Iran Asks Plan Clarified; U.S. Drafting Reply

By The Associated Press
U.S. OFFICIALS went into a new round of talks at the Algerian Foreign Ministry early today in a fresh effort to conclude negotiations to end the 14-month hostage crisis by trading billions of dollars in frozen Iranian assets for 52 American captives.
U.S. Embassy officials in the Algerian capital of Algiers released no details of the talks between the U.S. team led by Deputy U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Algerian officials. A U.S. official said the group, which began meeting at 12:45 a.m. local time, may be working through the night.

Two Clarifications Asked On Assets

On Saturday, the chief Iranian hostage negotiator, Behzad Nabavi, told the official news agency Pars that two separate clarifications were requested during the day "on the terms and conditions of this transfer" of Iranian assets. The clarifications "would be a great help" in solving the crisis, he said, adding that Iran was "looking for-

Nabavi was quoted as saying that "upon the request of the Iranian government an Algerian aircraft was ready to take out the American hostages upon concluding the final agreement with the U.S. government." Location Not Stated

The report did not give the location of the Algerian plane but said it would not be the same one that brought six Algerian doctors Iran invited to Tehran early Saturday to examine the hostages.

Pars said the checkups were to "confirm the good health" of the hostages and prevent delays if the hostages were freed. It was not known when the doctors See U.S. DRAFTING Page 13

Soviets Allege U.S. Attack Plan

Moscow Charges Plot To Raid Iran For Hostages

MOSCOW (AP) - Radio Moscow on Saturday joined a chorus of Soviet media airing Soviet charges that the United States is poised for a military attack on Iran to free the 52 American hostages

The radio repeated the Soviet charge hours after U.S. Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie denounced it in a faceto-face meeting with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin in Washington.

Echoing a claim in Saturday's edition of the authoritative Communist Party daily Pravda, the radio said the United States "had quite a few opportunities for solving the problem of the hostages but Washington refused to use them and preferred to lean on force."

Pravda's observer, the radio said, concluded that "the period of accumulation of (U.S.) forces was over and it was high time to set them in motion."

Neither Prayda nor the radio men tioned any possible breakthrough in negotiations in Algeria to swap the hostages for billions of dollars of Tehran's assets frozen in U.S. banks.

A statement released in Washington said Muskie had demanded "an immediate end to the scurrilous propaganda" in the meeting with Dobrynin.

Muskie, who was making the second U.S. protest to the Soviets in as many days, said the Soviet charges could further erode relations between the super-delicate and complex negotiations over the 52 Americans, delivered a stiff protest on the same subject to the Soviet Embassy in Washington on Friday.

Soviet television in the main Saturday evening news program made no mention of the U.S.-Iranian negotiations. But the Saturday evening edition of the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia claimed the U.S. was planning to attack Iran.

Izvestia said the "main purpose" of former U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's recent trip to the Mideast was to "prepare the allies of the United States in the Arab region for the possibility of a new American armed attack on Iran in the nearest future."

On Friday evening Soviet television broadcast a commentary claiming that a U.S. attack on Iran appeared imminent. The official news agency Tass also car-ried reports Friday from foreign sources alleging American plans to invade.

On Saturday, Pravda, the authoritative Soviet daily, printed a Tass report from New Delhi quoting the Indian press agency PAI as saying Washington is preparing "armed aggression" against Iran.

A Beirut newspaper, Ash-Shaab, was also quoted by Pravda as saying that the planned U.S. attacks on Iran would be launched from Egypt and Israel. The Pravda commentary, signed by Pavel Demchenko, said the United States was preparing an armed attack on Iran under cover of its "dishonorable game"

Dallas Voters Reject Proposal For Slash In Property Taxes

DALLAS (AP) - The leader of a Dallas citizens group battling a property tax referendum that, he said, would force cuts in vital city services called the proposition's apparent defeat "a vote of confidence in the city of Dallas."

With 145 of the city's 230 precincts counted, voters were overwhelmingly rejecting the TEA Party referendum, which resembled California's Proposi-

High Court's Ruling May Affect Lubbock

By SYLVIA TEAGUE

LUBBOCK city officials won their suit in state district court against signers of tax limitation petitions, but a case recently decided by the Texas Supreme Court may affect the suit's ultimate out-

Like the city of Lubbock, officials in the South Texas city of Victoria went to the courthouse when they received petitions calling for a tax limitation election. Like city of Lubbock attorneys, Victoria attorneys claimed the proposed charter amendments violated state law and were not subject to the initiative and referendum process because the legislature had "pre-empted the field." But unlike Lubbock's case, the litigation in Victoria ended up before the Texas Supreme Court last month and the city was ordered to hold the election.

Voters in Victoria went to the polls Saturday and approved, by a margin of 3,018 for to 1,871 against, a tax limitation permitting city officials to increase taxes by only 5 percent without voter approval.

Lubbock city officials were victorious in state district court in June 1980, when Judge William Shaver ruled the election requested by members of the Lubbock Property Owners Association did not have to be called because proposed charter amendments violated state law.

The case now is on appeal to the Seventh Court of Civil Appeals in Amarillo. Because the case is pending, City Attorney John Ross was reluctant to speculate about the effect of the Victoria decision on Lubbock's litigation. "We intend to go ahead and process our appeal," Ross said. "But of course, it is the Supreme Court."

LPOA attorney Warren Goss could not be reached for comment.

But Rick Bilbie, Victoria assistant city attorney, did discuss possible ramifications of the case.

"It appears, as far as a home rule city, once a petition is approved (signatures are certified), nothing can stop it from going on the ballot," he said.
"I kind of wonder about that," Bilbie said. "It seems to indicate you or any citizens in the community could submit petitions asking that almost anything be done. Once the petitions are certified by the city secretary, then it becomes the council's ministerial duty to put it on the

Tech's Search For Law School Dean Now Narrowed To Two Candidates

Avalanche-Journal Staff

TEXAS TECH'S next law school dean is expected to be one of two men with Texas ties, Dale Furnish or Fletcher Baldwin

Both will visit the campus next month for their second interview and officials hope to select one of the duo by the end of

Furnish, law professor at Arizona State University College of Law, lived in Tyler at one time. Baldwin, law professor at the University of Florida, attended Texas Christian University in 1957-58 and taught at Baylor University School of Law in the summers of 1969 and 1978.

Because both hold academic positions and would be expected to finish the spring semester at their respective schools. Tech officials would not expect either to begin until summer.

Tech's search for a law school dean began last March when Frank Elliott announced his resignation, effective June 1, 1980 to become president of Southwestern Legal Foundation in Dal-

Since then, Tech has received applications from and nominations of 200 persons for the job, although only 16 consented to become "active candidates.

The search committee, headed by law professor Daniel Benson, recommended four finalists to Tech President Lauro Cavazos in November. All four were interviewed on campus in November and December.

Now, Furnish and Baldwin will return for "serious negotiations," Benson said. "Not that many people are anxious to be law school deans,"

Benson said of why the search has taken 10 months. Salary is one reason. Although the new dean's salary will be negotiable, Tech's 1980-81 budget listed the salary at $50,000.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Deartment announced details Saturday of the aid it is providing again to El Salvador to help that Central American nation combat a major offensive by "Marxist guerrillas

The $5 million in aid and the loan of five U.S. helicopters also includes "urgently needed" arms and ammunition to confront "left-wing terrorism supported covertly ... by Cuba and other Communist nations," the department said.

The United States cut off military aid to El Salvador last month after three Roman Catholic nuns and a woman Catholic worker, all Americans, were killed in the nation which has been wracked by internal violence:

Right-wing forces were believed reponsible for the murders and the Carter dministration insisted that an adequate government investigation be made as a condition of resuming aid.

The administration decided earlier in the week to resume the aid, and Saturday's announcement gave details of the kind of aid and the reasons for it.

The announcement noted that Marxist guerrillas launched a major offensive Jan. 10, and it said many of the arms used by the guerrillas were apparently

Police said three men, suspected members of the outlawed Protestant Red Hand Commando, are being interro-gated about the McAliskey shooting and the assassination of four other nationalist political figures since last June. Like Mrs. McAliskey, the other vic-

The three suspects were captured by British paratroopers patrolling near the McAliskey home who heard the gunfire. Military sources said the troopers seized three handguns.

The Red Hand Commando was formed in 1972 to fight the IRA. Out-lawed in 1973, it has links with the two main Protestant paramilitary groups, the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Ulster Defense Association.

Mrs. McAliskey first came to the forefront of Northern Ireland's violent politics in 1968 when, as a student radical at Belfast's Queen's University, she led a Catholic civil rights campaign.

She has been closely identified with the drive for Irish unity, but is above all a socialist. She fought police in the Londonderry section of Belfast in 1969 in rioting that brought the British army into the streets to restore order.

She served a four-month prison term for rioting, but was elected to the British Parliament in 1970 when she was 21, the youngest member for 200 years. She lost her seat in 1974, but later helped found the Irish Republican Socialist Party, a breakaway faction from the violence except in "extreme circumst-ances." She split with the IRSP after it became more involved in Northern Ireland's bloody conflict.

have requested the court either prohibit the ad valorem taxation of bank stock or reduce the 1979 and 1980 property values set by the tax office. The combined twoyear total bank stock valuation ssessed by the tax office is almost $84 million.

Included in the bankers' petition for reduced property valuations is their request that federal securities not be inuded when the bank stock is being eval-

Carr argued unsuccessfully last year before the Tax Board of Equalization that there is a federal law prohibiting the inclusion of federal obligations in the determination of property values. The banks' federal obligations for 1980 alone totaled about $151.4 million

Even if the court here ordered that bank stock should be taxed but exempted federal holdings, the financial institu-tions still would owe almost no money, according to Carr's calculations

The tax office determines the value of bank stock by subtracting liabilities from the capital value. The assets remaining are taxed.

Carr has argued that when federal ob-ligations are deleted from the capital value, the remaining assets when compared with liabilities would be zero for all but three banks.

But Brewster took issue with Carr's computation, contending that federal securities already are removed in the current method of valuation. He said there probably will be "a lot of arguments" in court concerning tax calculation meth-

Galey said that when, and if, in March the case will be tried should be determined by the end of this week.

Road Foreman Rehiring Leads To Controversy

Avalanche-Journal Staff Controversy over the county's recent rehiring of a precinct road foreman who pleaded guilty to official misconduct charges in December may reach the commissioners court later this month.

Commissioner Coy Biggs and Boyd Roberts said they have received numerous phone calls and letters both for and against the hiring of Thurston Dowgar as a maintenance worker at the county

However, the two commissioners appear to be on opposite sides of the hiring issue, which has flared into a behind-thescenes controversy in the past week.

Official misconduct charges were filed against Dowgar Nov. 7 in connection with his use of county-owned vehicles for personal business. Dowgar pleaded guilty to the misdemeanor charges and was placed on probation for a year and ordered to repay the county for gaso-line used during the personal hauling

Because his case was handled via a legal process known as deferred adjudication, if Dowgar successfully completes his probation conditions, the charge will not be entered on a court record.

Biggs said that he authorized maintenance department head George Scott to hire Dowgar because the man is a good

Before putting Dowgar on the county's payroll, Biggs said the maintenance department checked with the district attorney's office to determine if there would be any legal problems prohibiting the man from working for the county. No problems were found, he added.

Biggs also said that most of the phone calls and comments he has received have been in support of Dowgar.

But Roberts said he would never have hired Dowgar and is opposed to his working for the county. Dowgar, a 28-year veteran with the county, formerly worked in the road precinct where Roberts took over as commissioner Jan. 1.

Roberts said he has received a number of complaints about Dowgar's continued employment with the county. But there also have been some calls in favor of Dowgar, he added.

Roberts and other members of the commissioners court received a letter supporting Dowgar in his new job during their meeting Monday. Written by a Lubbock woman, the letter urged commissioners to keep Dowgar on the job.

"It would seem a shame for the county to lose an employee with Mr. Dowg-ar's experience and expertise because a 'few concerned citizens' seem to want some vindication for some unknown reason," the letter stated.

Among those opposed to Dowgar's mployment by the county is Wildred Matheny of Woodrow, organizer of the Precinct 1 Road Grievance Committee.

"I don't think the county commissioners should put him back on the payroll," Matheny told The Avalanche-Journal. He charged that the county rehired Dowgar to save the longtime employee's retirement benefits.

"A whole bunch of people at Wood-row don't like it," Matheny said.

The Woodrow man attended Monday's commissioners meeting because he thought the issue of Dowgar's employment would be discussed. The issue was not brought up then, however, and Matheny said he was told by Roberts that the matter had been taken care of.

Matheny said he did not plan to let the matter drop. "I'm definitely going to ask to be put on the agenda for the next meeting," Matheny told The A-J.

If he cannot get on the agenda, Matheny said he would bring up the issue durthe meeting anyway. "That's my legal right," he said.

Biggs said that if Matheny wanted to appear before the commissioners court, that Matheny would have to request to be placed on the agenda. Biggs said he would not make that request for him.

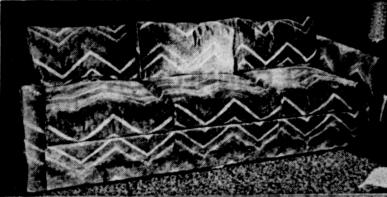

Dowgar has not presented any prob-lems in the maintenance department and has done a good job, Biggs said. If the man ever caused any problems, Biggs said he would be the first to know about

Boardings Tail Off At Airport

By LARRY SUTHERLAND Avalanche-Journal Staff
Following a trend that may have been true throughout the nation, airport boardings at Lubbock International Airport were down in 1980, the first decline in boardings here in the past five years. Statistics released by the airport show 455,925 boardings here last year, a 7.1

percent drop from last year's 490,451 pas-A spot survey of some other airports

in the general region shows the Midland-Odessa airport to be the only gainer in boardings in 1980, with passengers there increasing from 436,071 in 1979 to 474,324

Midland aviation director Wilson H. Banks said the increase stems primarilly because of the strong economy in the ermian Basin" and an increase business-related air travel. The increase in business travel, in turn, is related to a boom in the oil business of that rea, he added.

But other airports apparently did not share in a similar economic boom.

Lubbock airport director Marvin Coffee and other airport officials in Texas point to a slow down of the economy in 1980 and increases in air fares as likely reasons for a slump in air travel in 1980.

At Amarillo airport, there were 355, 25 boardings in 1980, compared to 380,-461 in 1979. At Abilene, 63,371 passengers boarded in 1980, compared to 67,228 in 1979. San Angelo airport officials report a drop last year of almost 6,000 passengers from their 88,706 boardings in 1979.

Even at Dallas-Fort Worth airport, in one of the prime growth areas of the nation, boardings were 10,809,001 in 1980, down from the 11,319,273 in 1979.

A spokesman for the Dallas-Fort Worth airport said the decrease in 1980 is not a very valid indicator because there was an exceptionally large number of boardings in 1979, steming from a United Airlines strike and grounding of DC-10s, both factors increasing boardings at Dalas-Fort Worth in 1979.

But airport spokesmen indicate 1980 air travel will be off nationally compared to 1979 even though exact nationwide figures are not yet available from the Civil Aeronautics Board.

At Lubbock airport, only Southwest and Air Midwest airlines showed increases in boardings in 1980 over the previous year. Southwest went from 261,845 in 1979 to 271,577 in 1980. Air Midwest went from 5.331 to 6.441 in 1980 However, Braniff was down 12.5 percent with 100,217 in 1980; Continental was down 42.8 percent with 38,160 in 1980; and Texas International was down 2.1 percent with 38,655 in 1980. Also affecting the decrease in boardings last year were the cessation of air service by Crown Aviation and Permian Airways. Both, however, accounted for only a small amount of 1979 boardings. Coffee said CAB deregulation of the airlines allowed Braniff and Continental to reduce air service at Lubbock, further accounting for a slump in passenger boardins in 1980.

Southwest, by contrast, grew in passenger boardings in 1980 and spokesman Ernie Reece said this may have stemmed from a lower fare structure than other airlines serving Lubbock.

But 1981 may hold a reversal of the 1980 trend, as American Airlines has received tentative approval from the CAB to add Lubbock to its routes.

Also, Continental Airlines spokesman Tom O'Donnell sees a possible increase in air service at Lubbock because of planned expansion of service from Lubbock to Denver, Austin and Houston this

Braniff also has reversed its cutback in service and realigned its fare structure to be more competitive with Southwest. And Trans World Airlines has taken the first step of the long air service route toward serving Lubbock. A CAB spokesman in Washington said TWA included Lubbock as one of 82 cities in its application to the federal agency to add to its

In addition to Lubbock, Midland-Odessa and Corpus Christi were among some of the other cities included in TWA's application. Currently, Amarillo is the only West Texas city to have TWA scheduled service.

A CAB spokeswoman said TWA listed an Albuquerque, N.M., to Lubbock route in its application

But the CAB spokeswoman said simply making an application for the service to the 82 cities does not mean the airline necessarily plans to serve them; that such applications are filed routinely

David Venz, spokesman for TWA, confirmed that there are no immediate plans for service to Lubbock. "We don't really anticipate starting service at Lubbock any time in the near future, if at all," he said. He said the 82 cities were filed for as a "technical matter" as a means of making it easier to acquire air service in the cities in the future as need-

People in the United States are enjoying longer, healthier lives than ever be-fore, yet studies show that 60 percent of the public foresee a health care crisis

Today, health care is a $250 billion a year industry. Can the federal government succeed where private enterprise seems to be failing?

This paradox and others will be thoroughly examined in "The Nation's Health," a Courses by Newspaper program being offered by The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal and the Division of Continuing Education at Texas Tech Univer-

A series of 15 newspaper articles by medical professionals, noted authors and educators forms the basis for this series, which will begin in The A-J on Jan. 25, not today as earlier announced.

For persons who want to go beyond the newspaper articles, Courses by Newspaper has compiled a text of essays, articles and documents from an array of authorities on medicine and health, and a study guide which discusses key concepts and provides factual review, essay and discussion questions. Both books are available from Boyd and Fraser Publishing Co., 3627 Sacramento St., San Fransisco, Calif., 94118.

'The Nation's Health" series is coordinated by Philip R. Lee, M.D., professor of social medicine and director of the health policy program at the University of California, San Fransisco, School of Medicine.

Woman Stabbed Fighting Rape Attempt

A 26-year-old medical student fought off a rape attempt in her home early Sat-urday, but suffered multiple stab wounds and collapsed lungs during the effort, according to police.

The woman was in serious condition late Saturday at Lubbock General Hospital's Intensive Care Unit, one lung still

The attack was called "particularly savage" by Lubbock police detectives.

The woman told police a slender man wearing a ski mask awakened her in her bed about 5:30 a.m. Saturday. The man, fully clothed, told her, "Don't scream," "You want to get stabbed," reports

Although the man placed a hand over her mouth, she began to scream and struggle, police said. He then stabbed her several times in the chest before fleeing the apartment, investigators said.

The woman, apparently unaware of the severity of her wounds, followed the man out of her apartment, police said. She told police she watched him run south along the west side of the apartment complex.

She finally stopped to catch her breath, and, "feeling something warm" on her blouse, realized blood was pouring from her wounds, according to reports. She returned to her home to telephone a girlfriend and police, reports

When investigating officers arrived they noticed numerous spots of blood leading west from the apartment door, police said. They said the woman's blouse was blood-soaked when she answered her door.

The woman was experiencing difficulty in breathing, police said, but still managed to tell the officers of the attack. She said during her struggle with the man, she pulled at his ski mask and noticed he might have curly hair. But she added it was too dark for her to get a better look and provide a less vague description of her attacker

Officers, who also noticed blood spots on the woman's bed and on the floor leading to the front door, believe the woman's assailant removed a window screen near the door of the second-floor apartment to gain entry to her north Lubbock home.

Although the woman said the man's weapon appeared to have a short blade, detectives said at least one of her wounds was more than six inches deep. Reports indicate she suffered a wound to her left breast, one under her right arm pit and Obesity is more widespread in the United STates than malnutrition from hunger. The Conference Board notes. Nearly 40 percent of the American people are overweight, according to recent estimates.

Hospital officials told police both of the woman's lungs had been punctured

Although she was able to speak with detectives Saturday afternoon, hospital

Police late Saturday had no leads on the identity of her attacker.

"The new wave of social unrest has brought a slower rhythm of work and economic losses," he said.

On Friday, transit workers belonging to Solidarity halted buses and trolleys for four hours here and an hour in Krakow, in southern Poland, to press demands for an immediate 40-hour work week with weekends off. Aircraft workers staged a one-hour strike in Mielec, 140 miles

Lack Of Enforcement Irks Airport Police

By LARRY SUTHERLAND

Avalanche-Journal Staff
Since 1973, the Federal Aviation Administration has required certification of airport security officers, giving them essentially the same powers of any peace

But several Lubbock International Airport police say that although the federal regulation technically is followed here, the 15-member force really is nothing more than a token security agency.

The main thing is, they call you a police officer and give you arrest powers, but there's just one problem — they yell at you when you do something," the offi-

"All of us (officers) have come to the conclusion that they don't want us to do our job. So enforcement is slack," anoth-

Marvin Coffee, director of aviation at Lubbock International, said police at the airport can enforce laws involving serious offenses. But he acknowledged that enforcement is not as strict as would be true with regular city police.

"We've had to get our people oriented more towards a public relations end and do enforcement as necessary." Coffee said. "We want to de-emphasize some of this normal police work you'd be looking

Lubbock International's police force shifted entirely to state certified officers, with arrest powers virtually the same as regular city police, seven years ago in compliance with the FAA requirement. Before that, Coffee said, the airport relied primarily on night watchmen to do routine security checks.

But all the airport police who agreed to speak with The Avalanche-Journal. and who asked they not be identified because of possible reprimands by their supervisors, contend their peace officer training received at the South Plains Association of Governments' Law Enforcement Academy is being wasted.

The airport police work for the city, but they are under the supervision of the airport administration. Coffee said the city police department was reluctant to assign its own policemen to the airport because of some differences in training required of the airport police. Also, the airport is outside the city limits although operated by the city, he noted.

The physical separation of the airport force from other city peace officers, many airport police complain, also is manifest monetarily. They point out that

FLOOD FATALITIES

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - Floods unleashed by nearly a month of heavy rains in the southern Philippines killed 65 people and left 21 missing, the Civil Defence Office said Saturday. Officials said most of the deaths were from drowning but a number were caused by diseases that broke out during the floods. The floods affected 237,900 people living in seven provinces of Mindanao island, 500 miles southeast of Manila, they said.

regular city police earn a starting salary of $1,102 a month, which increases to $1,-257 a month after a year. After five years, the non-supervisory salary jumps to $1,-513 a month for city police.

Airport officers receive a starting salary of $1,009 a month, increasing to $1,-437 a month after six years for non-supervisory officers.

Even more distressing to many airport officers than the disparity in pay is what they say is the administration attitude of "don't inconvenience the traveling public."

"They want you to forget what you've learned in police school...just kind of don't rock the boat with the customers out there," a disgruntled officer said.

That attitude, some airport officers say, is reflected most in the area of traffoffenses. One airport patrolman charged airport administrators of 'routinely" voiding parking and moving violation citations.

Coffee denied that parking tickets are routinely voided, saying no more than about five such tickets - involving borderline violations - are invalidated a month. He knew of no voiding of moving violation citations.

In defense of their argument that airport officials encourage the officers to ignore moving offenses, several officers cited a January 1980 incident in which an officer was reprimanded for pursuing a motorist who ran a stop sign.

The officer, who since has quit the police force, tried to stop a motorist for running a stop sign at North Quirt Avenue and FM 2641 on the southern edge of the airport. The motorist fled the officer and he pursued him beyond the airport boundaries and, with the aid of city police, stopped the motorist near U.S. 87 and Ash Avenue.

conduct under a section of the employees' handbook prohibiting "conduct subversive to the proper order, discipline and morale of the municipal service. also had a merit pay raise withheld for three months, officers say.

Disgruntled airport officers say their co-worker was only doing what regular city police would do in a similar situation chase a traffic violator in "hot pursuit" beyond the normal jurisdiction. "To me he was just doing his job," a sen-ior airport officer said of the reprimand-

Coffee said the officer should have been patroling closer to the terminal complex, not lying in wait for traffic violators at the fringe of the airport boundary. The disciplinary action, he said, focused on the chase itself, indicating such pursuit wasn't needed for running a stop

But some airport officers contend that their supervisors frown upon any peace officer activity outside the airport, even when airport police are asked for aid by other law enforcement agencies.

They say several airport policemen who reportedly assisted Lubbock County Sheriff's Deputies in a drowning investigation north of the airport at a private pond in October 1979 and were reprimanded for leaving the airport property. One of the airport officers said the airport police were asked by the sheriff's department to assist in locating the drowning victim. The sheriff's office records, however, do not reflect that airport officers were called for help. And the airport police's own report fails to specify that the airport officers were asked to assist outside airport jurisdic-

Coffee said the focus of his police must be on the airport itself. "If we go we reduce our effectiveness for what we assign the officer here for," Coffee said.

Airport policy requires at least two of-ficers at the terminal in the event passengers must be screened, he said, and that limits the ability of his officers to carry out some of the duties usually associated with police forces.

Complaints about unfair promotions are also a source of discontent with the airport police. "It seems like there's a double standard," one officer said, based on "just who they (administration) like

The senior officer said promotions are not based on written exams, which is a prime consideration in rising in the ranks of the regular city police force. Coffee confirmed that written promotions are not given, but denied favortism. "The primary consideration is whether we felt the man knew his job," he said. And Coffee said he can understand the airport officers not feeling the are full-fledged policemen. "I think this is something that's kind of hard for these people to accept. They're not really getting their teeth into police work," he said.

"Nevertheless, I don't think it's our job to be out there doing these routine things (usually associated with law enforcement)," Coffee said.

Many of the two dozen local Republicans flew to Washington with Texas Gov. Bill Clements aboard a chartered 747 jetliner which left from Dallas Saturday.

They and other Republicans from the 19th Congressional District are slated to pick up tickets to the inauguration Monday in the office of U.S. Rep. Kent Hance

Tech Enrollment Reaches 19,000; More Expected

Approximately 19,000 students had registered for the spring semester at Texas Tech University by the end of the twoday enrollment period Friday.

However, officials expect the final enrollment count to be higher by the end of late registration on Feb. 3.

Last spring's enrollment reached 21,-169 — a record figure for a spring semester. Officials note that enrollment normally peaks in the fall semesters.

Costliest Inaugural Pageantry To Usher Reagan Into Office

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan will take the oath as the 40th president of the United States at noon Tuesday in an hour-long ceremony capping the costlies inaugural pageantry in the nation's history.

Four days of festivities, beginning with a fireworks display at the Lincoln Memorial on Saturday and ending Tuesday night with nine inaugural balls, are expected to push the cost to about $8 million — nearly double the $4.6 million spent by Jimmy Carter.

It will be a more formal ceremony than Carters, with Reagan dressed in a morning con, striped trousers and gray tie instead of the business suit that Carter wore for his inauguration four years ago. The military band will play "Hail to the Chief," The musical fanfare that Cart-

The official kickoff of inaugural activities was a ceremony Saturday at the Lincoln Memorial with what was billed as the largest fireworks display in the city's history. The guest list included Reagan and Vice President-elect George Bush along with Medal of Honor winners, governors and members of Congress.

Today there is a service at the Nation-Presybyterian Church, a reception for incoming Cabinet secretaries, a governors' reception and three concerts at the Kennedy Center complete with two candlelight suppers.

High Court's Ruling May Affect Lubbock

Bilbie said he doesn't know if the same would be true if the city had never accepted the tax limitation petitions.

"As far a your case," Bilbie said "the Supreme Court has more or less ruled anything that's submitted must be put on

"But," Dibie said, "the court did not rule on the deeper issue: does the group have the right to initiate" tax limitation amendments and to get into this area which is administrative and not legislative in natura?

"I'm concerned the court didn't take notice of that and look at that issue," he said. "There's a very strong argument to be made the area is not open to initiative and referendum."

The court ruled "the declaratory judgment action (by the city of Victoria) was not appropriate" before an election is held, Bubie said. "We may have to amend or faile (the suit) to include the election results," he said.

LPOA attorney Goss argued that point in district court here, contending the proposed amendments cannot con-

Reagan Choice Wins Top PostIn GOP

WASHINGTON (AP) - Richard N. Richards, Ronald Reagan's choice for the job, was elected Saturday as Republican Party chairman and immediately cautioned the GOP that despite its 1980 election victories "we are still a minority Without opposition, the 48-year-old Wil-Ogden, Utah, attorney succeeded William E. Brook as Republican chairman.

Brock, the was credited with a massive party rebuilding effort over the past four years, was named recently by Presi-dent-elect Reagan to be special trade representative, a Cabinet-level job in the next administration.

The changeover in control of the party machiner took place three days before Reagan will be inaugurated as the nation's 40th president.

In accepting the job, Richards pledged to seek to broaden the party's appeal among minorities, particularly blacks and hispanics.

At a news conference, he said the best way to accomplish that would be to re-cruit black and Hispanic candidates and "if they was they'll build a constituen-

flict with state law until they are adopted

"The declaratory judgment act was prematurely filed," the Supreme Court opinion says. "The election process had been lawfully put in motion and the declaratory judgment action was improperly used as a vehicle to frustrate the process.

"The City Council's duty is clear, and its compliance with the law is ministerial in nature," the opinion continues. "The City Council's refusal to submit the proposed amendments to the vote of the people thwarts not only the legislature's mandate but the will of the public."

The LPOA presented petitions bearing more than 15,000 signatures to the council in July 1979 asking that an elec-tion be called on three charter amend-

If adopted, the amendments would have held the city's tax rate at the thenexisting rate of $1.12 per $100 valuation, fixed the assessment ratio at 60 percent of market value and required voter approval for any increase in the tax rate or sessment ratio.

Instead of calling an election, however, city officials sought a declaratory judgment in district court to determine whether an election legally could be held in light of certain provisions in state law and in the state constitution.

LPOA attorneys filed a countersuit. asking Judge Shaver to issue a writ of mandamus ordering the election on the tax issues.

gins with a private worship service at St. John's Episcopal Church at Lafayette Park across from the White House.

Then the incoming president goes to the White House to meet the outgoing president, and the two men ride together in a limousine to Capitol Hill for the transfer of power.

Oath At Noon The ceremony begins at 11:30 a.m. and the president-elect, by tradition, takes the oath of office at noon. Then the new president delivers his inaugural ad-dress — a speech described by a key aide as "lofty and short" and telling Ameri-cans not to expect a quick fix for the country's economic woes.

The swearing-in is followed by the inaugural parade, with Reagan and his wife riding in a limousine along the 2.3mile stretch of Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House. There he will watch from a wooden reviewing stand as 21 high school and college bands - totaling military bands and 29 equestrian groups, plus a champion dog sled unit from Alas-ka, pass in front of him.

Nine Inaugural Balls

The inaugural ceremony climaxes Tuesday evening with a series of nine inaugural balls. Tickets cost $100 apiece. and 40,000 persons are expected to crowd into hotel ballrooms in hopes of rubbing elbows with the new president.

The ceremony will be relayed by television to nearly 100 satellite balls around the country. Those tickets are more affordable - only $10 apiece.

Reagan and his wife are expected to drop in at each ball in Washington, and to dance nearly to midnight. His schedule, already planned minute by minute through Inauguration Day, says he will settle permanently into the White House at 12:15 a.m. Wednesday. economic growth. The report, prepared by Carter's Council of Economic Advisers and released Saturday, contains the same attack on Reagan's three-year, 30 percent tax-cut proposal that the president made throughout his unsuccessful re-election

The report predicts no relief on the inflation front in 1981 — even without a tax cut. It also foresees worsening unemployment and a very sluggish economy, at least until the second half of the year. Plan Criticized

"Supply-side (tax-cutting) policies don't pay for themselves," Charles Schultze, the council chairman, said of Reagan's plan.

"Even under the most optimistic cir-cumstances, a 10 percent reduction in tax rates would not induce enough additional work, saving or investment to offset more than a fraction" of consumer de-mand created by the cut, said the report released three days before Reagan's inauguration.

When demand for goods and services increases faster than supply, prices rise particularly at a time when the Federal Reserve intends to keep a tight hold on the nation's money supply.

The report predicts consumer prices will advance another 12.6 percent in 1981, and that assumes no personal tax cuts this year.

Deficits Foregeen
This persistent inflation was the main reason Carter, in his farewell budget Thursday, rejected any personal tax cuts until 1982. Even without them, the outgoing administration foresees a $5.2 billion deficit in the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30, and a $27.5 billion gap in fiscal 1962.

In contrast, Reagan's Budget Direc-tor-designate David Stockman said there is "no wavering" on the president-elect's campaign pledge of a 10 percent tax-rate cut for three consecutive years.

Carter's economic advisers estimate 10 percent cut in fiscal 1981 would reduce federal revenues by $30 billion. This kind of reduction "unaccompanied by the necessary spending cuts would lead to both an increase in inflation and a sharp rise in interest rates," the council report

Stimules "Undone"

"Some, and perhaps all, of the stimu-lus to investment from tax reductions would be undone by the higher interest rates and the uncertainty engendered by a new round of inflation." It says.

Reagan's own advisers are expected to recommend spending cuts greater than those proposed by Carter in his $739.3 billion budget, but it's unlikely these extra reductions could come close to the $10 billion flame. to the $30 billion figure.

Stockman said the new administracuts. "It will be some multiple of $10 billion," he said, but a precise figure has vet to be determined. Outlook For 1981

Carter's economic council also of-fered its outlook for 1981, predicting that:

- Consumer prices, after rising 12.6 percent this year, will increase by 9.5 percent in 1962. Food prices should go up 12 percent in 1981, with the biggest impact at the meat counter.

— With decontrol of U.S. oil prices, the average cost for a barrel of domestic oil will be $40 by October, about $12 more than last November.

- Unemployment will range between 7.5 percent and 7.7 percent in 1981, although it should reach as high as 8 percent early this year. By the end of 1982, the rate should be about 7.4 percent the same as now.

- The economy as a whole will be

Cold in Florida caused an increase in the wholesale price of orange juice and vegetables. Ice-clogged ports from the Chesapeake Bay to Maine stranded fishing fleets and prices rose for flounder, obster and scallops.

"I'm scared of fire, but I have no choice," said a pregnant woman from the Bronx who huddled in a tiny kitchen with all four burners of a leaky stove burning. "It's just so cold."

Single-digit temperatures in Florida wiped out one-fifth of the 1981 orange crop and destroyed 60 percent of the crop of winter vegetables — beans, squash, to matoes, peppers, eggplant. Before the ice had a chance to melt, whole prices for the farm products were up and commodities markets gyrated.

Carter and the council also cautioned the financial community against over-reacting to temporary spurts in the na-tion's money supply — above the Federal Reserve's stated growth targets. This kind of reaction helped push interest rates to record levels last year.

They also endorsed temporary tax in-centives that would encourage workers to hold down wage demands. Carter ad-visers have repeatedly pushed this tax-based incomes policy, known as TIP, but it has drawn lukewarm responses from labor, business and Congress.

Reagan has disavowed incomes policy to fight inflation.

Release Not To Make Iran Buddy

WASHINGTON (AP) - Defense Secretary Harold Brown says release of the 52 Americans held in Iran for more than States and Iran instant buddies," nor res-tore Iran's role in containing Soviet activity in the oil-rich Persian Gulf.

"There are too many other factors in our recent relations that would have to be improved through diplomacy," Brown said at a farewell meeting with reporters at the Pentagon late Friday. Under the ground rules, his remarks were withheld from publication until Saturday.

Brown, completing four years as the nation's top civilian defense official, spoke as the long stalemate over the sei-zure of American hostages by Iranian militants appeared to be nearing an end. He said "it could take quite a time" after release of the hostages for relations between the once strong allies to return to a generally better plane.

"But it would at least open the door" to improved relations, Brown said.

Iran's leaders continue to hold the United States responsible for what they perceive as the misrule of the late shah, whom the United States strongly supported for many years, and "they perceive us very much as being an adver-sary," Brown said.

Even if relations between Iran and the United States do improve after the hostage release, Brown said, "we won" be on the same terms with the Irania as we were in the 1970s" and earlier, when U.S. arms flooded into Iran and Iranian armed forces were trained by American military specialists.

"Nor will we consider them a strong barrier" against possible Soviet en-croachment in the Persian Gulf region,

Brown made it clear that, in his view, the United States will have to push shead with development of a strong rapid deployment force to ensure that U.S. interests are safeguarded in that vital oil-producing region.

He also suggested the United States should work to expand its military friendships in the region with other coun-tries, such as Saudi Arabia.

Asked about suggestions he made in connection with President Carter's final defense budget, for increased U.S. millitary exercises and the possible stationing of land-based aircraft in the gulf area, Brown said, "We will have to work with countries in the region to see what is acceptable politically.

There have been reports that some Persian Gulf nations still prefer an arms-length relationship with the United States and are not enthusiastic about being identified as a military ally of this

"That's quite true." Trattner said when asked about Nabevi's statement. "We have not yet completed the transaction that is envisioned." Trattner said that any transfer would not be completed until the hostages are released, and "Mr. Nabavi knows that."

State Department officials also dismissed a Tehran Radio report Saturday that quoted Rajai's office as saying "no precise date can be fixed for the hos-that quoted Rajar's office as saying "no precise date can be fixed for the hostages' release."

In another development, Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie summoned Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin Saturday for a scathing denunciation of "absolutely unfounded Soviet charges" in the Soviet media that the United States is preparing an armed attack upon Iran.

Rajai's meeting with other government officials came shortly after he cancelled a meeting with Western diplomats and Nabavi, and a news conference that was expected to deal with the hostages.

The cancellation and Nabavi's statement on the amount of assets to be transfered had dampened speculation of the hostages' imminent release.

Nabavi had said 24 hours earlier there was "no obstacle" to ending the crisis and that although Iran sought the return of its assets, this did not include money Iran owes on loans to U.S. banks.

The United States readied $2.2 billion in gold and cash or the equivalent for delivery to an escrow account that could be turned over to Iran after the hostages were released.

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller and representatives of 12 major banks met for seven hours in an attempt to reconcile the United States and Iran over the total of Iran's frozen assets. Iran last month said about $10 billion in assets were blocked and that the actual total might be $14 billion, while the United States put the total at about $9.5 billion.

On Jan. 14, the Iranian Parliament passed a bill authorizing the appointment of a third government to act as arbitrator in settling remaining financial and legal claims between Iran and the United States. A second bill to nationalize the as-Treasury Secretary G. William Miller

China Objects To Taiwan

Attendance
PEKING (AP) — China objected Saturday to President-elect Ronald Reagan's invitation to Taiwan officials to at-

UG COM BRAND agan's invitation to raiwan officials to attend his inauguration as a violation of U.S. promises to Peking.

"The Chinese government has already expressed to the U.S. side its resolute opposition to the invitation," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

'It is a violation of the principles of the Sino-American communique on establishing diplomatic relations and is a serious step in restoring an official rela-tionship between the United States and Taiwan," he said.

The United States broke off diplomatic relations with the Nationalist Chinese government of Taiwan in January 1979 as a condition for establishing them with communist China

A U.S. Embassy official in Peking said the Chinese had asked for clarification of whether representatives from Taiwan would be official guests at the inauguration.

Chinese sources said Chinese Ambassador to Washington Chai Zemin would not attend Reagan's inauguration next Tuesday if Taiwan representatives were

The government-controlled China Youth newspaper said the United States was laboring under the illusions of "old line imperialists" if it thought China would yield on Taiwan "because China" has to look to the United States for

The newspaper warned that if Reagan acted on campaign statements advocating restoring relations with Taiwan, he would fundamentally undermine the political basis for the development of Sino-U.S. Relations.

In opposing Soviet hegemonism and safeguarding world peace, will it do to exclude the participation of China, whose population constitutes one-fourth of the world's total? The far-sighted politicians of the world as well as of the United States are very clear about this," the newspaper said

Recently, Reagan had been more cautious in statements on Sino-U.S. relations and had stated that developing relations with China was very important to the United States, the newspaper noted.

The official Xinhua news agency reported without comment Friday that Reagan had said in a magazine interview he opposes "throwing aside" Taiwan and believes the United States "paid something of a price" for its relationship with Peking.

Volunteers Join Police In Search

ATLANTA (AP) - About 200 citizens scoured vacant lots near a shopping center Saturday for clues in the deaths and disappearances of 16 black children. joined by police for the first time since the volunteer effort was launched last Police directed the search, and officers took part from helicopters. Motorists were stopped and questioned at police roadblocks.

The focus of Saturday's effort was 14year-old Lubie "Chuck" Geter, last seen two weeks ago when he left home for the Stewart-Lakewood Shopping Center.

Members of the police task force investigating the deaths and disappearances of the children questioned two men apprehended Friday in separate arrests, but there was no indication they found any links to the dead and missing

A man affested with a fake police badge and some lollipops was charged with possession of marijuana, and Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown issued a statement saying there was "nothing that connects the subject of this arrest to the children cases." Also Friday, officials said a 5-year-old black girl screamed while being carried by a man, who put her down and ran. Police arrested 19-year-old Jeffery Dwayne Scott of Atlanta and charged him with attempted kidnapping and simple battery.

Brown said Saturday that any connection between Scott and the child killings was "purely speculation," adding, "We talk to literally hundreds of people. That doesn't mean they're suspects.'

Specialists in forensic medicine are still trying to identify one of two skeletons found Jan. 9 in a suburban woods.

One skeleton earlier was identified as an Atlanta child previously listed as missing, one of 16 such deaths or disappearances since July 1979. Geter is one of four black children listed as missing.

Last week's citizen search ended in charges by City Councilman Arthur Langford, leader of the project, that police were not taking the effort seriously.

Many prestigious candidates have turned down consideration for the Tech law dean position, Benson noted, including former Congresswoman Barbara Jor-dan, President Carter's special assistant university administration, our own faculty and students, the Lubbock legal community, state and national contacts and ideally the legislature too," the search committee chairman said.

Pierce himself claimed equal confidence. "I felt I could make it," said the Owl junior, who led all scorers with 20 points in the contest. "I shoot them every day in warmups."

Tech, which controlled the game with 41-39 lead and the ball with only 1:21 left in regulation, had tied the game at 50-50 in overtime when freshman Bubba Jennings hit a cluch jumper from close range with eight seconds to go. After two timeouts, the Owls managed to get the ball downcourt where guard Anthony De-Cello fired a cross-court pass to Pierce who was surrounded by Raiders but still managed his game-winning miracle.

But, really, the Raiders had no one but themselves to blame for this loss. Despite shooting a miserable 41.7 percent from the field, Tech went ahead 41-39 when Clarence Swannegan scored a bucket in close at the 3:46 mark. At the other end, Bobby Tudor missed a jumper and Ralph Brewster controlled the back-

The Owis let Tech run the clock down to the 1:21 mark before fouling Steve Smith. Tech, not yet in the one-and-one, was forced to inbounds the ball and that's when disaster hit.

Jeff Taylor couldn't find anyone open and heaved the ball in the general direc-tion of the Rice basket. DeCello ran under it, and only a Jennings' foul stopped him from getting an easy layup.

Still, DeCello canned both free throws and it was all even at 1:18. Again,the Raiders had the ball and a chance to win the game. But they could do nothing right in the final 1:18, and were lucky just to go into overtime tied at 41-41.

"We had our opportunities but our mistakes cost us at the end," said Myers. "Rice played a very good game and their zone bothered us. We had some open shots from 17 or 18 feet and we just

That meant there was a grand total of eight points scored in the final eight minutes of the contest.

In the end, it was Pierce who made the difference. Although he was ice-cold in the first half, he hit seven of nine second-half shots and most were from way out. The only other Owl in double figures was Tudor with 10.

'I'm proud of my kids," said Schuler. "I thought it was an outstanding college basketball game. Tech is a good team and this conference is wacky. We are right in it now, tied with Arkansas."

The Owls are now 2-2 in SWC play while Tech falls to 3-2 and 9-5 on the season. Still seeking their first conference road victory, the Raiders will meet league-leading Baylor in Waco Monday

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) -Bruce Lietzke, who blew a 5-stroke lead and then regained a 2-shot margin, was greatly relieved when he finished his front-running, hard-won, 2-under-par 70 in Saturday's fourth round of the marathon Bob Hope Desert Golf Classic.

"I'm very thankful that round is over," said Lietzke, who has led or shared the lead all the way in this fiveday, 90-hole tournament.

He opened the fourth round with a 5stroke lead, once fell back into a tie and eventually finished with a 266 total, a tournament-record 22 strokes under par

"I had a chance to run away from the field," said Lietzke, who held an apparently comfortable lead at the end of three rounds but was considerably less than secure going into the final 18 holes Sunday. "I'm very happy to be returning to North Carolina and the Wake Forest program. Most college football fans are well aware of coach John Mackovic's accomplishments at Wake Forest. It's not the same football program that was there when I left the ACC three years ago."

Groh said he was happy to have had the opportunity to coach at Texas Tech and was impressed by the brand of football played in the Southwest Conference.

Tech was everything I heard it would be," Groh said. "They know how to do things right at Tech and in the Southwest Conference. I'm sorry I couldn't stay around longer. I just consider myself fortunate to get the opportunity to coach at Tech."

Former Red Raider football coach Rex Dockery hired Groh in March of last year. Before coming to Tech, Groh spent three seasons as defensive coordinator at the Air Force Academy. He spent five years at North Carolina and three years at Virginia. Before that, Groh spent two seasons at the U.S. Military Academy.

Groh's new boss at Wake Forest, John Mackovic, was one of six finalist interviewed by Tech officials to replace Dockery at Tech. Dockery was replaced Jan. 4 by Jerry Moore.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Oakland Raiders and Philadelphia Eagles don't do things with a lot of pizzazz. They're meat-and-potatoes teams. Shotguns and bombs aren't their style. The Dallas Cowboys can dazzle you with their footwork. The San Diego Chargers can wow you with their rocketry. But where are they today? Not here. Not vying for the Vince Lombardi Trophy, emblematic of a Super

The Raiders and Eagles are here because, along with a few big plays - Jim Plunkett's 65-yard deflected touchdown pass to Raymond Chester on Oakland's third play; Wilbert Montgomery's 42-yard touchdown run on Philadelphia's cond play), the two teams can take a lead, can sit on a lead and can protect a lead. They can play flawless football, or close to it. They pretty much did that against each other in Philadelphia on the 12th weekend of the National Football League's regular season. They battled through a scoreless first half, the Eagles eked out a 51-yard field goal by Tony Franklin in the third period, Oakland's Jim Plunkett teamed with Cliff Branch on a touchdown pass play covering 86 yards early in the fourth quarter and Philadelphia won it 10-7 on Wilbert Montgomery's 3-yard scoring sweep with scoring, but almost certainly as basic. That's what got 'em here.

2:56 to play. It'll likely be the same kind of game in the Superdome, perhaps not as low-

Last Sunday, against the Chargers, who can strike for touchdowns with the ness of the lightning bolts on their helmets, Oakland saw its 28-7 lead reduced to 28-24 in the third quarter with more than 20 minutes to play.

But Oakland had the ball. It chewed up yard after yard with (to San Diego) agonizing deliberateness, icking up a field goal. The Chargers tried to storm back and failed, Oakland s--o-w-l-y ground its way to another field goal, then surrendered a Charger field goal. San Diego trailed 34-27 with nearly seven minutes remaining.

Bot Oakland had the ball. And this time the Raiders never gave it up. They ran it down the Chargers' oets and ran out the clock. All through that last, wrenching drive, San Diego Ceach Don Coryell kept saying to himself, "If only we can get the ball back; just one more shot ..." They never got it.

While San Diego's Dan Fouts was throwing two interceptions and Mike

Thomas was committing a costly fumble (it led to an Oakland TD), the Raiders never gave up the ball

Similarly Philadelphia's few mistakes didn't hurt the Eagles; they only delayed the inevitable — a defeat for the Cowboys, whose biggest mistake was Tony Dorsett's fumble. When Roynell Young stripped it away, Jerry Robinson picked it up and carried it to Dallas' 38-yard line. Six plays later a 10-7 lead ballooned to 17-7, then Philadelphia's defense went to work. It never allowed the Cowboys within field-goal range, never mind touchdown territory.

And Dorsett, on whose shoulders so much of the Cowboys' hopes rode, was limited to 41 yards rushing. The entire Dallas offense amounted to just 202 yards - eight more than Montgomery got all by himself for the Eagles.

Both quarterbacks were pivotal in carrying their teams this far, but by far

Ron Jaworski of the Eagles led the National Connference in regular-season passing. He threw for 3,529 yards and 27 touchdown passes and was intercepted Plunkett, who epitomizes the Oakland tradition of turning castoffs into contenders, emerged from the obscurity of the bench. He stepped in when Dan Pastorini went down with a broken leg and, with inspiration as much as with his passing, guided the Raiders to nine victories in their last 11 regular-season games. He passed for 2,299 yards and 18 TDs and was intercepted 16 times.

When Plunkeft took over, Oakland was foundering, having lost three of its first five games. On one of them, Pastorini was jolted by San Diego, Plunkett came on in the final seconds and threw an 18-yard TD pass to Raymond Chester with 33 seconds to go in the fourth period, forcing overtime. Then Pastorini returned - and couldn't beat the Chargers to the scoreboard. San Diego won in though, Oakland won 38-24. It wasn't as easy as that, though. After Kenny King sped 89 yards for a TD in the third period that broke a 24-24 tie, San Diego fumbled the ensuing kickoff and Todd Christensen recovered it in the end zone for

That started a six-game winning streak, including a 45-34 rouser in Pittsburgh, when Plunkett burned the Steelers' secondary for touchdown passes of 45, 56 and 34 yards. The streak ended in Philadelphia, then the Raiders won three of their final four games to return to the playoffs after a two-year abs-

The Eagles' start was as hot as Oakland's was cold, Philadelphia winning its first three games and 11 of its first 12, including 17-10 against Dallas. In all of those games, and in the next three, Harold Carmichael caught a pass. Only when he was injured early in the season finale against Dallas and saw limited duty did he fail to catch one, his NFL record streak ending at 127 games.

The Eagles lost three of their final four games, including that one against Dallas 35-27. But they didn't lose by a big enough margin to allow the Cowboys to slip past them to a division title.

In the playoffs, Philadelphia rallied from an early 14-0 deficit to rout Minnesota 31-16 before beating the Cowboys. The Raiders, after mauling favored Houston 27-7 in the wild-card round of the playoffs, nosed out the Browns 14-12 in a frostbitten game in Cleveland thanks to Mike Davis' last-minute end-zone interception, then they did their job on the Chargers Thus, the Raiders become only the second team in the 15-year history of the Super Bowl to make it this far as a wild-card team and the first to do it since a second, wild-card playoff round was added to the postseason format. The only other wild-card team was Dallas, in Super Bowl X. Back then, though, there was just one wild-card team in each conference and it, like the three division winners, played two postseason games, not three the way Oakland did this year.

Those wild-card Cowboys, by the way, lost 21-17 to Pittsburgh in the title game. So should Oakland beat the Eagles, it'll become the first wild-card team to win a Super Bowl.

And if Philadelphia wins, it'll be only the second team to win its first Super Bowl appearance against a team with previous experience in the game. Pittsburgh did it against Minnesota in Super Bowl IX.

The score was knotted a 49-49 two minutes later before the Texans reeled off six straight points - four of them by Johnson — to go up 55-49. LCC pulled to within four points, 55-51, but Tarleton State hit eight of the next 10 points to take a commanding 65-57 lead with only 3:59 to go.

Bruce Carver's 15-foot jumper pulled the Chaps to within three points, 69-66, with 36 seconds remaining in the game. But with 20 second to go, Texans guard Bryan Stewart canned both ends of a one-and-one to make it 71-66 and give his team some breathing room.

One highlight for the Chaps during the game was Larry Holt's three consecutive free throws, which tied an LCC record for consecutive charity shots at 23. Turnover plagued the Chaps, especial-

The real story of the game was Tarleton State's rebounding edge and success at the free-throw line. The Texans outrebounded LCC 45 to 33, and hit 17 of 28 free throws as compared to LCC's six of eight freebies.

Carver paced the LCC attack with 16 points. Bill McGee and Jim Steensma each scored 12 points for the losers.

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) - It started as an burst over a poor punt, and set off an xplosion of anger that swept the entire grew to haunt a major university, toppling administrators in its wake. And the final stages of the dispute are scheduled to emerge next week in a sixth-floor

Phoenix courtroom. After waiting more than two years, former Arizona State University football player Kevin Rutledge is having his day

On the surface, the dispute appears simple. Rutledge charges that former ASU football coach Frank Kush punched him in the face after he botched a punt during a 1978 football game in Seattle against the University of Washington.

But the issue has grown to overshadow that single allegation. In fact, it is an entire university athletic system that will stand trial.

Rutledge charges he was subjected to "abuse, scorn and ridicule" by Kush, who also is alleged to have joined with fellow defendent William Maskill — a former Kush assistant — to drive the punter off the team "and forsake his scholarship relation with ASU."

The suit claims Kush fied to Rutledge's father when he told him no athletic scholarships were available the first semester of Rutledge's freshman year.

Rutledge was offered a scholarship for the second semester - and so declined an offer from the University of Arizona, says the complaint. And when Kush decided Rutledge no longer was useful to the team, he allegedly intimi-dated the player, ridiculed him in front of his teammates and told a newsp reporter Rutledge's days as a Sun Devil

Kush wanted to offer the scholarship to someone else, the complaint alleges. It says what Kush didn't know was that Rutledge had suffered a chest infection resulting from an automobile accident between his freshman and sophomore years, and this contributed to his uneven performance in practice sessions and

It's all part of the way the system operated at ASU, Rutledge's attorneys charge. University president John Schwada and vice president for student affairs George Hamm, who also are defendants, are identified as an integral part of that system. The complaint accuses them of failing to control Kush from mentally and physically abusing athletes.

Former athletic director Fred Miller. and Arizona Board of Regents and ASU itself round out the defendant list.

A central question in the suit is whether Schwada and Hamm knew of Kush's conduct and ever objected to it. Rutledge's attorneys are expected to try to prove other ASU athletes besides Rutledge allegedly were brutalized by Kush and the system, and that administrators received past warnings of what was going on behind the scenes, on the field and in the locker room

The suit charges that Kush engaged "in a pattern of misconduct whereby he 'subjected certain players to physical and mental abuse intimidation defamation and brutality which was similar" to what Rutledge allegedly suffered. "Such acts of misconduct were committed to force players to quit the team and forsake their scholarships," it claims.

"The Board of Regents, Miller, Schwada and Hamm have long known or should have known, of the pattern of misconduct ... By failing to control and supervise the said defendant Kush, they have neglected their duties, and, in fact, by their inaction, have condoned such misconduct by Kush.'

ASU officials deny that any system of abuse existed on the campus. Hamm tes-tified in a September deposition that "to the best of my knowledge" no written or oral complaints were received of Kush's alleged mistreatment of players.

"I think my reputation would suggest that if I ever heard of anybody abu any one of any statutory position that I simply can't sit back and do nothing about it," Hamm told Rutledge's attorney. "And I never took it upon myself to pursue anything further, so I would suggest that the answer is: no."

Hamm said he first heard reports of Kush physically striking players in a se-ries of articles published the Long Island, N.Y., newspaper Newsday — "which I found incidentally to be extremely inac-

The filing of the lawsuit set off a chain of events that still affects the campus, athletic fans and taxpayers.

Kush was ousted by then-athletic director Miller in Oct. 1979 for allegedly striking Rutledge and then trying to cov-er up the incident. Miller subsequently was axed by Schwada, reportedly after pressure from state politicians and the iversity money-men who help bankroll

ASU's booster organizations.
A year later, Schwada announced plans to step down while several regents said privately thay were dissatisfied with his handling of the ASU athletic morass. In the interim, another athletic director came on board and departed.

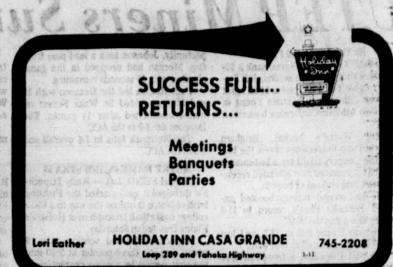

The athletic department was scrutinized by an NCAA probe that ended last month with two year's probation for ASU for 20 separate violations of NCAA rules.

The Pacific-10 Athletic Conference applied its own set of sanctions for the university's allegedly fraudulent use of a college extension course to benefit ath-

The FBI and state Department of Public Safety cleared ASU officials of wrongdoing after separate investigations into gambling, mail fraud and witness tampering allegations. The latter allegation concerned potential witnesses in the Rutledge case

In a letter to NCAA officials, Schwada claimed the investigations and "lurid" publicity caused a "long-term negative impact" on ASU that will have wideranging fiscal implications on all intercol-

State Attorney General Robert Corbin, meanwhile, has broadened a six-month inquiry into the Legna Trust, a privately-funded retirement plan set up by bankers and businessmen to provide Kush with a lifetime income. Kush stands to gain $350,000 from the deal.

The

Lomax, North Runners Lead Senior Bowl Win

Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers said Saturday he was surprised at the success of the North's running game in a 23-10 victory over the South in the 32nd annual

Senior Bowl All-Star game.
"I didn't think our running backs would run that well, but David Overstreet and Randy McMillan really busted it in there," Walsh said. "We blocked better than we anticipated."

Overstreet, of Oklahoma, and Clifford Chatman of Central Oklahoma State scored touchdowns for the Yanks, who also had three field goals from Penn State's Herb Menhardt

Walsh said he thought his team's ability to score twice against a brisk wind 'made a difference

Red Miller of the Denver Broncos, coach of the South squad, said, "We were pretty much outmanned and our inability to sustain drives all the way through was probably the major point in the game.'

The North used a ball-control attack that featured the pinpoint passing of Portland State's Neil Lomax, who was named the game's Most Valuable Player, and the running of Overstreet and Pitts-burgh's McMillan, who had several crucial carries on draw plays that kept scoring drives alive.

The South was seldom able to generate an attack against a defense that sacked Rebel quarterbacks six times for losses of 40 vards

Menhardt's field goals covered 22, 26, and 34 yards while Overstreet scored on 11-yard run and Chatman on a 4-yard

The North, which virtually put the game on ice with a 20-7 lead early in the consecutive victory in this game that annually turns participants into profession-

The South's scoring came on a 1-yard plunge by Billy Jackson of Alabama early in the second quarter and on a 43-yard field goal by Georgia's Rex Robinson in the third period.

The Yanks assumed control from the start, moving 75 yards with the opening kickoff to the South 5 before stalling, with Menhardt kicking the first of his three field goals, a 22-yarder.

The drive featured the running of Overstreet, who had five carries for 29 yards, and McMillan, who had 20 yards

The North defense then took charge, holding the Rebels to only seven net yards on three possessions in the opening quarter before the South got its only touchdown drive under way late in the period, a 70-yard march that ended on Jackson's 1-yard run 2:43 into the second

The drive featured three big plays -15-yard run by Stump Mitchell of The Citadel and two pass completions by Wake Forest's Jay Venuto, a 39-yarder to Auburn's James Brooks that carried to the 11 and a 10-yarder to Eric Sievers of Maryland at the North 1.

The North took the lead for good on a 56-yard drive following Robinson's 17-yard punt into a brisk wind. Lomax completed two passes for 18 yards, McMillan had 14 yards on a draw and Overstreet a pair of 11-yard runs, the last for the uchdown 5:43 before halftime.

Lomax connected on passes of 17 and 18 yards in moving the north from its 45 yard field goal despite a juggled snap. It gave the Yanks a 13-7 halftime lead.

Chatman accounted for all the yardage in a 37-yard touchdown drive on the North's first possession of the second half. It came after Dave Liggins of Arizona returned a punt 37 yards. Chatman had 31 yards on six carries and also caught a 6-yard pass from back-up quarterback Jim Jenson of Boston University.

The South's final score came three minutes later on Robinson's 43-yard field goal, which followed a pair of Venuto pass completions of 18 and 16 yards.

Menhardt's final field goal came with 9:37 remaining, ending a 73-yard drive on which Lomax completed three passes for

San Diego Adds Former 'Skins Coach To Staff

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Chargers announced Saturday that Jack Pardee, fired as the head coach of the Washington Redskins last month, has been hired as the National Football League team's "assistant head coach in charge of defense."

Rick Smith, director of public rela-tions for the Chargers, also said that de-fensive backfield coach Larrye Weaver has been named the Chargers' offensive coordinator, replacing Joe Gibbs, who was named as the Redskins' head coach succeeding Pardee last Tuesday.

Pardee was the Redskins' head coach for three seasons following three years as the head coach of the Chicago Bears. Before that, he was the head coach of the Florida Blazers of the World Football Pardee, 44, was a linebacker for 13 years with the Los Angeles Rams and Pardee attended Texas A&M before joining the Rams as the team's secondround draft choice in 1957.

In 1965, Pardee didn't play because he had cancer of the right arm. An operation proved successful and he rejoined the Rams in 1966. While recuperating from his surgery, he served as an assistant coach with Texas A&M.

BOSTON (AP) - Relentless Marvin Hagler bombed previously unbeaten Fulgencio Obelmejias with a variety of head shots and stopped him in the eighth round Saturday night to retain the world middleweight championship, the only undisputed title in boxing.

It was Hagler all the way. Only Obelmejias' toughness made the fight last as long as it did.

The Venezuelan challenger, who entered the ring with a 30-0 record with 28 knockouts, came out for the eighth round on rubbery legs. Hagler quickly landed a right-left-right to the head that sent Obelmejias spinning across the ring and into the ropes. Referee Octavio Mayran quickly signalled the fight was over. The time was 20 seconds of the eighth round.

Hagler, from nearby Brockton, Mass., making the first defense of the title he won last Sept. 27 when he stopped Alan Minter of England in the third round at London, took complete command of the fight in the fourth round and handed out a savage beating to Obelmejias from then until Mayran mercifully stopped it.

Hagler, who weighed 1591/2, the same as Obelmejias, hurt the Venezuelan with a right hand in the fourth round after Obelmejias had landed two good rights of his own. However, Obelmejias' vaunted power had no effect on the champion, who landed at least 20 more shots to the head in the fourth round and shot home more than 30 head punches in the fifth to keep Obelmejias in trouble throughout the round. The punches were a mixture of jabs, hooks and uppercuts as Hagler, a left-hander, sometimes switched to right-

Whether it was right-handed or lefthanded, Hagler had Obelmejias baffled.

Hagler put Obelmejias down early in the sixth round with a left hook and a right uppercut. The Venezuelan bounced up almost immediately and took an eight count. Obelmejias then fought back, but

Mecom Plans To Be Cautious With Phillips

MOBILE, Ala. (UPI) - New Orleans Saints owner John Mecorn Jr. says he still wants Burn Phillips for the head coaching job, but 14 years of disappointcaution

"There are a lot of things we still have to discuss, and we both want to take our time and make sure we understand each other," Mecom said Friday. "Right now, based on our first conversations, I think we both want the same thing, but I thought that once before with Hank Stram.

Stram, who established solid credentials with the Kansas City Chiefs, failed to make winners of the Saints. He was followed in the New Orleans job by Dick Nelan, who was fired in November near the end of the team's worst season in his-

History seemed to smile on the Saints when the Houston Oilers fired Phillips, a close friend of Mecom's, just when New Orleans was casting about for a coach. Mecom, however, stressed the apparent devetailing should not be allowed to lure the Saints into a mistake.

'We don't want to rush into anything," he said in Mobile for Saturday's Senior Bowl. "There's no need for that.

Mecom said he wanted to meet with Phillips and general manager Steve Rosepbloom before moving closer to a decision. Rosenbloom, despite his disclaimers, has emerged in the media as a possible stumbling block to Phillips' hiring.

Reports of tension centered on Rosenbloom's insistence on sticking to his candidate interviews despite the Houston developments, as well as on speculation Phillips' history of working directly for a team owner threatened Rosenbloom's

Mecom said he wanted to discuss a division of authority and downplayed any speculation on potential conflict.

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Terry Bradshaw will play a stock car driver in a television pilot show that could thrust him into a fall series and out of professional

But if the pilot falters, Bradshaw is a natural for a remake of a series aired years ago, "I Led Three Lives." Start with Terry Bradshaw, the quart-

NORTH CAROLINA 80, DUKE 65 CHAPEL HILL, N.C. - North Carolina forward Al Wood scored 20 points as the 17th-ranked Tar Heels rolled to an easy 80-65 victory over Duke in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game Satur-

The Blue Devils jumped out to an early 8-4 lead with more than 16 minutes left in the first half. But that was pretty much it for the Duke offense. The Blue Devils did not score for the next five minutes as North Carolina reeled off 15 straight points and went up 19-8.

North Carolina improves to 12-4 overall and 3-1 in the ACC. Duke falls to 7-7 and 0-4 in league play.

IOWA 73, MICHIGAN 58 ANN ARBOR, Mich. - Iowa's Steve a balanced scoring attack blew the Hawk-eyes to a 20-point halftime lead and they coasted the rest of the way to a 73-58 Big Ten Conference basketball victory over ninth-ranked Michigan on Saturday.

The victory gave the 14th-ranked Hawkeyes an 11-2 season's record and enabled them to retain a share of the Big Ten lead with a 3-1 conference mark. Michigan fell to 11-2 and 2-2.

It was the second win in a row for the Jayhawks, while the Sooners lost for the second time in as many tests. Kansas was led by Neal who came off the bench to score 22 points while Chuck Barnett of the Sooners led all scorers

OKLAHOMA ST. 81, NEBRASKA 70

STILLWATER, Okla. - Oklahoma State's sophomore guard Matt Clark took 25 points for the game high as the Cowboys trounced Nebraska, 81-70, here Saturday afternoon.

Clark, who leads the Big 8 Conference in scoring, hit 11 of 15 from the field. The Cowboys raised their conference record to 2-0. They are 12-2 overall. Nebraska is 1-1 in conference and 7-7

ILLINOIS 80, MINNESOTA 76 CHAMPAIGN, Ill. - Mark Smith and

Eddie Johnson pumped in 22 points each Saturday to lead Illinois to an 80-76 victory over Minnesota in a Big Ten basketball game.

Illinois, ranked 18th, retained a share of the Big Ten lead with a 3-1 record and 11-2 overall while 20th-ranked Minnesota dropped out of a first-place tie with a 2-2 mark and 10-3 overall.

The Illini, with Johnson scoring 14 points and Smith 12, took a 47-32 halftime lead. But the Gophers, led by the long-range shooting of Trent Tucker, who finished with 20 points, battled back and came within two points at 68-66 mid-

CTK Squads Split District Cage Tilts

The Christ The King girls' basketball squad picked up its first win of the season, a 41-32 victory over Wichita Falls Notre Dame, at a strategic point in the schedule Saturday on its home court.

The win came during the second district game of the year for CTK and improved its conference mark to 1-1 following Friday's 56-36 loss to Sacred Heart in the district opener.

CTK led Notre Dame 21-16 at halftime but the Wichita Falls school rallied in the third period to knot the game at 26 with eight minutes to play. Then CTK outscored their guests 15-6 in the final period to break into the win column.

Leslie Schmidt scored 17 points, eight field goals and one of three free throws, to led CTK and all scorers in the game. Judy Conover added 10 and Virginia Lumpkins tossed in eight.

In the second half of the double-header. Christ The King's boys' team lost 53-47 to Notre Dame, falling to 0-2 in dis-

Friday CTK fell in its initial conference matchup to Sacred Heart 70-42. Notre Dame held a 25-18 lead after CTK's Charlie Opperman led all scorers with 24 points, 11 field goals and a perfect two for two from the charity stripe. Bruce Graham and Greg Ralph Schmidt each contributed eight points.

Many State Fishing Records Fall In 1980 chard Goldgar of Missouri City while fishing out of Port Aransas on June 2.

AUSTIN (Special) — When Jim Kimbell of Pittsburg landed a 14-pound, 1 1/2-ounce largemouth bass at Lake Monticello last February, he broke a 37-year-and and claimed what must be old record and claimed what must be considered the most significant catch of 1980 in Texas.

The huge fish also was a welcome sight to Texas Parks and Wildlife Department fisheries biologists who had pre-dicted that introduction of the Florida strain of largemouths eventually would produce a new state record.

Kimbell's fish was examined and found to be one of the Florida large-moeths stocked in the East Texas power plant lake.

Texas Receives Wildlife Funds

AUSTIN (Special) — Preliminary apportionment of federal aid funds by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service indicates that Texas has been allocated $4,309,000 to be used in fish and wildlife restoration projects and hunter safety programs dur-ing the fiscal year which began Oct. 1,

Wildlife restoration projects are allocated $2,805,000; hunter safety projects, $282,000; and fisheries restoration, $1,-

He topped the AL with 68 in Another bass species made the news in 1980, when Grant C. Hartman of Austin caught a five-pound, 12-ounce smallmouth below Tom Miller Dam in Austin's Town Lake on March 16. The striped bass record also fell when a 33pound, 3 1/2-ounce striper was caught by Louisianan Jimmy Kent at Toledo Bend Reservoir on Feb. 8.

The year also featured several recordbreakers among the saltwater species, with much of the record-setting involving large sharks.

The old record for tiger sharks - 816 pounds set in 1975 - was broken twice. Greg Rilat of Texas City caught an 817pound tiger shark 30 miles south of Gal-

There is an article in this month's Outdoor Life by Dwight Schuh entitled "The Truth About Jackrabbits." It is very interesting and entertaining, it's worth your while to read it, after all, we read sporting stories mainly for entertainment. I have no doubt that what he says is true.

He emphasizes how good jackrabbits are to eat, and I can't dispute that because I've never eaten one. Like he says, when he was young, someone, he doesn't remember who, told him "you don't eat jacks, they have some sort of disease. You just eat cottontails." Well, someone told me that when I was young and I've never eaten one.

Really, I don't see why a jack wouldn't be as good eating as a cottontail, which is very good. He also says they are just as good in the summer as they are in the winter. The story is that you shouldn't eat cottontails until after frost and in the winter. The story is that you shouldn't eat cottontails until after frost and the more I think about that, the less sense it makes. I don't plan on eating a jack right away, but after reading this article I just might, if I get caught like my friend Hammock and his brother Jake.

It seems back in the Hoover-Roosevelt days, they went fishing down on the Rio Grande. Because of the depression and hard times, they only carried some salt, pepper, and hog lard and planned to eat fish. Well, the fish weren't cooperating and two days later they were lanky. They took their .22 and killed three or four squirrels. They were apparently old boars and as you know, there is absolutely nothing as tough as an old boar squirrel. They fried them and as Hammock says, after 30 minutes chewing they still couldn't swallow it.

Now, they were really getting famished, so next morning while looking for something to eat, they found an armadillo. They killed it and dressed it. The meat was white and firm, appearing like pork. They cut it up and fried it and it may have been because of the condition of their stomachs or because it was good, but he says that it was the sweetest and most tender meat he had ever eaten. I've never eaten either a jack or an armadillo, but I might if the circumstances were just right.

As you know, quail season lasts a couple more weeks. My son and I have decided we are going to get a box of 7 1/2's in the 3-inch mag 12's and see if we can even the odds with those blues the last couple of weeks. It still won't be a fair fight, but it will increase the odds in our favor. There is nothing more frusfair fight, but it will increase the odds in our favor. There is nothing more frustrating than to see about 35 of them at 50-60 yards doing about 40 mph and you armed with a modified 20 gauge loaded with 2 3/4-inch field loads.

We've been trying to refinish the stock on my $60 three-inch 12 gauge mag. It was varnished and after several years of falling off rocky hills with it, it was a deplorable sight. My boy sanded it good, washed it, applied linseed oil 3 or 4 times, between steel wool, alas, the old cheap stock is apparently maple, or willow or elm. It looks worse than it did. I undertook to reblue the gun with a cold blueing compound. Believe me, the cold blueing process is N.G. I have been warned about it, but you don't spend a lot of money on a $60.00 gun. Anyway, it looks as ugly as a mud fence, but it still shoots great. You just can't make a silk looks as ugly as a mud fence, but it still shoots great. You just can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, but it's fun trying.

Roland and Wanda Keener of Welch fished at Hubbard Creek Lake last week. On Wednesday, they caught 62 crappie and on Thursday, 36 crappie. They were fishing at the "flume" at the dam. They no longer allow boats to pull up under the wire screen, about 100 feet square, that surrounds the "flume" or spillwaygates. For years we did that and as far as I know, no one was injured, etc., but for some reason, now they don't allow it. You have to tie up to the fence, toss your line and cork towards the flume. Makes about as much sense as a side saddle for a hog. We used to pull up to the "flume," tie to each other's boat, loan minnows, borrow coffee, and generally have a good time. Now, they don't allow it; you have to tie up and throw towards the flume. Stop to think about it, Roland didn't bring me a mess of winter crappie — probably the best eating fish in the world.

Buy Boats And Save

FOND DU LAC, Wisconsin (Special) - When the snow flies and the cold winds are blowing, and no one in his right mind would even consider getting out on the water, the time is right to start shopping for a boat.

The prime outdoor recreation season may be over in many parts of the country, but boats are still available in dealers' showrooms. Whether it's a first-time purchase, or replacing an old boat or one that you've outgrown, looking and buying during the off-season can be advantageous. According to Mercury outboards' boating department, many marine dealers don't like to carry stock over from one season to the next. They prefer to sell what's on hand and often will reduce prices to clear out last season's models. But price reductions aren't the only reason why winter boat shopping is worthwhile. This is also a good time to visit a dealership because there are fewer people contending for the dealer's attention. He'll be able to spend more uninterrupted time with you, and that's especially important if you're a new boating enthusiast. He'll be more able to discern your personal needs and suggest the type of rig that'll suit you best.

The best reason, of course, for winter boat shopping is that when warm weather returns, you'll already have your rig. You'll be out on the water having fun while others are just looking and wish-

Pamphlet Available

RIVERSIDE, Conn. (Special) - This past Christmas, many happy recipients of a new firearm found a handy folder entitled "Firearms Safety Depends on You - Make No Mistake About It" packed along with their gift.

But, for those who didn't get the booklet, the National Shooting Sports Foundation urges the new firearm owner to send for a copy.

Hunting and target shooting are among the safest of all sports. The firearms safety booklet is intended to make them even safer - by re-emphasizing and reaffirming the basics of safe gun handling and storage and by reminding each individual shooter that he or she is the key to firearms safety.

The pocket-sized safety booklet goes beyond simple "do's and don'ts" to in-clude specific "why's and why nots." There are stright-forward chapters and illustrations emphasizing the key elements of safe firearms handling, eye and ear protection, and advice on the safe and proper storage of guns and ammunition in the home. Tips on handgun safety are also included.

The firearms safety booklet is available for 25 cents each (10 booklets for $1) from NSSF, Literature Department, 1075 Post Road, Riverside CT 06878.

New gun owners should also pay spe-cial attention to the instruction manual

Bobcat Pelts Can Be Sold

AUSTIN (Special) - Pelts of bobcats legally trapped and tagged in Texas can be sold in interstate commerce and in the international market, according to an announcement by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

To be sold, the pelt must be permanently tagged with a tag available free of charge from permitted bobcat pelt delalers across the state. Bill Brownlee, Parks and Wildlife Deparment biologist, said only pelts taken between Nov. 15, 1980 and Feb. 15, 1981 may be presented for

Brownlee noted 11,455 bobcat pelts were tagged for sale during the 1979-80 season and 14,256 during the 1978-79 sea-

Poachers Make Dent In Deer

From time to time there are articles dealing with a major topic of interest to all sportsmen and the current issue of

"Outdoor Life" is carrying such an article on game poaching and their affects on the game populations.

The article by George Laycock is entitled "Socking It to The Poachers" and goes into the details about game viole.

goes into the details about game viola-tions and this type of poaching which is actually threatening game populations in some states.

For instance, it is impossible to estimate with any precision how many deer are killed illegally, but if wildlife officials are correct, wildlife thieves take over 34,000 deer a year in New Mexico. The value of this loss is valued at more than $3

J. D. Peer

Most state officials estimate that the illegal kill of game equals or exceeds the number taken legally during the season.

In checking with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and one of their district game warden supervisors, it was learned last week that the number of game violations were up this past fall and most of the increase was for no hunting licenses. These violations are cutting into the operating funds of the P&WD as nearly all their monies come from the legal licensed sportsmen.

One bright point in West Texas, according to Supervisor Jackie Young, was a decrease in the number of hunter-related trespass complaints from landowners.

Although Texas does not have a game violation reward system for the informa tion leading to the apprehension and conviction of a game poacher, our neighbor-ing states of Oklahoma and New Mexico

In Oklahoma's Operation Game Thief, rewards range from $50 to $250. A toll-free number is furnished for the concerned person calling in the information.

In New Mexico, if you spot a poacher, you may supply the wildlife officers with the information and get a reward from $50 to $1,100. If you want to report the violation but remain anonymous, the department will assign a number to you and will arrange to deliver the money at an agreed location. Most states having a reward system find most citizens refuse the money by turning it back into the program. Even though Texas does not have this reward system, Texas sportsmen and citizens should report game violations to the P&WD. Before making the call, write down information such as vehicle license number and description; names, ad-dresses, ages, and description of suspects; kind of violation; when and where violations occurred and location of illegal

If poaching and illegal game viola-tions are not stopped, all the work of sportsmen and the P&WD will be in vain. Remember, it is your game these illegal hunters are taking and it is costing your license monies and sporting goods taxes to replace that game and protect what game is left when the poachers are

New Mexico trout fishing is being reported from fair to good by the state Game and Fish Department and the New Mexico Department has stocked 8,819 trout in Public waters during the Christ-

Bass Mark Broken

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Texas has a new largemouth bass record, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department said Sat-

John Alexander Jr. of Richardson caught a 14-pound, 31/2-ounce largemouth at Echo Lake near Athens on Jan. 10. The catch broke the previous record of 14 -11/2 set by Jim Kimbell of Pittsburg at Lake Monticello last Feb. 2.

Kimbell's bass broke a record that stood for 37 years.

Biologists said both fish were Florida strain bass of a type stocked in the lakes by state fish hatcheries

Some of the waters reporting good fishing include:

Berrendo, Bottomless Lakes and Lake Van are reporting good fishing on floating cheese and corn and the waters were recently stocked with trout.

-Sumner Lake fishing pressure is light and some walleye are being taken

-Eagle Nest Lake has some open wa-inches of ice. Most people are catching fish with some of the trout in the 12-to 15-inch class.

-Rio Grande Southern waters are reporting fair trout fishing using fireballs, floats, garlic cheese, live minnows and

Mepps spinners. -Ruidoso River is low and best trout is to use spinners and prepared baits. -San Juan River is reporting fair to

-Navajo is providing some trout being taken on lures and prepared baits, both trolling and from the shore.

-Lake Roberts was stocked with 4,-860 rainbows and fishing should be good. If you purchased an Annual New Mexico fishing license tast year, remember that license is good through March 31, 1981, and you still have a chance to catch some nice trout this winter.

Check Prosecution Office Under Fire

Avalanche-Journal Staff
Lubbock County's worthless check prosecution office recently has come under scrutiny by several members of the commissioners court, both because of a legislatively created hot check processing fee under control of the district attorney's office and the significant drop in the number of cases filed - and subsequent fines collected - during the last

Legislation passed by Texas lawmakers in 1979 allows for a processing fee of $5 to $75, depending on the amount of the hot check, to be collected. And the law places those fees strictly under the administration of the district attorney.

"I don't have any idea what that dollar volume is (from the processing fees) because it doesn't have to be reported," Commissioner Alton Brazell said.

However, District Attorney's Office Chief Administrator Hal Hensley said all records on the processing fees collected by the prosecutor's office soon will be turned over to the county auditor. He estimated that the fees collected so far are in excess of $25,000 to $30,000.

The law authorizing the collection of the processing fees went into effect Sept. 1, 1979. Most of the money collected to date has been used to supplement the salaries of personnel in the district attorney's office. Hensley explained

"He (the district attorney) can use the money for anything he wants to, except to supplement his own salary," Hensley said. "It allows us to pay people what they're worth - or at least to get close.'

However, Hensley predicted that the Texas Association of County Judges and Commissioners will bring pressure on the legislature this year to amend the processing fee statute. County officials across the state want control over that money, he said.

And, Hensley added, the county has not lost any money because the district attorney's office collects the processing fees. He said that no fee can be collected unless a fine has been collected, and all the fine money goes into the county cof-

But the amount of that fine money during the last six months has been getting smaller.

Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy noted that his office filed around 4,800 bad check cases in 1979, compared to about 2,800 filed through his office last year

A similar drop in check cases was reported by Justice of the Peace Charles Smith, who said he is "a little disillusioned" with the county's new system for handling bogus check complaints.

In the past, Lubbock merchants who had complaints about hot checks could take their information to either the district attorney's office or one of the three peace justices serving within the city lim-

LeCroy and Smith handled a large percentage of the bad check cases filed in the county

But Attorney General Mark White issued a ruling last August prohibiting peace justices from collecting debts, including restitution for bad checks. The prosecutor's office in each county now must file all check cases.

Since last spring, hot check complaints have been handled by the county's worthless check office, operated under the Criminal District Attorney's Off-are backlogged," Hensley said. "We're up to our gills downstairs," he said, referring to the check office located on the first floor of the courthouse.

Both Hensley and Mark McBride, assistant district attorney in charge of the check office, attibuted the slowdown in case flings chiefly to problems with the courthouse's overloaded computer

McBride said his office's computer program has been fully developed and ready to be put on line. But problems with the system, including an extremely slow response time for computer users, have prevented the planned computeriza-

In the meantime, McBride said, the case workload must be handled manually by the check office staff. He noted that his office has three secretaries who are attempting to do the same amount of work previously done by 11 secretaries in the district attorney's office and the peace justices' offices.

"If we're going to have to be dependent on a manual system to process hot checks, we're going to need more people," Hensley said. "If we can go on line (in the computer system), we can handle it with the current personnel."

Hensley said the check office originally was scheduled to put its program into the courthouse's computer system next

"But with the problems they're having with the computer, we decided to wait," Hensley said. "It would just be a disaster to do it now.

Despite the recent slowdown in check case filings, however, McBride said he has been pleased overall with the check office's operations. He said the new system has provided a better overall picture of the criminal records of habitual hot check writers.

In the past, a hot check artist often received only misdemeanor fines on small checks because the peace justice who was handling a complaint was unaware of any previous check law violations.

Because better records now are available, the check office is able to conduct a more concentrated review of cases, McBride said. "And we're filing many more felony check cases," he added.

McBride said that nearly a dozen felony check offenders have been prosecuted here in the past three or four months. "These are people who either need to be in the penitentiary or be under close supervision," he said. The district attorney's office also has staged two major roundups of local bad check writers, McBride said. He noted that a third raid is planned in the near future, aimed at individuals who have agreed to make restitution on their bad checks but have failed to do so.

This tougher stance on prosecuting check law violators has resulted in individuals making a bigger effort to pay off their bad checks to local merchants, McBride said.

"After the first check raid, merchants told me that people were standing in line to pay off their checks," he said.

McBride said the check office has seen a decline in the number of hot check complaints it receives. He attributed the drop in complaints to the raids.

Market Fluctuation Sparks Debate Over Technical Analysis

By CHET CURRIER
NEW YORK (AP) — The wild gyrations of the stock market early this month have set off a new and heated debate in the investment world over the pros and cons of a market-forecasting method known as technical analysis.

Joseph Granville, the investment adviser whose recommendation to dump stocks led to a sharp decline in the market on Jan. 7 and 8, is a vocal advocate of the technical approach.

As with his past recommendations,
Granville arrived at his "sell signal" by following charts and indicators of the market itself rather than external fundamentals such as interest rates or corporate earnings.

"It is the 'inner voice' of the market that has spoken," he declared in his most recent letter to subscribers.

Such pronouncements, to no one's surprise, have been met with a loud chorus of criticism from many more conventional Wall Streeters.

"People who think they can walk on water better know where the rocks are or they'll get awfully wet," remarked William M. LeFevre, an analyst at Purcell,

In the past week, the market calmed down. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 4.60 to 973.29.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained .89 to 77.33, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up 8.01 at 347.94.

Big Board volume averaged 42.79 million shares a day, against the record pace of 64.91 million the week before.

Granville is by no means the only practicioner of technical analysis. Indeed, there were some others, such as Toronto-based investment adviser Ian McAvity, who also sent out caution messages to subscribers the evening of Jan. based on the market's showing that

What caught their eye, as wall, as Granville's, was the fact that, while the Dow Jones industrials had reached a four-year high above 1,000, other, broad-

But even among technicians, there has been a good deal of sniping at Granville after his rapid change from "buy" on Jan. 3 to "sell" on the 6th.

'Market conditions do not go from technical analysts at Butcher & Singer Inc., in a recent commentary.

True, you have to issue buy and sell signals as your indicators dictate, but you must show your readers the logical progression from bullish to bearish conditions as you perceive it. The market cannot be a 'piece of cake' one day, showing great strength and looking like it could rally until March, and then a few days later be a short sale."

Raymond F. DeVoe Jr., an analyst at Bruns, Nordeman, Rea & Co., who had a lively confrontation with Granville on a television show last year, observed, "Although we don't use technical analysis, and don't attempt to understand it, we do respect the opinions of certain indi-viduals who use the technical approach.

"Those are generally the people who can point out a perspective or points that we have not considered from the funda-

But DeVoe made plain his disagree-ment with the kind of certainty about the market outlook Granville often expresses, whether in his market letter or at peaking engagements, where he has be known to appear dressed as Moses carrying tablets.

Each stock market pattern is different, and no two periods can be compared precisely," DeVoe said. "What appears to work in one period can be an invitation to disaster in another. We know only one thing for sure - that we will never know everything about the stock mar-

In the midst of the controversy, Granville has lost none of his flamboyance. In an interview with the Riverside (Calif.) Press-Enterprise while he attended a golf tournament in the past week, he was asked where the market was headed.

"In the words of the English lang-uage," he said, "straight down. We'll drop 100 points in the next four to six weeks."

MARKET UPDATE Fate Of Distribution Pattern In Doubt

By JAMES T. SCHIERMEYER Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith

The medium term background continues to be unfavorable and the gradual topping process still seems to be in force. The general trend towards distirbution was reinforced further last week when the new high in the DJ was not confirmed by either breadth or the number of new highs. The completion of this topping pattern should set the stage for a prolonged correction, with the possibility of a late winter-early spring downside target in

We doubt, however, that the distribution pattern is complete, especially in view of the quick revival of pessimism during the last few days. Put activity, for instance, has jumped sharply while our sample of shorting has risen to its highest level in some time. This rapid shift to skepticism is not typical of the psychology at the outset of a sig-nificant decline and instead, suggests the probability of ad-

SCHIERMEYER ditional tests of the highs before a prolonged correction develops. This, in turn, might extend the overall topping process into mid-Feb-

Very near term, the market has stabilized and begun to bounce. The bounce, however, started without a preceding oversold, so upside potential at this point might be very selective. A more desirable pattern would be further consolidation (or pullback) accompanied by additional technical improvement. This could set the stage for a trading rally back up to the highs

HOW A FUNDAMENTAL ANALYST SIZES UP COMPANIES

A security analyst's primary objective is to develop insights which go be yond the level of investor perception. How does one accomplish this? By identifying change, and determining value. Change may refer to shifts in management, developments in technology, or alterations in the economic or industrial environment — all of which can influence future changes in a company's earnings growth rate. An analyst looks for companies whose future earnings growth rate will be different than recent earnings rates-but where the stock's present price still reflects current, rather than future conditions.

It is essential to analyze a company as a business, and to understand the industrial environment in which it operates; important changes occurring in the company or industry can be a signal that a changed opinion might be appropriate. That is why an analyst might recommend a "Buy" on a stock if the future looks good, even if the industry is currently in bad shape so long as a bright light is at the end of the tunnel. The other task of an analyst is to establish value-how is a company's stock priced in relation to the market? How does its price-earnings multiple compare with the average price-earnings multiple of the general market? Most stocks are the right price most of the time, as a natural function of an efficient market. An analyst must find those stocks which are not at the right price-which are overpriced or underpriced in relation to the average market multiple. This appears to be the key: given a company's fundamentals and its quality, does its stock deserve to be selling at a discount, at the market, or at a premium to the average market multiple?

What are some of the factors an analyst examines?

1. Earnings growth-past, present, and expected

2. Return on invested equity 3. Management quality

4. Dominance in its own markets and products; competitive positions in its

5. Participation in growth areas

Prospects for dividend growth

Balance sheet strenght; accounting policies

8. Predictability of earnings 9. Amount of dividend

10. Excitement value

11. Economic environment

12. Industry environment; what are the industry characteristics? What factors determine profitability?

13. Technological developments

14. Investor perception-is there an imbalance between negative perception and a positive future projection?

Where does an analyst obtain all this information?

1. Reading trade and government publications 2. Analyzing balance sheets and financial statements

Talking to people

a. Company executives at least once per quarter; companies rated "Buy" ever more frequently b. Suppliers and wholesalers

c. Competitors-they provide the best information d. Legislative contacts in Washington

e. Trade press reports

4. Makeing personal visits-usually once or twice a year 5. Attending conventions

6. Using outside computer research sources

Examining special situations 8. Attending analysts' meetings

An analyst must sift carefully through such data to pick out what is revelent and important, and what is not; to determine which factors could prove to be the source of profits and which of problems. Ultimately, an analyst's decision is based on his subjective judgment.

There is a wide divergence of opinion regarding the impact of economic conditions on the formulation of investment decisions; to some extent, this reflects the type of industry followed. Some analysts feel that the condition of the economy is a major factor in assessing the future prospects of a company; they would not recommend a "Buy" on a stock if the economic outlook was not propitious, on the theory that even a good company's stock generally cannot perform well in a poor economic environment. On the other hand, some analysts feel that although, theoretically, the economy should impact their opinions, the economy's lack of predicatbility tends to emphasize its influence and deal with the fundamentals of an individual company. Between the extremes, there are many shades of opinion.

One of an analyst's responsibilities is to help a client avoid losing money by somtimes saying: "This stock is overpriced, it is ahead of itself in relation to the market; the upside is limites and the downside is not. Sell.'

No security analyst is always right, of course, because security analysis is an art, not a science, in spite of the scientific methods it employs. But considering the opinions of respected analysts is certainly the most intelligent way of making investment decisions.

Elevator Mishap Blamed On Latch

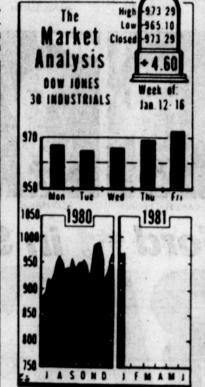

CHICAGO (AP) - A defective latch has been blamed for an accident in which an elevator overshot the first floor of the First National Bank of Chicago Building. injuring 13 passengers.

The latch, on the first floor, failed to halt the elevator as it descended from the 56th floor Thursday night, allowing it to fall onto a set of hydraulic buffers at the bottom of the shaft, Nick Fera, assistant commissioner of the city's Department of Inspectional Services, said Friday. He said the defect would not have been detected in routine city inspections. A spokesman for Westinghouse Elevator

Co., the manufacturer, said investigators had not determined why the latch failed. CAR OWNERS SUE FIRM

NEW YORK (AP) - Owners of GM cars in five states filed a $10 million suit against General Motors Corp. charging dealers failed to make adequate repair under warranty on certain defective GM tranmissions. The suit, filed Friday in U.S. District Court in Manhattan by 103 plaintiffs from Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, seeks class-action status on behalf of thousands of car owners with similar complaints.

Auto Makers May Seek More Pay Cuts

Chrysler's 61,000 active and 47,000 laid-off UAW members in the United States and Canada are being asked to approve what amounts to a roughly 12 percent pay cut in March, their third concession in 16 months. The cut would yield Chrysler an estimated $622 million in savings by September 1982, when the current contract expires. Corresponding cuts are to bring in $161 million from non-UAW workers. Some 250 local union officers are scheduled to vote Monday in Detroit on whether to recommend ratification by the members. The Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board should have given final approval to $400 million in new loan guarantees for the company Friday after confirming counterpart concessions from lenders that would wipe $1 billion in debt off the bal-

But Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, who chairs the board, put off any decision until Monday because he was tied up with banking negotiations aim at freeing the U.S. hostages in Iran.

Goldschmidt's report did not envision that labor alone would save the U.S. auto industry from the onslaught of Japanese cars, which now account for 21 percent of the U.S. market.

He recommended a negotiated agreement to limit Japanese shipments to the United States, a limitation refused last year by the U.S. International Trade Commission, Goldschmidt also urged government help in raising capital and some relief from federal regulations.

The House has replaced a number of old, wooden chairs in the gallery. And "it's about time," says 68-year-old COarleston resident Wade Bodkin, a

Oswald's Mother Dies Of Cancer

FORT WORTH (UPI) - Mrs. Marguerite Oswald, mother of accused presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald, died Saturday of cancer. She was 73.

Mrs. Oswald carried on an often bitter campaign against the findings of the Warren Commission, which concluded her son had acted alone in murdering President John F. Kennedy in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963. She died in a Fort Worth hospital before dawn Saturday. Mrs. Oswald was survived by a son, Robert, of Denton. In the years following the assassina-tion Mrs. Oswald was active in her bid to have her son's name cleared. But in her later years she became more and more of a recluse. Her first major attempt to argue against the Warren Commission's findings came before the commission itself in "Human beings are not infallible," she said on that occasion. "They are subject to error. I can prove my son's innoc-

But after her six-hour testimony be-fore the commission, Chief Justice Earl Warren said she had added nothing to the

Mrs. Oswald also charged local police with following her whenever important political figures came into the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Her most heated charge came after vice president Hubert Humphrey came to Fort Worth in 1965.

"No sooner had I driven away from my home than I noticed this car right behind me," Mrs. Oswald said on that occasion. "I took all sorts of unusual streets and made a lot of funny turns and still they were behind me. "It's a sad thing when you are suspected like this." A spokesman for Harris Hospital in Fort Worth said Mrs. Oswald was admitted in late November and was allowed special treatment by hospital officials in that no information was released concerning her illness. The fact she was in the hospital was kept secret from most of the hospital

"She was alone and estranged from her family and had to make all the decisions concerning her own care and wel-fare," said Dr. John Johnson, one of the physicians who attended Mrs. Oswald.

Special Envoy's Persian Gulf Peace Bid Falters

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Special U.N. envoy Olof Palme's second peace mission to the Persian Gulf foundered Saturday when both the Iranian president and prime minister refused to consider any concession to Iraqi invaders.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr categorically rejected talks to end the 17-week-old conflict on Iraqi terms, Tehran Radio reported.

Palme met separately with Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai, who reiterated his demand for an unconditional Iraqi withdrawal from Iraqian territory. Iran cannot accept dictated peace terms," Bani-Sadr declared after his onehour conference with the former Swedish prime minister in the Tranian capital. "Iraq must stop its U.S.-backed aggression against Iran and the achievements of its Islamic revolution.' The statements indicated this effort would end like Palme's mediation mission last November — in failure.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein assured Palme in Baghdad Thursday that he was willing to talk peace if Iran recognized Iraqi sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab waterway, which forms part of the Iran-Iraq border and provides Iraq's only outlet to the Persian Gulf.

Rajai said Saturday the war has turned 1.5 million Iranians into "homeless, jobless refugees" and called upon his 36 million countrymen to prepare for a prolonged combat. Meanwhile, Hussein declared the two-week-old Iranian counter-offensive 'completely crushed." He claimed his nation's forces have gained "stronger positions from which to inflict heavier losses and casualties on the enemy" in the main battlegrounds of western and southwestern Iran.

Baghdad Radio reported 215 Iranian troops were killed and two helicopter gunships downed during the previous 24 hours. It conceded 20 Iraqis were killed in the same period.

A communique from the Iranian command broadcast by Tehran Radio claimed 90 Iraqis were killed in action

The communique charged the Iraqis shelled residential areas of Iran's be-sieged oil refining city of Abadan Saturday, causing heavy damage to a hospital and killing one civilian. Neither nation reported any major change in positions along the 300-mile-long war front. Tehran Radio quoted Rajai as saying: "We in the government will spare no effort to ease the crises of the refugees and unemployment. But the nation as a whole should join in the effort and prepare to cope with the effects of a pro-

He said the war has closed many industries and factories, sharply increasing unemployment. Many refugees, he said, were moved from battle-scared western Iran to camps in eastern regions bordering the Soviet Union and Afghanistan. President Hussein made his victory claim in an interview published simulta-neously by Kuwait's five daily newspapers. The dailies quoted him as saving Iran lost 388 tanks in a five-day battle last week that left their counter-offensive in shambles in the rain-drenched marshes of Iran's oil province of Khuzistan. Western newsmen who visited the battle scene south of the Iranian town of Susangerd reported the Iranians were not anywhere to be seen.

Iran's official Pars news agency reported Saturday that the northwestern town of Nowsud has been recaptured from autonomy seeking Kurdish rebels in a three-day attack by helicopter-borne government forces.

Pars claimed more than 200 Kurdish insurgents were killed or wounded in the attack. Nowsud is close to the northern frontier of Iran, which has repeatedly accused Iraq of encouraging Kurdish insu gents to proclaim a breakaway state in northwestern Iran.

The Kurds are Sunni Moslems, as are the majority of Iraqis. Iran is a Shiite Moslem nation predominantly comprised of non-Arab ethnic Persians. Iraqis are JERUSALEM (AP) - Stricken by a new crisis over the choice of a finance minister, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's beleaguered government was ex-pected to announce Sunday it would call new elections this summer, five months ahead of schedule.

Israel radio and television said a majority of Begin's cabinet appeared to favor early elections to preempt opposition bids to topple the government in the Knesset (parliament). The most likely date for elections was mid-June, exactly four years after Begin's conservative government took off-Begin lost his parliamentary majority last week when Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz quit and led his three-man Rafi party out of the ruling coalition, reducing the coalition seats to 58 or 59 in the 120member house. Meanwhile, a fresh storm was brewing over the choice of Hurvitz's replacement between the two main factions of Begin's Likud bloc, the Liberals and the Herut (Freedom) Party. Israel television reported that the smaller Liberal wing was threatening to break the 16-year alliance with Begin's Herut and run independently in the coming elections unless one of its candidates was given Hurvitz's job.

The Liberal faction is mainly the party of big business. Begin founded the Herut party in 1948 on the ideological

Scaffolding Falls At Inaugural Site

WASHINGTON (AP) - A scaffolding collapsed at the Lincoln Memorial on Saturday, hours before President-elect Ronald Reagan and thousands of others gathered for opening ceremonies of the four-day inaugural celebration, U.S. Park Police said.

Officials said one man was in critical condition after the incident early Saturday afternoon. The victim, whose name was not immediately released, apparently suffered cardiac arrest. He was taken by helicopter to a local hospital for treatment, police said.

Officials speculated that high winds contributed to the fall of the scaffolding, which apparently was to be used during the opening ceremonies.

tenet of Jewish statehood for all of ancient Palestine. Begin has been acting finance minister since Hurvitz's resignation took effect last Tuesday. But the absence of a fulltime minister has halted planning for next year's budget, which was to have been presented to the Knesset two weeks

Begin also has been in charge of defense since Ezer Weizman quit as deense minister last May. If the government chooses to advance elections as expected, it will sponsor a bill dissolving the Knesset and setting a new date at least 100 days hence. The bill could be rushed through the Knesset as early as Wednesday. The opposition Labor party, which holds a wide lead over the Likud in public opinion polls, also has prepared a dissolution bill which it says it will raise

Other experts say the death penalty doesn't deter because criminals don't expect to get caught. Unfortunately, statistics are scarce and ambiguous.

Another problem: there's no way to make amends if a mistake is made. Enough innocent people have been convicted of crimes—with the truth surfacing only years later—to make this a very real concern.

Finally, many people feel that the taking of human life is an act that demeans the state to a degree that is unacceptable in a civilized society.

Carter Awaits Response

WASHINGTON (AP) - Enjoying his last weekend at the presidential retreat at Camp David, President Carter kept in touch Saturday with administration officials handling negotiations to free 52 Americans held in Iran.

Like other presidents before him, Carter became quite fond of Camp David and chose to spend his final weekend as president at the mountaintop retreat in Maryland which saw one of his biggest triumphs as well as several of the most troubled days of his administration.

Carter spoke to Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie and Deputy Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher, who is heading the U.S. negotiating team in Algiers, by telephone on Friday night, Carter was in touch with them again Saturday, as well as with presidential counsel Lloyd Cutler and the Iran working group. Powell said.

The press secretary would not say whether Carter would fly to Germany to leased. "We are not even close to making that sort of decision. I think it's highly speculative," Powell said. Upon his return to Washington on tonight, Carter will have just one full day left at the White House before he and first lady Rosalynn Carter greet Ronald Reagan and his wife, Nancy, for coffee and then ride off to Reagan's inauguration at the Capitol on Tuesday.

White House officials provided few details of Carter's schedule for his final days in office. Spokeswoman Claudia Townsend said that after the "private weekend" at Camp David, Carter planned to host a White House reception Monday evening for Cabinet members and other senior officials of his adminisseeing the loading of Carter's presidenti-al papers aboard 15 to 20 large moving vans, to be sealed and driven under military guard to an abandoned post office building in Atlanta, Ga.

Government archivists there will begin the long process of sorting and indexing the papers, destined eventually for a Carter library.

Carter is the last president to own the massive collection of documents generated during his tenure in the White House. Under legislation adopted by Congress in 1978, the papers of Reagan and future presidents will become property of the government when they leave office.

The Camp David weekend will give Carter and his family a final chance to relax amid the rustic lodges, wooded trails and recreational amenities of the 134acre retreat that President Franklin D. Roosevelt used to call "Shangri-La," an illusion to the placid Tibetan realm of James Hilton's "Lost Horizons."

That allusion hasn't always been appropriate to Carter's time at Camp David.

When he came down from the mountain, Carter implemented a controversial overhaul of his Cabinet, renewed his commitment to a national energy program and gave a nationally broadcast speech on a "crisis of the American spirit." The president's speech was criticized by some as blaming the public for his own leadership defficiencies.

That low point of Carter's administration came only 10 months after the historic Camp David accords were laboriously hammered out at a summit involving Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

The peace settlement brought international acclaim for Carter, whom Begin saluted for working "harder than our for-efathers did in building the pyramids of

There were few outward signs of eparations to recieve the hostages at U.S. military facilities. But Kennedy said current plans definitely are to bring them to Wiesbaden, about 20 miles west of Frankfurt, for a stay at the central German spa's U.S. Air Force Hospital.

A LITTLE GIRL LOOKING FOR A ROLE MODEL could do no better than Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, whose pioneering work has had a profound effect on the way we deal with death and the

Her life, as recounted in a biography, Quest: The Life of Elisabeth Kubler-Ross" by Derek Gill (Harper & Row), displays a remarkable independence of spirit and determination to find her own way in life regardless of the cost - or the consequences.

BORN IN ZURICH, SWITZERLAND, she experienced, during a bout with pneumonia when she was only five, the de-humanizing procedures too often used in medical facilities, against which she was to fight with a fierce dedication for the rest of her life.

Much later, as a physician, she lectured medical students on the harm of such attitudes. recalling that "utterly confused little patient" who was "treated as a thing" rather than as a person, much less a child.

As she grew, she reflected that she hoped to explore "unknown frontiers of human knowledge," study life, the nature of man. plants. animals, the world. Drawn to medicine by her intelligence. curiosity and concern for people, sheconsidered becoming a nurse. Eventually she realized that, for her, this would be a compromise. She wanted to be a doctor.

That, of course, was impossible.

HER FATHER ENCOURAGED HER to enter his firm as a secretary and bookkeeper, fitting roles for a woman. She left home, worked as a housekeeper. Always medicine called her. She apprenticed herself to a hospital lab.

She heard of Hitler's invasion of Poland, resolved she would one day find a way to help the people of that oppressed nation. Later, as a member of the International Voluntary Service for Peace, she helped build a school and worked in a clinic in a Polish village near the Russian

A visit to a concentration camp at Maidanek made a profound impression. Always her inner eve observed injustice, oppression, cruelty, neglect, inhumanity, foolishness.

She returned home, her resolve strengthened. She would be put off no longer. She studied on her own, qualified for medical school, supported herself while she studied because her father would not sanction her goal. In 1957, she achieved her dream.

By 1958 she was in New York, mar ried. She completed her internship, was a resident at Manhattan State Hospital on Ward's Island, which reminded her of a concentration camp - "A nightmare of bedlam where the mentally sick are often treated like animals, freaks or human

She put aside standard treatment and texts, evolved a system in which patients earned favors by practicing personal grooming and good habits. She opened her office to them, talked about their problems. By the time she finished her internship, more than three-quarters of her patients were also ready to leave.

AS AN INSTRUCTOR at the University of Colorado School of Medicine, she gave her first talk on a subject that was to become an obsession. Physicians, she observed, received no education on the subject closest, and yet farthest from them: death.

She spoke of rituals and attitudes in other cultures, contrasting these with American death-denying ways.

In the manner of Swiss medical schools, she brought a 16-year-old leukemia patient into the lecture room. The future physicians were stunned - but they listened.

Thus began a teaching method which involved making the patient, rather than the disease, the center of attention. She let the dying talk - and listened to them.

She wrote "Death and Dying." a remarkable. precedent-setting book, in three months, between midnight and 2 a.m. A story on her unique seminars appeared in "Life," and she became famous. Her interest, her field, and her methods made it difficult for her to work in a regular establishment. She has, for the last several years, lectured, written, done workshops, spoken and worked with medical persons and students and above all, perhaps - talked with, and listened to, dying people · Her quest has led her down strange paths. Patients "brought back" from the dead recount visions, dreams, impressions, experiences - whatever you choose to call them - of the afterlife. She does not dimiss such experiences as wishful thinking," as some do, not even or especially not) when they are mystical, religious in nature. She goes with her people, takes them seriously, listens. And grows, herself.

HER LIFE IS STREWN WITH LES-SONS, not the least of which is that one should not give up easily

Also, this: sick people are people, not diseases. They have things to say, and should be listened to. Even, obeyed. There is no point in life at which we abdicate our right to be treated, and listened to, as people, and to have control over our own lives.

Also, this: people who are dying have something to say to people who are living about life, about death and even, it seems, about what comes next

PAP SMEAR

A panel convened recently by the Na-tional Institutes of Health recommended that after two consecutive Pap smears with negative findings, screenings should be "repeated at regular intervals of one to three years." As reported in MEDI-CAL TRIBUNE, the panel did not agree on how often women of different ages or those considered high risk should be screened. Prior to the NIH conference, the American Cancer Society had adopted the Canadian approach to screening: once every three years rather than annually. In the U.S. it had been annually.

Both of Mrs. Sadler's parents were deaf. She, and a younger sister, have normal hearing.

When asked whether her parents' deafness posed special problems as she was growing up, she admits it sometimes did. "But it wasn't difficult," she emphasizes, "just different.

Mrs. Sadler explains briefly how students come into the regional deaf pro-

"If a parent or teacher suspects a child has a hearing loss, there is a very simple screening that can be done by the school nurse," Mrs. Sadler says. 'Admittedly, such a screening would not pick up certain conditions but it would be a way to begin.

Mrs. Sadler adds, "Should the student fail the screening, the school nurse can ed in accepting a position with the Re-gional Program for the Deaf. She was refer the individual - through the parent and school - for further testing by an audiologist.

"Should the student be found to have a hearing impairment and a school system in the area says it cannot provide a quality education for him, then the request goes to a committee that decides on the need for individuals to enter the regional deaf program.

Following certification. Mrs. Sadler says she now becomes more involved

"After thorough educational testing." Mrs. Sadler explains, "we go into the classroom and consult with the teacher. We feel the teacher is a good judge of what the individual's needs are.

"Finally, a highly individualized plan for the child's education is developed. Moreover, we periodically go back, retest and see what progress the child is making.

In essence, Mrs. Sadler looks with optimism regarding future careers of deaf students

When my father received his schooling at Austin," she notes, "few choices of training were available. As a result, he was encouraged to become a linotype operator - a job many deaf persons were trained to do at the time.

Now, there are many more opportunities available for the hearing impaired and less stereotyping. Deaf persons can become doctors, researchers and so on. Certainly, these people can seek higher education.

Mrs. Sadler's interest in helping the hearing impaired does not stop when she leaves her office: Currently, she is interpreting Sunday services for deaf persons at St. John's United Methodist Church.

But this ministry is only a very small part of what our congregation is trying to do to help the handicapped." she states. "We have developed specific goals, with probably the most important being to educate the congregation as to the needs of handicapped persons.

"Of course, we're studying the different kinds of handicaps, how a particular handicap affects a person, how we can break down barriers that tend to isolate the handicapped - to name a few discussion topics.

Mrs. Sadler emphasizes that the congregation of St. John's cannot make all the changes they want to within a short

"But it's a beginning." she comments. "and may I just say how proud I am to be a member of a church that recognizes needs and tries to do something about them!

School Volunteers Extend 'Helping Hand'

By JACQUE HUTCHINS

Family News Staff In schools all over Lubbock, vo give graciously of their time and ability to help the teachers and children. Some contribute a few hours a week; others, in their desire to help others, give more than could be expected of anyone.

Such is the case of three exceptional volunteers for Lubbock schools, who have been an inspiration to other volunteers, students and teachers alike.

Lily Wu Chen is a volunteer for Marion McCoy's first grade class at Jackson Elementary School. Although she only knows a few Engligh words, she is regarded as an exceptional volunteer.

Through Teacher Corps, the volunteers are assimilated into the most appropriate positions Claire Nussbaum, community coordinator for Teacher Corps, was astonished that a non-English speaking person would seek the role of a volunteer. She explained that Teacher Corps is always looking for that kind of enthusiasm.

"First grade teachers are geared to get around something that the kids do not understand. So Mrs. McCoy does the same with Lily." said Miss Nussbaum. Parkway Elementary School also has an active volunteer program. This year they are enacting a unique program designed to stimulate continuing education. Grover C. Colvin will be heading up the program under the direction of Nettie Edwards, assistant principal at Parkway.

The program is three-fold said Colvin. "We hope to develop and promote a positive and healthy self image of the children. Develop love and respect for their community, school and country and provide resourse people in all community areas," said Colvin. The volunteers for the program will be working with parents to help children in these areas.

BY FLORENCE DE SANTIS
NEW YORK (NEA)— The puffy, down-filled jacket now seen everywhere down-filled jacket now seen everywhere on city streets started life on the ski slopes. So did parkas and stretchpants. General sportswear styling finally brightened up action clothes in other sports, but skiwear has always started trends that influenced general sportswear.

Perhaps it is only in this sport fashion that several leading designers would band together and send out a live TV fashion show to 20 cities. With Barbara Alley fashion consultant for "Skijing"

Alley, fashion consultant for "Skiiing" magazine, acting as coordinator and traveling den mother, seven dancers are doing a live, choreographed ski fashin show; they'll tape the segment for syndi-cation on the Merv Griffin show.

"We're using the dance format to em-phasize that skiwear is designed for action," said Miss Alley. "Skiing has always been divided between its action needs and the fashion impulse. After all, it was the first sport to coin a scornful term for women who wore overly fancy garb — "snow bunnies." Fashion's hold has always come second

Nevertheless, skiwear changes more each sport season, and makers of general sportswear eagerly watch for new ideas to pick up. For example, to give downfill smaller poufs, in order to make the jack-et cling closer, elasticized or "stretch; quilting is being used. Aspen Skiwear stretch-quilts a red nylon parka in an asymmetric pattern on the body, horizon-tal bands on the sleeves. Their fill is a high-loft polyester fiber, but the principal of flattening it somewhat is the same. This year, pants also get quilted detailing, mostly on protective knee pads. New are the "gaiter" legs, in which just below the knee the pants widen out into an insulated lower leg, often quilted and in striped or two-tone color to contrast with the above-knee part. Roffe does these with a quilted pullover top that matches the red and French blue of the gaiters; the upper, stretch half of the-turn of stretchpants, with their under-foot straps, means that pants are again going inside the boots. Roffe provides separate gaiters that go over the boot while skiiing, and come off to allow the sleek stretch pants to be worn after

The return of the stretch pants doesn't mean that they're exactly like the first ones of a decade ago. Now they have bib fronts and straps to keep them snugly in place on the body. Everything is done to give the pants maximum flex, such as a wide crossover back with Lycra stretch insert for bend over action. CB Sports uses this idea, while White Stag likes suspenders combined with a protective highback waistband.

Fabrics always make news in skiwear. The trend is to more of the iridescents The trend is to more of the iridescents launched last year, already being picked up in general sportswear. Nylon shimmers subtly in white, silvery pewter, mixed blue and silver in an opalescent effect and marine green or navy for men. Slalom Skiwear's iridescent nylon features ripstop threading, while Cevas uses a new silky featherweight nylon called "plume."

Ski designers with an eye on general wearability include Alphine Designers, with its wine and ivory reversible men's jacket and Head Skiwear, with its "wind shield" pullover top adapted from crosscountry ski wear.

WASHGINTON, D.C. (Special) -Women are twice as likely to have canker sores as men and about 90 percent of the time, similar oral ulcers are found in other members of the family," according to a U.S. Public Health Service booklet.

Canker sores (apthous ulcers) are recurring sores that form inside the mouth. They frequently appear in groups and most often are limited to the inside of the cheeks and lips, the tongue or soft palate. The ulcer is round or oval, grayish-white and has a bright red edge.

Proxigel, a cleaning and debriding medication in gel form, is currently recommended by many physicians and dentists to facilitate healing and to help keep the area clean. No prescription is re-

Even in the best-run institutions, the older person is usually cut off from nor-mal human companionship, denied pro-ductive activity and isolated from family, friends and surroundings which once

Too often, such a person may fall into depression, ceasing to take an interest in his appearance, food or social interac-

Nursing home personnel rarely have the time to give such a resident the extra attention and kindness that might draw him out of his despondency.

Special Friend is a new program designed especially to help the elderly caught in this situation. The first such by the Tarrant Texas County Volunteer Center and the county Mental Health As-

Matching volunteer visitors on a one-to-one basis with troubled senior citizens who are institutionalized, the program has received rave reviews from the participants, nursing home administrators and volunteers. In most cases a dramatic hange for the better was seen in the elderly person involved.

The program is being lunached in Lubbock under the abspices of the Re-tired Senior Volunteer Program and the Long-Term Care Unit of the Texas Department of Health, Region II.

A training program for the first volunteers in the program will take place dur-ing February. Meeting Mondays from 1-3:30 p.m. in the Community Room of Mahon Library, the training sessions will call upon the skills of community resources persons to provide volunteers with practical skills in dealing with the elderly residents of nursing homes.

The goals of the friendship program are to make a positive difference in the lives of nursing home residents; to assist in enriching and normalizing the lives of those who most need that assistance; to help overcome isolation and improve the help overcome isolation and improve the self-image of the residents; and to involve residents in relationship with someone other than nursing home staff and other residents.

According to Betty Anderson, past director of RSVP, "one of the serious problems facing our nation is how to provide genuinely tender loving care for nursing home residents who may be depressed, lonely and emotionally as well as physically disabled.

"Many nursing home reisdents have no family living near Lubbock. They need someone to bring the 'outside world' to them. The Nursing Homes Volunteer Program has been developed to assist in enriching and normalizing the lives of those who most need that assistance. Volunteers are being sought for the program who have the sympathy and desire to be a "special friend" to someone in a nursing home. They will be required to participate in the training program and expected to fulfill their obligations

The main responsibilities of the volunteers will be to act compassionately and with understanding in their dealing with elderly residents; be patient, friendly, persistentent and positive in their out look; cooperate with the nursing home staff; be dependable. They will be ex-pected to refrain from forcing their val-ues on the residents with whom they are dealing, and encouraged to approach them rather as friendly visitors, open and understanding of their problems, and good listeners. They will abide by the rules of the nursing homes in which they are operating, and expected to deal pleasantly with the staff in regard to any complaints of the residents. complaints of the residents.

Use Same Tricks Supermarkets Use To Resist Trap Of Impulse Buying

By ELLIE GROSSMAN NEW YORK (NEA) - See, and ye shall buy - if that supermarket item is packaged right, placed at eye level (eight to 10 inches above or below 5-feet-five for women; 5-feet-10 for men) and situated either in the dairy section (most people buy milk) or, better still, at the check-out (most people pay).

"The whole trick in an impulse item is to attract the consumer in a split second," says Mike Wahl, president of Marlboro Marketing, in-store product management consultants. "Make her touch it and feel it because the minute she picks it up, usually the sale is made. Now, you can get people to buy things once, with tricky-dicky packaging, strong advertising and good merchandising. But to get the consumer to buy the product regularly, it has to be good.

'And useful. Not gimmicky like chocolate covered pretzels in a package that's also a whistle. There's no real reason for buying it except your kid wants the whistle

These days, most people can't afford that kind of impulse. The trick, then, is knowing how to buy.

Begin, Wahl says, by "figuring out your consumptiom patterns. If you're making spaghetti sauce for a family of five, how much do you need? Judge by your eye. Do you usually have a lot left over when you're finished? One serious problem is that people overbuy. Why buy a giant box of cereal that will last three months if it gets stale before you use it?

"Go shopping with an integrated meal list," he continues, "rather than I need this and that.' And when staples like toilet paper are on sale, stock up because you know you'll use them."

Clip coupons, scan the papers for sales, read ingredients on labels ("Is that what I want my kid to eat?") and whatever else you can get your hand on. Says Wahl, "There are free publications available to educate you about meal planning, nutrition, etc. The government, for instance, spends millions of dollars for this research and the only one who take advantage of it are the big food

They go out and use it to get you to come in and buy. Sometimes with gimmicks, sometimes not. Those jars that say, "coupon inside, 4 cents off on next purchase, for instance. By all means, buy them," he says. "That's not a gimmick. The manufacturer is actually making a deal with the consumer when he runs that coupon because he knows that with inflation there's a lot of split shopping." As far as brands go, take advantage of brand-less or generic foods, when it's to your advantage. "A coupon item can be cheaper than a generic so the consumer has to be alert," he says.

The bottom line, though, if you really want to save money, he says, is "homemaking." "A frozen TV dinner costs a lot more than roasting your own chicken, and look at salad dressing. It's expensive as hell. If you use a lot of Russian dressing, say, make a quart of your own and save 70 percent."

Those jelly lovers should arm themselves with the best anti-buying weapon' Wahl knows. "Go shopping with some-one who says, 'You don't need it.' I'm a supermarket freak myself. I'll buy anything once," he says. "Every time we go shopping, my wife must put back a dozen things I throw in the cart."

Not on impulse, either.

Fanned Yams Make Hearty Dish

NEW YORK (Special) - Gloriously golden yams make a stunning presentation on any table. And now's the time to buy this extra-moist type of sweetpotato, for they're in plentiful supply throughout the winter.

For an extra-easy main dish, try Fanned Yams and Ham - it needs only a salad to complete the meal. This unique presentation is named because the raw tuber's sliced nearly, but not completely through and pieces of ham - or any other meat on hand - are wedged between the slices. When baked, the sweet potato fans out in a beautiful display. The edges are crisply browned, the centers appealingly tender. A luscious cheesy-mustard sauce tops each serving of this hearty, homey dish.

Candied yams are always popular. For an exciting way to serve this oldfashioned favorite, try Candied Fanned Yams. Butter, brown sugar, and freshlysqueezed lemon juice make a lovely, piquant glaze for this colorful side dish.

Slicing the yams only part-way through is simple to do if you place the vegetable in a position that prevents the knife from cutting too deeply. Cradle the next to a quarter-inch thick cutting board, or insert a metal skewer through the tuber near the bottom (remove the skewer after slicing).

When you're buying yams, choose firm tubers that are smooth, clean and have a bright copper color. They store best at room temperature in a paper bag to prevent drying or wilting.

FANNED YAMS AND HAM 4 med.-sized yams 1/2 lb. sliced cooked ham

(about 8 slices) 1 tbsp. butter or margarine 11/2 tbsp. all-purpose flour

13/4 cups milk 1/2 cup shredded Swiss cheese 1 tbsp. prepared mastard 1/4 tsp. dried leaf tarragon

Place yam on a wooden spoon large enough to cradle it. Slice down into 4 slices. (The curved bowl of the spoon will prevent the knife from slicing completely through the yam.) Place yams in a 9x9inch baking pan. Cover with aluminum foil and bake in a 425 degree oven 25 mina triangular shape. Place one ham triangle in each yam pocket. Return to oven. Bake 30 minutes longer or until yams are tender. Meanwhile, in a medium saucepan, melt butter; stir in flour, cook, stirring constantly, 2 minutes. Remove from heat, gradually stir in milk. Return to heat, sitrring constantly until sauce boils and thickens. Stir in cheesemustard, tarragon and salt; continue stirring until cheese melts. Spoon over yams. Serves 2.

CANDIED FANNED YAMS 4 med. size yams 3/4 cup dark brown sugar, firmly packed 3 tbsps. butter or margarine, melted 2 tbsps. freshly squeezed lemon juice 1/2 tsp. freshly grated lemon peel

Place yam on a wooden spoon large enough to cradle it. Slice down at 1/2 inch intervals. (The curved bowl of the spoon will prevent the knife from slicing completely through the yam.) Place yams in a buttered 9x9-inch baking pan. Cover with aluminum foil. Bake in a 425 degree oven 15 minutes. Combine brown sugar, butter, lemon juice and lemon peel; spoon over yams. SALES CAREER

It's hard for women to see how well the training they've received all their lives equips them for a sales career. The traditional feminine virtues are, in fact, precisely those of successful sales reps: the verbal skill of a teacher (and mother); the social aplomb of a good secretary (and mother); the persuasive ability of a volunteer (and mother); the empathy of a social worker (and mother); the organizational ability of a homemaker (and

WORKING WARDROBE - On-the-job or on the town, Butterick's suit emphasizes the feminine approach to dressing. It's in a wash and wear stretch textured polyester. The easy elegance of a double front-pleated skirt is enhanced by a jacket with lightly padded shoulders, narrow lapels and a graceful fitted waist.

NAUTICAL NEWS — Nautical inspired separates are sewn with ease from a Vogue pattern. This important trend is right for business or social occasions. A front-pleated navy skirt and a short, square-shouldered, double-breasted jacket in white are colorfully accented with a yarn-dyed plaid blouse.

FASHION SENSE - Multi-purpose ensembles sewn from Butterick patterns make good fashion sense for the woman on the go. Made in easy-care polyester and rayon, this dress and jacket create a sophisticated business look. The border print dress worn alone is a feminine choice for evening.

Career Women Use Home-Sewn Styles

NEW YORK (Special) - If you're one of the 44 million working women in America, why not consider doing practically all your wardrobe expanding at home? All it takes is a trip to a fabric store to select some of the season's most fashionable fabrics and patterns.

In the comfort of your own home, you can create sophisticated inflation-defying styles that work all day long and still look great for after-hour appointments. And, for your busy schedule, easy-care fabrics such as those containing polyester will keep you looking fresh and business-like with a minimum of fuss.

One of the leading styles for spring is the Nautical Look. A classic, front-pleated navy skirt is an ideal starting point for an ensemble that works for business and social occasions. Coordinate it with a short, double-breasted jacket in white and a colorful yarn-dyed plaid blouse. It's a-fresh, lady-like outfit that combines mix and match separates.

ted waist and slim lapels for an outfit with feminine flair — that still states you mean business.

For the woman on the go, a dress and blazer provide versatility. A floral border-print dress combined with a solid blazer with a relaxed silhouette makes a good business ensemble. The dress on it own is an eye-catching evening look for dinner, dancing or theater.

As living spaces get smaller, innova-tive home decorating with these same apparel fabrics is easy-going on your budget. A space saving technique for the working woman converts a closet into an OFFICE NOOK - Space enpanding techniques can also adu a designer look to a room. This at-home office nook, converted from a closet, features yarn-dyed plaid of polyester and cotton.

For the closet space, doors are removed and fabric is hemmed and shirred on rods. The chair cushion and desk blotter are covered in a solid broadcloth for contrast.

WARM AND PRETTY

Here are some ideas on how to be warm yet alluring at those parties on frosty nights. A knitted, pastel bedjacket decorated with a satin bow makes a pretty topper for a slinky outfit. A beaded or sequined cardigan - new, antique or make-it-yourself - look great over a disco dress. A fluffy or patterned shawl is glamorous draped over your everday coat - and looks good over a dress if it's chilly inside. A soft scarf won't mess your hair like a hat

"It has been a revealing and humbling experience to learn of the art of Constructive listening..."

These are the comments of three CONTACT-Lubbock volunteers after completing the training program provided by the organization to persons who work in its telephone ministry.

The Rey. Robert Wells, director of CONTACT-Lubbock, who has announced the beginning of a new training session, says that the reactions of these volunteers are not uncommon.

"The program is designed to help you become a caring listener/responder to anyone who calls," he explains. "It's a well-rounded learning experience, using the best in materials and employing the skills and sensitivity of some of the most competent professionals in our community. The program gives a lot; it also demands a lot..."

It is supported by over 20 local congregations and also by individuals and several civic clubs and foundations. It is affiliated with CONTACT Teleministries. USA, Inc., which includes 95 similar services throughout the country, and with Life Line International, which includes about 150 centers in ten countries. The main reason for being, for these helping organizations, is suicide prevention and crisis intervention for individuals trapped in loneliness and despair. The local CONTACT also provides information and referral to other helping agen-cies and organizations within the community, "befriending," or supportive counseling, and serves as an answering service for such agencies as Women's Protective Services and Altrusa International's volunteer interpreters, the 'Language Bank.'

It is literally a lifeline for the person whose loneliness and despair have driven him to the brink of suicide; for the abused wife; for the rape victim; for the elderly person trapped in isolation and misery, for persons whose personal problems have become too great to handle

eraging about 58 a day. They range from the desperate cry for help to people seeking help with specific short-term problems, such as a visitor who does not speak the language.

listener provides a friendly ear and a reassuring voice which may ease the caller through the crisis.

In cases where action, or stragetic referral to another helping community agency are called for, they are provided.

Perhaps its most important service, however, is the assurance that someone is there to the person who is desperately in need of a friend.

To provide that kind of service to persons who are often in critical need of human contact, the CONTACT volunteer needs training and sensitivity. (Volunteers are, by and large, not trained psychologists, ministers or counsellors.) Volunteers-often remark, after completing the training program, that a vague desire to help and the feeling that one is a good listener are not enough (although they are good starting places) to deal with the problems they encounter as CONTACT volunteers.

The training programs, which are offered periodically to new "classes" of volunteers, provide that necessary training. Each volunteer undergoes 59 hours of training before being assigned a shift of about 5-1/2 hours, twice a month.

"We think the training is worth the effort," Wells says. "The program is stimulating and enlivening. It keeps people on the cutting edge of growth. Participants are encouraged to view themselves and the processes of living and relating in

"There are other rewards, also. We're convinced our training sessions re-vital-ize inter-personal relationships with familv, friends and co-workers.

The quotes garnered from last year's 'graduating class" support Wells' confidence in the training program.

Cleaning Resolution Often Hard To Keep

LAS CRUCES (Special) — Every New Year's Day, homemakers resolve to keep their house really clean - only to get so tired that they give up within a few weeks. "This is because housecleaning can be awesome," says Susan Wright, ex-tension young family specialist at New Mexico State University.

'Use your head as well as your muscles. When you're tired take a break. No rule says you have to do it all at once! Miss Wright says.

If it fits into your schedule, you might find it less tiring to clean one room at a time, Miss Wright says. Then resolve to do just one big job a week throughout the

Your resolution will be more pleasant to keep if you dress comfortably. Many women prefer pants as housecleaning attire. But if you choose a dress, it should be simple with a moderately full skirt one not so full that it catches on things and not so tight that it restricts your movements.

Don't wear clothes with long sleeves or huge pockets. They could get in the way and catch on things, too. You'll also find that smaller pockets are safer for smaller items you pick up when cleaning.

Whether in an apartment or a large house, housecleaning takes many steps. So wear good fitting, comfortable shoes you won't mind getting soiled.

Finally, if you make your home safer as well as cleaner, you'll get even greater satisfaction from your housecleaning. As you clean, throw out unused items, rearrange closets and correct safety hazards, Miss Wright says.

Record Firm Scores Big Profits In Soft Market

NEW YORK (Special) - 1980, like 1979, is widely regarded by leaders in the phonography record industry to be a year of sagging sales and profits. But that's far from true for Los Angeles-based Elektra/Asylum/Nonesuch Records, a division of Warner Communications, Inc.

"1980 is shaping up to be the most ac-tive and profitable year of the label's 30year history," according to Joe Smith, E/A/N chairman of the board since 1975.

Noted vice chairman Mel Posner, who joined Elektra Records in 1958: "During the first three quarters of 1980, our profits are up more than 800 per cent on a sales increase of 48.4 per cent over the same period last year. Our final figure for 1980, adding in sales and profits the traditionally active November/December holiday buying pereflect even percentages.

Another barometer of the label's strength in the recorded music marketplace is the number of gold and platinum single and album sales awards given by the independent Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA), which certifies the number of records sold by auditing computerized record company sales readouts. A 45 rpm single selling one million copies yields a gold certification, while two million copies qualifies for platinum. Sales of 500,000 albums are required to earn a gold album and one million wins platinum.

In 1979, Elektra/Asylum's RIAA certifications numbered one gold single, three gold albums and one platinum album. Through the end of November 1980. E A had earned five gold singles. one platinum single, 10 gold albums and six platinum albums. And at least two more gold album certifications are expected after December sales figures are tallied.

Nonesuch, the classical division, did just as well, although classical record sales rarely qualify for gold or platinum certification. In '79, Nonesuch released only 18 albums. This year, after reorganization under new leadership in January. Nonesuch released 32 albums, and, as of mid-November, had turned in a net increase of 80 per cent over 1979's billings. with a 100 per cent increase projected by the end of the year.

Considering we achieved better results in '80 with fewer people on staff 175 compared to last year's 205) and without spending any more money." Posner points out, "those sales figures represent a dramatic turnaround for this 1981 also looks bright for us." Smith predicts, "and I think for the industry as a whole. Elektra/Asylum/Nonesuch was the first record company to wake up in 79 to new realities in the marketplace. and we took a lot of lumps from the press because we were the first to trim our staff. But other companies sooner or later followed suit in tightening their operations. They had to. 1981 is the year in which the industry will begin to regain its health, and we'd like to think we had something to do with that, if not directly, at least in spirit, by showing that this industry is quite capable of rebounding from its first slump in 25 years.

E. A. N's improved performance in 1980 resulted from a combination of factors carrying equal importance:

Realizing as early as spring '79 that the record industry's previously unlimited growth indeed had a limit, and reac ing quickly by streamlining all operations to synch with the realities of the indus-

Achieving the mass appeal, multitormat roster of recording artists that has been carefully developed during the last five years.

Realigning the label's national and field sales and promtion staffs into one highly effective team under the new leadership of Vic Faraci, who joined E A N as Vice President Director of Marketing in spring '80.

Expanding the scope and operations of Nonesuch under the new leadership of Keith Holzman, director, beyond its previous "budget line" status and into the mainstream of the classical music marketplace with hit projects such Silverlake" and digital recording tech-

Development of a strong Nashvillebased operation, under the leadership of Jimmy Bowen, Vice President, which broke country and pop artists in 80 to realize a first-ever profit

Twing in with film companies and producers to release hit soundtrack albums such as the Full Moon Asylum Trban Cowboy soundtrack, which has spawned six pop and country hits and is nearing triple platinum status.

Breaking new mass appeal artists such as Robbie Dupree. The Korgis. The Kings and Johnny Lee.

- Expanding the audiences of emerging superstars such as Eddie Rabbitt. Hank Williams Jr., John Klemmer, The Pointer Sisters. Patrice Rushen, Lenny White Tweenynine, Warren Zevon and Grover Washington Jr. to include fans of diverse ages and backgrounds.

Continuing to develop and exploit the excellent E A N catalog, achieving major success in '80 with past albums by The Doors. Eagles. Jackson Browne. Linda Ronstadt and Queen.

Our success story of course begins with our carefully chosen and developed artists, for whom we have a continuing creative empathy." says Smith, a Yale graduate and 25-year radio and record industry veteran. They know that everyone who works at E A N is available to them at any time, on both a personal as well as business level. We know-the artsts confidence in us has at least somehing to do with their ablity to concenrate on their end of the deal-to create he highest-quality music available to-

But the artists and their music comprise only half the story," he continues

The rest has to do with the 175 people who make up this company. They're ex-ceptionally knowledgeable, talented and dedicated professionals who work hard because they believe in the music, and the teamwork approach has worked very. very well for us.

'The kind of person Joe's speaking of has been the backbone of Elektra since its inception," adds Posner, who's in a position to know - he started in the mailroom in '58, worked his way up through the ranks as the company grew, co-architected

Warner/Elektra/Atlantaic (WEA) distribution network in the early '70s (after Elektra came under the Warner Communications umbrella). "The performance of our people has meant we've earned a great deal of autonomy from WCI. As a result, we have much less delay in decision-making and that in turn meant we could regroup quickly in 1979 and 1980.

We've been building this fantastic momentum for more than a year." Posner continues, "and we have every intention of carying it well into the new year.

Queen's phenomenal album 'The Game' was a Top 5 album from early August to late November and is still selling very well. We have a new 'Eagles Live' album that debuted on the national charts in mid-November at number 14 and two greatest hits packages by The Doors and Linda Ronstadt that are moving quickly into the Top 20 best selling albums. All are very hot gift items, as well as Jackson Browne's 'Hold Out' album and the 'Urban Cowboy' soundtrack."

'And we have some very strong music in the wings for 1981," says Smith, from all areas of the company-pop, rock 'n' roll, R&B/jazz, country and classical. And after our success with 'Urban Cowboy,' film people know we can deliver. They already know how valuable a tool a

Oil Firms Losing Tax Break On Foreign Profits

NEW YORK (AP) — With hundreds of millions of dollars at stake, the Carter administration has quietly moved to end a 30-year-old tax break that has enabled oil companies to pay no U.S. income taxes on their foreign profits.

The move has aroused harsh opposition among some oil companies, particularly Mobil Corp., which sees the move as proof the officials involved are "antioil" and says it will endanger the ability of American companies to compete in world oil markets.

The tax break, ironically, was dreamed up by Treasury Department officials 30 years ago, as they searched for a way to keep Saudi Arabia happy withoutdamaging the oil companies that bought its petroleum.

At issue is whether certain payments to foreign governments should be counted as income tax payments, as they traditionally have, or as normal business expenses, as the new Treasury Department regulations require.

The distinction is a major one. Income tax payments can be used as credits to offset U.S. income taxes, while other payments can be used only as deductions.

For example, an oil company under the old system might show a $10 million profit on operations from a foreign country, with $8 million paid in income taxes. On its U.S. tax return it shows that $10 million in profits, and owes $4.6 million in taxes at the 46 percent corporate tax rate.

But since it has paid $8 million in foreign income taxes, it has an excess credit of $3.4 million, which it can apply to other foreign profits. Such credits cannot be used to offset taxes on domestic income, but the Treasury Department says the result has been an exemption from U.S. taxes on all foreign income.

If the payment to the government is treated as a payment for the oil, which the Treasury Department says it really is, the tax effect is dramatic. The company, in the example above would show a $2 million profit, and owe $860,000 in U.S. income taxes.

That, in essense, is what the companies are required to do under regulations quietly put into effect on a temporary basis just after the November election. They can become final on Jan. 19, the day before President Carter leaves off-

It is far from clear how much money is at stake. Mobil says it alone could lose "hundreds of millions" of dollars a year, and it is estimated that about $2 billion a year would be paid in increased taxes if the foreign tax credits for oil companies were removed completely.

But there are limited escape hatches in the new regulations, and some critics of the oil industry say there is likely to be little if any additional revenue to the government. In any case, most companies have back credits they will be able to work off for several years.

Those arguments have not molified Mobil, which says the regulations mean "double taxation" of American companies, which "would be unable to compete overseas against companies from such nations as Great Britain, France, Germany, Japan and the Netherlands, all of which would continue to receive foreign tax credits.

"In other words, America might very well have to buy its foreign oil from foreign firms," Mobil added in an advertisement that compared the new regulations to President John Adams "midnight" appointment of judges before he was replaced by Thomas Jefferson.

That warning does not scare some officials, who note that most major oil companies are American ones. "Shell can't bid on every project everywhere," said one official, who asked not to be quoted by name. Royal Dutch Shell is a British and Dutch firm.

Mobil plans to ask Ronald Reagan and his administration to review the regulations, and Thomas DuBos, a tax law-ver for the company, said legal challenges are likely if the regulations are not changed.

He denies being "anti-oil," something Mobil accuses him of, and says the regulations are the result of a process begun after oil prices took their first leaps in 1973 and 1974.

"I don't see any real difference between our position and the one the Ford administration was taking," he said in an interview.

The regulations were proposed in 1979 and have been modified in a way Lubick says took care of many corporate concerns. They now provide that only foreign income taxes that apply to all companies will be treated as income taxes. Oil producing countries typically apply far higher rates on oil companies than on other companies.

Those high rates are no accident. As the price of oil rose, governments of oil producing countries have been willing to call the increases boosts in income taxes in many cases, since a dollar is a dollar. whatever it is called. But it meant ta savings to the company.

The method was dreamed up in the late 1940s by Treasury Department officials, who were looking for a way to mollify Saudi Arabian concerns they were not making enough on their oil. But it has never been formally endorsed by laws or regulations.

For the off companies to get any tax credit under the new regulations, foreign governments must restructure their taxes to impose the same rate on oil companies as on the other businesses. Robert McIntyre of Citizens for Tax Justice, a group that generally favors higher corporate taxes, says he expects the governments will do that to the extent that the Topics range from research procedures and writing and publishing techniques to records of ethnic groups and heraldry. No family genealogies are mentioned. Many of the articles are cross-referenced. Dr. Donald Dietz, professor of classical and romance languages at Tech, will discuss Calderon's input into the "auto sacramental" - a religious play resembling, but more advanced than, medieval morality plays.

Calderon's lifespan, 1600-1681, was within the period known as the Golden Age in Spain. Wendell Aycock, chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Comparative Literature and director of the symposium, explained that the 16th and 17th centuries in Spain produced a wealth of drama, poetry, art and music and came to be known as The Golden Age. Another much-studied dramatist from the same period was Lope de Vega

One symposium speaker will compare the last works of both playwrights and other speakers will examine the structure of Calderon plays as well as the various ways Calderon treated the theme of love in his works.

"In many of his myth plays, Calderon examines love as a dual force, one which leads to wholeness, fulfillment and a richness of life, or one which brings destruction, dissatisfaction and suffering," notes Thomas Austin O'Connor, professor of Spanish at Kansas State University, one of the symposium speak-

Creating living, breathing characters while remaining faithful to the comic strips which inspired them might seem, at first glance, an impossible assignment. But that's precisely what maverick film director Robert Altman has done

Utilizing the talents of Robin Williams and Shelley Duvall - but still taking the time to lend practically everyone on screen a distinct personality - Altman, long overdue for another hit, has made "Popeye" one of the strongest, most entertaining and certainly most charming holiday releases.

The unpredictable filmmaker, whose best efforts remain "Nashville" and Three Women," lends his usual brand of detail to this new musical comedy.

> FILM REVIEW

It's a busy film, with overlapping dialogue and motion everywhere on screen. From the first moment Popeye rows towards the town of Sweethaven, though, we are captivated by the sheer environment of the characters. We quickly learn to recognize even minor characters and develop a grudging admiration for the ramshackle village even before the title character heaves his sea bag over his shoulder and starts singing "Blow Me Down."

The screenplay, penned by political cartoonist Jules Feiffer, finds Popeye arriving in Sweethaven to search for his long lost father, one Poopdeck Pappy. He takes a room in the Oyl family's boarding house, where he meets their shrill daughter Olive. The two don't hit it off until Popeye finds an abandoned baby boy, whom he names Swee Pea. And that they hit it off at all naturally angers Bluto, Olive's fiancee

It should be readily apparent that all of the familiar characters are present but an excellent cast makes them seem to be original discoveries.

Shining with more luminance than the rest is Shelley Duvall, who, it's been said over and over again, was born to play Olive Oyl. Discovered by Altman in 1970. she's worked in seven of his films, but rarely with more effectiveness. Her gangly, harsh physical characteristics have always been compared to Olive Oyl's, and a bravura performance adds further dimension. She is nothing short of perfect as the nagging woman, used to having her own way, and marvelously effective when trying to convince herself she doesn't deserve to be the butt of

It's a courageous performance, too, as her songs like "He's Large" reveal a voice comparable to that displayed by Candice Bergen in "Starting Over." Namely, rotten. But then, one comes away with the idea it was all planned.

Altman didn't cast singers; he cast actors who could make the cartoon characters seem real. And with this in mind, the best scene in the film becomes Olive singing her love song "He Needs Me" on the pier. Hysterically funny, Altman tips his hat by having the townspeople slam their windows shut as she begins singing, proof that he's not trying to put one over on us.

If Miss Duvall doesn't win an Oscar nomination, she has every right to scream at voters more than she did at Jack Nicholson in "The Shining.

Robin Williams was also an inspired choice to play Popeye, and it's just a shame so many have intimated he's simply expanding his TV role of Mork. Williams, with specially constructed bulging forearms and the perennial pipe hanging from his mouth, is the epitome of innocence and virtue on screen — which is what "Popeye" is all about. This talented young actor can get laughs with the mere raising of an eyebrow, and is limber enough to master all the physical de-

His muttering is completely in tune with his character, and anyone paying attention will enjoy the brunt of his snappy one-line comebacks.

Paul Smith reportedly mushroomed over 350 pounds to play Bluto, and he makes it pay off with a weighty performance. He's a terrific cartoon villain, and may have the kids' favorite song in "I'm Mean." Paul Dooley does not fare as well as Wimpy, seemingly thrown in just to complete the family portrait, but Ray Walston has some nice moments as Poopdeck Pappy. And Altman's grandson, 10-month-old John Wesley Hurt, will steal your heart with expressions

Harry Nilsson has written close to a dozen original songs for the picture, none of which will come close to hitting the charts - which is sort of refreshing. That is, it's nice to find a composer writing silly songs which fit the silly characters, instead of trying to sell a soundtrack. Oddly enough, though, he still comes close to inspiring tears of warmth as Popeye and Olive both tenderly sing "Sailin" to the baby, one begging Swee Pea to "sail with me" and the other simultaneously pleading with him to "stay with me.

Altman has never been one to concentrate on rapid pacing and, while the characterizations he draws are wonderful, the action does slow at time in "Popeye." Still, those slow moments offer audiences a chance to enjoy the fun and puns in the background, like the "May & Sons Square Gardens" sign at the boxing match. Or Popeye, angered at Olive's ridicule of the name he picked for the infant, saying, "What did ya want me to call 'im? Baby Oyl?" The picture is also a smorgasbord of violence, but it's the cartoon-styled violence of exaggeration. When a man is hit on the head, it's very likely his head will be scrunched down, neckless, upon his shoulders. When Popeye is socked by Bluto, he spins like a top with such velocity he actually cuts through the pier like a drill bit and falls into the water. An uppercut literally sends a man flying.

Indeed, the film's only flaw is its rather uninspired chase scene when Bluto kidnaps Olive at the end. While the final fight - and Popeye being forcefed spinach - is a delight, the entire sequence doesn't retain the same quality as those preceding it.

But that's no reason to dismiss the film, which still stands out as one of the year's more adventurous. It's a risk which pays off in pure magic. Yes, I know there have been some who, noting that Robert Evans produced the film, have chosen to call it "Evan's Gate" (a reference to 1980's major flop, "Heaven's Gate"). But I think the one-eyed sailor responded to this sort best when he said simply. "Phooey and double phooey!

Blechman is an artist best known for his cartoons. But he also has worked in the field of graphic design, animated film, and advertising. His comic drawings of contemporary man have been featured on the covers of New Yorker and in the New York Times. Most can be recognized by their wriggly lines and innate wit. Hundreds of these drawings have not been available to the public in 20

The autobiographic account that accompanies this sketchbook containing some 1,000 examples of Blechman's art is humorous and incisive. His depiction of his middle class Jewish childhood in New York, his banishment to Oberlin College in Ohio, and his gradual recognition in the field of graphic art is a sprightly story which compliments the refinement of his art as traced in his presidential elections in this country after reading this book.

Polsby and Wildavsky, professors of political science at the University of California. Berkeley, examine past elections and suggest future trends in a non-partisan analysis. The authors explore the pressures which are inevitably brought upon candidates and produce statistical data to support their conclusions. A good sub-title for the book might be. such factors as strategic environment, interest groups and voting blocs, resources including money, delegates and caucuses, domestic and foreign issues, law and order, presentation of the candidates, TV debates and getting a good press.

The world of politics is seen as a tar baby world in which candidates are inevitably "prisoners" of certain preconceived positions. They can (and do) alter those positions but must take into account the inevitable effect the new position will have in other areas. It's informative, fun and a little bewildering

"This is the best touring band I've ev-er played with" Kay flatly stated. Steppenwolf is musical history and we are playing the Steppenwolf hits. On the other hand, this is 1980 and we have legitimate things to say musically and lyrically that are also part of the show.

Included with Kay in the band are lead guitarist Michael Palmer, drummer Steven Palmer, bassist Chad Peery and Danny Ironstone on keyboards.

Kay was born in Germany and lived there until he moved to Canada at age 14. He joined a Canadian rock group called 'The Sparrow' in 1965, which broke up in Los Angeles. He performed a portion of the Couperin Mass on a recital in Bergisch Gladbach, West Germany, and received the following review in the "Kolner Stadt-Anzeiger" on Feb. 20, 1979: "Movements from an organ mass by Couperin served as the opening. Here one could not help noticing how thoroughly familiar the organist must be with the music of that period...the interpretation was distinct and colorful, and the organ mass became a living experience of the history of music.'

Country Style

by Russ Parsons

Well fans, it's that time again. Just as surely as another year rolls off the calendar, it's time for those Best and Worst lists to come out.

Last year I put mine off for as long as possible, dreading the necessity of putting out one of those things. The task, if I remember correctly, weighed heavy on my mind, like one of Little David Wilkens' thighs.

But I finally buckled down to it and, you know what? I found out they're not that bad. In fact, they're kind of fun. I guess being an inexperienced "arts" writer, I was just a little late discovering the magical attraction of these lists. That is, it lets you say some nice things about records you never get a chance to comment on otherwise, and it also lets you say some really snide things about people you'll probably never see.

So this season, I think I beat everybody to the list race but People magazine and the National Enquirer. But then, neither one of those publications give much of a dang about country music unless its Glen and Tanya (the former) or Dolly Parton's miracle diet (the latter).

BEST SINGLES OF 1980

"Wayfaring Stranger," Emmylou Harris: This has been quite a year for Emmylou, as she released two albums that left her comfortable country-rock track entirely and jumped into the neglected realm of bluegrass. But just when folks were beginning to think the only thing there was to mountain music was "Deliverance," out comes Miss Harris with this, one of the most beautiful and creative songs to bless the airwaves in

"Ain't Living Long Like This," Waylon Jennings: Actually, it doesn't really much matter whether you listen to Waylon's version or Rodney Crowell's or even Emmylou's. This is a song that puts life back into country rock, just when you thought it was ready to crawl back under a, uh, stone.

Years," Barbara Mandrell: Actually, Barbara should only get half credit on this number. The real star is the unnamed steel guitar player who puts some of the sweetest, crying licks I've heard in a long time. For a three-minute lesson in what a pedal steel guitar sounds like in country music, pick it up.

"True Love," Conway Twitty and Loretta Lynn: A classic country duet, this song captures the best of Conway's growling South and Loretta's silver-toned mountains.
"Good Ole Boys Like Me," Don Williams: Again, a classic artist doing one of his best songs. This single has both Williams' soothing baritone (but not so soothing that you nod off) and his literate lyrics. "When I was a kid Uncle Remus would put me to bed/with a picture of Stonewall Jackson above my head." That's good stuff "That Lovin' You Feeling," Roy Orbison and Emmylou Harris: Two of the best voices to ever grace a country song swap off brilliantly. Some of the harmonies, when one of the singers takes an unexpected turn, is enough to make the hair stand up on the back of your neck. "I'm Not Ready Yet," George Jones: If I had to pick one George Jones song to listen to the rest of my life, this might be it. It's classic Jones, with both his shifting vocals (vocals you can tell half the singers around today cut their teeth on) and uner-ring knack for hitting the corny line. I love it when he says, "I'm leavin' when my heart says 'Jones, we're ready.

"The Way I Am," Merle Haggard: Just when you think Merle Haggard has reached the bottom of the barrel (see below), he comes out with one of these. Like other of his classics ("Caroline," "Always On A Mountain When I Fall" or "Make It Till December," among others), it has the gritty ring of truth to it. "Some would run; but that ain't like me/ So I'll just dream and keep on being the way I am." No modern novelist ever said it better

THE WORST SONGS OF 1980, (THE PITS)

"Barroom Buddies," Merle Haggard and Clint Eastwood: What'd I just say? Moe and Joe made a couple of bucks by being back-slappin', commode-huggin' good ole boys so old Merle decided there was some green in it for him too. But why in the world would he pick Clint Eastwood for his buddy? The best line I ever heard in an Eastwood movie was "Unh." Even though he did deliver it with feeling, it's not the kind of thing you base a musical career on. But then, neither is this record.

"Sugar Daddy," Bellamy Brothers: Just when you thought they'd hit the rock bottom of bad taste with "If You Said I Had A Beautiful Body (Would You Hold It Against Me)" (last year's worst song), they come out with this trash. Maybe it's not quite as bad as last year's award-winner, but it's easily as insulting: "What you need is a sugar daddy/ diamond rings and a brand-new Caddy." Are you listening Gloria.

"Clyde," Waylon Jennings: Jennings at his absolute worst. This isn't any more than barely-melodic drivel. "Clyde played electric bass, played it with finesse and grace." I've heard high school cheers more musical than most.

'Your Body Is An Outlaw," Mel Tillis: Typical Mel, he attacks this subject with all the delicacy of Mack truck hitting a brick wall at 90 miles an hour. Hey, it's okay Mel, we probably wouldn't have understood it unless you spelled it out. 'Coward Of The County," Kenny Rogers. The only reason this one isn't higher on the list is well, to be honest, I didn't see it on my notepad till now. This is absolutely one of the worst songs of all time. Every time I hear it I think the reason the Coward's daddy is crying is because he's so embarrassed.

"Dancin' Cowboys" and "Lovers Live Longer," Bellamy Brothers: Honest, I', not picking on thes guys. I have nothing against them other than they make me turn green ery time I hear them. A-J assistant sports editor Chuck McDonald says these aren't bad songs, but he drinks Red, White and Blue beer.

Well fans, that's it. I'm happy to say that there were far more good songs than bad this year. A lot of them didn't even make the list - Eddie Rabbit's "Drivin' My Life Away." Don Williams' "I Believe In You" and The Oak Ridge Boys' "Leaving Lousiana In The Broad Daylight" (well, really Rodney Crowell's).

British Composer Musically Resurrects American Outlaw

By WILLIAM D. KERNS A-J Entertainment Editor

Upon listening to a new concept album called "The Legend Of Jesse James" which utilizes the talents of Levon Helm, Johnny Cash, Emmylou Harris, Charlie Daniels, Albert Lee, Rodney Crowell and others — the first aspect which hits home is the feeling of Americana, of history, of a past which made mythical heroes of villains. The album manages to entertain, while enthralling us with our own heritage.

It is produced and written with such sincerity we can actually close our eyes and visualize the dust and bullets behind conversations, leading one to consider the probability of it being inspired by western films or novels.

So imagine the average person's surprise upon learning the album was conceived and composed by Paul Kennerly, a British musician who researched the life of Jesse James through books loaned to him by the University Of Glasgow

Now in the United States in the midst of a promotional tour, Kennerly explained this week during a telephone interview that he was inspired to research the American outlaw not by films, but by music. "More specifically," he said, "it was because of your country music. About four years ago, I became very interested in American country music after hearing some songs by Waylon Jennings. As soon as I started listening to them. I wanted to write ome music in that style. But I had lyric problem: I certainly ouldn't start singing in England about going down to the honky tonk with Mary Lou. It wouldn't

"So I decided I needed to go to the music's roots. I felt country music epitomized the southern states, that it was deeply en-trenched in American heritage. So tended to look back into history.

His initial research led to his 1978 concept LP called "White Mansions," an album which told about life in the Confederacy during the Civil War. But while researching this project, he kept coming across references to Jesse James. "Even so, when I decided to learn about the life of Jesse James, it wasn't easy," he recalled. "He is not a well documented subject. He had been written about in romantic fiction, in the 'penny dreadfuls' and dime novellettes. But there were only three serious books about him, the best one written in 1925.

'And those books are still very hard to obtain. I still don't own copies myself; I had to borrow them. I thought of coming to Missouri myself to research his life, but too much has changed in the past hundred years. The biographies were written nearer to the time he lived."

Kennerly includes not only lyrics, but short historical synopses on the inside record jacket, adding to the LP's aura of authenticity. But he's quick to point out that history "has always been a matter of personal interpretation. There are so many legends, and even the three authors I used didn't agree on everything. For example, one reported that Jesse James had horseshoes put on his animals backwards, so it would look like he was traveling in the opposite direction. But that seems an obvious myth.

One might also assume there were hassles in obtaining the services of Helm, Cash. Daniels. Lee and Miss Harris, since they record on the Columbia, Epic and Warner Bros. labels and "The Legend Of Jesse James" is distributed by A &M Records. But Kennerly said each one wanted to become involved in the project after hearing his demo tapes - adding that the hassles arrived only with marketing. He revealed that no singles can be released from the album due to so many labels being involved, and he's aware that will make it tougher to get the word out.

But with the exception of Ry Cooder, Kennerly got everyone he wanted to sing on the LP - and he's grateful for that. (Cooder, he learned, had just written the score for the film "The Long Riders," and wanted a rest from Jesse James and the American West.)

Asked why he chose Levon Helm and Johnny Cash to sing the roles of Jesse and Frank James, respectively, Kennerly said, "Because they're both tremendous storytellers. Like when Levon sang 'The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down and he started by saying, 'Virgil Cain is my name' — he was creating a character. He has always had this tremendous ability to personity his songs. And Johnny Cash and Charlie Daniels, see, they all have this southern feel to

But the Bristish composer is also quick to lend credit to Glyn Johns, who produced and engineered the album. "I think the sound of the album keeps with the period," he said, "and that's because Glyn likes to record live with very few overdubs. He's been doing this for 20 years, just using old fashioned miking techniques instead of all this fancy, advanced equipment. It was a daring project for him. too, having to handle all those stars in the studio, because most everybody recorded together.

Like Emmylou Harris has her songs ('Heaven Ain't Ready For You Yet' and Wish We Were Back In Missouri'), but she also played acoustic guitar on most of the other tracks. And Levon did his vocals at the same time he was playing the drums. That way, everything came across spontaneous and very honestly. . It took me two years to finish the research on Jesse James and the writing of the songs, but we recorded the album in just three weeks."

Indeed, the problem lies not in the quality but the selling. With no singles being released, airplay is limited. It is also extremely unlikely that the participants will ever join forces for a live tour to play the music in concert. And while there is a market for country music in England. Kennerly knows the album must make it or break it in the United States. "Jesse James is not a part of our heritage. It's not like Winston Churchill or Henry VIII. Everyone knows them. But Jesse James is just a name.

He detoured a bit by adding he liked the outlaw's name. "It's a name perfectly suited to legends. After all, Frank James was a much more accomplished outlaw, yet everyone remembers Jesse

So for the moment, Kennerly has no plans to immediately embark on a third concept LP. When his current speaking tour ends on Feb. 8, he'll return to England and try to put together his own band. And he'll continue to write unrelated songs "for whoever wants them."

Still, he has no intention to stay away from musical biographies forever. As he put it, "I like the idea of using a record to tell a story. I like the way history and music can be combined. And I appreciate A&M (Records) for letting me do Jesse James, 'even after 'White Mansions' didn't make them any money

"I have promised them faithfully to be more commercial the next time."

London To Head Music Symposium

The Texas Tech University music department's 30th annual Symposium of Contemporary Music will be held Jan. 28-30 in the campus' Hemmle Recital Hall. This year's guest composer is Dr. Edwin London, music department chairman at Cleveland State University.

All events are open to the public at no charge.

The symposium is an annual project involving faculty and students in the discussion and performances of not only avant-garde music, but all works representative of the 20th century. The purpose is three-fold: to grant the opportunity for performance and audition of contemporary music, including that of both Tech faculty and students; to study the varied trends of the new art, and particularly the new notation, through lectures by visiting composers, performers, and panel discussions; and to coordinate these activities with the various university programs which relate specifically to the development of new music.

This symposium will feature major works by American composer Edwin London - chairman of the national council of the American Society of University Composers, composer of more than 30 published compositions, author of several articles and recipient of many major awards and commissions.

London earned degrees at Oberlin College Conservatory and the University Of Iowa. His studies in composition were with Luigi Dallapiccola, P.G. Clapp,

When a vase moves about the room, even Ruth believes her husband's report that Elvira has come back, but neither knows of her scheme to styles, if we're steadfastly refusing to even read a subtitle - well, it just makes me unsure as to whether Hollywood is insulting the American moviegoer or whether the American moviegoer is playing an active role in insulting himself.

There is a slip-up, however, and Ruth, instead of Charles, joins Elvira. Charles, thinking he is rid of both spirits, prepares for a trip but, as the spirited ending of the play proves, he is not unescorted.

I've got some bad news for those of you wondering whatever happened to the Lubbock Film Society. Carl Hill, who formed the group last year, said there have been no meetings since last summer "because I was having trouble finding films suitable for showing, and I was having trouble finding people to help administer the showings. My original intention was merely to help it get off the ground, and then find volunteers to take over. But I've had only limited response.

As executive director of the Cultural Affairs Council, Hill is presently hard at work on the upcoming Lubbock Arts Festival. Those with suggestions about the Film Society, however, can contact him at his office at 763-4666.

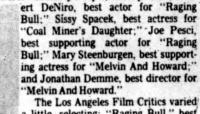

According to The Los Angeles Times, Boardwalk Records will soon announce the signing of Joan Jett and will release her latest album (which has been out in England for several months). Miss Jett made her Lubbock debut at Rox last November, and is booked to make a return appearance at the club on Feb. 14.

"Windwalker," an excellent film which was nationally test marketed at Showplace Six before returning for its current engagement at the Mann Fourplex, has run into a problem of sorts - namely how it's classified in the current Academy Awards race, The Academy Of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences says it is a "foreign film," defining a foreign film as one in which any language other than English is spoken and further stipulating that such films must be nominated by the country in which they originat-

Well, "Windwalker" is spoken in two native American languages — Cherokee and Crow — and uses sub-titles. What's more, it was filmed entirely in the United States. So what country or organization is going to sponsor it as a "foreign film?"

I was having a bit of trouble a while back finding out for a reader when the 1981 Oscars would be telecast. Now I know why. Normally held in April, this year's Academy Awards will be handed out on March 30. Why? Well, according to the Motion Picture Academy, the date was changed to avoid a possible strike by a broadcasting union whose contract expires April 1.

Meanwhile, the critics' organizations have already announced their winners. The selections of the New York Film Critics were: "Ordinary People," best picture; Rob-a little, selecting: "Raging Bull," best picture; Robert DeNiro, best actor for 'Raging Bull;" Sissy Spacek, best actress for "Coal Miner's Daughter;" Timothy Hutton, best supporting actor for "Ordinary People;" Mary Steenburbest supporting actress for 'Melvin And Howard;" and Roman Poinski, best director for "Tess."

The National Society Of Film Critics chose: "Melvin And Howard," best picture; Peter O'Toole, best actor for "The Stunt Man;" Sissy Spacek, best ctress for "Coal Miner's Daughter;" Joe Pesci, best supporting actor for 'Raging Bull; Mary Steenburgen, best supposting actress for "Melvin And Howard: and Martin Scorcese, best

And the National Board Of Review chose: "Raging Bull," best picture; Robert DeNiro, best actor for "Raging Bull;" Sissy Spacek, best actress for "Coal Miner's Daughter;" Joe Pesci, best supporting actor for "Raging Bull;" Eva Lagallienne, best supporting actress for "Resurrection;" and Robert Redford, best director for Ordinary People.

ination for RAGING BULL

You'll note that each organization made Miss Spacek its choice for "best actress" honors and all but one chose DeNiro as "best actor," but I find the most interesting, aspect the fact that not one group honored the director of the film they deemed the best. And if "Raging Bull," opening Feb. 20 in Lubbock at the Mann Fourplex, is such a hot movie, why is there so little mention of director Martin Scorcese?

. Associated Press writer Bob Thomas offered the following list as the "most likely candidates" for Oscar nominations:

The official touring company of "The Rocky Horror Show," the successful theatrical version of the film, will perform the outrageous musical comedy at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 31 at the Municipal Auditorium. One promoter told The A-J that tickets will be priced at $12.50 and $10.50, and added that theater audiences "react to the play pretty much like they do to the movie. They yell the same things. It's pretty wild.

He said the touring company was put together "by the people who did the film." and said the play appeals to "Rocky fans, rock fans and just people who love theater." He added he's hoping that those who dressed like the characters when seeing the movie will do the same when seeing the play.

And here's one hot off the wire to make your heart bleed: Suzanne Somers was making $2,500 a week five years ago when she, John Ritter and Joyce DeWitt first appeared in ABC's "Three's Company." Now she considers $35,000 an insult. That's what her husband and manager, Alan Hamel, told People magazine. Miss Somers wants $150,000 per show, plus 10 per cent of the profits, which could go as high as $200,000 in syndication. "It's preferable for me to be in the show but there has to be some incentive," she said.

Pottery Center To Begin Classes Soon

The Cultural Affairs Division of the Lubbock Parks and Recreation Department is now conducting registration for Pottery Classes at the Mackenzie Terrace. Classes will begin on February 2,

The Pottery Center is designed to provide professional services to com-munity aspirants and individual artists in the ceramic arts. Activities and services include class programs, workshop and ceramic art festivals; the center provides space and facilities for individual artists presently without those benefits.

Facilities at the Pottery Center include 10 potter's wheels, a 30 cubic feet down draft cone, 10 reduction kiln, a 30 cubic feet down draft cone 10 salt kiln, a raku kiln, pyrogon kiln, and an assortment of clays and raw materials.

The center employs five instructors (Chris Brock, Cecily Smith, Ron Brandiger, Sara Waters Watkins, and James C. Watkins) each with his or her own area of expertise. Adult ceramic classes will meet two times a week for three hours. Each class will last for six weeks. Classes will cover handbuilding techniques and the use of the potter's wheel, as well as firing and glazing methods. Workshops will deal with specifics in the ceramic arts, such things as salt firing, raku firing, stoneware firing, smoke firing and clay forming demonstration.

All workshops will be performed by Pottery Center Instructors and visiting artists. The Ceramic Art Festival will include pottery sales, slide lectures and work in conjunction with the ceramic workshops. For further details, call the Pottery Center at 762-6411, Extension

Cost Cutting Features To Be Shown In Project

WASHINGTON (Special) — A highlight of the upcoming National Associa-tion of Home Builders Convention in Las Vegas will be a tour of an "Approach subdivision featuring many cost effective land development and construction techniques which could shave thousands of dollars off the cost of building a

A 38-unit subdivision — a joint project of NAHB, the NAHB Research Foundation and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development — was designed to demonstrate that many local building and subdivision standards could be relaxed to provide high quality single family housing at a lower cost. The homes are expected to cost 25 to 30 percent less than comparable homes built according to conventional requirements.

The subdivision was designed by a special NAHB task force and is being built by Las Vegas builder Dudley Smith who headed up the task force. For the

The five-acre development includes zero-lot line homes (homes with one combined side yard, rather than two small, less usable ones on either side, and

The seven model homes located at the west end of the sub-division will include homes with basements and crawl spaces — not ordinarily constructed in Las Vegas — in order to explore cost saving techniques that will be applicable

A 1978 Government Accounting Office study found that excessive standards for streets and related site improvements could add as much as $2,655 to the cost of a new home. The road network in the Approach 80 subdivision was designed to provide adequate movement for both vehicles and emergency equipment, while minimizing high-speed and through traffic.

The usual eight-inch mainline sewers were replaced with four-and six-inch lines. Standards were amended to allow sewer easements through common

Light gage steel interior partitions will be installed in one demonstration house to show an alternative to wood frame construction. Plastic hot and cold water supply plumbing will be demonstrated in at least one house.

The Approach '80 subdivision will be the subject of a give-and-take discussion Friday at 2:00 p.m. featuring Mayor Daniel K. Whitehurst of Fresno, Mayor William Briare of Las Vegas, project builder Dudley Smith and builder Robert Gardner, president of The Centre Companies.

Residential construction was headed last week by Jacon Realty Inc., which plans a seven-unit townhouse complex at 8639 Knoxville for an estimated cost of 650. Each unit will contain 2.316 square feet of floor space.

Brickwood Homes has scheduled three single-family projects at 6320 29th St. and 2907 and 2908 LaSalle. Estimated cost will be $40,950 each.

Don Sager received permits for homes at 8612 and 8803 Elkridge at costs of $50,000 each.

The delinquency rate for those 30 days past due declined from 3.65 percent of all loans at the end of June 1980, to 3.58 percent on Sept. 30, 1980. However, those past due 90 days or more climbed from 0.56 percent of all loans at the end of June to 0.59 percent by the end of Sep-

The rate for all loans past due 30 days or more, which is the sum of all those accounts past due 30, 60, and 90 days or more, dropped from 5.06 percent at the end of June to 5.03 percent on September

MBA Chief Economist Thomas Harter said that the improvement in the rate of all past due accounts was attributable entirely to the decline in the delinquency rate on FHA loans. He pointed out that delinquencies in conventional loans and VA loans rose

The third quarter delinquency rate for the five states was 6.54 percent for all mortgage loans 30 days or more past due, compared with the 5.03 percent rate for the rest of the nation. This follows all time highs for the region in each of the two previous quarters. Harter said the effects of the economslowdown in the automotive, steel, and rubber industries have had an obvious impact on the ability of homeowners to meet their mortgage payments.

The survey also revealed that foreclosures rose during the third quarter, al-

Home ownership offers leverage. It offers a high probability of appreciation in-value. It offers tax writeoffs. And, unlike most other investments, you get to use this one while it's working for you.

Here's an example of how leverage and appreciation can work for you. Say you put $15,000 down on a house that's selling for $75,000. Five years later you sell the house and net, after selling expenses, $105,-

But when you consider the leverage factor—that you only put $15,000 cash into the transaction-your picture is vostly different. You've actually tripled your cash in five years! Of course you do not have to invest $15,000 to get the house of your dreams. We have many homes that

WITH THE NEW YEAR GETTING started the two most common questions I've been asked as a Lubbock Realtor are (1) How is the real estate market now? and (2) What is the outlook for 1981? Over the past couple of weeks with the advent of the Lubbock Municipal Bond mortgage loans the answer for both questions has turned from O.K. to terrific.

Those of you who were in Lubbock last summer may recall the Realtors were touting their "Yes You Can" slogan as a way to tell the public that a unique opportunity existed in the housing market.

That opportunity being that there was a temporary abundance of housing available (indicating a "buyers" market and soft prices) and that mortgage rates on the open market had hit their low point. Many people thought we Realtors were just "crying wolf" but we were right.

In the months since that time conventional mortgage rates have climbed from the 11½ percent to 12 percent range up to the current 15-15½ percent range and new home prices have continued to increase at roughly 1½ percent

RIGHT NOW ANOTHER SUCH UNIQUE opportunity exists for Lubbock homebuyers. Although open market mortgage rates are still high around the country the recently approved municipal bond mortgage loans for Lubbock has again created a unique opportunity in Lubbock that runs counter to the national trend and right now the Lubbock homebuyer can take advantage of a good selection of homes AND THE LOWEST INTEREST RATES you are going to see for the next couple of years.

However, this unique opportunity won't last for long. WHY? Two reasons. First there is only a limited amount of the municipal bond money available and we are not likely to see any more of it.

There is currently action in the Federal government to outlaw the tax exempt status for municipal mortgage bond loans since the government is not able to collect taxes on the income bond investors are receiving.

Without the tax exempt status the return on the investors money would have to be greater which would mean increasing the interest rates to the open market level and in effect killing any future municipal mortgage bond programs.

The second reason this opportunity won't last long is a simple supply and demand situation. As many buyers come into the market, the temporary over supply of housing will turn into a shortage of housing causing prices to increase.

Over the past several months building activity has been slow due to rising financing costs. The new homes on the market now are priced at levels reflecting labor and material costs of two to six months ago. Costs for materials and labor have continued to increase due to the pressures of inflation in the economy and new proposed construction prices will increase at a faster rate than pre-

This means that if you are presently a homeowner planning to move up to a new home you're best bet is to contract for that new home at today's prices. If you are going to be a first time buyer do it now. Prices aren't going to get any

WHAT ABOUT MORTGAGE RATES on the open market coming down? Don't count on it anyway soon. At the Mid-Winter meeting of the Texas Association of Realtors this past week, Dr. Jack Carlson, 1980 president of the National Association of Realtors and former presidential economic advisor predicted that interest rates will ease off slightly in the coming year or so.

He cited several reasons to substantiate his position but the bottom line was that the Federal Government already has built into its policies an underlying inflation rate of roughly 10 percent for the coming year or so and that even if the new administration's policies to reduce inflation are acted upon it will take some time to "slow down the freight train."

With an underlying inflation rate of 10 percent investors in the money market will have to get 10 percent on the money just to break even with inflation and 3 to 4 percent above that level to justify venturing their funds. This boils down to 13 to 14 percent interest rates for mortgages for the next couple of

Wait or buy now? If you are even close to thinking about buying for the first time or moving up, it will probably be to your advantage to go ahead and stretch now as far as you can while this unique buying opportunity exists in

GARDENER'S NOTEBOOK:

Winter Planting Gives Trees, Shrubs Head Start

By DIANNE FOY

Many gardeners delay planting trees and shrubs until warm weather makes its appearance in the spring. However, people who are knowledgeable about plants know that the winter months are an excellent time to begin planning and planting to get a jump on spring. Even though some trees and shrubs are dormant in the winter, their roots continue to grow.

Those that are planted in the fall and winter have already had an opportunity to begin to develop a root system before the warm temperatures and strong winds of early spring make an appearance. This gives them a better chance of survival as opposed to those which are planted later and have the dual problem of coping with the weather as well as developing an adequate root system to support the developing shoots and leaves.

Many trees such as red oak are commonly planted during the winter months since that is the only time of the year that they can be successfully moved from their native growing areas. Nurseries usually offer better bargains on oaks purchased in the winter since many times planting site after shipping and the nurs-ery does not have the added expense of unloading and holding them for a period of time. After a nursery has held a tree for any length of time, naturally it has more money invested in the plant and the price of the tree will reflect this.

If a consumer is a wise shopper, he can also take advantage of some really good values on trees and shrubs when nurseries begin to liquidate their stock to make room for new shipments arriving times plants that have been held in the nursery through the winter months, have had a chance to harden off and become acclimated to the weather conditions and will survive better than those which ar rive later in the spring and are very soft and subject to injury from late freezes.

Late winter is an excellent time to plant bare root fruit trees, pecans grapes, and berries. Nurseries usually purchase these plants from the grower bare root, or without a soil ball. This in no way damages the plants since they're stored at the growers under ideal tem-perature and humidity conmittions to maintain them in peak condition. After they arrive at the nursery, they are usual ly heeled in, watered and sold bare root until early spring when they are potted up in containers. Once the nursery has containerized these plants, again the price will go up since there is the added expense of the containers, soil and labor

Keep these points in mind when buying plants in the fall and winter. Look for plants that are in good condition and have been well maintained by the nursery. Evergreens should be green and their needles or leaves should be soft and pliable to the touch. The soil in the container or root ball should be moist. The plant should be in a protected location, out of the direct effects of the elements. Decidious trees and shrubs, those that lose their leaves in winter, should have pliable twigs and branches and plump buds. If any plant shows signs of shriviling. chances are it will not survive. The bark on the trunk and branches should be green and moist when scratched with a sharp object.

No matter what kind of tree or shrub you're planting, it's always important to dig a hole slightly larger than the root ball of the plant. This will give the plant room to stretch out. Never crowd the roots or jam them in a too small hole When you're planting bare root trees or shrubs, it's important to keep the roots moist. Set the plant in the hole at the same depth it grew in the nursery. When it is in position, fill with a mixture of good topsoil and bark mulch or peat moss and water.

After the water has settled the soil. add additional soil to eliminate low spots and water again. If the root ball of your new plant is wrapped in plastic or is in a pressed paper container, carefully cut away the container after the plant is in position in the hole. If the plant is growing in a metal container, the staff at the nursery should cut the can for you. If the plant is in a rigid plastic pot, it is only necessary to turn the container upside down an give it a slight tap for the plant to fall out. Again, place the plant in the hole at the same depth it grew in the nursery. Fill the hole with the same mixture of soil and mulch and water thoroughly. You may want to make a basin around the hole with any excess soil to hold water which would otherwise run off. After planting, watering should be done weekly until the plants are well established. During warm, windy weather watering should be more frequent.

Single Issue Not Only Issue

SINGLE-ISSUE politics drew deserved fire from both President Carfer and U.S. Rep. Kent Hance the other day.

In the last few years, there has developed special interest groups that would give the dome of the Capitol to China if you would vote with them on one issue," Hance told the Downtown Lubbock Rotary Club.

A few hours later, in his farewell address to the nation, Carter struck a similar note:

"Today, as people have become more and more doubtful of the ability of the government to deal with our problems, we are increasingly drawn to single-issue groups and special interest organizations to ensure that whatever else happens our own personal views and our own private interests are pro-

"THIS IS A disturbing factor in American political life," the President continued. "It tends to distort our purposes because the national interest is not always the sum of all our single or special interests.

Truer words were never spoken. The tugging and pulling at congressmen, state legislator, governors and the President's men by people with a single cause to promote has distorted and gummed up the processes of

Whether the issue be abortion, gun control, a Panama Canal treaty, a pay raise for teachers or servicemen, ratification of an Equal Rights Amendment, higher subsidies for farmers or the naming of a street for a civil rights hero, the results are the same.

Political office holders are threatened with defeat at the polls by an organized minority of special interest diehards unless they "go along" on that one issue.

The result is a lot of bad legislation. wasteful and extravagant spending and the election of people who are willing to sell their votes, and maybe their souls, to the best-organized pressure groups.

"SOME GROUPS have the attitude 'if you help us on one issue, we'll help you no matter what and if you don't go with us on one issue, we're after you no matter what'," Hance

"That mentality is going to destroy the country," he warned. "We've got to look at the big picture. We've got to do that in Congress-set aside one-issue factions and look at the big picture."

He bravely promised to do just that.

There is no question but what he's right, It's something to remember the next time the National Organization of Women boycotts a state that hasn't ratified the ERA, or the National Education Association announces its hit list of congressmen who didn't "vote right" on the education budget.

The same holds true when the AFL-CIO endorses a state legislator who promises to vote out the Texas right-to-work law, or certain elements of the moral majority seek to dictate what is the single most important issue facing the nation.

Former Tech Band Member Has Accolades For Killion

Editor, Avalanche-Journal: A great band depends on every member; but most of all, it must have a great director. The Texas Tech Band grew to its present heights through outstanding direction. It did not become what it is today by accident. Dean Killion turned a good band into a fantastic band. He had help, of course, from assistant directors, the band members themselves, and from other Tech Band supporters. But Killion has the drive it requires to run the Goin'

Band and overcome many obstacles.

I well remember my first year with that great band when we went to the Gator Bowl on New Year's Eve, 1965. Killion had the persistence and pull to enable the Goin' Band to have nationwide coverage during halftime. The Georgia Tech Band wasn't so fortunate, its performance was obliterated by advertisements. Letters came in from all over the U.S. congratulating us on our show, and Texas Tech gained nationwide recognition.

The greatest obstacle Killion had to overcome was the operation for his brain tumor. It only slowed him down temporarily, though. He was soon back to mapping out march routines and turning ordinary students into real performers in a band that is Lubbock's pride and joy.

He also began a tradition of having former members march in the pre-game show of the Homecoming game. It was the Goin' Band that kept me going until I graduated from Tech. so I feel pretty emotional when I join the ranks-not just as a Tech-Ex, but as a Goin' Band from Raid-

Since being elected the Republicans have had to come to grips with the reality that they now have to serve the public interest. They are beginning to realize that the government cannot be defined so easily as Liberal vs. Conservative. Examples are:

The Democratic majority rejected the bulk of Mr. Keesee's requests over Mr. Roberts' objections. The Democrats did their part to save taxes and reduce inflation.

3. Democratic Cong. Kent Hance accepts a posi-tion on the House Ways and Means Committee. Local Republicans ignore the fact that Cong. Federal Judge's Intrusion

This morning I read that Federal Judge William Justice of Tyler has just ruled that our Texas schools must expand bilingual education throughout the grades. This will increase our Texas school costs by millions of dollars.

I have many friends who are school teachers, and many of them cannot support their families on the salaries they now receive. They are important people in our society; we entrust many hours of our children's time into their hands. Personally I believe they need a raise; however, without any say from the people of Texas now we must spend millions of dollars on bilingual education. I am concerned that this added cost from Judge Justice's ruling will hinder teacher pay raises. How much can the taxpayer bear?

Our federal judges are running our state business. They are dictating and legislating to the tax-payer, who has no choice. They are appointed and serve for life.

There is a federal judge in Louisiana who has just ruled that three girls may not live in the school district they chose. Have we reached the place in America that we are told by the government where to live? It disturbs me greatly.

We have fine judges who serve, but we have some that need to be replaced. Something needs to be done.

I see in the news there is a Federal Judge in Louisiana saying we must spend more to deprive three more students of their right to attend a school of their choice, near home.

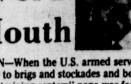

What will it take to awaken the American people to facts? The federal judges are running (or ruining) the country. I find no law for such rulings. Only a precedent. You would think a person who gets an education, would have some gumption or at least a little common sense. In this Judge's ruling I find none of these qualities. I think, to stop these abuses, Federal Judges should be elected.

One searches in vain in the Constitution for a statement granting the power of judicial review to the Supreme Court. It is not in Article III among the subjects over which the federal courts have jurisdiction; and in Article VI, it is "The judges in every state" who are bound by the supremacy clause, with no mention of a federal court to review and make uniform the state courts' deci-

Larry Ginsburg, manager of S&Q Clothiers, says he tries to portray a three dimensional "feeling" of what the customer can expect to find within the con-

"Everyone has access to the same goods today, so you have to present it in a way to get their attention," said Ginsburg. "I put something in the window to 'romance' the customer. You've got to romance what you have got."

Ginsburg said there is "really no trick" to developing window and store displays, but you must have an active imagination. "It's like white space in a newspaper. The more you clutter it up the less people will notice it," he said.

INSTEAD OF DISPLAYING all his latest suits in the window, Ginsburg pre-fers to spotlight one, smashing ensemble; one to grab the attention of passer-

He concentrates on a theme which illustrates the practicality of the clothing. Last spring, for instance, Ginsburg presented the popular beach shirt by using a small sail boat with a bright sail in the window. And once, in taking visual advertising even further, he did an 'Urban posters and tickets to the movie

There's more to window displaying than just developing an intriguing theme though. The clothing must be color coordinated and pleasing to the eye. "A plain basic suit doesn't grab people's attention," said Ginsburge. "And I never put a gray suit in the window. It is very

There's even an art to dressing the mannequins. Putting finely tailored clothing on a stiff stationary frame, and making it appear comfortable and provocative takes a designer's eye.

The women in charge of merchandise presentation for J.C. Penney Co. can attest to this. Parn Peek and Brenda Simmons are responsible for four window displays as well as displays and mannequins throughout the store.

The fashion planner for the store gives them ideas as to what to promote; then it is the responsibility of Miss Peek and Miss Simmons to carry it through ar-

BUT IT'S NOT ALL GLAMOUR and excitement. Like Ginsburg, the women spend hours formulating what clothing and accessories will make the best presentation and how to present the arrangements in an eye-catching manner.

Depending on the event, we try to get a display up a week ahead of time and try to take it down a week after." said Miss Simmons. "Sometimes you can leave certain props up and change the

"You try to get everything organized beforehand," said Miss Peek. Carrying heavy mannequins, clothing and props back and forth can be tiresome

Before beginning on the display, they must clear out the existing one. Then the backdrop is assembled to color-coordinate with the items to be presented.

Dressing the mannequins is no easy task in itself. The mannequins disassemble in various ways, with heads coming off, as well as hands, legs and arms. But the arms and legs do not twist and bend, which makes for a struggle when fitting jackets and slacks.

With half the battle of dressing the mannequins out of the way, the women must concentrate on placing the other props in just the right place. Miss Peek feels that a successful window display must make a statement - and in doing so, each item must compliment the oth-

If everything goes well, the people who put many hours into developing window displays can expect to see potential customers staring into the window saying, "I've got to have that."

Live Mannequins Bring More Attention

THE NEXT TIME YOU accidently bump into a mannequin, watch out, she might be real. No, mannequins are not coming to life, but some department stores are using "live" mannequins to illustrate the lastest fashion wear.

Kathy Lloyd, fashion coordinator for Sears, began using high school and college students about three years ago as an alternative to mannequins.

These young women take on a mannequin-like pose, standing completely still, eyes fixed (they try not to blink), with expressionless, yet pleasant looks on their faces. They wear more makeup than normal to give them a more "painted-on"

Mrs. Lloyd usually places the models at the mall entrance of the junior department in much the same way the mannequins are placed. They stand motionless for 15 or 20 minutes, then are relieved by another group, while they are whisked away to make wardrobe changes.

The first time we tried it, I put a girl in a coat and she looked exactly like a mannequin," said Mrs. Lloyd. "A woman walked up and opened the coat to see what kind of lining was in it. The girl moved and the woman jumped about

THE FASHION COORDINATOR said things like that are always happening.

But it only demonstrates that live mannequins are an effective advertising tool. They do indeed get people's attention. People are going to stop and look at a real live person. A mannequin does not attract people into the store," said Mrs.

Most people pass by and point, while others may still be skeptical, poking the model's arms to see if they are human. 'Children are usually the first to notice. They are more inquisitive by nature,"

The live mannequins are elevated on stands, much like mannequins and they try to focus above the people. This gives them the advantage of not being distracted by curious customers who often try and make them smile.

Tamah Laine, senior at Monterey High School, has done mannequin modeling three or four times, quickly getting the role of a mannequin down pat. "It's a different kind of modeling, different from the walking and turning I usually do," she said. "People stare and say is she real', and sometimes little boys poke

Miss Laine revealed that it is not as difficult as it may seem. "I just find something to stare at. It's kind of like you are in a daze," she said. "You don't see the people's expressions, but you can hear what they are saying."

CAROL CRAIG, CORONADO High School senior, has also done mannequin modeling three or four times and can't wait to do more. "You get a lot of heckling from the guys," she said. "And it's harder when a big crowd gathers around." But, she said, she too becomes oblivious to the things around her.

Miss Craig has also done robot model ing, which does require some movement every 30 or 35 seconds. She explained that robot modeling attracts more attention, more people try to get her to smile.

Mrs. Lloyd has the models practice before a mirror before striking their poses. And it is helpful for them to go around the store and observe the stance of the mannequins. "The girls must have their arms extended, somewhat with their fingers slightly apart to look like a real mannequin. This can be tiring as their fingers slowly want to go together,' said Mrs. Lloyd.

But with just a little practice and a lot of nerve, the models are able to fool some unsuspecting customers.

WHICH IS WHICH? - At first glance it is difficult to tell which nequin' on the left is Tamah Laine, a model for Sears, who of these two mannequins is a real person. Look again, the 'man-

DRESSING THE MANNEQUIN — Dressing a mannequin is a difficult task, but Brenda Simmons, left, and Pam Peek, right, know just how to take the 'dummy' apart for easy handling.

They have to be quick about their job because the lights used to highlight the fashions in the windows get hot fast. Their favor-ite window displays are of the seasonal theme.

AS FASHIONS HAVE che throughout the years, so have mannequins. They have evolved from homely headless dummies of 40 or 50 years ago, which were built like football players, melting in the heat, to the human-like mannequins of today.

They were made of plaster in the '20s and weighed 220 pounds. In 1931 Cora Scovil changed all that when she created a cloth mannequin with flexible metal and wooden arm joints. Lester Caba was the real innovator with his creation of "Cynthia." She was so life-like that he escorted her to the Metropolitian Opera and equipped her with her own chauffeur. She was so realistic that she made the cover of Life magazine in 1937. Although she disappeared for a while, in the 50s she made a come-

THE MANNEQUIN HEADS were painstakingly sculptured from clay, fashioned after their own faces or that of people they knew. Brigette Bardot even inspired some of the mannequins, as did other well-known peo-

Mannequins are even made to resemble women from different parts of the country. For example, the mannequins of Flordia and California are tanned and blonde.

Alvin Le Doux, visual merchandising manager for Sears, explained that mannequins today are made of fiberglass and are spray painted with flat enamel paint.

"Mannequins have gone back to the more realistic look. They used to have no faces, that was the trend three or four years ago," said Le Doux. They even come with realistic glass eyes, long eye lashes, blush and There are even experts who travel from town to town repairing the mannequins. They paint their faces when they become damaged and replace parts of the plastic body. Le Doux said mannequins last

The National Safety Council has rec-ognized the fleet safety record of Pioneer Natural Gas Co. as tops in the gas utility industry among companies with over one million miles driven during 1979.

Pioneer Natural Gas employees drove 714 service vehicles a total of 11,970,417 miles during 1979, according to Derrell Havins, safety director of Pioneer Corp and reported the fewest number of accidents - a total of 50 - among the 31 gas utility companies competing in the million miles and over division of the National Fleet Safety Contest.

In recognition of that achievement, a plaque representing the first place award has been presented to the company by the National Safety Council and the American Gas Association, co-sponsors of the safe driving competition.

Havins said the first place finish in 1979 marks Pioneer Natural Gas Co.'s return to safe driving leadership after nearly a decade of absence. He said the company last received a first place safe driving award in the late 1960s when it competed in a grouping that included companies with fewer than one million miles driven annually

Pioneer Natural Gas employees who are assigned service vehicles participate in regularly scheduled defensive driving courses and other safety awareness programs aimed at making them safer drivers. The sessions are coordinated by Havins and involve the active participation of safety committees organized in each of the utility's 10 operating districts.

If you are thinking about opening an interest-paying checking account, here's a thought from First National Bank:

COMPARE.

Regular checking accounts have not earned interest because a 1933 Federal law prohibited financial institutions from paying interest on checking.

Now, that law has changed. And all kinds of financial institutions, even those who never offered checking accounts before, can provide interest-bearing checking to their customers. This has been accompanied by some very loud, noisy, and sometimes confusing advertising claims.

First National Bank has offered INTEREST/CHECKING to our customers a long time. And quite frankly we've found that earning interest on transaction-type accounts won't be to the advantage of everyone.

Things To Consider

At some places the service charge on interest-paying checking accounts may be a lot different than the charge on regular checking. There may even be a per check charge, too.

Some financial institutions won't return checks with the monthly statement on interest-paying accounts, unless you pay an extra charge.

And some will pay interest only on fully collected deposits. So you wouldn't earn interest on the amount of any check you deposited until that check cleared the bank on which it was written.

The point is, you may need to shop carefully to find the services that best suit your needs. And if you decided to switch to an interest-paying checking plan, be sure you understand the plan you are considering. And especially what its true cost to you will be.

How To Determine If It's Right For You

Get answers to these important questions:

"What is the minimum balance required to earn interest?"

"What is the minimum balance required to avoid service charges?"

"What are the per check charges?"

"Are there any hidden charges?"

"Will I get my checks back at the end of the month?"

One Final Note

Naturally, we think our INTEREST/CHECKING plan is the best one offered by any financial institution in West Texas. It's both a checking and a savings account. And if you keep $500 in your account, you pay no service charge, you earn interest, and there are no per check charges, no matter how many you write. It's that simple. We'll be glad to show you how it can work for you.

We want you to compare plans. Because we think when you do, you'll find First National Bank's INTEREST/CHECKING the best plan around.

OUR LOVE APPLES TURNED out poorly last year.

Maybe it was the extremely dry weather or the excessive heat. Whatever the reason, we were disappointed with what we got.

What are love apples? Not what you probably think. They're red and round and good to eat. They grow in the spring and summer and can be eaten raw or cooked alone or with other foods. They can be served in solid state or as a juice

You recognize it now for sure. Love apple is another name for tomato. That's what they were called years ago.

We take them pretty much for granted now. No one doubts that tomatoes are edible — in many forms as noted above. But it wasn't always so.

Folks used to think tomatoes were poisonous. "Everybody" knew that eating one would cause instant and very painful death. Everybody, that is, except a few enlightened people like Thomas Jefferson. To prove to others that this fruit (that's what it is technically) wasn't harmful, Jefferson assembled a group and ate several tomatoes in their presence. The shocked onlookers waited for the inevitable. When nothing happened, they became reluctant believers.

Ever notice how often "everybody" is wrong? The earth isn't flat. Toads don't cause warts. Mothers don't "mark" their unborn babies.

THERE ARE SOME AREAS regarding Social Security, too, where 'everybody" has the wrong information. For example:

1. Social Security isn't just for oldsters. Many people have this impression, but our beneficiaries range in age from infants to those well over 100 years. They include millions who are minor children, students to age 22, mothers with entitled children in their care, and young disabled individuals. It's a program

2. You can get back all you pay into Social Security — and more. Most people getting retirement or disability benefits at present recover all of their own contributions and that of their employer's in several years or less.

This doesn't include Medicare protection with a potential worth of many thousands of dollars. And they have had, over the years, insurance against disability and for eligible survivors in case of death.

3. Social Security isn't going broke. We've been operating since 1937 and we're still solvent. The millions of people entitled to benefits get their checks every month. Any problems with financing will be dealt with by Congress, and Social Security will continue to be a vital and healthy part of the American

The rumor about "going broke" disturbs me more than any other. It has persisted from the beginning, even though we've always met our obligations on time and have never been in the red. Sometimes I wonder just what you have to do to convince people.

After all, Thomas Jefferson didn't have to eat tomatoes for 44 years to get

Cost Of Moving Deductible

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a series of tax tip articles provided by the of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.)

Years ago it wasn't uncommon for people to live at one address for a lifetime. Now, people move more than ever before and many buy and sell their

Despite the hardship of the physical move itself, there are some compensations. Chances are, if you merely moved to a larger or better house and kept your same job, you won't be able to deduct moving costs. However, you should not overlook the possibility of tax deductions for moving expenses under certain circumstances.

These and other subjects concerning your 1980 tax return will be explored at the "Taxes and You" program. This public service course is sponsored by the Lubbock Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants in cooperation with the Internal Revenue Service. The informal two-night course will be offered on Feb. 3 and 5 from 7:00-10:00 p.m.

More than 40 CPAs will volunteer their time to provide taxpayers with instructions and question-and-answer sessions. The program is open to the public at a charge of $1 per person to cover administrative costs.

Have you moved for the benefit of your employer? Are you self-employed and beginning work at a new principal place of business? Then certain reasonable related expenses may be deductible. Certain requirements must be met,

First, your new place of work must be at least 35 miles farther from your old residence than was the old place of work. To deduct moving expenses you must be starting your first job, changing jobs or being transferred.

If you are beginning your first job, the place of work must be at least 35 miles from your old residence.

Second, you must be employed after you move for at least 39 weeks during the 12-month period following the move. If you're self-employed, the 39-week requirement still holds, but so does an obligation to work 78 weeks out of the 24-month period following your move.

Third, unless circumstances prevent, your move must somewhat coincide with your date of employment. That is, your moving expenses were incurred within one year from the time you first report to work.

Fourth, expenses must be reasonable. You would not, for example, be able to deduct a two-week tour of New York State on a move from Philadelphia to New York City.

Many of the costs incurred in a job-related move are deductible. These allowable items include such examples as -meals and lodging for you and your family when you're traveling between

-transportation of household goods and personal effects

-transportation, meals and lodging during pre-move househunting

-temporary quarters for 30 days after obtaining work and —the costs of selling your residence. These deductions should be claimed on Form 3903, "Moving Expense Adjustment," attached to Form 1040; they are not itemized deductions. There are limitations on certain expenses that can be deducted, and additional limitations if the move is outside the United States. If your move is outside the U.S., get Form 3903F. Detailed information on moving expenses can be found in the free IRS Pub. 521, "Moving Expenses."

In addition, whether the sale of your personal residence was work-related or not, there are tax benefits the seller should consider. As a seller, you may be able to defer payment of tax on all or part of the gain. You may also be able to exclude the gain from your gross income if you are 55 or older.

To defer the gain, you must have bought and lived in a replacement residence within 18 months before or after the sale date of the other house. The purchase price of the new residence must be equal to or greater than the adjusted sales price of the old residence. Your age has no effect in this case.

Furthermore, you must continue to defer the gain on the sale and purchase of other homes during your lifetime until finally you sell your home but do not purchase one of equal or greater cost.

To exclude the gain you must meet certain age, ownership and occupancy requirements

If you sold your home in 1980 and you were 55 or older before the date of the sale, you may elect to exclude up to $100,000 of the gain ($50,000 if you are a married person filling a separate return) on the sale. You must have owned and occupied the residence for three of the five years ending on the date of sale. Notice the word "elect." This means the choice is up to you. However, you may do this only once in a lifetime.

If you do sell your personal residence (whether such a sale affects your taxes), you must report it on Form 2119, "Sale or Exchange of Persoal

Further information on this topic is available in IRS Pub. 523, "Tax Information on Selling Your Home." IRS Pub. 17, "Your Federal Income Tax," also contains information on moving expenses and the sale of a residence, as well as many other general tax topics.

These publications and forms can be ordered by mail, using the order form in the tax package. Or you can call the IRS forms/tax information number list-

Food Choice Can Save Energy

TORONTO (UPI) - People's food choices can help save fuel energy, says agricultural scientist David Pimentel. The Cornell University professor says. for example, the energy input of a vegetarian dinner is less than one-third that of a beef dinner. Even fish and chicken represent savings. More than twice the amount of energy is needed to produce a serving of beef than a serving of either chicken or fish. Pimentel told a symposium in Toronto on the national impacts of recommended dietary changes.

Pimintel said a reduction by half in consumption of meat and other animal products would save half the energy, mineral resources and land and one-third the water used in animal production.

If Americans switched to the healthier. more energy-efficient diet." he said. up to 30 gallons of oil per person would be saved each year, or one percent of the entire energy consumption of the na-

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

AN ASSUMPTION IN THE OUTGOING CARTER administration's Proposed 1982 fiscal budget is that $13 million would be saved by charging the cotton industry for quality inspections conducted by the U. S. Department of Agri-

Budget officials with the USDA said the Carter administration would have a bill introduced before it leaves office that would call for charging the cotton and tobacco industries for grade inspections.

The total savings in fiscal 1982 is estimated at $24 million and is built into projections for the USDA budget for the Agricultural Marketing Service.

One USDA budget official said the charge would be about $1 per bale for quality classifications and would put the cotton industry on a par with the meat industry and others that pay for quality inspections.

Brenda Hatton, an aide to Rep. David Bowen, D-Miss., chairman of the House Cotton Subcommittee, said a bill to impose fees for USDA cotton quality inspections has not yet been introduced in the new Congress. She said she doubts Congress would approve such a bill.

THE USDA'S OVERALL BUDGET ESTIMATES for the 1982 fiscal year include assumptions of higher U.S. corn plantings in 1981, a big increase in wheat plantings, a small drop in soybean plantings and lower cotton plantings.

Budget officials said corn plantings were projected at 85 million acres, up from 83.5 million in 1980, with yields forecast to recover to 103 bushels per acre from the drought-reduced 90.8 last year.

Wheat plantings were estimated at 86 million acres, far above 80.9 million planted last year, while yields were predicted to remain unchanged at 33 bush-

For soybeans, planted acreage is projected to ease to 70 million from 70.3 million in 1980. No yield forecasts were made for the 1981 soybean crop.

Cotton plantings were forecast at 13.9 million acres and yields per harvested acre at 485 pounds. At the time the proposed budget was prepared, USDA was estimating 1980 plantings at 14.3 million acres and yields at 400 pounds.

The USDA, however, subsequently revised its 1980-crop estimates to include plantings of 14.6 million acres and an average yield of 411 pounds per harvested

PRICE SUPPORT LOAN ACTIVITY BY THE Commodity Credit Corp. for the 1982 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, will total an estimated $4.6 billion, up more than $1 billion from this year, according to the proposed budget.

"This reflects higher loan rates and increased loan volume for all major commodities except tobacco," officials said. "This increase in volume is due to (expected) higher production of 1981 crops, larger ending stocks and no normal acreage requirements.

The short crops in 1980 and higher prices helped to reduce spending for price support loans in the current fiscal year, USDA officials told a press brief-

The budget also proposes that funding for the all-risk assurance guarantees for exports be kept at $2 billion, the same level as for the current fiscal year.

In putting together the CCC budget, USDA analysts projected that crop production and national farm income would rise, exports of agricultural commodities would increase, and that there would be no restrictions on farmer plantings, among other factors.

WEATHER CONDITIONS IN THIS COUNTRY and around the world could change the actual CCC outlays for price support activities by as much as several billion dollars from what the USDA now estimates, the analysts said.

The USDA's total budget outlays for FY 1982 would jump to $28 billion from $20.89 billion this year. Outlays then would increase to an estimated $29.7 billion in FY 1983, to $31.9 billion in FY 1984, to $33.8 billion in FY 1985, and to $35.3 billion in FY 1986.

These, however, are Carter administration proposals and projections and the USDA's budget is expected to be revised after President-elect Ronald Reagan takes office Tuesday.

Costs for the food stamp program, included in the USDA budget, would advance to $12.4 billion in FY 1982 from $11.1 billion in the current year. Congress has placed a cap on the program for the current year at $9.7 billion and the program will run out of money in July unless the cap is lifted, officials said.

The proposed budget includes an increase in the number of USDA workers to 87,000 from 86,500 in the current year.

"If we get some wind, we could lose the whole country," he said as he fingered a clod of dirt that refused to break.

Ehler, 49, a third-generation farmer on the eastern Colorado plains, was surveying what would have been a carpet of four-inch-high winter wheat in a normal year. In a strange Colorado winter of shirt-sleeve weather days, however, it takes a close look to spot the beginnings of wheat in Ehler's dun-colored fields.

It is not a disater yet, but danger is mounting for ski resort operators, farmers an possibly even cities like Denver, which is breaking winter water-use records as homeowners try to keep trees and shrubs healthy.

Nolan Doesken, assistant state climatologist at Colorado State University, said 5.12 inches of rain and snow fell in Colorados central mountains between October and December down from the average of 8.82 inches. Runoff from the high country snowpack provides most of Colorado's water.

Considering that 26.24 inches of precipitation usually falls between October and May in the mountains, the 3.7-inch shortfall at the end of December does not seem like much, Doesken said, but added, "If the mountains go another month, then it will get tough making up

Colorado resort operators are now worried a major snow drought may be in the offing. Most of the mountain resorts are surviving on man-made snow and long-made reservations, but the year-end holidays were a near disaster. Two Colorado ski areas have closed for lack of snow, and many are trying to stay open with 18 to 24 inches of snow instead of the three to four feet they normally have

On the plains, farmers are taking advantage of the warm, dry weather to work on equipment, but many say they're feeling a bit panicky because there may not be enough water for spring

BRIGHTON, Colo.(AP) — John Eh-ler rubbed his cheek and sighed as he ers, who plant in the late summer or early fall and harvest in the next summer, need rain or snow soon to thwart the cri-

On Ehler' farm, where the Rockies' shadowy peaks are visible through a smoky-blue haze, only 60 percent of the winter wheat crop of 1,500 acres has sprouted, for example. Ehler expects he will have to replant 450 acres this spring - if it rains. The last time it rained here was May 18 of last year, Ehler said. "I don't think 1976 was as bad as this," he

In the winter of 1976-1977, the situation was much the same as it is this year in Colorado - farmer waiting for rain and ski resort operators praying for snow to cover their patchy slopes.

The snow did not come that winter. Business on Colorado ski slopes dropped 38 percent, and resort areas and businsses wholly dependent on skiing reported losses of $78 million.

Agriculture losses were put at $120 million, and some 3 million acres of parched plains suffered serious wind ero-

This year, there is still time for farmers to salvage their winter wheat - eastern Coloado's big cash crop — and for re-sort operators to have a good year. The hope of both is for a lot of moisture, and

But the National Weather Service does not hold out much hope. A high pressure ridge parked over Utah and Idaho is pushing storms north of the Rocky Baugh. He said the ridge shows no sign of breaking up, which could signal major troubles for farmers who irrigate in the spring and summer.

Like many Colorado farmers, Ehler said his reservoirs are in good shape now, "but with the subsoil being so dry, it won't go far." He said that if conditions do not improve, he will have to plant some grain crop other than his usual spring crop of corn, which requires a relatively high amount of water.

By COTTON FANNING Plains Cotton Growers, Inc.

Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., of Lubbock has made the first positive step toward the development of a multi-faceted plan to combat bollworm infestations that have caused increasing economic damage to High Plains cotton in each of the past three years. Out of reserve funds collected from producers to carry out the widely acclaimed Diapause Boll Weevil Control Program, PCG through its Boll Weevil Steering committee has authorized the expenditure of up to $50,000 to get a research program underway this year, according to Ed Dean, PCG field service

Weevil control funds are separate from PCG moneys, Dean explains, and authority to spend weevil program money for any other purpose required a unanimous resolution from the Boll Weevil Steering committee and agreement from each of the 11 High Plains compresses who collect the funds under contract with the Steering Committee and

But just about everyone on the Plains is convinced that a continued escalation of the bollworm problem on the Plains is the most serious threat to High Plains cotton production since the boll weevil began overwintering above the Caprock in the early 1960s," Dean says, and that the bollworm is an immediate threat to the entire area.

Dean also emphasizes that these funds can be committed without jeopardizing the continued success of the weevil control program in any way.

Dean cautions, however, that availability of boll weevil reserve funds is currently limited to 1981 only and is contingent on the success of ongoing efforts to attract additional funds for 1981 and future years from Cotton Inc. and other entities with a high stake in the area cotton industry, including the Texas Legisla-

Entomologists believe bollworms can be controlled with insecticides effectively applied at the proper time in proper amounts. The great danger, they say, lies in the lack of widespread bollworm infestations on the Plains in recent years and the resultant inexperience of producers, help the pests to develop tolerance to insecticides and become virtually uncontrollable, as have bollworms and tobacco budworms in other cotton production Dean believes some of the original objectives of research will be to learn exactly what effect agro-ecosystems changes of recent years on the Plains

tive insects; what natural bollworm enemies in the area are most effective; whether overwintering or in-migration is most responsible for the increased insect load; and what wild plants are the major hosts for bollworms.

The full scope and direction of the research project, however, will be determined in future meetings of state Extension Service and private entomologists.

questions, then a conference planned by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the Texas Farmer-Stockman magazine is for you. The conference, "Getting In - Growing - Getting Out of Agriculture," will be at Texas A&M University Research and Extension Center here Tuesday. The program will begin at 9 a.m. and continue throughout the day. It is one of three similar programs being conducted across the state. Other meetings will be held in Weslaco and Dallas. According to Dr. Wayne Hayenga, extension economist, the conference is a one-day seminar on the business aspects of farming and ranching. "It is intended to help farmer identify non-traditional alternatives for making farm business management easier and to learn more about turning problems opportunities," he added.

Major areas of discussion will deal "Agriculture's Future. "Agricultural Business Planning, "Estate Planning Needs," "Financial Planning Considerations," and "Making Other's Problems Your Opportunity," he

Program Mark Established By Investors

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (Special) - Public investment in U.S. oil and gas programs set a new record in 1980 for the fourth straight year-soaring 69 per cent to a total of $1.782 billion.

The report, issued recently by Annapolis-based Investment Search Inc., which specializes in analysis and evaluation of petroleum programs, predicted 1981 would be another banner year as prices at the wellhead and investor both remain high. Investment Search President Arthur Jerold King said pubic investment in 1981 oil and gas programs could hit $2.5 billion as the nation continues its quest for domestic energy sources. The $1.782 billion invested by the public in 1980 in oil and gas programs registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission compares to $1.056 billion in 1979 and $669 million in 1978. In addition to the record public investment in 1980 an estimated $3 billion was raised in nonregistered programs, commonly called private placements, according to Investment Search. The firm said this private funding could jump to more than $4 bil-

The company survey of the petroleum ndustry said the 1980 public investment total included $1.318 billion in drilling programs, $429.6 million in income programs in which producing properties are purchased, and $34.4 million in other types of programs such as completion projects and royalty acquisitions.

The record 1980 public investment total was raised by 90 petroleum companies, compared to 71 in 1979-a 27 per cent increase. The 1980 figure included 22 companies that were making their first venture into SEC-registered programs. These 22 newcomers raised $197.4 million, or 11 per cent of the total public

The top 1980 public fund raised for oil and gas programs again was Petro-Lewis Funds Inc. of Denver with $338.5 million. The firm also led in 1979 with $239.4 mil-

Others in the top 10 for 1980 were: Can-Am Drilling Programs Inc. of Forth Worth, $115 million; Apache Corp., Minneapolis, $71.7 million; Damson Oil Corp. of New York City, 468.9 million; ENI Exploration Co., Bellvue. Wash., $52.7 million; Dyco Petroleum Corp., Minneapolis, $45 million; Petroleum Investments Ltd. of Oklahoma City, $40 million in its first year of SEC-registered programs; Energy Management corp. of Denver, $38.4 million.

THE NATIONAL PETROLEUM COUNCIL, which serves as an advisor committee to the Secretary of Energy, says a significant portion of future U.S. gas supplies may be obtained from the nation's Devonian shale, coal seams and

In a comprehensive report on unconventional gas sources, the council concluded that under certain economic conditions, gas supplies in the unconventional dategory could contribute from 14 to 18 trillion cubic feet of gas per year from now until the year 2000.

Recent conventional gas reserve additions have ranged from 10 to 14 trillion cubic feet annually

The council expects gas supplies from tight sands to contribute about 10 trillion cubic feet per year by the turn of the century, compared to two trillion cubic feet from coal seams and one trillion from Devonian shale. Smaller amounts of gas may come from geopressured brines, the report indicated. The volume of gas taken from tight sand formations could constitute as much as 14 percent of total U.S. energy requirements in the year 2000, according to the NPC. Ultimate recovery is estimated at up to 574 trillion cubic feet. The council report notes that a great amount of uncertainty exists in the estimates of reserve additions and production rates, and that the rate of development of unconventional gas sources will be highly dependent on economic conditions. Geologic and technological uncertainties, government actions, and unresolved jegal questions also are seen as posing variables in the development of

THE COUNCIL, in a report on the refining industry, indicates that existing crude of distillation capacity will be adequate in the United States through 1990, but that additional refining capacity will be needed at that time.

"White the demand for refined petroleum products is expected to remain constant or decline slightly during the 1980's, the mix of specific products deindedisexpected to change significantly," the report said.

The decreased demand for motor gasoline, heating oil, and residual fuel oil will be offset by a growth in demand for commercial jet fuel, diesel fuel, liquefied gases; and non-energy petroleum products, according to the NPC The decline of domestic petroleum liquids production in the 1970s is expected to be halted in the 1980s by increased rates of reserve additions and the beginning of synthetics production; however, the average quality of U.S. supply will decline." the report stated. In 1978, 54 percent of the supply to U.S. refineries was low-sulphur types. By 1990, those more desirable crude oils are expected to be only 41 to 45 percent of the total supply

CHANGES IN THE COMPOSITION of future product demands and crude oil supplies is expected to require expansion in facilities for upgrading unleaded gasoline, desulfurization, and residual fuel oil conversion, according to the

The NPC thinks that refiners' present plans for expansion of those facilities may not be adequate to meet 1982 requirements.

Under several cases analyzed by the council, between $5 and $12 billion of investment in downstream processing facilities would be required by 1990. The NPC expects U.S. refineries to lose their competitive edge over foreign refineries in October of this year, when the end of domestic crude oil price controls will shift marketing costs. U.S. refineries currently compete favorably with typical foreign export refineries, particularly those serving the East Coast

Top Christian Musical Group Sets Concert In Municipal Auditorium

Morning Star, Inc., will bring one of the top contemporary Christian musical groups, Andrus, Black-wood & Co., to Lubbock Monday, Feb. 9, for a 7:30 p.m. concert in the Municipal Auditorium.

Their latest album, "Live," is number 11 on the Contemporary Christian Music album chart. The fifties-style "Jesus You're So Wonderful", a release from that album, is currently the number one contemporary Christian song.

Other songs they have made popular include "Following You," "I'm Gonna Rise" and "Oh What A Day.'

Promoter Mike Bedford and the group's booking agent and secretary, Kathy McKinnon, both said Andrus, Blackwood & Co. (AB&C) were similar in concert to the Imperials, who performed to an enthusiastic Lubbock audience in November. Group leaders Sherman Andrus and Terry Blackwood are

"They blend entertainment with evangelism," Miss McKinnon said. "They feel entertainment is very important to get people involved so they'll-lis-ten to what's being said. They're very ministry cons-

Although AB&C performs their easy rock sound at churches, colleges, auditoriums, religious festivals and amusement parks around the U.S., three group members maintain active solo careers and three are professional studio musicians

After leaving The Imperials in 1977, Andrus and Blackwood were asked by The Benson Company to record an album together to fill the gap created when The Imperials switched to the Word label.

Miss McKinnon said they had no intention of forming a group, but because "Grand Opening" went over so well and the demand for public appearances was high, the pair began to tour in the summer of 1977 with the musicians who played on

AB&C now travels about 10 days a month, which allows the musicians to do studio work and Andrus, Blackwood and Karen Voegtlin to continue their own ministries. Since 1977, the only personnel change has been the drummer, who is presently Billy Blackwood, Terry's cousin.

Producer-arranger Terry Blackwood, the group business manager, comes from a family steeped in the Gospel music tradition. His father, the late Doyle Blackwood, founded and managed The Blackwood Brothers Quartet which is still popular. After singing with The Stamps Quartet off and on while attending Memphis State University, Blackwood joined The Imperials in 1967

Andrus was raised in California and was singing for churches there when he became lead vocalist with Andrae Crouch and the Disciples. When he became the first black to join a white Gospel quartet (The Imperials) in 1975, ripples went through the Christian music industry.

"There are still some people who are a little set back," Miss McKinnon said. "In certain parts of the country, we send a group photo and they call back and say, 'We didn't know you had a black in the group. Some people still don't know quite what to

She noted that AB&C does not sing black Gospel or white Gospel music, but their own style. She described their audiences as primarily Christian, but added the group has played to large non-Christian crowds at Knott's Berry Farm, Great America amusement park in Illinois and Six Flags Over

Andrus, Blackwood & Co. will have a new alburn, "Soldier of the Light," released in four to six weeks, McKinnon said, on the Greentree label for Benson. Their previous releases are "Grand Opening" (1977), "Following You" (1978) and "Live" (1980).

Survey Shows TV Turns Off Religious Viewers

A-J Religion Writer

A Texas Tech mass communications professor has recently concluded a study which he says is the first research to indicate religious persons are less likely to watch television and more likely to avoid TV movies, police shows and sit-coms.

Assistant Mass Communications Professor Don Umphrey, a member of Broadway Church of Christ, said religious people also are more likely to watch religious programs than other TV offerings.

Umphrey said his findings, resulting from two surveys taken between March, 1979, and August, 1980, are the first to his knowledge that reveal a pattern of avoidance of TV viewing related to religious

The results should have ramifications for network television programming. Umphrey asserted, and should be significant to network executives.

"Lubbock is conservative and fundamental," Umphrey noted. "I suspect the findings would be similar elsewhere, but I can't say for sure.

The original purpose of the study was to determine who watches religious programs. To find out, Umphrey surveyed a random sample of 327 Lubbockites by phone, asking about such programs as "The PTL Club," "James Robison Pre-"Oral Roberts," "The Old Time Gospel Hour," local Sunday School and church services, religious specials and cable TV programs.

Sixty-eight percent of the respondents said they watched religious programs regularly. Television viewing was at a mean of 3.5 hours daily

Approximately 84 percent claimed to attend church regularly and more than one third said they were Baptists. That fact, coupled with the emergence of the pattern of TV program avoidance, prompted Umphrey to undertake his second survey.

He surveyed 405 adults in Sunday

Umphrey used four criteria used in a 1929 Syracuse study to determine an individual's "religious intensity." Taken into account were church attendance, frequency of prayer and scriptural or devotional reading and perceived benefit from church.

Although the random sample scored higher in this category than he expected

Umphrey said the Baptists were 11.2 percent higher than the random sample. He added Lubbock is a fairly religious community, but the majority of the Baptists surveyed have little good to say about tel-

Energy Doctor Expands Operations

The Energy Doctor, a home air infiltration control firm headed by Jeff Tucker of Lubbock, has expanded its opera-tions rapidly since its introduction to this area in early 1980, and has now sold its first franchise.

The company provides an audit to determine the amount of air leakage that is present in a home, and makes the retrofit to reduce the infiltration of air. The re-

CHICAGO (AP) - Former astronaut James Lovell predicts a growth in telen markets over the next two decades that may rival the expenditures on the Apollo moon program. Now a director of the North American Telephone Association, Lovell said in a recent speech that the explosion in new equipment and services should add some $20 billion or more to the current $50-billion-a-year telecommunications industry.

sult, Tucker indicates, is a tighter, more energy efficient home.

The method used by The Energy Doctor first requires a pressurization of the home, and then the use of an infrared scanner and a smoke tube. The scanner detects the area of air loss, and the smoke tube, used near the suspected leak, provides visual confirmation.

Repairs include caulking the interior of windows and doors, and sealing bricks around a fireplace. The retrofit can include weather stripping doors, including front, back and garage entrances, as well as repairs to the home's slab. In addition to The Energy Doctor's work in existing homes which may be in need of repair or additional insulation, 12 builders also are reportedly making use of the service to provide new homeowners with a certification of the home's air

Under those conditions, the home is visited three times during construction.

In the final stage, when the home is completed, the company's pressurization equipment is installed to check all the caulking around windows, doors, and fire place. If an adjustment is needed, the repair is made and the builder is then given a certification that the home has a certain air exchange rate.

"My daughter the professor taught me a lesson. Now I'm earning 51/4" interest on my checking."

Yve always taught and practiced sound economics. But I never could figure out how to earn interest on my checking account. Then, this young, know-it-all professor tells me Gibraltar Savings pay 51/4% Day-By-Day Interest on checking. So, now 1 count on Gibraltar for the one account that lets me write checks and earn interest on my balance.

Thanks to my daughter the professor, I learned a valuable lesson. Gibraltar's new 51/4% Day-

By-Day Interest Checking does everything a checking account can do. Plus something no checking account could ever do. Earn interest. It pays 51/4% interest, compounded daily. And, if you keep $500 minimum in your account, your checking is absolutely free.

Even if you don't keep $500 in your account, you still earn 51/4% interest from date of deposit to date of withdrawal. Should your balance fall below $500, there's a small monthly charge of $5.00.

Count on Statewide Check Cashing from Texas' Largest.

Gibraltar is America's first insured, which means they've been insured by the FSLIC longer than anyone else in the country. They're Texas' largest savings association — a $3 billion giant with the state's strongest reserves. And with 71 offices in over 30 cities, you have check cashing privileges at any Gibraltar Savings in Texas. So get smart. Look to Gibraltar for convenience, security, the highest possible interest allowed by law and now, 51/4% Day-By-Day Checking.

Sideband Gives Superior Signal

Judging by the mail we receive, readers are both fascinated and puzzled by single sideband CB. The hobby magazines and the airwaves also are filled with sideband discussions.

Sideband, the experts and enthusiasts

Sideband, the experts and enthusiasts all seem to agree, is the best thing to happen to CB since the service was created almost 30 years ago.

To understand why sideband is superior to AM as a mode of CB transmission, you first must know what it is and how it is different, from the traditional AM

When you transmit on Am signal, what comes out over the air is made up of three distinct parts: a carrier, which takes up all the airwave space on a channel: and two sidebands, an upper side-band and a lower sideband, which occupy the upper and lower frequency limits of the channel.

All four watts are spread out over the entire channel with AM. With sideband,

CB Break

ird vice pres-

however, the carrier is suppressed, and you have the choice of selecting what sideband either the upper or the lower -you want to use.

In practice, however, almost all CB sideband activity these days is in the upper sideband mode, though it will vary slightly from location to location and from club to club.

The important thing to realize about sideband is that it conserves airway space by concentrating the output of your rig in a much smaller area. In other words. the sideband signal uses only onethird the drawave room occupied by the AM signal. And because it is concentrated, it is more effective.

Thus, the normal four-watt output of an AM set becomes 12 watts output on sideband. Called PEP for Peak Envelope Power, the concentrated sideband ob-viously has a greater range than an AM signal.

As on AM, the terrain and weather af-fect sideband signals, but, on the aver-age, you can plan on getting another 10 miles of extra range by using sideband over AM.

Sideband really is the wave of the future for the CB band at 27 Mhz. While UHF frequencies and the FM mode of transmission are just around the corner. they will only supplement the current HF CB band.

To see the difference sideband can make. Ilsten to a busy AM channel and then switch to a sideband channel. While there are t as many sidebanders as AMers undustry insiders estimate that maybe 25 percent of the nation's 35 mil-lion active CBers have sideband capabilities), the sideband channels will still be much less noisy than you'd expect.

The signals you hear on sideband will be noticeably easier to understand. The modulation" will be clean and crisp,

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: Those national CB clubs and associations are nothing but a big rip-off. I paid $10 and joined one. All I got back was a crummy membership card, a copy of the 10-code and a mimeographed two-page newsletter that was so faint I could hardly read it .- B.T., Indi-

Dear Mike: What possible reason is there anymore for CBers not to use their call-sign? I monitor Channel 19 and I bet that fewer than one out of 20 stations properly identifies himself. The FCC has really loosened its rules and has given us instant licensing. If we CBers want them to keep improving the hobby, then we'd better show some responsibility and start using call-signs in addition to our handles. I think every CB club should stress this to its members and every operator should refuse to talk to someone until he hears the call-sign. -V.F., St. Louis

Dear Static: My gripe is against the CB operator who continually calls and calls the same station, time and time again. If he calls once and can't connect he should clear out and give the channel to someone else. Repeated calls only tie up the channel. If the station is by the channel, he'll answer the first or second time. If he doesn't answer, he's obviously not there.-B.L., Blackstone, Va.

Ham radio operators abandoned AM back in the mid-50s. Now, it's almost impossible to find an AM signal on the ham bands. AM wastes airwave space. And, with more and more stations coming on each day, conservation is essenti-

AM signals distort easily and wear out the final amplifier section of a transmitter quicker because the carrier is always "on." With sideband, the rig only transmits when the operator speaks. Between words, there is no output, thus the rig itself is used more efficiently.

Sideband, however, is not for everyone. Let's face it, there are some who actually enjoy the confusion and congestion of AM. Sideband is for the serious CBer.

Q: I was recently tuning across the short-wave band and heard two ham radio operators in conversation. Next thing I knew, there was a third person on the air, talking over a telephone to one of the hams. What gives?—M.I., Denver

A: What you heard was a "phone patch," a perfectly legal, money-saving way to make long-distance telephone calls over amateur radio. The way it works is that one ham makes a telephone call, then "patches" it through his radio so the other party—thousands of miles away in some cases—can have a converSPECIALIZING IN FITTING FEET

Colgate Saves By Converting To Wood

HAMILTON, N.Y. (AP) — Colgate University in rural upstate New York plans to be heating with wood by next winter and saving more than a labeller of the collection of the colle a million dollars a year on its fuel bill.

A grant from the federal government will help the university pay the costs of installing a wood-fired boiler to take over most of the work now performed by three oil-fired units.

Colgate's director of administrative operations, James C. Morrow, expects the new boiler to supply 80 percent of the university's demands for heat and hot water. Wood scraps purchased at $15-$16 a ton from sawmills, furniture manufacturers and related industries within a 50mile radius of the Hamilton, N.Y., campus will fire the boiler.

Colgate now heats its buildings by burning No. 6 fuel oil, which Morrow said had been selling in Hamilton for 46 cents a gallon. Based on that price, a study done for the University by Mueller Associates of Baltimore predicts that Colgate will save nearly a quarter of a million dollars a year by converting to

"But our suppliers tell us to expect to pay well over a dollar a gallon for fuel oil next year," said Morrow, "and computed on that rate, our savings could be half a million dollars a year, or more.'

wood: it will eliminate the university's total dependence on the availability of fuel oil to heat its buildings. A campus task force on energy had constingency plans in the event that oil supplies wight come day he cut off. It now plies might some day be cut off. It now appears those plans can be shelved, he

The new boiler will be placed in an addition to be built onto the plant housing the present boilers, which will be retained as a backup system.

The oil-fired system in use now burns 1.2-million gallons of oil each year. In the new boiler, 10,400 tons of wood scraps, slab wood and bark chips will replace 960,000 gallons of that oil each year. Because it burns scraps, the system will not be a drain on local supplies of firewood.

A cyclone separator connected to the chimney of the system will remove ash and soot from the wood smoke and keep the operation well within standards protecting environmental quality, he said.
