Jurors Convict Ex-Viet POW

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — A five-man military jury on Thursday convicted Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood of collaborating with the enemy despite defense pleas that his 14 years as a prisoner of war drove him insane and turned him into a "white Vietnamese." The court-martial was the first jury trial of a Vietnam-era POW.

The jury found the 34-year-old Garwood innocent on a charge of maltreating a fellow POW, but convicted him on a lesser charge of assaulting the POW. All the jurors are Vietnam veterans.

Garwood's lawyers never disputed the collaboration charge. They argued the Marine, who was a 19-year-old jeep driver when he was captured by near Da Nang, was driven insane by his communist captors. The military judge, Col. Robert E. Switzer, told jurors they would have to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of Garwood's sanity to convict him.

The verdict came during the jury's second day of deliberations and after they examined copies of testimony given by some of the government's most damaging witnesses.

Sentencing will be determined by the same jury after more hearings. The collaboration verdict carries a possible maximum sentence of life in prison and forfeiture of $147,000 in pay accrued during Garwood's captivity. The assault conviction carries a possible sentence of six months in prison.

Seemingly Impassive

Garwood, an Indiana native who returned voluntarily to the United States in late 1979, stood in his Marine dress greens and looked straight ahead as the verdict was read, seemingly impassive as he had been during the 12-week-long trial. As he sat down, however, he seemed to be blinking back tears.

His companion of 18 months, Donna Long, a widow in whose house Garwood resides, wept openly, but made no comment.

The chief prosecutor said he would have no comment on the verdict. Jurors also had no comment.

Defense Shocked

The defense team, headed by John C. Lowe, appeared shocked as they left the court with Garwood, and later Lowe said Garwood "is disappointed, but beyond that he has nothing to say, and he is free to come and go." Garwood is a mail clerk at Camp Lejeune.

Last year, Garwood told a reporter he could take the worst that might happen to him, saying, "An American prison is better than a Vietnamese prison."

The tense scene in the courtroom was a dramatic contrast to the hallway outside the courtroom a few minutes before, where counsel and reporters joked about casting the "Robert Garwood Story" for the movies. A few minutes later, at 4:32 p.m., a Marine guard ran from his post at the court door to anounce that a verdict was coming.

Garwood was found guilty on all five

Debt Limit Hike Voted By House

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the unaccustomed heavy support of Republicans, the House agreed Thursday to raise the federal government's borrowing authority to $985 billion.

The $50 billion increase — the first piece of Reagan administration legislation to reach a vote in either house — was approved by a 305-104 margin and sent to the Senate, where final action is expected today.

Reagan "Grateful"

In a statement released by the White House hours after the House vote, President Reagan said he was "grateful" for the House action, which he termed "a show of responsible bipartisanship." He urged the Senate to "take the same action tomorrow so that the government can honor its obligations."

Most Republicans, who traditionally have opposed raising the debt ceiling, voted for the increase, with several explaining they were doing so only to give Reagan's economic program a chance to work. Many Democrats withheld their votes until it became clear most Republicans would support the bill.

GOP Support Due

A similar protest is planned by Senate Democrats. However, the bill is not considered in trouble because Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker has predicted a majority of GOP senators will grit their teeth and vote for it.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd proposed an amendment Thursday night that would raise the ceiling to only $958 billion, rather than the $985 billion asked by Reagan. Byrd said that since Reagan has pledged a 2 percent cut in the current year's budget, there is no need for such a large increase in the debt limit.

Still another issue was added when farm-state Republicans, led by Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, offered an amendment barring all U.S. trade with Russia

Speedy Natural Gas Decontrol Pushed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is being urged by advisers to seek a drastic speed up in decontrol of natural gas prices, an action some economists say could more than double prices of the country's second most popular fuel.

Some Reagan advisers are calling on the president to ask Congress to deregulate the wellhead price of natural gas by Sept. 30, more than three years ahead of the 1985 target date set by Congress in 1978.

The recommendation is contained in a wide-ranging budget review of government energy policies by the Office of Management and Budget. If the recommendations were adopted, it would represent a sharp reversal of government energy policies pursued for four years by former President Jimmy Carter.

The OMB recommendations would slash Carter's ambitious synthetic fuels program by more than one-third, reduce funding to promote solar power by 62 percent and cut government efforts to spur energy conservation by 60 percent — all in the name of fulfilling the Reagan campaign pledge to get government out of the energy business.

Officials at the OMB and the White House stressed that final decisions have not been made on the policy recommendations, many of which would certainly prompt lengthy battles in Congress.

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker said Thursday, however, that in general he favored lifting controls on natural gas, especially if it were accompanied by a "windfall profits" tax to recoup part of the added revenue that would flow to gas producers.

But the chairmen of the Senate and House energy committees, Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, and Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., said they opposed reopening the question of natural gas deregulation this year, although McClure said his committee might take it up in 1982.

Most congressional and Energy Department sources, who asked not to be named, called the natural gas decontrol proposal a trial balloon. Many doubted that Reagan would actually push for such a drastic speed up because of strong congressional opposition.

But even the fact that the proposal is under active consideration shows how committed the administration is to carrying out Reagan's pledge to leave energy development to the marketplace. Reagan's deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said the proposal was "the basis for discussions and consultations."

Edward Erickson, an economist specializing in natural gas, estimated earlier this week that complete decontrol could raise the price of natural gas to $4.50 per

Extradition Of Suspect In 1978 Murder Sought

By MARY ALICE ROBBINS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

THE CRIMINAL District Attorney's Office is making its third attempt to extradite a man charged in a nearly three-year-old murder case here.

Lubbock County sheriff's deputies confirmed they were notified Wednesday that Carlos Luna Vasquez had been arrested on a fugitive warrant in Greeley, Colo.

The 34-year-old Vasquez was indicted by a Lubbock County grand jury in June 1978 for the murder of Rafael Herrera Jr.

Herrera's bullet-riddled body was found the early morning of Feb. 24, 1978, lying outside an East Lubbock lounge. Police reports indicated the 39-year-old victim had been shot several times with a .38-caliber weapon.

Vasquez first was arrested in Greeley in April 1978 and the district attorney's office here launched its first extradition attempt shortly thereafter.

Former Criminal District Attorney Alton Griffin later was notified there had been a faulty complaint when the papers were filed for Vasquez' extradition. Prosecutors corrected the complaint and again requested the governor to seek extradition on Vasquez in December 1978.

However, before the official extradition papers could reach Greeley, authorities there apparently released Vasquez on bond and officials were unable to locate him again. A spokesman in the sheriff's department at Greeley said he was not sure exactly why Vasquez was released in late 1978.

Unless extradition papers are received within a certain amount of time, a prisoner has to be released, the spokesman noted. "But I don't know if that was the case," he added.

But Jim Bob Darnell, first assistant district attorney, said that Colorado authorities have caused problems in several extradition cases from Lubbock.

Within the past two years, Darnell said, at least three suspects who have been wanted in Lubbock County have been released from custody in Colorado before extradition papers arrived.

"We have a very definite problem with that state," Darnell said.

Assstant District Attorney Mark McBride said he expected the request for Vasquez' extradition to be prepared by sometime today. That request first goes

BRADLEY ILL

EL PASO (AP) — General of the Army Omar Bradley, the nation's only living five-star officer, has been hospitalized for what Army officials described as a "mild viral infection." Bradley, 87, was reported in satisfactory condition Thursday in the William Beaumont Army Medical Center.

Deep Spending, Tax Cuts Seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring that the nation is suffering from its "worst economic mess since the Great Depression," said Thursday night that the government must make dramatic cuts in taxes and spending because the economic judgment day is at hand.

He held federal policies responsible for "an economic calamity" and said his remedy would begin with three years of 10 percent income tax rate reductions and budget cuts "in virtually every department" of government.

"We must act and act now," he said. "We must not be timid."

Solemn, seated at his desk in the Oval Office, Reagan said in his first broadcast report to the nation, "Over the years, we have let negative economic forces run out of control. We have stalled the judgment day.

"We no longer have that luxury," he said. "We are out of time."

Reagan's speech was studded with statistics, but short of details. He said those will come when he unveils a legislative program to Congress on Feb. 18.

Cuts In Virtually Every Department

"It will propose budget cuts in virtually every department of government," the president said, and he directed the Cabinet to search out and eliminate "waste, extravagence and costly administrative overhead."

"At the same time we are doing this, we must go forward with a tax relief package," he said. "I shall ask for a 10 percent reduction, across-the-board, in personal income tax rates for each of the next three years." He did not say when the tax cut would first take effect under his plan.

Even as Reagan prepared his speech, congressional leaders were debating whether tax cuts should precede spending cuts. "We cannot delay" either, he said.

"There were always those who told us taxes couldn't be cut until spending was reduced," he said. "Well, we can lecture our children about extravagance until we run out of voice and breath. Or we can cure their extravagance simply by reducing their allowance."

But Pete Domenici, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said he favored budget cuts before tax cuts, explaining, "I personally want to see Congress take the hard medicine first."

As expected, Reagan said he also will submit to Congress a proposal for accelerated depreciation allowances to give a tax break to businesses that invest in new plants and equipment.

Give Workers Modern Tools, Equipment

Japanese steelworkers outproduce their American counterparts by about 25 percent, Reagan said. "This isn't because they are better workers. I'll match the American working man or woman against anyone in the world. But we have to give them the modern tools and equipment that workers in other industrial nations have."

The president sought to portray the numbers that peppered his speech in graphic, personal terms.

"There are seven million Americans caught up in the personal indignity and human tragedy of unemployment," the president said. "If they stood in a line — allowing three feet for each person — the line would reach from the coast of Maine to California."

Reagan said his advisers had provided him with "a comprehensive audit" of the nation's economy, which depicted in statistical terms the growth of inflation, regulation and government spending since World War II.

He said of the audit: "You won't like it, I didn't like it, but we have to face the truth and then go to work to turn things around."

He used a chart to illustrate increasing tax revenues and governmennt spending, and U.S. currency to portray inflation.

Dollar Compared

Reagan brandished a dollar bill in one hand and three coins in the other, explaining that the 1960 dollar is worth 36 cents today, and if present inflation rates persist, in three years it will be worth a quarter. Ten years ago, he said, the average family could own a home for 27 cents out of each dollar earned; today it takes 42 cents.

Government regulations have added $666 to the cost of an automobile, he said.

"I'm sure you're getting the idea that the audit presented to me found government policies of the last few decades responsible for our economic troubles," he said.

The speech was delivered four years and three days after Reagan's predecessor, Jimmy Carter, wearing a cardigan sweater, delivered a fireside chat and called for a sacrificial effort by the nation

Green Light Given Church Growth Plan

By LARRY SUTHERLAND
Avalanche-Journal Staff

PLANNING and Zoning Commission members Thursday approved a zone change to allow the Gloria Dei Lutheran Church room for future expansion of church buildings but not for apartments, as some residents in the area had feared.

The change was from residential to an A-2 (high density apartment) zone, but included a stipulation the zone change be used to allow only for church facilities. Also, the commission's approval allows for 59 parking spaces on the site plan instead of the only 39 spaces requested.

Robert Doty, spokesman for the 1706 Slide Road church, told commission members, "We're seeking the zoning change to avoid coming down here every time we want to make a change or expansion."

Although no specific timetable was mentioned, Doty said a "multi-use" facility of about 4,000-square-feet is planned for west of the church. The facility would include classrooms and a meeting room and may be constructed in eight to 10 months if a fund raising campaign proceeds well.

There was no oral opposition at the Thursday meeting, but some area residents earlier submitted letters protesting

Parallel Parking Plan Defended

By MARC FLAKE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

PARALLEL parking along University Avenue under a proposed street-widening plan would make the thoroughfare safer and also make the project eligible for federal highway money, disgruntled owners of businesses along the street were told Thursday night.

City Planning Director Jim Bertram, at a meeting with businessmen upset over the possible loss of 50 parking spaces in front of their University Avenue shops, maintained that city and national statistics indicate parallel parking is safer than angle parking now used on the street.

But most of the businessmen disagreed, and one unidentified participant at the meeting countered that the reason statistics showed a lower accident rate for parallel spaces was because fewer people took the trouble to parallel park.

The street-widening proposal, which is scheduled to go before the city council at 1:30 p.m. next Thursday, affects University Avenue from Fourth to 19th Streets. City officials argue the widening is needed to accomodate a higher volume of traffic on the one-mile strip adjacent to Texas Tech.

Tech regents Saturday approved granting additional easement space for the project, which also calls for changing the angle parking in front of businesses located on the east side of the avenue to parallel parking.

However, it was revealed during Thursday night's meeting that the parking change will not affect the widening process itself, but is being proposed because it is considered to be safer and because Bertram believes the city could be barred from using federal funds on the project if the parking change is not made.

The eight-to-10-foot area not used by angle parking will not be used to widen University Avenue, according to Bertram, but instead will be converted to a bricked walk way.

Although more than $500,000 in bond funds were approved for the University Avenue project in 1977, the city may need to use federal funds to complete it, Bertram said. He added that the Feederal Highway Administration will not fund street widening projects which include angle parking because the federal agency considers angle parking unsafe.

"I cannot buy the fact that parallel parking is safer," argued Steve Jantzen, operator of Stephen Craig, 1215 University Ave. "Remember flunking that three times on your driving test?"

And store owners noted that although city officials' statistics show University Avenue had the highest accident rate in the city in 1978, there is no proof the accidents were caused by angle parking.

Burl Pigg Jr. of University Jewelry, 1207 Unversity Ave., said the parking change was like "cutting our throats."

"We have less than one space per store now," he said. "If you cut it more we'll have less than half."

The economic impact of the parking change will cost merchants in the University Avenue strip thousands of dollars, said Stephen Shanklin, co-owner of the Wear House at 1217 University Ave.

Parking in the area would be reduced by 42 percent while most businesses

Former Connecticut Governor Ella Grasso Dies At Age 61

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Ella Grasso, Connecticut governor for six years and the first woman in U.S. history to be elected governor without following her husband into office, died Thursday night of complications due to cancer. She was 61.

Hartford Hospital spokesman James Battaglio said Mrs. Grasso, who had cancer of the liver and intestine and slipped into a coma early Thursday, was pronounced dead at 6:03 p.m. He said she died of a cardiac arrest after multiple organ failure. She was not on any life-support systems.

Battaglio said earlier Thursday that Mrs. Grasso was "totally" unconscious. The former governor had been listed in critical condition since Sunday and had slipped in and out of consciousness.

Mrs. Grasso's husband and their son and daughter were with her when she died, Battaglio said, adding the family asked the public "to join us tonight in praying for the governor and her family."

During her 11½-weeks in the hospital, Mrs. Grasso was given the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church many times.

Mrs. Grasso, a hard worker known for frugality who was a force in Connecticut politics for some 30 years, ended her second gubernatorial term at the midway point because of liver cancer.

"I make this decision with a heavy heart but with full appreciation that the people's business must continue at the highest level," she said in announcing her resignation effective Dec. 31, 1980, adding, "all of my life has been one of dedication to working for people."

The words echoed her sentiments in 1974 in announcing her first bid for governor, when she said she had always been "guided by only one principle — to work for people and to serve them with all my heart and mind and spirit."

Ella Grasso was a Democratic Party stalwart who never lost an election. She won first in 1952 as a candidate for the state House of Representatives, served as Connecticut secretary of state and in the U.S. Congress, and was re-elected as governor in 1978.

Family was also a top priority — she called her husband Thomas her best friend and closest confidante, and said she could never live anywhere except the Hartford suburb of Windsor Locks, her birthplace, because her parents were buried there.

She boasted of her warm relationship with the public, and was fond of saying: "You can put me down anywhere in the state and I can find somebody to talk to."

"See? They call me Ella," she said with satisfaction as she shook hands with Travelers Insurance Co. workers at a 1978 campaign stop.

Behind her desk, she was all business. Her eyeglasses perched atop her head, she would lecture political foes and allies on the merits of her position on whatever legislation or policy was at issue.

But by early 1978, some observers said Mrs. Grasso was in political trouble. She faced a challenge within her party — some Democrats said she had allowed state services and institutions to deteriorate — and Republicans were hopeful of a victory in November.

A February blizzard turned things around. The snowstorm shut down the state for three days. Ella Grasso was everywhere, and there was no doubt about who was leading state government.

Public reaction was symbolized by a message seen as Mrs. Grasso and reporters flew in a helicopter over eastern Connecticut when highways were closed. Tramped in huge letters in the snow was, "Ella Help."

Her opponents lost steam, and she swamped her Democratic challenger in the September primary — carrying all but two of the state's 169 towns. She won re-election to a second four-year term in November by 190,000 votes, and swept in Democratic majorities in both houses of the General Assembly.

Active in the Democratic Party nationally, Mrs. Grasso was among the first party leaders to support President Carter's re-election bid, and headed his campaign in the Connecticut primary.

Dole Urges Lifting Of Grain Embargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., urged the Reagan administration Thursday to lift the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union, "the sooner the better," to fulfill President Reagan's campaign promise and help American farmers.

But Reagan told reporters after a prayer breakfast in a Washington hotel that "no decision has been made" on whether to lift the embargo, as he promised during the campaign. "We're discussing it," he said.

Dole and other farm state senators previously were told the embargo would remain in effect at least until Feb. 17, the day they are to discuss the issue with Reagan.

Agriculture Secretary John Block, who took part in a lengthy Cabinet discussion of the embargo on Wednesday, told reporters in Phoenix, Ariz., he understood Reagan's decision may hinge partly on the potential Soviet threat to Poland.

Administration officials have said privately that whatever decision is made will have little effect on American farmers. Retaining the embargo, as reportedly urged by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, would send a message to Soviet leaders about U.S. concern over their intentions in Poland.

During the campaign, Reagan said in a written statement he favored lifting immediately the embargo imposed by President Jimmy Carter after the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

He continued to indicate his opposition to the embargo at his news conference last week. Reagan said the embargo meant farmers were bearing the burden of what he called "more of a kind of gesture" than "something real."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes dismissed as "not accurate" a report published Thursday by The Washington Post that Reagan had decided to keep the embargo in effect for the "foreseeable future."

In a letter to the agriculture secretary, Dole, second-ranking Republican on the Senate Agriculture Committee, said he thinks the embargo is ineffective. "At the proper time it will be lifted and the proper time is the sooner the better," he wrote.

Under the embargo, which Carter extended shortly before he left office, the United States blocked delivery of 17 million metric tons of U.S. corn and wheat, plus some soybeans and other products, destined for delivery to the Russians last year.

An additional 8 million metric tons of grain, specified under a long-term agreement in 1975 calling for regular purchases of U.S. corn and wheat by the Russians, was exempted from Carter's order.

Some government experts say farm commodity prices may be slightly lower because of the embargo. Marvin Meek, president of the American Agriculture Movement, said that "I guess we'll just sit around and wait and let the markets stay crippled. ... If we really want to hurt the Soviet Union, let's get into their pocketbooks. Let's double the price of our grain."

In his letter to Block, Dole said the embargo should be lifted immediately "as a redemption of President Reagan's campaign pledge and the distinct impression of U.S. farmers relative to this pledge."

Release Sought For Ex-Officer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — More than 100 people, including all five Daytona Beach police captains, have signed a petition calling for the release of a former policeman serving a one-year term for beating up a prisoner.

Nestor Russell Lazuka, 32, was sentenced in January to a year in jail for his conviction of assaulting Roger L. Dowst, 22, in a holding cell in November 1977. Lazuka and Dowst had been in a fight earlier at a bar, and Lazuka was off duty during both incidents.

"I do not condone what he did," Patrol Capt. S.A. Schultz said Wednesday. "I was the one who recommended he be fired."

South Plains To Warm Up Slightly

A-J News Services

The South Plains experienced slightly warmer temperatures Thursday as clouds began to fade away late in the afternoon.

Today's high reading is expected to surpass Thursday's high of 45, climbing today into the middle 50s. The overnight low will be in the upper 20s, according to the National Weather Service.

Winds will be out of the southwest at 15 to 20 mph, forecasters said.

No precipitation is in the forecast and extended predictions call for temperatures to again climb to near 55 Saturday.

Elsewhere, a stubborn mass of cold air hung over the Northeast Thursday, keeping temperatures in the 20s and teens from Ohio eastward into New England.

Light snow powdered much of the Mississippi Valley, while rain was common from southeastern Texas into southern Louisiana and Mississippi.

Temperatures ranged from the 30s and 40s across the southern half of the nation through the Southern Plateau and into the Northwest.

Florida, southern Texas and the southern Pacific Coast enjoyed temperatures in the 50s and 60s.

Snow was forecast for today from the northern Great Lakes through the Ohio Valley and into the Appalachians. Showers were expected in central California and from the central Gulf Coast through the Southeast.

Mostly sunny skies were forecast from the mid-Mississippi Valley across the southern and central Rockies and into the Pacific Northwest.

Readings in the 50s and 60s were expected in the Southeast, across the lower Mississippi Valley and into the Southwest and the Pacific Coast. Chilly temperatures were again predicted for the northern half of the country, from the Plains into the Middle Atlantic states and New England.

Afternoon temperatures Thursday ranged from 73 in Palm Springs, Calif., and Brownsville, Texas, to 6 in Massena, N.Y.

IT'S ON THE HOUSE

Halfway Bill Almost Home

THE EXPRESSED goal of legislation passed by the Texas Senate this week is to fight crime by making the Board of Pardons and Paroles more accountable and provide closer supervision of recently released convicts.

A system of halfway houses would be set up and the parolees would make restitution to victims of their crimes.

It's a concept that the Senate sponsor, Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, called "the heart of the governor's anti-crime program."

With crime running rampant, it seems worth a try to do something out of the ordinary.

OPPONENTS OF the bill complain that it centralizes too much power in the governor's hands by making the state's six parole commissioners regular state employes subject to dismissal by the three-member Parole Board appointed by the governor.

Some are upset because Gov. Bill Clements has been turning down one-third of the paroles recommended by the Board. In another time, of course, a governor might do just the opposite and turn loose too many convicts before they are ready to re-enter society.

More important than the mechanics of parole, however, are the bill's provisions for helping parolees adjust to life outside the walls.

All too often, under the present system, supervision is lax and the parolee adjusts quickly back to a life of crime.

THE HALFWAY HOUSES, under terms of the bill as it was written, would require the Parole Board "to provide close supervision, to assist persons released on parole make restitution or reparation, fulfill the obligation of a law-abiding citizen, and reduce recidivism."

It would cost an estimated $4.5 million to provide this program over the next two years.

In theory, these Halfway Houses in combination with a system of restitution would help prisoners ready for release to rehabilitate themselves. More importantly, perhaps, restitution programs would help the forgotten victims of crime.

The bill says that conditions for parole "shall," not "may," include the making of restitution as established by the sentencing court.

The bill now goes to the House and, if it passes there, is certain to get the governor's signature and a fair trial to see if it works.

CREDIBILITY WEAKENED

Embargo Never Given Chance

THE UNITED States could effectively penalize the Soviet leadership for its invasion and occupation of Afghanistan by extending, and tightening, controls on the export of grain to the USSR—a policy that could cause meat shortages similar to those that touched off the recent disturbances in Poland.

Paige Bryan writes in a new Heritage Foundation study released this week that "if the U.S. were to tighten its controls (on grain exports to the USSR) significantly, and seriously seek cooperation from other suppliers in 1981, Soviet citizens would feel the effects and there would be noticeable repercussions in the Soviet economy."

Mrs. Bryan, associate director of foreign trade policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, worked for three years with the Bureau of East-West Trade and the Office of Export Administration in the Commerce Department.

ALTHOUGH THE grain shortfall the U.S. embargo imposed on the Soviets was not as great as originally planned, the embargo had a negative impact on the Soviet economy in three areas, according to Mrs. Bryan.

- It reduced animal liveweights, and thus Soviet meat consumption—already low by U.S. standards.
- It slowed down growth in the highly vulnerable Soviet agricultural sector; and
- In general, it aggravated problems with the 1980 harvest.

Meat consumption is of great political importance to the Soviet leadership, according to Mrs. Bryan. "If meat is scarce and prices are high, the USSR could experience uprisings such as the ones which occurred in Poland," she writes.

UNFORTUNATELY, according to the international economist, the embargo was not rigidly enforced. "After six months," she points out, "the former President made a decision which not only threatened to destroy the effect of the partial embargo on the Soviet economy, but also irremediably weakened the credibility of the administration's objectives in the eyes of Congress and American farmers."

As with the Olympics policy and his embargo on high technologies to the Soviet Union, the President talked tough, but immediately softened his policy before it had a chance to work. Actually, if we are going to impose a grain embargo, it should be coupled with a trading ban in other areas, from technology to tourism. The U.S. farmer should not have to bear the whole burden.

An embargo aimed at the Soviets is justifiable, principally, on national security grounds. The incursion into Afghanistan potentially is the most serious indication of Soviet intentions toward the West since World War II. The threat to U.S. oil supplies which transit the Strait of Hormuz daily, with Soviet troops 400 miles closer than before, is, as Mrs. Bryan points out, "menacing, to say the least."

M. STANTON EVANS:

Geraldo Rivera Proves His Detractors Right

WASHINGTON—If Geraldo Rivera did not exist, people trying to prove the leftward tilt of network television would be anxious to invent him. He is a walking caricature of TV bias.

Rivera is a combination producer-reporter on ABC-TV's "20/20," where he appears from week to week allegedly informing the public on various weighty issues.

He has a well-earned reputation for wearing his opinions on his sleeve and bending facts to suit his outlook—which is vintage new left agitprop.

Concerning Rivera's bias, you don't have to take my word. Take his. In an interview a couple of years ago with "Playboy" magazine, he admitted slanting his reports from Panama, during the debate over the Canal treaties, in order to aid their passage.

AMONG OTHER things, he acknowledged withholding information about the repressiveness of the Torrijos regime, the activities of Panamanian radicals, and personal roughing-up by Torrijos' goon squad.

This background takes some special relevance in view of the current squabbling between ABC-TV and the Kaiser Aluminum Co.

Last year, ABC aired a Rivera segment on "20/20" concerning the alleged dangers of aluminum wiring as a cause of fires. Cuing in from a Cincinnati nightclub blaze in which 165 people perished, the program accused Kaiser of knowingly marketing a dangerous product and holding back data which would have shown the nature of its hazards.

Kaiser has answered the Rivera broadcast with a barrage of letters, ads, and a demand for unedited rebuttal time.

MUCH OF this involves technical questions about the properties of aluminum wiring—a subject we may for the most leave to experts.

What is obvious on the face of it is that the Rivera program was a stacked deck from the beginning. Two items alone suffice to make the point.

First, there was Rivera's opening the show with the Cincinnati fire—despite the fact, which he himself acknowledged, that a jury had decided aluminum wiring hadn't caused the tragedy.

The second telling point is Rivera's mangling of a speech by a former Kaiser official, represented as saying the National Electrical Code was "political" and should be judged according to its profitability to Kaiser—rather than, on Rivera's innuendo, according to safety standards.

EXAMINATION OF the speech shows Rivera telescoped two separate passages—one saying the code was a consensus among industry groups (hence "political"), the other saying new specifications and design changes would affect the market for various Kaiser products.

These passages had faint connection to one another, but taken together or separately in no way pronounced a disregard for safety standards.

The point was to instruct a group of salesmen on the changing technical environment. Challenged on this score—Rivera insists he handled the matter properly.

If he really believes that, it may be his problem isn't bias, but inability to read the English language.

ACCORDING TO a recent issue of "TV Guide," the Panama and Kaiser episodes are not the only ones in Rivera's dossier.

The magazine recounts the charges of several journalistic colleagues, accusing him of slanting news, emotional hype, and just plain bad reporting. An ABC correspondent is quoted as saying: "He is a symbol of everything our detractors say we are."

That about sums it up: Rivera's performance would be bad enough if he appeared exclusively in an opinion format. For him to come on in the raiment of a "network newsman" is farcical.

As long as a major network has someone like this involved in "reporting," TV's most ardent critics will never have an ammunition shortage.

JOSEPH KRAFT:

Reagan Rules Roost

WASHINGTON—A fortnight after taking office, the Reagan administration has taken shape. As expected, the President has proved to be a delegator—a leader who reigns more than he rules.

His senior adviser, a man already being called a "Prime Minister," is his White House counselor, Edwin Meese.

In addition, Secretary of State Alexander Haig is clearly asserting himself as by far the foremost figure in foreign policy.

The President's own role emerges from the numerous public appearances he has already made.

So far they have been heavily ceremonial—the Inaugural Address and the accompanying festivities; the welcome of the former hostages; and the signing of various executive orders purportedly cutting back government and regulations.

Reagan's first press conference underlined further the honorific character of his leadership.

It was a dignified affair, marked by a procedure for recognizing reporters as they sat, which avoided the mad scramble of rising and shouting for the President's attention.

Apart from the formal announcements that he was cutting back the Wage and Price Council and putting a moratorium on new regulations, Reagan made no news. He postponed for the future almost all issues.

Several times he said a matter hadn't come to him because it hadn't reached the Cabinet level.

"PRIME MINISTER Meese" accompanies the President to almost all business meetings. While perfectly polite, he does not hesitate to direct the boss. "That worked in California, but not here," he has been heard to say.

A network of former associates—what one Republican senator calls the "Meese Mafia"—has been established throughout the administration.

The Attorney General (William French Smith), the Secretary of Defense (Caspar Weinberger), and the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Richard Schweiker) are, of course, well known to both Reagan and Meese through past associations.

But as his Number Two Men in departments headed by non-Reaganites, Meese has planted his own people. The list includes William Clark at the State Department; R.T. McNamar (cq) at Treasury; Richard Lyng at Agriculture; and Darrell Trent at Transportation.

THE WHITE House chief of staff, James Baker, is much more chief of staff to Meese than to the President.

As a former associate and close friend of George Bush, Baker gives Meese easy access to the Vice President and his people in the administration.

The Meese mode of operation seems to feature balancing tensions. Thus he is said to hold the ring evenly between Budget Director David Stockman, who is a crusader for tax cuts, and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, who insists on pairing lower spending with lower revenue.

While some believe an eventual shootout between Regan and Stockman is inevitable, the betting in this quarter is that Meese will keep them in harness.

THE ADMINISTRATION will then come forward with a balanced program that puts the emphasis on both tax and expenditure cuts.

As for Secretary Haig, he has publicly asserted his primacy in the making of foreign policy on several occasions.

His chief appointments at the State Department are officials personally close to him with previous experience at the White House and the Pentagon as well as at State.

He is evidently moving to constitute at the State Department a group that would replace the staff of the National Security Council as it existed under Zbigniew Brzezinski and Henry Kissinger.

The formal claim to that change is a memorandum submitted by Haig to the White House.

IT WOULD transfer to State Department officials the leadership of top committees—including those dealing with daily operations and foreign economic policy—which used to be headed by White House officials.

Secretary Weinberger would be wound into the process by being made head of another committee on defense policy.

Though the reorganization of foreign policy has not yet been formalized, the role of Richard Allen, the Special Assistant for National Security, has clearly been downgraded.

Some members of his staff are even complaining they have nothing to do.

Between the establishment of machinery and the formulation of policy, to be sure, there yawns a wide gap. The Reagan administration has not yet begun to show that it can master inflation, or contain the Russians.

But if it makes the right decisions, it has the organization to carry them out and to save, in the bargain, the prestige of the presidency.

DONALD F. GRAFF:

Union In The Red

IT'S NOT easy finding anything to smile about in the simmering Polish revolution, but a wire dispatch turned up with a light moment the other day.

The successful—to date—movement to establish independent unions has created an instant business. It is in posters—and buttons and T-shirts and calendars and, who knows, maybe eventually bumper stickers. And it is thriving.

All these items extol the new non-government union, Solidarity, featuring its name in bold red script on white background—Poland's national colors. They are, it was reported, seen everywhere, even on employes of state enterprises.

It is reminiscent of the spin-off from the anti-war, anti-establishment agitation in the United States of the 1960s that appears to have become a permanent part of the national pop culture.

"Only in America" might once have been said of that particular phenomenon, but now it's also a case of "even in Poland."

Unfortunately, however, probably still "never in the Soviet Union."

DON'T COUNT the Soviet citizen out when it comes to ingenuity in dealing with the deficiencies of its own system.

Another wire report informs that an effective way to get around chronic shortages in a household staple has developed. It somewhat resembles a capitalist mail-order business.

Rather than stand in endless lines at shops—often only to find upon reaching the head that the supply has given out—the Soviet consumer has taken to registering in advance.

A form similar to a postcard is filled out and when the store receives fresh supplies, the card is mailed to the eager consumer who rushes in to pick up his reserved order.

The item is toilet tissue, the erratic supply of which has led to hoarding in the past.

But that, it is reported, has become almost a thing of the past thanks to the card system, which would very likely be extended to other essential items but for the development of a new problem.

A shortage of postcards. But don't count...

AND NOW for subject matter completely different—tax forms.

The Internal Revenue Service is reported preparing to make things easier for taxpayers. No, it is not relaxing its requirements for payment, but it is working up simpler forms.

These involve among other improvements, according to a Wall Street Journal report, incorporating money-saving tips into the forms and wording them more simply. They will be written for reading ability on the ninth grade level, rather than 11th grade as is the case with current forms.

If approved, the simpler forms will be tested on selected—lucky is not quite the word—taxpayers by 1982 and could go into general use in 1984. They could do much to counter what the IRS acknowledges is a "negative" public feeling toward it and its activities.

One slight problem, however. Simplifying the forms is likely to mean there will be more of them, and that could make even ninth-grade-level completion more confusing.

Surprised?

JAY HARRIS:

The Busy Place...

ONE OF THE complaints one often hears around these parts is that "there's nothing to do in Lubbock..."

Like the bromides about the area's weather, urban cowboys and redneck politics, it's too bad the fantasy sometimes gets mixed up with the facts. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The facts are that Lubbock has more to do, in every area of entertainment and educational events, than most of its residents could ever get around to, even if they were so inclined.

For a city its size, Lubbock citizens may have as many choices of "where to go" as any any city in the Southwest—from a championship rodeo to a Broadway show, a topnotch ballet to a SWC athletic event, sophisticated symphony to rock 'n' roll. Not to mention the prairie dogs.

In brief, you pays your money and takes your choice. And quite often, you don't even have to pay...

MUCH OF THIS was brought home to us the other day as we looked over the latest two issues of "The People Place," the in-house publication of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The Civic Center is just one facet of a multi-faceted program which cuts across public, private and college and university associated events.

And, while we will dwell on some of the other "places to go and things to do" in a moment, a look at what's coming up, and has already taken place, at the huge downtown complex is enough to boggle the mind.

Already, the Memorial Civic Center has booked an estimated 1,050 events for 1981 alone, ranging from a glistening World of Wheels auto show, just held, the Texas Ballet, the world-famous Royal Lipizan Stallions, and the final road performance of Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, due Friday, Feb. 20.

BEFORE THE year is out, an estimated 581,700 persons will attend one or more of the events just mentioned or any number of other activities.

They will range from a meeting of the Texas Bankers Assn., the Southwestern Drug convention, Texas Cotton Ginners, West Texas Home Builders, a Buddy Holly Tribute, the Texas Music Teachers, the impressive Lubbock Arts Festival, the Mexican Fiesta, you name it.

"That's a lot of activity for a place which only a few years ago was a pile of rubble left by the Lubbock tornado," Brian Hambright, the personable events-service coordinator for the Center complex, points out.

Hambright also notes that the average of 116 events a month should draw some 48,475 visitors a month to view and take part in the outstanding array of events on tap. The last three months of 1980 saw 80,580 persons use the Center.

Before the year is out, total events should top the 1,400 mark. Thus far, only 15 "no event" days are on the calendar, and ten of those are needed for major cleanup.

THE MEMORIAL Center, for those who may have moved here in recent years, is part of an overall civic enterprise for Lubbock.

The downtown complex is made up of a first class continental theater, a magnificent banquet hall which can seat 2,000, a 40,000 square foot exhibition hall and numerous meeting rooms, two "malls," and plenty of parking.

It was built in the wake of the May 11, 1970 tornado which left the edge of the downtown section devastated. It is part of the city's overall complex which also includes the Lubbock Coliseum, which the city shares with Texas Tech, and the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium, the 3,200 seat facility adjacent to the Coliseum on the Tech campus.

Dottie Townsend is the manager of the overall Civic Center setup and oversees a civic-oriented "business" which is at home with a three-ring Ringling, Barnum & Bailey Circus, a pulse-pounding SWC cage game, or a dignified but enthusiastic Lubbock Symphony performance.

BUT, THE Memorial Civic Center and the other facilities are only one part of the somewhat surprising and impressive array of "places to go, things to do" here.

Texas Tech University, from its first-class drama department to its talented music reservoir, its wide-ranging speakers series, its ethnic-oriented events and University foreign film offerings, serves as a major source of entertainment and education.

Lubbock Christian College, with its magnificent choirs, along with Community Concerts and a whole host of privately-sponsored events and performers at the city's pubs and night spots, all add to a most busy calendar.

Toss in clubs, from garden to civic, public school activities and one has a plate that is overflowing.

IT IS NOT unusual for downstate writers, including a certain magazine, to poke gentle and not-so-gentle fun at this city and its residents on occasion.

When there were suggestions that the Shah might come to Lubbock or mention was made the Crown Prince trained here, and enjoyed it, some of the sophisticates from the Metroplex and elsewhere were titillated.

Admittedly, we may not have mountains to climb, at least not the rock variety, nor valleys, nor rivers. But, we do have more than our share of beautiful weather, fantastic sunrises and sunsets. And during the Spring, Summer and Fall, Lubbock can be a most beautiful place, with its many well-kept yards and flowers and trees.

But, most of all, Lubbock is a friendly place, and even if it is "old-fashioned," still a nice place to rear a family. And while we have our crime and traffic problems, so does the Metroplex and the "murder capital" on the Bayou.

There's a lot to be said for living in Lubbock. And we have just said some of it...

Iran Angered By Delivery Of Jets To Iraq

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr of Iran called French delivery of Mirage jets to Iraq a "hostile act" Thursday and protested to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the Iranian news agency said.

French delivery of the first F-1 jets to beef up Iraq's air force in the Persian Gulf war also was protested by the Iranian Parliament, which called on the French National Assembly "to halt the delivery of arms to the Iraqi government until the aggression is over."

Iraq has ordered 60 of the Mirage jets and the first four aircraft were delivered over the weekend. But there were reports in Cyprus that six more jets have been flown to Larnaca Airport and handed over to Iraqi pilots.

According to Pars news agency, Bani-Sadr said in his protest that delivery of the planes "to the aggressor regime of Iraq by your government has created a wave of disappointment and disbelief in our nation."

Bani-Sadr said the planes would be used to intensify bombardment of Iran and "to massacre the Iranian people" and that Iran considered France's action "against the existence and independence of Iran."

Most countries have declined to ship arms to the two warring Moslem nations. Iraq has warmly praised France for going ahead with the aircraft deliveries.

With the Persian Gulf war in its 137th day Thursday, Iran and Iraq reported ground assaults and artillery exchanges. Iraq claimed 137 Iranian troops were killed in Iran's western highlands and in the oil province of Khuzistan and said 33 Iraqi soldiers had been killed.

Iranian communiques said more than 130 "enemies of Islam" were killed in a counter-attack that threw Iraqi forces back more than five miles in the western highlands.

Tehran Radio reported that four "dirty fifth-column agents" were executed by firing squad after being sentenced by a Revolutionary Court in Abadan. It did not detail the circumstances but called them "abject agents of America trying to weaken our country's internal front."

Meanwhile, an Iranian official said in Tehran that the Supreme Defense Council will meet within the next two days to decide whether to receive an Islamic Conference mission that hopes to mediate an end to the conflict.

"If the decision is positive, then the mission is expected to come in March," said an official at the office of Defense Council spokesman Hojatoleslam Ali Khamenie. He was reached by telephone from Beirut.

But Khamenie and other Iranian officials have said this week that such a mission could not bring the war to an end because Iran would not discuss a cease-fire until Iraqi troops withdraw from Iranian soil.

Britain Rejects Iran, Iraq Bids for Military Equipment

LONDON (AP) — Britain has turned down bids from both Iran and Iraq for British military equipment, government officials reported Thursday.

The two Persian Gulf neighbors are locked in a 137-day border war.

The Iranian requests have ranged from delivery of a multimillion-dollar naval auxiliary vessel — already built and paid for — to power packs and spares for the hundreds of British Chieftain tanks sold to Iran under the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

No details of Iraq's requests were disclosed by the government officials, who asked not to be identified.

Britain — unlike France which recently delivered Mirage jet fighters to Iraq — is attempting to remain neutral in the conflict.

Four Britons, including two Anglican missionaries, have been held for months without trial in Iran. They are accused of spying, and Iranian officials said a decision on their futures will be reached soon.

British officials said there has been no attempt by Iran to link its arms requests to the fates of the four.

Another Body Found In Area Near Atlanta

ATLANTA (AP) — The body of what "appeared to be a small child" was found Thursday afternoon in a wooded area a few hundred yards outside the city limits of Atlanta, where 14 black youngsters have been found dead in the past 19 months, authorities said.

Angelo Fuster, an aide to Mayor Maynard Jackson, said the body, which "appeared to be a small child," was removed to the medical examiner's office.

At least three black children have been missing from the metropolitan area for a month or longer and their disappearances and the 14 deaths are being investigated by a special police task force. Authorities say some, but not all, of the cases may be related.

Fuster said he had no idea how the body was clothed. He said it was found by "a person who was walking through the woods with his dog." The identity of finder was not released.

The area where the body was found is about five miles northwest of the Redwine Road area where the remains of three other children have been found over the past year.

Fuster said the body found Thursday was "more recent" and therefore better preserved than the two skeletal remains found Jan. 9 in an area about five miles away.

"They have a lot more to work with," said Fuster.

He said recent cold weather, which included freezing nights, may have helped preserve the body, which was found in a swampy area in a very rural section of Fulton County.

Fuster refused to speculate whether the body might be one of the three missing children.

Task force officers were on the scene, although Fuster said jurisdiction in the case belonged to Fulton County police.

The skeletal remains of Christopher Richardson, 11, of Decatur, and Earl Lee Terrell, 10, of Atlanta, were found Jan. 9 near Redwine Road. In November 1979, the body of 14-year-old Milton Harvey was discovered off Redwine Road near a different intersection.

In attempting to solve the baffling child slayings and disappearances, Atlanta city officials have turned to the federal government for assistance.

Deputy U.S. Attorney General Charles B. Renfrew told Jackson on Wednesday that it had not yet been determined exactly what the federal government could do in the case, but he said Vice President George Bush's involvement "shows it's being handled at the highest levels of government."

Doctors Trying To Find Source Of Meningitis In Houston Area

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors combating a meningitis outbreak that has claimed four lives took throat cultures, blood samples and administered antibiotics Thursday to people who may have come in contact with the contagious disease, health officials said.

Dr. Ralph D. Feigin, chairman of pediatrics at Baylor College of Medicine, said preventive antibiotic treatment is the most effective method to halt the spread of meningitis in a city where 29 confirmed and suspected cases have been reported since Jan. 1.

Six of the cases were found in a single south Houston elementary school sixth-grade class, Feigin said.

"Through these tests, we hope to trace the source of the disease and then try to knock it out," Feigin said. "We also hope to determine if others have come in contact with the disease."

Health officials began testing families, teachers and 336 students Thursday at Dodson Elementary School. Feigin said results should be known within 48 hours.

Pat Schell, the health services director for the Houston Independent School District, said that health officials took throat cultures from about 1,300 people Thursday and blood samples from about 115 people.

"This is unusual because six cases were clustered in one classroom, but this is not a panic situation by any means. It can be treated so there should be no cause for alarm," Feigin said.

He said clusters of meningitis usually occur within families, at day car centers or military institutions.

Meningitis is an inflamation of the membranes covering the brain and spinal cord and is caused by bacteria or viruses. Meningococcal meningitis is considered the most serious with a death rate of at least 50 percent.

If the path of the distant planet Pluto were about the size of a bicycle tire, the orbits of Mercury, Venus, Earth and Mars would fit on the face of a quarter, the National Geographic Society says.

'Unknown Object' Blamed In Mishap

OAKLAND (AP) — An "unknown object" was responsible for a two-car train derailment that destroyed 23 parked autos, as the rail cars skidded along almost 300 feet of track, Western Pacific Railroad said.

Railroad officials said Wednesday that the lead wheel on the first derailed car "caught the point of a spur switch near Jackson Street, thereby derailing the car off the main track" on Tuesday.

Prince Albert Island Offers Good Tuna Fishing

By TOM RATH
Prince Edward Island Tourism

Being a new resident to Prince Edward Island, I am naturally eager to experience all the special attractions Canada's smallest province has to offer. Thus I didn't hesitate to accept an invitation to join a weekend charter boat group fishing for the giant bluefin tuna off the eastern tip of this island province.

Bluefin tuna, ranging in weight from 500 pounds to 1,200 pounds give the toughest fight of any big game fish, and the Island's tiny community of North Lake proudly bills itself the "Tuna Capital of the World."

Six of our party were assigned to the "Tuna Clipper," one of 19 approved boats operated through North Lake Tuna Charters, Inc. on the north or Gulf of Saint Lawrence shore of Prince Edward Island. Our boat was 42 feet long and powered by a six-cylinder inboard motor.

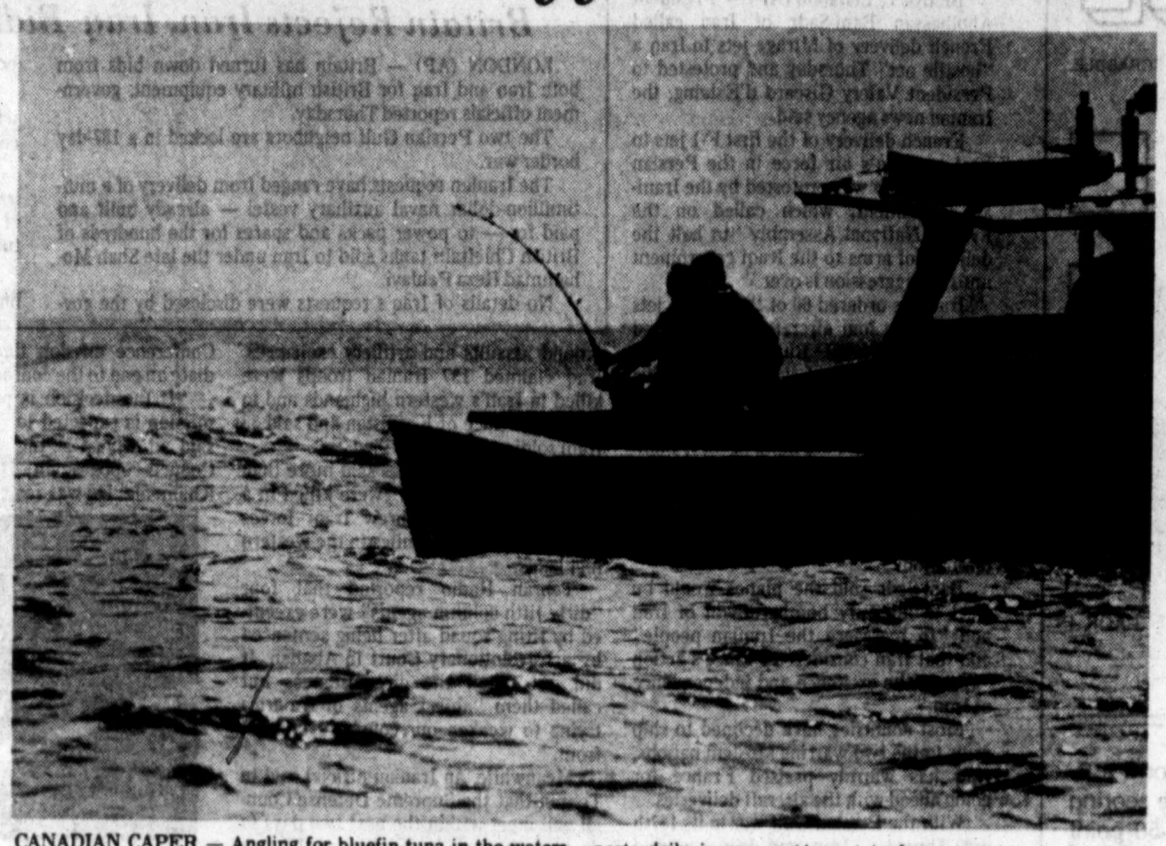
Our captain was David Bruce of East Baltic, a nine-year tuna fishing veteran. He introduced his young mate Bob Richards of Souris as we chugged our way out of the harbor on the four-mile ride to the area Captain Bruce thought would offer our best chance to find and land a bluefin.

Over the past 13 years that tuna have been fished commercially off the shores of Price Edward Island, North Lake boats have recorded catching over 3,200 bluefin, and world records are made and broken on a regular basis.

Michael MacDonald of East Point, for example, captured the Men's World Record (130-pound-test line) with a 1,235 pounder caught in 1978. Then in October 1979, Ken Fraser of North Lake landed one weighing 1,496 pounds, off the coast of Nova Scotia. Even though Nova Scotia holds the current world record, it seems completely logical that a Prince Edward Islander is the record holder.

Although it was just a month into the 1980 season (the bluefin season is August to freeze up) when we took our trip in early September, the captain's brother Walter had already caught ninegood sized tuna.

Our mate baited two lines with seven mackerel each.



CANADIAN CAPER — Angling for bluefin tuna in the waters off Prince Edward Island holds the promise of hooking a 1,200 pound giant. Tuna fishing expeditions leave from many Island ports daily in season (August to freeze up) in search of the prized catch. (Photo by P.E.I. Tourism)

The end mackerel were hooked, aand the others acted as "teasers." The lines ran from rods propped on each side of the "fighting chair," so that the bait fish splashed along the water's surface 15-35 feet behind the boat in a skipping, school-of-mackerel effect. Meanwhile, the six of us alternated in 20-minute stretches in the fighting chair, each hoping to be the lucky one "in possession" when a tuna took the bait.

"Sometimes," the captain explained, "a tuna will come from underneath and make off with a couple of the teasers." He continued, "If this happens, you just play him a bit — reeling in to make him mad enough to snap at that last mackerel... the one with the hook."

He added that once the tuna gets hooked, he will head out from the boat in a concerted two or three hundred yard dash to escape — "and that reel starts singing just like a sewing machine!"

DISCOVERY

That's the signal for the start of a coordinated team effort to land the bluefin. The second line is quickly reeled in and set aside, and the first rod is moved from its side pocket to the center slot between the fortunate angler's feet. The captain gets into position behind the fighting chair, and shouts instructions to the mate, who take over the wheel of the boat.

It is important that the boat, rod and line be kept at the s ame angle at all times as the fierce struggle continues; otherwise the delicate line will break, Although the battle averages 45 minutes, it could easily last six to 10 hours or more, depending upon the size and strength of the tuna. Surprisingly, the smaller bluefin are often tougher to subdue.

By late afternoon it was decided that this probably wasn't our day for setting a new world's record, so we were introduced to "jigging" for mackerel.

Within a few minutes of dropping my line with its three lures over the side and "jigging" it to and fro to draw attention to the lures, I felt the tugging I had been told to expect.

It certainly didn't take long to fill our plastic pail with mackerel, two and three at a time. Captain Bruce told us mouth-watering stories of barbecued 18-inch mackerel with chicken stuffing, as he expertly sliced fillets for those of us more interested in pan-frying our catch.

Before we realized it , it was time to head back toward the sandy beaches that helped make Prince Edward Island famous. We hadn't caught a giant bluefin on our first trip out, and yet our mood was satsified and eager as we planned our next opportunity to keep alive North Lake's claim as the "Tuna Capital of the World."

If you are considering a Prince Edward Island vacation and would like information on accommodations, golf courses, family attractions or, of course, bluefin tuna charters, "drop a line" to Tourism Services, P.O. Box 940, Charlottetown, P.E.I., Canada, C1A 7M5.

Scientists Monitor Wildlife Broadcasts

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (Special) — A loggerhead turtle swims a solitary southwest course in the Gulf of Mexico. Although out of sight of any person, her path is being carefully charted.

A polar bear crosses a vast Arctic expanse in search of a suitable den. Hers is the only shadow cast on the frigid wasteland, but each mile that takes her closer to Siberia is being meticulously recorded.

Both the turtle and the bear have been subjects of studies which apply the same communications technology that beams live TV news and entertainment into the public's living rooms. Now, satellites are adding a new dimension to biotelemetry, the study of animals at a distance to record biological information without disrupting normal behavior. But whether satellites or standard radio units are used, telemetry continues to revolutionize wildlife research, yielding invaluable information to improve wildlife management.

Information may be beamed from a polar bear's 10-pound radio-fitted neck harness or a pine mouse's 1.4-gram, ring-sized transmitter collar. The electronics speacialists and wildlife biologists at the Denver Wildlife Research Center (DWRC) tailor transmitting devices for dozens of species, depending on size, life style, habitat, and the type of information needed.

Radio telemetry came of age with the development of transistors in the 1960s and integrated circuitry in the 1970s, providing small parts and increased reliability so that electronic tracking became practical. DWRC, a major research station of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is a pioneer in this area and works with other Federal, State, and private research teams to expand telemetry's capabilities.

To help save any endangered species, scientists must learn long-term behavioral information. Toward this end, the Commerce agency funded a cooperative project with DWRC to track an adult loggerhead turtle by satellite. A 212-pound turtle was released in October 1979 with a cylindrical float containing a transmitter compatible with a NASA weather satellite system. The turtle's 1,400-mile movements were tracked for eight months, and indicated the big reptile preferred to stay offshore at about 10 fathoms. But as the researchers were recording the turtle's movements, the statlellite beamed the unbelievable: the sea turtle was in Galena, Kansas!

The riddle of the grounded turtle was soon solved. The transmitting device, its tether cut, was traced to a fisherman who had discovered it on a trip to Port Arthur. The souvenir served as a doorstop and child's toy until its signals led the team to it. However, the fate of the turtle remains unknown.

Uses for standard telemetry appear almost unlimited. A simple transmitter that can report an animal's movements to a field researcher may provide information to help resolve pressing wildlife-related problems. Such transmitters on vampire bats in Latin America enabled biologists to discover that the biting, blood-lapping carriers of rabies lived in colonies in certain caves, apart from other, harmless bat species. Selective controls in the future could keep the vampire bats in check, protecting humans and saving millions of dollars in livestock losses.

Service fishery researchers have even developed tiny transmitters that are ingested by salmon. The resulting information is being used to help restore depleted salmon runs on both coasts.

Grizzly bears, condors, falcons, and dozens of other species have been successfully fitted with transmitters. Each study brings needed information to scientists who constantly work to improve techniques for managing species, whether they are threatened by humans, or humans are threatened by them.

Driving Tips Help Save Fuel

Traveling winterized highWays can be safe and fuel efficient if recreation vehicle (RV) owners take careful measures in driving.

The following tips from Kampgrounds of America will help you save gasoline and also result in more enjoyable hunting and fishing.

Drive in a straight line. Weaving or excessive lane changes wastes valuable fuel. You might want to install a steering stabilizer in your RV to assist in wet driving conditions. Radial tires are also a fuel saver, especially on wet-surfaced roads.

Remember that auto engines operate most efficiently around 70 degrees Fahrenheit. In 20 degree weather, you can expect about an eight percent reduction in gasoline economy.

Short trips waste gasoline. If you're within five miles of an attraction, it's best to take another vehicle instead of your RV.

Good Skiing Sites Found In Montana

By LOIS McBRIDE
Montana Tourism Division

In one simple view, there are only two kinds of people: those who vacation in the summer, when they can loll around in the sun, and those who vacation in the winter so they can ski.

The latter have been finding Montana a first rate ski vacation destination for several years — and for good reason. The big northern state has some of the finest skiing and most dependable snow in the country.

There aren't as many ski areas in Montana as there are in other ski states — 18, counting weekend-only slopes — but Montana's are all good. There's a legendary four aces — Big Mountain, Big Sky, Bridger Bowl and Red Lodge Mountain — dominating the winter months by sharing dependably superb skiing and offering different personalities.

Sitting cheerfully at the top of the state like a benevolent, slightly puckish king is Big Mountain. The one, nudging the Canadian border and Glacier National Park, has been in place a long time with splendid snow and more than 28 miles of slopes.

Getting there is fastest by flying commercial to Missoula and either taking a rental car to the mountain or flying in-state to Kalispell where ski buses will take you to Whitefish — home of Big Mountain. Telephone (406) 862-3511 to reserve accommodations.

At the other end of the state, near Yellowstone National Park and the Montana-Wyoming state line, is Big Sky, Montana. Big Sky is posh and ski-set style with stylish skiing as well as shops, restaurants, watering holes, and accommodations from condominiums to hostels and everything in between.

Big Sky is eassy to reach. If you don't drive to it, fly to a full-service airport at Bozeman and either rent a car or use Big Sky's ski bus. Out-of-staters can call toll-free for reservations. The number is (800) 548-4486.

Bridger Bowl, also near Bozeman and tucked up in the high-flying Bridger Mountains, has about the best powder going. Getting there is easy — scheduled airlines to Bozeman, and bus or rental car the 16 miles to Bridger Bowl. Telephone (406) 587-2111.

Red Lodge Mountain in south-central Montana is the closest you can get to European skiing. Red Lodge is a ski town with a Swiss-Bavarian personality, and it takes skiing seriously. It's a place where you'll see embroidered parkas and hear yodeling.

Get there by flying scheduled airlines to Billings, Montana's biggest city, and taking a rental car or ski bus to Red Lodge. For reservations, telephone (406) 446-2288.

If you want to know more about Montana skiing in general, get in touch with the Travel Promotion Bureau, Department of Highways, Helena, MT 59601. Call toll-free 1-800-548-3390 for ski conditions.

Winter and zesty skiing add up to Montana. Or, maybe, it's the other way around.

Colorado Offers Winter Vacationers Wide Variety Of Activities

By GREGG CHANCELLOR
Colorado Office of Tourism

Colorado, the high and wide winter wonderland at the top of the nation, offers the winter vacationer everything from skiing, skating, and snowmobiling to swimming, sunbathing, and salmon snagging.

For the non-skiing winter vacationer, there's plenty to see and do in this sprawling alpine wonderland when Mother Nature powders her face. For the sightseer and photographer, there's the incomparable scenic majesty of the snow-robed Rockies. More than 1,100 chalk-marked peaks tower above a 10,000-foot altitude and clear, paved skyways unfold hundreds of miles of breath-taking winter panorama. Fields of feathery snow, framed with emerald forests of spruce and pine, sparkle in the golden sunshine to create a memorable scene.

At any time of the year, sunshine is a principal ingredient in a top-of-the-nation vacation. Winter is no exception. Colorado winters are relatively mild with a monthly average of 24 sunshiny days from November to May. Traditional summer sports of fishing, golfing, tennis, and even swimming in heated pools are all the more enjoyable in the dry, crisp Colorado winter air.

Colorado's winter vacation enjoyment isn't limited to fun in the sun, and apres-ski life isn't confined to winter sports enthusiasts. As the warm glow of sunset silhouettes the Rockies, a glitter of activity increases at resort areas throughout "Winterland USA."

Varied as skiing itself, the zesty apres-ski life begins when the lifts close, and activity shifts from the slopes to the friendly atmosphere of the restaurants and lodges where both skiers and non-skiers share good food and drink and warm camaraderie. The winter vacationer can enjoy fine entertainment at an intimate night spot, a gourmet meal at one of the uniquely different restaurants.

An increasing number of anglers are enjoying the interesting and uncrowded sport of winter fishing. Because of the relatively mild climate, winter fishing in Colorado is not the frigid, spine-chilling sport one might imagine. Other than an ice-cutting tool which can be purchased or inexpensively made from welding a chisel to the end of a length of pipe, regular autumn-weight fishing gear is adequate.

Ever try swimming in a pool surrounded by high banks of snow? It's a stimulating experience you can enjoy in numerous heated and natural hot springs swimming pools.

Ice skating, sledding, tobagganing, snowmobiling, sleigh rides, skibobbing, and snowshoeing come naturally to the young in spirit. Winter spectator sports and unique winter carnival celebrations add color to a wintertime Colorado vacation of a few days or a few weeks.

All-season vacation information is available from Office of Tourism, Colorado Division of Commerce and Development, 1313 Sherman, Denver, Colorado 80203.

Pentagon Prepares Plan For Big Defense Budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's new civilian leadership has prepared a tentative proposal for a huge jump of about $23.6 billion over the Carter administration's defense budget recommendation for next year.

This would bring the fiscal 1982 defense budget to about $220 billion to speed a U.S. military buildup that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger contends is essential "to re-arm America" in the face of steady Soviet armed growth.

At the same time, administration sources said Thursday, Weinberger believes this year's defense budget should be increased by about $6.4 billion over the Carter administration's revised total of $171.2 billion in budget authority.

The sources said discussion is still underway as to the specific mix of programs that would benefit from the dramatic increases.

Gen. David C. Jones, chairman of the joint chiefs, testified in Congress Wednesday that the military services were seeking about $8 billion more for this fiscal year, which ends next Sept. 29, and budget additions — "probably in the high 20s to 30s" — of billions of dollars in the next fiscal year.

Defense officials said emphatically that though Weinberger and the Reagan administration generally are strongly in favor of a significant boost in defense spending, the armed services are not being given any blank checks to pick and choose what specific weapons and other programs should be increased and by how much.

Also, the final figures will have to be negotiated with the White House's Office of Management and Budget and accepted by President Reagan before he sends them to Congress later this month or early March.

Some sources said the Pentagon's proposed total for fiscal 1982 may end up a couple of billion dollars higher than the tentative $220 billion.

The Reagan administration's defense budget revisions for this year and next would pile additional spending on top of final Carter administration totals, which already were at record levels when sent to Congress just before President Carter left office in January.

In testimony on Capitol Hill, Weinberger said projected inflation rates on which the Carter defense budgets for fiscal 1981 and 1982 were based had been underestimated, reflecting "desired rather than realistic inflation rates."

Also, Weinberger has said that the operating levels for U.S. forces assumed by the Carter administration for this year and next "reflect a much more tranquil view of the international political scene than actually exists."

Weinberger came to the Pentagon with a reputation as a tight-fisted budget monitor dating back to his record as President Richard Nixon's budget chief.

He said at a news conference earlier this week that, while planning to increase defense spending, "we are looking for reductions that can be made in some of the ongoing activities, and we're also looking for savings that could be made by moving lower priority items...out of the 1982 request."

The new defense secretary has said he has two main priorities in mind for defense — correcting "a growing imbalance...between our strategic nuclear forces and those of the Soviets," and improving the readiness of the conventional ground, sea and air forces.

Weinberger's proposals for increasing the defense budget for this year, which has about eight months remaining, are expected to center on paying for increased military pay and benefits to support the all-volunteer force, to overcome the ravages of inflation on fuel costs and other expenses, and to sustain Navy fleet operations in the Indian Ocean-Arabian Sea-Persian Gulf area.

There are reports that the tentative package for fiscal 1982 could include about $1 billion for development of a new bomber to replace the B-52.

Weinberger almost certainly will include substantially increased funds for building more Navy ships. The fleet now totals 456 active ships and Weinberger has indicated he favors a buildup to 600 ships over a period of years.

"I don't have any doubt that the country can afford that," Weinberger said at his Tuesday news conference.

At that same meeting with reporters, Weinberger said that "as part of our long-range planning, it's quite clear we need additional carrier task forces" to enable the U.S. Navy to meet its commitments not only in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean but elsewhere in the world as well.

Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. told the Senate Armed Services Committee Thursday that "we should move swiftly to build and modernize a balanced mix of approximately 30 ships per year to achieve a truly capable fleet of about 600 ships."

That would mean about double the shipbuilding level projected by the Carter administration.

Also, Lehman called for three additional aircraft carrier battle groups, which would bring the total in the force to 15.

Army Seeking Quality In New Armored Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army has no hopes of matching the Soviet Union in numbers of tanks but is aiming toward surpassing it in the quality of the armored force in the next decade, Congress was told Thursday.

Testifying at a House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing, the Army's budget director, Maj. Gen. Elton J. Delaune, said the Soviet tank force is 2½ times larger than that of the United States, and superior in quality of weaponry as well.

"I don't know that we would ever be able to achieve quantitative parity," Delaune said under questioning by Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla.

Rather, he said, the Army aims to equal Soviet armor in quality by the mid-1980s and surpass it in the 1990s.

Maj. Gen. Patrick M. Roddy, the Army's director of program analysis and evaluation, added: "Let me say the quantitative race is not a race any longer. He (the Soviet Union) has more capacity that we've got and he currently owns more than we have. It is not an objective of the Army to try to win a quantitative race."

"Why not?" Rep. Abraham Kazen, D-Texas, interjected. "Don't believe it's affordable, sir, nor is it required," Roddy replied.

Soviet strategy "requires more tanks than we do," he added.

Army officials also have counted on superior anti-tank weapons to help close the numerical gap between the U.S and Soviet armor forces.

When Bennett continued to press Delaune for the number of U.S. tanks that are needed, Delaune said the information is classified. The session was then closed to the public so the discussion could continue.

In his opening statement, Delaune said the $46.1 billion for the Army in former President Jimmy Carter's proposed budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 would enable the service "to overcome some of our major deficiencies," including equipment shortages that have hampered short-term readiness.

"However," he added, "it falls short of allowing us to achieve all of the objectives we have set for ourselves."

He said there was insufficient money to buy all the equipment needed "and we really can't adequately satisfy the commitment we have to our soldier, which demands that we provide him with the quality of life commensurate to the society he protects."

The Pentagon is preparing budget amendments for the Reagan administration to submit to Congress.

CUT YOUR OWN TAXES

Pension Plan For Small Firms

By RAY De CRANE
(Fifth of 14 parts)

To make it easier for smaller companies to provide a pension or a profit-sharing program for their employees while escaping the legal and accounting costs of a regular pension plan, Congress has provided for the Simplified Employee Pension under tax law.

If an employer accepts the prototype plan designed by the Internal Revenue Service, no advance approval is required before placing this type of pension into effect.

The esential element of a Simplified Employee Pension is its non-discrimination feature. All employees must be treated alike. Any employee 25 or older must be included in the plan. The identical percentage of compensation must be contributed for all employees.

The maximum annual contribution permitted under SEP is 15 percent of total compensation, but not more than $7,500.

All the details about SEP and other tax-saving plans can be found in "Cut Your Own Taxes and Save," by Ray De Crane. For your copy, send $1.50 (plus 50 cents postage and handling) to "Cut Your Own Taxes" c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

To make sure that companies are not discriminating in favor of owners, officers or other highly paid employees in fixing this percentage contribution, tax laws provide that no more than $100,000 of compensation may be considered. In this way, if the president of the company has an annual salary of $200,000, not more than $100,000 of it can be considered in making the uniform percentage contribution to the pension program.

If he wants the maximum pension contribution ($7,500) for himself, the president will then select a 7 1/2 percent contribution. Had he been permitted to consider his full $200,000 salary, a 3 percent contribution would have provided his maximum $7,500 contribution. And that's the percentage all the other employees would have received.

With a 7 1/2 percent formula selected for that year, that same percentage of every eligible employee's compensation must be contributed to the program.

Under SEP, every eligible employee must agree to the program before it can take effect. Each employee opens his own SEP account with a savings and loan, bank, insurance company or brokerage firm.

Employers generally favor all employees going to the same financial institution. In that way, one check covering all employees is sent to that institution. With it also goes a list showing the amount to be credited to each employee's account.

The employer is not permitted to attach any strings to an SEP account. If an imprudent employee wants to withdraw the employer's contribution to the pension program the day after it was made, he could not be prevented from doing so.

If the employee did make such a withdrawal, the amount withdrawn would become taxable to the employee that year. And if the employee was younger than 5 1/2, a penalty of 10 percent of the amount withdrawn would be incurred from the IRS.

An employer establishing such a plan is not bound to make the same percentage contribution every year. One year, for example, 10 percent of every employee's pay could be contributed; it could be cut back to 5 percent in the next year if profits were down, and even eliminated entirely in a third year.

If an employer's contribution is less than the normal IRA contribution of 15 percent of compensation, to a ceiling of $1,500, the employee can contribute the additional amount on a tax deductible basis.

For example, if a $10,000 a year employee is covered by an SEP and his employer contributes 9 percent, or $900, to the SEP, the employee could contribute an additional $600 and claim it as a deductible item. That is because the employee under a normal IRA would have been able to contribute 15 percent of his $10,000 to a maximum of $1,500.

Man Booked Again As Material Witness

A 31-year-old man who already has spent one night in jail in connection with a homicide last week was booked again as a material witness Thursday.

Police detectives decided to book the man after he reportedly failed a lie detector test concerning the murder of William Nicholas "Red" Rose of 339 Peach Ave., according to Det. Capt. Wayne Love.

Love said a 24-year-old woman questioned by police also failed a similar test, but she was released by police Thursday afternoon.

Rose, 45, was shot and killed about 12:20 a.m. Jan. 30 as he sat on a bar stool at Lee's Lounge, 2910 Ave. H. Although 14 persons were inside the bar when the man was shot, police have been unable to find a witness who can tell them who the assailant might have been.

The murder weapon, believed to be a .22-caliber pistol, has not been recovered.

Texas Utility Decides Against Building Solar Generating Unit

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texas Electric Service Co. has decided against building a solar-powered generating unit in West Texas because of high construction costs.

The company made the announcement after a federally financed study, released Wednesday, showed it would cost $176 million to convert one unit of TESCO's natural gas-powered plant near Monahans to solar power.

The solar unit would have produced a maximum of 50,000 kilowatts, about 45 percent of the present generating capacity. It would have saved only $104 million in gas during the next 30 years, even with escalating costs figured in, the company said.

"The study tells us that electricity from the solar-powered system would beat least four to five times as expensive as electricity would be if we continued to use natural gas in our existing plants," said TESCO president Bill Marquardt.

TESCO could have applied for construction funds from the Energy Department, which financed the $300,000 study done by TESCO and Rockwell International.

Marquardt said a demonstration solar system, similar to the one considered for the Permian Basin, has been proposed for construction near Barstow, Calif., as a project of the Energy Department and a California utility.

That project, he said, is a year behind schedule because of delays imposed by Congress and indecision on the part of the Energy Department.

"Any further delays in the Barstow project could result in delays in any system we might build," Marquardt said. "And, if the government were to insist on involvement in any project we began, we might face the same kind of indecision and delays which would add to the final cost of the system."

He said TESCO will continue to closely monitor solar development.

"We remain interested in the development of solar energy for use in generating electricity, but we will have to defer any actual construction of a solar system until it becomes more cost competitive with available alternative fuel sources," he said.

Crop Summary Sparks Larger Yield Estimates

By RODERICK TURNBULL
Kansas City Board of Trade

KANSAS CITY — The final crop summary of the year (for 1980) released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture Jan. 14 induced a lot of people in the grain trade to get out their pencils to do some new figuring. The USDA did the same thing.

This was the crop report that boosted the corn production for 1980 by 187 million bushels over the December estimate and raised the soybean figure by 42 million bushels over the estimate for December.

The immediate result of the new estimates was a sharp break in market values, particularly on soybeans.

But the next day, the USDA came out with a new set of supply and demand figures based on the new crop report and at the time this took some of the sting out of the higher yield estimates. In making adjustments and revisions in crop statistics that went back over three years, the USDA came up with figures showing larger corn and soybean production than had previously been counted, but also larger utilization numbers. So the net result in the revisions wasn't as sharp as the new yield estimates first indicated.

Markets have absorbed the news about the new yield estimates and also those on utilization. Markets now are responding to other day to day factors that relate in some way to supply and demand, with, of course, the background on tap of the summary on the 1980 yields.

Analysts now are turning to more deliberate studies on how the 1980 U.S. crop summary and the newest supply and demand figures relate to conditions worldwide. This subject, too, was covered in the USDA's analysis which followed the crop report. These will be interesting figures for farmers and the grain trade to keep in mind as the new crop season approaches.

Perhaps the most significant aspect of the supply and demand analysis is that in nearly all instances, carry-overs, in the United States and for the whole world, will be less at the end of this year's harvests than they were in 1980. There is no particular change from previous projections, except that in some instances the carry-overs will be a little smaller than earlier calculated.

It is this part of the worldwide supply and demand situation report which continues to indicate that the world needs good crops this year.

The USDA in its supply and demand report that came out following the Jan. 14 crop summary, said that indicated 1980-81 worldwide grain supplies were slightly larger than had been estimated in December, primarily because the larger U.S. coarse grain crop (the corn increase) had offset a smaller crop in China.

Prospective world use is up a little too, with a larger forecast of U.S. grain feeding.

The new projected season-ending world grain stocks (carry-over) of about 150 million metric tons, are down 2 million tons from the December estimate, but 40 million below a year ago.

The USDA goes on to say that declines in world coarse grain stocks, nearly all taking place in the United States, accounted for about 80 percent of the decline in total grain stocks. These figures are indicative of the losses suffered in the drought last summer plus the fact America is the world's largest producer of feed grains.

The Jan. 14 crop did little to change the wheat situation either in the United States or around the world. There were revisions in the figures around the world but the net result was about the same as had been estimated earlier.

Global ending stocks continue to be forecast at 70 million metric tons. That is roughly 9 million less than the carry-over in 1980. Nine million metric tons is about 330 million bushels.

U.S. coarse grain domestic utilization estimates for 1980-81 have been raised substantially from the previous estimates, mainly because of upward adjustments in feed use for both 1978-79 and 1979-80. In short, the USDA with more complte figures at hand, found that more corn had been fed and if it were fed, it had to be raised, thus indicating an adjustment all the way along the line, on the amount produced and the amount used. In the grain trade at Kansas City and elsewhere this one fact was taken as bullish on corn for the long term because it indicated more grain normally would be fed this year and in the years ahead, unless something happened to break the pattern drastically.

Corn feed use in the U.S. in 1980-81 now is forecast to fall more than 4 percent below last year, but it still would be at 4,350 million bushels compared with an earlier estimate of 4,200 million bushels. And when other corn uses are counted, including gasohol production, the corn carry-over remains estimated at 550 million bushels, just where it was before the major addition to the total crop as reported on Jan. 14. Corn exports still are projected at 2,600 million bushels and total utilization at 7,700 million bushels, more than was ever grown except in one year, 1979, when the crop was 7,939 million bushels (a new figure).

World soybean production is estimated to be 12 million tons below last year, with most of the decrease coming in the United States. Worldwide demand also is expected to be down. The USDA's analysis of the soybean situation is less specific than on the food and feed grains. It projects smaller domestic usage and exports when compared to last year, but ending stocks, because of the smaller 1980 crop, should be less than in 1980.

BAGS OF SAMPLES — Bags of cotton samples from some of the 71 gins served by the Lamesa Cotton Marketing Service office await processing in a receiving room. The Lamesa office was expected to class about 300,000 bales from the 1980 crop, shortened by adverse weather last summer. (Texas Department of Agriculture Photo)

Automated Instrument Classes For Cotton May Become Norm

LAMESA (Special) — The first large-scale use of a new automated instrument classing method for cotton this season at Lamesa will provide the industry and government important data on the system that many believe will become the standard for cotton classification in the nation, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown has reported.

The Lamesa Cotton Marketing Services office is the first U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) facility in the nation equipped with the new system.

The Lamesa Cotton Growers Association raised $500,000 through member assessments to help fund the national project. That amount was matched by a federal grant, which is administered by the Texas Department of Agriculture.

At present USDA-trained graders determine grade and fiber length, and a precision instrument is used to measure fiber fineness.

With the new system a grader still determines fiber color. The instrument system will eventually do that, as well as perform its current functions to measure length, fineness, strength and length uniformity.

The classification information is automatically recorded on computer tape. The tape is then used to produce computer cards with the information recorded in a form that may be read by eye or by a computer.

Textile mills now use instrument classing to select fibers for blending. Advocates of the new system believe it will help farmers produce cotton with characteristics that mills consider desirable. This in turn could mean improved prices for farmers, they say.

"We believe this new instrument system will be an asset to producers, and we are glad to have been able to help get it off the ground," Brown commented.

Through late January the office had classed more than 275,000 bales. The total was expected to reach 300,000 for the season. Last year the Lamesa office processed more than twice that amount, but this season's crop was reduced sharply by last summer's adverse weather.

The Lamesa office serves 72 gins in nine counties, including Andrews, Borden, Dawson, Gaines, Howard, Lynn, Martin and Yoakum counties in Texas and Lea County in New Mexico.

WEIGHING FIBERS — A cotton grader weighs fibers that will be measured for fineness in the Fibronaire precision instrument at the Lamesa classing office. Fineness is one characteristic that determines how textile mills will use specific lots of cotton. (Texas Department of Agriculture Photo)

Union Leaders Seek Boycott Of Juices

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Leaders of the Texas Farm Workers Union, upset with wages and working conditions in Texas citrus groves, called Thursday for a national boycott of two juices made in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Jesus Moya of the TFWU called for the boycott as he and other union members poured Texsun and Big Tex orange and grapefruit juice into a garbage can and onto the Capitol steps.

Moya said TFWU will picket "all the stores that carry the juices until we are able to clean them off the shelf."

A TFWU release said the boycott was called to "counteract the opposition launched against our HB 45 by the Farm Bureau, the Citrus and Vegetable Association and the National Right to Work Commission."

The bill, introduced by Rep. Sam Hudson, D-Dallas, would allow collective bargaining for farm workers. Hudson was on hand for the ceremonial start of the boycott Thursday.

Plains Producers Of Cotton Plan To Elect Leader

Muleshoe (Special) — Bailey County cotton producers and agribusinessmen will elect a producer director to Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. at a 7:30 p.m. meeting Monday, in the county courtroom here.

Announcements of the election comes from Bennie Claunch of Bula, Bailey County businessman director to the 25-county cotton organization, and Guy Austin of Farwell, current producer director.

Each of the counties has two directors, one a businessman and the other a cotton producer. They are elected on alternate years for two years. Each is eligible for re-election every second year.

All producers and businessmen are invited to the meeting. However, under PCG By-Laws, only current dues-paying members of PCG will be eligible to be elected a director or to vote in the election. This provision of the by-laws will be fully explained at the meeting.

A member of the PCG staff will conduct the election, give a review of current and planned PCG activities and answer questions about the organization and its objectives.

Annual Duroc Show, Sales Scheduled

The annual state show and sale of the Texas Duroc Breeders Association will be Feb. 14 at the Panhandle South Plains Fairgrounds hog barn.

More than 60 boars and gilts from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico have been entered, according to Waylon Carroll of Lubbock, West Texas Duroc Breeders Association secretary-treasurer.

Buddy Winter, Lubbock swine breeder, will judge the animals beginning at 9 a.m. Col. Kenneth Gregg of Plainview will be the auctioneer for the sale at 1 p.m.

In addition to Carroll, WTDBA officers are Kay Teaff of Denver City, president; and Mickey Cooper of New Deal, vice president.

Directors are Jimmy Duncan of Causey, N. M., Don Richburg of Roscoe, Waymon Lewis of Littlefield, and Don Mitchell of Slaton.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

A SALARY DISPUTE INVOLVING COTTON INC. and its president, J. Dukes Wooters Jr., and the U. S. Justice Department has been settled, it was announced this week.

L. C. Unfred of New Home, chairman of the board of Cotton Inc., said he was "very pleased" with the announced settlement.

Under the arrangement, Cotton Inc. has agreed to transfer $120,000 of its own funds to the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The transfer, it was explained, will come from those monies in the company's possession prior to the collection of checkoff assessments to producers under the Cotton Research and Promotion Act.

The USDA, in turn, will place the $120,000 with the Cotton Board to add to the funds for use by Cotton Inc. in its research-promotion programs.

"This settlement does not impose any additional costs on cotton producers or Cotton Inc.," Unfred said.

One Cotton Inc. official acknowledged that "the money is flowing in a circle."

BUT THE RESULT OF THE AGREEMENT is to make the Cotton Inc. program "whole again," said John Schernauskas, assistant general counsel of the USDA marketing division.

The dispute arose after Congress in 1975 voted $3 million for cotton research to be handled by Cotton Inc. with a provision that none of its employees have a salary exceeding that of the secretary of agriculture.

The board of directors voted to accept the $3 million, although, officials pointed out, Cotton Inc. "already had a legal and binding contract with its president to pay him a salary which exceeded the secretary's."

To resolve the problem, according to a Cotton Inc. statement, Wooters voluntarily gave up his salary for the first nine months of 1976. His salary was effectively cut $60,000 a year for two years.

Three months after the limitation on salaries expired, the statement said, Wooters entered into a consulting contract with the J. G. Boswell Co. in California, the nation's largest cotton producer.

This, the statement said, was after Wooters had "faithfully discharged his duties as chief executive officer for the nine-month period without any income from any source in accordance with the congressional mandate."

THE THEN-CHAIRMAN OF COTTON INC., E. Hervey Evans Jr. of North Carolina, approved the consulting arrangement after having conferred with the vice chairman, C. R. Sayre of Mississippi.

They were assured by the firm's counsel that Wooters' contract did not prohibit him from accepting a consulting arrangement provided it did not interfere with his responsibility of running Cotton Inc., the CI statement said.

An aspect of the dispute with the USDA and the Justice Department was that Boswell during the same period requuested a refund of $120,000 of its checkoff payments to Cotton Inc., the same amount it paid Wooters for his consulting contract.

Former USDA general counsel Daniel Marcus had asked the Justice Department to determine whether congressional intent had been circumvented by the Wooters arrangement with Boswell.

The settlement announced this week is a "consent" agreement, USDA's Schernauskas said, under which no one admits any wrongdoing.

THE GOVERNMENT'S PREMISE WAS THAT the Cotton Inc. program was short $120,000 because of the refund to Boswell, Schernauskas said.

Cotton Inc. has two funds. One comes from a levy on producers, spent for Cotton Inc.'s research and promotion programs, and the other is CI's "own funds" which were in the company's possession before the automatic producer checkoff was established.

Taking the $120,000 from Cotton Inc.'s own funds and channeling the money back through the Cotton Board to the Cotton Inc. research and promotion activities "makes the program whole again," Schernauskas said.

"Whatever the questions of the arrangement were," he said, "at least the money is back."

Unfred said the settlement is "in the best interests of all cotton producers, since it ends the costs and distraction of further discussion and maintains a positive relationship between Cotton Inc., the Cotton Board and the USDA."

"Most importantly," he added, "it will keep every possible dollar working for research and promotion to benefit all cotton producers."

COTTON FUTURES CLOSED A QUIET session around the middle to the top end of the day's trading range Thursday with gains of 19 to 30 points in current marketing year months.

Spot March rose 21 points to 90.82 cents, May advanced 30 points to 91.67 cents, and July rose 19 points to 91.75 cents. December lost 5 points at 83.65 cents.

The thin market moved erratically inside a 107-point range, with locals on both sides and the trade largely a buyer, analysts said.

Activity was sluggish because many usual participants were sidelined ahead of the weekly U. S. cotton export report, which was released by the USDA after the close.

The report is expected to have a bullish impact on the market today, analysts said.

NET NEW EXPORT SALES FOR CURRENT marketing year delivery totaled a bulging 336,700 running bales during the week ended Jan. 29.

This was up from 129,900 bales the previous week, the second largest weekly volume of this marketing year at that time. The record is 534,100 bales during the week ended Dec. 18, when China bought 484,800 bales.

China accounted for 150,000 running bales in the latest report, putting U. S. cotton commitments to China this season at 1,543,300 running bales.

Other buyers included South Korea with 77,100 bales, Japan with 42,900 bales, Israel with 21,100 bales, and Canada with 16,800 bales.

The total 1980-81 export commitment — outstanding sales plus shipments — rose to 5,102,300 running bales, already near the last USDA projection for the entire season ending July 31 of 5.24 million running bales.

Sales for 1981-82 delivery during the reporting week were 1,900 bales, hiking the new-crop commitment to 53,600 running bales.

SHIPMENTS FOR THE WEEK CLIMBED to 179,200 bales from 159,000 the previous week, with 89 percent going to Asia and 6 percent to Europe. The season's total was 2,803,600 running bales, compared with 3,466,800 a year earlier.

Some analysts now believe export sales could reach to around the 6-million-bale area (480 pounds), possibly even a little beyond, and that actual shipments could total around 5.7 million (again 480 pounds) or maybe slightly more.

The last USDA projection, released in mid-January, was for cotton exports of 5.5 million 480-pound bales.

Trading on Telcot quickened Thursday to 10,903 bales on an average price of 68.52 cents, an average of 2,929 points over the loan. There was no market difference, although some of the higher qualities were expected to be on the plus side at the start today.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Grain and soybean futures prices rallied late in the trading session to close mostly higher Thursday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Only wheat prices were mixed. Sources said forecasts for some much-needed snow and rain in winter wheat growing areas encouraged early-session selling in wheat.

A trader in the corn pit said there was some buying support there from commercial interests.

Traders noted reports of the discussion surrounding the Soviet grain embargo. Some traders on Wednesday had been expecting Reagan to lift the restrictions on U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union, but Reagan instead said Cabinet review of the question would continue. An announcement is not expected until mid-month.

Continued light country movement was noted with many farmers said to be holding back on stocks rather than sell them to elevator operators at current prices.

At the close, wheat was 1 cent lower to ¼ cent higher, the contract for March delivery was $4.71¼ a bushel; corn was 1½ cents to 3 cents higher, March $3.64 a bushel; oats were 3 cents to 6 cents higher, March $2.28¾ a bushel; soybeans were 1 cent to 6 cents higher, March $7.54½ a bushel.

Drought Threatening Midwest Grain Crop

ANKENY, Iowa (AP) — The gravel road running in front of Everett Albaugh's rural Ankeny, Iowa, farm home is stitched with inch-wide cracks.

His fields are coated with two inches of dust, and a ditch near his home is nearly filled with powdery topsoil.

During a normal winter, there would be no cracks, and rains and a cover of snow would allow Albaugh to pick up moist clods of the rich dirt which grows a large part of the nation's and the world's food.

But this is not a normal winter, as Albaugh and other farmers can attest. It is one of the warmest and driest on record in Iowa, as well as in surrounding states.

Five Midwestern states which typically produce one-third to one-half of the total U.S. harvest of corn, soybeans, grain sorghum and wheat are expected to feel at least some effect from the drought. Besides Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, they include Illionis and Missouri.

Some Iowa farmers are already hauling water for livestock.

The less than average rain and snowfalls received in 1980, combined with a forecast for more of the same this year, have led many officials to fear the nation's breadbasket is on the threshhold of a drought. Few officials are ready to predict the impacts of such a dry spell, but they say that reduced yields and higher prices for foods are likely.

Drought is no stranger to the Midwest. Dry spells and reduced crop yields occur almost every growing season, agriculture officials say. But this drought may be more widespread than in the past, raising the possibility that good harvests in one or two of the states may not be enough to make up for lowered production in other states.

"Kansas, Nebraska and this area around around them is an important production area," said Don Hanway, an extension crop specialist in the University of Nebraska Department of Agronomy at Lincoln, Neb.

"They represent a very significant part of the winter wheat production, sorghum production and is important in overall corn production. So the impact on the total U.S. agricultural production could be important."

Agriculture officials in Kansas and Nebraska say their states are extremely dry, and that they could be facing "severe"problems if the current weather pattern continues. Parts of Missouri — Especially in the south near the Ozarks — are also being hit.

One-third of Iowa's farmland is reported to have below adequate subsoil moisture needed to nourish the plants, and 81 percent of Illinois's counties report the same.

"This is about the first time I've ever noticed cracks going clear across the road," said Albaugh, a farmer for 30 years.

"I don't think the seriousness has really sunk in to most people," he said. "It does get pretty serious when you get this far into the winter and not have snow and you have a couple of inches of dust on top of your field."

A few miles down the road, Pat Fontanna, manager of the Enterprise Farmers Elevator Co., has had to haul water in an 800-gallon tank. His 97-foot well went dry three weeks ago, only the second time in 37 years that has happened, he said.

Well failures and low water tables have been reported in other parts of central and northwest Iowa.

Ten of the past 12 months have had less than the normal amount of precipitation, said Iowa State Climatologist Paul Waite.

Illinois officials say their state has received up to four inches less rainfall than normal.

Kansas is "very dry right now," said Mo Johnson, state statistician for the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, and many parts of Nebraska have received less than half of their normal amounts of rain, said Hanway.

Soybean Official Sees Short Crop In 1981

By THOMAS LANNING

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (Reuters) — The United States may well see a short soybean crop in 1981, American Soybean Association chairman Allen Aves said.

Aves, attending a soy-corn conference here, told Reuters that a shortage of funding for farmers could hurt this year's crop.

"Some farmers are really going to be hurting this next season when they go to get funding to produce a crop," he said.

As a result, he said, they will have less money for crop inputs and may cut down on seedbeds and fertilizer and herbicide usage, he said.

Aves said farmers have been receiving a cash price of about $7 per bushel for soybeans, down from $9 at the end of November.

"With this shortage of money, we could see a short crop next season again," he said.

In addition to the price break, farmers suffer from a current smaller soybean crop, high interest rates, inflation, and a nationwide lack of soil moisture.

Also, he said, the economies of importing nations in recession have an additional negative impact.

Aves said that since the world precious metals prices have fallen, importing nations which trade gold for soybeans must buy less.

Another important factor depressing the soybean price has been the possibility of military action by the U.S.S.R. against Poland, he said.

"If that were to happen, it would almost eliminate all sales of grain to Russia and Poland and probably to the Eastern bloc nations," Aves said.

Even if no military action occurs, he said, the threat of it forced insurance firms to raise rates on soybean shipments to Poland.

That either reduces the number of soybean shipments or raises the price of the shipments, he said.

Looking to the future, Aves said he expects weather to play an important factor for next season's crop. Marginal weather will increase chances of a short soybean crop.

Aves considers lack of soil moisture a nationwide problem and noted weather forecasters have predicted a dry year.

Low water levels on the Mississippi, Ohio, Illinois and Tennessee Rivers make it more difficult to deliver soybeans to market.

Also, with rivers low, the cash prices going to soybean farmers tend to fall, he said.

In contrast to his short-term outlook, Aves spoke optimistically about the decade of the 1980s for soybean producers.

He hopes the Reagan administration will lift the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union.

Aves said all the farmers he has talked with so far felt pleased with the free market position taken by the Reagan administration.

SPECULATORS STILL SHOW LITTLE REAL enthusiasm for ownership of soybeans or products. There has been some minor indication that they are no longer such aggressive bears.

However, exports continue to drag behind last season. Crush rate in the United States has begun to fall back as well. Domestic crushers are having increasing difficulty in purchasing beans from farmers. They have existed so far mostly on supplies previously contracted for periodic delivery through the season. The quantity they will be receiving under those contracts will be declining from now through the spring and summer. Crushers just can't pay as much as farmers require and still make a profit from sale of oil and meal. But farmers are being bid a price that shows little or no profit and they are not inclined to sell, especially as soil moisture is generally deficient. Open interest has been cut nearly in half since early December.

Meanwhile, European interests are doing little forward purchasing. Many are following their traditional pattern of not buying ahead when there are carrying charges. They did the same thing a year ago -missing the opportunity to buy in the area of $6.50 in June. Finally, the purchasing was done by those who waited at $9 or more in late October and early November. It was a speculation that back-fired. Sometimes it works out in their favor.

That waiting like last season was the primary reason why prices broke so sharply in December and may have trouble advancing even now. With a program of just buying for nearby needs, the demand is quickly responsive to high prices. But this also means that now, with prices substantially below their peaks, demand could also quickly recover.

SPREADS INVOLVING LIVE CATTLE, feeder cattle, and live hogs are somewhat different from spreads in other commodities because by definition these live animals are non-storable. This means that the concept of carrying charges, so prevalent in grains, precious metals, cotton, heating oil, etc.,does not apply when analyzing spread behavior in these markets. (Pork bellies are the exception to this rule among the livestock group, being a storable item to which the rules of carrying charges do apply).

What this implies for the spread trader is that each delivery month's price for live animals is a function of the market's perception of the supply/demand situation expected for that particular time period of the year. This further means that important livestock reports (cattle-on-feed reports and hog inventory reports) can oftentimes imply different price connotations for nearby months as apposed to more distant months. This is the reason why certain deliveries will be selling at substantial premiums or discounts to other ones. It is the market's way of saying that even though the cash price for cattle or hogs is only at a certain level now, perhaps six or nine months in the future the price will be higher or lower because of an anticipated smaller or larger supply situation at that time.

This brings us to the next item that must be understood when analyzing cattle and hog spreads, namely the time it takes to breed, grow, and bring these animals to market. After hogs are born, it takes about six months for them to mature and reach a slaughter weight of over 200 pounds. Thus pigs born in the spring would be ready for slaughter in the fall. The largest number of farrowings is in the spring and the smallest number is usually during the winter. The "spring pigs" will be ready for market in the fall, and hog prices tend to be their lowest at that time. Thus, October hogs normally sell at a discount to months ahead of it and after it. (April hogs are also lower in price than the summer deliveries because farmers usually market large numbers of hogs during this corn and soybean pre-planting period). The number of pigs slaughtered is lowest during the summer months (small winter crop), and thus hog prices tend to be their highest at this time.

Cattle cycles are longer in time than those for hogs, but exhibit the same seasonality. Cattle that are placed on grass during the summer months are marketed most heavily in late autumn as they come off grass and require greater expense to maintain. This is why the October and December deliveries are almost always at discounts to the spring and summer months. In fact, perhaps the one cattle spread that has exhibited an almost uncanny tendency to work in the spring and early summer is the long June -short October spread. This spread has seen gains of the June relative to October for virtually every year since cattle has been trading.

Last year, NYFE proposed a futures contract in domestic bank certificates of deposit and hopes to receive CFTC approval of the contract this spring. NYFE will also file for a futures contract in Eurodollars but will not elaborate on the proposal or the time frame for filing with the CFTC.

THE RECENTLY PUBLISHED 11TH SOVIET five-year plan, covering 1981 through 1985, promises increased food and oil production but economic experts say the goals are unlikely to be met. By 1985, some of the economists say, the confident Soviet predictions of increased food production may have evaporated and their place as the world's leading oil producer may be threatened. The 1980s are likely to become the first no-growth period in sensitive areas of the Soviet economy since Josef Stalin introduced the original five-year plan in 1928. They've got to do some serious catch-up with projections in their old plans before they can begin new growth plans," said one economist.

The reasons are the same as those creating difficulties for capitalist economies: Inflation, lack of skilled manpower and waning natural resources.

That opinion contrasts with Marxist-Leninist economic theorists, who argue a socialist economy should not be subject to traditional market forces. Soviet publications still announce the country has neither inflation nor unemployment. The Soviet thesis that they are insulated from those factors of the economy is baloney.

Whatever, it is called, lots of items cost more than they used to.

Cattle Futures Close Higher

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 42 to 70 points higher on reduced sales of 18,981 cars Thursday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Good support continued on strong stopping of deliveries and technical buying after recent lows. Local shortcovering and commercial buying were noted on the advance. Offset were easier cash beef at noon and talk of continued high interest rates.

Deliveries total 781 thus far. Wholesale beef was off 1 at 87 to 89 cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash cattle were steady to up 50 cents with the best top $60.50 per hundredweight at Illinois Direct. Slaughter totaled 124,000 head. Receipts at the major markets are expected to total 2,900 head.

Feeder cattle futures closed unchanged to 90 higher on reduced sales of 1,773 lots. Only newly traded January remained at previous levels.

Prices slipped from early highs in mostly local trade but ran up to new day's highs on late short covering. Sources noted spillover demand from the cattle pit and technical support after recent lows. Offset were easier cash beef at noon and talk of continued high interest rates.

Cash feeders were up $2 to off $1 with the best top $89.25 at Oklahoma City. About 1,100 head are expected today at the major markets.

Hog futures closed 27 to 55 higher on sales of 7,203 contracts. All contracts ended at or near day's highs.

Futures uncovered late support from all quarters. Sources noted spillover buying from other meat pits along with technical demand. Traders ignored lower cash pork at noon and easier live markets.

Deliveries total 95 thus far. Wholesale hams were off one-half to 2 at 65 to 66 cents a pound, f.o.b. river.

Roof Rat Invades Homes

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — The roof rat is enjoying the good life, eating delicacies and living in lush foliage around the most luxuriant homes of the San Diego area, rodent exterminators warn.

An official responsible for stopping creatures that spread disease said between 50 and 80 percent of the homes in fashionable La Jolla are being shared with roof rats.

The same is true in the Point Loma area of expensive homes a few miles to the south, according to Jim Shoemate, supervisor of such control for San Diego County. The rodents are reported to be common throughout northern San Diego County.

The rats, known scientifically as rattus rattus, are smaller and more docile than the Norway rat, which has attacked children in big-city slums. They live in vegetation much like tree squirrels, especially in decorative growth around homes and on the roof.

Mayor, Newspaper Settle

CLEVELAND (AP) — Former Cleveland Mayor Carl Stokes and the publisher of the city's black newspaper have settled a $1.5 million libel suit out of court.

CARL STOKES

W.O. Walker, editor and publisher of the Call and Post, agreed to pay Stokes an undisclosed amount of money and print a one-page apology and retraction of several stories and editorials the newspaper had run about Stokes.

The suit, filed in 1979 in U.S. District Court in Cleveland, was dropped Wednesday. Stokes had said Call and Post stories and editorials had ridiculed and disgraced him.

The most recent example, published Feb. 23, 1980, said an appearance by Stokes at a political picnic in 1979 was paid for by former Mayor Dennis J. Kucinich. The newspaper said Stokes was campaigning for Kucinich, who was seeking a second term as mayor. Stokes, who was a WNBC-TV newsman at the time, denied it.

Movie Project In Trouble

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Film producer Francis Ford Coppola's latest multimillion dollar project, "One From the Heart," is in financial trouble.

Coppola is putting up $1 million of his personal assets week by week so he can qualify for a bank loan at 21 per cent interest to finish the fimusical centered around Las Vegas.

The film is three days into shooting and in danger of running out of money. But he says, "I'm not going to stop. I've got it all worked out."

However, Coppola said he has been forced to close the story department of his Zoetrope Studio "and unless I find remedies the rest may be taken away, piece by piece."

Seeks Union Relationship

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Lech Walesa, leader of Solidarity, the Polish trade union movement, has sought to broaden a relationship with a labor union in New Jersey.

In a letter to the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, released Wednesday, Walesa said, "We will do our utmost not to deceive the confidence and hope that workers, world over, set on the Independent, Self-Managed Trade Union.

"We hope to remain in touch with your union and develop cooperation that will help us in our fight for workers' rights," said the Walesa letter.

Actors Suspected Terrorists

ROME (AP) — In what was described by Rome police as a "bad joke," American film actors Robert de Niro and Keith Carradine were held for more than an hour in a police station as suspected terrorists.

Police said the two actors were making a sightseeing tour of Rome in a taxi which was closely followed by a car occupied by two photographers. When the taxi arrived in Piazza del Popolo the driver stopped a police car saying that a suspicious car was following the taxi.

Police stopped the photographers and quoted them as saying they were pursuing two terrorists.

Vidal Lauds Mrs. Morefield

MOREFIELD

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Author Gore Vidal says Americans might consider sending Dorothea Morefield, the wife of an ex-hostage, to the White House.

Vidal said she "could probably be president" because of the way she kept up the public's interest in the Iranian hostages, one of whom was the U.S. consul general to Iran, Richard Morefield.

In the 444-day crisis, "she was the only person to emerge as a heroine" staying "so calm and cool" in the face of daily pressure from news media, Vidal said Tuesday night.

"Anyone who who can stand that much press for that much time could probably be president." he said.

Music Offered At Town Meet

SPENCER, Mass. (AP) — Even in a town of 10,000 people, it's sometimes hard to attract the 50 residents required to conduct a special town meeting. So town fathers are hoping a little country music will pull in a crowd.

Once a few years ago, the Spencer Board of Selectmen had to blow the fire whistle to get enough people to give up an evening for local government. And sometimes they are forced to cajole friends over the phone to get a quorum.

So the board has worked out a deal with Dave Green and his Country Cousins. The local group will give the folks 15 minutes of strummin' and singin' next month before they get down to the dry business of town finances.

Like many New England towns, Spencer must hold a special town meeting every three months or so to conduct the business that can't wait until the annual meeting in May.

Libel Battle Ends

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The 11-year-old libel battle between former San Francisco Mayor Joseph L. Alioto and the defunct Look magazine has ended.

ALIOTO

Alioto, who contended he was libeled in a 1969 article linking him to known Mafia figures, has agreed to a $465,000 settlement.

U.S. District Court Judge William W. Schwarzer ruled in May 1977 that Alioto had been libeled and awarded him $350,000 damages, which has risen to $465,000 with interest.

But Alioto did not get the money in the agreement concluded Wednesday.

Part of it went to pay two liens filed against the judgment. And $295,000 went to Courtenay C. Davis, a Wyoming cattle rancher, who won an $880,000 legal malpractice suit against Alioto last year in San Francisco Superior Court.

Sewers Impose On Poseys

MUSKEGON, Mich. (AP) — Roberta Middlecamp claims some sewers have imposed on her poseys. Now, her year-long fight for flower rights has earned her $600.

Miss Middlecamp, formerly of Muskegon County's Egelston Township, claimed workers installing neighborhood sewers destroyed 200 hybrid iris bulbs and a blue spruce after obtaining a right of way through her flowerbed.

Her lawyer, Douglas Hughes, said the irises were part of a collection of specially bred bulbs she received 25 years ago from her aunt and uncle.

"They were almost like an heirloom," Hughes said.

Hughes said the county has agreed to pay the $600 and avoid a court fight over the plant damage.

Seeks Honeymoon Spot

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles, Britain's heir to the throne is said to be looking for "the perfect place for a honeymoon," according to a published report.

First choice on his list, according to the Sun, is a cottage overlooking a beach on the Caribbean island of Nevis.

No Buckingham Palace spokesman was immediately available for comment.

Both Prince Charles and 19-year-old Lady Diana Spencer have kept silent over the growing speculation that they are about to be married.

Poll Indicates Public Trusts Reagan; Split On Budget Views

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans think Ronald Reagan is the kind of person who can get things done, but they're split over whether the new president will be able to put a rein on inflation or balance the federal budget, an Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

The poll indicates the public does trust Reagan and thinks he will be able to strengthen the nation's military and restore respect for America around the world.

The AP-NBC News poll, taken Jan. 21-23, is based on telephone interviews with 2,407 adults across the country.

Poll results indicate Reagan is starting his term in the Oval Office with generally supportive attitudes from the public.

Nearly three-quarters of those interviewed — 72 percent — said Reagan is the kind of person who can get things done, while 14 percent disagreed. Another 14 percent were not sure.

Fifty-eight percent said they have an overall favorable opinion of Reagan, with 18 percent having an unfavorable view. Twenty-four percent were not sure.

And 61 percent expressed a lot of trust in Reagan. Thirty-one percent expressed little or no trust in him. That trust rating is almost identical to the one enjoyed by Jimmy Carter in the first days of his administration in 1977. At that time, 60 percent trusted Carter a lot, while 29 percent trusted him only a little.

The opinions of Reagan broke down somewhat along partisan lines. The Republicans held the most favorable opinions of him and the Democrats the least postive, with independents somewhere between.

Asked a series of questions about Reagan's ability to fulfill specific campaign promises, the public was optimistic in the foreign policy area, but split on matters of the economy.

For example, 44 percent of those questioned said Reagan will be able to control inflation, while 45 percent disagreed. Eleven percent were not sure.

Another roughly equal split occurred on balancing the federal budget. Forty-two said Reagan will be able to balance the budget, while 47 percent disagreed. The remainder were not sure.

But an overwhelming 89 percent said Reagan will be able to strengthen the nation's military and defense posture, with 6 percent disagreeing.

And 76 percent said Reagan will be able to restore respect for the United States around the world. Fifteen percent said he will not be able to do so and 9 percent were not sure.

The public doubt about Reagan's ability to cut inflation or balance the budget is, in part, a reflection of the belief that the problems are largely intractable.

Americans questioned split on whether an effective president would be able to control inflation — 48 percent said he could, while 44 percent said not.

And an essentially even split developed over whether the federal budget can be balanced in the next few years. Forty-eight percent said it could be balanced, with 43 percent saying it can't be.

Reagan Poll Findings

NEW YORK (AP) — Telephone interviews with 2,407 adults across the country from Jan. 21 through Jan. 23 were the basis for the Associated Press-NBC News poll on Ronald Reagan as he began his term in office.

Telephone numbers were selected at random in such a way that every American household with a telephone had a roughly equal chance of being selected. The sample was drawn to reflect accurately the makeup of the nation by region and size of city. A procedure was used to ensure a proper balance of men and women in the sample.

As with all sample surveys, the results of the AP-NBC News polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variations in the sample.

For a poll based on about 2,400 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of such chance variations. That is, if one could have talked to all Americans with telephones Jan. 21-23, there is only one chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for a number of additional reasons. Differences in the exact wording of questions, differences in when the interviews were conducted and different methods of interviewing could also cause variations.

Here are the exact wordings of some of the questions and the results from the AP-NBC News poll:

1. Do you have a favorable or unfavorable opinion of Ronald Reagan?
Favorable — 58 percent.
Unfavorable — 18 percent.
Not Sure — 24 percent.

2. Do you think it's possible to balance the federal budget in the next few years?
Yes, it's possible — 48 percent.
No, it's not possible — 43 percent.
Not Sure — 9 percent.

3. Now, I'm going to ask you a series of questions about things Ronald Reagan may or may not be able to do as president. I'd like to know whether or not you think he will be able to do them.
First, as president, do you think Ronald Reagan will be able to control inflation?
Yes — 44 percent.
No — 45 percent.
Not sure — 11 percent.

4. Next, as president, do you think Ronald Reagan will be able to restore respect for American around the world?
Yes — 76 percent.
No — 15 percent.
Not sure — 9 percent.

5. And, as president, do you think Ronald Reagan will be able to balance the federal budget?
Yes — 42 percent.
No — 47 percent.
Not sure — 11 percent.

6. Next, do you think Ronald Reagan will be able to strengthen the nation's military and defense?
Yes — 89 percent.
No — 6 percent.
Not sure — 5 percent.

7. Do you think an effective president would be able to control inflation or is that something beyond any president's control?
Could control — 48 percent.
Could not control — 44 percent
Not sure — 8 percent.

8. Do you agree or disagree with the following statement: "Ronald Reagan is the kind of person who can get things done?"
Agree — 72 percent.
Disagree — 14 percent.
Not sure — 14 percent.

White House Issues Apology For Letter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House apologized Thursday for a fund raising letter carrying President Reagan's signature that says ousting Democrats from the House is the Republicans' No. 1 priority.

The apology came after the letter was sharply criticized by House Democratic leaders.

The letter, sent by the National Republican Congressional Committee and signed with a facsimile of Reagan's signature, notes that the Senate is now in Republican hands, but the House "is still controlled by a liberal Democratic majority."

"That is why I consider winning Republican control of the House in the next election to be our party's No. 1 priority," the letter over Reagan's signature says.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said he was told by White House staff members that Reagan was "aghast" at the letter, which is dated Jan. 21, the day after he took office.

Wright quoted Max Friedersdorf, Reagan's chief congressional liaison officer, as telling him that Reagan "did not intend anything like this."

Reagan has been working to improve relations with the Democratic-controlled House. He also has told his Cabinet officers that he doesn't want them to play politics with their decisions.

Although the letter was dated Jan. 21, the first word of it surfaced Thursday just hours before the House was to consider raising the debt ceiling, a measure that needed Democratic support to pass. House leaders made copies of the letter but delayed giving them to Democratic members until after the crucial vote, Reagan's first legislative test as president.

Both Wright and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., accused Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., head of the campaign committee, of sending out the letter without Reagan's "knowledge or consent."

O'Neill added, "Personally I think it was a very despicable thing that Vander Jagt did."

Vander Jagt could not be reached for comment. But a spokesman for the congressional committee said: "We had White House clearance on the letter. There was honest confusion on the dates."

The spokesman said the clearance came from the office of James Baker III, Reagan's chief of staff.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said: "It was our understanding, when this letter was proposed to the president, that it would be sent out prior to the president's taking office. Obviously this was not done.

"We regret it was sent out in this manner. The president has said that he will refrain from doing things of this type (partisan political activities) for an indefinite period of time.

"Members of the White House staff have spoken to Majority Leader Wright and apologized for the letter, and the majority leader has expressed his understanding of the situation and how it happened."

Asked when Reagan would resume politicking, Speakes said, "Well, election time will come around."

The letter says the congressional committee needs $8.7 million to carry out its assault on House Democrats, with $425,000 needed in the next 30 days.

Of the $425,000, it says, $75,000 would go to candidate recruitment, $100,000 to campaign schools for candidates, managers and volunteers and $250,000 into a special fund for candidates to launch early campaigns.

And it says, "If the committee fails to raise this amount, it could jeopardize the best chance we have had in 25 years to become the majority party in the U.S. House."

"That is why I urge you to rush your maximum contribution to the committee so they can fund immediately the programs that will bring a Republican majority to the U.S. House of Representatives," it concludes.

Legislators Submit Marriage Tax Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 200 members of the House introduced legislation Thursday to eliminate the so-called "marriage tax" that forces married working couples to pay more taxes than single working couples who live together.

Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., who authored the bill, told the House the "socially damaging section of the tax code has to be repealed."

Although Mrs. Fenwick has been introducing similar legislation since 1975, no action has been taken on the proposal.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., co-author of the Kemp-Roth tax cut bill, which President Reagan has endorsed in principle, agreed the marriage tax should be repealed.

"Two-earner families face the highest marginal tax rates of any group of taxpayers," he said. "These couples will pay an extra penalty of over $8 billion this year just for the privilege of being married."

Bus Drivers Charged With Selling Drugs

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Six Radnor Township School District school bus drivers have been charged with selling illegal drugs to undercover agents following a two-month investigation, officials say.

The six were arrested in the Delaware County school district's bus garage early Wednesday, said Thomas Gallagher, chief of the county Criminal Investigation Division.

An investigation is under way into whether any drugs were sold to students, Gallagher said.

Volcano Belches More Steam; Eruption Expected

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Volatile Mount St. Helens shot a steam plume more than a mile above its 8,400-foot crater rim Thursday as molten rock formed on the volcano's crater floor. Scientists said they expect an eruption — but one that probably would not spew ash.

The rock built a large lava bump on top of the volcano's old lava dome and scientists said the dome growth was part of the mountain's effort to rebuild itself after its May 18, 1980, eruption.

"It's a non-explosive eruption," said Kathy Cashman, a U.S. Geological Survey geologist. "It (the new lava growth) is big but we don't know how big. It's growing on top of the old dome."

The new lava growth apparently began early Thursday but it was midday before a break in gigantic steam plumes permitted a USGS geologist, who was flying in a helicopter, to see the dome.

The volcano's dome-building does not rule out the chance of an explosive, skyward eruption of ash, Miss Cashman said, but she added "the dome will be the major phase of activity."

The steam plume shot 5,500 feet above the crater, while the earthquakes which rattled the volcano earlier seemed to have leveled off, scientists said.

That lull may be a clue to the volcano's next move, said Christina Boyko, a spokeswoman for the University of Washington's geophysics center in Seattle.

Seismic activity leveled off late Thursday morning to about two events per hour after coming at a rate of six to eight per hour earlier, she said.

She said any new eruption probably would be similar to the period between Dec. 27 and Jan. 4, when molten rock squeezed up through the volcano's crater floor, hardening into a dome larger than Seattle's Kingdome.

Scientists issued a volcano alert early Thursday, saying a major eruption was a possibility.

"Seismic data of the last several hours indicate an eruption within the next 12 hours," geophysics spokesman Dave Peckham said, reading a department statement shortly after 7 a.m. CST.

At that time, Peckham said the expected eruption could either be non-explosive, like the one that created the dome, or could resemble the mountain's last explosive eruption, which began Oct. 16 and shot steam and ash thousands of feet into the sky over three days.

However, Miss Boyko said later, "We do not discount the possibility of an explosion, but it probably will be dome-building."

Commercial pilots flying near the peak early Thursday reported steam and ash rising thousands of feet into the air, but Forest Service spokesman Thom Corcoran said the plume contained no ash.

"It's venting but we're not calling it an eruption," he said. "Things haven't changed, we're still in an eruption alert."

Gov. John Spellman said Thursday he thinks government agencies are better prepared now than last year to handle any eruptions of the volcano.

Forest Service dispatcher Kate Brennan at the volcano center in Vancouver said no evacuation would be necessary since there is no one within 20 miles of the mountain's north side.

The Oct. 16 eruption was the fifth eruption since the massive May 18 eruption that left 62 people dead or missing. The mountain was mostly quiet through January. On Sunday, the quakes, tremors and steaming began gain.

Earthquake activity peaked in the two hours after midnight Thursday when there were seven earthquakes — five of them as large as the biggest earthquakes recorded Wednesday, when 26 were recorded, Miss Boyko said.

No magnitude was determined immediately for the quakes, but most probably were less than 2.0 on the Richter scale, she said.

Some of the quakes were described as precursors, a type of quake scientist have seen before other eruptions, Peckham said.

UP SHE GOES -- Mount St. Helens erupts with steam and ash to about 17,000 feet Thursday morning after being quiet for several months. The volcano, located 45 miles northeast of Portland in Washington, has been active since March 27. Behind the plume is Mount Rainier, a dormant volcano. (AP Laserphoto)

Congressman Pleads Innocent Of Sodomy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jon C. Hinson, a conservative Mississippi Republican, pleaded innocent Thursday to a charge of attempted sodomy and was released without bail pending a trial scheduled for May 4.

Hinson, arrested Wednesday by Capitol Police in a men's restroom in the Longworth House Office Building, remained silent at his arraignment in District of Columbia Superior Court and his plea was entered by his attorney, Joseph Clancy.

Following his arrest, Hinson was charged with committing oral sodomy, a felony carrying a maximum fine of $10,000 and sentence of 10 years in prison. But the U.S. attorney's office reduced the charge to a misdemeanor, which carries a maximum one-year penalty and a fine of $1,000.

In explaining the reduction in the charge, Percy H. Russell, deputy director of Superior Court operations for the U.S. attorney's office, said it was office policy that homosexual acts between consenting adults be prosecuted as misdemeanors.

In initially charging the congressman with a felony, Capitol Police had set a $2,000 bond for Hinson. But after accepting Hinson's plea of innocent to the misdemeanor charge, Judge William Thompson released the congressman without bond and told his lawyer that "if it is necessary for him to go back to Mississippi, he may do so."

Hinson, 38, who lives with his wife, Cynthia, in suburban Alexandria, Va., has not been available for comment since his arrest.

Hinson checked into a Washington area hospital shortly after his court appearance, according to his office.

Marshall Hanbury, Hinson's administrative assistant, said the congressman "has voluntarily admitted himself to a hospital . . . in order to have the benefit of professional care, counseling and treatment."

He did not divulge the name of the hospital.

Hanbury also said in a prepared statement that he was informed by Hinson's physician that this treatment was "necessitated by the onset of an episode which he termed a dissociative reaction attributed to a two-year period of intense emotional and physical exertion. . ."

Hinson was the first of four men arrested Wednesday in the men's room to be arraigned.

Widow Of Surgeon Convicted On Reduced Charge

HOUSTON (AP) — A state court jury convicted the widow of prominent Houston heart surgeon Dr. Frank Sandiford on a reduced charge of voluntary manslaughter Thursday in the shooting death of her husband.

Kathleen Sandiford, 41, had been charged with murder in the Jan. 29, 1980 slaying of her husband at their fashionable River Oaks home.

Jurors deliberated six hours Wednesday and Thursday before reaching the verdict.

Mrs. Sandiford, who could receive a sentence ranging from probation to 20 years in prison, showed no emotion when the verdict was read. But she embraced her son afterwards.

The punishment phase of the trial began Thursday afternoon.

Prosecutor Mack Arnold said he was pleased the jury did not acquit Mrs. Sandiford.

"I wanted them to find her guilty of something because I believed she is guilty of something. They said voluntary manslaughter, and I can certainly live with that," Arnold said.

Arnold also said he had asked Mrs. Sandiford be denied probation.

Defense attorneys had argued that Mrs. Sandiford was a battered wife who feared for her life and fired five shots from a .357-magnum in a frenzy of terror.

Sandiford moved to Houston from the East Coast to work with Dr. Michael DeBakey and a year later became an associate of another noted heart surgeon, Dr. Denton Cooley.

During the trial, Mrs. Sandiford told jurors that her husband once plotted to kill Cooley in order to advance his own career and threatened to have the mafia "take care of her" if she told his boss of the plan.

FATAL DREAM

Early in April 1865, President Lincoln told his wife and a friend that he had dreamed that he was awakened by sobbing and followed the sound to the East Room of the White House. There he found mourners surrounding a catafalque and an honor guard told him: "The president . . . killed by an assassin." Within two weeks the slain president lay in the room.

Realistic SAC Exercise Set To Begin

Global Shield '81, a command-wide exercise of the Strategic Air Command, will blast off without notice just like the real thing.

Geared to test emergency war orders, it will involve all SAC bases, more than 100,000 personnel, 800 aircraft and 70 military and civilian air fields in the United States and Guam.

A low-level route of B-52 and F-111 aircraft will bring SAC warbirds over parts of the South Plains, according to a spokesman from SAC headquarters at Offutt Air Force Base, Neb.

"The aircraft will not be carrying weapons of any kind," T. Sgt. Bob Murray emphasized in describing the exercise that, otherwise, will be as realistic as possible.

"When the alert goes off, they will go to their aircraft much in the same manner as if it were a real world event," he added.

Personnel involved, he explained, do not know when, how or where they are to react; they only know there will be an exercise, the largest to date for SAC which began Global Shield in 1979.

"We are testing emergency war orders that would be given to us by national command authorities if deterrents were to fail or the world situation was to deteriorate."

The low-level path, known as IR 188, begins near Plato 50 miles northeast of Presidio and passes near Van Horn, Sanderson and Big Lake in a meandering way before crossing Interstate 20 about halfway between Big Spring and Sweetwater.

From 15 miles west of Snyder, the route goes across White River Lake to near Floydada and veers toward Tulia and Dimmitt.

It then reaches the New Mexico state line, traveling to the southwest of Hereford and moving along the line near Clayton before heading for Colorado.

Planes will enter the pattern at altitudes of 10,000 feet, Murray said, and at some points along the route will reach the lowest approach of 400 to 1,000 feet.

Research craft flew the route, Murray explained, to assure that it avoided heavily populated areas, moving over open country and passing near towns and cities while avoiding large cities.

DEFENSE CONSTRUCTION

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Australia's Defense Department announced Thursday that it was accepting bids from construction firms to build a large-scale extension of a building at the U.S. defense satellite ground facility in Pine Gap. It disclosed no details on the project at Pine Gap, in central Australia, which opened in 1970 and forms a key part of the U.S. early warning satellite communications system.

Timetable Slipping On Budget Cutting

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's timetable for slashing the federal budget is slipping, with elements of the ambitious plan now not expected until well into March, Republican sources said Thursday.

Democrats and some Republicans also expressed skepticism that Reagan's economic plan will succeed in cutting the inflation rate to 6 percent by the end of 1982, as Budget Director David Stockman reportedly is predicting.

On the 6 percent inflation figure, Rep. David R. Obey, D-Wis., a member of the House Budget Committee, said: "I'll believe it when I see it."

Several Republicans said that in light of expected inflation in the 12 percent range this year, Stockman's 6 percent projection appeared optimistic.

On the timing for the budget-cutting package, one GOP source said the "really key cuts" will be presented Feb. 18 as previously announced, but that other spending reductions would be unveiled March 10 and others still later.

The source said the main reason for pushing back the timetable for the cuts, which Reagan's economic advisers originally hoped to announce shortly after the Jan. 20 inauguration, was the scope of the changes being proposed.

"Four years ago, (President Jimmy) Carter accepted large parts of the Ford budget intact," one source said. "Stockman is not willing to do that."

The source, however, also said the administration's slowness in staffing top levels of the departments has prevented detailed planning on some of the spending cuts.

The delays in presenting the budget cuts to Congress have also undermined the administration's goal of reducing by 2 percent planned spending for fiscal 1981, which ends Sept. 30.

Republican sources said Wednesday that Stockman had all but given up hope of making significant cuts in the 1981 budget and was focusing on fiscal 1982, which begins Oct. 1, and future years.

Administration officials, however, continue to say publicly that the 2 percent saving is possible if Congress enacts the still-unannounced budget cuts quickly.

Long List Targeted

A long list of programs has been targeted by Stockman for cutbacks or elimination. The programs include Social Security, food stamps, child nutrition, public service jobs, unemployment benefits, Medicaid, urban aid, federal construction and loans or subsidies to business, farms and individuals.

"What Stockman has in mind is damn near revising the whole budget, going into every line item," one source said. "Getting that done by March 10 will be an incredible undertaking."

GOP sources said the major cost-cutting proposals that require changes in law will be unveiled Feb. 18. The March 10 proposals will be in so-called discretionary spending that can be reduced by the appropriations committees without special legislation, they said.

Others Due Later

However, one source said other budget-cutting proposals would be sent to Congress even later.

The source said the new administration was working on a plan to save money by replacing many categorical — or specifically targeted — federal spending programs with block grants to state and local governments.

By consolidating categorical grant programs, he said, the federal government would set general guidelines on how the money can be spent, instead of mandating its use for specific purposes.

He said that change would meet Reagan's political goal of giving greater control to local governments over how federal money is spent while also achieving signficant savings.

Eyebrows Raised

Meanwhile, Stockman's reported projection that the annual rate of inflation will be cut to 6 percent by the last quarter of 1982 raised eyebrows even in some Republican circles.

Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., ranking GOP member of the House Ways and Means Committee, said such a figure was "very optimistic" but could be achieved if the Reagan program restores confidence in the economy among the American people.

One Republican budget expert, who asked not to be named, said expecting to cut the current inflation rate in half by late 1982 was "awfully optimistic."

Democrats were even more critical, with one congressional aide saying of Stockman's economic model that produced the inflation projection: "You put garbage in and you get garbage out."

However, Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., a House Budget Committee member, said he considered the projection of 6 percent inflation reasonable. He added that it might even be cut to 4 percent by next year if energy costs were excluded.

GOP Joins Vote For Debt Hike

so long as the embargo on grain shipments to the Soviet Union continues.

The debt limit measure was supported by 155 of the 244 Democrats in the House and 150 of the 191 Republicans; 68 Democrats and 36 Republicans voted no.

The Republican vote was the largest GOP majority for a debt limit bill since July 31, 1953.

Raised Periodically

The debt ceiling, which limits how much money the federal government may borrow, has been raised periodically with little fanfare over the past several years and with most Republicans voting no.

That left Democrats carrying the burden of passing the bill, which is necessary to keep the government going. The bill took on a political tone after several Republican challengers in last year's elections used the debt vote to brand Democrats as fiscally irresponsible.

Several Republicans admitted having opposed every such bill in the past, calling their actions a protest of high spending. They said they had felt no obligation to raise the ceiling on grounds they had not voted for various spending programs that contributed to the debt.

Share Of Goodies

Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., rejected that argument, saying such members "still try to get their fair share of the goodies" for their constituents.

"They accept the collective judgment of this body when they are on the receiving end but oppose the collective judgment when they have to pay for it," he said.

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said members of Congress, even those who oppose certain programs, have a responsibility to give the government authority to pay its debts. He compared the situation to one in which one member of a family buys on credit and other members accept the responsibility to pay the bills.

"Bills Must Be Paid"

"The bills of the federal government which already have been incurred must be paid," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill.

Rep. Marjorie Holt, R-Md., sounded the theme offered by most Republicans who spoke for the bill. "I see for the first time some glimmer of hope that we will bring federal spending under control," she said.

"I think the Reagan administration is entitled to time to get its economic house in order," said Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y. But calling extension of the debt ceiling basically a routine housekeeping affair, he added he was "deeply disturbed by the hypocrisy that often attended this matter in the past."

Garwood Convicted On Five Charges

specific accusations in the collaboration charge, although the jury made two deletions in the charges' specific wording.

Guilty verdicts were returned against Garwood on charges of:

— Serving as an interpreter during political indoctrination classes in a prison camp.

—Informing to the enemy about complaints, feelings and attitudes of fellow captives.

—Interrogating POWs upon their entry into the camp about the former military units, their attitudes and any escape plans.

—Indoctrinating POWs as part of a political course, extolling the virtues of the National Liberation Front and suggesting that they "cross over" to the enemy. The jury deleted an accusation from this charge alleging Garwood had ascribed the term "mercenaries" to the American POWs.

—Serving as a guard, escorting POWs inside and outside the camp. The jury deleted from this charge the allegation that Garwood served as an "armed" guard.

Under military law, at least four of the five jurors had to approve a guilty verdict, and there was no indication exactly how the jurors voted.

The verdicts came after the jury received copies of testimony from two former prisoners of war who testified against Garwood, Sgt. Willie Watkins and Army doctor Floyd H. Kushner.

Observers Surprised

The deliberations Thursday surprised court observers who had expected an earlier verdict. Such military court verdicts are generally reached quickly and rarely go into a second day. The jurors began deliberations Wednesday morning after more than a year of pretrial and court-martial hearings.

The testimony of Kushner, requested by the jury, accused Garwood of informing on his fellow Americans in prison camps in 1968 and 1969. Kushner testified Garwood informed on him and Army Pvt. David Harker as they were digging a bomb shelter for a camp and discussing the Vietnamese treatment of prisoners compared to the Japanese treatment during World War II.

In cross-examination Kushner agreed at least one other American had the opportunity to tell camp officials about the conversation.

Testimony Cited

Kushner also said that after Ho Chi Minh's death in 1969, Garwood and the guards wore black ribbons. He recounted that Garwood told him he was morally and philosophically opposed to the Vietnam War and that he wanted to help the communist cause. But Garwood also said, according to Kushner, that he had struck a deal with the Vietnamese and was to be released after working with them for a period of time.

The evidence of Watkins included his account of Garwood's embracing Vietnamese guards in welcome. Watkins said Garwood told him to obey the rules of the camp and encouraged him to write statements protesting the war.

As it took a one-hour lunch break, the jury also asked for testimony of Army Pfc. Gustav Mehrer, who told the court he saw Garwood carrying a pack, pistol belt, hand grenades and rifle. Mehrer described Garwood as "a white Vietnamese" and said, "His actions were Vietnamese, he would hum and giggle like them, he would squat."

Statements Admitted

In cross-examination, Mehrer told the court it was "impossible to adhere to the code of conduct" and admitted giving information to the enemy and signing propaganda statements. He denied that he had actually crossed over to the enemy.

The soldier gave a vivid description to the court of the torture he said he endured at the hands of his captors. It included being placed on a leech pit, going through a mock execution and being bound and hung by the elbows from the rafters of a hut.

Zone Change Approves Patio Homes

the zone change.

"What the Zoning Commission has done to the value of our property by allowing Churches and Apartments to be built behind our property is a disgrace... My vote is an ABSOLUTE NO on any more changes in a supposedly one family residential area," wrote Mrs. Lucille Abercrombie of 5211 W. 17th St.

Three other homeowners near the church also objected, citing an adverse affect on property values. Two other property owners near the church wrote to favor the zone change, with one stipulating the change be for church-related use only.

The commission also approved a zone change requested by developer Ken Flagg to construct 18 "patio homes" along the 9800 block of Lynnhaven Avenue.

The zone change was for a specific use permit to allow the houses to be set on the property line instead of a normally required 20-foot setback. But the commission did not agree with a staff recommendation, and also allowed the sidewalks for the houses to go to the curb.

The only opposition to the zone change came in a letter from Gayer McFarland of 9712 Louisville Ave., who lives about one block from the proposed development. McFarland did not specify what objections he has to the development.

In other action, the commission voted to continue the terms of Bob Schmidt as chairman and Harry Stokley as vice chairman for another year. Schmidt is in the landscaping business and is a longtime member of the commission.

Parking Plan Opposed By Businessmen

there depend on 75 to 80 percent of their business from drive-in customers, he said. Fifty to 90 percent of business there is not related to Texas Tech walk-ins, he added.

"We are dependant on the impulse buyer, who drives by and spots something in the window or sees a sign and stops," Shanklin said, adding that parallel parking will present an obstacle to that type of buyer. And areas which have had changes from angle to parallel parking have had high attrition rates in businesses, Shanklin said.

Jantzen said he had worked in a business which had experienced such a change while he was a student at Texas Tech. The store had only two parking spaces and depended on customers other than students. It was forced to close because of the parking problem, he said.

Some of those attending the meeting also expressed suspicion over how fast the proposal was being considered.

"The (Texas Tech) Board of Regents voted on this after only 10 minutes and asked only four questions," said Jed Rushing, a University Avenue property owner. "With the city council meeting on Thursday, it's too fast for something as important as this."

"I know you've been talking to Tech for the past years about this," Mike Klein said. "Why are you trying to run this through in two weeks without talking to the businesses?"

Reagan Urges Slash In Taxes, Spending

to help fight economic problems and energy shortages.

Reagan took a different approach, reflecting his overall view that the economic system is capable of solving its own problems once the role of government is reduced.

"Our aim is to increase our national wealth so all will have more, not just redistribute what we already have which is just a sharing of scarcity. We can begin to reward hard work and risk-taking, by forcing this government to live within its means," he said.

Reagan said the federal budget "is out of control and we face runaway deficits, of almost $80 billion this budget year" that ends Sept. 30.

He has pledged to seek a 2 percent reduction in the current budget, amounting to a savings of about $13 billion, and his budget director is proposing reductions ranging from $30 billion to $50 billion for fiscal year 1982.

Proposed reductions would affect dozens of social programs, including Social Security, unemployment benefits, farm and business loan programs, food stamps, Medicaid, and student aid. Overall defense spending would not be reduced.

Reagan, appearing to address questions about whether such cuts would make victims out of the beneficiaries of such programs, said:

"Our spending cuts will not be at the expense of the truly needy. We will, however, seek to eliminate bennefits to those who are not really qualified by reason of need."

"Our basic system is sound," he said. "We can, with compassion, continue to meet our responsibility to those who through no fault of their own need our help. We can meet fully the other legitimate responsibilities of government. We cannot continue any longer our wasteful ways at the expense of the workers of this land or our children."

Reagan said the nation is "threatened with an economic calamity of tremendous proportions and the old business as usual treatment can't save us."

He said his administration will change the course of government policy and, "over the next few years," balance the budget.

"I am confident that my administration can achieve that," he said. "At that point tax revenues in spite of rate reductions will be increasing faster than spending, which means we can look forward to further reductions in tax rates."

". . . Prior to World War II, taxes were such that on the average we only had to work about one month each year to pay our total federal, state and local tax bill," Reagan said. "Today we have to work about four months to pay that bill."

Reagan, who earlier in the day described his speech as "a simple lesson in economics," decried having to choose between fighting inflation and fighting unemployment.

"In the past we've tried to fight inflation one year and then when unemployment increased turn the next year to fighting unemployment with more deficit spending as a pump primer," he said. "So again, up goes inflation. It hasn't worked."

"We don't have to choose between inflation and unemployment — they go hand-in-hand," the president said. "It's time to try something different and that's what we're going to do."

However, economic forecasts being prepared by Reagan's budget director indicate that fighting inflation is by far the top priority.

David A. Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, is predicting that the administration's economic plan will bring inflation down to a 6 percent annual rate by the end of 1982, from 12.4 percent last year. Under his forecast, unemployment would decline only slightly over the same period.

Soviets Testing Space Weapon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Russians have apparently conducted a successful space test of their satellite-killing weapon after an unexplained lapse of 10 months in the their testing program, U.S. intelligence sources reported Thursday.

The sources said a Soviet hunter satellite was launched last Monday and "passed close enough to a target satellite to have killed it."

The target satellite had been in orbit since Jan. 21 and U.S. intelligence officials had been watching for the launch of the hunter space vehicle.

The test last Monday was the first since last April. The 1980 test was rated by U.S. intelligence experts as an apparent failure.

That apparent failure, coupled with a 10-month pause until the recent intercept test, suggested the Russians might have had some technical problems with their system.

The Soviet anti-satellite system uses shrapnel-like pellets to destroy or disable target satellites. There was no information on what, if anything, actually happened to the Soviet target satellite last Monday.

U.S. officials have been increasingly concerned about Soviet development of a satellite-killing system which, in a war, could pose a serious threat to U.S. ability to observe Soviet military actions by knocking out or neutralizing American reconnaissance satellites.

Among other things, an effective Soviet anti-satellite weapon could play havoc with American military communications by knocking out satellites used to relay messages from commanders.

Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, reported to Congress recently that "the demonstrated Soviet non-nuclear low-altitude orbital anti-satellite interceptor poses a known, if presently limited, threat to some U.S. satellites."

Jones also said that "most of our military space systems are vulnerable to damage and require survivability enhancements to assure operation in a hostile environment."

What this means is that the United States has been working on ways to "harden" some critical spacecraft so that they could survive a conventional anti-satellite attack or a remote nuclear blast.

Solons Term Message Eloquent, Unspecific

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's first televised speech was an eloquent analysis of the economic problems facing the nation, but it oversimplified the causes and failed to provide detailed solutions, House members and senators of both parties said Thursday night.

"I am still waiting for the other shoe to drop," said Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio. 'What does he expect to do about it (the economy)?"

Seiberling said he believes Reagan has yet to say how he will increase the defense budget, cut taxes by 30 per cent in three years, and balance the budget.

"It will be a miracle if he can do it," he said.

Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston said Reagan placed far too much emphasis on government as the cause of inflation, ignoring years of spending on the Vietnam War, big military budgets and the rising cost of imported oil.

"He oversimplified," Cranston said. Government "is by no means the only cause."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said of Reagan's televised address, "I think his diagnosis is right, but I'd like to see the numbers he is proposing."

Rep. James Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said he believes there will be bipartisan cooperation in congressional assessment of Reagan's program.

Jones predicted that Congress would cut the federal budget $25 billion to $35 billion, somewhat less than projections of Reagan's likely effort to reduce government spending.

Domenici said he wants Congress to cut spending first and then worry about Reagan's plan for a 10 per cent annual tax cut for three years.

"I personally want to see Congress take the hard medicine first," he said.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, one of Reagan's biggest allies in the Senate, said, "I thought it was the most direct and candid speeches that I have ever heard a president give since I have been in public office.

"He did not overstate the nature of the problem, the budget is in a runaway situation, and we must enact severe budget cuts and tax cuts that he will call for" for Feb. 18.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said Reagan spoke in such generalities, that it was "hard to get any meaningful idea" what he expects Congress or the American people to do.

Probably because the speech held back on specifics, there was no rush to react among members of Congress who must consider Reagan's economic program, to be sent to Capitol Hill Feb. 18.

Both Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee and Minority Leader Robert Byrd said they would have no immediate comment.

Sen. Bill Roth, R-Del., an early author of the 10 per cent tax cut proposal Reagan has embraced, said there will be no quick solutions even with the president's radical economic proposals.

"As they say in weight watchers, you didn't get fat overnight, so don't expect to get skinny overnight," he said. "The president described how we got fat. He also prescribed a diet."

Walter Fauntroy, the delegate from the District of Columbia, said the speech contained nothing new and, like Cranston, he questioned whether the president can blame inflation "solely on government spending and on deficit spending."

Fauntroy, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, said Reagan's proposed across-the-board tax cuts, "will only increase demand for the supply of goods and services which results in inflation."

Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., said Reagan's address makes it clear "our new president means business..."

thousand cubic feet. The average price now is $1.65 per thousand cubic feet.

If Erickson's estimate of $4.50 were correct, it would mean the 43 million residential customers of natural gas could see their monthly bills rise by 173 percent. The entire economy could end up spending $50 billion more for the 18 trillion cubic feet of natural gas used each year. Natural gas supplies 26 percent of the country's energy. Oil is the nation's most predominant fuel.

Other OMB energy recommendations contained in budget documents obtained by The Associated Press include:

— Cut the program to spur development of synthetic fuels from coal and shale oil by scrapping six planned demonstration projects. Instead of financing dozens of plants, the OMB said the Synthetic Fuels Corp. should concentrate on funding "five to eight first-of-a-kind operating plants." The changes would save $9.1 billion over the next five years.

— Cut 62 percent from the $605 million planned spending for solar power in Carter's fiscal 1982 budget, including complete elimination of a new solar energy and energy conservation bank that was scheduled to provide loan subsidies to 150,000 homeowners this year. Another $85 million would be saved primarily by eliminating all money to develop and implement controversial programs to require new buildings and appliances to meet energy-use standards.

— Save $14 billion over the next five years by financing the filling of the government's strategic petroleum reserve through the sale of "oil bonds," which investors would buy to realize profits on rapid increases in oil prices.

— Scrap the $105 million program Carter spent two years fighting to get through Congress that allows the president to ration gasoline during severe supply shortages. Opponents said the plan to distribute rationing coupons based on 153 million auto registrations would be totally unworkable.

to the Secretary of State's Office in Austin and then to Gov. Bill Clements, who will make the official request to Colorado for the suspect's extradition.

McBride said it could take anywhere from 90 to 120 days or longer before Vasquez is returned to local law enforcement officials.

However, McBride said he expects the extradition effort to be successful this time.

Your Personal Biorhythms

by Bernard Gittelson

Figure your numbers here — for your own permanent biorhythm number for the Physical (P), Emotional (E), and Intellectual (I) cycles, just follow these steps:

	P	E	I
STEP 1. YEAR OF BIRTH
STEP 2. B MONTH OF BIRTH
STEP 3. DAY OF BIRTH
TOTALS

YOUR PERMANENT NUMBERS

BIORHYTHMS FOR FEB. 6, 1981

PHYSICAL
Criticals: 11, 23, 34, 46, 57, 69 — Take extra physical care
Highs: 1-10, 24-33, 47-56, 70-79 — Increase your workload
Lows: 12-22, 35-45, 58-68 — Relax and restore energy

EMOTIONAL
Criticals: 13, 27, 41, 55, 69, 83 — Bad temper can hurt
Highs: 1-12, 28-40, 56-68, 84-96 — Can be a friend easily
Lows: 14-26, 42-54, 70-82 — Easily dismayed

INTELLECTUAL
Criticals: 1, 18, 34, 51, 67, 84 — Intellectual reserve low
Highs: 19-33, 52-66, 85-96 — Trust your judgment
Lows: 2-17, 35-50, 68-83 — Intellectual down time

Cash, Johnny - Singer — Feb 26 1932 — 58 55 75

Step 1 — Year of birth. Read down the left hand column to find the last number in the year of your birth then go across to the appropriate decade. For instance, if you were born in 1947, your number for Physical would be 21, Emotional 17, Intellectual 19. Note whether your numbers are preceded by an A or B; this will be used for Step 2.

Energy Crisis Center Proposal Rejected

By DEBBI STALTER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

South Plains Association of Governments board members gave unfavorable comment Thursday to a request for federal funding that would set up an energy crisis center for migrant farmworkers in this area.

In a 14-4 vote, the board put a stamp of disapproval on a $100,000 request by Defensa Inc. of Muleshoe to operate a center to provide seasonal farmworkers energy cost relief and assistance in applying for public energy assistance programs. Board members most strongly objected to the outlay of 80 percent of the total grant for administrative costs.

Also Thursday, SPAG board members voted to raise strong objections to a state agency's method of allocating drug abuse prevention funds, which local health officials say entirely cuts West Texas out of the money.

Board members authorized SPAG Executive Director Jerry Casstevens to draft a letter to the Texas Department of Community Affiars, which channels funds to local agencies from the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

However, Lubbock Regional Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center representative Oscar Jones told the board the distribution has been lopsided.

However, Lubbock Regional Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center representative Oscar Jones told the board in a meeting this morning the distribution has been lopsided.

The Dallas and Houston areas have received up to four drug abuse prevention grants apiece, Jones said, while the Lubbock area has been prevented from even obtaining a form to request the funding.

The problem has resulted from a formula the state agency uses to allocate funds, which bases the distribution on the number of drug abuse incidences in an area per 100,000 population. Lubbock's ratio, according to the formula, rates it 22nd out of 24 health planning regions in the state in number of alcohol and drug abusers per capita.

Jones said he does not know where the statistics on Lubbock's ratio came from, but pointed out that he feels the figures are greatly understated.

"We have a very bad abuse problem here," Jones said. He noted that his agency alone has in its drug abuse treatment program 105 clients — 70 of whom he termed hard-core drug addicts.

He said West Texas is a popular area for drug trafficking because of its remoteness and because of its proximity to the Mexican border.

He also noted that no drug prevention money has been made available to an area reaching from San Angelo up to Amarillo, especially after the Legislative Budget Board voted not to fund the R.B. McAlister Act in its last budget appropriations. The act would have set up a statewide drug abuse prevention network.

In other action, board members also were informed that SPAG regional services director Arlene Miller would be visiting 10 municipal jail facilities for juveniles in the near future as part of a state mandate.

Mrs. Miller is being asked by state officials to check the facilities to ensure that juveniles who are locked up are separated out of "sight and sound" of adults in the jail.

The state itself will monitor county operations, but is asking local authorities to monitor city lock-up facilities in order for the state to meet federal regulations for juvenile justice funding.

SPAG is required to file a compliance report with the state following the check, and the state in turn must report its findings in both city and county facilities to federal authorities.

FOOD SHORTAGES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is setting up a system to predict drought and food shortages in developing nations, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration announced Thursday. The Agency for International Development currently uses the system to monitor potential and actual drought conditions in the Caribbean and sub-Saharan Africa, said NOAA officials.

Reagan Begins Joking About 70th Birthday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan turns 70 on Friday, but he started joking about it early.

The oldest man ever elected to the presidency, Reagan will celebrate his birthday with old friends Friday night at a White House party that is supposed to be a surprise.

But his jokes began Wednesday night at a congressional dinner and continued early Thursday morning at a prayer breakfast, where he was serenaded with "Happy Birthday," instead of "Hail to the Chief."

"I want to thank you for starting out the celebration of my 31st anniversary of my 39th birthday," Reagan said at the prayer breakfast at a Washington hotel.

At a black-tie dinner Thursday night, Reagan also was saluted with a rendition of "Happy Birthday."

Middle age, the president said, was "when you're faced with two temptations and you choose the one that will get you home at nine o'clock."

He quoted Thomas Jefferson as saying that age shouldn't be a factor in one's ability to perform a task, dryly adding, "And ever since he told me that ..."

Dr. Daniel Ruge, the president's personal physician, was asked how Reagan's health was bearing up. "I have not examined him, but I understand he's in very good health," he replied.

Ruge said a doctor shouldn't "get into the nitty gritty" when discussing a president's health.

"A president is entitled to a great deal of privacy and I will not breach that privacy," he said. "The public has a right to know about the general condition of a president, whether he's healthy or unhealthy. A serious illness should be reported. But I am not going into things like cholesterol levels. My obligation is to the president."

About 100 persons are expected to attend the White House party, including such old friends from California as Irene Dunne and Jimmy Stewart.

Jurors Give Robber 10-Year Sentence

A 237th District Court jury took only 0 minutes Thursday morning to sentence Richard Davila to 10 years imprisonment for his admitted robbery of two Texas Tech University students at gunpoint last September.

The two young women, who were held up outside their 50th Street apartment complex, pointed out Davila in court Wednesday as the man who walked up behind them and said, "Ladies, your purses, please."

Davila pleaded guilty to the first degree felony Wednesday afternoon. The jury was instructed to assess a punishment of from 5 to 99 years imprisonment, though the defendant was eligible for probation of any sentence 10 years or under.

Both women took the witness stand to tell the jury that they had returned to their apartment after a concert and were preparing to get out of the car when a man approached asking for directions. One of the women became suspicious when the number the man asked for did not follow the apartment's numbering scheme.

They stayed in the car for about 20 minutes after he left, they testified, before venturing from the car with a can of mace. Halfway to their apartment door they were confronted by a man with a gun who demanded their purses, they said.

The man, who they identified as Davila, pulled the hammer of his gun back as if preparing to shoot when they hesitated in turning over their purses, they told the jury.

Congratulations

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Montez Garcia of 5321 31st St. on the birth of a daughter weighing 6 pounds 1 ounce at 11:27 p.m. Wednesday at Community Hospital.

Portion Of Stolen Loot Found Following Arrest

About $3,510 in cash, about a third of the loot taken in a Thursday armed robbery, was recovered by police shortly thereafter with the arrest of a 21-year-old man.

The approximately $11,000 heist included a .22-caliber pistol, a postman in the right place at the wrong time and forced disrobing to allow time for an escape, police said.

Det. J.R. Ashmore said the suspect, described as a medium-built black man, walked into ZZ Motors, 1905 Ave. H, earlier Thursday to ask owner Jack Hawkins about possible employment. He returned about 1 p.m., police said, this time brandishing what is believed to be a black .22-caliber pistol.

The man reportedly forced Hawkins and a postman who was at the business to deliver the day's mail into a back room, telling them to remove their trousers. The men complied, police said, and the suspect emptied the pockets of the cash. Det. Capt. Wayne Love said that while the postman lost only about $5, the other man reportedly lost close to $11,000.

The suspect fled on foot, and the victims, after donning their clothing, ran to Hawkins' car to try to find their assailant, Ashmore said. They spotted the man walking across the parking lot of the Grand Motel at 21st Street and Avenue Q, police were told. Assuming the man entered the building, they then called police.

After checking at the motel desk, police arrested the suspect in one of the motel's rooms, also occupied by a black woman in her early 20s, Ashmore said. Police recovered $3,510 from behind a dresser in the room, he said.

The suspect was booked at Lubbock County Jail on suspicion of aggravated robbery, police said.

In a separate incident, an elderly service station attendant at the Shamrock Station, 1401 Parkway Drive, reported that a black man had robbed him before fleeing on foot.

Elbert Callis told police a clean-shaven, spectacled man walked into the station about noon Thursday requesting change for 10 pennies. After the man opened the cash register, Callis said, the bandit grabbed his arms and threw him to the floor, kicking him and stepping on him.

The bandit then grabbed the cash from the register before running from the station into a heavily wooded area, reports show.

Early estimates set the station's loss at $75, but the exact amount remained undetermined late Thursday.

In other activity, the husband of a Lubbock woman reportedly kicked open the door of another man's house to look for his wife, threatening the occupants with a revolver.

A 16-year-old boy told police he was assaulted by two teenagers who might be the same boys who previously hurt him.

Authorities Rule Arson In Fire

By JACK DOUGLAS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Arson has been ruled in the early Thursday fire at a 34th Street shopping center which damaged six businesses, two extensively.

"We've got a minimum of four different fires started and there's got to be a reason for it," said Lubbock Fire Marshal Robert Stokes, who determined that the blaze was intentionally set at the Aqua King of Lubbock, 2237 34th St.

Police Det. Bill Bailey Thursday was investigating the possibility the fires were started to cover up a burglary.

The blaze, reported at 12:37 a.m., spread to Book Binding and Bible Repair Co., 2235 34th St., and heavy smoke damage was reported in four other businesses and two vacant stores in the complex on the south side of 34th Street.

Eric Martin, son of Annette Martin, the owner of the building, said he could not give an estimate on the damage to the structure. However, Stokes, pressed for a rough figure, said, "I think $100,000 would get you in the ball park."

Martin said this morning his mother was out of the city and had not been informed of the blaze.

Thirty-five firemen from three stations were called to the scene after police Cpl. Doyle Robertson, on routine patrol, discovered flames shooting through a broken back window at Aqua King. The blaze was not tapped until 1:48 a.m.

Fire heavily damaged the roof and ceiling of several of the businesses. However, officials at Don's Flowers, Serena's Health Club-Massage, The Kingfish and Red Lantern Used Furniture and Gun Repair reported mainly smoke damage.

No one was injured in the two-alarm blaze.

Jan Spence, owner of Aqua King, estimated $15,000 damage to contents in her store, which was gutted in the fire. "We were fortunate in the fact that we didn't have a full inventory," Mrs. Spence said.

She said that her store, which specializes in water-softening equipment and crime prevention devices, will be closed only temporarily by the fire.

Stokes said at the scene that he had found four separate places in the business where fires had been set. He pointed to a bench in the back of the store, the hallway, the northeast corner of a sales room and a front office area.

Asked what would be of interest to burglars in her store, Mrs. Spence said, "There's nothing."

However, Stokes and Bailey indicated that the broken back window was good evidence the business had been broken into.

Moises Perez, owner of the book repair store, estimated his loss would run between $25,000 and $30,000, including customers' Bibles and "scrapbooks that were family treasures."

A white-haired man with a concerned look on his face stood in the burned debris of the book store, waiting for Perez to return. He flashed a big smile when the owner arrived and told him his family Bible had only been singed and could easily be repaired.

Perez said he could not immediately tell from the ruins what had been saved. He said his store would only be closed briefly, adding, "I'm expecting the insurance company to come and clean this up."

Peggy Rowe, part-owner of the Red Lantern, said, "Ours is mainly smoke and water damage," and estimated the loss would be only several thousand dollrs.

Mrs. Rowe's son, David, reportedly was at the Red Lantern until 12:30 a.m. — seven minutes before Robertson reported the blaze. "He said that at 12:30 everything was just fine," Mrs. Spence said.

Albert Ochoa, manager of The Kingfish, said his loss extended beyond smoke damage. "I lost a whole bunch of fish. The smoke...it got into our air system," he said.

A firewall apparently stopped the blaze short of Lewis P. Terrell's law offices, which are at the east end of the complex. Terrell said there was a scent of smoke in his offices, but no serious damage.

Portion Of Stolen Loot Found Following Arrest

About $3,510 in cash, about a third of the loot taken in a Thursday armed robbery, was recovered by police shortly thereafter with the arrest of a 21-year-old man.

The approximately $11,000 heist included a .22-caliber pistol, a postman in the right place at the wrong time and forced disrobing to allow time for an escape, police said.

Det. J.R. Ashmore said the suspect, described as a medium-built black man, walked into ZZ Motors, 1905 Ave. H, earlier Thursday to ask owner Jack Hawkins about possible employment. He returned about 1 p.m., police said, this time brandishing what is believed to be a black .22-caliber pistol.

The man reportedly forced Hawkins and a postman who was at the business to deliver the day's mail into a back room, telling them to remove their trousers. The men complied, police said, and the suspect emptied the pockets of the cash. Det. Capt. Wayne Love said that while the postman lost only about $5, the other man reportedly lost close to $11,000.

The suspect fled on foot, and the victims, after donning their clothing, ran to Hawkins' car to try to find their assailant, Ashmore said. They spotted the man walking across the parking lot of the Grand Motel at 21st Street and Avenue Q, police were told. Assuming the man entered the building, they then called police.

After checking at the motel desk, police arrested the suspect in one of the motel's rooms, also occupied by a black woman in her early 20s, Ashmore said. Police recovered $3,510 from behind a dresser in the room, he said.

The suspect was booked at Lubbock County Jail on suspicion of aggravated robbery, police said.

In a separate incident, an elderly service station attendant at the Shamrock Station, 1401 Parkway Drive, reported that a black man had robbed him before fleeing on foot.

Elbert Callis told police a clean-shaven, spectacled man walked into the station about noon Thursday requesting change for 10 pennies. After the man opened the cash register, Callis said, the bandit grabbed his arms and threw him to the floor, kicking him and stepping on him.

The bandit then grabbed the cash from the register before running from the station into a heavily wooded area, reports show.

Early estimates set the station's loss at $75, but the exact amount remained undetermined late Thursday.

In other activity, the husband of a Lubbock woman reportedly kicked open the door of another man's house to look for his wife, threatening the occupants with a revolver.

A 16-year-old boy told police he was assaulted by two teenagers who might be the same boys who previously hurt him.

Authorities Rule Arson In Fire

By JACK DOUGLAS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Arson has been ruled in the early Thursday fire at a 34th Street shopping center which damaged six businesses, two extensively.

"We've got a minimum of four different fires started and there's got to be a reason for it," said Lubbock Fire Marshal Robert Stokes, who determined that the blaze was intentionally set at the Aqua King of Lubbock, 2237 34th St.

Police Det. Bill Bailey Thursday was investigating the possibility the fires were started to cover up a burglary.

The blaze, reported at 12:37 a.m., spread to Book Binding and Bible Repair Co., 2235 34th St., and heavy smoke damage was reported in four other businesses and two vacant stores in the complex on the south side of 34th Street.

Eric Martin, son of Annette Martin, the owner of the building, said he could not give an estimate on the damage to the structure. However, Stokes, pressed for a rough figure, said, "I think $100,000 would get you in the ball park."

Martin said this morning his mother was out of the city and had not been informed of the blaze.

Thirty-five firemen from three stations were called to the scene after police Cpl. Doyle Robertson, on routine patrol, discovered flames shooting through a broken back window at Aqua King. The blaze was not tapped until 1:48 a.m.

Fire heavily damaged the roof and ceiling of several of the businesses. However, officials at Don's Flowers, Serena's Health Club-Massage, The Kingfish and Red Lantern Used Furniture and Gun Repair reported mainly smoke damage.

No one was injured in the two-alarm blaze.

Jan Spence, owner of Aqua King, estimated $15,000 damage to contents in her store, which was gutted in the fire. "We were fortunate in the fact that we didn't have a full inventory," Mrs. Spence said.

She said that her store, which specializes in water-softening equipment and crime prevention devices, will be closed only temporarily by the fire.

Stokes said at the scene that he had found four separate places in the business where fires had been set. He pointed to a bench in the back of the store, the hallway, the northeast corner of a sales room and a front office area.

Asked what would be of interest to burglars in her store, Mrs. Spence said, "There's nothing."

However, Stokes and Bailey indicated that the broken back window was good evidence the business had been broken into.

Moises Perez, owner of the book repair store, estimated his loss would run between $25,000 and $30,000, including customers' Bibles and "scrapbooks that were family treasures."

A white-haired man with a concerned look on his face stood in the burned debris of the book store, waiting for Perez to return. He flashed a big smile when the owner arrived and told him his family Bible had only been singed and could easily be repaired.

Perez said he could not immediately tell from the ruins what had been saved. He said his store would only be closed briefly, adding, "I'm expecting the insurance company to come and clean this up."

Peggy Rowe, part-owner of the Red Lantern, said, "Ours is mainly smoke and water damage," and estimated the loss would be only several thousand dollrs.

Mrs. Rowe's son, David, reportedly was at the Red Lantern until 12:30 a.m. — seven minutes before Robertson reported the blaze. "He said that at 12:30 everything was just fine," Mrs. Spence said.

Albert Ochoa, manager of The Kingfish, said his loss extended beyond smoke damage. "I lost a whole bunch of fish. The smoke...it got into our air system," he said.

A firewall apparently stopped the blaze short of Lewis P. Terrell's law offices, which are at the east end of the complex. Terrell said there was a scent of smoke in his offices, but no serious damage.

Poles May Resort To Strike Call

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Independent labor leader Lech Walesa on Thursday called for a general sit-in strike throughout Poland if the government cracks down on strikers in the Bielsko-Biala region and disrupts communications among union chapters.

In Jelenia Gora, union officials said the strike committee proclaimed a general warning strike in that city starting Feb. 9 if the government fails to meet previous demands and ensure full pay for strikers. The strikers say they were promised full pay in last August's strike settlement.

The threat of new strikes came after talks between strike leaders and government commissions broke down in both cities.

The Feb. 9 strike deadline coincides with the start of a session of the Communist Party's Central Committee, widely expected to deal with the labor conflict that has badly hurt Poland's shaky economy. The persistent labor trouble and reports of Soviet troops near Poland's border have raised fears in the West that the Soviet Union would intervene.

Polish state radio reported that former Premier Piotr Jaroszewicz, 71, had been stripped of Communist Party membership for "launching an incoherent investment policy exceeding the possibilities of the country," thus increasing Poland's debt.

A commission that looked into Jaroszewicz' 10-year tenure as premier also said he promoted "ill-considered" food price increases in 1976 that led to widespread worker unrest and were later rescinded.

Jaroszewicz was replaced in February 1980 by Edward Babiuch, who was in turn replaced in late August by the current premier, Jozef Pinkowski.

The East German news agency ADN, in a report from Warsaw, charged that the Solidarity leaders were on a "counter-revolutionary course" directed against the "leading role" of the Communist Party.

A spokesman in Gdansk for the independent union Solidarity said that in Suwalki, north of Bialystok, close to the Soviet border, workers staged a one-hour warning strike over "police interference" in a Feb. 3 incident involving regulations about loudspeakers.

The threat of a nationwide general strike was in a message transmitted to all Solidarity locals in Poland.

Walesa remained in Bielsko-Biala, where a strike has crippled more than 120 area enterprises and stalled public transport for 10 days.

At the local strike headquarters in a textile factory, Walesa told workers "I will stay with you until victory," a local Solidarity source reported.

Jailed Iranians Launch Hunger Strike

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Two hundred Iranian students jailed in an army camp launched a hunger strike Thursday, a day before scheduled deportation hearings, to press demands for their release and the expulsion of Iran's chief diplomat in the Philippines, their lawyer said.

The deportation proceedings were set by the immigration commissioner after the students' nine-hour occupation of the Iranian embassy on Tuesday.

According to embassy officials, the students were protesting a report published by a Tehran newspaper alleging that some of them were corrupt and that the group was getting "sub-standard education" here. The students suspect some embassy officials were the source of the report, said Crisanto T. Saruca, the students' lawyer.

Top Operating Efficiency Sought

Sheriff Submits New Requests

By MARY ALICE ROBBINS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Sheriff D.L. "Sonny" Keesee has presented county commissioners with about $189,000 in requests for additional personnel, vehicles and equipment, which he says are needed to operate the sheriff's department at maximum efficiency.

In letters sent to the commissioners court Thursday, Keesee asked for five more deputies to form a fugitive division assigned to transport prisoners and patients committed to state mental institutions.

Keesee also requested authorization for two more secretaries, four additional cars, a 14-passenger van to be used for transporting prisoners, emergency equipment and around $25,000 in radar units for the Department of Public Safety.

News of Keesee's latest request — the third within the past month — prompted one longtime courthouse official to ask, "What happened to his campaign platform to run the sheriff's department on the same budget and with the same number of men?"

However, Keesee said his promise to county voters was to document and justify everything he asked for. And he claimed that adding more deputies would increase the fee money going into county coffers.

According to Keesee, the sheriff's department now has 29 deputies and three men, including himself, in administrative positions.

With the existing staff, Keesee said, deputies frequently are forced to temporarily abandon their other duties in order to transport prisoners or patients. If deputies from the warrant or civil divisions must be used for transportation duties, the county actually loses money, he said.

During January, Keesee said, the seven deputies in the civil division served 1,403 citations, bringing in more than $3,600 in fees for the county treasury. If the deputies had not been called on to transport prisoners, he estimated they would have served at least a third more citations.

The service of warrants also brings in revenue for the county, totaling around $5,600 last month, the sheriff said. "We could triple our warrant service if the deputies were left alone to serve warrants," he said.

When deputies assigned to the fugitive division were not needed for transportation jobs, they could be used in the other divisions, Keesee said.

Despite the justifications provided by Keesee, at least one member of the commissioners court said he plans to take "a long, hard look" at the sheriff's request for additional personnel.

Commissioner Alton Brazell said the county's general fund operations do not leave much room for increases.

"Last year, we ran about as close as you can run," Brazell said, noting that the county only had about an $8,100 increase in its general fund revenues.

Year-end figures indicate the county saw an overall drop in its fines and fees revenue for 1980, Brazell said. And he noted that new tax laws limit the amount of annual increase in ad valorem taxes.

Anytime additional personnel are authorized, there will be a long-range cost, the commissioner said. Those costs must be seriously studied by the commissioners court, he added.

County Auditor Dale Gallimore estimated that adding five deputies and two secretaries would cost the county $97,987 in a year's time.

Brazell said he fears that other department heads soon would hit the commissioners court with requests for more workers if Keesee is granted his staffing increase. However, Brazell said he wouldn't be too inclined to argue with the sheriff's request for more vehicles.

If the sheriff's office could organize combined trips in which four or five prisoners are picked up, the purchase of the van probably would be justified, Brazell said.

Ironically, former Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard asked commissioners last year to purchase a van for the department. That request was denied.

Brazell said that Blanchard did not provide commissioners adequate justification for the van. Blanchard had proposed to buy the vehicle for use in transporting jurors in capital murder cases.

According to Brazell, there are not enough capital murder cases to justify buying a van just to carry around jurors. But the van could help the county cut costs for transporting prisoners, he said.

The sheriff also is asking commissioners to buy four new cars for his department and to allow him to keep the vehicles that normally would be used for trade-ins. This would boost the department's fleet to 20 cars, Keesee said.

Estimated cost for the four new cars is about $32,400. That amount already is budgeted for this year.

Keesee said he also wants commissioners to purchase nine radar units for the DPS, noting that the new units could bring the county additional revenue from traffic fines. The sheriff said at least some of the radar units currently being used by highway patrolmen here originally were purchased by the county.

Commissioners will consider Keesee's request on Monday.

LUBBOCK AREA FOUNDATION GRANT — The Aetna Life and Casualty Foundation presented Thursday night a $17,440 grant to the Lubbock Area Foundation to help the new organization get a firm footing here. 'Start Up' Grant Given Foundation

A grant of $17,440 from the Aetna Life & Casualty Foundation, Hartford, Conn., has been awarded to the Lubbock Area Foundation as "start-up" money for the fledgling organization, established to make resources available for health and social services, cultural development, educational programs and other projects, according to foundation chairman James W. Spears.

The grant from the Aetna Foundation's "Focus" program represents estimated expenses for a year's operation for the Lubbock Area Foundation, which has been offered free office space by Texas Commerce Bank. The foundation program, Spears said, was given recent impetus by the Long Range Planning Committee of the United Way of Lubbock, which recommended establishment of a community foundation as a way to help meet capital needs in the community.

The community foundation, Spears noted, is not limited to United Way agencies and activities. Any tax-exempt organization is eligible for grants from the Foundation when funds are available.

Community foundations develop, receive and administer endowment and other funds from private sources and manage them under community control for charitable purposed focused on local needs. In addition to United Way, other organizations sponsoring the community foundation are: Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, City of Lubbock, Community Planning Council, Junior League, Lubbock County, Lubbock County Bar Association, Lubbock Independent School District and South Plains Trust and Estate Council.

City Woman Charged In Shooting Death

Zada Pearl Fair, also known as Zada Pearl Cooper, was charged with murder this morning for allegedly shooting boyfriend Alan Fair when he refused to let her go out with him and his friends Wednesday night.

The district attorney's office has recommended that Miss Fair's bond be set at $25,000 for the first degree felony. She remained in custody at the Lubbock County Jail.

Fair, 21, was pronounced dead at his 520 E. Loyola St. home by Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack, who ruled the death a homicide and ordered an autopsy performed at St. Mary's Hospital.

Witnesses told police that an argument began between Fair and the 20-year-old woman when he arrived at the home they shared and announced he was going drinking with a friend. Miss Fair reportedly became angry when she was told she could not accompany them.

A witness to the shooting told police that Fair struck the murder suspect just before the shooting began. Police reports indicate the young woman had a red mark which was starting to swell by her left eye when they arrived at the scene.

Fair reportedly struck the woman on the head and slapped her before she pulled a gun on him.

Army Reserve Unit Commander Named

First Lt. Terrance Wasti, a production supervisor with Litton Industries, will assume command of the U.S. Army Reserve's engineering unit in Lubbock on Saturday.

The change of command ceremony is scheduled at the U.S. Army Reserve Center, 2819 W. Fourth St., at 8 a.m.

Officiating at the ceremony will be Lt. Col. Roy L. Wilshire, commander of the Army Reserve 960th Engineering Battalion.

Wasti will be replacing Capt. George W. Rodenberg, who has been commanding the unit for the last three years.

Wasti, a native of Wisconsin, is married and has two children. He has a degree in business administration from the University of Wisconsin.

CENSORED:
FOR WOMEN ONLY!
(Men read other side, please)

You don't buy a man heart shaped candy for Valentine's Day.

Remember his macho image ... he'll never be able to tell the guys at work what you got him! Then, again, if you don't, he'll eat all the nut chewies out of yours ... okay, candy, but not heart shaped ... not pink anyway!
(Russell Stovers Heart Boxed Candies 2.25-42.50)
Well, if you're giving him the pink heart-shaped candy, you've got to give him something macho ...
What? ... no, not a sledgehammer, real funny!
Have you seen those jockey shorts with hearts
all over them? (7.50) ... Can you imagine him showing up in the locker room in those?
What a hoot! ... Mr. Macho! Get 'em.

Wait ... we've got to get serious ... I mean pink candy and dumb shorts are okay ... but he's going to think you don't love him. How about the new knit shirts by Chaps? (Chaps by Ralph Lauren 22.50-23.50) They're in red 'n white stripes and solid red ... real valentiny! Have you ever seen
mmmmm. What? Oh, yes, well we could get some John Weitz casual slacks to go with them (25.00).
They're in red or white too. Now that's taken care of ... we got everything at Hemphills ... now what do you want to do? Wait, before we leave, I want to show you the cutest dress I saw yesterday in juniors...

Top Operating Efficiency Sought

Sheriff Submits New Requests

By MARY ALICE ROBBINS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Sheriff D.L. "Sonny" Keesee has presented county commissioners with about $189,000 in requests for additional personnel, vehicles and equipment, which he says are needed to operate the sheriff's department at maximum efficiency.

In letters sent to the commissioners court Thursday, Keesee asked for five more deputies to form a fugitive division assigned to transport prisoners and patients committed to state mental institutions.

Keesee also requested authorization for two more secretaries, four additional cars, a 14-passenger van to be used for transporting prisoners, emergency equipment and around $25,000 in radar units for the Department of Public Safety.

News of Keesee's latest request — the third within the past month — prompted one longtime courthouse official to ask, "What happened to his campaign platform to run the sheriff's department on the same budget and with the same number of men?"

However, Keesee said his promise to county voters was to document and justify everything he asked for. And he claimed that adding more deputies would increase the fee money going into county coffers.

According to Keesee, the sheriff's department now has 29 deputies and three men, including himself, in administrative positions.

With the existing staff, Keesee said, deputies frequently are forced to temporarily abandon their other duties in order to transport prisoners or patients. If deputies from the warrant or civil divisions must be used for transportation duties, the county actually loses money, he said.

During January, Keesee said, the seven deputies in the civil division served 1,403 citations, bringing in more than $3,600 in fees for the county treasury. If the deputies had not been called on to transport prisoners, he estimated they would have served at least a third more citations.

The service of warrants also brings in revenue for the county, totaling around $5,600 last month, the sheriff said. "We could triple our warrant service if the deputies were left alone to serve warrants," he said.

When deputies assigned to the fugitive division were not needed for transportation jobs, they could be used in the other divisions, Keesee said.

Despite the justifications provided by Keesee, at least one member of the commissioners court said he plans to take "a long, hard look" at the sheriff's request for additional personnel.

Commissioner Alton Brazell said the county's general fund operations do not leave much room for increases.

"Last year, we ran about as close as you can run," Brazell said, noting that the county only had about an $8,100 increase in its general fund revenues.

Year-end figures indicate the county saw an overall drop in its fines and fees revenue for 1980, Brazell said. And he noted that new tax laws limit the amount of annual increase in ad valorem taxes.

Anytime additional personnel are authorized, there will be a long-range cost, the commissioner said. Those costs must be seriously studied by the commissioners court, he added.

County Auditor Dale Gallimore estimated that adding five deputies and two secretaries would cost the county $97,987 in a year's time.

Brazell said he fears that other department heads soon would hit the commissioners court with requests for more workers if Keesee is granted his staffing increase. However, Brazell said he wouldn't be too inclined to argue with the sheriff's request for more vehicles.

If the sheriff's office could organize combined trips in which four or five prisoners are picked up, the purchase of the van probably would be justified, Brazell said.

Ironically, former Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard asked commissioners last year to purchase a van for the department. That request was denied.

Brazell said that Blanchard did not provide commissioners adequate justification for the van. Blanchard had proposed to buy the vehicle for use in transporting jurors in capital murder cases.

According to Brazell, there are not enough capital murder cases to justify buying a van just to carry around jurors. But the van could help the county cut costs for transporting prisoners, he said.

The sheriff also is asking commissioners to buy four new cars for his department and to allow him to keep the vehicles that normally would be used for trade-ins. This would boost the department's fleet to 20 cars, Keesee said.

Estimated cost for the four new cars is about $32,400. That amount already is budgeted for this year.

Keesee said he also wants commissioners to purchase nine radar units for the DPS, noting that the new units could bring the county additional revenue from traffic fines. The sheriff said at least some of the radar units currently being used by highway patrolmen here originally were purchased by the county.

Commissioners will consider Keesee's request on Monday.

LUBBOCK AREA FOUNDATION GRANT — The Aetna Life and Casualty Foundation presented Thursday night a $17,440 grant to the Lubbock Area Foundation to help the new organization get a firm footing here. 'Start Up' Grant Given Foundation

A grant of $17,440 from the Aetna Life & Casualty Foundation, Hartford, Conn., has been awarded to the Lubbock Area Foundation as "start-up" money for the fledgling organization, established to make resources available for health and social services, cultural development, educational programs and other projects, according to foundation chairman James W. Spears.

The grant from the Aetna Foundation's "Focus" program represents estimated expenses for a year's operation for the Lubbock Area Foundation, which has been offered free office space by Texas Commerce Bank. The foundation program, Spears said, was given recent impetus by the Long Range Planning Committee of the United Way of Lubbock, which recommended establishment of a community foundation as a way to help meet capital needs in the community.

The community foundation, Spears noted, is not limited to United Way agencies and activities. Any tax-exempt organization is eligible for grants from the Foundation when funds are available.

Community foundations develop, receive and administer endowment and other funds from private sources and manage them under community control for charitable purposed focused on local needs. In addition to United Way, other organizations sponsoring the community foundation are: Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, City of Lubbock, Community Planning Council, Junior League, Lubbock County, Lubbock County Bar Association, Lubbock Independent School District and South Plains Trust and Estate Council.

AMBASSADOR LEAVES

City Woman Charged In Shooting Death

Zada Pearl Fair, also known as Zada Pearl Cooper, was charged with murder this morning for allegedly shooting boyfriend Alan Fair when he refused to let her go out with him and his friends Wednesday night.

The district attorney's office has recommended that Miss Fair's bond be set at $25,000 for the first degree felony. She remained in custody at the Lubbock County Jail.

Fair, 21, was pronounced dead at his 520 E. Loyola St. home by Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack, who ruled the death a homicide and ordered an autopsy performed at St. Mary's Hospital.

Witnesses told police that an argument began between Fair and the 20-year-old woman when he arrived at the home they shared and announced he was going drinking with a friend. Miss Fair reportedly became angry when she was told she could not accompany them.

A witness to the shooting told police that Fair struck the murder suspect just before the shooting began. Police reports indicate the young woman had a red mark which was starting to swell by her left eye when they arrived at the scene.

Fair reportedly struck the woman on the head and slapped her before she pulled a gun on him.

Army Reserve Unit Commander Named

First Lt. Terrance Wasti, a production supervisor with Litton Industries, will assume command of the U.S. Army Reserve's engineering unit in Lubbock on Saturday.

The change of command ceremony is scheduled at the U.S. Army Reserve Center, 2819 W. Fourth St., at 8 a.m.

Officiating at the ceremony will be Lt. Col. Roy L. Wilshire, commander of the Army Reserve 960th Engineering Battalion.

Wasti will be replacing Capt. George W. Rodenberg, who has been commanding the unit for the last three years.

Wasti, a native of Wisconsin, is married and has two children. He has a degree in business administration from the University of Wisconsin.

ANN LANDERS:

Woman Geologist Upset By Company Rumors

Dear Ann Landers: I am a female geologist for a major oil company and must travel for business.

Recently I flew to Houston with my boss, who is at least 50 (I am 23). We had to finalize a business deal and I was a key person in the transaction. There were some business lunches, dinners and entertainment with the other company's representatives. The deal was successfully completed, and we returned to New Orleans.

During the trip my boss and I remained on a "Mr. and Miss" basis. We exchanged nothing more than a handshake. When I returned from the trip I was commended for a job well done and given a promotion.

Well, the news spread like wildfire. Now rumors are flying that we were together night and day and I am sleeping my way to the top. I'm furious about these lies and don't know how to combat them. It is all so unfair. I have worked like a dog to get where I am. The record is there for anyone who wants to see it. What can I do to protect my reputation and regain my good name? — A Lady With A Career

Dear Lady: She who excuses herself — accuses herself. It's always a mistake to dignify an ugly rumor by issuing a denial. Moreover, it's a waste of time and energy. Rise above the gossip and pretend you don't hear it. Your strongest defense is top-notch job performance and continued ladylike behavior.

Dear Ann: The letter in your column about the death of a child prompts me to write. I applaud that nurse's attitude that it is healthy to grieve and mourn. This issue is often ignored in our "death evasion" society.

Two years ago our 16-year-old son was killed in an accident. At the time, his 11-year-old brother behaved in a peculiar, death-denying manner. He showed no sign of grief—to us or his friends. We sought professional help for him but the boy refused to cooperate with the therapist.

On his 12th birthday he became so self-destructive we considered having him institutionalized. In his peer group it is not "cool" to cry, so he kept, and is still keeping, his grief bottled up. My wife and I are both getting professional help and profiting from it. Please, Ann, keep telling your readers that mourning and grieving cannot be blocked. It must and will come out, one way or another. — Name Withheld

Dear N.W.: You are so right when you say that if grief is suppressed it will erupt in unexpected and destructive ways.

I do hope your young son can be persuaded to accept help. Please try the coach, a favorite teacher, a kindly physician or a family friend. Someone must be able to get through to the boy. For heaven's sake, don't give up on him at age 12!

Dear Ann: A couple of months ago a girl asked, "What do you do with the letters from readers after you read and print them?" You said you destroy them. But when someone asks you to repeat a column, you are able to reprint it word for word, even if it was written years ago. How is this possible? — Curious K In Miami

Dear Curious: Every column that appears in print goes into a scrapbook. When a column rerun is requested by a number of readers, I have no trouble finding it.

There is a big difference between cold and cool. Ann Landers shows you how to play it cool without freezing people out in her booklet, "Teen-Age Sex — Ten Ways to Cool It." Send 50 cents and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

All of you know there is no one in this wide world who has more affection for her children than I do.

I also have affection for Miss Piggy, but I don't want to pick up her wet towels off the bed for the next 30 years.

Parents of grown children tell me their children don't need door keys anymore . they need a revolving door. They're in when they're out of work, out of money, out of socks, out of food and in debt.

They're out when they're in love, in the bucks, in transit, in school and have outgrown their need for milk.

When I launched all my children I rewarded myself with a celery green carpet in the spare bedroom. It was my Olympic Gold Medal, my Oscar, my Emmy, my Reader's Digest Sweepstakes. I had done it and this was my reward.

Three months later, one of my children moved back with, among other things, a set of drums that leaked oil. My celery green carpet looked like a leftover.

When he left we had it cleaned and began again. The next prodigal son brought a dog that had a sofa wish, a car that was not garage trained and leaked oil all over it when it stopped and used towels like they were nose tissue that popped up automatically in a box to be disposed of.

The next one to return let me use my own phone but kept hours like a fireman.

One night my husband and I sat down and tried to figure out what the attraction of living at home is — other than free laundry, free rent, free toiletries, security, love, a permanent address for mail, unlimited storage, financing and loans, convention rooms for private parties and entertaining, and guest privileges. I snapped my fingers. "I've got it! It's the refrigerator that beckons and calls them home. Without it, nothing else would keep them here."

We decided to stop treating the kids as guests and go back to eating the way we wanted to eat. We stocked the refrigerator with cottage cheese, fresh green vegetables, plain yogurt, unsalted butter and blue milk. We bought bran cereal, wheat germ, dietary fruit and did away with the sugar bowl.

As the last one left we heard him mumble, "I'm going anywhere, just so long as they don't refrigerate their bread."

We haven't seen them since.

In this hand from 1966 the bidding at almost every table started with one notrump, a Stayman two-club response, a bid of two spades or two hearts by opener and a raise to game by responder.

The hand illustrates the weakness of mirror distribution. North and South had 27 high-card points, a good four-four trump fit, the club finesse was on, all suits broke nicely, yet perfect defense would defeat either a spade or heart game.

Perfect defense didn't take place very often. Almost all declarers brought home game in whichever major suit they played the hand.

The bidding in the box occurred when the late Kenneth Konstamm of Great Britain held the South cards and elected to bid spades.

West opened the four of spades and dummy's queen held the trick.

Kenneth saw that he would have to take the club finesse some time or other and led the queen from dummy. East covered. Kenneth took his ace and led back to dummy's jack. Then he played a trump to his ace and started to run hearts. West refused to ruff in so after playing all the hearts, Konstamm threw him in with the king of trumps.

West had to lead either a club or diamond. The club would give declarer a ruff and discard, the diamond would give him a sure diamond trick.

'Cognitive Therapy' Treatment Successful Depression Cure

EDITOR'S NOTE: Troubling as it is, there is some good news about depression. Usually it can be cured. In the last of a three-part series, AP Writer Jane See White examines the various therapies.

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

You believe that some event would be just terrible. As a result, when it happens, you feel terrible. That's Dr. Aaron Beck's theory.

It's also an oversimplified explanation of the thinking behind Beck's "Cognitive Therapy," a treatment that works against 80 percent of even severe depressions.

It's a treatment especially well-suited to women — and two of every three depression victims are female.

Biology may predispose some people to depression, but many experts also believe more women are victims because women learn a depressing way of viewing life. Women tend to blame themselves for failure or disappointment, they say — and blaming yourself is depressing.

At the University of Pennsylvania Center for Cognitive Therapy, Beck, a psychiatrist, attacks depression by changing the way depressed patients think about their lives.

Simply put, he teaches his depressed patients — 65 percent of them female — that erroneous thoughts cause bad feelings. For example:

—A woman believes she can't live without her husband. When he dies, she despairs and becomes depressed. Beck helps her see that she lived successfully before she met her husband and that, though his absence means her life will change, life will go on. She feels better.

—Another woman is depressed because her 7-year-old son's teacher has been complaining that the boy steals pencils. She concludes that, because her son is bad, she must be a bad mother.

Beck helps her to see that the boy may be innocent — she hasn't talked with him about the incident — that he has some nice qualities and isn't totally bad and that, in some ways, she's a very good mother. She feels better.

Beck's is one of many varieties of psychotherapy or "talk therapy." To further complicate matters, many — even most — therapists use part of one technique, a dab of another, a sprinkling from a third.

But all these therapies have one thing in common: They use words to attack depression and the events that seemed to trigger it.

In general, therapists try to help patients recognize their feelings and deal with the events that have triggered them: How can you fill the void created in your life by divorce? How can you find a more satisfying job?

Beck, who cites studies to prove it, says that when patients learn to change their depressing, erroneous thoughts, "their improvement is longer-lasting" because they've learned to help themselves and, often, to prevent another depressive slide.

He concedes he holds no patent on depression care, however. When a patient is intensely depressed, he said, "give them the works."

"There's a marvelous menu of treatment for depression," said Maggie Scarf, author of "Unfinished Business," a study of depressed women. "We've made fantastic advances just in the last ten years."

Along with scores of talk therapies, the menu includes nearly a dozen antidepressant drugs, and shock treatments. Therapists say that if one method doesn't bring someone out of a depression, another likely will.

"Depression is an eminently treatable illness," said Robert Hirschfeld, a psychiatrist and chief of the National Institute of Mental Health's Center for the Study of Affective Disorders.

"But it's important to seek treatment from a practitioner who is well-schooled in an assortment of treatment options."

Along with psychotherapy, the other principal options include:

ANTIDEPRESSANT DRUGS — Introduced 25 years ago, antidepressants today help lift depression in three of four cases. In 1979, 3 million Americans took them. Some manic-depressives live normally for years on lithium.

For depression, the most widely used drugs are tricyclics — marketed under such brand names as Elavil and Tofranil. They work best against depressions with common symptoms — weight loss, sadness, loss of sleep.

For atypical depression — people who sleep all the time or gain weight — monoamine oxidase inhibitors are used.

These drugs, sold under such brand names as Parnate and Nardil, can be dangerous: they cause nausea, dizziness, fainting, even strokes when mixed with the wrong foods. People taking MAO Inhibitors aren't allowed such foods as cheese, beer, sour cream and lima beans.

Both varieties of antidepressant can cause side effects like dizziness and weight gain, and elderly patients who have trouble processing the drugs sometimes feel drunk and disoriented.

The drugs are not addictive and produce no "high." But they are powerful medications and should be taken only under a doctor's care.

Also, some take too long. One in 200 depressions ends in suicide. Scientists are beginning to find drugs that work faster.

In addition to helping people, antidepressants offer leads into the chemistry of depression.

Researchers have found that tricyclics raise the levels of two chemical messengers in the brain, called neurotransmitters, while MAO inhibitors slow the working of an enzyme involved in breaking down these neurotransmitters.

"We don't know the mechanism of the drugs," said Arnold Friedhoff, professor of psychiatry at the New York University Medical School. "If we did, we might also know the mechanism of depression.

SHOCK THERAPY — For the approximately 25 percent of severely depressed people not helped by psychotherapy or drugs, electroconvulsive therapy is "a miracle drug, like penicillin," said Beck.

Some 80 percent of the patients who receive this treatment, which electrically triggers brain seizures, respond favorably. Scientists don't know why the seizures work, but one theory is that ECT may "restart" sluggish brain cells that play a role in mood.

In ECT, a pulse of electricity — as little as 4 watts — lasting a fraction of a second is passed through the head to provoke the seizure. Normally, patients receive six to 12 treatments over two to four weeks.

ECT has changed substantially in its 40-year history, but it still evokes images of horror — what psychiatrists call "the Eagleton effect." Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri withdrew as the 1972 Democratic vice presidential nominee after it was disclosed that he'd had electroconvulsive therapy.

"If you tell people at work that you were in the hospital feeling depressed, they're not shocked," said New York University psychiatrist Robert Canro. "If you tell them you had ECT, they're shocked."

In the early days, doctors didn't know that brain seizure — not convulsion — was responsible for improving a patient's mood. Today, muscle relaxants are used to prevent convulsions and the danger of broken bones.

Also better controlled now are the level of electricity and frequency of treatment, reducing side effects like memory loss.

Said Beck: "I told my wife years ago that if I ever get depressed ... give me ECT."

EARRING LAPELS

Use post-style pierced earrings as lapel or collar pins, especially if an earring back is lost. A cluster of pins, strategically placed, is a very creative and attractive accessory.

HINTS FROM HELOISE:

Monthly Surprise Brightens Day

DEAR HELOISE:

With Christmas just a memory, and all the exchanges and refunds made, we begin to wonder what we'll buy our loved ones for the other special occasions throughout the year.

Children are fairly easy to buy for — they leave plenty of clues around — but when it comes to our elderly parents and grandparents, they seem to already have most of the "necessities of life" after 30 or so years of housekeeping.

A few years back at Christmas time, I came up with an idea that would work well for any gift-giving occasion. It made an appropriate gift for my elderly mother who lives alone — one she was able to appreciate and enjoy the whole year through.

My particular gift was a certificate for a year's subscription to the "Surprise of the Month Club."

I wrote up my own fun rules and regulations for a member to be able to participate in this club, two of which were: She must open the gift herself and the membership was non-transferable.

The certificate was signed by me, and stated that around the 10th of each month she would receive a package in the mail containing a "surprise" just for her. Sometimes the package contained a book I thought she would enjoy or a kitchen gadget, a new dress, scarf, jigsaw puzzle, or anything that seemed different or amusing.

Each year she receives a renewal certificate.

The gifts can be only small, dollar items if that's all your budget will allow, but it's the fun the recipient gets when a package arrives each month that's the real value of the gift.

Sometimes the mailman even waits while Mom opens her package. — Barbara Ford

What a sweet way to brighten someone's day. Can't you just see the smiles around the 10th of the month (especially after bill paying time)! Thanks for sharing your love. — Heloise

SOAP SAVER

DEAR HELOISE:

When my children were tots and managed to drop the soap bar into the water — there to let it melt — I would cut the bar in half. Now that they've grown, it still seems a thrifty way to make that disappearing bar last a little longer. — Mrs. David Lippman

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

DEAR HELOISE:

Our 8-year-old granddaughter, who loves to come and help me wash dishes and do other kitchen duties, said yesterday: "Never fear — nylon net is always here!" — Mrs. George Q.

P.S. I love your column and have learned so much from it. I DO use nylon net all the time for many things and, of course, she uses it and loves it too!

And I love both of you! — Heloise

BATHTUB BLUES

DEAR HELOISE:

Cleaning the bathtub is one of my least favorite chores, but I make it a little easier on the old back by using a child's mop.

I spray on my cleaner, then swish around the wet mop. A quick rinse leaves the old tub sparkling.

It's so much easier for us older citizens and, believe it or not, children will even use it — boys too! — Maye Camp

CRAFTY IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:

Clip ideas for sewing, knitting, and various crafts from different magazines and newspapers, then glue them over the advertisements in your favorite instruction books. — Dixie Haase

Before the New Year grows old, send Heloise your favorite household hint by writing her care of 235 E. 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017. She can't answer your letter personally but she will use the best ideas received in her column.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

Harried Mother Able To Bypass Chickenpox

By PAUL DONOHUE, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I have long enjoyed both your medical expertise and your lucid, snappy style, but I must take issue with you on the following statement from a recent column: "If an adult who has never had chickenpox is exposed to them, he comes down with chickenpox."

When my three children were 4 years, 2 years and 7 months they all came down with ghastly cases of chickenpox within a few weeks of each other. In addition to all that implies for a young harried mother, I had the additional pleasure of waiting for it to hit me too, since I'd never had it. But you guessed it — I never did get it — then or ever.

And before you tell me that I must have had chickenpox in childhood and merely have forgotten the episode, let me add at I made it a point to check with my parents, both of whom agreed that I never did have it. Am I a rare exception, or did you goof? — L.C.

I could have been clearer. Exposure to chickenpox does not mean you will automatically develop the illness. But it is fairly contagious, and about eight of every 10 people who have not had the illness get it when exposed. I would be willing to bet that you did have a mild case as a child. If you never had it and were exposed three separate times it's pretty unlikely that you could have escaped coming down with it. I have been known to goof, but I'd be willing to stake my diploma in infectious diseases on this matter.

If you did not come down with chickenpox during the episodes you mention, you would, indeed, be a rare individual. But, as I said, I should have mentioned such a rare possibility, however unlikely.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I would like your opinion of high colonics (cleansing enemas), the newest rage among a few of my friends. One friend claims they make her feel everything from healthier to more alert. — J.M.K.

You asked for my opinon, right? Just mine, no one else's. I think non-prescribed high, medium or low colonics are waste of time and money. There are no toxic products accumulating in the colon. Too frequent use of any enema is irritating. I certainly wouldn't base health care (mental or physical) on this. I would expect to find some folks who would disagree with my opinion, but for what it's worth, there it is

Dear Dr. Donohue: I am 80 years old, and what I want to know is whether there is such a thing as arthritis in the chest. I have pains in my chest and my left arm. And I am told this is arthritis. Is this right? — H.E.S

Arthritis can occur anywhere two bones meet each other to form a joint. In the chest, the ribs connect to the breastbone and an arthritis-like condition can develop there. If the "they" who are telling you that this is the cause of your chest pain are qualified medical people, and if other causes of pain, such as angina, can be excluded, then the arthritis idea is reasonable. If not, then you should be examined, because arm pain, as you describe yours, can stem from angina (heart circulation deficiency). That is easily diagnosed and treated.

Dear Dr. Donohue: Two questions. When you get a flu shot, is the protection immediate or does it take a few days to become effective? Also, is this period, if there is any, different for very old people as opposed to younger ones? — Mrs. R.R.

Protection begins in two weeks and reaches a peak in four weeks. An older person might be a little slower in reacting, but would be sufficiently protected in one month.

Dear Dr. Donohue: Will a stretch bra on an 11-year-old girl who is just starting to bud at the nipples cause any harm? — J.G.

I can't imagine that the bra would serve any useful function, but I don't believe it could cause any harm. Is this important to the girl?

Dear Dr. Donohue: My doctor told me I have mastitis. Will you tell me anything you have to report on this subject? I am one nervous person and fear it is cancerous. — Mrs. M.J.I.

Briefly, mastitis is an inflammation of the breast, most often from the staph germ. It is more common in nursing mothers. Mastitis is not cancer, so stop worrying. It responds to antibiotics.

Is angina pectoris dangerous? Is there a cure? If you would like to learn more about this heart condition, write to Dr. Donohue, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611, for a copy of his booklet, "How to Handle Angina Pectoris." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 50 cents.

Dr. Donohue welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to e tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

American Facing Epidemic Of Painful Genital Herpes

NEW YORK (Special) — We're facing a herpes epidemic, according to an article in the February issue of Glamour Magazine. The virus most commonly known for the cold sores or fever blisters it causes plagues 95 million Americans each year. Genital herpes, a variation of the disease affecting the genitals, has, according to one expert's estimate, affected 53 million Americans.

There are more than seventy types of herpes and most of them pose no threat. But genital herpes, considered a form of venereal disease, is contagious and painful. If not completely treated when diagnosed, it may seem to disappear but in fact will retreat to the nerve tissue, remaining there months or years before returning.

Other harmful strains are believed to cause chicken pox, shingles, mononucleosis and in some cases infectious blindness. Herpes labialis, or herpes of the mouth, is a painful, recurring blister-like sore on lips or inside the mouth and although very contagious, sores usually heal within a week or so.

The menace of the herpes virus only now is being recognized and fortunately, there is hope. Researchers are studying the way it affects the body while others are experimenting with remedies to soothe the pain and prevent herpes from striking again and again. Some of the most promising treatments include: interferon, a substance made from your body's cells when under attack; Acyclovir, a potent drug also known as Zovirax; Lysine, which counteracts another amino acid present in food that seems to encourage herpes; 2-deoxy-D-glucose, an experimental drug; ice, applied to the sore within twenty-four hours after the first tingling; vitamin C; and stress reduction.

A nationwide program called HELP (Herpetics Engaged in Living Productively) helps victims of genital herpes deal with the physical and emotional problems that the virus brings with it. Since it's also suspected that women with genital herpes are more prone to cervical cancer and that pregnant women with the disease are more likely to give birth to deformed or brain-damaged children, a Perinatal Herpes Simplex Program was recently established at Stanford University Medical Center in Palo Alto, California, to minimize the danger and the chance of death to infants born to women with the disease.

CBS, 'Dallas', Finish Ahead In Prime-Time Ratings Race

NEW YORK (AP) — "Dallas" finished first in the prime-time ratings race for the 10th time in 13 weeks, helping CBS to its eighth consecutive first-place finish, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed.

NBC, meanwhile, took advantage of a last-minute schedule change by ABC, and finished No. 2 for the fourth time in five weeks. NBC spent all of November and December in last place.

CBS' No. 1 finish for the week ending Feb. 1 was accomplished with only four of the week's 10 highest-rated shows. NBC had five.

NBC's big score came on Wednesday night, when ABC pre-empted its entire schedule for a three-hour news special, "America Held Hostage: The Secret Negotiations." The program had been broadcast the week before, but late at night.

All four NBC shows broadcast that night finished in the week's Top 10: "Diff'rent Strokes" in third place, "Facts of Life" fourth, "Quincy, M.E." ninth and "Real People" 10th.

CBS, however, compiled a rating for the week of 21, with NBC at 19.3 and ABC 17.5. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute during the week, 21 percent of the nation's TV-equipped homes were tuned to CBS.

"Dallas" began it's remarkable run in November, and has shown no signs of fading. The program's rating in the most recent survey was 34.8. Nielsen says that means of all the homes in the country with television, 34.8 percent saw at least part of the program.

NBC, which began its programming for 1980-81 on Sept. 15, has been No. 2 in the ratings each week but one since Dec. 29, when three series prominent in the previous season — "Lobo," "B.J. and the Bear" and "Buck Rogers in the 25th Century" returned to the lineup. In addition, NBC added several new series at that time.

By the NBC standard — Sept. 15 to the present — CBS is No. 1 in the ratings, with NBC second and ABC third. CBS and ABC maintain the season — delayed by the actors' strike — started Oct. 27, and by that measure, the ranking is CBS-ABC-NBC.

Of the season's new series, only one, CBS' "Magnum, P.I.," was in the Top 20 for the week — No. 16.

"NBC Magazine with David Brinkley" was the week's lowest-rated show, in 67th place, preceded by "CBS Reports: The Toyota Invasion," 66th, "Those Amazing Animals" on ABC 65th, "The Secret Negotiations" on ABC 64th and "Nero Wolfe" on NBC 63rd.

Here are the week's Top 10 programs:

"Dallas," with a rating of 34.8 representing 27.1 million homes, and "60 Minutes," 30.7 or 23.9 million, both CBS; "Diff'rent Strokes," 29.4 or 22.9 million, and "Facts of Life," 27.4 or 21.3 million, both NBC; "Dukes of Hazzard," 26.5 or 20.6 million, CBS; "Little House on the Prairie," 25.5 or 19.8 million, NBC; "M*A*S*H," 25.3 or 19.7 million, CBS; "Love Boat," 24.8 or 19.3 million, ABC, and "Quincy, M.E.," 24.7 or 19.2 million, and "Real People," 24.6 or 19.1 million, both NBC.

The next 11 shows:

"Alice," "The Jeffersons," Movie-"The Bunker," "Archie Bunker's Place," "One Day at a Time" and "Magnum, P.I.," all CBS; "CHiPs," NBC; "Enos" and "Trapper John, M.D.," both CBS, and "House Calls," CBS, and "Happy Days," ABC, tie.

Arrest Of Library Patron Sparks Return Of Books

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The arrest of a woman accused of failing to return 13 library books has pricked the consciences of hundreds of library patrons, the director of the Memphis and Shelby County Library system said Thursday.

"I can't say how many books have been returned, but we know a great many have been brought back since all this came about," said Bob Croneberger.

Lily Prymus, 31, who spent five hours in jail after she was arrested in October, was due in City Court on Thursday afternoon to answer charges that she failed to return the 13 books.

Mrs. Prymus, who maintains that she returned the books, was jailed after she failed to appear in court to answer a summons. Her attorney said Mrs. Prymus thought the matter had been settled.

Mrs. Prymus is the first library patron to be arrested under a 1976 ordinance banning the damaging or destruction of library books.

Croneberger said about 10 percent of the 2.5 million books circulated by the library each year fail to come back on time.

"And of those that don't come back, nine-tenths — about 25,000 — come back after we send out notices," he said.

Sex Club Owners Facing Charges Of Tax Evasion

NEW YORK (AP) — Three operators of the Plato's Retreat were indicted Thursday on federal charges of evading taxes on more than $2.3 million allegedly skimmed from receipts since the sex club opened in 1977.

Listed as defendants were Larry Levenson, 44, owner of record, and two previously undisclosed owners, Frank Pernice, 49, and Harry Gordon, 50.

Also indicted was Alan Feinberg, 49, an accountant who acted as tax preparer and allegedly aided and abetted the evasion. Gordon is a Bronx resident. The others live in Brooklyn.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Peter D. Sudler said federal agents seized documents and records last September after obtaining warrants to search the club and the homes of Gordon and Feinberg.

"The business of Plato's Retreat was the ownership and operation of a swinger's sex club which catered to couples seeking various sexual experiences in group situations," the indictment said.

The club was established at the Hotel Ansonia on West 74th Street in September 1977, but had moved to another location on 34th Street when the search warrants were executed by agents of an Organized Crime Strike Force unit.

The four men were charged with conspiracy and evasion of corporate taxes, including failure to report income of $475,329 for fiscal 1978 and failing to pay $214,579 in tax.

Chicagoans To Learn Etiquette From Adviser

CHICAGO (AP) — There will be no more bib-and-tucker or eating off a knife at Mayor Jane Byrne's parties. She has hired an etiquette aide, at $35,000 a year, to help build her image of Chicago as an "international city."

One of the first assignments of 36-year-old Noreen McBride, who begins work Monday, will be to arrange a formal dinner in honor of Jehan Sadat, wife of the president of Egypt, when she visits Chicago on March 29.

Alderman Martin Oberman, outspoken critic of the mayor, said Mrs. McBride "may be the most graceful lady in the world, but the position is unnecessary."

"It's a complete waste of money," he said

But Mrs. Byrne's press secretary, Ray McCarthy, said "it is not padding the payroll.

"We needed someone with her background," McCarthy added. "We're becoming an international city. We're becoming more involved in international events where protocol is required."

Mrs. Byrne hit upon the "international city" theme in an effort to remove some of the crime syndicate stain from Chicago's reputation that has lingered since the Al Capone days.

The Pope visited Chicago in 1979; Mrs. Byrne and entourage visited Rome last summer where she was a delegate to the International Conference on Population. She has been invited to Japan this summer with an Illinois trade delegation. And she has launched plans for a 1982 International Music Festival drawing "the world's most prominent symphonies."

Mrs. Byrne also was behind the Peoples Republic of China Trade Fair at Navy Pier last fall. However, her attempt to bring some of the world's greatest race drivers to Chicago for an International Grand Prix over the Fourth of July weekend this year fell through. The lakefront course would have blocked off traffic at the height of the tourist season around such famous landmarks as the Field Museum of Natural History, the Adler Planetarium and the Shedd Aquarium.

Mrs. McBride, a widow who has lived in Chicago since 1967, said she has operated the North Shore Etiquette School out of her home for about six years and also has served as a consultant to private industry. She holds a bachelor's degree in English from John Carroll University in Cleveland, her native city.

In naming her an administrative assistant Wednesday, the mayor said Mrs. McBride "has lectured and instructed students in protocol, formal invitations and official introductions."

"Working with the Office of Special Events and with members of my staff, Mrs. McBride will help coordinate the proper etiquette, dress requirements and seating arrangements at formal city ceremonies and dinners," said the mayor.

Mrs. McBride said that "etiquette was just an interest" and the story of how she was selected by the mayor to counsel on social amenities "would take a whole afternoon to tell ... I think she (Byrne) did a lot of interviewing."

The mayor has two other administrative aides, who earn $30,000 each, also with responsibilities in hosting visiting foreign dignitaries.

Libby Lamb, a former classmate of Kathy Byrne, the mayor's daughter, arranges lunches and dinners for such dignitaires. Rosalie Clark, the wife of Illinois Supreme Court Justice William Clark, was named last year to head the mayor's "international desk," with substantially the same duties.

The mayor's chief of special events at a $45,000 salary is Karen Conner. Asked why she wasn't handling such duties, she said: "I don't do luncheons and dinners. I only do the big events."

Miss Conner, wife of Paul McGrath, one of the mayor's paid political advisers, coordinates such events at Chicago-Fest and A Taste of Chicago, which are staged on a contract basis by an outside promotional and entertainment firm.

Venezuela declared its independence from Spain in 1811.

Ill Pianist Said To Be Overworked

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Soviet concert pianist Emil Gilels, who became ill Monday after a recital here, is recovering steadily in a hospital, a spokeswoman for his agents said Thursday.

"Mr. Gilels was overworked, but his doctors say there is nothing seriously wrong," she said. He is expected to remain in the Amsterdam hospital for rest and observation for another week.

Gilels, born in Odessa in 1916 and now based in Moscow, received a standing ovation for his performance Monday night and came back for one encore before retiring to his dressing room where he was taken ill.

Producer Realizes Dream With 'East Of Eden'

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Producer Barney Rosenzweig says "East of Eden" is the movie he's longed to make since he read John Steinbeck's novel as a teenager.

"It was probably the first important piece of American literature I read," Rosenzweig said. "I ran to the movie when it came out in 1955 and I hated what they did. It's a classic story of sibling rivalry, but they changed it into a period 'Rebel Without a Cause.' What horrified me even more was that this movie would stand forever as 'East of Eden.'

"It d dn't occur to me at 15 that there was such a thing as a remake — and a miniseries was unheard of then."

Rosenzweig, now in his early 40s, knows all about remakes and miniseries. His three-part, eight-hour production of Steinbeck's classic will be broadcast by ABC Sunday, Monday and Wednesday nights.

It may only be a coincidence, but Sunday is the 50th anniversary of the birth of James Dean, who played Cal Trask in the 1955 movie. Dean was born Feb. 8, 1931.

"East of Eden" originally was conceived by Steinbeck as a celebration of California's Salinas Valley. He set out to write the story of his mother's family, and the character played by Lloyd Bridges in the ABC miniseries is based on his maternal grandfather. "But gradually the story of the Trasks took over," said Rosenzweig.

Unlike the movie, which covered only a tiny portion of the book, the ABC production explores the entire breadth of the epic drama of the Trask family and the beautiful woman who haunted their lives for two generations.

The story opens in Connecticut just after the Civil War and follows the lives of the Trask family across several generations to California. It centers on Adam (played by Timothy Bottoms) and Charles (Bruce Boxleitner) Trask, the sons of a hard-driven Civil War veteran (Warren Oates), and Cathy Ames (Jane Seymour), a conniving temptress who seduces both brothers and leaves her evil mark on them and her two sons, Cal (Sam Bottoms) and Aron (Hart Bochner).

The miniseries also stars Howard Duff, Anne Baxter, Richard Masur, Soon-Teck Oh and Karen Allen.

Rosenzweig, a bearded man with a walrus moustache, said he learned in 1970 that the film rights to "East of Eden" had reverted back to the Steinbeck estate.

"It took me a long time to get it made," he said. "As I worked on it, I found that other people were also pitching 'East of Eden' to the networks. But it was always a remake of the James Dean movie. I wanted to do the whole book. It never occurred to me to remake the movie. This is an entirely new film.

"The story is basically that of Cain and Abel. I had Lloyd Bridges read the entire story from the Bible. It sets up that sibling rivalry, and then it carries over into the next generation in a different way."

Rosenzweig said after he acquired the rights, he took the project to NBC first. "I thought I had some pull there because I'd produced the 'Daniel Boone' series for them, which had been a big hit. I pitched it to the executive in charge of movies and he said, 'We don't want to remake a classic.' I said it wasn't a remake, but he wouldn't buy it.

"Two or three years went by and I went back to NBC. They'd just announced 'From Here to Eternity.' That was an example of a miniseries from the whole book after a movie had taken only part of it. But I was too late. They didn't want to do another. So I took it to ABC and they accepted it."

The series was shot entirely on location, with Savannah, Ga., standing in for Connecticut and Salinas as itself. Rosenzweig said: "We had to time it to be in Salinas when it was green. I wanted to contrast that lush look with the grey New England look.

"It was tougher to make than it should have been. It cost $11.2 million, which is more than it should have. The business has changed. It didn't help either that the cost of silver quadrupled, sending the cost of film stock sky high."

IF A NATURAL DISASTER TOMORROW HOW LONG WOULD YOUR FOOD SUPPLY LAST?

Experts recommend that you store a year's supply of food for everyone in your family. But frozen or canned food must be consumed within a certain time or deterioration sets in.

Well, we have the answer: Mountain House freeze dried food.

It stores for many years. Not only that, but you'll love the taste, the great variety, and the ease of preparation.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
To any Sheriff or any Constable within the State of Texas, GREETING:
You are hereby commanded to cause to be published once, the publication to be at least ten (10) days before the return day thereof, in a newspaper printed in Lubbock County, Texas, the accompanying citation, of which the herein below following is a true copy.
CITATION BY PUBLICATION
THE STATE OF TEXAS
TO: The Unknown Heirs of Mary Alice Alvarado, Deceased.
YOU ARE HEREBY COMMANDED to appear before the Honorable County Court of Dawson County at the Courthouse thereof, in Lamesa, Texas, by filing a written answer at or before 10 o'clock A.M. on the 20th day of February, A.D., 1981, a date set as appearance day by the County Court of Dawson County, Texas in Order dated February 3rd, 1981, said date being more than ten (10) days after the date of publication of this citation, to the Application of Marguarita Alvarado, filed in said Court, on the 3rd day of February, A.D., 1981, in this cause numbered 2071 on the docket of said Court and styled In Re: Estate of Mary Alice Alvarado, deceased.
A brief statement of the nature of this suit is as follows. A suit to declare Marguarita Alvarado to be the sole heir of Mary Alice Alvarado, deceased, and to declare that no administration of her estate is necessary. Mary Alice Alvarado owned personal property which is located in Dawson County, Texas, and this is a suit to have Marguarita Alvarado declared the sole owner of the said personal property, as is more fully shown by Applicant's Application on file in this suit.
The officer executing this writ shall promptly serve the same according to requirements of law, and the mandates hereof, and make due return as the law directs.
If this citation is not served within ninety (90) days after the date of its issuance, it shall be returned unserved.
Issued and given under my hand and seal of said Court at Lamesa, Dawson County, Texas, this the 3rd day of February, A.D., 1981.
Attest: s. Billie Bingham, Clerk, County Court of Dawson County, Texas

41 People Become American Citizens

By MARY ALICE ROBBINS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Amid flag waving and patriotic speeches, 41 persons began new lives Thursday as American citizens.

The 41 repeated their oaths of citizenship Thursday during the annual naturalization ceremony for the Lubbock area staged in the U.S. District Court.

And although they came from widely diverse racial and social backgrounds and from nations around the world, the naturalized Americans expressed a common desire — to live in freedom.

"I came because it is a free country," observed Dr. Somkid Sridaromont, who first came to the United States from his native Thailand 12 years ago.

"I think we have more freedom in the country, especially the freedom to worship as we want to," noted Elsie Ivy Cox, a native of England who came to America as a war bride in 1946.

In a welcoming address, local attorney Kennett Hobbs summed up the theme of freedom when he told the group, "The essential right you're acquiring is the right to become who you want and who you need to be."

The Bill of Rights "is alive and well" in America, Hobbs said. He noted that Americans have the right to voice their beliefs and opinions — even though those opinions are not always popular — without fear of reprisals from their government.

However, Hobbs reminded the naturalized citizens that their new rights also brought them some new responsibilities. Among those responsibilities, he said, are paying taxes, voting and providing some form of service to their adopted country.

"You have the obligation to give back to society a portion of what has been bestowed on you," Hobbs said.

Following Hobbs' speech, Immigration and Naturalization Service hearing examiner Anne Finkelstein presented the 41 candidates for citizenship to presiding Judge Halbert O. Woodward. Then each candidate raised his right hand to repeat his oath of allegiance to the United States.

To become citizens, the 41 were required to study the English language and the history and government of this country. Before qualifying for participation in today's ceremony, they also had to pass an oral examination.

For some, the wait to become Americans had lasted anywhere from two to three decades.

"It's something I've wanted for a long time," noted Leonard Hall, who came to Lubbock 16 years ago from Panama. Hall moved here to attend Lubbock Christian College and received a B.A. degree in human relations.

America has always impressed him, Hall said. "I know I have rights that are protected. I can vote and I can change things," he said.

Sridaromont, a member of the Texas Tech University medical school faculty, has been in the U.S. for the past 12 years. He explained that most of his medical training was received in this country.

Living in the U.S. has provided him greater opportunities in his medical career, Sridaromont said.

"It's nice to be an American," observed Josef Vylupek, a native of Czechoslovakia. He and his wife, Irene, said they have lived in America the past six years.

"We have a home now — it's very important," Mrs. Vylupek said.

Mrs. Cox, whose wait to become an American lasted more than 30 years, explained that much of that time has been spent in raising her own children and helping neighbors with theirs.

The youngest new citizen appeared to be the least concerned about the naturalization ceremony, however. Monica Lisa Pena, 2-year-old adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mario Pena, napped throughout the momentous occasion.

According to Mrs. Pena, Monica was only 10 months old when she came here Sept. 17, 1979, from an orphanage in Seoul, Korea.

Although she slept through the speeches and the oath of allegiance, Monica did enjoy waving one of the American flags that was presented to the new citizens following the ceremony.

Thursday's program was sponsored by the Nancy Anderson Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Course To Examine Student Problems

A 10-week course examining the disciplinary and motivational problems of students will be offered by Texas Tech University's Department of Continuing Education this spring.

The program, "Systematic Training for Effective Teaching" (STET), is based on a practical theory of human behavior and involves determining special student needs, including parents in their children's education and using proper discipline.

Dr. Gene E. Rooze, Texas Tech professor of education, will teach the class 7-9:30 p.m. Wednesdays, Feb. 18 to April 29, in the Testing Room of the Continuing Education Building X-15, south of the Municipal Auditorium parking lot.

STET is designed primarily for teachers but is open to anyone. For academic credit the registration fee is $60 and for Continuing Education credit the fee is $50.

Jog-A-Thon Raises Money For School

More than 200 students, parents and friends of St. John Neumann School participated in a fund-raising jog-a-thon at the Lubbock Christian College field house Thursday.

Goal of the event, which took place between 10 a.m. and 11 a.m., was to raise $15,000 to purchase playground equipment and educational materials for the school, located at 5838 22nd St.

Participants in the jog-a-thon, part of Catholic Schools Week activities, all secured sponsors who agreed to pay a fee for each lap, according to Geneva Nolte, secretary at the school.

The school, which has classes from pre-kindergarten through eighth grade, is now accepting registrations for the 1981-82 school year.

Soviet Media Trumpets Blast Against America

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet news media have launched a massive counterattack on U.S. foreign and domestic policies following charges from the Reagan administration that the Kremlin promotes international terrorism, is immoral and will commit any crime to achieve its goals.

Dozens of past Soviet accusations of American involvement in international crimes and civil rights violations have been replayed in recent days by state-run press and broadcast outlets.

They have ranged from claims that a new wave of McCarthyism is about to descend on America's own "dissidents," to assertions that the United States is smothering national liberation movements in the Third World.

Invective being hurled at Washington is at least as strong as the worst charges made against the former Carter administration and is reminiscent of the Cold War period of poor relations between the two superpowers in the 1950s.

The Central Intelligence Agency has been singled out in Soviet reports as a fountainhead of conspiracy against politicians and governments that allegedly displease Washington.

Former Italian Premier Aldo Moro, Congolese leader Patrice Lumumba, Chilean President Salvador Allende, civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. and President John F. Kennedy were all described in the latest Soviet reports as victims of U.S. conspiracies.

Moro was kidnapped and killed by the Italian Red Brigades terrorist group in 1978; Lumumba was kidnapped and killed by Katanga tribesman in 1961 and Allende, an avowed Marxist, was killed during a right-wing coup in 1973. King was assassinated in 1968; Kennedy, in 1963.

A senior Soviet commentator claimed that Washington's new march against international terrorism "opens the way to introduction of a new, and maybe even more sinister, edition of McCarthyism.

"Under the sign of it, everything is possible — to strangle dissidents and to liquidate them mercilessly as was done to the head of the Negro organization Black Panthers," Vitaly Kobysh, a commentator of the Communist party Central Committee, wrote in Wednesday's Literary Gazette.

"McCarthyism" refers to the use of indiscriminate, inquisitorial practices, ostensibly to suppress communism, that are attributed to Joseph McCarthy, a senator from Wisconsin in the 1950s.

Ku Klux Klan racial violence, granting of U.S. citizenship to alleged Nazi war criminals and U.S. "harboring" of two Lithuanians accused of killing a stewardess in the 1970 hijacking of a Soviet airliner to Turkey have been cited by the Soviet press as proof that the United States promotes terrorism.

A favorite theme is the granting of political asylum to a 13-year-old Ukrainian immigrant boy in Chicago, Vladimir Polovchak, whose parents want to return to the Soviet Union.

U.S. authorities say the youth insists on staying in America, but Soviet press accounts claim he is being held illegally.

On the international scene, Soviet press accounts are blaming the CIA and other U.S. "special services" for instigating or directly carrying out widescale terrorism and political upheaval in the 1960s and 1970s.

"The CIA is directly involved in forming units of hired murderers that are sent from the United States to the African continent," the Soviet news agency Tass claimed Thursday, citing guerrilla actions against the pro-Moscow government of Angola.

"The encouragement of terrorism and political violence has become part of Washington's course with regard to the progressive regimes of the African continent," Tass declared.

Similar Soviet accusations this week have been leveled at U.S. support of "reactionary" regimes in El Salvador, Nicaragua, Chile and various other Asian and African countries.

At the same time, the Soviet press has described "national liberation movements" as the natural ally of Leninist communism and praised Moscow's support for them.

The Soviet press claims these "antifascist" groups have nothing in common with terrorists.

The Soviet Communist party newspaper Pravda, attacking President Reagan's censure of Soviet morality, charged Thursday that the White House was engaging in medieval debates and setting moral standards to suit its own ends.

Reagan was quoted in a New York Times interview as saying that because Soviet communists don't believe in god or an afterlife, they are able to justify using any means to establish a world socialist order.

Last week, Reagan charged that Soviet leaders were prepared to lie and cheat and commit any crime to achieve their goals.

His comments followed remarks by Secretary of State Alexander Haig that the Soviet Union promoted international terrorism.

"The prospects of improving international relations are being clouded by philosophical discussions from the Middle Ages," Pravda said.

The newspaper claimed that in the American view of the world, "everything that is good for the United States should be good for the world. In Washington they consider that this morality is a high one which justifies any action in advance."

Pravda alleged that American leaders used a philosophy of "world leadership" to justify "dropping atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki" and "laying a carpet of napalm bombs on Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos."

Pravda Hits Reagan In 'Clinical' Terms

MOSCOW (UPI) — The official Communist Party newspaper Pravda offered its readers something of a psychological profile of President Reagan Thursday, asserting he suffered from a "childhood disease" marked by a need for power and a denial of reality.

The Pravda article was the latest in a now daily diatribe against Reagan, dating back to his first news conference when he asserted the Russians will lie, cheat and steal to achieve their aims and have no morality.

At the same time Pravda was couching its latest criticism of Reagan in clinical terms, another Soviet newspaper suggested it was time to stop the war of words and get on with a "constructive diologue" with the United States.

The newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya said there are "really important matters" to be discussed and the Soviet Union stood ready as "a partner prepared for a constructive dialogue."

"Washington should seriously ponder the consequences of continuing the hostile, antiSoviet campaign it has begun," the newspaper said.

But if Sovietskaya Rossiya offered Washington a carrot, Pravda hit back with a stick.

"On what stars has R. Ragan gazed?" asked Pravda commentator . Prokofiev, rejecting Reagan's assertion the Soviet Union is bent on world domination.

Prokofiev said Reagan shared a personality trait of "nearly each new president of the U.S.A."

"(He) gets sick with the childhood diseases of power. One of its symptoms is the denial of objective reality," Prokofiev wrote.

Pravda accused Reagan of presuming that "what is good for the United States is good for all."

In a separate article, Pravda also took aim at Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's recommendation that Reagan reverse former President Carter's decision not to deploy the neutron bomb in Western Europe.

Pravda said the Kremlin would regard the deployment of the neutron bomb as a sign the United States was preparing to fight a limited nuclear war.

"Aggressive, militaristic speeches on the banks of the Potomac cannot but cause deep concern among the word public," the Communist Party daily said.

Earlier, Radio Moscow said the neutron bomb debate, along with the planned deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, "amounts to nuclear aggression with all its consequences."

Local Social Security Office Honored For High Performance

The Lubbock social security office which received the Regional Commissioner's High Achievement Award for 1979 was honored again recently for continued high performance in 1980. These honor awards are given annually to only a few of the 143 social security offices in the Dallas Region, which includes the states of Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

In announcing the award, Regional Commissioner Martha McSteen said, "The employees of the Lubbock Social security office should be very proud of their work. Each year we recognize those offices that have provided exceptional public service as indicated by the speed and accuracy of their claims processing, their demonstrated concern for informing citizens of their rights and responsibilities and their active participation in community affairs. The Lubbock social security office was selected as an outstanding office in 1979.

"Our performance assessment for 1980 indicates that this office has maintained an excellent record of public service. I congratulate Lubbock manager Laura Peacock for this exceptional accomplishment."

Mrs. Peacock attributed the continuing success of her office to the committment of individual employees to excellence. "When the members of a group pull together, the results can be very gratifying" she said.

There are 44,110 beneficiaries, receiving more than 11 million dollars each month in social security and supplemental security income benefits in the 12-county Lubbock area.

HEARTLINE: I am trying to do a little estate planning, as I am approaching my 80th birthday. I have several rental properties which I would like to leave to my wife, who is only 64. However, I know that she is not able to care for the running of these properties, and I am in a dilemma about what to do. I have heard mention of "trusts", and wonder if this might not be the route to go. Could you give me a little general information about trusts, so I won't feel like an idiot when I see my attorney about it? K.R.

ANSWER: In definition a trust is a relationship with respect to property, where a person or company is given responsibility over the property, and any profit or income from such property is paid to a beneficiary for whom the trust was originally created to benefit. A trust allows one person (the trustee) to hold legal title to property, and another (the beneficiary) to have an equal title.

All trusts have certain vital and common characteristics. These characteristics are essential to the validity of the trust.

*A trust must have a creator.

*A trust must have a trustee, or one who is given the responsibility of executing the trust. The trustee can be an individual or a corporation (trust company) and there can be more then one trustee (cotrustees).

*All trusts must have a beneficiary, or one who will benefit from the trust. The beneficiary may be a person, an organization, a group of people, a corporation or any other association or group capable of owning property. *Since a trust is a property arrangement, no trust can exist without property. Any and all property can be placed into a trust.

*A trust cannot be created without a purpose. This purpose must be outlined by the creator(s) in the terms of the trust. A trustee must know for whom and why they are administering the trust and for this reason the terms of the trust are required.

You certainly will need to consult your attorney concerning a trust as laws relating to trusts vary from state to state.

HEARTLINE: Just out of curiosity, can you tell me how old most of the World War II veterans are now? W.F.

ANSWER: According to the Veterans Administration, the average World War II veteran is about 60 years old.

Windmill Generator Goes Out Of Action

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — A huge, experimental electricity-generating windmill atop Howard's Knob was idled Jan. 20 when some bolts in its drive shaft broke, a spokesman for the Blue Ridge Electric Membership Corp. said Thursday.

It was the first equipment failure in early 18 months of operation for the machine, officials said.

The windmill, costing $3.5 million and weighing 350 tons with its 100-foot-long blades, was built by General Electric Space Division for the U.S. Department of Energy and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Blue Ridge Electric Membership Corp. officials said replacing the bolts was not complicated, but it might take some time to determine what caused the problem.

They did not indicate when the windmill would be back in operation.

Holstein Calf Gets Artificial Heart

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Clyde, a Holstein calf, has been implanted with an artificial heart. Researchers plan to replace it in April with the heart from his twin, Bonnie.

University of Utah scientists have implanted artificial hearts in hundreds of calves and sheep, but this will be one of the few experiments involving transplanting a natural heart after prolonged survival on a plastic heart.

The model used in Wednesday's five-hour operation, the Jarvik V, is slightly larger than the Jarvik VII which will be put in a human.

Older, Younger Americans Share Social Security Views

WASHINGTON, D.C. (Special) — Contrary to popular belief, older and younger Americans generally share the same views about maintaining and strengthening the Social Security System, according to a recent nationwide public opinion poll.

The survey, conducted for the American Association of Retired Persons and National Retired Teachers Association by the Hamilton & Staff research firm, found surprising similarities in the views of those 55 and older and those age 25 through 54 on what to do — and not do — to solve the financial problems that are plaguing the system.

According to the national sample of 1,261 respondents, the overwhelming majority of both younger and older persons do not approve of most proposed reductions in Social Security benefits to help stabilize the system over the next few years.

For example, the survey found that 78 percent of those under age 55 and 81 percent of those over 55 oppose reducing benefits to persons who will begin receiving Social Security benefits in 1982. Clear majorities of both age groups are also against placing any ceiling on cost-of-living benefit increases (74 and 77 percent, respectively), reducing or eliminating benefits to dependent spouses who become eligible in 1982 (66 and 67 percent), and eliminating the $225 Social Security lump sum death benefit (61 percent of both age groups).

The only reduction preferred by younger respondents is in the student benefit for dependents (50 percent favor reducing or eliminating this, while 44 percent oppose). Those over age 55 split evenly on the issue, with 43 percent preferring and 43 percent opposing this option.

At the same time, both age groups strongly support the use of general tax revenues to help supplement Social Security payroll taxes (70 percent of those under 55 and 65 percent of those over 55 preferred this option), as well as the financing of Medicare Part A (hospitalization) out of general tax revenues (70 percent, and 62 percent, respectively, approved of this idea). In fact, the majority of both age groups (59 and 56 percent, said they would support general revenue financing of Medicare Part A "even though it might mean only lower-income people would be covered."

A proposal to tax Social Security benefits in order to raise revenue for the system is opposed by the majority of respondents in both age groups (61 and 68 percent), as is any further increase in the Social Security payroll tax (58 and 51 percent).

When asked to consider solutions to the long-term problems of Social Security, both young (81 percent) and old (79 percent) strongly endorsed the use of incentives to encourage older workers to stay on the job longer and delay drawing Social Security benefits. The majority of both age groups also support steps to relate future Social Security benefits more closely to workers' earnings and contributions (64 and 62 percent) and to cover any future deficit in the Social Security trust funds out of general tax revenue (61 and 63 percent).

Neither age group supports raising the eligibility age for Social Security benefits from 65 to 68 (64 percent and 58 percent, respectively, oppose this solution).

Social Security Obligation Urged By Congressman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Claude Pepper, chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, said Thursday the federal government is honor bound to uphold the Social Security retirement system.

Pepper, 80, defended Social Security against federal budget cutters at a hearing, saying, "I have no objection to belt tightening in the federal budget, but very few of America's aged have any belts left to tighten."

Pepper estimated that more than 6 of every 10 older Americans would fall below the poverty line without Social Security benefits.

"Social Security is a sacred trust between the American people and their government," he said. "We are honor bound to uphold it."

The Florida Democrat also announced that he will introduce several bills to improve health care and other benefits for the elderly. One proposal would provide Medicare coverage for hearing aids, eyeglasses, dentures and all prescription drugs.

Among those testifying at the hearing was Lilly Sharp, 80, of Miami, who said she receives $257 in Social Security income every month, along with Medicare and Medicaid, food stamps and subsidized housing. She said she gets one hot meal a day at a senior center.

"If these programs are cut, I would become like the people who must live from day today, wondering how they will survive and if it's worth it," she said.

TOY IN NOSE

LONDON (AP) — A 23-year-old woman who has suffered breathing problems most of her life underwent surgery this week and doctors found the cause of her problem — a tiddlywink she pushed up her nose as a toddler, the London Daily Telegraph said Thursday. "I thought at first they were joking," Ruth Clarke, a receptionist from Mansfield, England, was quoted.. "But they weren't. They even gave me the yellow tiddlywink and I am keeping it as a souvenir. I just flipped when they told me what had been causing my sinus trouble all these years."

Defensive Backfield Tech Strong Spot

(Today's second installment of a four-part series examining the 1981 Texas Tech football squad's areas of strength and weakness returning football players takes a look at the defensive backfield and the kicking game.)

By NORVAL POLLARD
Executive Sports Editor

Despite the loss of All-American free safety Ted Watts, Texas Tech's 1981 defensive backfield should be a stronghold of experience and young talent.

Red Raider defensive coordinator Jim Bates has built a strong reputation over the last three years as one of college football's best secondary coaches. Bates fields hard-hitting and technically sound defensive backs. He should be able to continue that tradition this fall.

Bates will be the first to admit that there is no way to replace Watts. You can't replace an All-American just like that. Watts' leadership and ability to come up with the big play will be sorely missed around Jones Stadium. Also gone are second-team strong safety Leonard Duncan and reserve cornerback Billy Cummings.

Fortunately, Bates welcomes back five defensive backs who started at least one game during the 1980 season. Those five, and a host of other secondary candidates, will have their work cut out for them this season filling Watts' shoes.

The 6-1, 185-pound Watts was the second leading tackler on the Tech defense with 55 solo stops and 22 assists. Five tackles were for losses of nine yards and one resulted in a fumble. Watts also recovered one fumble, broke up 11 passes and returned his lone interception of the season 34 yards for a touchdown in Tech's 24-20 victory over Texas.

Oddly enough, Tech could start one of the few all-white secondaries in the country in 1981. Tate Randle, Jim Hart, Greg Iseral and Clay Renfroe — all starters at one time or another during 1980 — would give Tech that combination, but Bates has enough talented players to come up with many possible lineups.

The 6-1, 190-pound Randle is the leading candidate to retain a starting berth this season. As a junior last fall, Randle started all 11 games for the Raiders at strong safety. He finished the year with 60 tackles and a team-high five interceptions, which gives him 11 career thefts.

Randle is a deceptive player: hard hitting, quick to react and always in the vicinity of the football. There is little doubt Bates will build his secondary around him.

One of Bates' major concerns before the start of the 1980 season was the two cornerback positions. Graduation and the continuing knee problems of sophomore Alan Swann, who started all 11 games for the Raiders as a freshmen in 1978 before a rash of knee injuries and operations, left Bates with nothing but inexperience. Bates won't have that problem this fall.

Hart, who was moved from quarterback to cornerback in the middle of spring drills a year ago, filled the void created by Swann's absence. Hart, a 6-0, 190-pound sophomore, started the first 10 games of the year and performed well. He finished the season with 31 stops and two interceptions.

Ricky Sanders, a 6-0, 170-pound sophomore, started at the other cornerback post the first five games before an ankle injury slowed him down. He saw considerable action the remainder of the season and was in on 23 tackles in 1980.

Iseral started the 1980 season behind Watts at free safety, but it wasn't long before Bates had to make him a starter at cornerback to replace the ailing Sanders. Once in the starting lineup, Iseral couldn't be budged. The 6-1, 190-pound junior-to-be and Monterey product started the final six games of the year, winding up with 42 tackles and one interception.

Renfroe, a freshman last season, started 1980 on a slow note, but caught fire later in the campaign. The majority of Renfroe's playing time came on the special teams, where he led the team in blocked kicks with two. By the end of the year, Renfroe was ready to play and unseated Hart at a starting cornerback spot in the season finale against Arkansas. Renfroe wound up making 14 tackles.

Randle, Hart, Sanders, Iseral and Renfroe give the Raiders a strong nucleus in the secondary. But there are other top-notch players waiting in the wings.

The return of Swann, who has undergone surgery on both knees, remains a possibility. A healthy Swann, who had five interception, returning one 80 yards for a TD in 1978, would greatly bolster the Tech defensive backfield.

Jerry Hatchett, a 5-11, 170-pound junior free safety from Tahoka, spelled Watts last fall and would be the leading candidate to take over for Watts if Bates leaves Iseral at cornerback. Kenneth Storey, a 6-2, 175-pound sophomore, is listed behind Hatchett on Tech's post-season depth chart.

A trio of young players, led by 6-4, 200-pound sophomore Stan David, will be battling Randle for the starting strong safety position. David has the tools to crack the starting secondary, but lacks experience.

The other two candidates are 6-1, 190-pound junior Dennis Veals and 5-11, 185-pound senior Craig Caudle.

Listed behind Iseral and Sanders at the right cornerback is junior Paul Rodgers, a 5-11, 170-pounder.

At the present time, the secondary appears to be Tech's strongest defensive area because of the experience and proven ability of the returning players. The same cannot be said about Tech's kicking game.

Through the first five games of 1980, Tech made only two of seven field-goal attempts. The inability to kick the three-pointer played a major role in three of the Raiders' six losses. Immediate improvement is necessary if Tech hopes to challenge for the Southwest Conference crown this fall.

Jesse Garcia was in charge of Tech's place-kicking chores during the first half of the season. The 5-7, 180-pound Garcia has an incredibly strong leg, evident by the way he consistently booted the football out of the end zone on kickoffs. But Garcia couldn't find the uprights on field-goal tries. He finished the year hitting only two of seven. After five games, Rex Dockery was forced to make a change.

Junior John Greve replaced Garcia on field-goal and extra-point kicks and did a credible job. Greve hit three of his four field-goal efforts and was a perfect 18 of 18 from the extra-point stripe. Greve enters spring training as Tech's No.1 place-kicker.

Expected to challenge Greve and Garcia for the place-kicking duties is walk-on Ricky Gann, who handled the kicking duties for Tech's junior varsity.

Tech's punting game was a different story. Junior Maury Buford averaged 41.9 yards a kick to rank third in the SWC and 18th nationally. On eight ocassions Buford pinned opponents inside their 10-yard line. Backing up Buford is David, who has Buford's range but lacks his consistency.

The Raiders' punt coverage was usually good, but there is always room for improvement. Thirty-nine of Buford's 74 punts were returned for 311 yards, or 8.0 yards per return. The longest punt return allowed by the Raiders was 21 yards.

The major breakdowns in the punting game came in the form of two bad snaps against Baylor that resulted in a pair of safeties and a block by the Houston defense that led to a touchdown.

Improvement also needs to be made in the Tech return game. The Raiders averaged only 5.8 yards a punt return, the longest being 21 yards by Watts. Hart (five returns for 20 yards) is the leading returning punt returner, but speedy wide receivers Renie Baker and Jamie Harris could be fielding punts come September.

With Baker and Hart handling the majority of kickoff returns, Tech was much better. Baker returned nine kickoffs for 164 yards (18.2 yards per return), and Hart returned seven for 122 yards (17.4). Hart's 33-yard return against TCU was the longest of the season. As a squad, Tech averaged 17.3 yards per return.

Opponents found if very difficult to return kickoffs against the Raiders in 1980. Thirteen Tech kickoffs were returned for only 105 yards or 8.0 yards per return. The longest return was 27 yards.

LHS-CHS Similarities Run Deep

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

You could call it the "Battle of Brownfield Highway," but in reality, the last few years it's been little more than a skirmish.

Not so this season. When Lubbock High hosts Coronado tonight, everything — the Westerners' two-year drought in district and the two winning years in the last 13 — will go right out the window.

Tonight's the night things start anew.

Tuesday night the Lubbock High bunch broke a 20-game district losing streak that extended clear back to Feb. 3, 1978.

"I don't really think the first district game thing has bothered us at all," said Lubbock High coach Craig Wells. "The kids realize that if we perform well we can beat anybody anytime. The first one isn't as exciting to us as the second one."

Which brings up an interesting point — the last time LHS won back-to-back district games was the last two contests of the 1970-71 season.

But that's what they'll be trying to do tonight against Coronado, and the smart money calls the game an even match.

The Westerners stand 12-13 and 1-2 on the year at this point and Coronado is 12-14 and 1-2. But the similarities go deeper than mere records.

Individually, the teams match up well also. Lubbock High starts 6-4 Kirk Cole at post, who is averaging 16.6 points and 10.5 rebounds a game. Coronado counters with 6-5 John Lord, 13.1 and 8.1. At strong forward LHS has 6-2 John Frankhouser (3.9 and 5.1), the Mustangs have 6-5 Mark Sobosle (6.1, 8.0). At quick forward 6-1 super-defender Charlie Quade (8.0, 7.4) starts for Lubbock while Coronado has leading scorer 6-3 Cody Love (13.5, 4.8). Shooting guard is held down by 5-10 Brad Ruff (12.5 points) for Lubbock and 5-11 Robby Garner (12.7 points) for Coronado. At point guard Lubbock has 5-9 Andy Marquez (7.0) while Coronado starts 5-9 Kurt Johnson (3.4).

Position-by-position, the teams are remarkably even, but when broken down into larger categories, the similarities increase even more.

So, when Wells complains about having to face Coronado's two inside men, who are averaging 16 rebounds a game, Coronado coach Barry Arnwine can turn a similar finger to LHS' two big men, averaging 15.6 rebounds a game.

And then, if he really wants to get dirty, he can point out that his front wall (Lord, Sobosle and Love) have been outrebounded by LHS' front wall (Cole, Frankhouser and Quade) by an average of 23.0 to 20.9.

"Yes, we match up pretty well, we really do," said Arnwine. "I think they've got a little more experience in the post with Cole but we may be a little taller as a whole across the front. That offsets that advantage."

"They've got two guys averaging 25 points between them at wings," said Wells. "They've shot the ball real well, but even if they don't, they've got the two 6-6s underneath; that's what bothers me.

"Love and Garner are both excellent shooters but if they have a bad night, they've got the two big guys underneath to take up the slack.

"Lord's been playing well. With he and Sobosle under there, Kirk should have his hands full. Frankhouser is going to need to play well."

For the answer to that, refer to the averages above. Lubbock High has been rebounding as well as almost anybody this year.

"Really, I think we're probably a little better defensive team," said Arnwine. "If there's any difference between us, that's what it is. That's what has carried us in a lot of games this year.

"We've won some games because we haven't had to score many points. We've done a good job defensively, but I guess that goes back to the bigger front line."

If that is so, then Wells can come back with another Westerner advantage — LHS is coming off of a win, while Coronado just lost another close one.

The Westerners downed Hereford 57-54 Tuesday night while the Mustangs fell 52-49 to Plainview.

"I'm not sure how that will affect us," said Arnwine. "That's four ball games we've lost by two points since the Christmas holidays. I think you learn to win close games; well, we've been struggling to learn how.

"Losing a close game like we did to Plainview can't help you. The way we lost it, the way we're now 1-2, that can't help us in any form or fashion."

While those two crosstown foes are battling it out, another sort of rivalry will be enacted on the floor of Monterey's gym. The Plainsmen girls, which barely, barely escaped with a 54-49 win in Hereford, will try to take two against the Herd tonight in their place.

The Monterey girls, now 23-1 and win-

Sports Medicine Meeting Starts

A two-day conference dealing with the prevention and treatment of sports-related injuries begins today in Lubbock.

The Sports Medicine conference, co-sponsored by Texas Tech University and the school's Health Sciences Center, opens today with a 6:45 a.m. registration. The South Park Inn, located at 3201 South Loop 289, will be the site of the two days of lectures, workshops and demonstrations.

Irving Dardik, M.D., and chairman of the U.S. Olympic Council on Sports Medicine, was scheduled to deliver the opening day luncheon address, but will be unable to attend the conference because of illness. Gideon Ariel, Ph.D., and an expert in the field of biomechanical research and analysis, will give the address.

It was incorrectly reported in Thursday's editions of The Avalanche-Journal that the fee for persons wishing to attend the two-day conference was $25. The $25 registration fee is for Tech facility and students. The cost for person not affiliated Tech is $50.

The first lecture is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. today. Lectures will continue until 9 p.m. Friday night. The conference resumes Saturday at 8 a.m. and concludes at noon Saturday.

Many of the nation's leading experts in the field of Sports Medicine will be on hand for the two-day conference.

Struggling Dunbar Girls Tackle Canyon

By RAY GLASS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The first time around, it was a "bad game." Twenty-six team fouls, three starters fouling out and a pair of eight-point quarters added up to a 22-point thrashing of Dunbar by the Canyon Eagles. And that was on the Panthers' home floor.

Jim Washburn's Panther girls' squad will attempt to reverse the outcome tonight when they travel to Canyon for a 6 p.m. contest. But even Washburn, a fairly optimistic soul, admits his team will have its hands full.

"We'll have to play extremely good defense and make no mistakes," he said of the battle with the league-leading Eagles. "They're beatable; I've said that all the way through the season. When we play as good as we can, we have as good a chance as any team to beat them."

The Panthers-Eagles clash headlines a full slate of District 1-4A games on tap tonight. The Dunbar boys' team, with a 1-4 district mark, 6-18 season record and at least four key players ailing with the flu, visit the district-leading Eagles, 5-0 and 17-8, at 7:30 p.m. in the final first-half conference game for both teams.

Both Estacado's boys' and girls' teams will be at home against Dumas. The Mat girls, 0-2 in the second half, and the Demons, 2-1, meet at 6 p.m. The EHS boys' team has lost three consecutive district games after starting out 2-0 and take on Dumas, 1-4, at 7:30 p.m.

In many ways, the second meeting between the Dunbar and Canyon girls' teams will be like the first battle. Canyon went into that game with a 3-0 district mark, enroute to winning the first-half title with a 6-0 record.

And the Eagles are on the same track again, with an identical district record and chance to avoid a title playoff by winning two of its last three games.

We're playing a lot more consistent now than we were at the beginning of the season," Canyon boss Lyndon Hardin said. "We're reaching our peak at the right time of the year. Dunbar will come into the game fired up. And if they're able to keep (Cynthia) Hardaway and (Marcia) Holmes in the game and out of foul trouble, they'll give us a tough game."

Indeed, much of the Panthers' problems during the teams' first meeting was due to Miss Hardaway and Miss Holmes fouling out. The 6-foot-1 Miss Hardaway and the 5-11 Miss Holmes each picked up three personal fouls in the first quarter of that game and eventually, along with point guard Lisa Caviel, ended the game riding the bench with five fouls apiece.

The trio combines for about 42 of the Panthers' 58 points each game and 28 rebounds a contest. The Panthers have been going inside to Miss Hardaway and Miss Holmes more in recent games and Miss Hardaway has scored 18, 22 and 19 points in the last three games.

But Dunbar has lost those last three games, hitting a new bottom a week ago with a 58-55 loss to winless Borger on the road.

"My team has taken a nose dive to say the least," Washburn said. "Against Borger we had a complete mental letdown.

Smith, Lewis Remain Missing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As FBI agents continued to pore over files from Muhammad Ali Professional Sports, the whereabouts Thursday of two officers of the firm named in a $21.3 million bank embezzlement suit remained a mystery.

One of them is MAPS chairman Harold Smith, 37, who surfaced via telephone Tuesday to make bizarre claims on a radio talk show that he and his family were chased through an undisclosed wooded area near Canada under gunfire, all because he "learned too much" about money siphoning at Wells Fargo Bank, which filed the suit Monday.

The second missing man is L. Ben Lewis, 47, and until Jan. 23 an operations officer at the Wells Fargo branch in Beverly Hills, a "jack of all trades" job that draws an average salary of $19,200 a year and does not require a college degree but carries tremendous responsibilities.

"They maintain the general ledger. They monitor the branch cash needs. They approve check cashing qualifications. They direct internal audits and insure the branch is conforming with bank policy and procedures," Wells Fargo spokeswoman Ann Perry said.

Wells Fargo officials admit Lewis, an 11-year employee, was probably the "inside man" needed to keep the embezzlement of such huge sums of money under wraps for so long. Wells Fargo bank chairman Richard P. Cooley reluctantly admits the scheme "goes back into last year and maybe farther. We just don't know yet."

C.B. Atkins, a longtime associate of Ali, said Thursday he met Lewis through Smith during a visit to open an account at the Beverly Hills branch of the Wells Fargo Bank.

Smith suggested to Ali that he should open an account at the bank, Atkins said.

"He suggested we all open an account there," Atkins said of Smith, "because the bank would do us a lot of favors."

Atkins said Smith didn't specify what those favors might be.

Lewis was a bearded man in a three-piece suit who Atkins recalled as "a friendly, nice guy."

The bank suit alleges the money was taken out of two accounts in Beverly Hills and Santa Monica, possibly by checks written to individuals or in some other unspecified way.

Association with an outside group or organization which also has an account with the bank must be cleared through superiors, said Wells Fargo's Ann Perry.

"We have very clear internal policies and procedures dealing with conflict of interest," she said, but added "we don't have any information at this point" on whether Lewis let his superiors know he was a MAPS director.

FBI Investigation Into MAPS Files Continues

Robert Roseberg, director of the Mosler Safe Co.'s anti-crime bureau in Hamilton, Ohio said the most recently available FBI statistics on bank crime show 82 percent of all bank fraud embezzlements are perpetrated by an employee or an official of the bank.

Known bank embezzlements netted $143 million in 1979, the latest year for which figures are available, compared to $39 million netted in robberies, burglaries and larcenies, Roseberg noted.

Roseburg and Wells Fargo officials remained purposely unclear on exactly how the MAPS money may have been moved about, saying only that bank personnel discovered an "irregularity" which led to an audit.

What was clear was that a lot of money was going through MAPS accounts at the bank.

"I don't know of any promoter who ever threw around money like they have," Forum boxing promoter Don Fraser said earlier this week. "Always, they would have limos to pick up people. Most of the time when they promoted out of town, they sent Jimmy Lennon from L.A. to do the ring announcing, and several girls to parade around the ring holding up the round cards.

"They had their own private jet," he added.

Along with Smith and Lewis, Wells Fargo's suit also named as defendants Muhammed Ali Professional Sports; Smith's wife Barbara; Gladys Lewis; Bodak Productions and MAPS President Sam Marshall.

While the case is being investigated by the FBI, no criminal charges have been filed and none of the defendants in the bank's civil suit was being sought by authorities.

However, all MAPS assets have been frozen and the organization will apparently not be promoting a four-fight card with $8.5 million in purses scheduled for Feb. 23 at Madison Square Garden.

Former heavyweight champ Muhammad Ali's only connection with MAPS was the loan of his name to the organization, and last Friday Ali ordered his attorneys to take action to have his name removed from the organization.

Secretaries answering the phone for the firm Thursday only used the name "Professional Sports."

Ali said he had become suspicious of how MAPS could stay afloat despite their reputation for paying huge purses to fighters and taking massive losses, which added up to $10 million over one 19-month period.

Smith in his radio interview Tuesday with KABC Sports Talk host Bud Furrillo said he fled to Switzerland after his 4-year-old son was briefly kidnapped. The MAPS chairman said he returned here to prove himself innocent of the allegations in the embezzlement suit. He said he would give Ali documents exonerating himself and implicating Wells Fargo Bank officials in a massive fraud involving $200 million to $300 million.

Reporters staked out Ali's home Wednesday, but Smith never showed.

Wells Fargo Bank had issued a statement terming "preposterous and totally implausible" Smith's claims to reporters that up to 35 officials at 20 Wells Fargo branches were involved in the alleged embezzlement and that the amount missing was actually "two or three hundred million dollars."

Bank officials also scoffed at Smith's contention of attempts on his life, the son's kidnap and of being forced to flee the country.

Friends Say Rutledge Vowed 'Revenge'

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Former Arizona State punter Kevin Rutledge vowed he "was going to get back" at ex-Sun Devil football coach Frank Kush after allegedly being punched by Kush in a 1978 game, two university acquaintances of Rutledge testified Thursday.

Chris Ruttinger and Pete Karidis, who both lived in the same off-campus apartment complex as Rutledge, told the court that Rutledge showed them "a cut lip" after returning from Arizona State's Oct. 28, 1978, game against Washington in Seattle.

Rutledge is suing Kush, the university and others for $2.2 million in damages — claiming Kush split his lip with a "knuckle-punch" after a 27-yard punt in the game.

He also contends Kush and former Sun Devil assistant coach Bill Maskill subsequently harassed him into quitting the team and forfeiting his scholarship.

Kush has testified that he "can't ever recall touching" Rutledge in the game and admitted telling other people he "did not strike the young man."

Karidis, still a student at Arizona State, said he talked with Rutledge "the night of or the night after" the game in question.

"He was very upset and I asked what was wrong," Karidis told the jury. "Kevin told me that coach Kush had grabbed him by the facemask after a bad kick and hit him with an uppercut. He had a cut on the left side of his lower lip.

"He seemed depressed and angry," added Karidis. "He said he was going to get Kush back more than once."

Ruttinger, a former tight end-guard at Arizona State and Rutledge's roommate in 1978, said he "saw the slit on Kevin's lip. Kevin said coach Kush had lifted up his facemask and hit him.

"Kevin said he was tempted to hit him back out of reaction, but he didn't," Ruttinger added. "He said he was going to make him (Kush) pay."

According to Ruttinger, Rutledge also told him that Kush called Rutledge to the front section of the plane on the ride back from the Washington game and "before the whole team, told him he was no better than a bucket of water."

Rutledge has previously testified that in the locker room after the game, Kush instructed him to "go stick your goddamn head in a bucket of water and drown yourself."

Kush denied the comment in testimony Tuesday. "I would never say a thing like that to a young man," he told the court.

Rutledge's father, Gordon, took the witness stand for the second straight day Thursday morning and said his son was "harassed and humiliated" into quitting the team.

He cited "personality clashes" between his son and Maskill and said "Kevin pulled back his lip and showed me the laceration" a week after the alleged altercation with Kush.

In an Oct. 16, 1979 deposition, Rutledge said his son described to him how Kush "grabbed his facemask with both hands, shook his head from side to side and when Kevin's helmet came loose, Kush landed a punch and also verbally assaulted him."

The elder Rutledge called Kush "a psychotic animal" in that deposition.

When a newspaper article appeared the day after the Washington game quoting Kush as saying "that kid (Rutledge) will never kick another ball for ASU," the senior Rutledge said he told anyone within range that he "was extremely distressed by it" and "wondered what kind of animal do we have teaching children?"

But cross-examined by Kush's attorney, Warren Platt, Rutledge said he "couldn't recall" the statement and "absolutely did not" consider having his son sue Kush for defamation as had been previously alleged.

Gordon Rutledge told the court that the civil action was agreed upon "by Kevin and his lawyer (Robert Hing)" sometime in April, 1979.

Platt has tried to show the jury that the suit was filed because Gordon Rutledge was "disappointed with his son's lack of success at Arizona State" and that "Kevin is a pawn in this whole thing."

Astros Sign Sambito To Multi-Year Pact

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros relief pitcher Joe Sambito signed a five-year $3 million contract with the National League team Thursday, only one day before he was scheduled to take his contract dispute to arbitration.

Sambito, 28, tied for ninth in the National League last season with 17 saves as the Astros won the Western Divison title for the first time.

Hurrying Jenkins Ties Streck For San Diego Tourney Lead

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Tom Jenkins birdied his last four holes for a 7-under-par 65, then rushed off to get a club repaired before he knew he'd taken a share of the first-round lead along with Ron Streck Thursday in the $250,000 Andy Williams San Diego Open Golf Tournament.

"I broke a club out there and I've got to get it fixed," Jenkins said immediately after finishing play on the 6,667-yard North course at the Torrey Pines Golf Club.

He declined to be interviewed, left the club property and wasn't available for comment.

About an hour later, Streck came in with a matching total for a tie for the top. A single stroke back at 66 were Keith Fergus, Bill Britton and Wayne Levi.

Johnny Miller, who won the Tucson Open earlier this year, rookie Gary Hallberg and Cesar Sanudo followed at 67.

Bruce Lietzke, winner of the Bob Hope Classic three weeks ago, topped the group at 68 and extended his string of consecutive rounds under par to 12.

All the leaders played the North course, by far the easier of the two layouts used for the first two rounds of this event.

The best scores on the South, also a par-72 but stretching 7,002 yards around ravines and along bluffs overlooking the Pacific, were 69s by Jim Simons, veteran Gene Littler and George Burns.

Tom Watson, the defending champion and outstanding player in golf for the past four seasons, shot a 71 in the weather that was sunny but cool and windy. He played the tougher South course.

The players switch courses Friday before the 156-man field is cut to the low 70 who will play the South course for the final two rounds.

And that, said Levi, will make a difference.

"Anything at par or better is a very good score on the South," he said.

The North, which produced all the good scores, was a different matter, however.

"The North played exceptionally easy," Miller said. "You could reach all the par-5's easily. It didn't take a whole big bunch to shoot 5 under."

Streck agreed.

"The par-5's played extremely easy," he said.

And he took full advantage of them. He used a 2-iron to reach three of the long holes, and two-putted for birdie on those three. He failed to reach only one of them in two, and chipped in for eagle there, putting him 5 under par on those four holes.

About half the field was still playing when Jenkins, a journeyman pro who has won once in a decade of PGA Tour activity, completed his round and hurried from the course with no way of knowing he would be the eventual leader.

He one-putted nine times in his pace setting effort, holed a 40-footer for an eagle on the ninth, but made his big move with the four-birdie finish.

Jenkins dropped long putts of about 20 and 30 feet on the 15th and 16th, hit an iron only five feet from the wind-whipped flag on the 17th, then reached the par-5 18th in two and two-putted for a fourth consecutive birdie.

Sandra Post Heads LPGA Field

NORTH MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Sandra Post fired a 3-under-par 69 Thursday to take a one-stroke lead over five golfers Thursday after the first round of the Ladies Professional Golf Association's $125,000 Elizabeth Arden Classic.

Mrs. Post bogeyed the first hole, shot three birdies on the front nine, then broke out of a six-way tie with a eight-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole.

Tied at 70 were Pat Bradley, Carolyn Hill, JoAnne Carner, Mindy Moore and Amelia Rorer. The latter two players are seeking their first tour victory. Miss Rorer's major distinction thus far is that she is, at 4 feet, 11 inches, the shortest player on the tour, and Miss Moore, from nearby Boca Raton, Fla., is playing in only her second pro tournament.

Mrs. Post, 32, was 10th on the LPGA money list last year. She has won seven tournaments in her career.

Players in the second LPGA stop of the year battled a gusting wind over the 6,211-yard Turnberry Isle course.

"If you want to play golf in Florida, you have to get used to the wind," Mrs. Post said.

"This is a tremendous driving course and you have to position the ball well. You can't flinch on this course, because every hole is a challenge."

Mrs. Carner complained, "With the wind blowing, it was hard to hit the ball close to the hole."

MHS Girls Battle Hereford

ners of the District 4-5A's first half, trailed by seven points in the fourth quarter before pulling out the win against Hereford to open the first round of play.

"I don't know if winning that one is an advantage at all," said MHS boss Tim Tasker. "If it is an advantage, it's because the kids know we didn't play well at all and still won. When you're playing halves, you've got to go out and prove yourself every night."

Monterey has proven itself often enough this season that, for the first time, they've earned the state's no. 1 ranking. But Tasker would rather have a little health going into tonight's contest with the 22-3 Hereford bunch.

Kamie Ethridge and Tracy Muehlbrad aren't any better, in fact they're worse," he said of his two starters waylaid with mononucleosis.

"Kamie tried to practice the other day but I finally took her out. Tracy wasn't even present at school. I felt like I was in an infirmary or something at practice with all the coughing in between drills.

Besides, I don't really think those polls mean anything. If they won you a ball game, I'd plaster it all over school. But I think they can get you beat faster than it can win you a game."

In other games tonight, Coronado's girls, now 11-13, face 5-18 Lubbock High while the Monterey boys, now 21-6, host 3-22 Hereford.

Meanwhile, Lubbock Christian High travels to Midland Christian for its last games before the TAPS regional tournament next weekend.

Girls' games start at 6 p.m., boys' contests will follow immediately.

Jennings Becomes Mainstay In Tech Game Plan

By CHUCK McDONALD
Assistant Sports Editor

During Texas Tech's recent five-game losing streak, The Avalanche-Journal cautiously refrained from naming a Player of the Week on two different occassions.

Put bluntly, there were very few bright spots during the time the Raiders dropped a Jan. 17 contest against the Rice Owls until they finally got back on track with a win over Houston on Jan. 31.

To hand out an award to someone merely because he hadn't played as poorly as the others seemed more like a slap than an honor.

This week, the situation is just the opposite. After Saturday's win over the league-leading Cougars and then Tuesday's historic road victory over TCU, the list of heroes is a long one indeed.

Let's take a quick look at the list of candidates:

A. Freshman Bubba Jennings: If this little guy isn't one of the coolest customers to come down the pike in quite awhile, he's close. Jennings played every minute in the Raiders' 81-70 win over Houston, had 16 points, four assists and took over the bulk of the ball-handling chores with Steve Smith on the sidelines. Repeatedly he led Tech through the Cougars' full-court press and keyed several transition baskets.

Although Jennings did miss the front end of a one-and-one with eight seconds to go against TCU, he had earlier hit four free throws in a row. Considering that the rest of the team had missed four in a row before his clutch shots, Jennings' four freebies kept Tech from losing to the Frogs in regulation.

Then, after the game had gone into overtime, Jenning led all scorers with eight points in the extra period. Twice he came up with steals and scored on easy layups as the Raiders blew it open in the OT to win 70-60. He finished as the Raiders leading scorer against the Frogs with 22 points.

A-J Sports Analysis

B. Junior foward Clarence Swannegan: The big guy with the voice of a bullfrog scored a combined total of 32 points in the Raiders' two wins.

Against the Coogs it was Swannegan's eight straight points early in the second half that kept the Raider lead intact. His buckets were the critical ones.

Against TCU, when everything else was going wrong in the first half, Swannegan dumped in 12 of Tech's 22 points. He had 18 in regulation and then hit the first bucket of the overtime — the one that sent Tech ahead to stay.

C. Defensive specialist Jeff Taylor: The Hobbs, N.M., junior drew the dubious honor of being assigned to cover Houston's Rob Williams and TCU's Darrell Browder in Tech's two games — and came out with the edge over both of them.

"I think Jeff is the most underrated player in the league," said coach Gerald Myers after Taylor had handcuffed Darrell Browder Tuesday. "He is a great defensive player."

Before Taylor fouled out, Browder had scored only eight points and the TCU sophomore finished with 17 on a six-of-20 night. Williams finished with 25 against Tech but it was a deceptive figure.

He'd managed only six points in the first half until he got three quick baskets in the final two minutes prior to intermission on breakaway layups. And Williams' final eight points came in the last 2:30 of the game with Tech already safely ahead.

Oh yeah, Taylor can still play offense. He scored 20 against Houston and was 10 for 10 at the free throw line.

D.) Senior Ralph Brewster:. The comeback kid. Brewster finally got to start and responded with 25 points and 19 rebounds in the two victories. He was also 11 of 13 at the charity stripe over the span.

All that considered, the Avalanche-Journal Player of the Week plaudits go to Jennings.

Since the start of conference play, Jennings has been a mainstay of the Tech attack. For instance, he was the only man on the roster who played every minute — every second — in both games this week.

During conference play, en route to Tech's 5-5 slate, Jennings ranks first or second in just about every statistical category but rebounding and dunks. (No, at 5-10 Bubba doesn't slam many, although he has done so in practice).

Jennings leads the squad in minutes played and per game scoring average in Tech's 10 SWC affairs. He is second only to Brewster (who's taken far less shots) in field goal shooting with a 53.3 percentage. Considering that he often shoots from the parking lot, the fact that he's been on target on 57 of 107 tries is amazing.

Although Jennings' season scoring average of 12.0 a game ranks third on the team, his conference figure of 13.4 is tops. So is his minutes played total of 360 (36 minutes per game) and by hitting 20 of 23 free throws his 87.0 percentage is only a hair behind Taylor's 87.1.

And after numerous close games, and two overtimes in SWC play, Jennings is beginning to feel like a veteran.

"It felt good to beat TCU," he said after that game. "Now we know that we can win on the road.

"We might've gotten a little too cautious at the end (of regulation) and that hurt us. But we got a lot of steals in the overtime and they were kind of tired.

"Now we just want to keep our momentum."

To do that, the Raiders will have to find a way to defeat Texas A&M in College Station on Saturday afternoon. That game will be televised by NBC-TV and broadcast locally on KCBD, Channel 11.

JENNINGS LAUNCHES JUMPER AGAINST AIR FORCE

Miss Caviel Handles Tough Job

By RAY GLASS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Lisa Caviel's place in the Dunbar basketball record books is virtually assured as the senior Panther guard ends her three-year career in the next two weeks.

The 5-foot-5 Miss Caviel, a starter for Dunbar since her sophomore year, is leading the Panthers in scoring this season after finishing as the team's second-leading scorer a year ago.

Going into tonight's game against the leadue-leading Canyon Eagles, Miss Caviel has scored in double figures in 23 consecutive games this season and is averaging 15.9 points a game.

Scoring will undoubtedly put Miss Caviel in the books but it is her ball-handling skills and rebounding prowess that keeps her on the floor for most of the Panthers' games.

First-year coach Jim Washburn has given Miss Caviel the responsibility of bringing the ball upcourt for the Panthers, especially against a full-court or three-quarter court pressing defense.

Miss Caviel's teammates clear out of her way, giving her the entire court to use against as many as three defenders. The strategy has worked well within the Panthers' run and shoot style of play. It allows the other players to move to the basket and pressures the defense once Miss Caviel gets past the front defenders.

And the responsibility for breaking the press sits well with Miss Caviel, a second-team All-City selection as a junior.

"I like to bring the ball down the court," she said when asked which aspect of the game she enjoyed the most. "I think I can score fairly well but my shooting percentage is not that good this year (40 percent from the floor). I'm Basically a ballhandler. It's easier to handle the ball than to shoot."

Miss Caviel attributes her dribbling skill with the leather ball to hours and hours of practice as a youngster. "When I was young, I played basketball with the guys around the neighborhood.

"Knowing I have to bring the ball through the press doesn't pressure me," she said in a believable tone. "I'm used to it. I'm prepared for it but I really don't think about it. I just dribble down the court."

Scoring and dribbling aren't the extent of Miss Caviel's skills, however. Despite being one of the shorter players on the team, she is second in rebounding, averaging 9.1 rebounds a contest. And last season as a junior she led the squad in cleaning the backboards, grabbing nine misses a game.

Miss Caviel's jumping ability, in a game that many players conduct flat-footed, helps her grab the errant shots, as does a competitive spirit. "If I see the ball, I go after it. I try to be aggressive all the time," she said.

Miss Caviel is one of seven of the eight Dunbar varsity players who also were members of the Panthers' varsity volleyball team. The back-to-back seasons, with two days' rest in between, are taking their toll on the small team. The Panthers have dropped their last two district games and are only 12-11 for the season.

"Playing both sports does wear you down. Sometimes I get tired of playing. But I'll always go out there and try, I'm never going to give up.

"We're limited, we don't have that many people," she said of the team's performance this season. "And we've had a lack of cooperation (among team members). Coach Washburn is a good coach but it took a while for us to adjust to his system. We were used to other things."

On the other side of the coin, Washburn has worked his plans around his limited personnel, developing a fast-breaking, run and shoot team that relies on full-court pressure defense to cover up its lack of depth.

But, despite the adjustments on both sides, Washburn has kept one factor constant: get the ball into Miss Caviel's hands and let the talented senior take things from there.

Chap Cagers Host Santa Fe

The Lubbock Christian College basketball team takes a momentary break from Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association play when it hosts College of Santa Fe at 7:30 tonight in the LCC fieldhouse.

The Chaparrals return to TIAA play Saturday against Tarleton State at 2 p.m., also in the fieldhouse.

Coach John Copeland's LCC team, 7-18 overall, lost to Santa Fe 91-66 Dec. 4 in Santa Fe.

Copeland is expected to start forwards Larry Holt and Rick Murdock; center Brian Fortner; guards Bruce Carver and Bill McGee tonight.

Carver leads the Chaps in scoring with 17.3 points per game. He also has connected on 20 consecutive free throws, three short of the school record shared by Jim Steensma and Holt. Steensma is expected to miss his fourth straight game due to flu and wisdom-tooth problems.

DHS Girls Try To Snap Skid

Borger was up for us and we weren't up for them. And I think by losing guard Eunice Johnson (who left the team for personal reasons) our terrific problem with depth is even worse now."

The Estacado girls' team is in much the same boat as Dunbar. The two squads are tied for last place in the second half of the district race and the Mats are in the throes of a four-game losing skid.

"Our district kind of reminds me of the Southwest Conference. Anyone can win on any given night," Estacado coach Mary Ann Cobb said. "We've got a good chance of beating Dumas.

"Our problem is consistency. We have three pretty good quarters each game and one bad, super bad quarter. I'm still starting a different five players each game, trying to find a starting five."

Forward Cassandra Mann leds the Mat scoring with 12 points a contest. Senior post Stephanie Peoples is averaging 11 points and 13 rebounds while Maxine Walker chips in 10 points and nine boards an outing.

Special Olympians Set Cage Tourney

The South Plains Special Olympics Invitational basketball tournament will begin today at the Lubbock State School gym.

Action today features two games beginning at 3 p.m. and continues Saturday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Basketball action will feature mens' and womens' teams from the Lubbock State School, Ballinger State School and two schools from Amarillo.

Following the tournament, there will be an awards banquet for all participants at the Peking Restaurant. Former Detroit Lions quarterback Joe Reed and Texas Tech quarterback Ron Reeves will present the awards.

MUSTANGS CLAIM TITLE

Marek Freiderich scored two goals to pace Coronado to a 3-1 victory over Monterey Thursday in a game that clinched the Mustangs the city title. Kevin Parr scored Monterey's only point and Brian Paine scored Coronado's other goalas the Mustangs advanced to 6-0-1 on the year with one game remaining.

Pam Mosser Keeps Eyes Glued On Repeat Title

By RICHARD DAY
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

SLATON — There's an old sports cliche that reads, "It's lonely at the top." But how do you think Pam Mosser (pronounced MO'sher) feels being the only returning starter from last year's Class 2A state championship team?

"It's different," Miss Mosser, a 5-8 senior forward for the Slaton Tigerettes, says. "I've always looked up to the older ones we had on our championship teams, and now I'm the oldest. But it's working out just fine, and I really think we can do it (win another state championship) again."

Miss Mosser played in the shadows of such all-state greats as Cindy Robinson and Esoleta Whaley in past seasons, but now, along with Ruth Maxwell, has taken the role of team leader.

"I think my teammates look to Ruth (Maxwell) and I in clutch situations, but it's really a team thing here at Slaton — it's always been that way," Miss Mosser said. "Jill Basinger was a good leader for us before she graduated, and I like to try to play like she did. She kept us together in tight situations. She's the kind of person who always gave 100 percent. She was totally dedicated and had a good attitude about the game."

One-hundred percent is something coach Diana Lewis says Miss Mosser gives every second she is on the court.

"Pam has one speed — go," Miss Lewis said. "She goes until she steps off the court and gives 100 percent the whole time she's out there.

"In her own way, Pam is one of the leaders of this team. She's had to play in the shadows of some great players until now and has really been underrated."

As a junior on Slaton's second consecutive state championship team, Miss Mosser averaged seven points per game. This year, however, she's scoring 18 points per game, which ranks her among the top Class 3A scorers in the area.

"I really like to shoot and score points," Miss Mosser said. "I think my best scoring night this year was 28 points in a game during the Howard College Tournament."

But scoring alone does not an outstanding basketball player make. Miss Mosser excels in every phase of the game.

"Pam is a scrappy player," Miss Lewis said. "She's not showy but gives all she has out there. It's hard to realize all she's done during a game until you look at the stat sheet and see everything she's accomplished. She's not big either, but is a fine player."

Miss Mosser is quick to say it's not her and her alone making the Slaton team roll to victory after victory.

"We get a lot of help from our bench," she said. "They cheer us on, and that really helps. If they don't do that, we can't play as well as we do."

Miss Lewis agrees tha+ it's been a team effort that has the Tigerettes sitting atop the District 4-3A standings with an unblemished record while going 26-3 so far this season.

"A lot of people didn't think we'd break even this yar, but we believe in the players and they believe in themselves — that's all it takes," Miss Lewis said. "Everybody thought we'd be down this year, but we have players that can play ball. We're starting two seniors, two juniors and a sophomore, and they've all given 100 percent.

"This is a pretty unusual team. We carry 11 players and when Ruth and Pam fouled out last night (in Slaton's 58-54 victory over second-place Cooper) the others came off the bench and won the game for us. Slaton has a tradition for doing that."

One of Miss Mosser's goals as a senior is to go undefeated in district play, while another is to win a fourth straight state title.

"We have four more district games to go and a big one will be against Post Friday night," Miss Mosser said. "We got by with a one-point win at Post the first time when Cathy Davis got a rebound and made a shot with six seconds to go for the win. It was exciting, but also scary. It could have gone either way.

"We don't want to just go to state this year — we want to win it. We're just taking it one game at a time. It's gonna be tough, but we have the ability to do it. We're gonna have to work hard and stick together. We'll also have to play our game. If we do that, I think we can beat anybody. We don't think about going to state and winning it much but the pressure of the Slaton tradition is there."

Miss Mosser says the feeling of playing in a state tournament is unlike any other. She's been to two state tourneys in the past couple of seasons, last year as a starter and as a reserve as a sophomore.

"I just get chills when I step on that orange Super Drum floor," Miss Mosser said. "You have to work long and hard to get there and that means a lot. But we also know it's now over when we get there. We want to go all the way and win a fourth straight state championship."

Playing on four consecutive state championship teams is quite an accomplishment for someone who doesn't know what her post-high school life holds.

"I'm not sure if I'm going to play basketball after I graduate," Miss Mosser said philosophically. "I'd like to continue playing ball, but there are other things I need to do with my life too. One day my basketball career will have to come to an end. I'd like to major in Physical Education at Tech and do some things I enjoy like water and snow skiing. There haven't been any recruiters knocking on my door."

If they should ever start coming around, recruiters may have to sign Miss Mosser's supporting teammate, Suzanne Shavor, as well.

"When we've barely come through in a couple of games this year I was really getting down, but Suzanne kept me together," Miss Mosser says of her strong-willed teammate. "She just kept saying, 'Trust me, we'll win,' and I really trust her now. That's one thing that's good about this team. We support each other and stay together so well. We always stick it out, hold on to each other's rope and pull through."

Miss Mosser and her Tigerette teammates will have to continue pulling through in order to win their fourth consecutive state title. But that's been no problem for the past three teams. They've done it before, and they can do it again.

Key Games Set In Area Races

Tonight's slate of area basketball games, while it may not produce as many clear-cut results as Tuesday's schedule, could still leave the impression that a mad tailor had gone to work on several districts.

New Deal visits rival Hale Center, Morton hosts O'Donnell, Union travels to Wellman, Wilson entertains Meadow and Guthrie goes to Patton Springs tonight in what could shape up as key games.

The last time the New Deal girls played Hale Center they had to rally for a slim victory at home. This time, however, they'll be on the road. Not to compare the Lions' fortunes to those of the Texas Tech cagers who have won but a single conference road game this year, but it's simply tougher to play in front of hostile fans. New Deal has not been beaten by a District 4-2A foe this year, while Hale Center has lost only one time — to the Lions — so the Owls will have some extra incentive to defeat their rivals.

The Morton boys, ranked fourth in the state Class 2A poll, lost their first district game Tuesday night in overtime to Seagraves, throwing the 5-2A race into a two-way tie for the lead. Stanton has also lost but one league encounter. Morton will host O'Donnell while Stanton travels to Forsan tonight.

Wellman was a co-leader in the Disttrcict 9-1A race before Tuesday night's 61-48 victory over Sands. That victory put Wellman a full game ahead of second-place Sands, but tonight presents another struggle to stay at the top. Union, led by high-scoring John White (24.6) will invade the Wellman gym.

The Wilson and Meadow girls, tied for the District 8-1A lead with one loss apiece, will settle the score tonight in the Wilson gym. New Home, also tied for the lead with one loss, will be idle.

The Guthrie girls are still undefeated against District 7-1A opponents but tonight run into Patton Springs on the road. Patton Springs ripped winless McAdoo 59-41 at home Tuesday and will be on the prowl to play spoiler again tonight.

In other games , Cooper will travel to Frenship, Abernathy will host Idalou, Floydada will be in Tulia, Childress will entertain Lockney, Roosevelt will be on the road for a game with Tahoka, Vega will invade Farwell, Spade will be in Nazareth, Motley County at McAdoo and Southland at Smyer.

McMurry Women Smash Lady Chaps

The McMurry College women placed four scorers in double figures as they eased their conference record to 6-1 with a 75-59 win over Lubbock Christian Thursday night.

McMurry's top scorer was Rebecca James. She only had 14 points, but was followed closely by Melissa Peacock and Belinda Sladek with 12 each and Tracy Klansek with 10.

For Lubbock Christian, Sherry Brown led the way with 23 points, including 10 field goals. Darla Lynch backed her up by scoring 17, hitting 5-of-11 from the free throw line.

McMurray jumped to an easy 33-25 halftime advantage and then held on in running to a Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association win. The victory leaves them 6-1 in conference and 10-12 overall.

Lubbock Christian, meanwhile, falls to 4-3 in loop play and 9-13 overall.

KU Violations Report Surfaces

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Athletic officials and boosters of the University of Kansas have guaranteed a job to a recruit, violated other recruiting guidelines and flown the mother of a basketball star to KU sporting events, the Kansas City Times reported in its Friday editions.

In the last of a five-part copyright series investigating athletics at Kansas State, Wichita State and Kansas, the Times said KU had violated National Collegiate Athletics Association guidelines in its dealings with three athletes: basketball stars Donnie Von Moore and Ricky Ross and football player Jeff Schleicher.

KU athletic officials said emphatically that there was no truth to the allegations.

Von Moore, a former KU basketball star who played on three Big Eight championship teams, told the Times that KU athletic officials promised him a summer job while they were recruiting him in Chicago.

"It was guaranteed," he said of the job.

Von Moore said the officials kept their promise and landed him a job in Lawrence mowing grass and painting storage tanks.

Von Moore added that he kept Basic Educational Opportunity Grant money during his senior year in violation of NCAA rules. The NCAA prohibits athletes from keeping more than a certain percentage of the federal BEOG aid while they are on scholarships.

He said he did it on his own and without the knowledge of the coaches or others in the athletic department.

"I had to wait 'till my senior year," he said. "I took it 'cause there wasn't nothing the NCAA can do about it then."

South Plains Men Turn Back NMMI

LEVELLAND (Special) — Scott Ferrell and Mike Blastick combined for 41 points Thursday night to lead South Plains College to a 75-64 WJCAA basketball victory over New Mexico Military Institute.

The Texans rallied from a 39-37 halftime deficit to post their 14 win of the year against 10 losses and up their WJCAA record to 7-5.

Blastick led the Texans with 21 points. Ferrell added 20. B.J. Jones helped the winning cause with 12 counters.

Paul Gale of NMMI led all scorers with 25 points.

Karters Set Monthly Dirt Track Races

The Lubbock Karting Association's monthly dirt-track races will be held Sunday at the Lubbock Kart Speedway, located east of Lubbock Speedway on the Tahoka Highway.

Gates will open at 11 a.m. Time trials begin at 1 p.m. and races start at 2 p.m. Admission is $2 for adults and 50 cents for children between the ages of six and 12.

LKA's regular monthly meeting will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Southwestern Public Service Reddy Room, located at 4201 Frankford Ave.

New membership dues proposals will be voted on during the meeting and all members and prospective members of the LKA should attend.

The new LKA asphalt track, located three miles west of the traffic light at Reese Air Force Base on the Levell and Highway and two miles south on FM 2378, is open and will be tested for the first time Feb. 12.

The gate will open at 10:30 a.m. Time trials start at 1 p.m. with races at 2.

Lubbock Youths Qualify For Nationals

Two Lubbock youths qualified to compete in the Grand National motorcycle races in Houston next month during qualifying races held over the weekend in Hobbs, N.M.

Kaylom Young, 10, and Monte Sullivan, 14, both gathered enough points to qualify for the national finals. Another Lubbock biker, 12-year-old Mark Blankenship, moved to within one qualifying race of earning a berth in the nationals.

Young finished first in the 60-cc mini class and third in the 80-cc junior class. Sullivan was fourth in the 80-cc stock class. Blankenship was third in the 80-cc stock class.

Mart Rallies In Trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market rallied Thursday as President Reagan prepared to address the nation on the economy.

Airline issues, in mixed trading, held down five of the most active spots on the New York Stock Exchange, while broad gains were recorded among stocks of retailers and financial institutions and by makers of aircraft, steel, autos and electronics.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials ended the day up 4.78 at 946.76. On Wednesday, the blue-chip average was up 0.60 after climbing 9.13 points Tuesday and tumbling 15.02 points Monday.

Big Board volume totaled 45.32 million shares, almost unchanged from the 45.52 million shares traded Wednesday.

Trading closed five hours before Reagan's scheduled address on the nation's economic woes.

But Lew Smith of Bear, Stearns & Co. said investors, despite uncertainty about the president's chances for success in reviving the economy, "appreciate anything that demonstrates the administration is grabbing the reins. ... The market is looking for an indication that someone is going to steer a solid course and bring stability to business."

NEW YORK (AP) — Thursday's national prices for New York Stock Exchange issues as of NYSE close. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.s

Low Oil Demand Could Follow Decontrol

By WILLIAM GLASGALL

NEW YORK (AP) — While fuel costs are surging in the United States following the scrapping of federal controls, industry observers say evidence is mounting that sluggish petroleum demand worldwide may be forcing some exporting countries to ease back on their prices.

Because the United States imports nearly 40 percent of its oil needs, the worldwide petroleum-price weakness could "help you and me at the pump, maybe," an American oil company executive, who asked not to be quoted by name, said Thursday.

U.S. refiners have increased wholesale fuel prices about 8 cents a gallon since President Reagan announced Jan. 28 he was ending oil-price controls eight months ahead of schedule, bringing U.S. oil prices up to world levels.

World crude oil prices have climbed more than 150 percent since the beginning of 1979, pushing petroleum demand down 7.5 percent in major consuming countries and leading the International Energy Agency to predict a further 1 percent to 2 percent drop in 1981.

As a result of the drop, a world petroleum glut could develop "sometime in the summer of 1982," leaving prices "floating at a lower level," Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani said at a Belgian university Thursday.

Yamani also told an audience at the University of Louvain-la-Neuve that the oil-supply "situation is getting better," with spot market prices in some cases falling below official prices that members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have set on long-term contracts.

Yamani, whose country supplies 8 percent of U.S. oil needs and 20 percent of the oil used in the non-Communist world, said earlier in the day that Saudi Arabian oil output would remain at its current 10 million barrels-a-day level for now although petroleum demand "seems to be" soft.

Yamani also said "it is our intention" to try to keep the basic Saudi oil price at the current $32-a-barrel through May, when OPEC oil ministers are to hold their next pricing conference.

Saudi Arabia charges as much as $5 a barrel less than other exporters for comparable crudes, and industry sources said substantial amounts of OPEC oil are being offered at a discount on spot markets just weeks after the cartel imposed an average 10 percent, or $3 a barrel, price increase.

Halsey Peckworth, editorial director of the daily trade newspaper Platt's Oilgram Price Report, said spot oil from Nigeria was available for $1.50 a barrel under the $40-a-barrel official price. Nigeria is the United States' second-largest oil source behind Saudi Arabia.

Platt's Oilgram News, the Price Report's sister newspaper, said that "Nigeria is offering crude under a one-year contract at 25 cents (a barrel) below the government selling price," and one industry source said the African country "may be having trouble selling its crude" after raising official prices $3 a barrel Jan. 1.

Peckworth also said Kuwait is preparing to cut in half the $5.50-a-barrel premium it demands on some of the oil it sells under long-term contracts. Kuwait, a Persian Gulf OPEC producer that is not a major U.S. oil source, raised the base price of its oil from $31.50 to $35.50 a barrel on Jan. 1.

According to Yamani, a world oil glut next year will be "very sizable" if Iran and Iraq end their war and resume shipping the 4 million barrels a day they were exporting before hostilities began last fall.

If the two countries maintain their current 1 million barrels-a-day output, however, "the glut will be a small one," Yamani said.

An easing of international prices could help soften the effects of Reagan's decontrol of U.S. oil, which immediately pushed the cost of a 42-gallon barrel of domestic crude up by $8, to about $37, and left U.S. oil prices at world levels.

On Thursday, Texaco Inc. raised wholesale and retail heating oil prices 3 cents a gallon nationwide following a wholesale boost of 2 to 3 cents a gallon Tuesday. The nation's third-largest oil company also raised wholesale gasoline prices 4.5 cents a gallon in parts of the South and Southwest after hikes of 2 to 3 cents a gallon in other areas earlier in the week.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes defended administration forecasts that Reagan's move would increase fuel prices 3 to 5 cents a gallon, saying many of the current "price hikes are theresult of increases that took place in the Middle East some time ago and they're just coming to the end of the pipeline."

Industry economists, however, have said the Reagan action move could eventually result in a jump of 10 to 12 cents a gallon. The U.S. average gasoline price was about $1.27 a gallon before decontrol was announced, up from $1.11 in early 1980 and 63 cents in early 1978.

Imported Oil Pacing Trade Deficit Rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. merchandise trade deficit doubled to $5.6 billion in the last three months of 1980, with newly rising oil imports causing the most damage, the Commerce Department reported Thursday.

However, the combination of last spring's recession and strong export records for machinery and farm produce helped hold the deficit for the entire year to $26.7 billion, about 9 percent under the 1979 level, the report said.

The seasonally adjusted figures are calculated on a merchandise trade balance of payments basis, which excludes military trade.

Oil imports rose about 11 percent in the fourth quarter, to $19.1 billion, after declining in the previous three months, the report said.

As the average price was increasing 3 percent to $32.27 per barrel, the Commerce Department said, the volume of oil imports was growing 8 percent from the previous three months because of "an increase in consumption and the resumption of purchases for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve."

The SPR is a vast storage project designed to ease immediate problems from a sudden cutoff in oil imports.

The value of petroleum imports rose $18.9 billion — about 31 percent — for 1980 as a whole, the report said.

But that jump was more than matched by export increases, including an $11.1 billion rise in machinery, $5.6 billion in farm produce despite the Soviet grain embargo, $3.8 billion in consumer goods, $3.6 billion in civilian aircraft and $3.3 billion in chemicals.

SEC Proposes Rule On Market Linkup

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Securities and Exchange Commission proposed a rule Thursday that would push stock exchanges and private buyers and sellers a big step closer to a national market system by summer's end.

The SEC plan, now open for 30 days of comment, would order an electronic link between the existing Intermarket Trading System — which includes the New York Exchange — and a new system run by the National Association of Securities Dealers for over-the-counter securities.

The move is designed to give buyers and sellers throughout the nation better access to securities available on far-flung markets, and thus theoretically enhance competition in the securities industry.

Congress ordered work begun toward a national market system in 1975, and several congressmen have complained in the past year that progress has been too slow.

The SEC adopted a rule last spring eliminating commission restrictions against over-the-counter trading of most new securities the main exchanges might begin listing.

The number of securities covered by that experimental rule has since risen to about 150, a spokesman said.

In a statement at Thursday's commission meeting, SEC Chairman Harold Williams said the electronic link — making trade in the stocks available to a much wider field — was necessary for the experiment "to be a meaningful one."

He also noted that the New York Stock Exchange had asked for a delay in ordering the linkage until a rule could be worked out on "internalization."

That issue involves the big exchanges' worry that private brokerage houses will use the easing or eliminating of SEC rules as a way to circumvent the exchanges entirely — without giving the exchanges equal access to stocks the brokers would sell to their own customers.

Work will continue toward putting together such a rule, Williams said, but he added, "I personally do not believe that the industry's efforts to develop an internalization rule should delay implementation of an automated linkage" between the two systems.

After the 30-day comment period expires, the commission will decide whether to formally order the link — which would take place by Sept. 30 at the latest.

Gasoline Supply Rising, According To Industry

NEW YORK (AP) — Supplies of distillate oil declined while gasoline inventories continued to increase, the American Petroleum Institute reported Thursday in its weekly supply bulletin.

For the week ended Jan. 30, supplies of distillate, used primarily for home heating and diesel fuel, fell to 182.6 million barrels from 185.0 million barrels a week earlier and were below year-ago inventories of 209.1 million barrels. Production in the latest week was 3.0 million barrels daily, compared with 3.1 million barrels daily the previous week and was unchanged from the same week last year, the industry organization said.

Distillate inventories remained within the Energy Department's average range for this time of year.

Gasoline inventories continued to rise, reaching 276.8 million barrels in the week, compared with 272.2 million barrels a week earlier and 260.9 million barrels in the 1980 period.

Gasoline production fell to 6.3 million barrels daily from 6.4 million barrels daily in the previous week and 7.0 million barrels a year ago.

Gasoline supplies also remained within the DOE's average range for this period.

Crude imports fell to 4.7 million barrels daily from 5.0 million barrels daily in the preceeding week and were well below year-ago imports of 6.8 million barrels daily.

Crude oil inventories rose to 369.3 million barrels from 360.3 million barrels in the previous week. Inventories in the comparable period last year were 353.3 million barrels.

The increase in crude oil inventories reflected a revision in the API's accounting methods for crude oil inventories, which now include oil out-at-sea, transported from Valdez, the pipeline terminal in southern Alaska.

The nation's refineries increased output to 73 percent of capacity in the latest week, up slightly from 72.5 pperent a week earlier. Last year at this time refinery output stood at 80.8 percent of capacity.

Optimistic Outlook On Interest Rates Sparks Dollar To Gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Buoyed by signs that U.S. interest rates are unlikely to fall soon from their current high levels, the value of the dollar made sharp gains against other major currencies both at home and abroad Thursday.

Gold prices continued their recent see-saw pattern, tumbling in Europe to as low as $492 an ounce before recovering in New York to top $500.

Gold for February delivery rose $10 an ounce to close at $500.50 on the Commodity Exchange Inc. In later trading, gold closed at $501.50 an ounce at Republic National Bank, up $8.50 on the day.

Silver for current delivery rose 25 cents to $13.12 an ounce on the New York Comex. In London, silver fell 35 cents to close at $13.05 an ounce.

Gold in London tumbled $13 an ounce to close at $492 and fell $8 an ounce in Zurich to end the day at $499.50.

The dollar rallied on European foreign currrency exchanges following remarks in Washington by Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Volcker told Congress' Joint Economic Committee the Fed intends to keep a tight rein on credit in order to combat inflation. The Fed must resist the temptation to loosen money and credit because of high interest rates, he said.

High U.S. interest rates make the dollar more attractive to investors, thus increasing the currency's value.

Dealers in New York said trading was fairly light in advance of President Reagan's economic address to the nation scheduled for Thursday evening.

Here's how the dollar fared in New York, compared with Wednesday's closing levels: 2.1585 West German marks, up from 2.1180; 4.9525 French francs, up from 4.8725; 1.9540 Swiss francs, up from 1.9213.

The dollar rose to 204.10 Japanese yen from 203.35, and climbed to 1.1974 Canadian dollars from 1.1941. The British pound lost ground against the dollar, falling to $2.3315 from $2.3475.

In earlier trading in Tokyo, the U.S. currency closed at 202.85 yen, down from 204.50 Wednesday.

In London, the pound fell back against the dollar, losing more than one cent in value. The pound reached a late rate of $2.3417, compared with $2.3570 Wednesday.

Other European rates Thursday compared with Wednesday's rates included: 2.1395 West German marks, up from 2.1175; 1.9340 Swiss francs, up from 1.9170; 4.9475 French francs, up from 4.87375; 2.3115 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2960; and 1,011.50 Italian lire, up from 1,005.75.

Hostage Hearings Slated To Begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said Thursday the panel plans to begin hearings later this month into the Iran hostage crisis.

"We owe it to the people of this country to see that what occurred in Tehran ... will never happen again," Zablocki, D-Wis., said at the committee's first official meeting of the 97th Congress.

A tentative schedule calls for the committee to hold hearings on Feb. 17-18 and Feb. 25 to be followed by subcommittee hearings focusing on particular aspects of the crisis.

Survey Shows States' Energy Spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big businesses spent more on energy in Texas than in any other state in the nation in 1978, according to a survey released Thursday by the Census Bureau.

The report said industrial energy spending was $3.8 billion in Texas in 1978, followed by Pennsylvania at $3 billion. Other states and the spending levels were: Ohio, $2.9 billion; California, $2.4 billion; Illinois, $2.3 billion, and Michigan, $2.1 billion.

The survey of American industry, conducted in 1977 and 1978, also found American plants paid $37.7 billion in 1978 for just about the same amount of energy that cost them $33.4 billion the year before.

While the amount of energy used by industry remained almost steady over the two-year period, the types used varied, the report said.

Use of purchased electricity and residual fuel oil each increased 2 percent and natural gas use was up 2 percent, while use of distilled fuel oils was down 12 percent. Natural gas was the principal industrial fuel, accounting for 45 percent of energy used.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I went to my local bank to place an order to buy a 26-week, $10,000 U.S. Treasury bill (T-bill) at the weekly government auction. To my amazement, I was told the bank's "fee" to handle this would be $50. That's highway robbery. I walked out in a huff.

Does the federal government regulate the fees banks can charge on such transactions?

I am considering buying T-bills on my own. How do I get the necessary forms?

A. The answer to your first question is a loud "no." A bank can charge any fee it wants to...for hand
