," in coincidence with the sun. They accordingly conferred the name of "Dog Day" upon the period between July 3rd and August 11th. The utter baselessness of the Roman superstition has been shown by the ordinary procession of nature, for Canicula does not now rise in coincidence with the sun till the latter part of August, while of course, the days between July 3rd and August 11th are what they have ever been. Yet, "Dog Days" continues to be a popular phrase. In England, and in some parts of our own country town authorities order dogs muzzled about the beginning of July.

VETS PENSION WARRANTS MAILED UNDER NEW LAW

Austin, Texas, July 1 (UP).—Confederate pension warrants for a month were sent out today to approximately 11,000 pensioners, who, heretofore, have been receiving their pensions quarterly.

The change is made in accordance with the law which became effective on June 19.

Operating under this new law, the pensioners will have to send an affidavit monthly to State Comptroller George J. Sheppard. They must be received by the 15th of each month in order to assure payment of the pension promptly on the following first.

One of the changes made by the new law is elimination of the former provision that required an affidavit of lack of property or income above a specified amount. All share now. The marriage date entitling widows to pensions has also been advanced.

Veterans who have living wives whom they married before July 31, 1900, will now get $50 a month. Single veterans will get $25 a month. Widows of veterans who are over 56 years and who were married prior to 1912 will get $25 a month.

Veterans and widows living in the state homes provided for them will receive half the amount others receive in their class.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Lowe, June 21, a daughter, named Laura Nell.

Sales Facts!

Every day the buying public is watching, and making their automobile purchase a real dollar value.

Check the sales from 1928, when the Model A Ford was released to the public, to June 10th, 1930. Those who tooted their horns from 1926 to 1928 can't toot so loud now—And why?

Official figures taken from registrations in the leading counties of the State of Texas for the month of May, 1930, are unusually significant and interesting—study them. Ford leads them all and exceeds FIVE COMPETITIVE MAKES COMBINED!

Ford	4,943
1st Competitor,	3,444
2nd Competitor,	351
3rd Competitor,	284
4th Competitor,	246
5th Competitor,	204
FORD,	4,943
5 Other Makes,	4,529

Is it any wonder, then, why Floyd County people are also becoming Ford sold? Not when such a value in automobiles is offered them. If you are ready for a new car by all means see us.

The biggest loss for the average individual is his automobile depreciation and upkeep. You can make savings that will pay for homes, buy other things you want, and have cash in the bank; also another good asset, a good credit.

WOULD IT PAY?

Everybody busy about the election means that less attention is being paid to other affairs, including matters of economics and having something to live on this winter.

Possibly a minute spent in the study of the situation as regards the scarcity of hogs in this immediate vicinity might be worth while.

CALVES FOR FATTENING

Cheap cattle now ought to make the risk of a fattening proposition for a few head of calves less dangerous than when cattle are high.

Sometimes, we think, plains people have to do things on too big a scale or not do them at all, and some might object to the idea of feeding out less than a carload of calves.

LOCAL CITIZENSHIP AND PATRIOTISM

During the last great national political campaign the American public was stirred by campaign speeches touching upon the subject of citizenship and patriotism.

An examination of the records of local elections held during the past few years in Floydada discloses the fact that a great many of our citizens have not exercised their right to vote on matters of importance to this community.

Every citizen of Floydada has a voice in whatever affects the general good. Each man's opinion carries weight if he will but take the trouble to express it.

Like charity, good government begins at home. If each town would intelligently consider its local problems and solve them by popular vote the nation as a whole would advance in mighty strides.

Let us practice the higher principles of patriotism and citizenship through an awakened interest in local affairs. There is really no good reason why Floydada should not enjoy the enviable reputation of having over 95 per cent of our eligible voters registered and placing their ballots in the ballot boxes at all local elections.

With Old Battleaxe (Himself)

When you see a fellow walking around the square like he was in a dream, and acting kinda funny, and saying odd things, part of the time grinning and the rest of the time about to bust right out into tears;

Our thermometer went cock-eyed last week and registered 112 degrees in the shade. All of our folk liked to have died from the heat until we got the darn thing fixed.

John McCleskey, the man who straightens out all the Tin Lizzy's after we get through wrecking 'em, passes along a catchy problem this week.

Tomorrow is the Fourth of July. Most everybody, including myself, have got the idea that they have got to "go somewhere" on the Fourth, and just the other day, when I jumped into an empty concrete swimming pool, I compiled some figures on "Fourth of July Travels in Floyd County."

If all of the gasoline that will be consumed by Floyd County cars tomorrow, was paint, and this paint applied to the court house, there would be enough left to paint all of the street-awnings round the square, paint the Post Office, varnish the floors of the Andrews Ward Gymnasium, and enough to supply these dog gone wimmin with face rouge for at least six months.

Ain't it funny that on the Fourth of July, a fellow will get out in his car, drive a hundred miles or so, go to a picnic or celebration, stand around in the hot sun on a carnival

By all my joints, sharp pains through my back and always dosing myself for constipation made life miserable. Sargon drove every rheumatic pain out of my body, rid me of my other ailments and I'm a strong well man! It's easy to understand now why so many people praise "Sargon."

Heavy Rain With Wind And Hail Near Muncy

Disturbance Thursday Night of Last Week Also Aids Other Parts Of County.

Heavy rain, accompanied by wind and hail that did some damage, was recorded in the vicinity of Muncy Thursday afternoon and night of last week, the rain on half a dozen or more farms being so heavy as to fill lakes and start them running into other lakes adjacent. A large part of the county had an inch or more of rain during the period and practically all sections had a half inch shower that was helpful to cotton and row crops.

Damage done by wind and hail was confined to a small area in the vicinity of Muncy. Farms of T. C. Russell, Jno. W. McDonald, Mrs. L. G. Pool and others in that vicinity were affected. Two or three cotton crops were hauled out and feed badly stripped. Wind damage included a combine shed blown down at Edd Muncy's place, crippled windmills, at several places, and a porch blown askew at the Russell place.

Reports from over the county indicate good rains in the section of country eastward, north and south, from Muncy including much of Center, Roseland, Fairview and Dougherty, three fourth of an inch at Lockney, a half inch at Floydada, a half inch at Harmony, a cotton shower at McCoy, and a good rain in part of the Pleasant Hill section. Showers fell at Sterley and South Plains.

Another Innovation

Household scientists have now produced a dry cleaning machine of about one gallon capacity which may be operated safely in cleaning party frocks, slippers, neckties and other articles.—Woman's Home Companion.

Many dairymen believe that cows should always be milked regularly but tests at the U. S. Bureau of Dairy Industry Experiment Farm at Beltsville, Md., show that average to good cows can be milked at irregular hours without any material effect on milk production. Apparently cows are more sensitive to change in feeding routine than to variation in the hours of milking.

Mrs. W. B. Henry left Friday of last week with a party of friends to spend two weeks on a summer outing at the Staley Ranch near Shoemaker, N. M.

OWEN D. YOUNG TELLS HOW DAWES PLAN GOT ITS NAME

The famous Dawes plan, under which the finances of Germany were rehabilitated and reparations payments to the allies were made possible, was not named in honor of General Dawes. It received his name because of Dawes' policy of steadfastly refusing to dodge responsibility, according to Owen D. Young, who was one of the most influential figures in drafting the plan, who discloses today in The American Magazine, in describing the session in which Dawes agreed to assume the burden of the enormous transaction.

"When the first reparations conference met in Paris in 1924," says Young, "newspaper correspondents, for the want of a better name, be-

MAKE BUILDINGS RAT-PROOF

The cheapest form of "rat insurance" is rat-proof buildings, says the Biological Survey of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Most buildings that are not already rat-proof can be made so at small cost.

The first step in rat-proofing a building with brick, stone or concrete foundations is to search thoroughly for all places where rats might enter, especially small openings around pipes and small cracks. Such openings should be closed with metal sheeting or with concrete. Basement windows and other large openings may be covered with strong, durable screening, such as standard 8-mesh galvanized hardware cloth. Ventilators and sewer openings should be covered with gratings. Doors likely to be left open at night should be equipped with self-closing devices. Farm buildings without rat-proof foundation walls may be raised 18 inches or more from the ground and kept open on all sides. Clear trash from underneath. Corncribs, granaries, and other storage places for food may be equipped with metal rat guards at the tops of the supporting posts, or may be entirely inclosed with wire mesh.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Schrader and daughter, Betty Jeanne, of Kansas City, who have been here visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Guimarin, left Tuesday for Olney, where they will visit Mrs. Schrader's brother, T. S. Guimarin, and family. They were accompanied by their niece, Miss Jessie Mae Wood, who will also visit Mr. and Mrs. Guimarin. From there Mr. Schrader will go to his home but Mrs. Schrader and daughter will return here for a longer visit.

Inspect the new Shaw-Walker Skyscraper Desk

There have been steel desks before, you say? But none with the features of this new Skyscraper Desk! It's an entirely new conception. The sturdy "Skyscraper" construction accounts for its noiselessness and for the smooth, silent action of the drawers. No need to touch cold metal in your work—drawer pulls are of Bakelite and the comfortable rolled-edge top is made of fine-textured, leather-like linoleum.

In appearance the new desk is the equal of the more expensive wood desks, even to the artistic beading of its quarter-round legs. In economy and durability it offers the advantages of steel construction. Before you make any change in office equipment see this new desk! In three finishes—mahogany or walnut with green top, or green with a warm brown top.

Just The Thing For That Summer Trip Is A Silk Ensemble Of Printed Frock

BY HARRIET

The clothes you take with you on a trip are almost as important as the ticket that takes you. The first choice for travel frocks should be a costume of some kind that will go through several days of travel or several countries for that matter and emerge looking trim and pretty. Silk costumes are hot weather choices. And you must consider several things about them. Shall they be printed or shall they be monotonous with light touches. The silk ensemble of printed frock and light weight coat of a plain color that goes with the frock is one of the most satisfactory of all costumes. You can wear the ensemble intact and feel like a queen. You can purchase a second frock with color of the coat a couple of shades lighter but of a plain tone, and you have a second outfit. You can even have a skirt of the coat's silk and several sleeveless chiffon blouses to lighten it up. Thus you are ready for even a dressy occasion.

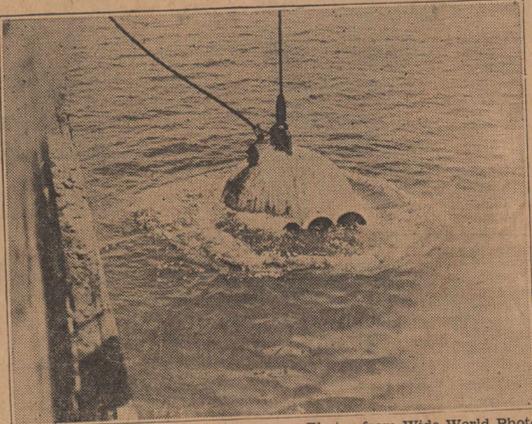

An excellent costume for travel is the ensemble, left, with a dress made of printed foulard. The light weight coat is trimmed with beige fox. Also recommended for train wear is the black flat crepe, right, with removable cape.

Such a perfect traveling outfit is a Lelong ensemble which uses his favorite vanilla colors. The dress is made of printed foulard, a sprinkled white floral design and stripes against the vanilla background. It is a practical frock, with a split bolero waist, a skirt with side over-skirts and a scarf collar that is neatly tailored. It is extremely satisfactory because there is no white to wash. The coat is of vanilla colored flat crepe, trimmed with dyed fox to match and the hat is a little packaway straw turban in the coat's color. A second practical choice for hot weather travel, especially good for train wear, is a black flat crepe, with removable cape. There are white touches on it, to be sure, but they snap on and unsnap off and with several pairs of long, you are fixed. The little white pique collar is attached to the cape so it need not have quite the same wear and tear as if it were on the frock. The frock has a finished practical neck of the black, with a little flat bow for a decorative touch. The cuffs snap around the wrists, above a little turned back cuff of the black silk, which keeps them from getting soiled quickly. All of the edges of this flat crepe frock, from Drecoll Beer's collection, are finished in the fine saw-tooth edging so popular in France this year. It is a little touch that gives a sheer lacy look to black. And it is quite a bit prettier than a plain finished hard edge. A third choice for travel might be one of the new wool crepes in the transparent voile quality. This wool is cool. A plain navy blue frock with a bit of colorful embroidery and a short jacket of the same, would be practical, neat and chic.

BARROWS ARE MOST PROFITABLE

Hog feeders will get better gains from feeding barrows than from feeding sows says the U. S. Department of Agriculture in announcing conclusions from study of the influence of sex of swine on feed-lot returns. Over a period of 8 years the Bureau of Animal Industry analyzed the feed-lot records of 5,653 hogs (3,018 and 2,635 sows). The barrows outgained the sows by 5.43 per cent. The test included hogs fed in practically all parts of the country, under various climatic conditions and during nearly every month of the year. Specialists studied most systems of management, including dry-lot feeding, and pasture supplemented by limited rations. In some of the tests a limited ration of barley was fed, followed by a full feeding of corn; in others this ration was reversed. Alfalfa, mixed clovers, and temporary pastures such as rye, oats, wheat, cowpeas, and soybeans were used to carry the hogs. Some of the hogs were full fed from weaning to a weight of about 200 pounds; others were started on full feed at weights as high as 150 pounds, and carried along to 500 pounds or more. Practically all known hog feeds, including peanuts and soybeans, were fed. The resulting carcasses graded in firmness all the way from oily to hard.

WITH THE BEEBE DEEP SEA EXPEDITION
Bermuda.—A new deep-sea diving record was claimed for William Beebe of the New York Zoological Society's oceanographic expedition, when he descended 1,426 feet into the sea with Otis Barton, his aide. The descent below the sea's surface was made in a steel ball with fused quartz windows. While down he phoned his observations to a tug which waited above. The hollow steel ball in which he made his record breaking descent contained an air. The ball was lowered by cable from a tug, and telephone conversation between the diver and the surface was successfully carried on. Fish were readily observed. The expedition hopes to make observations at a depth of half a mile with the aid of its apparatus. The only discomfort felt by the divers was the reduced pressure when, after one and a half hours time after they had left the deck, the sphere was opened and the pressure relaxed. It had increased, due to the oxygen released from the tanks, only the carbon dioxide having been absorbed by the sodium. Otherwise both were perfectly all right. Photo shows the diving sphere being submerged on a test dive.

FIND HUGE PLANT

Jefferson, Texas, June — (UP). A huge bull nettle root, more than six feet in length and four inches in diameter at the top end, is on display at the local chamber of commerce. The root, one of the largest of its kind ever seen here, was found in a nearby field, where it was washed out of the ground by the recent flood. The green foliage of the nettle was still on the root when it was found.

CHURCHES

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Dick O'Brien, Pastor
We are well pleased with the interest manifested by the continued good attendance upon all of our services. The report made to the church Sunday morning for the past quarter shows that we have had an average attendance in the Sunday school of well over 400 for the past three months. There have been 18 conversions and 14 baptisms from the school. Not once has the attendance been below 400 and one Sunday it went above 500. The human credit for this accomplishment goes to the faithful teachers and officers, together with the loyal members, who have stayed by the program in spite of every hindrance.

The B. Y. P. U. Federation has a record that in some ways surpasses that of the Sunday school. Although we do not have the exact figures in hand we feel sure the average attendance for the same quarter will run well nigh to the 200 mark. This department is standard with every unit functioning well. We appeal to those who are interested in the progress of the church work to be especially diligent during the next few weeks. In our service last Sunday morning there were four conversions and three additions by baptism. Fourteen were baptized in the afternoon at five o'clock in the temporary baptistry on the lawn of the church. The pastor preached at one Sunday night in an exchange of pulpits with pastor J. Mat Harder. A large congregation enjoyed the sermon by brother Harder.

We were happy to have a number of visitors from the Methodist church on Sunday morning, but sorry that this visit was occasioned by the illness of pastor George Palmer. The pastor expects to be in the pulpit next Sunday morning, but will begin a revival meeting at 8:15 on Sunday night. Suitable supply will be in the pulpit. Visitors welcome.

CAMPBELL BAPTIST CHURCH

Conference and preaching Saturday, July 5, at 11 o'clock. Sunday School Sunday morning at 10:15 and preaching at 11:15; preaching Sunday night at 8:15 o'clock. G. W. Tubbs, pastor.

REVIVAL AT TABERNACLE

The Church of the Nazarene starts the summer revival meeting at the City Tabernacle Thursday night, July 3, and runs through July 13. This revival is for the whole community and we are looking for an out-pour of the Holy Ghost for 10 days that will bless this town and country.

The Rev. Geo. A. Nicholson of Hamilton, Texas, is an old-time pioneer preacher and he is going to do the preaching. The local pastors of the Nazarene Church will have charge of the singing. Friend, we want you to come for you will miss a real treat if you stay away. Come, and come praying and believing God for victory and for some food that we will have a real feast of good things from the Lord. We are looking for several here from other counties and communities and we are expecting to see people brought to the Lord. We believe that the Lord is going to be manifest among us. Now you come and be with us at the City Tabernacle July 3 to 13 on Tennessee Street between Fourth and Fifth Streets if you believe in God or not. You come for we are looking for you. O. T. Busby and wife.

Sunday School Lesson

A PIONEER OF FAITH

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 6. A Man Who Found Friendship With God. Gen. 12:1-3; 13:7-12; Heb. 11:8-10.

The general title of this lesson is "Abraham, a Pioneer of Faith." Abraham was a pioneer in more senses than one. Even apart from the matter of religious faith, he stands as the great prototype of those who have felt the urge to leave their old established home environment to go forth seeking new adventures and new opportunities in the building of new civilizations.

It is interesting to note how much of that pioneer urge and activity has been associated with religious aspiration and motive.

America was settled to a large extent by those who came seeking liberty of conscience and of worship; and the movement out from older communities has always had the inspiration of faith-inspired people seeking a larger field of freedom and expression. Many of these interesting pioneer movements have been associated with forms of religion that have been outside the range of regular movements of church life. The Mormon movement is a conspicuous example of the association of certain forms of religious belief with the pioneer spirit.

Getting Away from Idolatry
The distinction of Abraham religiously, however, was as a pioneer of faith. Whatever may have urged him to leave his home in Ur, seeking new opportunities in Palestine, it is religion that in our biblical record of Abraham's life is the dominant motive and interest.

Many believe that this movement was occasioned on Abraham's part by the sensing of a nobler and clearer conception of God than he found in the idolatrous environment of Ur. If the records suggest what was actually present in Abraham's mind rather than what was read in by a later writer, there was in him a sense of empire building, a consciousness that he was to be the head of a great people.

But one of the most noble things concerning Abraham is the foundation upon which this empire was to be built. He was not a military conqueror, a man of ruthless ambition. He appears, rather, in one of the most enlightening and beautiful passages of the whole Bible as a man whose peaceful spirit and ideals rebuke the plans and purposes of nations still unduly occupied with war and bloodshed.

The moral daring of the man matched his vision and his common sense, and when one thinks of the greed and selfishness of individuals and nations that have brought about all manner of conflict and tragedy and that have been at the very foundation of world tyrannies, one has profound respect and admiration for this man who, when his herdsmen were in strife with the herdsmen of Lot, his kinsman, said, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdsmen and thy herdsmen; for we be brethren."

Nor did Abraham merely express the ideals of peace. He put his ideals magnanimously into practice by allowing Lot the first choice of the country that they were to divide. In that recognition of brotherhood Abraham defined the true foundation of peace and good will.

Willson & Son Display Commercial Sizes Of G. E. Refrigerators

Willson & Son Lumber Company, local General Electric dealers, had on display last week several of the large commercial models of G. E. refrigerators. The display was carried on a three-ton truck with special body, owned and operated by the E. O. Cone Company, distributors, of El Paso.

J. E. Vaughan, of E. O. Cone & Company, and C. T. Sullenberger, in charge of the panhandle territory for the firm, accompanied the display.

The Commercial line consists of many different cabinets as well as water coolers, both bottle and pressure type, milk coolers, ice cream cabinets, ice makers and biological cabinets.

The same unit used on the Domestic line, is used on these large models.

According to R. A. Garrett, of the Willson and Sons Lumber Co., more General Electrics are going into homes today than ever. Mr. Garrett attributes this popularity to the record made by the General Electric, "of all the hundreds of thousands of users, not one has spent a single cent for service or repairs."

Miss Jean Ayres and Mrs. Robert McGuire spent the week end with Mrs. McGuire's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Mitchell, near Plainview.

Trip Of A Life Time, Dr. Houghton Declares

Dr. W. M. Houghton, head of the local Rotary Club, who returned Saturday night after an absence of a week spent in Chicago at the International Rotary Convention, declared upon his return that it was a trip of a life time.

A full four days of convention activities, together with magnificent entertainment features, made the time spent in the Windy City a very busy one, he said.

J. J. Day returned Monday from Hereford where he spent the past two weeks with Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Jones and family. Mrs. Jones is his daughter.

Los Angeles Priest Makes Hobby Of Opening Safes And Picking Locks

Meet the Reverend Anthony R. Drathman, Jesuit father and safecracker extraordinary!

Professional thugs and even the illustrious Jimmy Valentine of fiction are put to shame by this mild-mannered priest, who teaches mathematics at Loyola high school, Los Angeles.

His skilled fingers work miracles in opening "burglar proof" safes and locks. Although Father Drathman lays no claim to the ability to open any safe, the fact remains that he hasn't failed yet.

Baffles Detectives

At the request of the chiefs of police at Oakland and San Francisco, Father Drathman lectured their departments and completely baffled the detectives wise in the ways of lock picking.

This odd faculty for solving mechanical riddles is an engrossing hobby, says Father Drathman. Locks fascinated him while a boy and he began a study of them.

He took all sorts of locks to pieces, spent most of his spare time in searching for the most perfect models and after several years found that his knowledge of theoretical lock construction enabled him to open them all.

When ordinary locks held no further secrets, Father Drathman became intrigued by the more intricate combinations used on safes. His curiosity led him to ask, at every opportunity, merchants and business men to examine their safes.

"Cracks" One in Alaska

The first time Father Drathman opened a safe was under unusual circumstances. He was rector of a parish at Juneau, Alaska, from 1912 to 1914. Shortly after his arrival, the United States marshal's office force attempted to open a safe which had been locked 10 years. The safe had been removed with the office from Sitka to Juneau.

Six days they twiddled the dial, using a combination supposedly correct. Then Father Drathman asked to be given a chance. His knowledge figured out the position of the tumblers in 15 minutes.

"It was very embarrassing, however," the priest commented. "The ladies of my parish looked askance and wondered if they had an ex-burglar for a spiritual adviser!"

Burglars Sought His Secret

Professional burglars have approached Rev. Drathman in the guise of locksmiths and asked for a course of instruction. Police chiefs have learned secrets from him—and several boastful lock makers have been shown that their products are not thief proof.

"The burglars and safe crackers have shown the way to perfection in safe making," says Father Drathman, "and the box of today is almost beyond cracking. Of course explosives still work, but the manner of construction has made the 'souping' a long job—almost too long to be practical. Drilling to the combination box, which when knocked off, allows the safe to swing open, has been stopped by placing loose steel bars before the box. When a drill strikes the round bars, it breaks."

There is one kind of lock, says Father Drathman, that can't be opened. That's the time lock in use in banks.

Rev. Anthony R. Drathman . . . the ladies of his parish wondered.

er Drathman, "and the box of today is almost beyond cracking. Of course explosives still work, but the manner of construction has made the 'souping' a long job—almost too long to be practical. Drilling to the combination box, which when knocked off, allows the safe to swing open, has been stopped by placing loose steel bars before the box. When a drill strikes the round bars, it breaks."

Don't misunderstand. I, just as 100 per cent of the citizens of Floydada, welcome any and all legitimate enterprises to our town and community. And any business enterprise that comes into our midst and becomes one of us and works with us in the general upbuilding of the community, and respects the rights of our citizens, may feel assured that they will have our hearty support, and a liberal share of our patronage. That's the sentiment of the citizenship of Floydada and Floyd County. But listen, prospective business enterprise, please don't come to Floydada, unless you come in good faith, and want to become one of us, and respect our rights.

When Floydada expands its business section to such an extent that residence property is needed for further expansion, rest assured that we are ready and willing to sacrifice our homes and move out further. But, it certainly has not reached that point just at this time, especially to the extent that it is necessary to jump several blocks out into the present residential section from the present limits of the business section.

I hope the home-owners of Floydada will do all in their power to stop the intrusion upon our just rights as home owners by those who are seeking to commercialize everything sacred or otherwise that will bring them gain in dollars and cents.

W. EDD BROWN.

As Ohio Honored Wright

The state of Ohio officially paid tribute to Orville Wright of Dayton, O., inventor of the airplane, when Ohio State University bestowed upon him the honorary degree of doctor of science at its 1930 commencement exercises. Wright is shown here receiving the award from President George W. Rightmire of the university.

Letters From Readers

BUSINESS SHOULD RESPECT RIGHTS OF HOME OWNERS

To The Hesperian:

For the past few years the larger cities have had a rather serious menace to the residential sections by the invasion of gasoline filling stations. Not until recently have the oil companies come into the smaller towns and tried to invade the residential sections. Of course, there are two sides to every question that comes up. There are instances when a filling station in the residential section of a town is not a bad thing. However, each time there is an excuse for one to be located in a residential section of a small town, when there are scores of business lots available for the purpose, there are a dozen reasons why one should not be so located.

When a home owner builds his home out of the business section of the town in a well defined residential section, goes to the expense and years of work and trouble of growing trees, flowers, lawns, and beautifying his place generally, he certainly should not be molested by the filling station of some foreign corporation coming into the town that the home owner has helped to build up and develop into a good business center—a business center that the foreign corporation had not one iota of interest in, or concern for, until it presented a likely field for such foreign corporation to do business in, purely and solely for the dollars and cents they could get out of it.

I don't believe there is a citizen of Floydada, but that is opposed to the invasion of the residential section of Floydada by filling stations. There is no occasion for this invasion of the rights of the home-owners of Floydada. I don't believe a home-owned company, individual, or corporation, would think of asking for a permit to put a filling station on any corner in the well defined residential sections of Floydada. A home-owned concern would

IMPORTED PLANTS ADD TO WEALTH OF UNITED STATES

How countless millions of dollars have been added to the wealth of the United States through the introduction of seeds and plants from all parts of the world will be discussed at the Inter-American Conference on Agriculture, Forestry, and Animal Industry, to be held in Washington, September 8-20, 1930. The discussion will be led by Knowles A. Ryerson, of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Since the office of foreign plant introduction was created, in 1898, the department has brought to the United States more than 85,000 new plants, many of which have become extremely important. Because of the varied climatic and geographic conditions in the other countries of the two Americas, Mr. Ryerson believes that there is equal, if not greater opportunity for these countries to improve their agriculture through the introduction of new plants.

SOIL EROSION TAKES 40 INCHES IN 40 YEARS

Erosion continues to wash away the soil resources of the Nation. A recent survey of a typical small valley in North-eastern Kansas show that 86 per cent of the land, comprising the greater part of the valley, has lost from 8 to 40 inches of soil since it was cleared 40 years ago, the United States Department of Agriculture reports.

Thirty-four acres had lost an average of 11 inches of soil, 45 acres had lost 18 inches, 10 acres had lost 21 inches, 2 1/2 acres had lost 23 inches and 1-1/3 acres had lost 3 1/4 feet of soil. The "yardstick" for measuring the losses was found in a few remaining patches of timber, where the soil was as nature originally built it—a mellow, rich silt loam almost black with spongy humus, and capable of producing 75 bushels of corn an acre. Now the land is very much less productive. Much of it is overrun with weeds. In the meantime the washing proceeds.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Brooks and son of Fort Worth left Wednesday morning for their home in Fort Worth after spending a week here as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Cloud.

FOUR TICK STATES

Eleven of the original fifteen tick-infested States have now been released from quarantine on account of this pest, the United States Department of Agriculture reports. They are Alabama, California, Georgia, Kentucky, Missouri, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Mississippi. The four States still under quarantine restrictions are Florida, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas.

The Jivaran tribes, a group of Indians living at the eastern base of the Andes in Ecuador and the adjacent parts of Peru, practice the art of shrinking their victims' heads.

FOOD FROM CACTI

The giant Sahuaro and pipe cacti and the smaller cholla or pitahaya cactus of Arizona produces good crops of delicate fruits used for centuries by Indians for sirup, preserves, and dried food. They bear fruit even after three years of extreme drought. The United States Department of Agriculture is studying them as a possible article of commerce and a possible crop for utilization in the arid Southwest.

Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Rushing are in Mineral Wells where they have been resting and taking the baths for the past two weeks or more. They will be absent from home several days more, according to present plans.
