India arrests, releases Union Carbide official

By TINA CHOU
Associated Press Writer

BHOPAL, India — The chairman of Union Carbide Corp. was taken into police custody today in connection with a gas leak from a company plant that killed more than 1,600 people, the United News of India said. The White House said later that he had been released.

A reliable source in New Delhi said Warren M. Anderson, chairman of Union Carbide, flew to the Indian capital from Bhopal.

A senior Indian government official said Anderson and two of Union Carbide's top Indian executives were accused of "negligence and criminal corporate liability." They were taken into custody at the Bhopal airport after they arrived to investigate Monday's gas leak, UNI said.

The three officials were taken to the plush Union Carbide guest house atop a hill overlooking Bhopal, the news agency reported. Earlier in the day, reporters saw 50 armed police guarding the house and Subinspector A.K. Singh said Anderson was not being allowed to leave his room.

However, White House Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes said later in Washington that Anderson had been released. Speakes said the United States had made "some representations through the embassy in New Delhi" but that he did not know if the U.S. action prompted Anderson's release.

At corporate headquarters in Danbury, Conn., Walter Goetz, director of corporate communications, said Union Carbide President Alec Flamm had learned that Anderson left Bhopal by airplane. Goetz would not explain how Flamm received his information, but he said Anderson was expected to call "when he gets someplace."

In a previous statement, company spokesman Edward M. Van Den Meele had said company officials understood that Anderson was under house arrest, but no charges had been filed. Van Den Meele said Anderson was being treated courteously.

"U.S. Embassy officials are in Bhopal working to secure his safe departure from the area," said Van Den Meele.

UNI said the two Indian executives taken into custody with Anderson were Keshav Mahendra, chairman of Union Carbide India Ltd., and the company's managing director V.P. Gokhale.

"We are convinced on the basis of facts already available that each one of them have criminal liability for the events that led to the grave tragedy," said a statement issued by Arjun Singh, chief minister of Madhya Pradesh state.

The statement added: "This government cannot remain a helpless spectator to the tragedy and it knows its duty towards thousands of innocent citizens whose lives have been so rudely and traumatically affected by cruel and wanton negligence on the part of the Union Carbide management."

UNI said the 63-year-old Anderson and the others were accused of violating seven sections of the Indian penal code, including Section 304A — causing death by negligence. That is a nonbailable offense in India.

The accusations were believed to have taken the form of preliminary charges filed by police and contained in what is known in India as a first information report. A formal charge sheet is presented later to a magistrate after an investigation.

Five senior Indian officials of the pesticide plant previously were arrested on charges of criminal negligence.

Anderson, who started working for Union Carbide in 1945 and became its chairman in 1982, flew to Bombay on Thursday, where he had discussed compensation for victims of the gas leak.

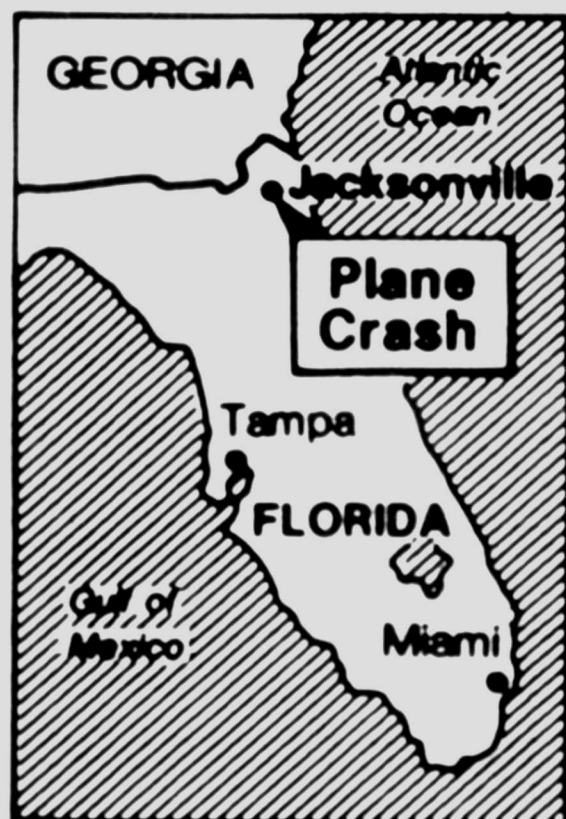

Indian officials have said Union Carbide would be expected to pay compensation equivalent to what it would pay if the disaster occurred in the United States. Union Carbide officials have said the company will pay compensation, but the amount and terms have not been decided.

The government's All-India Radio said Thursday that the official death toll had risen to 1,600. Unofficial reports say more than 2,000 people died and another 200,000 were affected by the gas, many of them seriously.

Van Den Meele, asked about Anderson's decision to go to India, said, "Mr. Anderson is our chairman and he's head of this company. He feels that everyone is saddened by this tragedy and he felt it was his place to go there to offer his condolences, express his sadness, and to see what he could do to be of help to the survivors and also to see what he could do to help to give aid in this situation."

Firefighters and law enforcement officers above, examine the remains of a wing section of a Provincetown-Boston Airlines plane that crashed Thursday evening, killing all 13 persons aboard. The craft, which crashed in swamp shortly after takeoff from a Jacksonville, Fla., airport, carried two crew members and 11 passengers. Other aircraft owned by PBA, below, stood idle for two weeks last month at a Barnstable, Mass. airport following a Federal Aviation Administration revocation of the firm's operating license. Flights resumed Sunday, said PPA President Peter Van Arsdale, when the firm was cleared of alleged safety violations. Thursday's accident was the third crash of a PBA craft in the past six months.

Hijackers let deadline pass, talk of freeing some hostages

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

The hijackers who shot and killed at least three hostages — two believed to be U.S. officials — aboard a Kuwaiti airliner in Tehran postponed their deadline for killing more today and offered to free some captives, Iran's news agency said.

The Islamic Republic News Agency said the deadline passed without incident this morning and there later was a 2½-hour break in contact with the control tower at Tehran airport, where the plane has been held for more than three days.

When contact was restored, the hijackers said more of the roughly 60 hostages still on board would be released if "mass media" published a statement drafted by the hijackers. The statement was not immediately released.

The hijackers' latest threat, issued Thursday night, was to start killing Kuwaiti passengers at 7 a.m. today unless 14 prisoners held in Kuwaiti jails were freed, IRNA said. The prisoners are believed to be those convicted in the bombing of U.S. and French targets in Kuwait last year.

■ Iranian collusion possible? — Page 4A

Kuwait has refused and appealed to three Moslem nations with good ties to Iran — Syria, Algeria and Pakistan — to secure the hostages' release.

The Arabic-speaking hijackers also demanded that authorities send a fresh flight crew aboard, the news agency said.

At least three people have been reported killed since the plane was hijacked Tuesday while on a flight from Kuwait to Pakistan, via the United Arab Emirates.

PBA's third crash in six months claims 13 lives

By RON WORD
Associated Press Writer

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — A commuter plane belonging to an airline that was shut down for two weeks last month for alleged safety violations crashed and burst into flames, killing all 13 people aboard, authorities said. It was the airline's third crash in six months.

The bodies of the 11 passengers and two crew members aboard Provincetown-Boston Airlines Flight 1039 were left in the wreckage overnight pending the arrival of National Transportation Safety Board investigators, said police spokesman Sgt. Charley Hill.

The investigators planned today to inspect the wreckage, which was strewn over a mile-wide swath of swamp. The cause of the crash was not immediately known, and an FAA spokesman said he could see no immediate connection to the airline's safety problems.

Meanwhile, the head of the House Aviation Subcommittee, Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said the panel should consider whether the FAA, in response to pressure from small towns for which PBA is a sole carrier, returned the airline's operating license too soon.

"One of the things we have to look at is did the FAA, in its enforcement and inspection capability, operate in an impartial, careful way with respect to this carrier," Glickman said on NBC's "Today Show." "There was a lot of pressure to get this carrier back in the skies again and we have to see if they operated the way they would have done with respect to every other carrier."

Police stood watch overnight in freezing temperatures as portable generator lights illuminated the site 1½ miles northwest of Jacksonville

International Airport.

Rescue efforts after the 6:15 p.m. crash Thursday were hampered by muck 3 feet deep, said airport operations manager Charles Hardrick. "We could find no sign of life," Hill said.

"There are no survivors," said Valerie Baltzley, emergency communications officer for Jacksonville Fire-Rescue.

It was impossible to count the bodies because the wreckage was "too entangled," Hill said. Identification of the victims was withheld pending notification of relatives, the airline said in a statement.

The plane — a Brazilian-made twin-engine turboprop known as an Embraer Bandeirante — crashed in a densely wooded, swampy area north of the airport. It burst into flames on impact, Hill said.

The plane, headed for Jacksonville to Tampa, "took off and disappeared immediately off the radar screen," Hill said. "The inside of the cabin is charred," he said, adding that some of the victims were thrown from the plane when it crashed.

Exxon division announces its purchase of $90 million in Wasson field reserves

Exxon Company, USA, has announced the purchase of about 11 million oil equivalent barrels of reserves in the heart of the Wasson field in West Texas.

Dan Mendell III, manager of the company's MidContinent Division, said the purchase from a number of working interest owners totalling nearly one-third of the Cornell Unit in Gaines and Yoakum counties will boost Exxon's Texas production approximately 1,500 barrels of oil per day. Mendell said the price of more than $90 million also includes about 40 billion cubic feet of carbon dioxide from the Bravo Dome field in New Mexico and other sources earmarked for use in an anticipated Wasson field tertiary recovery project being evaluated.

The Cornell Unit produces from the San Andres formation and is surrounded by the Denver, Willard and Roberts Units of the Wasson field.

Exxon's newly acquired reserves are being produced from leases that involve 63 production and 37 injection wells.

Mendell added that the purchase of the mature property by Exxon, which has been active in West Texas since 1922, was made because of the company's continued optimism for the success of carbon dioxide injection as a means to increase ultimate recovery from producing formations in the Permian Basin.

New York still apathetic after woman's death 20 years ago

By PHYLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Twenty years ago, in Queens, N.Y., a young woman named Kitty Genovese became a sociological martyr. She was savagely attacked on the street and finally stabbed to death while 38 "neighbors" watched her slow and violent death, listened to her screams, and did nothing.

A vast body of work studying the public's apathy — now called "the Genovese syndrome" — resulted from the nation's shock and outrage. More than 1,000 articles and books have been written trying to explain her onlookers' behavior. Many states responded by passing "Good Samaritan" laws, relieving onlookers of liability if they help in an emergency. Three states went further, invoking "duty-to-intervene" laws to punish bystanders who do nothing when they see a crime in commission.

But New York has been legislatively as apathetic as Kitty Genovese's neighbors. And late last week in Brooklyn, another woman was attacked by two males in the courtyard of a housing project while resi-

Anyone who observes a crime in action must intervene, either physically or by calling for help, or be slapped with a fine. The penalty for turning one's back on a victim is not terribly harsh: up to $100. In New York City, parking one's car in a tow away zone draws a higher fine than that. Still, Minnesota's rule, enacted in March 1983, makes a bold and appropriate statement on the shocking condition of contemporary society by reminding us how far we have strayed from the golden rule, "do unto others."

dents from a 14-story building watched for nearly 20 minutes. Thirty-seven-year-old Barbara Miller screamed, "Help, police!" while her assailants battered her, but not until they dragged her into a hallway and fatally shot her did two phone calls come in to the police. As in the tragedy of Kitty Genovese, most residents admitted they heard the victim's screams but told police they couldn't become involved. Some said theirs was such a high-crime neighborhood that, even when they heard the shots, they paid little heed. One of the victim's attackers, a 14-year-old, was arrested at his home in the project, and detectives are urging residents who saw the crime to come forward and help identify the second killer.

Fear of recrimination, the usual excuse of people who refuse to intervene in violence, may prevent such witnesses from reporting what they viewed. That was the reason given by most of those who saw Kitty Genovese's struggle. Yet they, and the witnesses to last week's violence, are guaranteed "confidentiality." Picking up the phone to call for help is not a self-endangering act; yet many are either too fascinated or too indifferent to stop the drama. Some admitted they closed their windows to shut out Kitty's agonized shrieks; others said they assumed it was a "personal fight" between husband and wife, so they had no right to interfere. One concerned man called a woman neighbor, after Ms. Genovese was already dead, to say he had seen the attack but was intoxicated and didn't want to deal with the police. Each excuse is hard to explain, and each is intolerable.

Never in the history of man has there been a need to legislate human compassion, but the time has come.

The state of Minnesota was the first to positively express its outrage at cases of atrocity-by-nonintervention. The people there were shaken in summer 1983 not only by memories of the Genovese case but by happenings they had only read about: a 13-year-old girl raped in St. Louis for 40 minutes by two youths, while people stood by watching; before that, the famous New Bedford, Mass., case of a woman repeatedly raped on a pool table while onlookers watched, titillated. "What is happening is totally unacceptable conduct for civilized society," said a Minnesota state representative who wrote the amendment making it a legal offense to fail to aid a fellow human being in an emergency.

Uncertainty plagues investors

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — For at least the next few months, many savers and investors will be faced with a special problem — deciding where to put their money without knowing how it will be taxed.

The Treasury has submitted its plan for a "modified flat tax" that would radically alter the rules affecting many types of investments, from stocks to vacation homes. Several other proposals are already on the table in Congress.

At this point, it is impossible to discern which features of each of these measures will be adopted — or, in fact, whether the House, Senate and White House will be able to agree on any tax-reform measure at all. The circumstances plainly dictate caution.

But amid all the confusion, financial advisers say it is possible for people with money to manage to find some special opportunities.

The strategies they recommend may amount to gambles on what, if any, new tax rules are eventually adopted. However, in an era when interest rates, inflation and other important variables are volatile and unpredictable, just about all investment decisions are gambles anyway.

Suppose, for example, that you have been dreaming of buying a second, or vacation, home. The Treasury has just thrown some cold water on your hopes by proposing limits on the amount of mortgage interest that would be tax-deductible on such an investment.

Specifically, taxpayers could deduct no more than $5,000 a year in interest payments they make (aside from mortgage payments on their primary residences) that exceed their interest income.

Property taxes also would no longer be deductible. And perhaps some of the other tax angles that have made second or vacation homes appealing might be scrapped as well.

If such changes come to pass, your desire to own a vacation home might naturally cool. But most other prospective buyers would also feel the same way, and the price of an appealing property might well decline to reflect that fact.

Conceivably, the present owner of a vacation home who bought it primarily for its tax advantages would be willing to sell it at a "distress" price to someone who wanted the place for its aesthetic benefits.

It should also be borne in mind that some tax-reform plans other than the Treasury's do not call for any change in the deductibility of interest. It may well be that the Treasury's suggested limit will be enacted, but it is by no means a certainty.

Thus, an investor willing to take a significant amount of risk might shop the vacation-home market aggressively as the tax-reform debate heats up, hoping to find a "bargain" property whose value would be enhanced if limits on second-home tax advantages are not adopted.

Another investment that has come under a cloud as a result of tax-reform proposals is municipal bonds. The theory is simple — if tax rates are lowered, the exemption from federal income taxes that interest on municipal bonds enjoys becomes less attractive.

Prices and yields of municipal bonds, by all accounts, have already started to reflect this possibility. It is hard to calculate how far along they are in this process — possibly, they have much further to go.

Nevertheless, a venturesome investor might consider buying municipal bonds before the tax-reform issue is settled, in the hope of benefiting should tax rates remain higher than expected, or be increased again at some future date.

The outlook for the specifics of tax reform is very murky at the moment. But it is clear that many savers and investors who pay close attention to the day-by-day and week-by-week debate will be looking for ways to profit from it.

Wheelchair-bound Santa delivers holiday spirit

ODESSA (AP) — During his two years in a hospital, Bobby Brown was told by four doctors and two psychiatrists that he probably would never walk again because of an oil field accident that left his legs paralyzed. He was confined to a hospital for two years.

It was only after a period of depression during which he turned to alcohol, Brown says, that he embarked on a career playing Santa Claus for residents of nursing homes and hospitals.

Playing Santa last year before shut-ins and in a local shopping mall changed his outlook on life, said the 46-year-old Brown.

"My life started turning around last Christmas. Things started looking up. I really came to realize that I can't take life for granted. We are all here for a purpose," Brown said.

Despite being confined to a wheelchair, Brown delivered about 1,500 fruit and nut baskets last year from his wheelchair to nursing home residents and hospital patients in both Odessa and Midland, with the backing of Odessa's Permian Mall.

This year, however, Brown is leaving his wheelchair behind. Proving the doctors wrong, he is walking, with the help of a cane.

Brown hopes, with the help of donations, to take baskets to at least 2,000 needy people this year. Once again the shopping mall will be backing him.

"If I delivered the number I did last year, I know I can do just a little bit better," he said.

Artificial human hearts raise tough questions

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — Implanting artificial hearts into human beings raises many tough questions, from which patients are chosen for surgery to who pays for it, says a Houston physician who edited a new book on issues raised by Barney Clark's heart surgery.

"It's an emotionally charged problem. The heart as an organ has been revered in poetry and literature throughout the ages. Even Mrs. Clark said, 'I wonder if Barney will love me as much,'" said Dr. Margery W. Shaw.

Clark, a Seattle dentist, was the first person to receive a permanent artificial heart. It was implanted at the University of Utah Medical Center on Dec. 2, 1982, and Clark lived for 112 days while the device pumped 12.9 million times.

The book Ms. Shaw edited — "After Barney Clark: Reflections on the Utah Artificial Heart Program" — will be published this month by the University of Texas Press.

The volume is a collection of presentations made during a conference held after Clark's death to discuss medical, ethical, legal, scientific, economic, political and religious questions raised by that operation.

As the book is being released, doctors in Louisville, Ky., are monitoring the progress of William J. Schroeder, who last week became the second person to receive an artificial heart.

MS. SHAW said neither she nor others anticipate complete agreement on the issues such operations raise.

"I think there is not. There is a division not only in heart research — but in fetal research, animal research, in questions on the right to die, the right to refuse treatment — where we would not expect a consensus in our diverse, heterogeneous population," she said.

"People tend to be afraid of the unknown. This (research) is certainly embarking into the unknown."

Ms. Shaw, who holds both medical and law degrees, is director of the Health Law Program at the University of Texas Health Science Center in Houston.

The book cites many questions left from the Clark operation, including:

— Which people will be chosen to receive artificial hearts?

— To what should they consent before surgery is performed?

— How should the success of the experiments be measured?

— How should the research be funded?

— What role should government play, considering that taxpayers are a major source of money for the research?

— How much privacy should be accorded patients who undergo such operations and their families?

— When should treatment be stopped, and who should make the decision?

IN THE BOOK, Ms. Shaw writes that mankind faces these issues because of technological advances.

"Our recent brain development has propelled us into a cultural evolution that has outstripped the capacities of our physical selves. Our vital organs break down, but our brains compel us to fix them, to renovate them and to replace them," she wrote.

"Technology and innovation are part of our inner drives. It should come as no surprise to anyone that, sooner or later, an artificial heart would be implanted in the chest of one of our fellow human beings."

However, she wrote, those involved in the research must face up to the sensitive problems it brings up.

"We need to consider the selection of recipients, the just allocation of scarce resources, the economic costs, and other sociological and ethical issues," she wrote.

In an interview, Ms. Shaw said the questions about artificial hearts follow questions raised by other forms of medical research, including the huge costs of such projects.

"When people talk about the costs of the research, I'm always reminded of insulin research for diabetics. It was very expensive; not everyone could get it at first. Today, we're down to 10 cents a dose," she said.

"SOCIETY HAS always accepted these start-up costs reluctantly. I think there will be acceptance over time."

Noting that the operations on Clark, and now Schroeder, have been front-page news worldwide, Ms. Shaw said continued public debate over the questions is inevitable. She also said many physicians seem to agree that such debate is a good idea.

"It's a dramatic subject. It's emotionally laden. Anything that's dramatic and reaches the front pages encourages a whole lot of discussion," she said.

"I think any thoughtful, concerned, reflective medical scientist will agree that all of these topics should be addressed in the open, should be subjected to public opinion."

"This is the way our democracy works. We don't do it in a closet and announce it when all our successes are in."

Film's star gets first-hand look at execution

HOUSTON (AP) — The prison warden looked at Larry Harris' thumbnail to make sure the condemned man was dead and sure enough, the nail was gray. One more killer will never walk the streets again.

The warden dropped Harris' hand and workers began unfastening the eight leather straps across the hospital gurney where Texas executes its condemned.

Then Harris got up off the gurney and walked away.

Harris was the author and a star of a feature-length movie, "Lethal Injection," shot last summer in Texas City and in the execution chamber of the Texas Department of Corrections in Huntsville.

Warden Jack Pursley of the Walls Unit, which houses Texas' death chamber, said he had no particular problem letting the crew shoot at his place of work, "other than it being a pain...putting up with them."

Pursley even counseled Aldo Ray, a veteran of many B-movie he-man roles, about how to play a prison warden.

"I told him a warden is administrator of the unit," said Pursley. "He should not sit around with a cigarette dangling from his mouth — the Humphrey Bogart routine."

He told Ray not to play "the tough guy image. You're a professional person. I think he got the gist of it."

Guards at the unit played themselves during the execution scene, Harris said, and showed the movie-makers exactly the process used to snuff out life in Texas prisons — including details like checking the color of the skin beneath the thumbnail.

"They were fantastic," said Harris. Neither Harris nor his producer, Don McLendon of Houston, pretend the film is going to rival the Star Wars series for box office returns.

The inspiration of the film came from a televised news report of a man involved in 18 sex crimes and killings involving children.

Laredo seamstress, tailor sew custom-made clothes

By SHELLEE BRATTON

LAREDO (AP) — With all the convenience of off-the-rack clothes, it is small wonder that fewer people are having their clothes custom-made. One might expect that seamstresses and tailors, and their art, have become extinct. But Laredo tailor Venancio Ruiz and seamstress Lita Santos are proof the art is still alive here.

Both have spent much of their lives making clothes for others.

Mrs. Santos is the owner and operator of her own seamstress shop. She calls it "Lita's Sewing Shop," and there, with the help of three other seamstresses, she produces five to 10 dresses a day.

Although she has owned Lita's Sewing Shop for only three years, she has been in the sewing business many years. She said that she used to sew part-time out of her home but then decided to become more professional and open her own shop.

"I have always done sewing and have always enjoyed it," she said, "so, I finally decided that, since I like it so much, why not? There was no other shop in town like mine — and there still isn't — so I had no competition.

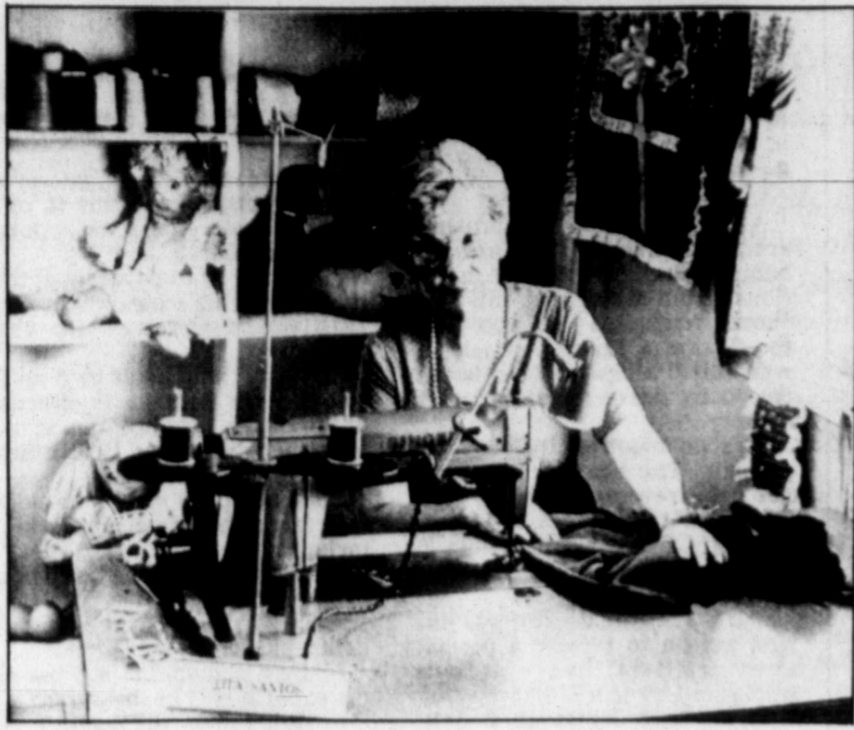

"It was scary at first — giving up a good job and security like that (she was previously an accountant.) But it was what I wanted, and I knew that if I didn't do it then, I never would. It's paid off, and my husband and children are very proud of me."

MRS. SANTOS said that they make just about any item or type of women's or children's clothing: pants, blouses, blazers, dresses, bathing suits, wedding gowns, ball gowns and even Halloween costumes. In addition to clothing, Mrs. Santos and her staff make quilts, tablecloths and soft hand-sewn toys such as stuffed animals and dolls.

Mrs. Santos also has experience in repairing and renovating antique apparel. Many customers come in with heirloom wedding dresses, Victorian blouses or flapper dresses that they wish to wear themselves but that are too delicate or damaged by age. She can repair them and make them wearable again.

"Like this blouse here," Mrs. Santos said, pointing to an ivory-colored, fine-net blouse with leg o'mutton sleeves. "It's about 100 years old and the owner wants it recycled so that she can wear it in a portrait. She wants to be the fourth generation in her family to pose wearing this blouse. So, I put in a new lining and mended the frays using materials that won't detract from the authenticity of the garment. It was like working with cobweb."

Mrs. Santos said that she also does many gowns and costumes that are used for Laredo's social functions and celebrations. For instance, this year she is sewing 15 dresses for the girls in Pocahontas' entourage, as well as costumes for their escorts. She has also made gowns for Martha Washington debutantes, for the Black and White Ball debs, and for the Women's City Club Charity Ball.

Lita Santos works at her sewing machine in her Laredo shop. Mrs. Santos has been in the sewing business for many years, but only recently bought her own shop.

"MANY PEOPLE walk in wanting certain things done," she said. "Some bring their own patterns, but others will come in with only an idea or a vague sketch of what they want. Then, I have to translate their ideas into reality. Often, I will design their dresses myself. I love to do this for the customers. I can tell just by the way that they look and by their personality, what they want and what they look good in. It's really a challenge."

She has even designed the wedding gowns for her two daughters. In fact, she intends to make designing a more important part of her career with her own line of clothing.

"I hope to someday have my own line. Right now I'm on the verge of starting my own line for children. I'm calling it 'Little Angels.' I have a contract with a local store to produce children's clothing for them, including some of my own designs. If it goes well, I will branch out into ladies' wear, which is my pet. I love to work with beautiful materials and elegant designs. My biggest thrill is working on ball gowns and evening gowns. It's pretty hard work, but when you see the finished result, it's great."

Ruiz, a tailor at Gateway Cleaners on San Bernardo, has also had a great deal of experience in the clothes-making business. He has been a tailor for more than 43 years, nine of which he has spent in Laredo. While in Laredo, he has worked as a tailor at Norton's (six years,) and at Brothers (one year,) and at Sande's (two years.) He has also worked as a tailor in San Antonio and Houston.

RUIZ HAS been a tailor at Gateway Cleaners for the past six months, and he said his job there entails all facets of the tailoring profession, from sewing a complete suit to performing minor alterations on store-bought clothes, and everything in between, including ironing, taking measurements and restyling out-of-date clothes.

"Since big, wide ties are no longer in fashion, people bring in their old ties and narrow them so that they can wear them and still be in fashion," Ruiz offered as an example. "I also update a lot of sport coats that are out of style by narrowing the lapels."

Ruiz, who is originally from Saltillo, Mexico, said that he became interested in his profession at an early age.

"When I was in just the third or fourth grade, I would go to the tailor shops and watch the tailors work, and I developed a liking for it," he said. "They would give me small sewing tasks to keep me busy. They didn't pay me anything, but I liked it. That is how I learned to sew."

"Then, when I became better, they started paying me 25 cents per week, and I would give half of it to my family. It wasn't much but in those days you could support an entire family on only $3.50 a week," Ruiz said.

AFTER TRAINING at several different tailor shops, Ruiz said that he became a professional tailor when he was 18. He worked in Mexico for several years and then came to the U.S. in 1967.

"Tailoring is an art," he said, "and I always try my best to please the customer."

Christian toys, games enjoy spirited sales

DALLAS (AP) — This is the first year Christian toys and games have been available for Christmas shoppers and retailers say $39.95 dolls named Joy that chirp "Praise the Lord" are enjoying spirited Christmas sales.

A Sarasota, Fla., company called Praise Unlimited said it has sold 11,000 Praise Dolls, which come in two sizes complete with half a dozen phrases recorded on a "salvation disc."

"We feel like a child's mind is like a computer and what you put in is what you get out," said Sue Fust, vice president of Praise Unlimited.

A Sampson doll and three other 4-inch Heroes of the Kingdom action figures made by Weewin Toys and Accessories Inc. of Houston brought $1 million in business the first month they were sold, said company vice president and treasurer Jim Flanagan.

Flanagan said his firm is coming out with a line of stuffed animals featuring Hallelujah Cockatoo, Sanctified Skunk, Promise Puppy and Covenant Cat.

"Our whole thing is to come out with an alternative," Flanagan said. About $1.25 billion is spent on Christian products, and retailers say people are anxious to buy games and toys as well.

"The people are wanting their kids to play with things that keep their minds on the Lord," said Delbert Fields, owner of Deeper Life Book Store in Dallas.

Some bookstore managers are estimating that 10 percent of their business in 1984 will come from the new lines of games and toys, said John Bass, the executive vice president of Christian Booksellers Association in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Last year, Bass said, store managers took in 2 percent of their business from the games and toys. Industry sources say that board games modeled after the spectacular secular success Trivial Pursuit are the biggest sellers so far.

Nearly 900,000 copies of Bible Trivia: The Game Where Trivia is Not Trivial have been sold since April at the price of $29.95, said Douglas Bolton, president of Cadco Games in Chicago.

Private prisons might save money, White says

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas might be able to save money and ease one of its biggest headaches by hiring private companies to build and run prisons, says Gov. Mark White.

Gov. White

It's an idea with major economic attraction and no apparent drawbacks, he said at a Thursday news conference. He likened it to taking out a loan to buy a car.

"When you don't have the cash and you need the car it's the only way you can do it. We don't have the cash," White said.

The 1985 Legislature might be hard-pressed to get through the session without a tax hike. Comptroller Bob Bullock forecasts a revenue shortage of about $900 million. Federal courts have increased the bottom line on state government spending by mandating reforms in prisons and state mental health facilities.

Both operations could be run by private firms hired by the state, according to White. It would save the massive construction costs the state would pay to build prisons and hospitals.

"We get the facility today and we don't have to pay for it in advance," he said. "It is a very viable alternative...Massive new (state-funded) construction programs are out."

Asked about the possible problems of such private facilities, White said, "So far, I haven't seen a whole lot. The magic of it is you don't have to put up $40 million for a new prison. That's the big upside of it."

The governor has no concerns about proper treatment of prisoners in private prisons.

"I'm sure you could find some abuse, but I think that's really something you have to read out of old novels," he said.

White is still hunting for ways to avoid a tax hike. He said he has ruled out "invading" the permanent funds that help pay for public education. The state spends the interest, but not the principal, in the Permanent University and Permanent School funds.

Also Thursday, White said he would sign extradition papers for one of his campaign contributors if he is persuaded that Alabama officials are "seriously interested in prosecuting him."

Clifford Ray Sinclair of Dallas is accused of fraud in Alabama. Officials there say the request has been on White's desk for nine months.

Sinclair is the focus of inquiries concerning a Dallas County condominium development where more than $500 million in questionable loans led to condo glut and the collapse of Empire Savings and Loan Association.

"I am waiting on the report from several people in Alabama on the currency of those charges that are pending," White said at a news conference.

The governor said the extradition request has been on his desk for only five months and that then-Gov. Dolph Briscoe denied the same request in 1978.

Police arrest two men who threatened Cisneros' life

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police have arrested two men who allegedly threatened the life of Mayor Henry Cisneros, officials said.

Cisneros

The arrests, apparently unrelated, came Thursday on the eve of Cisneros' expected announcement he will seek re-election to a third term.

Nazario Hernandez, 29, was charged with making terroristic threats and held in lieu of $3,000 bail set by Municipal Judge Quon Lew.

Police intelligence reports, released by Cisneros this week, said one of the men had threatened to kill the mayor and had been present at some of the mayor's public appearances.

The second man was taken into custody after he allegedly threatened to kill the mayor and other local officials. The man was sent to the San Antonio State Hospital for psychiatric observation. The threats

Groups seek change in water rules

DALLAS (AP) — Officials of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and two leading environmental groups say that water quality standards for the state's rivers, streams and lakes are too lax.

The Texas Department of Water Resources will be asked this month to approve new standards, which critics say are in most ways identical to those that Parks and Wildlife officials, the Sierra Club and the National Audubon Society criticized allegedly were made while the man was in a hair salon and massage parlor.

Cisneros' announcement, scheduled for tonight, comes just after word he has been appointed to the faculty of Trinity University.

Cisneros, currently a professor at the University of Texas at San Antonio, will become a visiting professor at Trinity's urban affairs department next spring.

Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale interviewed Cisneros for the vice presidential slot this summer. But he selected Geraldine Ferraro for the job.

Cisneros would have been a better selection and could have helped the party avoid losses in congressional, state and local races, former Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe said Wednesday.

Briscoe, in a speech to the Austin Democratic Forum, said Cisneros or U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen would have balanced the ticket more.

"If Henry Cisneros had been selected as the vice presidential nominee, that certainly would have made a big difference here in Texas, as well as in other states such as California," the three-term governor said.

Groups seek change in water rules

at a public hearing on Oct. 4.

"It's very disappointing," said Dede Armentrout, the Audubon Society's southwest regional vice president. "It makes you wonder what the point of the public hearing was."

The Water Development Board, policy-making arm of the water department, will be asked to adopt the standards on Dec. 20. They must then be approved by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

It's a natural rivalry. Two cities 20 miles apart. One slightly larger in population, but each dynamic in its own right. Both are progressive and success-oriented. It's only natural in such an environment, rivalry will flourish.

That has been the story surrounding Midland and Odessa for decades. The two communities have competed for virtually everything — new industries, residents, medical facilities, a university and much more.

The competition hasn't always been pleasant. At times the rivalry has bred bitterness and animosity, always-possible byproducts of the competitive spirit. Although it's regrettable, the communities have acquired a reputation around Texas as unfriendly neighbors.

In fact that image was so prevalent that a group of media representatives and community leaders, concerned that it might be impeding attempts to attract new industry, launched a major drive a few months back to dispel the stigma attached to the cities.

That effort has met with a degree of success. It has helped show that Midland and Odessa can work together. That's good because rivalry's bitter fruits aren't wanted here, just the good that results from health competition.

Saturday, residents from both cities will have the opportunity to see the best example of that rivalry when Midland-Lee's Rebels take on the Permian Panthers of Odessa at Texas Tech's Jones Stadium in Lubbock. It's being billed exactly as one might expect: The championship of the Permian Basin. That's what it is because both teams are marching toward the State 4-5A championship and one of them likely will win the crown. Before the championship game, though, they have to play each other. One gets to win and one has to lose. That's the rules of the game.

Personally, of course, we're behind the Rebels 100%. They're representing our city and, we believe, have shown they possess the qualities of champions. It would be a fine feather in our cap for the Rebs to beat Mojo and then win the state championship.

On a larger scale, though, it's exciting to know that District 4-5A is represented by two football powerhouses — Midland Lee and Permian!

We're proud!

Fewer problems

An economy as complicated as this nation's is bound to have its ups and downs. Inevitably while some areas of activity prosper, others will hit a plateau. But what concerns Americans is the broad picture, not the minor fluctuations, and that continues to be bright. The good news this December is that we can look back on two years of steady economic growth, and the beginning of what is expected to be a third.

Officials at the United States Department of Commerce have just reported that spending for construction climbed in October. Robert Ortner, chief economist at Commerce, announced the figure for that month was 1.7 percent above the average from July through September. Construction in all categories rose to an annual rate of $315.8 billion (B).

Apartment construction went ahead in October by 8.7 percent. Residential construction rose to an annual rate of $134 billion (B) in October, an increase of 2.1 percent.

Mr. Ortner called these figures "very encouraging." He said that "with interest rates back down to where they were in the beginning of the year, the worst of the problems in home construction may be behind us."

That's where problems should stay.

Another View:

Canada's 'problem'

Sharing a continent with a huge, powerful neighbor isn't easy. Even the friendliest Canadian governments tend to regard the United States as Canada's biggest foreign-relations problem. But the new Progressive-Conservative government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney sees the United States more as an opportunity than a problem. That positive change ought to be welcomed by Americans and Canadians alike.

Mulroney's foreign minister, Joe Clark, expressed the new outlook in an October speech. "Over the years," he said, "Canadians have feared that pervasive American presence. Yet working with the United States can pay handsome dividends. ... Closer economic relations with the United States, if played right, can enhance our voice and influence in international affairs. ... A strong economy builds respect and allows initiative. Successful nations are listened to."

Clark clearly hopes that closer ties will open American markets to more Canadian products and investment, and thereby strengthen Canada's trade position worldwide. And while he expressed traditional Canadian concern about preserving national sovereignty and culture, his observations contrast sharply with the protectionist economic nationalism practiced for so many years in Canada under former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Clark sees a change in Canadian attitudes toward Canada as well as toward the United States. The impetus is Canadian self-confidence. "Confidence and accomplishment nourish one another," he said. "We are better able to stand on our own than we have ever been. The modern purpose of Canadian nationalism is to express ourselves, not to protect ourselves."

This might be nothing more than the assertive crowing of a government just swept into office in September by a landslide. But even before the parliamentary elections, Canada showed signs of readiness for a more mature relationship with the United States, based on equal partnership rather than domination and subservience. Thus both sides in the Canadian election contest promised closer U.S. ties as a way to benefit Canada.

"Canadianness," said Clark, "depends not on the quality of our fences, but on our eagerness to get out and compete and participate on the world stage. I think it makes sense to start next door." It is a door that the United States should be glad to hold open.

Conservatives set Reagan roast

WASHINGTON — Some unreconstructed conservatives, unhappy over President Reagan's failure to live up to their expectations, plan to stir a series of mini-furores. They will accuse Reagan of giving lip service to issues dear to their hearts while he plays the politics of palliatives and postponement.

The center of the coming confrontation between conservatives and moderates will be the Heritage Foundation, which will fire the first shot in a few days. The foundation is about to release a report that will contain a tough assessment of the Reagan administration's performance in the Middle East.

In language reminiscent of Walter Mondale's campaign attacks, the report will charge: "The administration failed to develop a clear policy on the Arab-Israeli, Lebanese and Iraq-Iran conflicts, or on relations with Israel and Saudi Arabia. Persistent confusion in policy has been the result."

My associate Lucette Lagnado has obtained an advance copy of the report, which was prepared by Daniel Pipes, a former Heritage Foundation associate who is now a professor at the Naval War College in Newport, R.I.

It faults the president for failing to stick to his guns. He "came to office with an overall foreign policy mandate to strengthen pro-American forces, counter Soviet expansion and promote free trade," the report states. Nowhere was the failure more evident, it charges, than in the Middle East.

Here are more highlights from the report: — Lebanon: "The U.S. military effort in Lebanon from August 1982 to February 1984 was probably the darkest foreign policy experience of the Reagan administration," the report states. "Washington's policy was hamstrung by: 1) uncertain domestic political backing for an ambitious military assignment; 2) deployment of troops without a specific mission; 3) inadequate understanding of the factions within Lebanon ... as well as the goals of the Syrian government." Despite this "unfortunate experience" the report declares, "The United States must not abdicate its role there."

— Saudi Arabia: "Unnecessary gestures to retain good will characterize relations with Saudi Arabia," the report says. "This explains why the United States has sold sophisticated arms to Riyadh that the Saudis are incapable of maintaining by themselves." The report deplores U.S. dependence on the Saudi government for political influence in the Middle East, noting that "it is in fact a defensive and weak regime."

— Syria: The administration should adopt a tougher stance and "take steps to isolate Syria and reduce its influence on the Arab states."

— Israel: "Deepen and extend the strategic relationship with Israel as it relates to the Soviet Union and its proxies." Try to de-emphasize the West Bank controversy.

— Libya: "The U.S. should pressure its allies, particularly France, to help contain Libyan adventurism."

— The Iraqi-Iranian war: In one of its few passing grades for the Reagan administration's Middle East efforts, the report says approvingly: "American policy has been consistently through four years of war; condemn both sides' aggression, maintain strict neutrality and quietly give military help to whichever side is losing. This stance is proper in a conflict where both belligerents are governed by anti-Western regimes."

This will be followed by other assaults upon Reagan by the conservatives who once supported him with unabashed ardor. They are determined to push the conservative agenda and let the devil take the White House.

UNDER THE DOME: Sing ho for the open road! Sen.-elect Albert Gore, D-Tenn., and his staff may be leading the gypsy life for a while on Capitol Hill. The congressman has been notified that his digs in the Longworth House Office Building must be vacated by Dec. 15 — but the Senate housekeepers have informed him, he said, that "it might be April before we're permanently settled" on the other side of the hill.

— It's no secret that House Democrats are ready, willing and able to slam President Reagan's legislative "window of opportunity" down on his fingers in the new Congress. Even White House strategists admit there's faint hope of corralling the 39 Democratic defectors they'll need to push the president's program through the House.

What's not generally appreciated, though, is that the Republicans' own unity in the House is not what it was in 1981 when the president was able to ram through his tax and budget cuts. The conservatives who should form the solid core of Reagan's support in the House are more interested in positioning themselves to take control of the party in 1988 than in soldiering for — Perhaps easing the pain of defeat after 22 years in the House, Rep. Joe Minish, D-N.J., has a warm personal letter from Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., to carry away as a testament.

"When President Kennedy spoke of an individual able to make a difference, he was referring to people like yourself, who have worked hard in public life to make our high ideals a reality for the country," the senator wrote.

Arms control in topsy-turvy spin

WASHINGTON — The theological rigidity of the arms control process, which is leading the Reagan administration to dismantle multibillion-dollar submarine-launched missiles in compliance with the never-ratified SALT II treaty, may claim the MX missile as its costliest victim.

Even while charging wholesale violations of the SALT II treaty negotiated by Jimmy Carter and condemned by Ronald Reagan six years ago, the president has decided to abide by it. That leads the administration into awarding contracts to dismantle 96 missiles from six Poseidon submarines which then would become worthless. The combined cost of subs and missiles is nearly $20 billion. The same administration is begging Congress for the MX, 100 of which will cost $21 billion.

Apart from the money, the U.S. is sacrificing survivability. The submerged Poseidon is far less vulnerable than MX missiles in stationary silos, no matter how hardened. Thus, wrecking Poseidons as new Trident-firing subs are commissioned may be too much of the topsy-turvy logic in the arms control process for Republican senators normally in the Reagan camp, but who are inclined to oppose the MX.

Rowland Evans

If they follow those inclinations, the president can kiss the MX goodbye. Another new strategic weapons system would be stillborn, without giving Reagan any of the bargaining counters he hoped it would yield.

The Soviets profess to be functioning under the same SALT II constraints. But instead of dismantling their Yankee-class submarines, they converted two into cruise-missile carriers and are operating four others illegally — part of the familiar pattern of Kremlin cheating.

The Soviets are testing not one new missile permitted by SALT II, but two. One of them, the SS-25, is believed partially deployed. That would seem to dictate utmost speed by the U.S. in obtaining congressional approval for the long-embattled MX missile so that U.S.-Soviet arms talks starting next month in Geneva might begin nearer parity.

Indeed, Senate Republicans suspect that the decision to dismantle the Poseidons may be perceived by Robert McFarlane, the president's national security aide, as a prod to fence-sitting congressmen to vote for the MX. If so, his credibility as a Capitol Hill analyst is diminished.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, incoming chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, moved at once to reverse the dismantling when he learned of it. Ominously for the White House, he withheld a decision on the MX.

Sen. Steve Symms, a Reaganite member of the Budget Committee, made the linkage specific. He wrote Reagan last week that it hardly seemed "rational" to "deploy 100 relatively non-survivable MX missiles when at the same time you are planning to dismantle 96 highly-survivable Poseidon missiles."

Symms is not alone. With the unratified SALT II due to expire a year from now, many senators worried about Soviet gains from treaty non-compliance think it is folly to toss away the nearly $20 billion invested in those six Poseidon submarines in blind devotion to the theology of arms control.

This view of what the arms control process is doing to the U.S.-Soviet balance of nuclear power is supported by Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle's secret testimony to a Senate committee last March 14, which was released last week. Warning that arms control without assured Soviet compliance is dangerous, Perle testified: "We are now having unilateral disarmament inflicted upon us (under) a treaty that is not verifiable and where the Soviets fail to comply."

Perle spoke last March with no idea his testimony would become public one month before the start of new U.S.-Soviet arms control talks. Since then, the U.S. strategic position for renewed negotiations has eroded, with diminished prospects for the MX missile.

In June, the MX escaped execution by the Senate only because of the tie-breaking vote by Vice President George Bush. On Nov. 6, two pro-MX Republicans, Sens. Charles Percy and Roger Jepsen, were defeated by anti-MX Democrats. Now comes the possibility of Republican senators voting against the MX because of the Poseidon dismantling and Soviet cheating.

If so, the reason will have less to do with the intrinsic deterrent value of the MX itself or even the fight over its basing system. It will be the victim of an arms control process that stacks the cards against both rationality and parity for the U.S.

Stick to the facts!

The football coaches do not tell the local TV sports media how to do their job so they in turn should not tell the football coaches how to do theirs. Nor should they fill the airwaves moralizing on the site of the quarter-finals. That decision belongs exclusively to the coaches.

Furthermore, it is not a valid reason, as suggested by some in the media, to play the game locally to keep local merchants happy. Why should that be a criteria? Why should 20,000 fans be denied from seeing the game — and that will be the case due to lack of seating capacity at Ratliff Stadium — to satisfy a special interest group? What is more, going to Lubbock to see the game is a full day. If I buy anything, it will be a program.

The sportscasters don't know what they're talking about. It will be in everyone's best interest if they stick to reporting facts and not creating hysteria with the local merchants.

Support makes a difference

Being the newest United Way agency here in Midland, we wanted to take this opportunity to congratulate Bob Cornelius and his staff on a job well done in exceeding their lofty fund-raising goal of $1,950,000 in 1984.

As a United Way member agency we feel well qualified to vouch for the United Way as an efficient, well-run organization. They are extremely cost conscious and make every effort to see that not a penny raised is wasted. Over the past year or so we have had several meetings with them, along with filling out numerous forms, the net result of which was our being accepted as a member agency. We feel that the United Way had left no stone unturned while considering us for membership. While this process is burdensome to the member agencies, it assures our community that the member agencies are well run.

In summation, we would like to express our gratitude to all those who work with the United Way, both employees and volunteers, as well as those who support them through generous contributions for allowing us and 21 other member agencies to provide Midland with our much needed services. Midland's strength is the generosity of its people, which is sadly missing in other communities.

Stop 'murder on demand'

I would like to direct a few comments to K.P. Walker's letter in reference to abortion.

In regards to "bringing an unwanted fetus into this world being the most terrible, dreadful and horrible deed a woman can do," he is apparently ignorant of the horrifying procedures used to murder these helpless, totally innocent babies. A slow death by being engulfed and burned with saline solution or by being literally torn apart is a much more dreadful deed than bringing any unwanted child into the world.

While I agree not everyone is in a situation to properly raise a child, putting him or her up for adoption is a reasonable, viable solution. I'm sure there are many childless couples eagerly waiting for an infant to adopt and share their lives with.

How anyone could support murder on demand is beyond my understanding. I think it's time for mature, responsible adults to stop using abortion as a full-proof method of birth control.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Dec. 7, the 342nd day of 1984. There are 24 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Dec. 7, 1941, Japanese warplanes attacked the home of the U.S. Pacific fleet at Pearl Harbor on the Hawaiian island of Oahu. The surprise attack was followed by Japan's declaration of war against the United States and Britain.

On this date: In 1787, Delaware became the first state to ratify the U.S. Constitution. In 1817, British naval officer William Bligh, well remembered for the April 1789 mutiny against him on the Bounty, died. In 1836, Martin Van Buren was elected eighth president of the United States.

One year ago: In Spain's second airline disaster in 10 days, two domestic jetliners collided on a fog-shrouded runway at the Madrid airport, killing at least 90 people.

Today's birthdays: Actor Eli Wallach is 69. Actress Ellen Burstyn is 52. Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., is 47. Former all-star catcher Johnny Bench is 57.

Thought for today: "Happiness is not having what you want, but wanting what you have." — Rabbi Hyman Judah Schachtel, author.

Capitol of Angola serves as hideout for bush fighters

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer

JAMBA, Angola — If you have 500 rand ($300) and a good reason, you can board a flight to Jamba, a guerrilla town where men with AK-47 rifles bring tea and tubs of hot bath water at 4:30 a.m.

The trip is not for the faint-hearted or weak-bodied. The ancient DC-3 that flies from Pretoria, the South African capital 375 miles to the southeast, belongs to a charter company called Wonder Air. Sometimes the plane gets stuck in the mud at Jamba's new airstrip and has to be winched out.

The new strip is a big improvement over the old one, however. It's only three bone-crunching hours from Jamba over rutted trails in the back of a flat-bed truck, instead of nine hours.

This sandy settlement of reed and thatch huts under thorn trees, somewhere in southeastern Angola, appears on no maps. It resembles many other unmarked bush communities across Africa.

But it is a capital of sorts, being headquarters of the Free Territory of Angola proclaimed by Jonas Savimbi's anti-Marxist National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, known as UNITA.

UNITA disputes control of the country with the recognized government of the pro-Soviet Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, whose capital is in Luanda, 810 miles to the northwest.

This hideout for bush fighters has 10,000 residents, a hospital, arms factory and schools. But it extends for miles under the cover of trees, offering no visible, large concentrations of people for a possible air attack.

The part that most visitors see has a generator-powered street light and resembles a safari station for big-game hunters. Most guerrillas, including Savimbi, carry side arms. But if there are machine-gun emplacements or foxholes, visitors don't see them.

The anti-Marxist movement appears to achieve one socialist ideal: no one accumulates wealth. Money is not used in Jamba or elsewhere in the one-third of Angola that UNITA claims.

Guerrillas who carry visitors' luggage and serve meals and drinks around the campfire rebuff the tip that is occasionally offered.

No one, from Savimbi on down, is paid.

"The government provides a house and food. We grow vegetables and our meat comes from wild game or cattle," said Cpl. Sosusi Lambo. Necessities like canned milk and batteries are bought by UNITA and distributed free on the basis of need.

Lambo, 29, speaks three European languages and two African languages. His eyeglasses come from West Germany, made to a prescription issued by a doctor in Jamba.

UNITA lives on aid from friendly governments, on captured weapons and clothing, on exports of timber and ivory and on imports of gasoline reportedly supplied free by South Africa. The wine at dinner is South African.

Visitors are welcome at the airstrip by dancers in UNITA green and red who sing a song that when translated goes something like this: "All Angolans must take arms against the Russians and Cubans and beat them."

The immigration table stands beneath canvas strung from thorn trees and near a four-foot-high ant-hill. A two-page form asks whether the visitor has done military service, and what he thinks of "liberated" Angola.

The lead truck in the convoy from the airstrip overturned, spilling the dancers in the mud, injuring several and leaving the rest stunned into silence. When a truckload of visiting reporters caught up with the accident, the uninjured immediately began singing and dancing, and kept it up until the reporters disappeared around the next bend in the road.

Dinner that night, as most nights, was stew. Later, there were clean sheets and blankets on iron beds.

A bugler awoke the camp at 4:30 a.m.

While reporters breakfasted on cold omelets, cold sausages and pickles, guerrillas made their beds.

Savimbi jokes about the comfort UNITA offers visitors. He shares the amused courtesy with which the guerrillas treat their big-city visitors, many of them overweight and nearly all needing frequent soft drinks and snacks to support their unaccustomed exertion.

The guerrillas, to a man, are lean. They eat and drink sparingly, and make little noise. Few smoke. Some say they can march close to 100 miles in 24 hours.

CIA worried about Chinese military power

An Analysis

By MARVIN LEIBSTONE
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Last August, U.S. Navy Secretary John Lehman visited Beijing to discuss a request for help in refurbishing China's coastal defenses.

More recently, a Chinese navy delegation completed discussions in Washington that may lead to purchases of American-made turbine engines and anti-ship missiles.

China's navy today includes a dozen destroyers, 100 diesel-powered submarines, 21 frigates and 10 patrol boats — clearly inadequate for a coastal region as large as China's.

During a 1984 visit to China and in a debate with Walter Mondale, President Reagan emphasized transformation of the Pacific basin into a leading international economic region by 1990.

His administration balks at Marxist-led Nicaragua being a military power, yet praises Marxist-led China offsetting Soviet strength in Asia.

But aspects of Chinese militancy that America should assist or reject are difficult to figure out. Today's values in the Far East can be tomorrow's drawbacks.

While China embraced the United States this year and obtained western technology, it also improved relations with the Soviet Union. A sixth round of Sino-Soviet talks ended in Beijing this month, each nation agreeing to troop reductions along a mutual border.

One cannot help but wonder if, in spite of differences between Beijing and Moscow, China wouldn't side with the Soviet Union during a U.S.-Soviet showdown.

Here's a question that worries CIA and State Department analysts: Does China intend to one day use military strength to dampen either superpower's intentions?

In 1982, China became the world's fifth largest exporter of arms, after being 10th in 1981.

In October, 1984, at Defendory (an international arms exhibition held at Athens, Greece) a Chinese state-controlled corporation displayed multiple rocket launchers, armored personnel carriers, anti-tank missiles and self-propelled mortars modelled after 1950 and 1960 Soviet products, but with improvements and price-tags 30 and 50 percent cheaper than western items.

Chinese small arms are used today in the Iran-Iraq war. They have been sold to Jordan, Egypt, Pakistan and Vietnam for hard currency. Beijing uses this cash to replace that spent on nuclear power and fighter aircraft. It will pay for more destroyers that China plans to have by 1995.

China filled a vacuum after Egypt's Anwar Sadat broke relations with the Soviet Union. Recently, Egypt agreed to purchase Chinese versions of the Soviet MiG 19 and MiG 21 fighter planes. Cairo received two diesel submarines from Beijing this year and contracted for four more.

A U.S. official said last week that Israel may consider purchasing Chinese submarines if Secretary Lehman succeeds in blocking American diesel sub sales to Jerusalem.

A U.S. government report claims that China sold almost $2 billion in arms to Middle Eastern countries annually since 1981 and will provide more in 1985. Egypt and Iraq purchased China's T-69 tank and short- and long-range artillery.

Of particular interest to analysts are Chinese F-6 and F-7 fighter aircraft sold clandestinely in 1983 to Iran, through North Korea. Deceased leader Mao Tse Tung's coinage for nations that provide others with weapons for money, "merchants of death," applies now to China.

Mao swore in the mid-60s that China would never profit from the delivery of arms and rifles, mortars, ammunition and spare parts to North Vietnam and North Korea — all sent free of charge.

However, North Vietnam used those weapons against Chinese troops during Sino-Vietnam border disputes. North Korean purchases ended up among Vietnamese and Pnom-Penh government forces that are still fighting Chinese-backed guerrillas in Kampuchea.

Today, China seems willing to sell weapons to anyone. One analyst believes that China's gun-sales diplomacy replaced normal diplomacy because the latter has not worked well for Beijing.

Small governments paid little attention to China when American and Soviet weapons were offered to developing countries at low cost and Beijing could not compete.

Plaintiff 'good teacher,' MISD head says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dorothy Johnston is a "good teacher" who still is welcome to apply for school administrative positions, Midland public schools Superintendent Dr. Joe Baressi said Thursday.

The superintendent's comments came in the wake of a discrimination suit which Ms. Johnston filed this week in federal court against the Midland Independent School District (MISD).

Ms. Johnston, 60, alleged the MISD violated her constitutional rights by opting not to promote her to an administrative position on the basis of her age and sex.

"I think she's a good teacher," Baressi said. "She was not the best available person when we've had (administrative) vacancies."

Baressi said the school district's promotions policies are "fair" and all qualifications are documented.

Ms. Johnston, a sixth-grade teacher at De Zavala Elementary School, is salaried at $35,072 per year. In the 1982-83 school year, she was president of the Midland Teachers Association, an affiliate of the Texas State Teachers Association. She is a former principal in the Pecos public school system and is former supervisor of the Education Service Center.

Ms. Johnston initiated her complaint against MISD last year at age 59 by filing a grievance with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). At that time, she alleged she was discriminated against on the basis of her sex.

"EXAMINATION of the evidence indicates that there is 'no reasonable cause' to believe that this allegation is true," ruled EEOC Director Alex L. Virgil.

Afterward, the EEOC granted Ms. Johnston the right to appeal her case to federal court, where U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton would hear her case in a non-jury trial.

Ms. Johnston also complained she was prematurely cut from an intern program for prospective administrators and that "various members" of MISD administration made "several remarks" about her being president of the Midland Teachers Association.

Baressi said in the two years he has been MISD superintendent that a couple of EEOC cases, other than Ms. Johnston's, had been filed by non-professional employees of MISD.

"We've been found to be innocent," he said.

In noting that she "has consistently been passed over for promotion," Ms. Johnston said in her complaint that she was "more qualified" for administrative promotions than three faculty members who were promoted. She cited three promotions in 1983 to build her discrimination case:

— Clyde Hobbs, 45, a teacher, was appointed principal of Emerson Elementary School.

— Buddy Collins, 42, was named assistant principal of Goddard Junior High School.

— Pat Alexander, 38, coordinator of the gifted and talented student program at Carver Cultural Center, was assigned the additional duty as administrative supervisor.

IN NOTING her complaint of Collins' promotion, Baressi said the record reflects Ms. Johnston "did not ever apply for a secondary (education) position."

Of the sex-discrimination charge, Baressi said the allegation was invalid. Four of the school system's 21 elementary school principals are women, he said. They and the schools they head up are Toby Ward, 44, of Burnet; Mammie Williams, 52, of Bonham; Mindy Phillips, 40, of Milam, and Beverly Ihinger, 40, of Lamar. Until recently, there was a fifth woman elementary school principal, Dr. Rebecca Moore, 41, who resigned to join her educator-husband, Dr. Duane Moore, in Terre Haute, Ind. Moore, former MISD assistant superintendent for instruction, was named superintendent of the Terre Haute public school system.

On the age issue, Baressi said that faculty members older than age 50 have been promoted.

— Frank Marlow, 55, was promoted to director of elementary education at age 53.

— Jerry Helmers, 55, was promoted to elementary mathematics coordinator at age 54.

"ALL THINGS being equal, we prefer to promote from within," Baressi said.

Ronald Whitmore, director of MISD's Human Resource Services, noted that Ms. Johnston was cut from the MISD's intern program in 1983 after the number of interns was reduced from four to two. The program was set up in 1980 for a two-fold purpose: to give elementary principals the assistance of staff professionals and to "train and develop" candidates to become principals or assistant principals.

"Dorothy had a chance to compete but she did not make the cut," Whitmore said.

In addition, Whitmore said the intern program has been "successful in that it has produced two elementary principals": Ms. Ward and Rob Van Stavern, 41.

Interview-selection committee is made up of both teachers and administrators, Whitmore said.

"I have been a good employee with a good work record and highly satisfactory evaluations," Ms. Johnston said in her EEOC complaint.

Baressi said that Ms. Johnston's federal lawsuit against MISD would "not at all" affect her status with the school.

"She's welcome to apply for any vacancy," he said. "If she's the best person available, she'll be hired."

Lee High students aid foster home

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Appeals to the fortunate from the less fortunate often are publicized to promote good will during the holiday season.

Often, the needy appeal for help from friends, relatives and community organizations.

One plea from Freewill Foster Home Inc. recently caught the attention of a select group of local high school students devoted to spreading the Christmas spirit in the Permian Basin.

Members of the Lee High School Sigma Xi Phi fraternity will be soliciting donations on behalf of the 10-member citizen group dedicated to providing foster care for abused and neglected black children. The event is scheduled for Dec. 15 at Midland Park Mall.

Freewill Foster Home Inc. was created in 1983 to provide foster care for abused and neglected black children who are temporarily removed from their parents, according to Jeannie Hunt, foster home recruiter for the Texas Department of Human Resources.

Once in operation, Freewill Foster Care Inc. will aid in the upkeep of the home as an extra incentive for someone to foster the children. The DHR will place up to six foster children in the home and will take applications and study anyone interested in being foster parents.

Iris Hall, a member of the organization's board of directors said, Freewill Foster Home Inc. was established because "the need for a home such as this in Midland is a reality."

In 1983, the Texas Department of Human Resources reported it placed 20 black children in Midland, ages two months to 10 years, in foster care, said Ms. Hunt.

"Out of these 20 children, six were placed in black foster homes (only three were placed locally), two were placed in the Emergency Shelter, one was placed in an institution and the rest were placed in white foster homes," she added.

To date, an estimated $33,000 in federal grants and donations have been collected for the home to be located on Midland's south side. Another $20,000 is needed before the home is operational, Ms. Hunt said.

According to Ms. Hall, "the main thrust of the organization is to get more black foster parents."

"Although the home is designed primarily for black children, a foster child can be placed in the home," she said.

"We're appealing to the community for help. The whole project has been sort of a blessing. But when you have a big project like this, it's important that you take it one step at a time," she added.

UTPB opens woman's center

'The number-one thing is recruitment'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

With college enrollments dwindling, many schools are looking for new sources of students and new ways to attract them.

One such source is older women who want to return to school, and the University of Texas at the Permian Basin has established a Woman's Center to help lure more of these women back into the classroom.

"The number-one thing is the recruitment," says Elizabeth Mallonee, the new center's director. "Everybody knows enrollment has dropped off, and this has been a market (for potential students) which has been untapped for a long time."

Increasing numbers of women whose families have grown up are returning to school, "And sometimes you need a special structure such as this Women's Center to facilitate that," says Dr. Duane Leach, UTPB president.

"There are some things a university should be doing to serve its constituency, and it's very plain that women are going to comprise a major part of that constituency in the '80s and '90s."

Women currently make up 51 percent of UTPB's enrollment.

Women who have never been to college or have been away from school for a long period are often intimidated by the enrollment process, says Ms. Mallonee.

"After being out of school it's hard to get back into it. They're just fearful of coming."

To ease the transition, the Women's Center will conduct a "back to school" day in early January, with a tour of the campus and tips from faculty members on how to take notes, study and use the library. An on-campus lounge will be available with a library of books by and about women, and lectures, seminars and exhibits will be presented on women's topics.

"And I'll be here at all times to give them help," says Ms. Mallonee, who was the university's personnel director before assuming her new position.

Not all these services will be restricted to UTPB women, according to Ms. Mallonee. "We will be promoting the lectures and seminars throughout the Permian Basin community."

Since UTPB is an upper-level institution with mostly part-time students, it lacks much of the traditional campus atmosphere, which hampers recruitment. Improving the campus atmosphere is a major priority at the school. "And this center would be one more part of that effort," says Ms. Mallonee.

The center will also make up for the lack of a women's studies program at the school by presenting lectures on women's topics "that will not be addressed in a regular curriculum," according to Leach.

To research the Woman's Center, Ms. Mallonee visited similar centers at Southern Methodist University, the University of Cincinnati, the University of Idaho and Washington State University. Since all are four-year schools, "They concentrated on things of interest to younger students," Ms. Mallonee says, while her center will be more concerned with older and returning students. "But we're all providing peer support."

The center will seek to attract women who want to pursue a degree to take advantage of increased professional opportunities for their gender, but more casual students are also welcome, she says.

"When I attended a conference at SMU, I was really encouraged — I talked to a woman who was eighty years old and had lost her husband a few years back. She takes a course every semester, and she really enjoys it."

Midland police arrest man in indecency case

From Staff Reports

Acting on a complaint from a 15-year-old Lee High School student who said she was flashed by a man Wednesday while walking home from school, Midland detectives Thursday arrested a suspect after he allegedly exposed himself to a group of students.

The man, wearing a reddish bathrobe, was arrested by Lt. Jeff Haile and Lt. Earl Luckey at 3:15 p.m. Thursday after the girl identified him as the one who exposed himself to her Wednesday.

According to Haile, the 32-year-old man had walked to a broken-down section of a fence in the backyard of his mother's residence in the 3600 block of Boyd Street where he waited for students to walk by.

Police staked out the residence Thursday after they determined a possible suspect from the girl's description of the man and the residence where the offense took place, Haile said.

Detectives said the man opened his bathrobe and exposed himself to the students. He then turned and, laughing, walked back toward the house, Haile said. The man was arrested at the scene by police.

He was expected to be formally arraigned this morning.

From Staff Reports

A southside Midland couple remains in city jail this morning awaiting arraignment on felony charges of drug possession with intent to distribute.

Midland Police Department Narcotics Division officers, on a search warrant issued Tuesday by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry, executed the warrant at 7 a.m. Thursday.

The man and woman, both 40 years old, were arrested on charges of possession of methamphetamine with intent to distribute, marijuana with intent to distribute and cocaine with intent to distribute, said Lt. Jim Colburn.

An informal test of the substance thought to be cocaine indicated officers' suspicions were "righteous," Colburn said. The alleged cocaine was taken to the Department of Public Safety for official testing, he said.

About 2.5 grams of the alleged cocaine, 10 baggies of marijuana and 5 grams of methamphetamine were confiscated from the couple's South Benton Street residence, Colburn said.

The length of the narcotics officers' investigation of the couple was not disclosed.

Odessans' trial scheduled to begin

From Staff Reports

Two Odessa men suspected in at least two residential burglaries in which about $13,000 worth of jewelry was stolen were scheduled to be tried before 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin at 9 a.m. today.

Manuel Lujan, 33, and Paul Curtis Gipson, 29, both of Odessa, were arrested Sept. 25, after leading police on a high speed chase in northwest Midland. They were indicted on two counts of burglary of a habitation each by a Midland County Grand Jury.

Police said the men were spotted after a description was given of a vehicle allegedly involved in an afternoon residential burglary at 3902 Trinity.

According to police records, Patsy Hochman said she had returned to her residence at 3 p.m. and found the master bedroom door that led to the courtyard open. After finding $3,700 worth of jewelry missing, she contacted police.

Workers at a nearby construction site gave police the description of a red and white Monte Carlo, which police found. The three-minute-long chase, with speeds in excess of 70 mph, ended when Sgt. Jeff Haile shot at the car, hitting it once on the right side window and a couple of times in the trunk, police reports indicate.

Haile, assisted by Lt. Earl Luckey and Sgt. Jerry Compton, arrested the men, who reportedly threw jewelry out the window of their car during the chase, police said.

The jewelry was recovered and returned to the owners.

The two also are suspected of being involved in the burglary of the Phillip and Virginia Earhart residence at 2409 Goddard Court. Reports indicate $9,000 worth of jewelry was recovered and identified by the Earharts.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine set bail at $100,000 for each count of burglary of a habitation.

Two Texans may be candidates for DNC chairman

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texans mentioned as possible candidates for chairman of the national Democratic Party say they are not yet convinced they want the job.

Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple and former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger both said Thursday they want some assurances about the party's future direction before launching campaigns for the post.

"I am trying to find out if the people in the party are serious about changing some of the things the party's been doing," said Temple. "I have no desire to be part of any effort that will be less than 100 percent successful."

Krueger said, "I want to find out if the party is really interested in having a broad base, whether it's willing to reach out to the business community as well as the minorities we traditionally represent, whether it's interested in creating new wealth as well as redistributing existing wealth."

Both also said they had made no decision on whether to actively seek the post. Democratic National Committee members in January will pick a chairman to succeed Charles Manatt.

Gov. Mark White said Thursday that a Texan might be best qualified to lead the national Democratic Party comeback attempt. He said of Temple, "Certainly, if he is interested in it, I'm interested in him having it."

'Closed, closed, closed forever more'

By BRAD BAILEY

DALLAS (AP) — "Closed, closed, closed forever more 1948-1984."

Those are the words of the epithet spray-painted on the window. There's usually not much reason to get sentimental about the mere closing of some old gas station — but then, Meier's Gulf wasn't a gas station.

It was a "service" station, and a venerable one, as service stations go. The station at the corner of Oak Lawn and Maple avenues was a neighborhood institution and among the last of a dying breed in Dallas, the full-service-only station.

About 10 years ago, more than 100 full-service Gulf stations pumped petrol in the Dallas area. Now only about 16 stations remain, according to Gulf distributors.

"I'd bet over the last 10 years at least 50-75 percent (of the full-service stations) have disappeared," says Louis Meier. "They're few and far between. Key to these new self-service operations is high volume and low personnel."

Now the bulldozers are coming to raze Meier's station. It was killed off by development.

"We have shut the doors and we are packing and moving," says Meier, 42, latest and probably last in a line of Meier service station scions.

"We lost our lease. The developers waved their millions under the landowner's nose, and I don't blame him for taking it. They are talking about four stories down and six stories up — basically, what they are going to build is like all the rest of the area:

Louis Meier removes belongings from his Dallas service station. The station is being closed and will be razed to make way for new development.

offices and retail space. I'm caught between the developers and the oil companies. I'm a washout. I'm a has-been. I'm history. I'm over."

If it weren't for the oil companies, Meier contends, he could open up another similar business elsewhere in the neighborhood. But exorbitant leasing costs at the good locations — plus the proliferation of gasoline "outlets" and gas-slitting convenience stores — have just about driven out of business the small places offering full-service gas sales and mechanical work. "Don't get me started on the oil companies, I'll get all cranked up," Meier says — then launches into a tirade on the subject of big, cold companies that seek robotic efficiency, corner all the profits, cut overhead to the bone, eliminate the middle man and forget about the human element.

"It's a big-dog-eat-little-dog old world," he concludes after regaining his breath. Meier has been accustomed to doing business in the manner established during a more genteel era when the "service station guy" was your windshield-wiping, oil-checking friend; the helpful man in a uniform with a pink-red rag in his hand who actually asked if there was a little something more he could do for you.

Meier began pulling dipsticks in 1952, when he was 10 years old. At that time, the station belonged to his late father, A.G. Meier. That was back when all the younger Meier wanted to do was "work for daddy and fool with those old cars," he says.

"I have sat here on this corner and watched the neighborhood change from a very nice neighborhood filled with homes to a neighborhood that had the clubs and nightlife, to one that had the hippies and the quote-unquote 'artistic group of the whole world,' to the neighborhood of the hookers, then the homosexuals, and now to a neighborhood that is filled with condos and cold glass buildings. It's all been here. If I could stay another 20 years, though, I would. But I can't," Meier says.

Judge declares mistrial in wrongful death suit

WACO (AP) — A state district judge has declared a mistrial in the $80 million wrongful death suit filed against Beech Aircraft Corp. by the families of seven men killed in a 1982 plane crash.

State District Judge Derwood Johnson declared the mistrial Thursday when jurors told him they were deadlocked and unable to reach a verdict after deliberating almost 30 hours over six days.

A new trial date has been tentatively set for June 10.

The plaintiffs had accused Beech of negligence in the May 1982 crash by designing a defective aircraft. A large part of the trial centered on the technical specifications and design of the aircraft.

Attorneys for Beech argued that pilot error and a malfunction in the plane's automatic pilot system caused the crash, but plaintiffs' attorneys said a propeller malfunction and a defective tail section design caused the plane to break up in midair and crash.

"Basically we could not determine if the propeller was defective at the time the aircraft left the Beech plant," said jury foreman Calvin Gilmore. "The jury felt like there was not enough evidence from both sides of the aisle to tag anybody with anything."

John Hill, an attorney for the plaintiffs, told jurors that the Beech case probably will be his "last appearance for some time before a court and jury."

"Truth is on the side of the plaintiffs in this case, and we need to know the truth," said Hill, who was elected Texas Supreme Court chief justice in November. "But more importantly, Beech needs to know the truth so they can conduct tests on those planes to see that something like this doesn't happen again."

Houston attorney Joe Jamail, who represents three of the families, told jurors that Beech has provided "an alibi for everything." He accused Beech attorney Richard Caldwell of not basing his five-and-a-half-hour jury summation on facts "in a blatant attempt to get (the jury) to cheapen your verdict."

Murdered man's credit card used

AUSTIN (AP) — Someone has used a credit card that belonged to Larry J. Bourque, a Texas Railroad Commission executive who was killed earlier this week, police said.

Bourque's nude body was found Tuesday in his South Austin home. He had been shot and struck with the blunt end of a hatchet that was found near his body.

Bourque, 46, worked for the commission and previously was an aide to Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple when Temple served in the Texas House.

Burglars break into house take $1,185 worth of items

From Staff Reports

A house at 1006 S. Terrell was burglarized and $1,185 worth of items taken, according to complaints filed with city police Thursday.

Joann Carnero said someone entered the house, which she was moving out of, through a broken window. An AM/FM cassette stereo, pots and pans, pictures, ornaments and a refrigerator were taken, reports said. The burglary took place between Dec. 1 and Thursday.

A $1,000 oboe belonging to William Buss, 3417 N. Midland Drive, Apt. 2305, was reported stolen from a locker in the science hall at Lee High School. According to reports, the instrument was removed from the locked locker between 9:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. Thursday.

An AM/FM cassette stereo and red vinyl seats worth a total of $600 were reported stolen from a 1974 Pontiac TransAm in the The Wagon Yard lot, 410 E. Florida. According to owner M.D. Dodsun, the burglary took place between 5 p.m. Wednesday and 8 a.m. Thursday.

Robert Hollars of 2814 Roosevelt told police a motorcycle parked in his backyard had been vandalized and $567 worth of parts taken Thursday. Hollars also reported a 1973 motorcycle was stolen from the yard Oct. 5.

An Arlington man reported his 1964 Ford T-bird was burglarized and $405 worth of items stolen while it was parked in the La Bodega restaurant parking lot. Robert Bryan Olson said the items included a zip-up bag, radar detector and shaving equipment. Both doors were locked but there were no signs of forced entry, reports said.

Grace Svehlak, 5215 Treemont No. 1077, told police a purse containing $300 in cash was stolen from a shopping basket in the parking lot of Walmart discount store at North Loop 250 and Midkiff Road. Ms. Svehlak said she returned to the store about 20 minutes after she realized she had left the purse but it was gone.

A $250 AM/FM cassette stereo was removed from the dash of a car parked in the driveway at 1512 S. Marshall. Ruben C. Sanchez said the burglary took place between 9:30 p.m. Wednesday and 8 a.m. Thursday. Entry was gained through an unlocked door.

In complaints filed with the Midland County Sheriff's Office, an $800 refrigerator Thursday was reported stolen from a residence at 125 Cheryl Lane. According to Gene Gross, 1506 N. B., the refrigerator was taken sometime in July.

J.N. Lang, of Route 3 Box 389-A, told deputies a .223-caliber Ruger was stolen from his car sometime Wednesday. The car, parked at his residence at Cottonflat and County Road 114, was entered by breaking a window.

Church worker to take funds to Ethiopia

RICHLAND HILLS (AP) — An employee of a church that raised $200,000 for Ethiopian victims of drought and famine says he will travel to the country next week to oversee distribution of food.

Jerry McCaghren is director of Bread for a Hungry World, a project begun by the congregation of Richland Hills Church of Christ just before Thanksgiving.

"In America, we have so much, while they've got 150 million facing the famine," said McCaghren. "It's just in the nature of Americans to help out."

McCaghren took phone calls on Thursday morning from representatives of a Tulsa church that raised $7,000, a Jacksonville church that raised $7,000 and a Plano congregation that had collected $12,000.

The Richland Hills congregation had sent out a nationwide call from the Fort Worth suburb to aid Ethiopian victims.

McCaghren said the organization sent 13,000 letters to Churches of Christ across the country asking for contributions to help the Ethiopians. "We've been flooded with donations," he said.

McCaghren, a former missionary, said the response has come primarily from Church of Christ members, but not exclusively.

"A woman in South Fort Worth came in with $700," he said. "She said she had saved it up for a coat, but she wanted us to have it." He said a group of students at Oklahoma Christian College gave up two meals each, and donated the money they would have spent.

State appeals court reverses Odessa's burglary conviction

ODESSA (AP) — A state appeals court reversed an Odessa man's conviction for burglary of a building because the structure does not fit the legal definition of a building.

John Peterson, 45, was sentenced in April 1983 to 15 years and one month in prison for the February 1982 burglary of a metal shed at Vinson Supply Co.

But the 11th Court of Appeals in Eastland court ruled that the shed, which was open at both ends and surrounded by a chain-link fence, was not legally a building.

"For the purposes of burglary, the word 'building' is defined (in the Texas Penal Code) as 'any enclosed structure intended for use or occupation as a habitation or for some purpose of trade, manufacture, ornament, or use,'" the court said in its Nov. 29 ruling.

U.S. archaeologists welcome in Syria

By G.G. LaBELLE

ASHARA, Syria (AP) — Steve Reimer and Mark Chavalas, American archaeologists, dig for ancient objects in the sun-baked mud of this remote Syrian village with the full approval of a government that is sharply at odds with their own.

But archaeology is of the past; some of the cuneiform tablets and bits of pottery American archaeologists have found here are around 5,000 years old. They believe they have found evidence of an ancient version of a modern-day disposable drinking cup.

Chavalas and Reimer, both studying for doctorates in archaeology at the University of California at Los Angeles, have been coming to Ashara most summers since 1978, a period that has seen Syrian-U.S. relations steadily deteriorate over the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"I've had Syrians tell me they don't like America, but 'you're different,'" Reimer told a reporter visiting this village on the Euphrates River 260 miles north of Damascus, the capital. "The people have just been tremendously friendly."

Reimer and Chavalas said American archaeologists — and those from other countries — have received help and cooperation from the Syrian government throughout the years.

Professor Afif Bahnassi, Syria's director of antiquities, said recent work has been done in Syria by archaeological teams from West Germany, Japan, Belgium and the Netherlands — as well as from France and Italy, whose soldiers served in Lebanon with U.S. Marines as part of the international force that has since been withdrawn.

"We need to know more about the past," Bahnassi replied when asked how the work is kept separated from global politics of the moment.

"We have discovered very exciting things. We are in Syria more rich in tablet archives than any other country."

Bahnassi said an exhibition including clay tablets dug up by Italian archaeologists at Ebla, near the modern city of Idlib in northern Syria, will be shown in 1985 through 1987 in Baltimore, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Detroit and Washington, D.C.

At Ashara, site of the ancient city of Terka, more than 100 similar tablets have been dug up under a project directed by Professor Giorgio Buccellati of UCLA, who began excavating here in 1976. Reimer said some of these tablets — written in Akkadian, a form of old Babylonian — may be shown next fall in Los Angeles.

Reimer and Chavalas took part in the work in Terka — which was at its peak in the period 3000 B.C. to 2400 B.C. — but this past summer they've been excavating in the nearby city of Qraya, which is a bit older.

"Qraya represents a culture we call the proto-literate, the period of history immediately before writing," said Reimer, 30, of Shasta, Calif.

He explained that the proto-literate period was from 3,300 to 3,000 B.C.

Reimer said that the summer's work produced evidence that even in those times people used disposable eating and drinking utensils.

Displaying a bevel-rimmed, clay bowl about three inches high, Reimer called it "the paper cup of the time."

"We're sure they were for throw-away use," he said, explaining 150 of the objects had been found, unbroken, in what was an ancient garbage dump in which broken bits of other, finer pottery also were discovered.

Reimer and Chavalas, also 30 and from Sun Valley, Calif., gave a tour of the excavation at Terka, which consisted of a series of mud-brick walls, the remains of what had been homes, shops and temples to pagan deities.

Chavalas pointed to the walls of one ancient house, which he said had belonged to a man named Puzurum. He said he was writing his Ph.D. thesis on just one room in the house.

"Half the tablets we found here came from that room," he explained.

Looters strip away past from Central America

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — Influenced by wars and collectors' whims, archaeological looters in Mexico and Central America are stripping away the past of nations too poor to protect what remains of their ancient grandeur.

Adding to the damage to centuries-old Indian cities and ceremonial centers by professional looters are smaller-scale thefts by local people and accidents caused by encroaching urbanization, Mexican archaeologists say.

Often looters, working for the lucrative worldwide market, find and loot the sites before they can be located by archaeologists.

In the mountains of Mexico's Pacific coast state of Guerrero, inland from the resort of Acapulco, archaeologists are at work on an Olmec city discovered in 1983 after local people notified authorities of a looting attempt, said Joaquin Garcia Barcena, director of pre-Hispanic monuments for the National Institute of Anthropology and History.

The city, dating from 2400 B.C. to 600 B.C., is "one of the most important sites discovered in recent years" and could show that the Olmecs developed simultaneously on both coasts, Garcia Barcena said in an interview. He added that the looters in this case caused no serious damage.

A 1,500-year-old Mayan tomb that was opened in May near the Rio Azul in northeastern Guatemala was considered a rare find because it was missed by looters who had dug more than 100 tunnels and stole millions of dollars in artifacts from the site in 1979 and 1980.

"The problem is to protect these sites," said Pilar Luna, head of the underwater archaeology department of the National Institute of Anthropology and History. "One can't investigate all of them at the same time, but they can be protected."

"When we have the resources and personnel, and are equipped to investigate, it's likely we won't have any sites."

The loss, archaeologists say, is the hidden history reachable only if the pieces are studied in an undisturbed state.

"When you take it out of the country, that is only half the trouble," said Jaime Litvak, director of the National University's Institute of Anthropological Research. "Where the evil begins is in taking it from the site because you are not going to get the data. Archaeologists need data that goes with the piece and they need decent data."

Looting today is stimulated by collectors, often motivated by investment rather than artistic and historical interest, the archaeologists said. But Litvak said many unknowingly buy fakes.

"If they (thieves) can't loot the piece you want, they'll fake you one," he said. So-called experts in league with the looters "authenticate" the pieces, he said.

Styles of artifacts go in and out of vogue like old baseball cards, Litvak said, and prices rise and fall with availability and popularity.

"You can see wars in the market prices," he said. "Central American is getting cheaper."

In El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala, where guerrilla movements are fighting the governments, sites are being looted, he said.

"If you've got a lawless situation and no one controls the region you're going to have everything from planting marijuana and poppies to looting of pieces."

The main market for ancient artifacts appears to have switched from the United States, which has an agreement with Mexico and other countries for the return of stolen pieces, to Europe, particularly Paris and Zurich, Switzerland, but Americans are still among the customers, Litvak said.

"The United States is respecting its international commitments and when it can catch a piece, it does. It is a free market in Europe."

Mexico's laws barred private collection after 1972, required registration of any collections begun before that, and prohibited the export of artifacts, making looting more difficult than in Guatemala, which is full of Mayan treasures, or other countries without such laws.

But Garcia Barcena says it would take three to four times the 1,500 guards the institute has now to protect the major sites among the estimated hundreds of thousands in Mexico.

School's images can make or break them

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

Quick: what pops into your mind when someone says "University of Miami"? Berkeley? Bennington? Brooklyn College? Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology?

Schools' images can sometimes make or break them, say some higher education administrators, especially if the image is negative, misleading or outdated and thus stigmatizes the school and repels potential students.

True or not, many high school students and their parents regard the University of Miami as "Sun-tan U." Berkeley as a hotbed of radicalism, Bennington as a pricey haven for artists in the Vermont woods, and Brooklyn College as a once glorious but now down-trodden city school.

Image is a growing concern at colleges and universities as competition intensifies to attract able high school graduates and as the quality and direction of higher education comes under attack in federal studies.

In some cases, college images are simply outmoded. Berkeley is a long way from its 1960s radical past. Most students are still politically liberal. About 70 percent voted Democratic, according to spokesman Ray Colvig. But there is now a sizable conservative presence on campus. The "Berkeley Barb," the prototype for underground student newspapers a generation ago, died four years ago, replaced by a conservative weekly, the "Berkeley Review."

Bennington is still exceptionally expensive — about $16,000 a year total cost — and still appeals to the artistically inclined. But president Michael Hooker has introduced computers into the curriculum to broaden the school's appeal.

"We always had a certain smugness. We were sometimes misperceived as being a luxury that students could ill afford," he said.

Likewise, land grant schools like Michigan State University have outgrown condescending imagery like "Cow College," or "Moo U." Most remain committed to agricultural research, but many have also taken the lead in such areas as biogenetic engineering.

Occasionally a school's image problem is lack of image. Rose-Hulman Tech, one of the nation's better technical schools, is virtually unknown outside Terre Haute, Ind. Its anonymity is due partly to a name change in 1972, after being known as Rose Polytechnic for 100 years, and partly to a lack of athletic teams to get the school's name on television.

Self-effacing humor has helped solve the problem, said Rose-Hulman president Sam Hulbert. He recently started "Operation Catapult" as an attention-getter — a tongue-in-cheek mailer to prospective students that includes a "Ski Terre Haute" poster and boasts that a major campus activity is "going to the local truck stop and watching gas tanks rust."

Apparently it's working. This fall, there were 2,809 applications for 350 freshman spots, and applications have been up "a couple of hundred each year," Hulbert said.

Other schools have had less humorous struggles with image. The University of Miami for most of its 59-year history drew smirks as a haven for the casual student. In 1980, the image worsened amid Miami's racial unrest and increasing drug trafficking.

"Many hundreds of students who had planned to study here did not," said president Edward T. Foote II.

While Foote conceded in an interview that his school would probably be associated with nice weather "as long as there's snow in New York City," the university has reversed the slide in applications, with freshmen enrollment up to 1,772 this fall from 1,463 a year earlier.

Miami opened an honors college this fall and boosted the number of merit scholarships to attract academically able students. As a result, the school claims that mean verbal and math Scholastic Aptitude Test scores of its latest freshmen class are 1,059, up 97 points from five years ago, placing it among the 200 most competitive colleges in the country.

High colonic enemas have caused deaths

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine swears by the high colonic enema. He says it cleans the poisons out of the system and helps him lose weight, and he has been urging me to try it. I asked my doctor about it, and he said that with friends like that, who needs enemies. May I have your opinion on the high colonic enema — Russ, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Russ: I can only echo your physician's sentiments. Given the choice of accepting medical advice from a friend or from a physician, I would choose the latter. Claims for benefits of the high colonic enema range from a cure for acne to a cure for cancer, but hard evidence of its effectiveness is noticeably lacking. On the other hand, there have been reports of deaths associated with the procedure.

There are a number of steps patients can take to enhance their health, including stopping smoking and reducing their intake of sodium and saturated fats. The use of high colonic enemas does not fall within this category.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any danger for a person who has general good health to visit an area where the altitude is high? How would this apply to children and older people? — Stephen, Waterbury, Conn.

Dear Stephen: Many people who visit areas of high altitude (over 8,000 feet) develop symptoms of nausea, dizziness, fatigue, shortness of breath, and insomnia. The risk is increased for smokers and for patients with conditions such as emphysema, as well as for children under six years old.

Otherwise, a person's age and physical condition do not appear to be important factors in the development of these symptoms.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have two questions about what happens if a pregnant woman has cancer. First, is there a greater chance that the cancer will spread because the woman is pregnant? And second, what kind of treatment would be best for the woman? — Donna, Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Donna: According to Dr. Spencer O. Raab, of East Carolina School of Medicine in Greenville, N.C., pregnancy does not affect the spread of cancer. As for treatment, surgery would be preferable to either radiation or chemotherapy because it is the least likely form of treatment to have any lasting effect on the fetus.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would the use of birth control pills have anything to do with why a woman has started getting migraine headaches? — Toni, Tampa, Fla.

Dear Toni: Migraine headaches are more common in women than in men and are related to changing hormone levels. Therefore, the use of birth control pills may be associated with migraine in the same way that menstruation is.

For Charlene, Rochester, N.Y.: Dr. Alan Hinman, of the Centers of Disease Control, says that complications associated with measles (such as pneumonia) may be more common in children than they are in adults.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Offenders, victims usually belong to same race

CHICAGO (AP) — A 17-year-old black youth is gunned down in broad daylight. It has happened dozens of times before and was rarely noticed. But this time it's different. The city is outraged.

His name was Ben Wilson. He was a high school basketball player, maybe the best in America. And he was killed near his South Side school after a scuffle during which police say two black youths tried to rob him.

Police called it a "random and senseless act." They have seen it all too often. This year, Wilson was the 669th murder victim in Chicago. Nearly 100 were in their teens.

And, as with Wilson, most victims and most killers have been black, though blacks account for only 40 percent of Chicago's population.

Last year, police records show that in 572 homicides listing offender and victim, 467 blacks killed 412 black people. In contrast, 41 whites killed 34 white people and there were 62 Hispanic homicide victims. The remaining were interracial or involved other minorities.

Nationally, the Justice Department says in about 75 percent of violent crimes, the victim and offender are believed to be the same race. Blacks are more than twice as likely to be robbed and more likely to be aggravated assault victims. Black-on-black crime is a chilling fact of life in many of Chicago's black neighborhoods — as well as most other major cities across the nation.

Reagan faces growing pressure to get tough with South Africa

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today faced growing pressure to get tough with South Africa as he met with Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, the black winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize who says U.S. policies are "immoral, evil and totally unchristian" because they encourage South African apartheid.

Aides said Reagan would tell Tutu, who sought the meeting, that his administration is forthright in its opposition to apartheid and that U.S. policy is helping to ease the plight of South Africa's 22 million blacks, who have been subjected to decades of iron-fisted rule by the white minority.

Tutu was expected to make a statement to reporters after the meeting. The South African cleric planned to leave later in the day for Oslo, where he will receive the Nobel Peace Prize.

But even as Reagan and Tutu prepared to meet, pressures mounted in the Congress and in the streets for a change in policy. Demonstrators seeking the release of imprisoned black labor leaders marched outside South African diplomatic posts throughout the United States.

Two children of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy were arrested Thursday outside the embassy in Washington. Douglas Kennedy, 17, and his sister Rory Kennedy, 15, were accused of violating city codes for demonstrating within 500 feet of the embassy.

"My whole family has been concerned with this issue for a long time," said Douglas Kennedy, a student here.

The influential new chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., joined lawmakers urging President Reagan to take a stronger stand against apartheid.

Lugar and Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., wrote a private letter to Reagan late last week, asking him to look at other options to the administration's so-called "constructive engagement" policy, which shuns economic and political sanctions in favor of quiet diplomacy.

"Clearly I think we need to do more than the 'constructive engagement' idea," said Lugar, who generally backs Reagan administration policy and is in line to become chairman of the Foreign Relations panel in the new Congress.

Thirty-five conservative House members, in a letter to South African Ambassador Bernardus Fourie, have vowed to seek diplomatic and economic sanctions unless the white-ruled government takes concrete steps to end apartheid.

Anger of blacks and other opponents of apartheid policies has been fed by recent actions of the South African government in surrounding and searching entire towns occupied by blacks. Hundreds of people have been detained, many without charges, including 21 black labor leaders. Dozens of blacks have been killed in riots.

Tutu received a standing ovation from the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa Tuesday when he denounced the administration's policy, which he said "has worsened our situation on apartheid."

"Apartheid is as evil, as immoral, as unchristian, in my view, as Nazism, and in my view the Reagan administration's support and collaboration with it is equally immoral, evil and totally unchristian," he said.

Tutu has urged the United States to use economic pressure to force the South African government to deal directly with the black population. But U.S. officials say such actions wouldn't work.

Some GOP senators urge Reagan to consider Social Security cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite President Reagan's campaign pledge that Social Security would not be cut, some Republican senators are urging him to consider including the giant retirement system among the administration's targets in the drive to cut federal spending.

At a private Capitol Hill meeting with White House Budget Director David A. Stockman on Wednesday and again at a meeting with Reagan on Thursday, several senior GOP senators suggested that cost-of-living increases for Social Security be frozen along with other programs the president has included in a tentative plan to achieve $33.6 billion in domestic spending savings.

Following the session with Reagan on Thursday, Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said, "The position was stated by a number of other senators that if you're going to freeze cost-of-living (adjustments), obviously, to be fair, you ought to freeze everything."

"A number of senators indicated that Social Security — a freeze, not a cut, for one year — ought to be considered," Domenici said.

Domenici previously has said the automatic boosts in Social Security benefits should be restrained, but not cut, if there is to be some overall move to cap federal spending.

Social Security became a favorite subject of Democrats during this year's presidential campaign.

Democratic presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale charged that Reagan had a secret plan to curtail benefits for future retirees.

Reagan replied, "A president should never say 'never,' but I am going to violate that rule and say 'never.' I will never stand for reduction in Social Security benefits to people who are now getting them." Later he amended this to include recipients "now and in the future."

On Thursday, White House spokesman Larry Speakes reiterated "the president has made it emphatic that he will not touch Social Security in any shape, form or fashion."

But Speakes sidestepped questions about whether the president would veto legislation Congress passed to curtail Social Security increases.

The president gave his Cabinet orders Wednesday to achieve $33.6 billion in domestic spending savings next year through a proposed plan that would freeze, reduce or elimi-

Coming soon: 'Selling of the Budget, 1986'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, expecting no honeymoon the second time around, is trying to sell his 1986 budget to Congress even before he has finished deciding what it will contain.

"We've got to develop a proposal that can move quickly and so we've got to start pre-selling it to our friends and allies," one White House official said in an interview.

"Anything we propose is going to be extremely difficult to pass," he added. "I don't think there is a honeymoon period for the beginning of a second term."

This official, closely involved in the process of preparing the fiscal year 1986 budget that will be presented to Congress next month, said it was important for the White House to take advantage of the momentum generated by Reagan's landslide re-election and his Jan. 21 inauguration to a second term.

"You've got to try and build toward certain key votes as quickly as possible and take advantage of the momentum and the public support you can develop," he said.

"I don't want to suggest that the opposition might want to stall or try to get as far away from the election as possible before they have some of these considered, but I think it's incumbent on us to move as fast as possible."

Administration aides have no illusions about congressional resistance to deeper cuts in social programs — many of which affect middle-class wage earners — designed to cut the record federal deficit to about $100 billion by 1988.

In 1981, Reagan's controversial economic program was approved by Congress by a very slim margin when a coalition of conservative Democrats called the Boll Weevils joined forces with Republicans to deliver the necessary votes.

nate some of the government's most politically popular programs, and cut the pay of all federal civilian employees by 5 percent.

Overall, Reagan has set a goal of reducing spending by $42 billion in the 1986 fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1, with the aim of holding total spending to current levels.

Reagan gave GOP congressional leaders a pep talk on his plan during a 90-minute White-House meeting Thursday, telling the legislators, "We have no alternative to spending controls. We must not spend one nickel more next year than we spent this year."

Reagan added he intends to "continue economic growth with no tax increase, and I underline, no tax increase."

"I am willing to lead the charge, to go to the people," Reagan told the legislators.

Speakes said the president would discuss his plans during his State of the Union address to Congress in January, but Speakes declined to say when Reagan would answer reporters' questions about the proposals.

In a symbolic move to build support, Reagan and the Republican congressional leaders indicated they would accept a 10 percent pay cut.

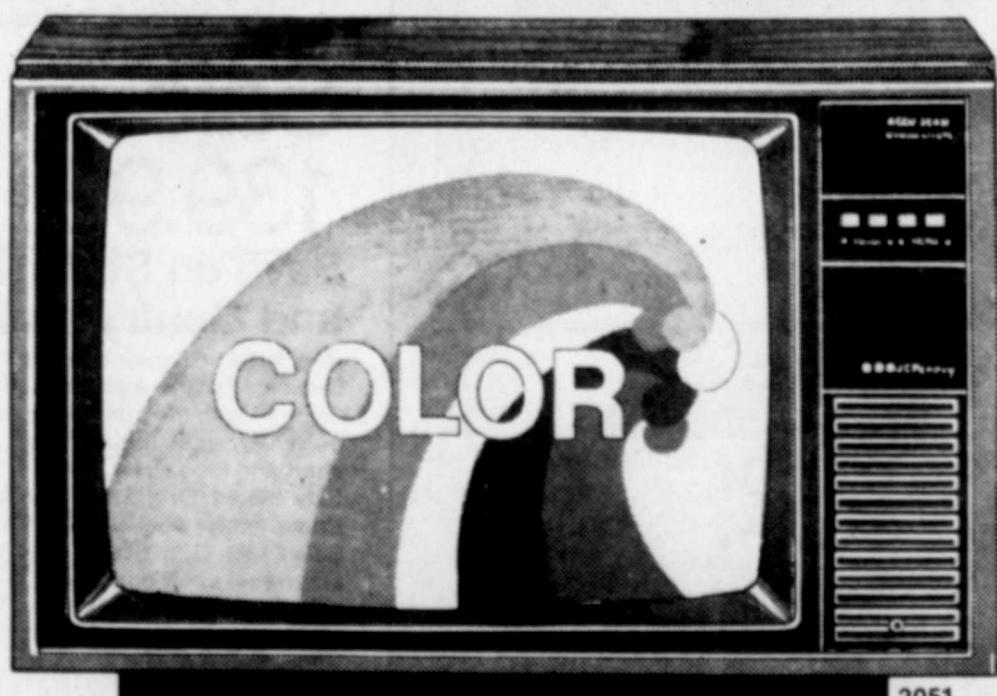

Speakes said Reagan, himself, would be willing to take a 10 percent pay cut to help lead the way on other budget cuts. The president receives a $200,000 salary, plus $50,000 for expenses.

The spokesman said such a plan, as discussed earlier by some Republican senators, would apply to members of Congress, the Cabinet and presidential appointees. "The president would go along with that," Speakes said. Members of Congress are paid $72,200 annually.

The Republicans who met with Reagan Thursday generally supported his objective, but they did not embrace the specifics of his tentative budget plans.

"I think in a generic sense, the freeze concept generally sets well with the American people," said House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill. "However, when you get to the individual specifics...my Adam's apple was regurgitated and I had to swallow it again on a few of these items."

Judge orders trial in 'sex slave' case

RED BLUFF, Calif. (AP) — A mill worker must stand trial on charges he kidnapped and kept as a sex slave for seven years a woman who says she stopped pleading for freedom when the man told her a society of slave owners would find and torture her if she escaped.

Justice Court Judge Dennis Murray on Thursday ordered Cameron Hooker to stand trial after two days of testimony by the woman and Hooker's wife at a preliminary hearing.

According to testimony, Hooker, 31, kidnapped the woman at knifepoint in May 1977, imprisoned her in locked boxes for long periods, and forced her to commit various sex acts, usually while bound to a bed or homemade torture rack.

Citing "extremely serious and, to put it mildly, bizarre" circumstances, Murray scheduled a Dec. 17 trial on a kidnap charge and six felony sex charges, including rape and sodomy. He ordered Hooker to remain in custody in lieu of $500,000 bond pending arraignment.

The hitchhiker, now 27, testified under questioning by defense attorney Rolland Papendick that she had told Hooker and written in a diary that she loved him. But she added that she feared him and resisted every time he had sex with her, usually after he had bound her to a bed or a homemade torture rack.

"I kept telling him over and over that I wanted to leave," she said.

After being confined for several years, she said, she didn't try to escape or notify police when Hooker eased the restrictions and let her hold a job, visit her family or go jogging or on shopping trips.

"I was too afraid to tell anyone...I was afraid of people getting hurt," she said, explaining that Hooker had convinced her that he belonged to a secret society of slave owners known as "The Company" that would track down runaway slaves and torture them before returning them to their owners.

The woman said she signed a contract with Hooker to be his slave because "Cameron told me...if I didn't sign the contract, I would wish I had."

She said she believed members of the society watched her home and tapped the telephone until the defendant's wife, Janice Hooker, told her three months ago that "The Company" was fictitious.

She left the next day, returning to her parents' Southern California home.

Bush, Ferraro lunch together

WASHINGTON (AP) — They didn't talk about the time she referred to him and President Reagan as "The Gipper and the Gaffer." Nor was there any mention of the day he used off-color language to boast he had whipped her in a debate. There were no apologies offered or expected.

When Vice President George Bush and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro sat down for lunch Thursday in his executive office, it was largely light-hearted talk about their families and their future and rehearsing the campaign when they were rivals in the first man-versus-woman vice presidential race.

"I'd have preferred to be the host today, but under the circumstances I'll take what I can get," said Ms. Ferraro, who was defeated with Walter Mondale in last month's election.

Bush initiated the meeting when the New York congresswoman called him on election night with congratulations.

There has been no similar meeting between Reagan and Mondale.

"It was delightful to be invited

Vice President George Bush and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, rivals in the first man-vs.-woman vice presidential race, pose together just before lunch in Bush's Washington office Thursday.

over to see the office I would have had...It was a lovely, lovely lunch," Ms. Ferraro said afterwards, looking tanned from a post-election vacation on St. Croix in the Virgin Islands.

She said she harbored no hard feelings toward Bush on his success.

"I have the tan and Vice President Bush does not so I was not envious and there's always tomorrow, which I will not sing to you today," she said laughingly.

Ms. Ferraro is believed to be mulling a run for the Senate in 1986 or even a bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988.

Offering a window on her immediate plans, Ms. Ferraro said she and Bush "talked a little bit about what I'm going to do in the future...about making a lot of money, which I'm going to do, and writing a book because I've got to pay off accountants' fees."

Bush described the luncheon as "a very pleasant encounter."

CIA sent manuals 'up, up and away' to Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA used balloons to float some of its Nicaraguan rebel manuals into the leftist-ruled nation, apparently in a bid to scare government leaders there, administration and congressional officials say.

The manual contains advice on the "selective use of violence" to "neutralize" Nicaraguan officials, but U.S. officials said the balloon drop was aimed at scaring the leftist government by creating the impression that the CIA-backed rebel movement was stronger than it was.

The officials, who insisted on anonymity, said the program was stopped after fewer than 100 manuals were sent aloft from Honduras last March because funds for the covert operation were running short. They said the balloon action had no discernible effect on the Nicaraguan government.

The 90-page, Spanish-language manual, entitled "Psychological Operations in Guerrilla War," also called for creating "martyrs" for the cause.

NATION IN BRIEF

Army corrects oversight 43 years after battle

HONOLULU (AP) — Forty-three years after the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, the Army is making up for an oversight by paying tribute to three civilian firefighters who died in the attack but were never honored along with their injured comrades.

Presentation of the Purple Heart to the three men was among the ceremonies scheduled here today to mark the anniversary of the Dec. 7, 1941 attack.

Six firefighters who were wounded but survived the attack were given Purple Hearts in 1944, but the three who died were somehow overlooked.

The oversight was noticed earlier this year by fire Capt. Walter Komatsubara, who was researching fire prevention programs. The department officially requested the posthumous awards.

Gen. James Lee, commander of Army personnel in the Western Pacific, was to present the medals to survivors of the three, Capt. John Carreira, Capt. Thomas Macy, and hoseman Harry T.L. Pang.

Dolls have fake papers

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — The 5,208 fake Cabbage Patch dolls seized in this Detroit suburb were duplicates of the real thing right down to the phony adoption papers, an FBI agent said.

The dolls, manufactured in Taiwan, were confiscated just after they were unloaded from a truck at an office building Tuesday, agent John Anthony said Wednesday. He said no arrests were made.

The agency launched an investigation last month to determine if the copyright on the pie-faced dolls, produced by Coleco Industries, was being violated.

Alleged radicals indicted

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Two alleged left-wing radicals could be sentenced to up to 100 years in prison if convicted of weapons and explosives charges contained in a federal indictment.

Indicted Thursday were Susan Lisa Rosenberg, 29, who had been sought in connection with the bungled 1981 Brink's robbery in Nanuet, N.Y., and Timothy H. Blunk, 27, who authorities say is a member of the May 19 movement, an offshoot of the Weather Underground.

Japan plans for space-station module

Scientists develop small hovering vehicle

By DAVID LAMMERS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Japan is likely to have a laboratory module on board the U.S. manned space station tentatively planned for launching in 1992, and is considering adding a free flying vehicle that would hover nearby.

Japanese space scientists have suggested a small hovering vehicle that could also fly as far as 60 miles from the mother station.

In addition, a Japanese astronaut may be among the crew of six to eight aboard the space station. About 500 Japanese already have applied for the job; three Japanese will be selected for training, but only one is likely to work in space, officials here said in interviews.

"A major decision we have yet to make is whether to go for a free flying module or settle for a pressurized module (on board), which would be easier in terms of money and technology," said Minoru Oda, a director at the government's Institute of Space and Astronautical Science.

President Reagan said in January that the United States would seek participation from Japan, Western Europe and Canada in the project.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration administrator, James M. Beggs, has said the United States would spend about $8 billion on the space station, regardless of whether other nations join in. The U.S. Congress recently approved the Reagan administration's initial request for $500 million for preliminary studies, to be spent in fiscal year 1985.

Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) has proposed that initial Japanese research spending be limited to about $13.3 million over the next two years.

The MITI request is subject to review by the Ministry of Finance, which is seeking to reduce the central government's budget proposals, and would require approval by the Diet, Japan's parliament, in the spring.

Japan's overall spending on the space station might total about $1 billion, said Akio Ohnishi of MITI's Space Industry Office. This is twice Japan's current annual spending on space research.

"A major decision we have yet to make is whether to go for a free flying module or settle for a pressurized module (on board), which would be easier in terms of money and technology."

— Minoru Oda, a director at Japan's Institute of Space and Astronautical Science.

Oda added that NASA is seeking a memorandum of understanding from Japan, before the spring session of the Diet, on whether Japan will participate, requiring that consensus be reached soon.

"The preliminary decision to go ahead has basically been made, but it has not been finalized," Oda added.

The design of the U.S. space station would permit other nations to develop attachable modules connected by a pressurized, multiple docking adaptor. Power would be generated by huge solar panels, giving the device a bird-like appearance.

Of importance to Japanese scientists is the decision whether to press ahead for a free-flying module that would provide a microgravity environment for experiments, he said.

"If we have to stick to a pressurized module, because of the constraints of financing and Japan's technology, then there are only a few benefits for Japanese scientists," Oda said.

A non-pressurized module would be required for the manned space station to carry out "almost all of the interesting scientific experiments," Oda said, including astrophysical experiments his institute hopes to perform.

Newly elected Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas, who is also in the extermination business in Sugarland, looks for pests on the floor of a Capitol Hill office. DeLay says that the House office buildings are crawling with mice and cockroaches and thinks that he should be made chairman of the committee which is in charge of building maintenance.

New congressman bugged by mice, roaches in offices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Other newly elected congressmen might be staring in awe at the Capitol's high ceilings and elegant chandeliers, but incoming Rep. Tom DeLay, an exterminator from Texas, is watching cockroaches crawl up the walls.

"I have a peripheral vision because when you're looking for insects you've got to," DeLay says.

"If an ant was crawling up that wall over there, I could see it. When we were in the conference room over in the Cannon Building, there was a roach going up the wall behind the coffee.

"Just looking at the House office buildings, I could make a fortune here if it wasn't a conflict of interest," he said in an interview.

DeLay, 37, a Republican from Sugarland, a suburb southeast of Houston, won the seat being vacated by Republican Ron Paul, who ran unsuccessfully for the Senate.

DeLay arrived in Washington last week to attend orientation sessions for freshman legislators, and will be sworn in when Congress convenes Jan. 3.

DeLay said he tries not to let his other vocation interfere with his new one.

"When I see one like yesterday, I don't go. 'A roach' he said, flinging his arm to point out an imaginary insect. "People get offended."

But he said he couldn't help noticing that the House office buildings are "disgusting" with cockroaches and that the Cannon House Office Building in particular "is just eat up with mice."

"I don't know what committee takes care of the maintenance of the buildings, but they ought to make me chairman," he said. "I may be the first Republican chairman, because I could sure fix it for them. They say there's nothing you can do. Well, there certainly is. All you have to do is do a good job."

DeLay, who owns a medium-sized pest control company, said he was still crawling around under houses as recently as last May's primary in Texas because his company's manager quit in the middle of the campaign.

What do polls' disclaimers mean?

By BILL SIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK — One curiosity about political polls is a standard statement — it may be viewed either as a disclaimer or an acknowledgment — which goes like this: The results are valid within plus or minus 5 percent at the 95 percent confidence level.

What sounds to most of us like a bit of mumbo-jumbo is, to those well-versed in polling or in the mathematical probabilities that underlie polling, a clear statement about the reliability of the data. In short, they understand what it means.

And, according to them, this is, in layman's terms, the meaning: If the same questions had been asked in the same way and during the same time period to the same number of people in the same area, 95 times out of 100 the percentages of answers pro and con would be within 5 percent, plus or minus, of the percentages listed this time.

So, assume you're a political candidate and your pollster hands you a poll, plus the standard statement. What then? "The next step is a step of faith, if you're predicting election outcomes," said Doug Buffalo, acting director of the Center for Research and Public Policy at the University of Arkansas in Little Rock.

Even in a close race, you could have confidence in figures that show you ahead, even if the margin is, say, a narrowing 53 percent for you, 47 percent against you, according to David Martin of Area Marketing Research Associates in Little Rock. His firm did the polling this year for Tommy Robinson, congressman-elect in the 2nd District. How much confidence you should put in the numbers depends, he says, on what the polls have been showing all along.

"If the figures fit with what you've been tracking, they could still be regarded as sound, even in a close race, especially if the poll has been done properly," he said.

POLLS WERE more a part of the elections in 1984 than any other year. Robinson talked about how his polls showed him ahead; his Republican opponent, Judy Petty, talked about her polls showing her doing well; Jim Taylor, the independent in that race, didn't have polls, but almost had to produce one to get a place in a debate in that race; the nightly news on television often referred to polls showing President Reagan ahead and the Democratic presidential nominee, Walter F. Mondale, had to spend a lot of his time in the closing weeks of the campaign telling audiences that the only poll that mattered was the vote of the people on election day.

Another aspect of polls showed on election day when they were used by nationwide news agencies to predict the outcome of elections, particularly the projected Reagan victory before the polls had closed out West.

What do pollsters think of this practice?

"I resent it," said Dale Enoch of Precision Research Inc. of Little Rock. "I haven't heard a rationale for it yet that makes a lick of sense. The idea that they're withholding news doesn't hold water. If they were going to suppress it until December, that would be another matter. But we're talking about waiting about two hours. The fact is, they've got a new toy and they just can't resist playing with it."

Buffalo says, "My gut feeling is that it is probably bad. Suppose I'm out in California waiting to vote. I would probably go ahead and vote, after hearing a projection. But it's going to take some of the edge off, even though local races were not yet decided. It takes some of the democratic process out of the election to say how it's going to come out. It removes part of the feeling of personal control. And it's ironic that television stations run all these advertisements encouraging people to vote — 'your vote counts,' 'your vote makes a difference' — and then tell thousands of people waiting in line to vote that it won't really make any difference. The people in California had to feel funny about that."

MARTIN, WHOSE AMRA did the ABC exit poll in Arkansas, isn't bothered much about projections before polls close. "I may be biased," he said. "Let me use a sports analogy. Suppose you and I are Arkansas fans and we're at a Texas-Arkansas football game and it's in the fourth quarter. Texas is leading 35 to 20. You and I aren't going to go over and sit on the Texas side, and I don't think people change their votes, either. Now, maybe we'll leave early, which would correspond to not voting, but Texas fans may leave early, too. The result may affect the total voter turnout, but each side would be equally affected."

The principles of mathematical probabilities underlie polling and give it whatever validity it has. The principles are fascinating. It seems, according to Martin, Enoch and Buffalo, that the sentiments of Arkansas' 2.3 million people can be determined by getting responses to questions from a random sample of only 400. Statistically, the results would be about as satisfactory if the responses came from as few as 360 to 380 people, but the round number commonly used is about 400. How can it be that answers from only 400 people reflect the thinking of so many?

"Well, strictly speaking, before you do a survey, you don't know how many responses you need," Buffalo said. "The mathematical formula is there, of course, telling you what number it's supposed to be.

And, when you start out, getting the first few responses, you begin to get a certain percentage thinks this, a certain percentage thinks that. And the early findings may change as you get more and more responses. But you find, as you begin to collect more and more responses, that pretty soon the pattern emerges — this percentage thinks X, that percentage thinks Y, and it stays the same, no matter how many more people you call. You could wind up calling everybody in the state and not change the percentages significantly once you reach that point."

WHY IS THE principle of mathematical probability sound? Martin offers this explanation: "There are just so many opinions. They key is to find out how many opinions there are. Once that's done, you're only refining that number. Ask the first 10 people and you begin to get a feel for it. Ask the next 10, and you're refining that. Ask 30, and you're moving closer. Ask 50, closer still. And so on."

You may have picked up that most polls in politics are done by telephone. Sometimes, this is done by random digit dialing, which means numbers are called without regard to whose number it is. This solves one problem that might skew survey figures ever so slightly — the people whose telephone numbers aren't listed. But surveys based on telephone book listings are generally adequate, since the number of people with unlisted telephone numbers is few. There is another slightly skewing social element — blacks, pollsters generally say, are less likely than whites to have a telephone. But if a pollster gets a sufficient number of responses from blacks, he can make appropriate speculations about what blacks think.

'Majority party' doesn't have majority

An Analysis

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "majority party" is a majority no more.

As the Democrats look for ways to recover from Ronald Reagan's landslide, they must face a second sobering reality: about as many Americans now say they are Republicans as say they are Democrats.

That's a major shift, wiping out the Democrats' once-comfortable edge over the GOP in the number of Americans who identify with each party.

Party identification is not just of interest to professors and professional politicians — it is often the key to victory in many elections. Faced with a choice between two candidates they know little about, voters will often just vote for the candidate of their party.

Thus, the Democratic edge in partisan identification has been a key to the Democratic election victories below the presidency. The GOP's gains could foreshadow a Republican surge in the U.S. House, statehouses and state legislatures in years to come.

Since the 1950s, about half of the nation's adults called themselves Democrats or said they leaned toward the party. That compared with only about a quarter of the adults who called themselves Republicans.

The rest called themselves independents, the group that had been growing at the expense of both parties since the early 1960s.

For example, four years ago, right before Reagan's election, the straight party numbers from the CBS-New York Times poll looked this way: Democrats, 46 percent; Republicans, 26 percent; and independents, 28 percent.

But the Democrats have no such edge today.

A CBS News-New York Times poll taken in November after the election said Democrats and Republicans are dead even.

Thirty-two percent said they are Democrats and 32 percent said they are Republicans. The rest were independents or had no affiliation.

When you add the independents who admit to "leaning" toward one party or the other, the Republicans come out 47 percent and the Democrats with 44 percent. With the sampling error margin of three percentage points for a poll based on 1,798 interviews, those figures are roughly even.

After Reagan's election in 1980, there was a shift toward the Republican Party in some of the poll figures. But that move was mostly reversed by late 1981, leaving those who called the figures evidence of a "realignment" looking for something new to talk about.

This time, there is some additional evidence that the shifts may stick around.

To start with, the GOP has picked up a little more strength this time than it did in early 1981, easing doubts that the poll results could be due to chance variations or other differences between polls.

And second, the public seems to have an increasingly firm foundation for its view of the parties.

For example, the CBS-Times poll said 80 percent of those questioned have a favorable view of the Republican Party, while 91 percent held negative views.

Ethiopian government embarks on resettlement plan

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MEKELLE, Ethiopia — For most of them, an airplane had been just a silver speck high above. But now they stood in line under the belly of one, with more than a twinge of apprehension, ready to soar into the sky on a trip that promised to change their lives.

The men, the women, the children — famine victims with their precious few possessions tied up in burlap sacks and in baskets — clambered aboard four Soviet Antonov-12 transport planes that flew into Mekelle's dirt and gravel airstrip in quick succession one recent afternoon.

The flights were part of a controversial resettlement scheme in which the Ethiopian government hopes to relocate some 50,000 families over the next year and 500,000 over the next decade to what it says are more fertile regions in the south and west of the country.

With each family having about five members, that would mean 250,000 people scheduled for movement in a year and about 2.5 million by 1994.

An Ethiopian in a Russian fur hat, with the earflaps down despite the hot sun, stood in the side doorway of one of the blue-and-white turboprop planes of the Soviet airline Aeroflot and helped people climb a metal ladder into the aircraft.

Grabbing both hands of a small boy, whose only clothing was a tattered T-shirt, the fur-capped young man in a plaid shirt lifted the child into the plane.

HE HELPED women, with babies on their backs in leather carriers, to climb aboard. Then he gave a hand loading their families' household goods — tin bowls, aluminum cooking utensils, enamel cups and rolled-up woven sleeping mats and pieces of animal skins.

Russian crew members of the Antonovs stood around the cargo planes having a smoke break as they took on their loads of people. At least one Soviet kept count.

The first Antonov took off in a swirl of dust from its four propellers with 210 people aboard. The second plane took 190, the third 188, and the fourth 220. More flights were scheduled that day, the Russian crewmen told an American reporter who watched the loading.

The planes were bound for Addis Ababa, the capital about 325 miles to the south. From there, they would be loaded onto trucks and buses for the journey to their new homes.

In one plane that had just been packed full of people, an Ethiopian with a towel wrapped around his head for protection from the heat and dust stood in the big back door of the cargo hold and gave a little speech.

As several babies wailed and people shifted around trying to get comfortable on the floor, the man cautioned the novice air travelers against moving around during the flight and wished them bon voyage.

THE CURRENT phase of the relocation project — originally begun in 1979 — was spurred by the worsening of the famine and the availability of a dozen Soviet cargo planes which arrived here early in November as part of an international relief effort.

The Antonov-12s began carrying people on Nov. 16 and, according to relief officials, nearly 40,000 famine victims were moved during the latter two weeks of the month from Mekelle, which is the capital of drought-ravaged Tigre Province, and other emergency feeding centers around the country.

Diplomats based in Addis Ababa said Western countries that have provided planes to airlift food — the United States, Britain, West Germany and Italy — were also asked to help with the resettlement scheme. All but the Soviets refused to allow their planes to carry people because of reservations about the relocation plan.

They contend that the provinces where the displaced people are headed — Gojam, Ilubabor and Kefa — have barely enough food for the people who already live there and that the Marxist-led government, which has close ties to Moscow, has done little to facilitate the settlement of new arrivals.

SOME RELIEF workers said they were worried about ethnic and tribal feuding between the newcomers and the indigenous people.

But Tafari Wossen, chief of the public relations department of the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, said: "There is no alternative. It is actually committing them to mass murder if we do not move them."

The Relief and Rehabilitation Commission is the main government agency trying to cope with a prolonged drought and famine that has parched fields, particularly in the north, and pushed an estimated 6.37 million of Ethiopia's 42 million people to the edge of starvation.

Ethiopia's military leader, Mengistu Haile Mariam, told a news conference Nov. 16 that some areas of the northern provinces of Tigre, Wollo and Eritrea had been hit so badly by perennial drought, along with the stripping of trees for firewood and overgrazing, that it is "impossible to restore them."

India's politicians face changing of the guard

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
New York Times News Service

NEW DELHI — D.K. Borooah, a veteran of India's struggle for independence, was sitting down for egg-and-tomato sandwiches as the sun set behind his veranda a few days ago.

The sun is also setting on his generation of Indian politician, and on its style and — in the view of many Indians — on some of its values as well.

"I'm 70," said Borooah, who is an opposition Member of Parliament, "and I'm the youngest man" from Assam to have been active in the Indian independence movement.

Every week, it seems, a headline in the Indian press reads, "Freedom Fighter Dead." Once, there were 150,000 people who followed Mohandas K. Gandhi into the streets and, later, helped Jawaharlal Nehru lay the foundation of modern Indian democracy. Now, only a fraction of that number is left.

That remnant has largely been superseded by a new generation of Indian politicians to whom the freedom struggle is distant history and Gandhi is quaintly anachronistic.

"It's a different class of people now," Borooah said. "Those who are sophisticated are indifferent to politics. Those who are ignorant are in politics."

MANY CRITICS add that the politicians include not only the ignorant, but also the venal, the self-seeking and the mediocre.

Rajiv Gandhi, 40 years old, the new prime minister, is part of the new generation, but he is being looked to as the person who can give politics a good name again. Gandhi, the newspaper India Today said, has "a gilt-edged opportunity to set things right in the party."

Recent events suggest that Gandhi is trying to seize the opportunity. The Congress Party leadership has announced that at least 80 of its 336 Members of Parliament had been dropped from the party's ticket for the general election scheduled for Dec. 24-28.

The purge is apparently an attempt to weed out what are regarded as politicians with unsavory records. Many of these, say politicians, political scientists and journalists who have watched the situation closely, were inducted into politics by Sanjay Gandhi, Rajiv's younger brother.

Sanjay was regarded as Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's political heir apparent before he died in a plane crash in 1980. Rajiv was later drafted for the role, and succeeded to the prime ministership after the assassination of Mrs. Gandhi on Oct. 31.

ONE EXAMPLE of Rajiv Gandhi's apparent desire to cleanse the party was the fact that four of its six Members of Parliament from the Union Territory of Delhi were denied a place on the Congress slate. Three of these — Dharam Dass Shastri, Charanjit Singh and Sajjan Kumar — were regarded as Sanjay's followers.

When it was charged that Congress Party politicians had a hand in provoking the mass killings of Sikhs by Hindus in the days immediately after Mrs. Gandhi's assassination, it was widely assumed, but not proved, that some of Sanjay's followers were involved.

Bashiruddin Ahmed, who directs New Delhi's Center for the Study of Developing Societies, speaks for many political commentators when he describes the people whom Sanjay Gandhi brought into politics in the 1970s as "lumpen elements."

"They were," he said, "middle-class people who came from not-very-well-to-do families, most of them probably school dropouts and college dropouts, with aspirations they're not really able to meet on their own except through politics."

LOYALTY TO Sanjay and Mrs. Gandhi was seen as the main qualification of these people, scores of whom entered Parliament as a result of the 1980 election in which Mrs. Gandhi returned to power after three years out of it. In Sanjay's heyday, his political group acquired a reputation for the use of strong-arm tactics and intimidation.

It is this group that was apparently largely, although not entirely, the object of the purge. Also dropped from the Congress Party slate was A.R. Antulay of Bombay, a former ally of Mrs. Gandhi who was convicted of extortion in a corruption case in 1982.

Stroke has given woman different outlook on life

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — "I have plenty to be thankful for — to be alive," said Sandy Cole, a smiling 44-year-old mother of two children.

Last Feb. 3, Ms. Cole lay in a coma, a victim of an aneurysm. A vein in her head had ballooned and burst, causing a stroke.

Ms. Cole was not expected to live. She remained in a coma for several days and floated in and out of consciousness until Feb. 17 when surgeons operated on her brain to repair the aneurysm. She was discharged from Angelo Community Hospital at the end of February.

Today there is no sign that Ms. Cole's speech was totally garbled, her thought processes chaotic and confused. She was unable to read, spell or write.

"I felt like I was on the bottom. I was taught that the only thing to do when that happens is get up, dust yourself off and go on."

"I am so grateful that I can do the things I took for granted. Do you know what it's like to open a newspaper and not understand a word?"

Ms. Cole paused to help a visitor at West Texas Rehabilitation Center where she volunteers two days a week. "Get yourself some coffee, follow the corridor to the right at the exit sign, and open the furthest door to your left," she directed confidently, without hesitation.

The stroke changed Ms. Cole's outlook. "One day I was fine and going to work. At 10 a.m. I'm in a coma. When I woke up I couldn't do most things."

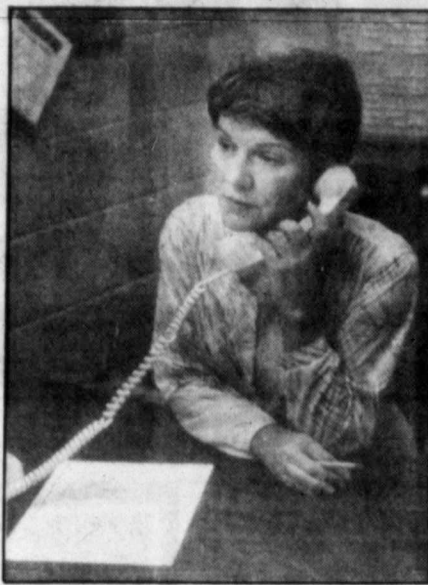

"I had a lot of ambitions, I wanted to do what successful people do," said the former insurance agency staffer.

Now Ms. Cole has a different perspective. She said she believes being happy is the most important thing.

"I'm living for today. I don't know if that will change or not. Time with my children, family and friends is important to me now."

For the future, "There's no question in my mind that one day I will find another job."

Ms. Cole modestly gave the credit for her recovery to the staff at the rehabilitation center, her family and her friends. "Somebody needs to care. You need to hear encouragement. My family was a life saver. What do people do without their families?" she said wonderingly.

Her parents, her sister, her 14-year-old son and her 12-year-old daughter cooked and cleaned so she could study and practice the speech lessons she had learned at the rehabilitation center.

Therapist Susan Reeves had another view. "Sandy was very motivated from the day she walked through the doors here," Ms. Reeves said. Ms. Cole was more than willing to work at the center and at home.

"She was giving 110 percent," Ms. Reeves said. "She's done this herself. She has a will to get back to where she was before. It's what's inside of her."

The road to recovery was not easy for Ms. Cole. "It was like a fruit basket turned over. Everything was jumbled."

She slowly realized what she was unable to do. "It was not until I went home that I realized I couldn't talk. One day I thought I asked my daughter for an apple, and she brought me a pickle. And I knew I wasn't saying what I thought. The most frustrating thing was when I realized I couldn't write what I was thinking. I spent two hours trying that. Then I really cried."

"There were times when I really got frustrated. I got tired of doing the same thing and it wouldn't work. My family said, 'You're doing so good, we see progress,' but I wanted more."

"I knew God didn't want me to stay that way all the time. That was a rough place to be."

Another problem was the knowledge of the corrective surgery. "I felt the surgery had left a nothing space. It was the feeling of a vacuum. It really bothered me. I felt funny. It (empty feeling) finally went away."

The entire right side of Ms. Cole's body is numb although she can still manipulate her fingers, arms, eyes and toes. She is unable to feel hot, cold or pain. She said the numbness doesn't bother her. "It's not such a big deal, I have another hand."

The plucky woman spent an hour in therapy each day at the rehabilitation center. She took books home and worked every waking minute.

By June, Ms. Cole's speech had returned. Ms. Reeves suggested she volunteer time at the center. "We wanted to see what she could and couldn't do. We understood her problems here. For example, outside noises were terribly distracting to her. She could freely tell us what she needed," Ms. Cole began typing, filing and working with the center's computer.

"Volunteering is good therapy for me. I need to be around people. I can't do that at home. I need to talk and deal with everyday problems."

After a two-month hiatus, Ms. Cole will resume formal therapy to work on remaining difficulties. She said she still has difficulty comprehending what she reads, her memory is poor, and she is still working on jotting down her thoughts. She will also continue to volunteer her services at the center.

"I still have problems, but I hope they'll be gone soon."

"I don't think I did anything unusual. I did it. I had to do it."

Anthropologist brings songs of past to life

HONOLULU (AP) — Voices of the past singing Micronesian chants — have been brought to life through a Bishop Museum project.

The recordings were made on Dictaphone cylinders in 1926 during a scientific expedition to the Caroline Islands sponsored by the museum and Tohoku Imperial University of Japan.

They had been stored at the museum until Elizabeth Tatar began working in the Audio-Recording Collections of the Department of Anthropology in 1977. She is an ethnomusicologist — an anthropologist specializing in music.

She opened the 44 cylinders to inspect their condition. "I didn't know what they were like or if they could be played, but it kept gnawing on me," Ms. Tatar said.

She specializes in Hawaiian and Polynesian music but felt it was important to recreate the Micronesian songs and oral traditions for the Micronesian people.

She obtained a grant in 1981 from the Folk Arts Program of the National Endowment for the Arts for the first phase of the work. The NEA recently awarded another grant to produce a cassette of the songs with a booklet containing photographs, notes and song texts. Matching funds also have been provided for the Micronesian project by the museum and private donors.

The original recordings were made by Iwakichi Muranushi with a Dictaphone recorder belonging to the Bishop Museum. He was a young anthropology graduate with the Saito Ho-on Kai Museum in Sendai and was responsible for material culture and oral traditions during the 1936 expedition.

Muranushi recorded a total of 212 songs, mostly on Palau, Yap and Ponape.

Labor force improves by record employment rate

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian joblessness fell to 7.2 percent last month, the first drop since June, as the creation of roughly 300,000 jobs pushed American employment to an all-time high, the government said today.

With a record 105.9 million Americans holding jobs, the labor force resumed its dramatic improvement after a four-month period of practically standstill unemployment, the Labor Department said.

As overall employment set a record, the ranks of those officially listed as jobless plunged by approximately 275,000, from 8.43 million to 8.15 million.

The November report was the brightest since unemployment fell from 7.5 percent to 7.1 percent in June. The jobless rate, however, bounced back to 7.5 percent and stayed in that range through October.

An alternate unemployment rate, which combines the 114-million civilian labor force with the roughly 1.7 million members of the armed forces stationed in the United States, fell even more dramatically, from 7.3 percent to 7.0 percent.

Since national civilian joblessness hit a post-Depression peak of 10.7 percent in November 1982, with more than 12 million people listed as unemployed, some 6.8 million jobs have been created, principally service jobs in areas such as retail, hotel, restaurant, hospital, banking and insurance.

Government figures also show that since November 1983, when the jobless rate was 8.4 percent, total employment has grown by 3.2 million while the roster of the unemployed has shrunk by 1.3 million.

In testimony prepared for delivery to the congressional Joint Economic Committee, the director of labor statistics, Janet L. Norwood, noted that a separate survey of business establishments not used in compiling the unemployment rate showed the addition of about 300,000 jobs in November, approximating the job-growth figures reflected in the department's random survey of 60,000 households that is used to compile the unemployment rate.

Ms. Norwood said that November labor market developments continued "the pick-up in employment which began in September following slow growth during the summer."

But she also said that "indeed, there has been virtually no growth in factory jobs since the summer." Only about 19.7 million of the record 105.9 million jobs last month were in manufacturing industries.

On the eve of today's announcement, analysts said that many corporation executives feel confident of continued job growth through the remainder of this year and well into 1985.

New claims for unemployment compensation benefits, one indicator of overall U.S. labor market health, rose slightly in the week ended Nov. 24 — but not enough to send any genuinely bad signals about future job growth.

"Though the employment boom is doubtless over, the data do not indicate an employment bust on the horizon," said William Dunkelberg, chief economist for the National Federation of Independent Business, a Washington-based organization that represents some 560,000 small companies. Donald H. Straszheim, a senior vice president and analyst at Wharton Economic Forecasting Associates in Philadelphia, said "the current slowdown in business activity is merely a pause in the economy's upward climb."

The October-November improvement was evident among the various worker groups, although the rate for adult men, at 6.3 percent, was unchanged.

In detail, these were the month-to-month changes for other groups:

- Adult women, 6.6 percent, down from 6.9 percent.
- Teenagers, 17.5, down from 18.8.
- Whites, 6.1, down from 6.4.
- Blacks, 15.0, down from 15.4.
- Hispanics, 10.0, down from 10.9.

The report said that "all of the decline in unemployment over the month occurred among those who were jobless for less than six months."

At 1.4 million, it said, the number of people who had been out of work for longer than six months held relatively steady.

Court order prevents Phillips from blocking start of takeover bid

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

A Delaware court issued a temporary order today to prevent Phillips Petroleum Co. from blocking the start of an unsolicited $9.1 billion takeover bid from proceeding.

A day earlier, an Oklahoma court issued an order to block the takeover group, led by oilman T. Boone Pickens, from proceeding with its bid to increase its holdings in Phillips.

Today's temporary restraining order, issued by Vice Chancellor Carolyn Berger in Delaware's Chancery Court, barred Phillips from taking any steps to enforce the Oklahoma order. It also barred Phillips from raising the same issue in any court outside Delaware.

Jere Smith, a Phillips spokesman, said that because the company's attorneys had not seen the Delaware order, he could not comment on the development.

Meanwhile, the takeover group notified the Securities and Exchange Commission that it intends to seek the removal of Phillips' board.

The assault on Phillips, the nation's eighth largest oil company, was launched Tuesday by Mesa Partners, which is made up of Mesa Petroleum Co. and the independent oil firm of Wagner & Brown.

Pickens is president of Mesa Petroleum, which is based in Amarillo, Texas. Wagner & Brown has headquarters in Midland, Texas, and Phillips is based in Bartlesville, Okla.

Mesa Partners said that before launching its offer, it already had bought 8.8 million shares of Phillips' stock, or a 5.7 percent interest, for about $383 million. It said it would offer $60 a share for another 15 million shares and said that if it could arrange financing, it would buy yet another 8 million shares at $60 a share, to raise its stake to 20.6 percent.

Pickens told securities analysts in Chicago on Thursday that he hoped to have one-fifth control of Phillips by the first week in January. He said he then would seek to gain control of the board of directors and arrange a leveraged buyout of the remaining 122.8 million shares of Phillips, also at $60 a share.

In a leveraged buyout, the purchaser uses borrowed money to finance a takeover and repays the loan with the target company's earnings or assets.

In response to a question, Pickens said it was possible that if successful, he would merge Phillips and Mesa.

Phillips said Thursday that Judge John Lanning of Washington County District Court in Oklahoma issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting the Mesa Partners from proceeding with the planned offer to buy 15 million shares.

The judge scheduled a hearing for Dec. 14 on Phillips' request for a temporary injunction against the Mesa Partners takeover attempt.

Phillips contends the offer for its stock by the partnership is a breach of an agreement between Mesa and General American Oil Co., which is now a part of Phillips.

Under that agreement, Mesa said that for a five-year period beginning Jan. 6, 1983, it would not buy shares in General American. General American was acquired by Phillips the day after Mesa signed the agreement. Phillips contends the agreement also applies to Phillips' stock.

But Pickens later said, "there is no mention at all of Phillips' in those documents, adding, "We wouldn't have done this (offer to buy Phillips' stock) if our position wasn't strong."

Maverick oilman T. Boone Pickens, chairman and president of Mesa Petroleum Co., talks to reporters Thursday in Chicago. He said he plans to takeover Phillips Petroleum Co. by January.

Census shows factory workers losing ground

WASHINGTON (AP) — Workers in America's factories lost ground over five years, both in jobs and pay, new statistics collected by the Census Bureau disclose.

Employment in manufacturing fell from 19,590,100 in 1977 to 19,111,400 five years later, according to figures from the 1982 Census of Manufacturers released Thursday.

And while average pay for workers climbed from $13,476 to $19,873 during the period, that 47 percent rise trailed the 59 percent growth in the consumer price index during the same time span.

Overall, the Census Bureau counted 356,136 factories across the country in 1982, down from 359,928 in 1977.

Manufacturing of machinery counted the largest share of factory workers in 1982 with 2,176,600 workers in 52,736 plants. That was an increase from 2,083,300 machinery workers in 48,197 factories in 1977.

Other major segments of manufacturing included:

- Food and related products: 1,493,600 employees in 1977, down from 1,520,000 workers in 1982.
- Tobacco products: 57,900 workers, down from 60,600.
- Textile mills: 720,700 employees, down from 875,700.
- Apparel: 1,188,800 workers, down from 1,334,300.
- Furniture: 434,900 employees, down from 463,800.
- Paper: 602,600 laborers, down from 628,700.

- Rubber: 680,000 employees, down from 721,300.
- Leather: 200,700 laborers, down from 242,500.
- Stone, clay and glass: 530,100 workers, down from 613,700.

Japanese say they'll accept export pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japanese steelmakers, though declaring themselves "not pleased," are saying they'll go along with a government agreement to curtail their exports to the United States.

The Japanese gave their reaction Thursday while top U.S. trade officials were still saying no final agreement had been reached.

And some U.S. officials, speaking privately, suggested the Japanese comments — including figures for the apparent agreement — were not welcome in light of continuing steel-restraint negotiations between the United States and other nations.

Publicly, U.S. Trade Representative William Brock said agreement seemed "pretty close" between the United States and several nations to curtail imported steel and complete part of a pledge President Reagan made to the steel industry nearly three months ago.

Concerning Japan, Brock said, "there has been progress, a good deal of it." But he also said, "We've made no final agreement. You really want to be sure you've got it before you announce anything."

In New York, however, a spokesman for the Japanese steel industry said the producers had been told by Japanese officials the agreement would cut their exports to the United States to about 5.8 percent of the American market from the current 6.3 percent.

"We are not pleased with the agreement," said Haruki Kamiya, chairman of the Overseas Public Relations Committee of the Japan Iron and Steel Exporters Association.

"Still, we believe we must adhere to such strict controls since our steel industry feels it must cooperate with such an agreement in view of the current restructuring of the American steel industry as well as our desire to maintain good Japanese-U.S. relations," Kamiya said in a statement distributed by the Japanese Steel Information Center.

A spokesman for the center said the 5.8 percent figure was an average over 10 years, with actual yearly tonnage varying according to U.S. consumption projections. Like Brock, he said some details were still to be worked out.

Wyatt says oil business will never return to "normal"

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

HOUSTON — The oil business will never return to "normal," according to Oscar Wyatt, chairman and chief executive officer of Costal Corp.

Speaking to a crowd of 1,000 oil and gas executives at the Arthur Andersen & Co. Oil & Gas Symposium, here on Thursday, the keynote speaker said the current upheaval in the petroleum industry was normal.

"Some oil men feel that if they can just hold on, satisfy their banker, and not get caught up in any new trend, sooner or later things will get back to normal and they will be back on 'easy street' again," said Wyatt.

"It won't happen that way. This is normal."

He said that those firms managing their businesses as if they are waiting for them to return to normal will probably not survive, adding that the only thing that can make the price of oil rise in the near future would be a war between Libya and Egypt, which would close the Suez Canal or another Mid-East war that would close the Strait of Hormuz.

"The trend for world oil prices is down, or flat, depending on how successful OPEC can control volumes and prices," said Wyatt.

"About 18 to 20 million barrels per day of surplus producing capacity exists around the world and most of it belongs to OPEC," he said.

Wyatt explained that the crude oil market turmoil was created by Britain and Norway's attempt to produce North Sea properties wide open at 3.6 million barrels a day and sell it all on the spot market.

He said that the market had been put in further turmoil by the decision of some producing nations to go into the refining business in competition with American interests.

He estimated that 2 million barrels of refining capacity are now under construction that will dramatically cut deeper into America's domestic refining capacity.

"These foreign refineries are subsidized and they don't have to play by our rules, and as a result, they can deliver petroleum products cheaper than we can refine it here," Wyatt said.

To save the domestic refining industry from foreign competition, he suggested a substantial increase in a crude oil tariff.

"If we don't protect ourselves, domestic refining will go the way of American steel, autos, textiles and shoes," said Wyatt.

Dallas banking concern moves credit operations

DALLAS (AP) — Gov. Mark White says credit card operations are being removed from Texas to less-regulated states by banks which seek "to extend higher interest" payments from Texas.

White made the comment Thursday at an Austin press conference a day after MCorp said it would move its Dallas-based credit card operations to Delaware because of restrictive interest rate and credit card regulations in Texas.

"I will assure you there is no company in this state that cannot make a profit, and a healthy profit, off the law we have in Texas today," said White. "The only difference that I can see is they would like to make more."

MCorp is the second Texas bank holding company to move its credit card operations out-of-state this year. In May, Houston-based First City Bancorporation of Texas said it would move its operations to South Dakota. Officials of MCorp, with about 1.5 million Visa and MasterCard customers, said they would move the credit card operations to Wilmington because Delaware has no interest rate ceiling and allows annual fees.

MCorp's operations are not as profitable as those of other banks operating under more favorable regulations, said John Tolleson, chairman of MCorp's credit card unit.

Tolleson said a sharp rise in interest rates could squeeze the company's margins and push it into the red. He said the company is only trying to be competitive.

He said several major money center banks operate out of Delaware and sell their credit card services heavily in Texas. Tolleson said interest rates will probably rise slightly and annual card fees will be imposed on MCorp customers once the move is completed early next year.

Indexing could cost U.S. Treasury billions of dollars

NEW YORK — While the Treasury seeks to eliminate or limit many income tax deductions to which Americans have become accustomed, its retention of a new one could cost it billions.

The new deduction is indexing, which begins automatically on January 1 as a device for protecting taxpayers from being shifted into higher, more tax-costly brackets by inflation.

Indexing has never been tried before, but the Tax Foundation has estimated that it could save taxpayers $8 billion to $10 billion in their 1985 taxes alone, and potentially more in times of greater inflation.

How much that amount would change because of a restructuring of tax brackets under the Treasury's recommendations hasn't yet been determined, but it could remain a highly significant amount.

Indexing was introduced as part of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, but it wasn't scheduled to begin until 1985, when it will automatically adjust taxes upward on the basis of the 1984 inflation rate.

Since the provision was passed it has remained controversial, and there have been many calls to repeal or modify it, in part because inflation has served so well as a provider of federal government revenues.

However, in making his recent proposals to the White House, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan recommended retaining indexing "so that American taxpayers can be protected against the hidden taxes of inflation."

Ironically, the federal government itself remains vulnerable to inflation in the sense that high interest rates usually accompany rising prices, forcing higher interest payments to be made on the public debt.

On November 30 that debt stood at $1.63 trillion, and interest was being paid at a monthly rate of $12.5 billion. A 1 percent interest rate rise could offset a significant amount of the cost-cutting proposed by Regan.

Regardless of what new tax proposals are considered, indexing adjustments are likely to pertain to the entire year 1985.

Under the provision, the Treasury Department must calculate the average percentage increase in the consumer price index for the year October 1983 through September 1984.

That calculation produces a tax factor of 4.1 percent, which is then used in recalculating withholding tables for wages earned in 1985.

According to the Tax Foundation, a non-profit research organization, the recalculation removes about 85 percent of the inflation-induced increases in tax revenues.

Based on the law as it now exists, the foundation claims that indexing is much more valuable to lower-income families as a percentage of tax liability than it is to upper-income households.

"This gives the lie to charges that the 1981 tax reduction program was designed to benefit the rich," said Robert Brown, foundation president, when the foundation's calculations were made more than a month ago.

While fairness suggests strongly that inflation should be removed from any tax calculations — and the Regan proposals suggest that taxes be indexed in the future — the entire matter could become a center of controversy again.

For one thing, it cuts into the government's revenue at a time when the government is seeking every cent it can find in an effort to close the budget deficit gaps that have plagued the economy for two decades.

Ford Motor Co.'s Aerostar compact van, shown here in its pre-production form as a concept vehicle, is having its introduction date pushed back to June of 1985 because of delays setting up the plant machinery.

Chevrolet, Ford join minivan race soon

DETROIT (AP) — Chevrolet's competition for Chrysler Corp.'s popular compact vans should arrive in dealer showrooms in January, but Ford Motor Co. said its minivan would not be out until late June.

Ford said Wednesday that delays in setting up sophisticated plant machinery pushed back the Aerostar compact van's introduction, which had been planned for earlier in the year.

The little van's debut is now scheduled for June as a 1986 model, Ford said. Production is scheduled to start May 6 in St. Louis, Mo.

Ford for the first time is employing laser beams to line up scores of robots and other automated plant machinery, said spokesman James Olson.

"We have no product problems or supplier problems — it's just the plant," Olson said.

Part of the plant will house automated modular assembly, in which whole vehicle sections are brought to final assembly stations in one piece.

"It's hard to judge the time it will take to do a job if you've never done it before," Olson said. "These things happen when you're pushing the frontiers of the technology every time you go out" and set up a new operation.

Olson said 97 percent of the vehicle welds will be performed by robots, which also will paint the vans.

In January, Ford will end the St. Louis production of its large cars, the Ford Crown Victoria-Mercury Grand Marquis, to make room for the minivan. The large vehicles will continue to be made in St. Thomas, Ontario.

The Aerostar has rear-wheel drive and slightly bigger than Chrysler's front-wheel drive model.

General Motors Corp. has begun dealer deliveries of commercial versions of its little vans, the 1985 Chevrolet Astro and GMC Safari. Deliveries of passenger versions are scheduled to begin in January.

Lenders now listing home loan options on computer networks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The time-honored tradition of shopping for a mortgage by phoning lenders one after another until you got bored or fed up with the project is changing.

Computers are taking the drudgery out of finding a way to pay for the most expensive thing most people will ever buy — a home.

The idea is simple enough. Lenders list their loan options in a computer network. Borrowers, usually for free, can have personal information and the type and size of loan they are looking for punched into the system. The computer sorts out the matches.

The computer screens are located in the offices of lenders, in which case only that lender's loans are listed; in the offices of Realtors; or in a few cases in the offices of a service set up to match lenders and borrowers.

The more sophisticated operations are called CLOs, for computerized loan origination networks.

Not only will those systems find you a loan, they will enter your salary and other personal information, tell you if you meet the basic qualifications, transmit your application to the lender and keep track of it for you, telling you the status of the approval process.

For example, an applicant will know if an employer has sent in a verification form, or if the appraiser has turned in a report.

While the computer printout presents a wide choice, it is not a complete choice. And the consumer trying one of the new services should understand what is offered.

Dallas Bennewitz, the vice president of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions who is involved with mortgage lending programs, says, "If the borrower doesn't really shop the deal, they may end up paying" extra to cover the cost of the network.

"They could end up paying more for the loan if they don't really know what's being offered off the system as well as on" competing systems.

John M. Toups, chairman of Planning Research Corp. which operates LoanExpress in the Washington, D.C., area, disagrees to an extent. "It isn't a question of completeness, it's a question of can you get close to the best deal you can make?"

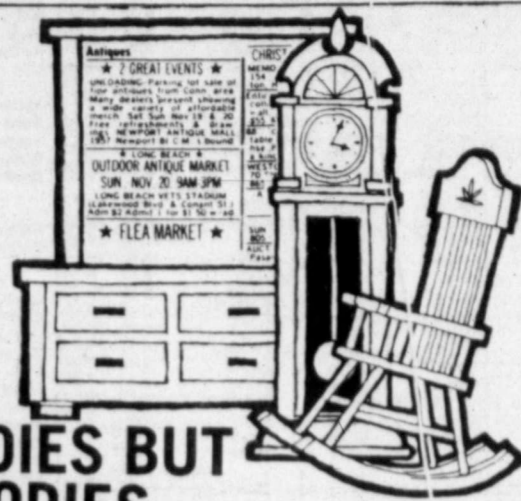

He argues that a borrower is in good shape if he or she can get within an eighth of a percentage point of the best deal offered. In addition, he noted the "untold time" saved by using the computer system.

He acknowledges the number of lenders in his system is "relatively small" considering all of the potential lenders in the Washington area.

Bennewitz says that limitation may work to the borrower's advantage. "If you've got every lender doing this it can be a bewildering number" of options, he said in an interview.

Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association, says a task force saw a developing "fight over access to the customer ... that the lender is going to start waking up to when they start losing the customer."

Officer says shipbuilding hurt by cost

By WAYNE BIDDLE
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Navy officer in charge of fostering competition among contractors acknowledged Wednesday that military shipbuilding had been plagued by unrealistically low cost estimates and other contract abuses.

"Dealing with monopoly producers is not easy," Commodore Stuart Platt told the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. "They understand our options, at times better than we do."

Platt, appointed last year as the Navy's first Competition Advocate, testified about multibillion-dollar projects to build nuclear-powered submarines and aircraft carriers. The contracts were awarded to the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., a division of Tenneco, and the Electric Boat division of General Dynamics, which are two of the nation's largest military contractors.

Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., and another Republican, William S. Cohen of Maine, directed a barrage of questions at Platt, a former deputy director for contracts in the Naval Sea Systems Command.

"The management problems uncovered in our investigations take almost every form imaginable," said Roth who is chairman of the committee. He listed hidden premiums to contractors, excessive incentive payments and "poor or nonexistent negotiations on prices and schedules" as among the Navy's faults.

Platt agreed with assertions by Cohen that military shipbuilding has been troubled in the last decade by unrealistically low bids and abuses of monopoly status.

A number of congressional committees, as well as the Justice Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission, have started investigations in recent months of major Navy warship contracts dating to the early 1970's. Intense scrutiny has been given to submarine work performed at Electric Boat's Groton, Conn., yard.

Asked by Cohen why the Navy in 1981 awarded construction of 688-class submarines to Newport News instead of to Electric Boat, which was the low bidder, Platt said the Navy believed General Dynamics was trying to corner the nuclear submarine business by submitting unrealistically low bids to the government.

"It was the position of General Dynamics at that time to become sole producer of submarines in the nation," he said.

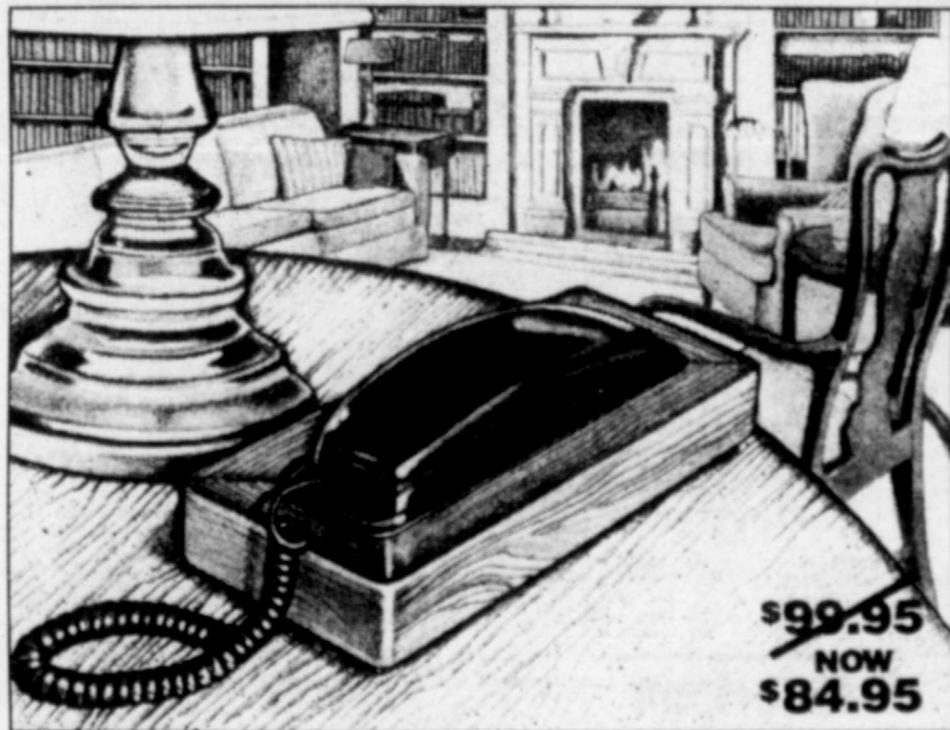

He added that the Navy wished to "strengthen the industrial base" by giving new work to Newport News, where he said inactivity had caused conditions to deteriorate.

In awards announced last week, Newport News won a $779 million contract for three new 688-class submarines and Electric Boat won a $283 million contract for only one.

Roth and Cohen also questioned Platt about contracts to build Nimitz-class aircraft carriers at Newport News. Four of these vessels, which are the largest warships ever built, have been launched since 1972, with two more on order at more than $1.5 billion each. The contracts to build the ships were awarded to Newport News on a noncompetitive basis, Platt said, because no other facility in the country is capable of building them.

Rebels, Panthers make final preparations

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Since Midland Lee's twin killing of Odessa Permian in 1983, the Lee-Permian series has reached folklore proportions in the Permian Basin. And now Exodus II begins its march to this Hub city Saturday morning as the legend continues.

Lee, which has beaten Permian only five times in 25 meetings, won 20-7 and 20-0 decisions over Mojo in 1983. More than 30,000 fans witnessed the quarterfinal Shootout II here at Jones Stadium.

The legend had begun and now these same two teams trek out of the Permian Basin again to add to the story that has grown by leaps and bounds in the last two years.

Permian is ranked as the No. 1 team in the state with a perfect 13-0 season record and is the only unbeaten team left in the playoffs. Lee is ranked No. 2 in the state and is a 1½-point underdog heading into Saturday's 2 p.m. contest.

The Panthers of John Wilkins are also ranked by one poll (USA Today) as the No. 5 high school team in the nation. Lee's only blemish this season is a 28-13 loss to these same Panthers.

So, the question that awaits a Saturday answer is — Can Jack Tayrien's Rebels turn the tables on that previous loss to Permian?

By just looking at 1984 playoff results thus far, this game looks like an evenly matched affair. Both teams have scored points with machine gun rapidity while giving up points like Scrooge spends money.

Permian has scored 131 points in the playoffs while Lee has scored 128. Permian has given up 21 points and Lee 27. On the season, Permian's offense has been near unstoppable, scoring 498 points while allowing only 136. Lee has scored 399 and given up a meager 116.

Tayrien is well aware of what it will take to reverse the "first time around" results, but his squad is entering this contest with high hopes.

"The first time we played, Permian changed their defense a little to one we hadn't run against and that threw us off a little," said Tayrien. "They also had two big plays throwing the football and that hurt us awfully bad."

"To beat Permian, it will take a mistake-free game of football on our part with no penalties and we can't go throwing the football on the ground. It will take a total effort."

Tayrien hopes his team has improved over the last seven weeks since the two teams met.

"I don't know if we are better, but we like to think we are. But there are two sides to that. I'm sure Permian has improved since then," said Tayrien.

"Permian is a balanced team and likes to take advantage of your mistakes. They are a real explosive, big play offense with a great quarterback in Alton Holloway and great receivers in Greg Anderson, Diron New and Brian Lauterbach. Then they can come at you with great running backs in Dal Watson, Clendon Williams and Rich Fletcher."

Holloway has completed an amazing 106 passes in only 159 attempts for 29 touchdowns. Watson has rushed for 1,219 yards and 22 touchdowns and Anderson has caught 53 passes for 938 yards. It is an awesome attack that Lee will have to defend against.

But Lee has two 1,000-yard rushers in Walter Jones (1,311) and Tyrone Thurman (1,132) and an additional 720 yards from fullback Randy Ellis. The Wishbone has also been explosive, which leads many to believe that this will be a high scoring, fast team to touch the football kind of game.

However, Tayrien doesn't know what to expect when the teams match up again.

"It's hard to say what kind of game it will be," said Tayrien. "It may not be that high scoring because both teams also play good defense. The points that will be scored will have to be earned. There won't be too many gifts."

Binns rips for 42 as Chaps blast Cadets, 97-70

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If it hadn't been for 6-9 Tevin Binns, the heralded showdown between New Mexico Military Institute and Midland College might have been the biggest bomb in the Southwest since they did all that testing over at White Sands in the 1940s.

Binns was never better in scoring 42 points to lead the Chaparrals to a 97-70 victory over NMMI at Langford Chaparral Center Thursday night.

The performance tied the second highest single-game scoring spree by an MC player and was just three off the record 45 points by NCAAJC All-American Puntus Wilson in 1981-82. Until Thursday night, Wilson also was the sole owner of the second best single-game scoring effort.

TEVIN WAS AN uncanny 19 of 24 from the field and four of five from the line, but you suspected something special was brewing when the move he made on his first basket of the game looked like something an agile guard or driving forward might pull.

Binns scored six of MC's first 10 points as the Chaps jumped in front 10-4, a lead never surrendered or seriously threatened.

Still, NMMI, which brought an 8-1 record for the season into the game and was 3-0 in WJAC, lingered within reach throughout the first half, despite Binns' 18 points, trailing 45-38.

Binns opened the second half with four straight baskets as MC began to pull away, 53-42. He meshed his first seven shots of the final 20 minutes. By this time it was 61-48 and NMMI Coach Dave "Soupy" Campbell, who is returning to NMMI after a stint at Clemson, must have been wishing he could suit up Marty Zeller, his assistant, and MC assistant Reggie Franklin. Both played for Campbell at NMMI, as did Lewis Lloyd, now in the NBA.

CAMPBELL brought in a lot of promising freshman, "but we still don't have enough players to run with people like Midland, so we try to keep things under control and play a disciplined game."

NMMI's lack of depth turned it into a rout in the second half. Not only were MC's hands and feet too quick, but there were too many of them.

IN HIS phenomenal last half, Binns was 10 of 12 from the field. In the first half Binns showed a deft touch on his turning jumper from just off the base line. In the second half, he was hitting from anywhere he decided to shoot.

Despite the proximity of the Cadets in the first half, a playground game of h-o-r-s-e or 21 would have been more entertaining than the opening 20 minutes when there were almost as many free throws taken as field goals attempted.

Tony Wright, whose 21-point night went almost unnoticed in the shadow of Binns' big game, converted 11 free throws in the first half. To give you an idea of what it was like that first half, Wright took 10 shots from the line before he ever got a shot from the field.

Thanks to Binns, MC scorched the cords for 37 of 59 shots (63 per cent). The Chaps were 22 of 33 in the second half alone.

John Wilson led NMMI with 18 points and the Cadets had five players in double figures, surprisingly, but it wasn't a good shooting night, 29 of 64. Eric Adams, who apparently is one of NMMI's outside marksmen, judging by the number of times he put it up, was 5 of 17.

Playmaker Joe Johnson and Wilson both had four fouls before the half ended.

Midland closes out for the holidays 10-2 and 3-0, but don't count off the Cadets yet. They still must be played in Roswell, where they were tough even last year when they won just once in WJAC all season.

In previous games, NMMI had beaten Frank Phillips, Texas Western and Clarendon. Significantly, only FPC was a home game.

In Odessa, OC defeated Western Texas, 91-79 to go 13-1 while the OC women took an 86-35 win over WTC to go 17-0 for the season.

NMMI: John Wilson 9 0 18, Charles Brown 4 5 13, Joe Johnson 6 0 12, Eric Adams 5 0 10, Lane Wortman 2 7 11, Cliff Wiggins 1 0 2. Totals 29-64 12-17 22-70.

Midland College: Williams 2 0 4, Graves 1 3 3, Binns 19 4 42, Coleman 3 0 6, Chumbley 4 1 9, Wigington 2 2 6, Hunter 1 1 3, Wright 5 11 21, Ford 1 1 3. Totals 57-59 21-30 18-97.

Halftime: MC 45, NMMI 38.

Washington reserve Vidato sinks St. Mary's

Associated Press

In his freshman season, Kevin Vidato scored a total of six points. Against St. Mary's, the sophomore reserve forward doubled that total, leading the ninth-ranked Washington Huskies to their fourth victory without a loss.

"Thank heaven for Kevin Vidato," Washington Coach Mark Harshman said. "I don't know if a star is born, but the guy came to play."

Washington held a slim 20-25 lead at halftime against St. Mary's. Then Vidato scored 10 of his 12 points in the second half to lead the Huskies to a 60-46 victory.

"He contributed offensively, and that was a blessing," Harshman said of his unlikely star. "He compensated for the rest of us standing around."

The only other member of the Associated Press Top Twenty college basketball teams to see action Thursday night was seventh-ranked Illinois, which downed Missouri 65-50.

College Basketball

"Everything seemed to fall into place," Vidato said of his point explosion. "Everything felt really good. If I got a chance, I wanted to take advantage of it."

Washington sophomore center Chris Welp said Vidato showed poise under pressure.

"When you're a sub, you're afraid to make a mistake and you're cautious," Welp said. "Tonight he wasn't. He came in and played a great game."

With Vidato leading the way, Washington outscored St. Mary's 40-23 in the second half. St. Mary's, which shot 71 percent in the first half, was unable to continue at that torrid pace as Washington's superior size and aggressive defense eventually wore down the Galloping Gaels.

"We had too many turnovers and a lack of patience," Gaels Coach Bill Oates said. "It was a lousy second half."

Anthony Welch and Bruce Douglas headed a balanced Illinois attack with 12 points apiece as the Fighting Illini stopped Missouri.

The defending co-Big Ten champions jumped out to a 20-6 lead in the first 8½ minutes and led 38-19 at halftime.

Missouri challenged briefly at the outset of the second half, scoring 13 straight points to pull to within 38-32. But it was the closest the Big Eight school could come.

"I thought we played well," Illini Coach Lou Henson said. "I'd take this kind of game every night. Overall, it was a good effort."

Doug Altgenberger and George Montgomery scored 10 points apiece for Illinois, with Efrim Winters, the fifth Illinois starter, adding nine.

"I'm not concerned with the scoring," said Henson. "I don't care who scores as long as we get the shots."

In other games involving major schools, Lafayette edged Princeton 45-43. Loyola of Maryland stopped Holy Cross 87-73. Vanderbilt crushed Vermont 73-55. Virginia Military nipped Radford 53-51. Iowa State bombed Augustana, S.D., 113-55. Marquette defeated Northwestern 53-44. Wisconsin ran over South Dakota 96-56 and Abilene Christian downed Wayland Baptist 99-89.

Also, Baylor squashed John Brown 112-67. Oregon defeated St. Martin's 66-42. Wyoming crushed Long Beach State 73-49. Pepperdine stopped Missouri-St. Louis 95-77 and San Diego State eased past the University of San Diego 57-33.

While he's expecting something "different," Wilkins isn't planning any major offensive changes for the Rebels. The Panthers are still going to throw the ball as much as ever and hand it off to their backs the rest of the time, mainly Dal Watson who has 1,219 yards rushing on 217 carries for 22 touchdowns.

"It's what we've been trying to do all year long," said Wilkins. "I don't think we want to change now."

Especially since it's worked for a 130 record and has Permian sitting as the No. 1 ranked team in the state.

The Panthers' game plan has also put Permian into the position of possibly winning their fourth state title in their 25-year existence. The Rebels, 12-1 and ranked second, are one of only three teams that can keep Permian from the title. Many believe the winner of this game will go on and claim the coveted crown. They also expect a lot more intensity in this do-or-die situation than in the first meeting of the two teams which Permian won 28-13.

"It's more than a regular game," said Wilkins. "The winner will go on to be in the semifinals. It's a different situation. The first time around you could lose and still have some games left to play for both the winner and loser. This time the loser has nothing left."

Except the memories which are happier for the team that wins.

Akeem becomes Tower of Power

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Akeem Olajuwon was a mountain of strength for the Houston Rockets, but the Golden State Warriors reduced his Twin Tower partner, Ralph Sampson, to rubble.

The Warriors held the 7-foot-4 Sampson to six points on 2-for-11 shooting and took their only lead of the game with nine seconds remaining on two free throws by Mickey Johnson to beat the Rockets 114-113 despite a season-high 42 points from Olajuwon.

"I can't believe we lost it," said Olajuwon who hit 18 of 22 field-goal attempts and had 13 rebounds and five blocked shots. "I wasn't getting the ball in the second half. I don't think the Warriors were doing anything different. The ball was just always on the other side of the court."

Olajuwon had 32 points at halftime for the Rockets, who led by as many as 15 points in the second period.

Olajuwon, a 7-foot rookie from Nigeria and the University of Houston, was disappointed although he easily surpassed his previous high game of 30 points.

"I'm not interested in points, I just wanted to win," he said.

Larry Smith, Golden State's rugged 6-8 forward, got the defensive assignment as the Warriors contained Olajuwon in the second half, but he said he got plenty of help from his teammates.

"We put more pressure on their guards and stopped them up top," said Smith. "I tried to keep Akeem away from the basket because when he does get close, there's no way to stop him. He's strong, whew!"

"He's not as strong as some, like Artis Gilmore," said Jerome Whitehead, who had 10 rebounds overall and 20 of his 24 points in the second half for the Warriors. "What makes him so good is that he's quick and very active."

"I can see why they drafted him No. 1," added Warriors Coach John Bach. "It was no mistake. We played more aggressively on him in the second half. I warned my players before the game that if he gets a chance, he'll take the ball, you and everything else to the basket. His power is awesome."

The Warriors trailed by 13 points at halftime and were never ahead until Johnson, a reserve forward, made the winning foul shots after being fouled by Sampson. Houston's Lewis Lloyd got off the final shot of the game and missed with one second left. Golden State got 30 points from Purvis Short and 27 from Eric Floyd.

Bucks 114, Pistons 99

Milwaukee took over sole possession of first place in the Central Division by beating Detroit for its ninth victory without a loss at home this season.

The Bucks got 20 or more points by four players, led by Sidney Moncrief and Terry Cummings with 27 each. Moncrief scored seven points during a 15-2 spurt at the start of the fourth quarter, which started with the teams tied 77-77.

Bill Laimbeer led the Pistons with 20 points, while Paul Pressey had 22 points and Craig Hodges 20 for Milwaukee.

Trail Blazers 113, Spurs 96

Portland pulled within one game of the first-place Los Angeles Lakers in the Pacific Division as Mychal Thompson scored 28 points against San Antonio.

Thompson scored eight points in the fourth quarter as the Trail Blazers pulled away by outscoring the Spurs 26-17 in the period.

George Gervin scored 30 points and Mike Mitchell 27 for San Antonio, while Kiki Vandeweghe had 25 and Jim Paxson 21 for Portland.

Mavericks 112, Knicks 83
Dallas buried New York with a 15-0 spurt at the start of the second half.

The Mavericks led only 49-43 at halftime, but Rolando Blackman scored seven points and Mark Aguirre six during the run that settled the outcome.

Blackman had 18 points to share team scoring honors with Derek Harper, who hit eight of his 10 field-goal attempts. Louis Orr equalled his career high with 28 points, including 17 of the Knicks' total of 23 in the third period.

Bullets 111, Pacers 106

Washington got two baskets from Frank Johnson in the final 39 seconds to stifle an Indiana rally.

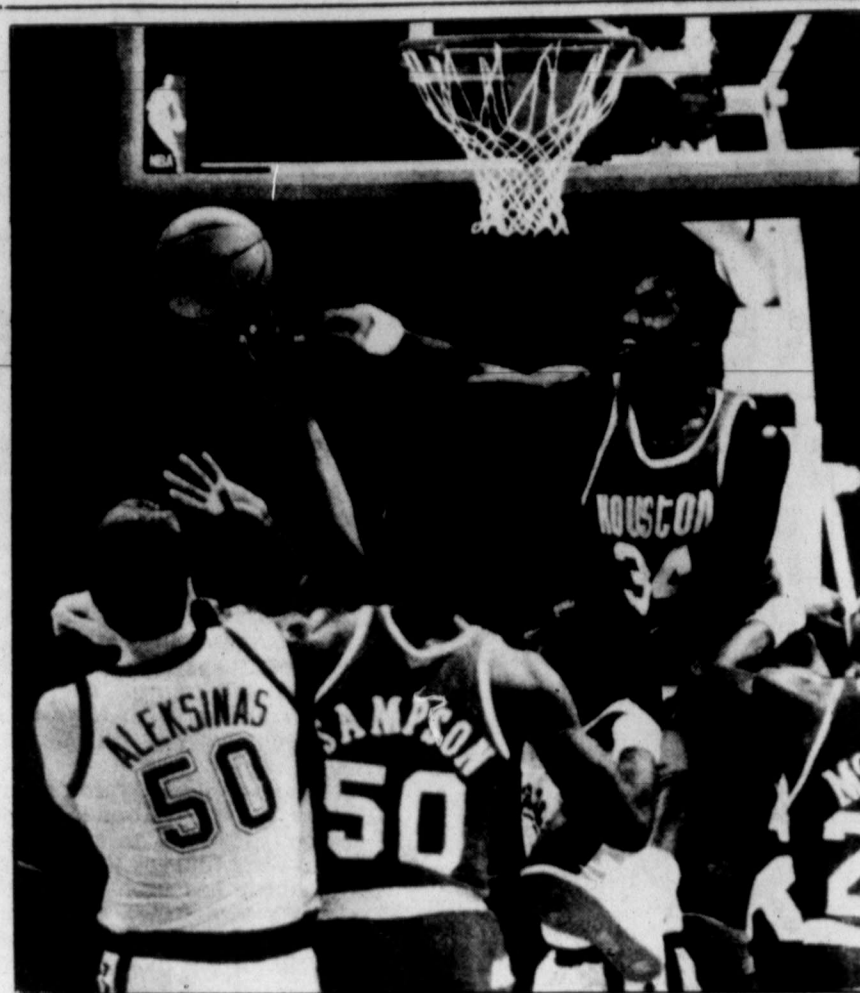

The Pacers, who got 22 points from Herb Williams and 21 from Clark Kellogg, came back from a 13-point deficit in the third quarter to lead by one point twice in the fourth period. But two turnovers by Williams led to the late baskets by Johnson.

Cliff Robinson led the Bullets with a season-high 28 points, while Jeff Ruland added 27.

SuperSonics 106, Jazz 99

Tom Chambers and Jack Sikma scored 26 points apiece to lead Seattle to victory at Utah.

Chambers, Sikma and Ricky Sobers, who had 23 points for the Sonics, led a 13-4 Seattle rally in the fourth quarter that turned an 85-83 deficit into a 96-89 lead.

Houston Rocket rookie Akeem Olajuwon (34) swats away a Golden State shot as Ralph Sampson and Chuck Aleksinas observe. Olajuwon scored a career-high 42 points but had the effort wasted in a one-point loss to the Warriors.

Drew draws indefinite suspension from Jazz

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Three days after missing a team practice and being sent home early from a road trip, veteran forward John Drew was suspended indefinitely Thursday by the Utah Jazz for violating team regulations.

The action came after the 10-year National Basketball Association player met with Frank Layden, the team's general manager and coach. Club officials would give no other details, except to say the suspension was without pay.

"The Jazz will have no other comment on the action," Jazz President David Checketts said in a brief statement. He said the club would seek another player to fill Drew's place on the roster, evidence that team officials considered the violation serious.

The 6-foot-6 Drew underwent eight weeks of drug rehabilitation at a Maryland clinic two years ago after spending what he later said was five years as a cocaine abuser. And the day after Drew missed practice near Oakland, Calif., Layden spoke of that concern.

"Whether it's fair or not, the first thing you think of in a case like this is drugs," Layden said before a Tuesday night game at Golden State. "But we are not looking at this as a drug-related case. There's no evidence of that."

However, after Drew showed up for a team shoot-around Tuesday in San Leandro, Calif., Layden climbed aboard the team bus and said, "Drew, out. Go and see him," referring to James Cline of San Jose, director of the Life Extension program available to all NBA players for drug, alcohol or other personal problems.

The 30-year-old Drew, runner-up as the NBA's Comeback Player of the Year in 1983, joined friends Sunday for a trip to nearby Vallejo and for a rock concert that night at the Oakland Coliseum.

Drew reportedly did not attend the concert and missed the team's 1 p.m. workout Monday, despite having called teammate Mark Eaton at 8:30 that morning to find out the time practice was to begin. He did not show up at the team's hotel until nearly midnight Monday night.

"I was 50 miles away and I couldn't get a ride back," Drew said Tuesday. Asked why he hadn't called Layden to let him know, he replied, "I didn't think of it."

Neither Drew nor his agent, Herb Rudy, could be reached for comment Thursday.

Drew talked with Cline Tuesday and took an afternoon flight back to Salt Lake City.

Wednesday, Layden said the matter of Drew's absence from practice Monday remained unresolved and he planned to obtain a better explanation from him Thursday.

"This is not a first offense; it is the first time this year," Layden said. "I want to find out just where he was and what happened. I think the best thing to do was to let the air clear a little bit. I didn't want to go off half-cocked the other day."

A urine sample was taken from Drew upon his return to Salt Lake City, but Layden said Wednesday he had not yet received the results. Drew, like other NBA players, is given frequent urine analysis.

"The drug test is taken routinely and had been intended to be taken anyway. It wasn't like, 'Oh, he's missing, let's take a drug test,'" Layden said.

Under the NBA's drug policy, any player convicted or pleading guilty to distribution of heroin or cocaine, or found through testing to have used the drugs, is barred from the league for life.

Players who voluntarily come forward, as Drew did in 1982, are suspended with pay and receive club-funded rehabilitative treatment. The second time a player comes forward, he is suspended without pay and given treatment.

Drew, a two-time NBA all-star, was obtained from the Atlanta Hawks in 1982. He has averaged 16.2 points in 19 games this season. As Utah's sixth man, he was instrumental in the club's first appearance in the NBA playoffs last season, averaging 17.7 points.

Drew has a 20-point NBA career scoring average and was an all-star in 1976 and 1980.

Central St. topples host ENM, 72-56

PORTALES, N.M. (AP) — Larry Harris poured in 26 points Thursday night to power Central State of Oklahoma to a 72-56 thrashing of Eastern New Mexico in the first round of the Sunshine Classic basketball tournament.

In the first game Thursday night, Maurice Hoskins scored 18 points to lead Lubbock Christian to an 84-70 victory over Colorado Mines.

Lubbock Christian will square off against Central State and Colorado Mines will play Eastern New Mexico in the round-robin tourney Friday.

Robert Hodge added 15 points and Curt Foster chipped in 11 to help lift Central State's record this season to 10-2.

Eastern New Mexico — led by R.A. Stephens with 13 points, Wallace Williams with 11 and Brad Steward with 10 — dropped to 2-4.

Eastern New Mexico's Grayhounds held the lead three times in the first half, but Central State fought back to tie the game at 25-25.

Central State, with 5:51 remaining in the first half, took a 27-25 lead and scored four more unanswered points to take a 31-25 advantage. Central State held a 38-35 lead at halftime and never trailed in the second half.

Lanier was honored during halftime of the Bucks' game against the Detroit Pistons. He spent his first 9½ seasons with the Pistons before being traded to Milwaukee. He announced his retirement Sept. 24, 1984. Lanier finished his career with 19,258 points.

Ballesteros takes early lead in Sun City

GOLF — Defending champion Severiano Ballesteros of Spain shot a three-under-par 69 and took a one-stroke lead over American Tom Kite and Britain's Nick Faldo, in the opening round of the Sun City Million Dollar Golf Challenge.

Kathy Whitworth shot a 72 and took a four-stroke lead in the $125,000 women's competition, introduced for the first time this year in the fourth Million Dollar Challenge that previously was an all-men's event.

BASKETBALL — Forward Alex English, who led the Denver Nuggets to a 123 record in November, their best start since they entered the NBA in 1976, was named the league's Player of the Month.

English averaged 29.9 points, hitting 191 of 354 shots from the field and 66 of 84 free throws in November. He also averaged 6.5 rebounds and 4.7 assists, and had 21 steals.

SKIING — Switzerland's Zoe Haas, skiing brilliantly through the difficult upper section of the course, won the season's first World Cup women's downhill race, edging West German Marine Kiehl.

Kiehl was already hugging her teammates and friends, savoring victory when Haas left the starting gate.

But Haas' time over the 1,968-meter Arlesienne track was 1 minute, 26.30 seconds, five-hundredths of a second faster than Kiehl.

GENERAL — Al Rogers, who won the Pikes Peak Auto Hill Climb five times, including four straight times, in three decades of racing, died of natural causes at his home. He was 75.

For 13 years, Rogers and Louise Unser waged a two-man battle on the mountain course, with nobody else winning on Pikes Peak between 1939 and 1952.

The No. 9 Coniff Special that Rogers piloted is now in the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Museum.

BOXING — Wilfredo Gomez of Puerto Rico will defend his WBC Featherweight title for the first time Saturday night against Azumah Nelson of Ghana.

The scheduled 12-round fight will be outdoors in Hiram Bithorn Stadium.

Both Gomez, 28, and Nelson, 26, were expected to make the 126-pound weight limit without difficulty.

Gomez won his second title by decision over Juan Laporte of Puerto Rico on March 31 in San Juan after giving up his super bantamweight title last year. He could no longer make the weight limit after a six-year reign.

The champion is expected to face a tough challenge in the African, ranked No. 1 in the division.

FOOTBALL — In the eyes of at least three Buffalo Bills fans, the answer to the problems of their 2-12 National Football League team is simple: Draft Doug Flutie.

Hence, the "Draft Doug Flutie Association," formed by Bob Orange, his brother Ray and an unidentified partner who want to see Flutie — this year's college all-over-their and Heisman Trophy winner — in a red Bills helmet.

Scratchpad

The group sold its first order of 100 "Draft Doug Flutie" buttons. And it expects to do the same with a new order of 150 more. With the Bills wallowing in a season in which it has been made painfully clear that a new quarterback is a top priority for next season, the demand could be huge.

Orange, a 28-year-old student, said, "We were sitting in my brother's house bemoaning the fact that we hadn't invented Trivial Pursuit first and we were watching the replays of Flutie, and I said, 'You know, the Bills are going to blow it. They're not going to take him.'"

TENNIS — Four players from the Soviet Union have been entered in the eighth annual Rolex International Junior Championships, to be played Dec. 23-30 at the Port Washington, N.Y. Tennis Academy.

It is the first time the Soviets have participated in this event, which features players from more than 40 countries.

The Soviet players listed as champions by their association are 17-year-old Aleksandr Volkov, the U.S.S.R. junior champion, and Andrey Olkovsky, 18, listed as the "U.S.S.R.'s champion prize winner" in the Girls 18's; Victoria Milvidskaya, 17, the current Soviet champion, and Natalia Bykova, 18, the "U.S.S.R. champion prize winner" in the Girls 18's.

The tournament has been a stepping stone for many of the world's top players, including Mats Wilander, Jimmy Arias, Ivan Lendl, Yannick Noah, Andrea Jaeger, Tracy Austin, Hana Mandlikova and Kathleen Horvath among others...

Ivan Lendl, the reigning French Open champion and ranked second in the world, has been voted the Volvo Grand Prix Player of the Month for November by a panel of international journalists.

The 24-year-old resident of Ostrava, Czechoslovakia, received the honor for winning both the singles and doubles titles at the $250,000 Benson & Hedges Championships held at London's Wembley arena Nov. 5-11. It was Lendl's first Volvo Grand Prix singles victory since winning the French Open earlier this year, and his first doubles title since capturing the Volvo Grand Prix event at Barcelona, Spain, in 1980.

He now has a total of 41 career singles titles...

COLLEGES — Former Texas Rangers manager Billy Hunter, acting director at Towson State University since June, has been appointed to the position of athletic director.

Hunter, 56, has been associated with Towson State since his 1979. During his major league baseball career, he was an infielder with the St. Louis Browns, the Baltimore Orioles and the New York Yankees. He was a member of the Yankees' 1956 World Championship team.

At the conclusion of his playing career, he joined the Orioles organization and managed the Bluefields in the Appalachian League titles in 1962 and 1963.

In 1964, he became the Orioles' third base coach, where he served for 13 years. In 1977, he was named manager of the Texas Rangers.

LEE

Even though the site of this quarterfinal matchup is the same, there will be some differences. Lee is the visiting team in this one and Jones fans will sit on the east side of Jones Stadium. Lee is 3-0 in the playoffs at Jones Stadium, but the Rebels have always been the home team until this game.

So, Permian, the home team, will be able to wear its favored all-black uniforms while Lee must wear white jerseys instead of the home Maroon.

For certain, those facts should play a very minor role in Exodus II. Papers across the state have been calling this matchup the battle for the state championship, but Tayrien disagreed.

"This certainly isn't the state championship. There will be two games left for the winner," said Tayrien. "Still, this is a big game. It's a step in the right direction."

Both squads have made preparation for Exodus II. All that remains is the game itself. And the line forms northward Saturday morning.

A brief pep rally for the Lee team will be held at 8 a.m. Saturday at the Lee Fieldhouse and a police escort will take the team out of town down Wadley where fans can gather to see them off.

It's here — almost.

Braves, Sutter close; S.D. trades for Hoyt

HOUSTON (AP) — Hey, anybody want a Cy Young Award winner?

The San Diego Padres did. They got LaMarr Hoyt from the Chicago White Sox.

The Atlanta Braves do. They're closing in on Bruce Sutter.

And a bunch of people want Rick Sutcliffe, who continued his pre-Christmas shopping Thursday.

Today at 5 p.m. CDT, baseball's winter meetings end. And there were indications they might finish with a flourish.

The New York Yankees have until the conclusion of the meetings to sign Oakland outfielder Rickey Henderson. If no agreement is reached, the deal that would send Henderson and a minor-league player from the A's for pitcher Jay Howell and four minor-league players is void.

"There are still definitely gaps," Richie Bry, Henderson's agent, said after negotiations Thursday. Bry is said to be asking for a five-year contract at more than $1.5 million per season.

"We didn't trade for Henderson so that we wouldn't be able to sign him," scoffed a Yankee official.

Equally big news could come from Atlanta, where Sutter and his two agents went Thursday amidst signs the relief pitcher could soon sign with the Braves.

Sutter looked at some property in Atlanta and while there toured the television station owned by Braves owner Ted Turner.

Sutter and his agents were to meet with Turner and Braves officials this morning.

Atlanta has offered Sutter, the 1979 National League Cy Young winner, a contract that reportedly would cost the Braves $8 1/2 million but in time would pay Sutter a whopping $48 million.

"We don't have any deal yet," Braves General Manager John Mullen said from his home. "When we see him, we'll ask, 'Hey, Bruce, what do you think? Did you see any property you liked?'"

Baseball Meetings

A source inside the Braves said the team felt the chances were now "90-10" that it could lure Sutter away from the St. Louis Cardinals.

Officials from the Cardinals were as pessimistic as the Braves were optimistic.

"We've been talking to them for two months and there comes a time when the handwriting is on the wall," Cardinals General Manager Joe McDonald said. "I'd say it doesn't look very good. From everything we've heard, he's anticipating signing with Atlanta."

Lou Susman, attorney for Cardinals owner August Busch, said the team had "gone the extra mile," presumably offering the no-trade clause Sutter wanted, but "they wanted too much money."

In the fast-paced swirl of speculation, the only certainty Thursday came when Hoyt was sent from the White Sox to the Padres in a seven-player deal.

Hoyt, who won the American League Cy Young in 1983 with a 24-10 record, struggled last season to 13-18, his first losing mark in the majors.

Meanwhile, Sutcliffe's free-agent future remained in doubt as his agent, Barry Axelrod, continued holding meetings with several clubs. One of them was the Chicago Cubs, the team Sutcliffe won the NL Cy Young Award with this season.

"I met with (General Manager) Dallas Green for a half-hour," Axelrod said. "We had a very good discussion."

"It definitely enhanced their position. They made an offer significantly different from their prior offer."

Axelrod also talked Thursday to Kansas City, thought to rank with Cubs as the front-runners to get Sutcliffe, along with San Diego, St. Louis and Atlanta.

'Horns' Degrate wins Lombardi

HOUSTON (AP) — Tony Degrate, a defensive tackle from the University of Texas, said he was looking forward to two things after winning the Lombardi Award — using the trophy to bargain with pro teams and getting out of his tuxedo.

Degrate, a 6-foot-4, 280-pound senior from the small West Texas town of Snyder, was honored Thursday night as the best college football lineman in the country.

"I've never made this many speeches in my life," he said in acceptance. All four finalists had addressed the audience shortly before.

"Each of these guys would have deserved this award," Degrate said. "I'm just left speechless and all I can say is thank God and thank everybody out there."

He said in a news conference afterward that the award "definitely will" help him negotiate a professional contract.

"Lombardi winners have a little edge," he said.

But Degrate said his mind was on other things as well. He said one evening of fancy dressing was enough.

"This is the first time I've ever been in a tuxedo," he said uncomfortably and indicated he was looking forward to getting rid of the suit.

Degrate said his coat measured "52 or 54" inches in the chest — huge, but he noted, far smaller than that of another finalist, 325-pound William Perry, a nose-guard from Clemson.

Degrate said the gargantuan Perry, known as "the Refrigerator" for his massive build, would have won the award if it had been given purely for highlight films. In footage shown at the awards ceremony, Perry scooped up a running back and spiked him several feet away, then chased down a quarterback.

Tony Degrate

Other finalists were Bill Fralic, a 6-5, 285-pound offensive tackle who is a senior at Pittsburgh, and University of Southern California outside linebacker Jack Del Rio, a 6-4, 235-pound senior.

Degrate led the Longhorns to a 7-3-1 season by making 147 tackles, 123 of them unassisted. His coach, Fred Akers, called him "a fixture in our opponents' backfields."

The Lombardi award, made from a 40-pound block of granite, is named for player and coach Vince Lombardi. It has been presented annually since 1970 and is sponsored by the Rotary Club of Houston.

Dean Steinkuhler, last year's winner and now an offensive lineman with the Houston Oilers, presented the award. When he announced the winner was from the University of Texas, the partisan crowd did not wait for him to finish his sentence, but roared its approval. Several spectators made "hook 'em Horns" signs as Degrate walked to the speakers' podium.

Degrate, who said he never would have gotten the nomination without his teammates, credited Texas' other starting defensive tackle, Bill Heathcock, for his success.

"He did all the dirty work and I received all the glory," Degrate said.

Akers called Degrate "one of the most genuine people I have ever had the pleasure to meet."

Akers said that when he went to visit Degrate in Snyder "the first thing he wanted me to do was to meet his town."

In another major award for collegiate linemen on Thursday, tackle Bruce Smith of Virginia Tech was named winner of the Outland Trophy, which is awarded only to interior linemen.

Smith said when he learned Wednesday that he won the Outland, "I was so happy, I didn't stop smiling all day. I was so happy about it. I probably won't stop smiling for a while."

Smith said that early in the season, "I was concerned about my stats being under par. I wondered if I'd be able to overcome all of the adversities, the type blocks I'd been getting, the double-teaming and cut blocking. That really concerned me, but I overcame it. Really, I don't know how."

Degrate was selected by a panel of 217 college football coaches, sports writers and sportscasters representing a geographic cross-section of the United States.

Fralic was first nominated for the award last year. Pittsburgh retired his jersey number of 79 after this season.

Perry is the Atlantic Coast Conference's all-time leader in quarterback sacks and tackles for lost yardage. He is credited with 100 tackles and 10 sacks this year.

Del Rio may play either professional football or baseball. He hit .342 with seven home runs for USC's baseball squad last year and made 90 tackles, including five sacks, on the school's football team. Del Rio was a baseball draft pick by the Toronto Blue Jays out of high school, but he said he will pass up baseball to try for a career in pro football.

Lee girls fall to Del Rio

From Staff Reports

Midland Lee's girls experienced a shooting night as cold as the recent weather Thursday at Al Langford Chaparral Center in a 53-48 loss to Del Rio.

The Rebels dropped to 2-4 after a third-period shooting lapse that turned a six-point halftime advantage into a four-point deficit.

The setback dropped Lee to 2-4. "I can't put my finger on it," pondered Lee head coach Shirley Stephenson of the loss. "In the third quarter we were 2-of-18 shooting. We were cold, cold, cold."

Equally chilly was the fact that Lee could not make up for poor shooting with free throw opportunities. Foul calls favored Del Rio, as Lee was whistled for 27 infractions to Del Rio's 14.

Coach Linda Caraway's junior varsity and sophomore units both will be involved in tournament action this weekend, so they prepared for the action with a game against each other that resulted in a surprising 57-43 win for the sophomores.

Soph Melissa Hart led all scorers with 17 points, while Lisa Staehling recorded 11 for the losing JVs.

The Lady Rebs had a 1-30 game scheduled against Midland High's junior varsity squad in the opener of the Tall City Girls Invitational tournament at the Chap today.

The JV record is now 0-3 as they take on the MHS varsity at 3:15 in the Tall City tourney. The sophs are playing in the Big Spring junior varsity tourney against the Andrews JVs.

Cowboys, Redskins resort to mind games

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins are not above using psychological plays in their annual National Conference Eastern Division clashes.

When the two teams collide in another critical matchup on Sunday at Texas Stadium, the Cowboys will harken back to yesterday in a mind game with the Redskins.

Roger Staubach, the old Redskin killer himself, will be introduced before the game starts as honorary team captain for the Cowboys.

In Staubach's last regular season game as a Cowboy in 1979, he took Dallas to a 35-34 victory that knocked Washington out of the playoffs.

In Washington this year, Tom Landry dartboards are a big seller. Last year Redskin running back John Riggins and many members of the team dressed in combat fatigues and called themselves "Riggo's Rangers" on the trip to Dallas and an eventual victory over the Cowboys.

Once, Harvey Martin of the Cowboys hurled a funeral wreath into the Redskin dressing room.

The oddsmakers rate the 3 p.m. CST clash dead even. Dallas, Washington and the New York Giants all have 9-5 records and are being hotly pursued by the St. Louis Cardinals at 8-6.

Any of the teams could win the division championship and two of them stand an excellent chance to play a wild card into the National Football League playoffs.

Dallas was defeated 34-14 by the Redskins in RFK Stadium in October,

Aggies' Pettibone takes NIU job

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Jerry Pettibone, assistant head football coach at Texas A&M University and considered one of the nation's leading recruiters, said Thursday he has accepted the job of head football coach at Northern Illinois University.

"I'm excited about the opportunity at Northern Illinois. This has been a goal for a long time," Pettibone said.

"This is an excellent opportunity for me to go in there and work with some fine young men who are excellent athletes and continue the tradition that has already been established there," Pettibone said.

Pettibone, 45, earned his mark as recruiting coordinator for his alma mater, Oklahoma, from 1971 to 1978.

He served as recruiting coordinator and receivers coach at Nebraska for three years before joining Jackie Sherrill at A&M as receivers coach in 1982.

Bear QB ruled out for playoffs

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon said Thursday he will miss the National Football League playoffs because of a kidney injury he suffered last month in a game with the Los Angeles Raiders.

"It's frustrating and I'm disappointed," said McMahon, who played most of the season with a fractured hand. "But I pretty much saw it coming. It's healing but at this point there is no way I can play."

McMahon suffered a lacerated kidney in a 17-6 victory over the Raiders on Nov. 4. At the time, doctors said he would miss at least four weeks of the season.

Tests taken Wednesday revealed the kidney "is healing normally but he still has a long way to go," said Dr. Michael Carter, who has been attending the quarterback.

McMahon had hoped he would be ready for the playoffs, which begin Dec. 29-30 for the Bears, but Carter said McMahon cannot play anymore this season.

McMahon said doctors earlier had told him he'd have little chance of coming back this season when he suffered a hairline fracture of his right passing hand Sept. 9 against Denver.

Punchless Bruins fall to Habs, 3-1

BOSTON (AP) — From one end of the ice to the other it's frustrating for the Boston Bruins. The hard work ethic isn't producing goals.

"It's frustrating just looking down at the other end," Boston goalie Pete Peeters said Thursday night after the Montreal Canadiens skated to a 3-1 National Hockey League victory over the Bruins.

"The opportunities are there for us to put it in the net, but we just can't seem to scrape up enough goals," Peeters said. "We're working hard, but all of a sudden, bingo-bango—and the puck is in our net."

"It gets frustrating after a while when you work so hard and the puck doesn't seem to want to go in for you," said Boston left wing Charlie Simmer. "We've been playing quite well outside of the scoring aspect and we've got to keep up our spirits. One of these nights the puck may bounce off four players into the net and we'll be out of it."

The Bruins managed ties in Quebec and Buffalo early this week. However, they have won only one of their last nine starts and now trail first-place Montreal by 11 points in the Adams Division.

The Bruins bombed goalie Steve Penney and the Canadiens 7-4 at Boston Garden on Nov. 24. On the return visit, the Canadiens, smarting from a 5-3 loss at Hartford on Wednesday night, got even.

"You have to be aggressive because they have good scorers and a lot of tough guys and you have to beat them along the boards," Penney said after just missing in a bid to become the first to shut out the Bruins at home since Montreal's 2-0 victory in 1977.

"We were more aggressive tonight than the last time we were here, but we talked more about the game last night," he said. "We blew the game last night. Everybody knew we played real bad and we wanted to make up for it."

Penney had 24 saves, including 13 in the third period. He lost his shut-out bid when Simmer took a pass from Ken Linseman and scored his 14th goal on a Boston power play at 15:10 of the third period.

"Tonight is a good example of how we're in first place," Penney said. "Everybody took care of things in front. You just do your job and not worry about the rest. We have a good defensive team. On offense, we have to wait for our breaks and then score important goals."

After Ray Bourque tested Penney on a long slap shot with the game just five seconds old, Montreal capitalized on its first scoring opportunity. Mark Hunter beat Peeters on a passout from Ryan Walter 19 seconds after the opening faceoff.

Mats Naslund converted a rebound for his 18th goal in the second period and Mike McPhee made it 3-0 early in the third period on another rebound.

Peeters, who had 19 saves, suffered a bruised finger and a five-stitch gash on his forehead with just over a minute to play. A hard shot by Larry Robinson deflected off his hand and struck his face mask.

He was replaced by rookie Don Sylvestri, recalled from Indianapolis of the International Hockey League. Sylvestri, who had one save in his NHL debut, was called up to replace goalie Doug Keane, who underwent lower groin surgery Thursday to repair damage suffered when hit by a puck in practice.

"The puck isn't going in for us, but most of our players are working their butts off," Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers said. "We've just got to keep plugging away."

"This was a pretty hard-checking game. Defensively we weren't bad. We were aggressive, we took the body. There are a lot of reasons the puck didn't go in for us, but the main cause was Montreal played pretty good defensively, especially in the first two periods."

Flyers 1, Nordiques 1

Defenseman Bruce Bell scored at 17:36 of the opening period for Quebec and Philadelphia's Tim Kerr knotted the game at 4:34 of the second period.

It was the only scoring as each team managed just one shot on goal in the five-minute overtime.

The Flyers lead the New York Islanders by six points in the Patrick Division, while Quebec is in second place in the Adams Division, two points ahead of Boston.

Curren, Wilander net Australian Open final

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Defending champion Mats Wilander of Sweden and ninth-seeded South African Kevin Curren took contrasting paths today to the men's singles final of the $1.28 million Australian Open tennis tournament.

Wilander, 20, took just 66 minutes to demolish two-time champion Johan Kriek of Naples, Fla., 6-1, 6-0, 6-2.

Curren had to battle for more than three hours before downing American Ben Testerman, ranked 35th in the world, 2-6, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

Wilander's victory over the South African-born Kriek was achieved in majestic style.

The second-seeded Swede played flawless tennis, completely overpowering Kriek, the fourth seed and winner here in 1981 and 1982.

Curren started very slowly and aggravated an old ankle injury on the way before finally beating Testerman.

The 26-year-old right-hander who now lives in Austin, Texas, never has reached a Grand Slam tournament final before, while Wilander is aiming for his third Grand Slam title.

Curren, who showed remarkable tenacity in fighting back from two sets down, will go into Sunday's final with a slight question mark over his fitness after he fell heavily on the slippery grass court and aggravated the same ankle injury that caused him to pull out of the U.S. Open earlier this year.

The South African, who shortly plans to apply for U.S. citizenship, indicated there was little chance of the injury forcing him to pull out of the final.

"I'm in pain, but I've come this far and it is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," Curren said. "I'll take that into account, and I've got a day to rest. If I have a chance of beating Wilander, it will be on grass."

Curren gained from a very fortunate call in the second game of the fifth set, when Testerman had a break point for 2-0.

Curren's second serve appeared to float out and the line judge called the ball out. The umpire, however, overruled and the point was replayed after Testerman's protests fell on deaf ears.

"It was another life for me," said Curren. "If I'd dropped serve, it would have taken a lot of air out of my balloon."

"I was disappointed because I got so close to winning," said the 22-year-old Testerman, "but I don't feel I choked it away. He took it away."

While the Curren-Testerman match was a full-blooded battle between two serve-and-volleyers, Wilander used plenty of subtle touch shots in his surprisingly easy victory over Kriek.

Kriek made unforced errors from the beginning and continually missed volleys when he ventured to the net. It was not until the fifth game of the third set that Kriek finally managed to hold a service game.

The victory was a repeat of Wilander's straight-set triumph over Kriek in the quarterfinals of last year's Australian Open. On that occasion, Wilander won 6-3, 6-4, 7-6.

Coaches sweat out final weeks

An AP Sports Analysis
By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

There are two weeks left in the National Football League's regular season, which means ... a lot of coaches are nervous.

Putting it another way, if all the rumors about coaches are to be believed, as many as 10 of the 28 teams in the NFL may start next season with a different head man than they started this one. That's counting the two changes already made — Marty Schottenheimer for Sam Rutigliano in Cleveland and Raymond Berry for Ron Meyer in New England.

The shakiest division for coaches is the National Conference Central.

Only Forrest Gregg of Green Bay is sure to be back, although Mike Ditka, who led the Chicago Bears to the division title, is almost sure to be back despite his public disagreements with team president Michael McCaskey. "I fully expect he'll be coaching the Bears next season," McCaskey said Thursday.

But John McKay of Tampa Bay already has announced his retirement; the fate of Detroit's Monte Clark remains uncertain, and, Les Steckel's 3-11 record in Minnesota has produced signs reading, "Less Steckel." Steckel, however, was hand-picked by General Manager Mike Lynn, and as long as Lynn stays, Steckel should get to start a second year.

Of the others, Buffalo's Kay Stephenson is very shaky and Indianapolis owner Robert Irsay is leaving Frank Kush dangling, giving rise to suggestions Kush may end up in Arizona with the newly merged and renamed Arizona Outlaws of the United States Football League.

Philadelphia's Marion Campbell was in trouble early in the season and might be again if the Eagles drop their last two games; Dan Henning of Atlanta has received the sometimes-fatal vote of confidence from owner Rankin Smith; San Francisco's Bill Walsh talks every year about resigning as coach to become the team's full-time president, and even Berry may not be back in New England.

If it's any consolation to any of the above, the shakiest coach when the season started was Bill Parcells of the New York Giants, who had gone 3-12-1 in his first year and was about to be replaced by Howard Schnellenberger.

Now the Giants are 9-5, tied for first in the NFC East and Parcells is encoached quite nicely in East Rutherford, leaving Schnellenberger to settle for the University of Louisville, if a reported $300,000 contract can be called settling.

IN FOOTBALL, the game ain't over 'til Al Davis says it is.

With 48 seconds left in the Los Angeles Raiders' 45-34 victory in Miami last Sunday, the Dolphins, trailing by 11 points, apparently threw in the towel. On fourth and 22 from their 8, Miami's Reggie Roby lined up to punt and the Raiders sent their punt receiving team onto the field.

Wrong, screamed Los Angeles owner Davis, sitting in the press box atop Miami's Orange Bowl.

"What are you doing?" he yelled at the field, three levels below on the other side of a glass partition. "They're not gonna punt. Get the defensive team in there! C'mon! Do it!"

He continued to yell until ... Roby punted.

CLEVELAND COACH Marty Schottenheimer was incensed at two of his defensive backs, Hanford Dixon and Al Gross, for taunting Cincinnati's Cris Collinsworth as Collinsworth lay prone at Cleveland Stadium following the first play of last Sunday's game.

Collinsworth had caught a 7-yard pass from Turk Schonert and was hit by Frank Minnifield, another Browns' defensive back. He lay dazed for an instant as Gross and Dixon stood over him, then limped off the field with an injured ankle and didn't return to the game.

"It's intolerable to me," said Schottenheimer, who upbraided Dixon and Gross on the sidelines. "I have too much respect for what it takes to play the game."

"I've told the players this — the guy across the line of scrimmage is you. He just happens to wear a different uniform. There's no place for that in our game."

That earned Schottenheimer the praise of Cincinnati Coach Sam Wyche.

"I don't know those guys personally and I don't want to jump on their case," Wyche said. "But I agree with Marty. I think that's a class thing to do, and it's a gutsy thing to openly make a stand like that. And I think it's something that should ripple through the league. I'll second that motion and it won't happen with our guys, either."

New Mexico girl competes as prep wrestler

LOS LUNAS, N.M. (AP) — A Los Lunas High School sophomore is the first girl to compete on a New Mexico prep wrestling team, says the school's athletic director.

And Mike Romero said Michelle Alexander, 15, has his 100 percent support.

"She proved me dead wrong," he said.

Tom Torres, head wrestling coach, said, "She's part of the team. She's earned it, just like the rest."

Alexander lost her first match Tuesday to Albert LaJeunesse of Albuquerque's West Mesa High School, who pinned her in 36 seconds and won the junior varsity event.

"I'm not going to quit," she said. "I'm going to work even harder."

Alexander told Torres in October she wanted to go out for wrestling.

Torres said he "took it as a joke at first."

So did Romero.

"About four weeks before the season started, Coach Torres came to me and said he had a girl coming out," said Romero. "I said, 'You've got to be kidding.'"

"Halfway joking, I said, 'Send her to me and I'll talk her out of it.' But after 15 minutes with her, I could tell she was determined that there was nothing I could say to dissuade her," Romero said.

Romero said he talked with Alexander's mother, too.

"I said, 'Ma'am, do you know what this means, all the kidding and all the holds they'll be using on her?' She said she did and that it was OK with her if that's what her daughter wanted to do."

"That was strike two," Romero said.

Artificial heart recipient may be moved from cardiac unit

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Artificial heart recipient William J. Schroeder has shown "a marked improvement," is in high spirits and may soon be moved out of his room in the cardiac care unit, one of his doctors said today.

Dr. Allan M. Lansing, chairman and medical director of the Humana Heart Institute International, said Schroeder is so cheerful he was "talking about going home...even talking about attending his son's wedding in March."

Doctors planned to take

Schroeder to the institute's X-ray unit today to check the positioning of the Jarvik-7 mechanical heart in his chest, Lansing said. Their "probable plan" also called for Schroeder to be moved out of his room in the cardiac care unit into a private room.

If that move takes place, Schroeder's condition probably would be upgraded, Lansing said.

Schroeder's condition already was changed to serious from critical earlier this week.

"The main thing is he looks very well," Lansing said. The patient has shown "a marked improvement in all functions in the past 24 hours," Lansing said at an early morning news conference.

Doctors have not talked to Schroeder about criticism of the Nov. 25 implant by members of the American Medical Association, Lansing said. If Schroeder is in a good mood later today, that subject may be discussed.

Schroeder, 52, is continuing an exercise program to strengthen his limbs and is having less trouble lifting himself now than he did Thursday, Lansing said. The patient's attitude toward a better diet also is improving.

Both the X-rays and a possible radio isotope check — to monitor the motion of the mechanical heart — would be for research, to give Humana's implant team information that it could use later in studies tracking Schroeder's progress.

Doctors had discussed allowing Schroeder to move earlier in the week, but chose today because tubes connecting him to monitoring machines have been removed, Dr. William C. DeVries said Thursday.

Only air lines linking Schroeder's heart to the 323-pound Utah-driven pump system remain connected, DeVries said.

"He can do whatever he wants to. Everytime we do anything to him, we ask him," DeVries said. "You don't want to do something like that that would get him so tired that it would hurt him."

Schroeder "was getting back to a regular sleep cycle" and spent 45 minutes sitting up Thursday morning, said Dr. Ronald Bartle, a surgeon on the implant team headed by DeVries.

On Thursday, Schroeder took about 10 shuffling steps to a window and back aided only by a nurse's hand on his elbow. The nurse did not have to help support his weight, Bartle said.

Wednesday night, Schroeder donned the shoulder strap of his Helms portable heart driver and stood in place, said Larry Hastings, the institute's technical director.

Flynt's psychiatrist describes 'manic' condition

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Hustler publisher Larry Flynt, being sued for $45 million by Moral Majority leader Jerry Falwell, suffers from a manic-depressive mental condition and is often self-destructive, Flynt's psychiatrist says.

Dr. Saul Nieford testified Thursday in federal court that Flynt's manic side surfaced when he gave a June 15 deposition in which he cursed, picked his nose and said he had proof Falwell had sex with his mother.

Falwell sued the publisher and his magazine for libel over a twice-published ad parody that depicted the Moral Majority leader as an incestuous drunkard.

Flynt has said he didn't mean what he said in the deposition. He testified Thursday that the parody was designed "to give people a chuckle," not to hurt Falwell.

CHICAGO (AP) — When superstar Michael Jackson testified in a $5 million copyright-infringement case, the courtroom became his stage, the witness stand his drums, the microphone his sound system and the jury his audience.

A smiling, singing, clapping, even swaying and rocking Jackson testified Thursday in the trial of Fred Sanford's lawsuit alleging the pop star stole his song, "Please Love Me Now," and made it into the hit "The Girl Is Mine."

But Jackson, 26, assured U.S. District Court jurors he had composed "The Girl Is Mine." He said he hadn't even heard "Please Love Me Now" until after the lawsuit was filed.

The lawsuit, filed against CBS Inc., does not name Jackson as a defendant.

"The Girl Is Mine" appears on Jackson's album, "Thriller." With more than 20 million copies sold, it is the largest-selling album in history and has earned $100 million.

NEW YORK (AP) — Soprano Leontyne Price will sing her final role on the opera stage Jan. 3 at the Metropolitan, but has "no plans to retire," a newspaper reports.

Miss Price, 57, a leading soprano and interpreter of Verdi roles since her Met debut in 1961, will make her final appearance in the title role of "Aida," which she has not sung at the Met for nine years, The New York Times said in its Friday edition.

She will personally announce her plans the same night in a filmed message to be aired during an intermission in the public television program "Live from the Met."

She is heavily booked for recitals for the next three years, The Times said, including one at the Met next March 24.

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Reve and John Walsh, whose 6-year-old son was slain in a case depicted in the television movie "Adam," celebrated the birth of a second boy more than three years after the tragedy.

Mrs. Walsh, 33, gave birth to 6-pound, 12-ounce Callahan on Thursday at Fairfax Hospital. Walsh told a hospital spokesman he was "ecstatic."

Adam disappeared July 27, 1981, from a shopping mall in Hollywood, Fla., where the family was living. His severed head was found two weeks later. The rest of the body was never found, and no one has been charged in the case.

The Walshes sponsored a national campaign that helped prompt Congress to pass the Missing Children's Act, which enlists the aid of the FBI computer network in the search for missing youngsters.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Bob Barker estimates he's given away $60 million in cash and prizes in nearly 28 years as a game-show host, but says the real thrill comes in seeing the real-life risks contestants take.

"These are not actors and actresses," said the star of "The Price Is Right" and the old "Truth or Consequences."

"These are people in real situations where they really have a chance to profit and they really have a chance to fail. It's sort of a slice of life right there for you on television," said Barker, 60.

Barker brings his traveling audience-participation program to Chattanooga tonight. The "Bob Barker Fun and Games Show" includes stunts, games and gags.

NEW YORK (AP) — Shirley Fonda, widow of actor Henry Fonda, is suing a construction company, charging that its work has caused her townhouse "to sink, split into two parts, and lean."

Mrs. Fonda filed suit Thursday seeking to block further construction of the high-rise on Manhattan's East Side until the builder moves "to protect the structural stability of the adjacent buildings."

Mrs. Fonda rents her four-story townhouse to the Brazilian ambassador to the United Nations, according to her lawyer, Charles Stewart.

Irwin Toporoff, a structural engineer, said in court papers unless the house is underpinned soon, it will continue to sink and may collapse.

LOUISIA, Ky. (AP) — A new recording by country music singer Ricky Skaggs is in the mail to 7,500 radio stations nationwide, but his message is not in the music.

Skaggs, 30, sings some of his hit song "Heart-broke" before shifting into a message encouraging 18-year-olds to do their duty and register with the Selective Service System within 30 days of their birthday.

Strain of filmmaking forces Ingmar Bergman to quit

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — To Ingmar Bergman, the creative genius that goes into award-winning art films can mean using a vacuum cleaner to create a desert sandstorm or even making a pact with the devil.

It was hard, draining work, made more so by a lingering fear that the next film would be as good as the last, and that's why Ingmar Bergman quit.

"Fanny and Alexander" was the last cinematic effort for the 66-year-old Swedish filmmaker, though his stage and TV work continues as prodigiously as ever.

"I don't want to go through the physical and mental strain (of movie making) again," he said in an interview. "With advancing age, I find I'm demanding more and more of myself and becoming increasingly fearful that I won't live up to my own high standards."

Bergman, whose "Fanny and Alexander" won the Academy Award as best foreign film of 1983 and three other Oscars — unprecedented for a foreign-language movie — recently screened a documentary at the Swedish Film Institute on the shooting of his $4 million epic, by far the most expensive project of his four decades-long film career.

"Fanny and Alexander," which was produced in three-hour and five-hour versions and as a TV mini-series, is a rich, colorful fresco with motifs from the Swedish upper classes in the years preceding World War I.

Bertil Guve, the boy who starred as 10-year-old Alexander, once said with youthful perceptiveness: "It's a film where a lot of bad things happen. People die — and they get married."

Critics generally considered the film an upbeat crowning of a career comprising mostly introverted and pessimistic works. Two of his films — "The Virgin Spring" and "Through a Glass Darkly" — made Bergman a darling of the intellectual elite and won him best foreign film Oscars in the early '60s.

Dressed in his customary slightly baggy leisure wear, the notoriously shy director seemed relaxed and in a humorous mood as his associate Arne Carlsson's two-hour-plus documentary was screened.

He drew laughs as he ad-libbed about the nuts and bolts problems of filmmaking. They included instructing a black cat to cross a road at precisely the right moment — that didn't work; keeping a Christmas smorgasbord photogenic during four days of shooting; and reversing a regular vacuum cleaner to blow whirling sand over desert wanderers in a Hebrew legend included in the long version of the film.

Bergman, a son of a Lutheran priest, said he made a pact with the devil while shooting exterior scenes for "Wild Strawberries" in 1957.

"I had 16 actors waiting for the sky to clear up, so I tapped the ground and offered my soul to the devil if he would give me sun," Bergman said. "Would you believe it, 10 minutes later there was glaring sunshine."

While the seven-month shooting of "Fanny and Alexander" had its share of laughs, he said there were some strong emotional moments, too.

The documentary shows an infinitely patient Bergman directing actor Gunnar Bjornstrand, 75, in a scene he wrote especially for his old friend who starred in such movies as "The Seventh Seal." Bjornstrand had suffered brain damage following an illness some years ago.

"Actors sometimes represent the human race at its greatest," a visibly moved Bergman said about Bjornstrand's courage as he tried to remember his lines during a number of retakes.

Bergman has always had a reputation for being an actor's director, but he reportedly does not practice democracy on the set.

Nevertheless, cinematographer Sven Nykvist, a two-time Oscar winner who worked with Bergman on two dozen films, clearly emerges in the documentary as the second powerhouse of the production — the person who will argue with the master and sometimes win.

"Our relationship is like an excellent old marriage, with arguments and occasional bursts of bad temper," Bergman said.

Many cinema enthusiasts have speculated that "Fanny and Alexander" was the director's final effort to exorcise a traumatic childhood. And in his commentary, Bergman did in fact point to an autobiographical background for several scenes.

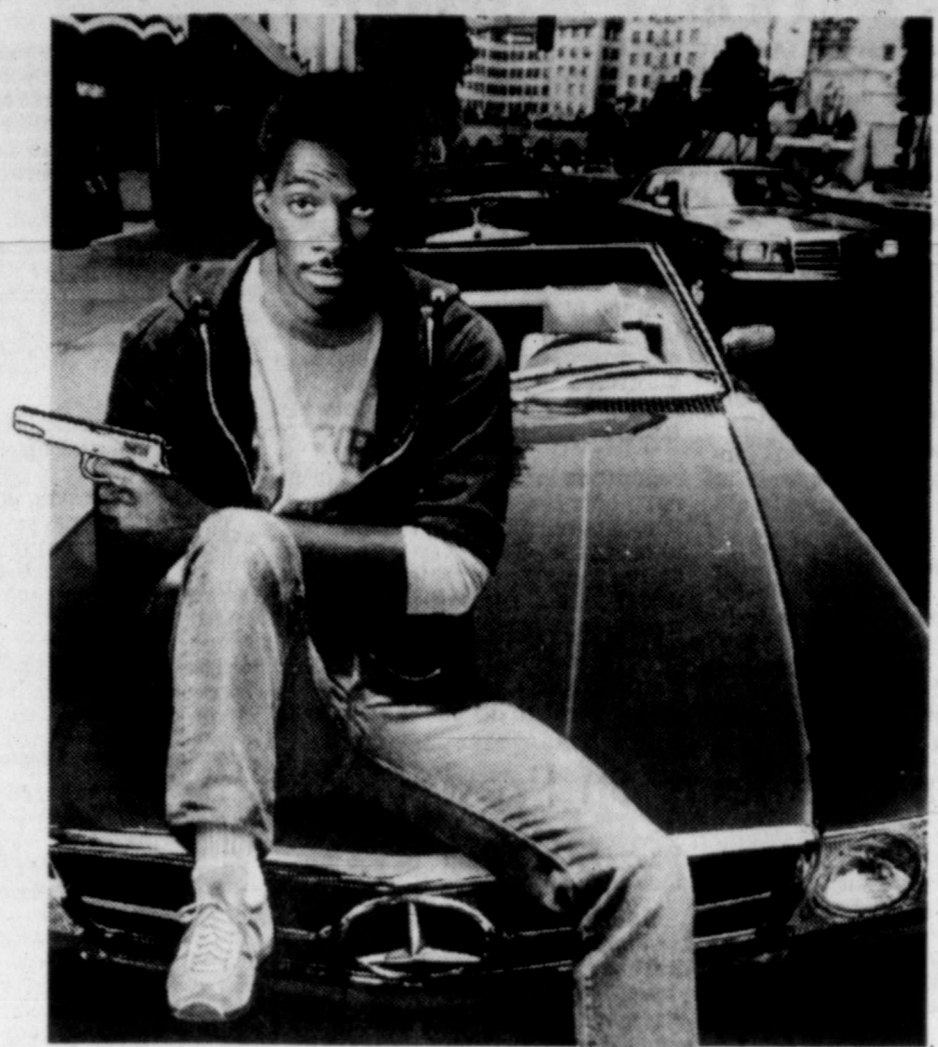

In one chilling episode of the documentary, Bergman instructs Guve and Permillia Allwin, the film's Fanny, in a scene where they try to use mental willpower to invoke the death of their stepfather and tormentor.

"I know exactly how you feel," Bergman encouraged his young stars. "At your age, my sister and I used to do that a lot."

"But you were joking, then," Guve said.

"On the contrary," Bergman replied solemnly. "We were dead serious."

He's been chased, thrown through a window, and arrested. Eddie Murphy is a Detroit cop on a vacation in Beverly Hills.

Poetry important part of Czechs' lives

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — On Thursdays, poetry lovers line up outside bookstores to get first crack at the new titles. It's common to see subway commuters browsing through anthologies rather than paperback novels.

Little known abroad and seldom translated, Czechoslovakia's poets formed a centerpiece of national life long before Jaroslav Seifert won the Nobel Prize for Literature this year.

Seifert is the last survivor of a poetry generation which included Vitezslav Nezval, Frantisek Hrubin, Josef Hora and Vladimir Holan.

They thrived on a melodious language which lends itself well to verse and they wrote to a well-informed audience.

Despite occasional brushes with authority, most Czech and Slovak poets can also count on being well-published.

Collections are regularly printed in runs ranging from 2,000 to 30,000 copies or more for a population of 15 million. According to a leading publishers' catalog, about 10 books of children's poetry alone are issued annually in about 20,000 copies each.

"Reading of poetry has its irreplaceable share in the molding of an all-round and harmonious development of a child's personality," said a front page feature in Family and School Monthly.

Some of the greatest Czech poets have written for children. Seifert's collection entitled "Mother" was published in five editions totaling more than 100,000 copies between 1955-81.

Contests in declamation and original poetry writing are staples of school curriculum from elementary to college levels. Poetry is even part of the language training for vocational school apprentices studying trades from woodworking to steel-making.

"They certainly do not turn into angels through it, but it cannot be denied that a person changes emotionally," said the youth daily Mlada Fronta in November. "More than one (apprentice)... becomes interested in the authors of the poems, perhaps even writes verses of his own.

"That is, he begins to do something which is just the opposite of a consumer approach to life."

Poetry is also part of the daily press.

The Communist Party newspaper Rude Pravo, the biggest daily in the country, prints a poem practically every day. Others, like Svoboda of Central Bohemia, set aside space to review poems sent in by readers.

Top actors recite on the Sunday evening TV program, "Moments With Poetry."

Nor is it only Czech poetry that gets attention here. Foreign writers, from Americans to Sudanese, are published in translation in the bimonthly "World Literature."

Prices of books are low. The hard-cover volume of Seifert's "Struggle With an Angel," for example, costs about $2. But supply generally outstrips demand for the most popular works, and it helps to have a bookstore connection.

"Retail prices are not economic prices," said Josef Martin of the planning department in the Czechoslovak Writer publishing house.

When an attractive book is expected to go on sale, usually on a Thursday, students and pensioners start lining up at midday, said Irena Gjurisicova, manager of a shop on Prague's prestigious Narodni Trida.

The actual sale is usually put off until 4 p.m. to give working people a chance to buy, she said. Lines form at other stores, too, often during the morning for a late afternoon buying rush.

Paul Anka reflects on Presley

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer-songwriter Paul Anka, reflecting on his late friend Elvis Presley, says the legendary performer's isolation led to self-destruction.

"Elvis never really got into life," Anka said. "He never traveled, never got really close to people and never learned to be comfortable in public. He was isolated so long that he became self-destructive, and whatever he was into, he got into it too far."

Anka said he loved Presley, who would have been 50 this January. He last saw him six months before his death in August 1977. "I could sense something was wrong with him emotionally and physically," Anka said.

One of the last songs Presley recorded was Anka's "My Way."

'Chuckles Gang' puts on the feed

By EVELYN STRODER

CRANE (AP) — A meal for a large meeting or charity benefit was nearly always a problem in this town of about 4,600 people about 32 miles south of Odessa.

Scheduling out-of-town catering services proved difficult, and the cost was high.

But recently, an informal organization has helped overcome the problem. It isn't a club, just a gang — the Chuckles Gang.

"Every member is a president. We have it on our shirts," County Judge Charles Blue, a charter member of the group, said recently.

"We are very loosely organized, if at all," he said.

The Chuckles Gang served its 17th event in two years recently when the Crane County Chamber of Commerce Banquet was held, Blue said. During that feed, Blue added, the number of people who have stood in Chuckles Gang serving lines topped the 5,000 mark.

Blue explained that off-beat practices are normal for this group, which functioned for several months before it even had a name.

In the spring of 1982, a Crane charity was planning its second annual dinner theater and wanted to make sure food costs didn't eat into profits.

So a group of men — no one remembers exactly how many — got together and planned steak, potatoes and salad for 320 people, Blue recalled. The benefit resulted in about 75 percent profit, and 100 percent fun, the county judge recalled.

About five months later, the same group of men — more or less — got together to prepare barbecue for Fiesta '85, Crane's birthday celebration, he said.

"What is this group — the Chuckles Gang?" said someone waiting in the serving line. Blue said the name, a take-off on Odessa's Chuck Wagon Gang, has been with the group ever since.

The county judge said the Chuckles Gang owes what little organization it has to one factor — the need for a name.

There are no membership requirements and no formal roll call — just a list that varies depending on dropouts and new enrollees, Blue said.

"We didn't want to be a regular club, with officers, dues and all that."

The group keeps no guidelines for what events it will serve. Each function is considered as it comes up, said Crane County Commissioner Billy Irl Butler. Blue said Butler is the group's "ramrod."

Butler noted that guidelines previously drawn up were discarded when they became too restrictive. "Sometimes the majority would want to serve an activity, but (the event) didn't fit within the guidelines. So we just threw the guidelines in the can," he said.

Charley Hyche, left, and Garland Hensley, center, try to talk Billy Irl Butler into doing his "bull" impression. The three men belong to the Chuckles Gang, an informal organization which provides catering for meetings and benefits in Crane.

UT to limit number of engineering students

New students can't be accommodated, president says

AUSTIN (AP) — Faced with increasing numbers of students seeking admission to the program, the University of Texas will limit undergraduate enrollment in its electrical and computer engineering department next year.

The present and anticipated number of new students in the department... cannot be accommodated by either the existing or planned number of faculty, facilities and budgets," Peter Flawn, UT president, said.

The university said that to keep the number of electrical engineering students at a maximum of 1,500, admission will be limited to 700 new students each year beginning in the summer of 1985.

As a temporary measure, UT said it will also suspend admission of additional transfer students to the electrical engineering program for the spring, summer and fall terms in 1985.

"It is inappropriate for the university to admit freshmen and transfer students who perform well in their major, and then deny them the privilege of completing their degree requirements within a reasonable period of time," Flawn said.

The university said that admission will be based on "overall academic achievement and potential," and that qualified freshmen who are denied admission to the electrical engineering program will be offered admission to any of the seven other undergraduate engineering programs.

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN (AP) — When Garson Jackson quit selling suits to become deputy clerk of the Texas Supreme Court, the law business was small enough that Jackson remembers only about a dozen lawyers argued all the cases before the court.

Even now he can name several of those specialists — Dean Moorhead, Ireland Graves, former Gov. Dan Moody, Tom Gee, now a federal judge, and so on.

The year was 1957, and Jackson commuted 60 miles roundtrip each day from Lockhart in a two-year-old Chevrolet. His salary was $351 a month.

Ten years later, George Templin, clerk for 23 years, retired, and Jackson got his job. He was required by law to move to Austin.

On Dec. 31, Jackson, 64, will retire after 18 years as clerk, 28 years total. He's moved up to a 1981 Buick and a $3,000 a month salary.

"I'll be 65 on July 7, and it's my intention to enjoy a few of my desires while I still have them," Jackson said in an interview.

Nothing extravagant: Golf, fishing, hunting; short trips with his wife, Lena, at their leisure; putting around the house, with special attention, perhaps, given to a 1945 Zenith radio that sat on a windowsill in his office.

"I have never really had any time for vacations," Jackson said, and close to 400 hours of unused vacation time on the books support his statement.

Since Jackson was hired 28 years ago, the judges on the nine-member court have turned over completely. He has served under four chief justices — John Hickman, Robert Calvert, Joe Greenhill and Jack Pope — and 31 associate justices.

Coincidentally, Pope, on the Supreme Court since 1965, will retire in January.

The caseload has doubled, Jackson says, as Texas' number of lawyers has increased to over 44,000. In 1957, the state bar says, there were 13,128 lawyers in the state.

"Everything that's filed in this court — all notices, all orders, all opinions, everything that the court does officially with reference to records — is funneled through my office," Jackson says.

His successor has not been named by the court.

More than a century's worth of legal papers, from 1840 to 1944, have been moved to the state archives, clearing space on two floors at the courts building for records dating back to 1967.

All law licenses, now up to 2,700 a year, are issued through the clerk's office, and Jackson also is responsible for collecting annual state bar fees of nearly $4 million a year.

"When I went to work, the court had nine judges, three briefing attorneys and five secretaries. Right now, the court has nine judges, 18 briefing attorneys, six central staff, and each judge has a secretary," Jackson says. "My staff has added one deputy and one accountant."

Like most offices, new machinery has helped Jackson's staff keep pace with the paper crush. The Templin-Jackson staff worked on manual typewriters in two large offices at the Capitol. "A Royal, a good one, cost $182.50," he recalls.

Roger Johnson, leader of the Ninth Texas Infantry Civil War Reenactors group, writes with a quill pen while bivouacked on the grounds of the Maxey House in Paris, Texas. The group was honoring the man who founded the original Ninth Texas Infantry, Gen. Samuel Bell Maxey.

Civil War group brings history alive

PARIS, Texas (AP) — It's been nearly 120 years since the end of the Civil War, but Confederate "soldiers" were recently bivouacked in Paris on the grounds of the Maxey House at the corner of Church and East Washington streets.

Four men and three women, all members of the Ninth Texas Infantry Civil War Reenactors group, came to honor the man who founded the original Ninth Texas Infantry, Gen. Samuel Bell Maxey.

But, the group had another reason for their visit, as well, said the leader of the group, Roger Johnson of Carrollton: "Mainly we came here to do living history."

They lived as Civil War-era soldiers: practicing drills, loading antique rifles, writing home with quill pens, camping in tents, cooking over campfires and eating stew from tin plates.

"When we do this, our goal is to educate the public. We want them to see and know what it was really like for a Civil War soldier."

"We show what their camps were like, what kinds of weapons they shot, the clothes they wore, how they drilled, and (we) do it as an educational thing," Johnson said.

The modern Ninth Texas Infantry includes members from the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas and Colorado. Several cities in each of those states have chapters.

October marked the 123rd anniversary of the formation of the original group by Maxey. "Maxey originally formed a group called the Lamar County Rifles at the beginning of the war," said Johnson. "After that he went off the Richmond, Va., to get a commission as a lieutenant colonel so he could form a regiment."

"He came back and formed the regiment from men who lived in Lamar, Red River, Fannin, Titus, Collin, Grayson and Hopkins counties. They were known as Maxey's Texas Brigade for a while and later were renamed the Ninth Texas Infantry."

Johnson said they also came hoping to enlist recruits for the organization, which was formed during the summer of 1982. Reenacting the Civil War era has much to offer, he added.

"This is great relaxation. We come out and do this for a weekend and you get away from your job, you get away from whatever else is going on. It's different."

"If you like to camp, you enjoy it. If you like music, weapons, uniforms, the politics of the time, the history of the time, the sociology of the time, they you'll probably enjoy this."

"Even if you're into acting, this offers great opportunities because when we do living history we try to interpret and act as Civil War soldiers. We're on stage. It's live ad-lib theater."

"But like any acting part or hobby, you have to know what you are doing and what you are talking about. Because when you're doing living history, you have to know all the things that someone from that period would have known about and you have to erase everything that has happened since that time."

"It's a challenge, yet it's an exciting and fun challenge," Johnson said.

Civil War re-enacting became popular about 20 years ago during the centennial celebration of the Civil War. Johnson said at that time the government wanted to recreate all the major battles fought during the war. "They got all these guys together for the first battle, and it was a disorganized mob. They didn't take proper safety precautions, and they didn't carry authentic weapons or equipment. But they put on a good show and the public loved it. But the National Park Service didn't because they didn't want to face lawsuits from people who could have gotten hurt."

Johnson added that since then those who were really interested in the Civil War got together to try and do things as safely and as authentically as possible.

Johnson said that he became interested in reenacting while living in Kansas. "Just before I moved to Dallas, I was at a Civil War roundtable meeting in Kansas City when I heard some people talk about reenacting. I found out that the state of Missouri has a strong reenactors association, so I joined it. I traveled back to Missouri frequently even after I moved to Dallas simply because I loved it so much." Later, Johnson met North Texans interested in forming a group.

The seven infantry members who performed in Paris each said they enjoy reenacting.

Stan Hardwick, a Fort Worth mailman said: "We get people in our group from all walks of life."

"It's great because when we get together, nobody talks about their jobs or what we do in real life. In fact, I don't even know what a lot members do during the rest of the week."

Hardwick said that a newspaper advertisement enticed him to begin reenacting.

"I always had a natural liking for the period and I saw that ad in the paper and started going to events from then on," he said.

Edward Benline, an Arlington, Texas, lawyer acts as second lieutenant. "I always had a desire to study the Civil War," Benline said. "This gives me a chance to try and actually experience what happened during that time."

Benline said that the new Ninth Texas, like the original group, is made up of people from all walks of life. "We have ranchers, farmers, blue-collar workers all the way up to corporate executives, doctors and other professionals who all have a common love of the Civil War era."

Like the others, Roger Durham of Bonham said he has always been interested in military history. Durham, director of the Sam Rayburn House, said: "I came to Bonham from Savannah, Ga., where I managed Fort McAllister, which is where Sherman's march to the sea ended."

"Although I worked in a famous place as far as the Civil War is concerned, I never could avail myself of the opportunities to get involved with participating in reenactment groups there. Reenacting is a very popular hobby in the Southeast and the groups are a lot bigger and are closer together."

Johnson said that their group is open to anyone interested in the Civil War. "We not only have men in this group, but many of our wives are involved, and in some cases the entire family goes to events."

Professor translating German war papers

STILLWATER, N.Y. (AP) — A German surgeon born more than 200 years ago has been Helga Doblin's guest in her backroad cape house near this eastern New York town for better than two years now, but she has not grown tired of having him around.

Mrs. Doblin has been enraptured by Dr. J.F. Wasmus and other Germans hired out to the British in the American Revolutionary War ever since she began translating newly found journals, letters, diaries and military documents written by them.

"I live with Wasmus, I expect him to appear to me. I really conjure him up," jokes the lively, 73-year-old Mrs. Doblin, emeritus professor of languages at Skidmore College in nearby Saratoga Springs with degrees from the University of Berlin and Harvard.

Mrs. Doblin, who was born in Freiburg, Germany, and emigrated in 1939, herself comes from a military family.

The papers were tracked down by National Park Service employee Stephen Strach, a voracious reader of early American history since his childhood in Buffalo. He followed a trail of obscure printed clues that led to the Library of Congress, where he found long-forgotten microfilm and photostat copies of the German documents.

Mrs. Doblin's translations of the papers give a colorful and human dimension to the often-maligned German mercenaries; they also alter and correct some long-standing perceptions.

Some 200 German troops died in the Aug. 16, 1777, Battle of Bennington which was fought on and around an open-topped hill in Walloomsac, N.Y., 35 miles east of Stillwater and five miles from the southwestern Vermont border. The remaining 400 or so were taken prisoner, including Wasmus.

Wasmus and his comrades have been telling their versions of the war to Mrs. Doblin in her and her husband's home in Stillwater, the town where thousands more soldiers hired out by the independent German states of Brunswick and Hesse died or were taken prisoner in the Battle of Saratoga.

They communicate to her through a microfilm reader. Since 1982 she has spent long hours at this machine, creating English sentences out of 18th-century German ones. Their handwriting is often difficult to read because of personalized flourishes, and sometimes the letters are so small Mrs. Doblin has to resort to a magnifying glass.

Translating obscure currencies, weights and measures is not easily accomplished. But Mrs. Doblin's knowledge of languages helps her translate French, Italian and Latin words mixed in with the German.

The copies of the papers have been stored at the Library of Congress since the 1920s, when the originals were photographed at archives in Germany. There's no telling how many documents are in that still uncataloged chaos of German writings in Washington, D.C., says Strach.

Mrs. Doblin calculates that if she lives to be 126 she'll have finished translating the 52 microfilm reels purchased by the National Park Service's office at the Saratoga Battlefield.

Mrs. Doblin has been receiving an annual $4,000 federal grant for her labors, but her primary compensation is the thrill of mentally accompanying these often overlooked warriors on their adventures in North America.

"I started just with translating. I was not interested in the subject matter, just in translating. And then I really got fascinated by it," she says.

The history of mercenaries from Hesse and Brunswick — two of several German states — fighting for the British two centuries ago is not something even Germans have looked very closely at, says Mrs. Doblin.

When Mrs. Doblin began traveling to Germany for further research she found the archives where the original papers are kept "in disarray. But interest is mounting."

The translations by Mrs. Doblin detail the mercenaries' lives from their march to troop ships on the Elbe River in Germany and their arduous voyage to Canada and their return in 1783.

'Jawbone' aids denture wearers

ATLANTA (AP) — Millions of denture wearers can now benefit from a jawbone substitute that helps overcome slippage, one of the biggest drawbacks in having artificial teeth, an oral surgeon says.

Dr. John N. Kent of Louisiana State University said the substitute — known as hydroxylapatite — has been used in more than 20,000 patients in the two years it has been on the market.

Kent, who presented his findings recently at the 125th annual session of the American Dental Association here, said the man-made material has proved to be far superior to other procedures for building new bone in the mouth.

Loneliness not healthy

Associated Press

Divorce can be hazardous to your health.

Experts agree divorce and the stress that goes with it can make a person more susceptible to a whole catalog of diseases, according to an article in the December issue of Cosmopolitan, and can even lead to death.

Recent studies show that death rates from cardiovascular disease are 2 to 3 times higher for divorced women than for married women.

Cervical cancer death rates are more than twice as high in divorced white women as in married white women (nonwhite women fare better).

Statistics cited by psychologist James J. Lynch in "The Broken Heart: The Medical Consequences of Loneliness," indicate that white female divorcees have an overall death rate significantly higher than married white women, and that terminal cancer strikes the divorced more frequently than it does those who remain married.

The anguish of divorce also has been linked to asthma, rheumatoid arthritis, hyperthyroidism, genital herpes, peptic ulcer, colitis, yeast infections, disruption of the menstrual cycle, headaches and depression.

Why this laundry list of disease among the divorced?

"Major life events like divorce signal a rapid, abrupt change in a person's orientation," said Dr. Kathryn

D. Kramer, a health psychologist and director of Corporate Health Services at St. Louis University Medical Center.

"Divorce, in particular, changes a person's support system and alters her self-identity. But any traumatic event — job loss, physical injury — changes the person's internal and external environment. And if we don't cope well with the change, it takes its toll on us mentally, emotionally and physically."

Health professionals today recognize the connection between stress and health. And divorce is among life's most stressful events, ranking second only to the death of a spouse on the Social Readjustment Rating Scale developed by psychiatrists Dr. Thomas Holmes and Dr. Richard Rahe.

"For some divorce is a disaster," said Dr. Robert Eliot, director of preventive and rehabilitative cardiology at St. Luke's Hospital in Phoenix, Ariz. "For others it is a religious experience. We cannot usually change the external event, but we do have control over our perception of it and our subsequent response."

Dr. Paul Rosch, president of the American Institute of Stress in Yonkers, N.Y., summed up, saying, "There is a growing appreciation of the fact that when people get sick, they are not necessarily attacked from the outside. Today we recognize that prior to the onset of an illness, our own resistance is lower. And stress is a common factor in lowering that resistance."

Study claims equal love key to romance

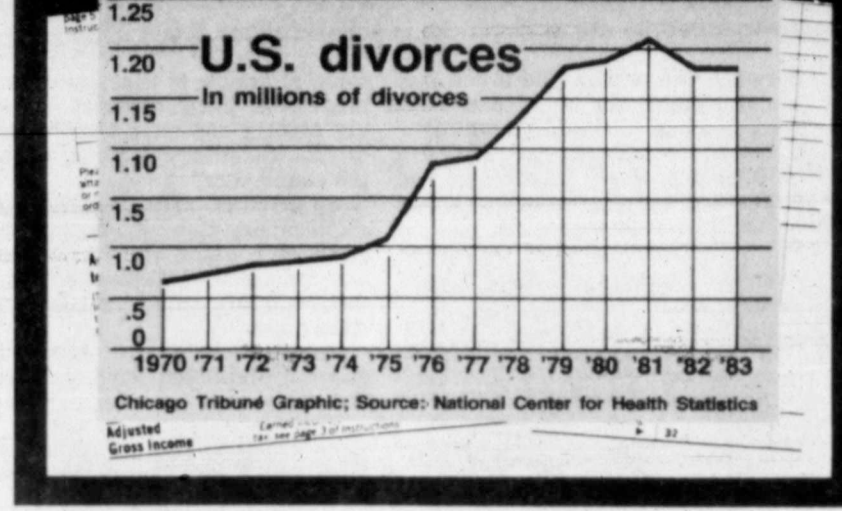

By DANIEL GOLEMAN

other, but rather how equal their love is.

Also, it may come as a surprise to many men — but not to women — that women, on average, report loving their best friends as much as they do their lovers. And they report liking, as opposed to loving, their best friends a bit more than they do their lovers.

These are among the results reported by Robert Sternberg, a psychologist at Yale University, who is one of those doing major new research on the nature of love. His work builds on that of several other researchers who, over the last decade, have devised psychological scales for measuring love. Sternberg has undertaken a comprehensive study that uses all the major measures in order to assess love's essential nature.

When it comes to the success of a romantic love relationship, men and women for the most part name the same factors as important, according to results of a study by Sternberg published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology. The single most important element was found to be sharing ideas and interests with one's lover. Also high on the list was the sense of growing personally through the relationship, as was taking pleasure in doing things for the other person.

Not of particular importance in the success of a romantic relationship, though, were such things as feeling one's lover has great sex appeal or is seductive, feeling the lover to be particularly unique or feeling that other people would be impressed by one's lover.

While the sexes largely agree on what is important for success in romantic love, there were a few differences. One of the more striking, Sternberg finds, is that women, but not men, feel it is their own unselfishness that is crucial in the success of a relationship.

"Women, traditionally, have been more the maintainers of relationships than have men," Sternberg commented. "Even though sex roles are changing, this still seems to be true."

While romantic love has its special qualities, Sternberg finds that the different loving relationships in a person's life have much in common.

"There is a basic core of what love is that is the same in any loving relationship, whether with a lover or with one's child," according to Sternberg. That core includes such elements as being able to count on the loved one in times of need; having a mutual understanding and sharing oneself and one's things with the loved one; giving and getting emotional support; promoting the welfare of the person, and valuing and being happy when with the person.

'New father' role model: Only partially realistic

By CECILIA GOODNOW
Hearst News Service

We've seen a lot of him on Madison Avenue lately, easing bandages onto scraped knees and rhapsodizing about the new, improved shape of his baby's diaper. He's the "new father," a role model for 1980's-style equality in child care.

How real is the phenomenon of the "new father"?

"There is some reality to it — probably not as much as one would guess from advertising and the media," said Joseph H. Pleck, a researcher at the Wellesley College Center for Research on Women and co-director of the recently completed Fatherhood Project, an international study of modern fatherhood based at Bank Street College of Education in New York.

But Jane Pauley is one media figure who isn't applauding today's fathers.

"These profiles of the 'new father' are garbage," the Today show co-host is quoted as saying in this month's issue of McCall's magazine.

Pauley, the mother of 9-month-old twins, said her cartoonist husband, Garry Trudeau, "is a very involved father, but for items like, 'When was the last time the diapers were changed?' or, 'Do they need lunch?' the responsibility is mine, and that is just grossly unfair."

Support for Pauley's complaint comes from an unlikely source: John Bancroft, a former Seattle bus driver who won two ground-breaking paternity leaves when his daughter and son were born.

"It needed to be said," Bancroft said, adding that if a man changes one diaper, everyone usually cheers. But for the main caregiver, usually the mother, it never ends.

Men's expectations seem to be changing faster than their behavior. One indication of slow but steady change comes from a University of Michigan study Pleck cited in which a cross section of men and women recorded the time they spent at various child care and housekeeping tasks.

In 1965, when the study was first done, the diaries indicated men spent only 20 percent as much time on housework and childrearing as their wives did.

By 1981, the figure had climbed to 30 percent, Pleck said. (The researchers did not specify how much time was spent on child care as opposed to housework.)

"We can expect that proportion to increase over time," Pleck said. "I don't think it will ever reach 100 percent. I can see it reaching 80 or 90 percent."

He estimated that only 2 percent of American fathers take as much responsibility for daily child-care chores as their wives. "And some people say that's high," he added.

But that's only part of the story. "I think there's a much larger group that's much more involved than their fathers were — more than fathers traditionally have been in the past, but not as much as their wives are," Pleck said. "They're trying. They don't just drift off to work and drift home at night and watch TV."

Even if men want to be more involved, Pleck said, they face many cultural hurdles.

"The fundamental problem we as a society have about fatherhood is that the new father is in fashion and everyone thinks he should be more involved with children, but at the same time we have the attitude that a man should be mainly responsible for being the breadwinner."

The attitude is just as ingrained — but less openly stated — among liberal couples as conservative ones, Pleck said.

Besides, some women don't want their husbands intruding on their turf, he said, citing two surveys he helped conduct.

In one survey of mothers, only 25 percent answered yes when asked, "Do you wish your husband would help you more?" In a similar survey, limited to employed wives, 40 percent said they wished their husbands would spend more time with their children.

"You'd expect they'd (all) say yes," Pleck said. "This does not seem to be the case."

Pleck offered several explanations.

"Some wives feel their husbands are not that good with the children," he said. "There are other wives who have just given up on their husbands. The final reason is there are some wives who don't want their husbands to be involved because that's their role in the family. I think there are a lot of wives who are ambivalent."

Part of the problem is that the baby's birth inspires surprising and complex emotions in many new parents, according to Ellen Galinsky, project director of the World and Family Life Study at Bank Street College.

"It involves feelings of wanting to be with their baby and wanting to run away," said Galinsky, who was in Seattle recently for a seminar on working women. "Mothers and fathers both feel this."

However, mothers are more likely to act on their desires for closeness with the baby, while fathers are more likely to act on their desire for escape, she said. Parents need a strong philosophical commitment to equality in order to overcome those tendencies, she said.

'Talking' subject of much talk

By DAVE LARSEN
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Stop me if you have heard this. On the other hand, don't stop me. It is bad for the ego. Take it from Joyce Neu of nearby Santa Monica, who is doing research into, among other things, strategies and devices that people use or don't use in conversations.

"Interruptions are a form of social marker," Neu said recently in her home. "Someone who constantly does it may be trying to show that his or her social status is higher than yours."

Think about it. A doctor interrupts a patient, but how often does a patient interrupt a doctor? Neu believes that a doctor does it twice as often.

She has a borrowed quote from one physician: "I confess I'm guilty. I often cut the patient short.... I simply have to preserve my emotional, physical and mental energies if I'm to perform my job."

Concludes Neu: "I imagine that interrupting is a way of a physician saying he or she doesn't want to be questioned."

Another example of the status implication of interrupting, she went on, might be a conference between a subordinate and a boss. Guess who is more likely to do any interrupting.

Then there is the extended silence.

"For Americans, let there be even two or three seconds of stillness

Joyce Neu, who teaches business communication at the University of Southern California business school, is researching strategies and devices people use or don't use in conversations.

between two parties, and it becomes uncomfortable for both," said Neu, who teaches business communication at the University of Southern California business school here and is preparing a dissertation for a doctorate in linguistics. "A contrast, on the other hand, are the Japanese, who are tolerant of much longer silences than we are."

Tolerance of silence in a conversation can be important in negotiations, she pointed out.

"I once sold life insurance. The old sales gimmick is that once you've made your pitch, be quiet. The feeling always has been that whoever breaks the silence is going to make the concession."

Americans have a thing about silence. "Say two people, who don't know each other well, happen to be in a car together. Before long one of them will talk, rather than have constant quiet."

One exception, she observed, is elevator etiquette. For some reason, the usual rule — with everybody facing front and no eye contact — is that there be no talk. If there must be, it is often done in a whisper.

"I had a friend who would sometimes walk into a crowded elevator, face everybody, and cheerfully exclaim: 'Hi, how are you!' People would pretend they hadn't heard her. She had broken an unwritten law."

In an elevator, Neu explained, we are all invading each other's personal space. One would never walk up to a stranger and stand that close. Therefore, that having been done, the defense mechanism is for everybody to ignore everybody else.

Be that as it may, in ordinary situations and conversations, another ploy is pauses that are filled.

"This consists of utterances such as um, ah, you know, well," Neu said. "Although it is pretty much subconscious, it is a notice to the other person that you wish to keep talking."

"You are putting up a red light, signaling that you don't want to be interrupted, that you still have the floor. You make sounds while deciding what to say next."

Neu said that linguistics authorities are hypothesizing that someone using a bunch of such pause fillers also may be signaling that a change of topic is about to take place.

"Another theory is that use of such a bunching tends to make a person seem weak and hesitant," she said. "In a political campaign, where a candidate wants to appear strong and forceful, use of ums and ahs won't contribute to that image."

Still another ingredient of conversations is the hedge.

Willing friends coach single mothers-to-be

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — "The woman who gave my Lamaze class would have to correct herself," Suzanne Miles recalled. "She would say 'husbands' and then look at us and say 'coaches'."

Miss Miles, who is not married, was doing what a number of single mothers are doing these days: she was attending childbirth classes with a female friend who had agreed to be her coach throughout labor and at the delivery.

"I've seen more of these women in the last two or three years than ever before," said Dr. Elizabeth Bing, a pioneer in the field of prepared childbirth. "I have them on and off all the time. Single women come in with a friend, a man friend or a woman friend."

Childbirth educators agree that women attending classes with someone other than a husband are still a rarity. But they say they are beginning to turn up more frequently because the number of unmarried women who are deciding to have babies — particularly women in their 30s — is increasing.

"There are more and more single mothers around — especially upper-middle-class women who can afford to do this — and there are a lot of women who really want to help them through the pregnancy and birth," said Jane Mattes, a psychotherapist and founder of Single Mothers by Choice, a rapidly growing support group in Manhattan.

MISS MILES, a 23-year-old instructor at Body Design by Gilda, chose as her coach Barbara Maino, the manager of the salon.

"At first, I thought I'd say no," Miss Maino, who is 24, said. "It was a big responsibility. But then I thought, this is such an opportunity, to go through the whole thing and see the birth. I don't know that I will ever have children myself. I have to put a lot of time into my career."

"We were not close at the time," Miss Miles said, "but it was important to me to find someone I could trust, someone I felt comfortable with."

Before Miss Miles's son, Songe, was born last April 14, she was in labor for 36 hours. Miss Maino was at her side at New York University Medical Center.

"I couldn't have done it without Barbara," Miss Miles said. "Everything else at the hospital was so foreign to me. Barbara was the one thing I felt secure with. I felt more secure with her than with the doctors and nurses."

"I can't deal with blood — or else I'd be a midwife — but I did really well," Miss Maino said. "Suzanne was in so much pain and relying on me so much, I didn't feel I had a choice."

"She cried when the baby was born," Miss Miles said. "I didn't cry. Barbara cried."

LINDA GASBARRO, whose son, Timothy, was born six months ago at the Maternity Center, chose as her coach another single mother.

"She is a good friend and committed herself to helping me through this," said Miss Gasbarro, who is 39 years old and a data-processing consultant. "She was good for emotional support."

"I was the only one in class who didn't have the father as the coach," Miss Gasbarro added. "The couples were very affectionate, and at first I felt sad. But soon I got over that. I was pregnant by artificial insemination, which was a conversation piece, so I made friends quickly."

Carol Schwarz, whose son, Ilias, is 7 months old, was accompanied by her sister Anne during classes and at the birth at Albert Einstein Medical Center. "We are very close friends, and she is a very strong person, a brown belt in karate," said Miss Schwarz, who is 34 years old and teaches special education in a public school in the Bronx.

"My sister was fantastic," Miss Schwarz added. "When I was in labor, she held my hands. When I was cold, she covered me. When I was hot, she uncovered me. When I was thirsty, she gave me something to drink. She did all the breathing with me and gave me so much emotional support."

CHILDBIRTH EDUCATORS say they have no objection to a pregnant woman's being coached by another woman or a male friend who is not the father. "Basically, the support is the same," said Kathleen Burke, who teaches prepared-childbirth classes in the office of a four-man obstetrical group on Park Avenue.

Obese children's diet tips given

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Deciding if a child needs to go on a diet, say experts, depends on many factors:

— Start with height and weight tables. Children 20 percent over the norm for their age, height and sex are considered obese.

— Look at your own weight. Children with heavy parents are predisposed for obesity.

— Consider whether high blood pressure or cardiovascular disease run in the family. Extra pounds mean extra risk for children from these families.

— Check with your child's doctor before starting any weight loss program.

To help children lose weight, University of Pittsburgh psychologist Leonard Epstein offers this advice, drawn from five years of research on overweight youngsters:

— Record what your child eats for a week. Figure the number of calories per day. Then cut back 500 calories a day, never going below 1,000 total calories per day. This will allow the child to lose about a pound a week.

— Make sure children eat a balanced diet. Recommended: two 3 oz. servings of protein (for instance, 150 to 220 calories per serving of lean meat, fish or poultry without the skin); two 8 oz. servings of milk (skim milk, low-fat cheese or yogurt); four servings of grains (80 calories per serving of cereal, bread, rice, spaghetti); four servings (about 1-2 cups) of fruit and vegetables.

— Show youngsters how to use a calorie counter. Have them help you shop for groceries and when they request high calorie foods, ask them to look up the calorie count so they know why they can't have it. Likewise, show them what foods are allowed.

— Decrease sedentary activities. Among the least active: watching television, playing video games and working on computers. Put time restrictions on these activities.

— Increase aerobic exercise. Suggested activities: walking, swimming, jogging. Promote active lifestyle changes, such as using the stairs instead of the elevator.

— Keep daily records of what children eat and how much they exercise. At the University of Pittsburgh program, parents review children's records daily and help them make changes where necessary.

— Reward children for losing weight, but don't offer food, money or material possessions. Instead, give privileges. Or, spend more time with them.

Super trees being developed

MOSBY CREEK, Ore. (AP) — A program in which trees are injected with flower-producing hormones is expected to develop a generation of "super trees" that will become some of the nation's fastest-growing timber in the 21st century.

Georgia-Pacific Corp., a forest-products firm, says it has injected hundreds of Douglas fir seedlings in its forest research center. The solution injected is designed to make the trees produce a cone crop each year, rather than every four to seven years.

By selecting the best seedlings from the new breed of trees, researchers hope to raise a crop of superior trees that will mature 20 to 25 percent faster than present generations.

DEAR ABBY

Family issue raises doubts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am interested in dating men who have the same thing in common with me, but how do you find them? Let me explain. I am not yet 30, and I've had a hysterectomy. All the men whom I have dated get serious to the point of proposing marriage and speak of raising a family. I feel less than a woman and must discontinue the relationship because I cannot have children.

If I could meet men who have had vasectomies, I wouldn't feel so useless. We could marry and adopt children.

I need to know now where to find these men. Can you help me? — UNHAPPY IN COLUMBIA, MO.

DEAR UNHAPPY: Several years ago a reader suggested that all men who have had vasectomies should wear a small "V" on the heels of their shoes in order to identify themselves. (It never caught on; most women never saw it, and those who did thought the "V" was for Virgin.)

In any case, quit searching for vasectomized men, and please don't feel "less of a woman" because you've had a hysterectomy.

When talk of "raising a family" begins, you can speak your piece. No man worth his salt, excluding royalty, would refuse to marry a woman because she couldn't bear a child any more than a woman would turn down a man because he couldn't give her one.

DEAR ABBY: Please make room for this open letter to those who instigate gift-giving within the office:

"Dear Generous One: Next time you get the urge to collect money from your fellow workers for a gift to Joe or Jane, please keep in mind that not everybody in the office makes as much money as you. Others may have expenses or bills that you don't know about. Ten bucks may not sound like much to you, but to me, it's gas money for a week.

"So instead of coming around and telling people that they need to reimburse you for the gift you have already bought, try sending around an envelope first, and let everybody contribute what he or she can afford. Then you can have the thrill of purchasing a gift for Joe from 'the office gang.'"

Abby, I'm really worked up about this because my husband just started a new job five months ago, and every other week he's been hit up for money for flowers, gifts, parties, etc. for a co-worker who is either sick, retiring, being transferred, had a baby, or celebrating a birthday or anniversary. He was never asked how much he could give — he was just told to come up with the money.

Please publish this before the holidays, or God knows what it will cost us. — ANGRY WIFE IN MICHIGAN

DEAR WIFE: Here's your letter. I hope it makes an impression.

DEAR ABBY: Our 16-year-old son has recently been placed in a state facility due to many problems at home and with the law. We try to be supportive and include him in the family as much as possible.

My question: Do I include his name on our holiday greeting cards? He's still a part of our family even though he doesn't live with us. We don't want to leave him out, but neither do we want to give an incorrect impression as to his residence. — IN DOUBT

DEAR IN DOUBT: You most certainly should include your son's name on your holiday cards. Regardless of where he is, he's still "family." Those close to you know where he is; don't worry about misleading others.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, also available in Spanish, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Discarding items dangerous

By ERMA BOMBECK

My husband was rummaging through the "catch-all" drawer the other day when he asked, "Why are you saving a warranty for a bottle warmer?"

"Get out of my drawers!" I said. "What I keep is no concern of yours. Besides, you wouldn't understand."

"I understand that the baby is 26 years old and we no longer warm his bottles."

I had no intention of engaging in an argument about it. Men just don't comprehend that there are some things a woman never throws away.

Maternity clothes, for instance. Women know that somewhere is an informant who tells God when a woman is smug and confident enough to give her clothes away.

It doesn't matter if she's 80 years old and living alone on a mountaintop, she will need them.

A sane woman cannot throw away a key. Even a key that doesn't fit anything and probably came with the house; you just don't do things like that.

I can't throw away chicken innards. Hope springs eternal that one day I will gather all of them up from the freezer and make 35 gallons of chicken broth. And don't even suggest that I get rid of a matchbox of my children's baby teeth given to me by the tooth fairy. Some women have dumped them and lived in unbearable guilt for the rest of their lives.

I have never known a woman personally who was able to throw away a tube of lipstick. It could be the color of a marble slab, drier than an Arizona desert and smell like singed hair, but it might just match something you're wearing someday.

All of you women out there who have an entire room filled from floor to ceiling with plastic oleo containers will know what I'm saying when I confess I have not discarded one in 35 years. If there's another birthday celebration for America, I've got the leftover dishes for it.

Souvenirs are assured of a home for the rest of their lives. The times I've stood poised over a trash can holding a coconut with the face of a half-crazed Indian I bought in Hawaii or a small outhouse with the door ajar from Covington, Ky., you don't want to hear about.

This probably sounds like borderline superstition or irrational to a fault, but I knew a woman in the Sun Belt who was cleaning out her closet one day and threw away a pair of shoes that no longer fit, a tiara, and a winter coat she no longer had use for.

The very next day her feet shrunk and she was invited to an inauguration in Washington.

How much room does a bottle warmer warranty take up?

Matchmakers missed by Asians in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Asian immigrants leave many things behind when they come to the United States, but they still cling to the centuries-old custom of getting married through a matchmaker.

Most young Asians in America like to meet their spouses through a matchmaker, or a formal introduction of friends or relatives, officials of Asian communities say.

But there are not enough matchmakers — private or professional — who are willing to go between young couples to help tie the knot, they say.

Older people who would eagerly make matches in their native lands just for the pleasure of seeing a young couple unite in matrimony, are often too busy trying to make their own living in America, or deliberately avoid getting involved in other people's affairs, they explain.

But even so, the need for matchmaking is still great, so Asian-Americans rely on less traditional forms — such as marriages arranged by mail, newspaper advertisements, and help from clergy.

Asian immigrants tend to live in small and isolated communities according to their nationalities, thus limiting their chances of meeting a potential spouse, said Thomas Gold, professor of sociology at University of California at Berkeley.

"Asians don't want to mix with fellow Asians of other nationalities, let alone other ethnic groups," Gold said.

The language barrier and cultural differences prevent them from assimilating quickly with Americans, said Gold, who has been studying the Chinese and their culture.

In the absence of matchmakers, some ask their friends or relatives back home to arrange a marriage by mail while others actually go back to their old country to seek help from matchmakers.

Gold said young Asian-Americans are "a highly desirable commodity" in the marriage market in their native lands because by marrying them, spouses — and often their whole families — can migrate to the United States. Many Asians want to come to the United States mainly for economic considerations but sometimes for political reasons as well.

"I've heard many young Chinese, especially men, are going back to Taiwan to get married there," said Lorinda Chen, director of the Chinatown Council in New York's borough of Queens. "The fee for the professional matchmaker used to be at least a couple of hundred dollars until a few years ago, but I'm sure it has gone up."

In South Korea, where women outnumber men, a lot of parents are willing to provide considerable dowries for their daughters in addition to several hundred dollars in commission for a matchmaker, said Woo-duk Yang of the Korean Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA) in New York.

But despite the popularity of eligible Korean-Americans back home, "many young people are having a hard time trying to find their spouses here," Yang said. "We've heard that their parents are asking ministers and priests of their churches if they know of anyone who could become their sons- or daughters-in-law."

"So, we decided to launch a large-scale matchmaking program, recruiting YMCA's resources in Seoul," Yang said.

"If you are an unmarried Korean looking for a husband or wife, all you have to do is to fill out a rather simple application form and send it to us with $50," he said. "You will soon be looking at pictures of your potential spouse in Korea."

The Vietnamese, most of whom arrived in the United States as refugees, have a different problem. Mary Tuyet Mai, chairman of the Vietnamese-American Cultural Organization, says there are more men than women in the Vietnamese community here, creating a difficult situation for men.

"Our young men cannot visit their old country to get married like other Asians do for obvious reasons," she said. "They cannot even place a mail order for brides."

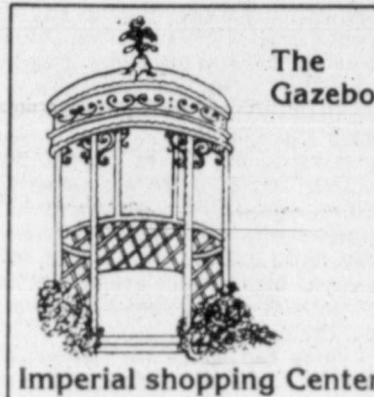

Those who can neither afford to go back to their countries nor get help from matchmakers advertise their wishes in newspapers of their native languages published in the United States.

Chu Chang, official at the ad department of the World Journal, one of eight Chinese-language dailies in the United States, said her paper was running three or four such ads every day but she could not say how effective these ads are.

"Some people think it's degrading to seek one's spouse through newspaper ads, but I don't see anything wrong with it," she said. "As long as you are happily married, it doesn't matter how you met your spouse."

As for the second generation of immigrants, there seems to be no problem, said the Chinatown Council's Chen.

"In fact, many parents are worried about their kids dating and talking about getting married even before they reach proper ages," she said.

Hug-A-Tree saves children

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — The air was deceptively warm for a February day in the mountains. It was shirt-sleeve weather, except in the shade, where traces of snow lingered.

It was ideal weather for a camping trip and the Beveridge family of Spring Valley, Calif., was anticipating a fun-filled weekend at Palomar Mountain State Park, about 50 miles northeast of San Diego.

The Beveridges quickly settled down at their campsite in the rugged and somewhat isolated campground.

Near lunchtime Saturday, 9-year-old Jimmy and two of his brothers decided to take a hike along a nature trail a half mile from where they were camped, but exuberant Jimmy had ideas of his own and he soon scampered off down a different trail.

His brothers assumed he was racing them back to camp, but when they returned, Jimmy wasn't there. His parents quickly became concerned and started searching for him. When the Beveridges didn't find their son after two hours, they notified the San Diego Sheriff's Department. By late afternoon the official search for Jimmy had begun — a search that would last for four days and would involve more than 400 people.

During those agonizingly long days and nights, Jimmy's mother, father and six brothers and sisters asked each other why he left the well-marked trail.

NO ONE WILL EVER know, because Jimmy died on the mountain. His body was found the following Wednesday, and an autopsy showed that he'd died of exposure after being knocked unconscious during a fall.

If not for the capriciousness of the weather — it had turned cold, foggy and snowy that evening — Mrs. Beveridge said her son might have survived in the wilderness.

Or if he'd had the kind of survival training that half a million children have received since his death in 1981, he might have been found alive.

At least two children have lived through similar ordeals because of a program called Hug-A-Tree and Survive, which teaches basic skills to school-age children. It was founded in San Diego County as a memorial to Jimmy by Ab Taylor and Tom Jacobs, who participated in the four-day search for the boy.

Youngsters are told that if they become lost while on an outing to sit calmly by a tree or a large rock and wait for help, said Jacqueline Heet, who helped Taylor and Jacobs get the program started.

"The tree will be your friend," the children are told. "You can even talk to the tree."

Survival skills taught to school-age children in the Hug-A-Tree and Survive Program include, top photo, cutting a small hole in the bottom of an ordinary trash bag and slipping it over the head to keep warm and dry; and, bottom photo, making a copy of each person's footprints on aluminum foil before going hiking, and leaving the prints at the campsite or in the car to aid trackers if someone becomes lost.

And that's just what 4-year-old Elijah Fordham of Santee, Calif., did when he was lost for 23 hours during a camping trip at Chubb Lake in Northern California over a Labor Day weekend.

He followed advice he'd heard during a presentation of the program at his brother's Cub Scout pack meeting.

ONCE THE BOY knew he was lost, he didn't keep trying to find his way back to the campsite. Instead, he found a tree and hugged it. And then he talked to it, like an old friend who could help him forget things like the noises strange animals make and being alone in the night. That's what he was doing when searchers found him.

When Beveridge heard how Elijah had survived his ordeal, she said, "I felt very thankful. I felt like everything we've done was worthwhile. As a result of losing Jimmy, at least one other child was saved."

Jimmy was found curled up next to a tree in a ravine, but his wanderings had taken him 2 miles away from his family's campsite.

"There was a period of time while the search was going on when I had a calming feeling come over me," Beveridge said. "I knew that Jimmy had died. I knew that Jimmy was at peace."

"It's hard to describe other than to say it was a calming feeling. We're a fairly religious family and I still hoped. But deep inside of me, I knew he wouldn't be found alive."

SHE SAID THE experience helped prepare her for what was to come. And being involved with Hug-A-Tree has helped her cope with Jimmy's death.

Connie Kramer of Torrance, Calif., said she heard about the program and how it was started the day after she'd taken her son to Palomar Mountain to visit the observatory.

The family had taken a walk while there and her son, Michael, 8, kept running ahead of his parents and brother, Aaron, 3. He was wearing a camouflage outfit that would have blended into the rugged surroundings. Hug-A-Tree, Kramer said, suggests hikers wear bright clothing to make it easier for searchers to find them.

"Chills ran down my spine," she said. "It could have happened to my son."

"It's not enough just to tell children about the program or read about it," Kramer said.

The information, she said, is applicable to any child who is lost in a large place — a shopping center, the beach or entertainment attraction like Disneyland.

Also, children need to know that if they are lost it's OK to talk to strangers, Kramer said.

"Lost children often will be very quiet when they hear strangers, who, in fact, might be searchers looking for them," she said.

THE HUG-A-TREE and Survive Program is available in 35 states and in Sweden, Taiwan and Canada. If you are interested in starting a Hug-A-Tree and Survive Program in your area, write — enclosing a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope — to Project Hug-A-Tree, in care of Jacqueline Heet, 6465 Lance Way, San Diego, Calif. 92120.

Tips can increase chances of survival

Copley News Service

The message of the Hug-A-Tree and Survive Program is that if children become lost they should use their heads, stay put and not panic.

To increase chances of survival while in the wilderness, Hug-A-Tree teaches these tips, many of which are applicable to adults as well as children:

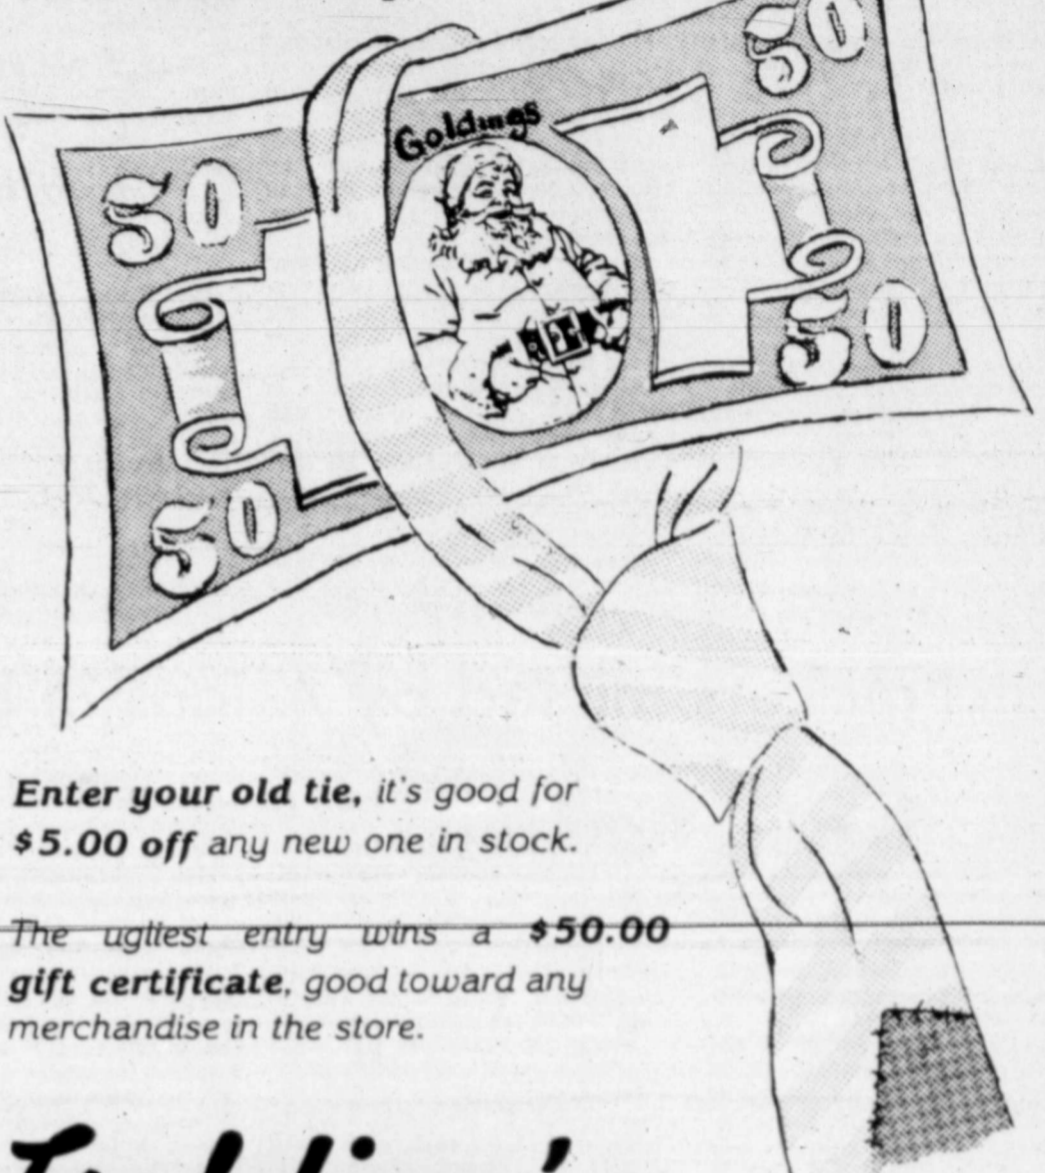

- Always carry a whistle and a trash bag. A whistle can be heard for long distances and takes less energy than shouting. The trash bag can keep a person dry and warm. Cut a hole in the bag near the bottom — without the hole there is a danger of suffocation — and slip the bag over your head.
- Wear bright clothing. A red or orange jacket will be visible to people who are searching from a helicopter or on the ground. If you hear a helicopter, lie down and spread out when it flies over to increase the chance you will be seen.

Tell children you won't be angry if they do become lost. Let them know that when they're in trouble, that you'll be hoping for their safe return.

Wives sometimes bring home larger paycheck

Copley News Service

As more women work outside the home, some eventually move into highly paid positions, replacing their spouses as the family's top wage-earner.

A report from the Joint Center for Urban Studies of MIT and Harvard University notes that by 1990, 31 percent of U.S. households will include two-worker couples. The same studies indicate that by the end of this decade "wives might contribute up to 40 percent of family income."

For those women whose contribution exceeds that, it means unique adjustments for them and their spouses. Finding those who already fit into that category is difficult. But getting the couples to talk about it is even harder.

In San Diego, TV reporter Cathy Clark and her husband Don Brock, and Home Federal Savings and Loan Vice President Marjorie Sorenson and her husband John agreed to be interviewed.

Neither couple seemed uncomfortable with their circumstances — just with the attention the role reversal generates.

If there is any guilt or torn feelings in these two marriages, it is that felt by the women over the attitudes of outsiders — the notion that there must be something wrong with husbands who endure such a situation.

"After you called and asked us for the interview, I called Don and asked him if he would be embarrassed to talk about it," Cathy recalled.

Early in a lengthy conversation at their home, it was obvious that Don seemed fairly comfortable. It was Cathy who seemed a little anxious.

She glanced at her husband when asked how much more she earns than he. "Twice as much, I guess," she said, almost apologetically.

They talked candidly about a situation to which they've adjusted quite well — until someone makes an issue of it.

Don referred to the numerous times he's been called "Mr. Clark," and the occasion when a man at a party commented, "Boy, you've got it made."

"I thought it was rude," Cathy said. "I'm concerned that people may think he's not as successful — financially."

"Bear in mind, we're on separate ends of our careers," Don said. "She's essentially just starting out and I've been at it a long time."

Don's broadcasting career spans 30 years, both as disc jockey, production director and program producer for AM and FM radio stations. Currently he's staff announcer for Channel 8 in San Diego.

"I only started making more when I started anchoring the news," said Cathy, who began her television career 12 years ago and moved into the anchor chair in 1981.

Don says that makes it easier to accept that she earns more. It's important to note, too, that she's television "talent," whose salary is set arbitrarily based on her value to the viewers. His job, on the other hand, is a more behind-the-scenes slot in the industry with a set salary.

Nevertheless, Don admits, "In the back of my mind, I wonder whether guys my age will think there's something wrong because Cathy makes more money than I do. But then I think, if she could make another $40,000 a year, I could quit."

Marjorie Sorenson sat across the table from her husband John and matter-of-factly discussed her position as top wage-earner in their family.

"It kind of dawned on us one day," she said.

The realization came after she was named one of the first female vice presidents at Home Federal. She's been with the company half of her 42 years, working her way up to director of the treasury, where she provides customers with safekeeping services for their personal and business assets.

But she makes it clear she's not ill-at-ease. She looked directly at John when she said her salary is "30 percent greater" than his, although he said he thought the difference was even more.

"I don't measure my success by my salary," she explained.

Yet she does feel good about what she earns. Not more important or more successful than John, just good about herself. "Yes, I've been rewarded for doing a job I love. It's affirming to me I am a success."

She noted then that, like Cathy and Don, her and John's occupations dictate the disparity in salary. John, a Lutheran minister since 1957, serves a congregation in suburban El Cajon.

"A clergyman's salary doesn't move as quickly as one in private business."

His constant contact with young people, through his ministry, also helped him accept the new roles developing for men and women.

"I see our marriage as a complementing of two lives," said John. "We don't swallow each other up. We didn't bring in so many preconceived notions."

Don Brock and his wife, Cathy Clark, above, and John and Marjorie Sorenson are two couples whose financial roles are reversed from what's considered the norm: Each wife outearns her husband.

Will West German Greens stay 'pure?'

By SUSAN J. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

HAMBURG, West Germany — West Germany's anti-establishment Greens open their national convention today with a major conflict brewing over whether the party should pursue power through bipartisan alliances or stay "pure" in opposition.

The question of coalition participation is a fundamental one now that the Greens have nearly doubled their voting strength nationwide, entered five state parliaments and become the pivotal third party that makes or breaks governing majorities in many West German cities and towns.

Polls taken this fall have shown the Greens consistently weighing in with 10 percent of the electorate's support, just 18 months after they were elected to the national parliament with 5.6 percent of the vote and 26 deputies in the 498-seat house.

The Greens' national governing board wants the convention to pass a resolution ruling out cooperation with the Social Democratic Party, which shares the opposition benches with the Greens in the Bundestag, or parliament.

With their strong left wing, the Social Democrats would be the best suited of West Germany's traditional parties to form coalitions with the Greens. The Greens' unorthodox political tactics and strong anti-nuclear policies are anathema to many members of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's conservative Christian Democratic Union and its coalition partners, the centrist Free Democrats.

Many key Greens, including founder Petra Kelly, believe the party can only continue growing if it stays in the opposition. Ms. Kelly said recently that "we should stay exactly where we are and let the other parties come to us if they want to get in power."

But several other influential Greens have come up with a 10-page counterproposal for the 800-delegate convention insisting that the four-year-old party should not shun power.

"The political possibilities within our party must range from the fundamental opposition to coalition, without any being ruled out from above," the counter-proposal says.

Another argument may arise over whether Greens' deputies in the federal and state assemblies should be forced to hand over their seats to other Greens halfway through the term.

The party adapted the "rotation principle" two years ago, saying it would give more party members a chance for involvement in parliamentary work.

The Greens also wanted to prevent the rise of domineering personalities, a party taboo that was broken by the fast-talking Ms. Kelly when she became a media favorite last year. Resentment against her grew within the party and her influence waned as a result.

The Greens may take a break from their own problems long enough to hear a speech from Arthur Scargill, leader of Britain's striking coal miners. Scargill has been invited to speak, but it is not clear whether he will come or send a representative in his place, a Greens spokesman said Thursday.

The Greens, who have 32,000 members nationwide, will also discuss proposals to make automobiles "unnecessary" by promoting mass transit, to stop highway construction, and to "demilitarize" West German society.

Uncontested are longstanding Greens' principles calling for West Germany to leave NATO and take steps toward unilateral disarmament. The party is bitterly opposed to deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Germany.

The national party congress comes on the heels of the crackup of the first Greens involvement in state government.

The party had signed a "toleration agreement" that allowed the Social Democrats to govern in the state of Hesse. But the Greens there tore up the deal earlier this month when the Social Democrats refused to close a nuclear waste processing facility.

Last weekend, the Greens said they wanted to reopen negotiations with the Social Democrats in Hesse, but that party refused.

Melanesian separatists killed in New Caledonian fighting

By STEVE LOHR
New York Times News Service

NOUMEA, New Caledonia — Nine Melanesian separatists were killed Wednesday night in the worst case of violence in more than two weeks of strife in this French territory in the South Pacific, the police said Thursday.

Although the investigation has just begun, the killings are assumed to be the work of French loyalists, who oppose independence, according to French officials.

Leaders of the Melanesian, or Kanak, separatist group denounced the slaying of their followers. "We're facing people who want to massacre us," said Iewene Iewene, a minister in the "provisional government" of the militant separatists. "We are confronting barbarians with guns. We must develop a new strategy."

Despite the killings, separatists said they would remove roadblocks, end the siege of several outlying towns and relinquish a few police stations they had occupied.

The move by the militant independence-seeking group came after a special French envoy freed 17 separatist prisoners who had been arrested since mid-November, when the clashes between the loyalists and the Melanesian separatists began. The separatists had said previously their roadblocks and other disturbances would end when the 17 "political prisoners" were let go.

The French envoy, Edgard Pisani, described the situation Thursday as "detente," after the "tragic events of last night." In a statement, Pisani said "other gestures of appeasement" from the French government will follow, though he did not elaborate.

The Melanesian separatists are demanding an independence formula under which voting rights would be granted only to Melanesians, who number 62,000 of the total population of 145,000 on the island territory. The French position has been that all New Caledonians should vote to determine the territory's future, whether to become independent or remain a French colony.

Yet French officials concede privately that independence is inevitable, with strife for both Melanesians and whites remaining as the key issue.

In the wake of Wednesday's violence, the situation in New Caledonia is filled with uncertainty. The foreign diplomats here said there is a possibility of "civil war," if the two sides become increasingly antagonistic. Separatist leaders said they will wait until after the nine members of their group killed Wednesday are buried, probably Saturday or Sunday, before deciding what to do next.

The slayings are particularly sensitive because among those killed were two brothers of Jean-Marie Tjibaou, the leader of the separatist group, the Kanak Socialist National Liberation Front. The two brothers of Tjibaou, Tarcisse and Louis, were among 17 people in two vehicles that were ambushed in Hienghene, a village on the north-eastern coast of the main island of Grand Terre. Tjibaou is mayor of Hienghene. In addition to the nine killed, three others were seriously injured, including another of Tjibaou's brothers, Vianne.

Reports on the incident conflicted on some details. According to the separatists, their followers were returning home after a meeting in the town hall, when they were stopped at a roadblock set up by anti-independence French loyalists. Then, the two vehicles were fired upon and dynamite was thrown in one car.

Afterwards, in retaliation, a loyalist villa nearby was burned, according to the separatists. Another version, broadcast on a radio station here, said that the house was burned first, and the shooting began as the militant separatists were about to set fire to another house.

It is still unclear just what happened, said a French spokesman, Jean Loup Reverier. The police have been ordered to investigate the slayings and arrest those responsible, he added.

For his part, Tjibaou "wants to calm the situation," according to his spokesman, Georges-Jacques Bourdinat. And Tjibaou did order the lifting of roadblocks in response to the French freeing of separatist prisoners, even after his family members were killed.

However, it remains to be seen how much control Tjibaou has over the Kanak Socialist National Liberation Front, a coalition of 10 groups, which united to boycott the Nov. 18 elections for a semi-autonomous territorial government. For example, this afternoon, after Tjibaou's order to lift all roadblocks, separatists stopped foreign journalists trying to reach Thio, a village located north of the capital city, Noumea. The separatists, wearing shorts, several of them bearded and a few carrying clubs, said they had received no orders to take down the barricade. They did not allow the journalists to pass through.

Hussein, also in Lodnon, said Thursday that Israel's goal in the Middle East are beginning to resemble Iran's, which he described as breaking up existing Arab states in order to dominate the area. In a speech to a defense institute, he said "an explosive situation" would develop unless there was a change in Israeli policy.

Citing Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon and its control over the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, Hussein said Israel's policy was designed to leave "every Arab state like Lebanon — in disarray." The West Bank and Gaza Strip were Jordanian territory until the 1967 Middle East war.

Peres has a rough timetable that envisions a diplomatic breakthrough by 1986, the second year of his administration. That would give time for a moderate Arab alliance to consolidate, allow Israel to end its occupation of south Lebanon and give Peres a chance to repair Israel's shattered economy.

The opening of any public dialogue concerning the Palestinian problem and the status of Israeli-occupied territories would likely tear asunder Israel's coalition government and force new elections.

Peres, head of the socialist Labor Party, leads a government that includes the right-wing Likud bloc, which opposes Labor's proposal for returning parts of the occupied West Bank to Jordan in exchange for peace. Shamir,

WORLD IN BRIEF

Miners' families react

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Weeping relatives of 61 miners trapped deep inside a coal mine near Taipei kept a vigil at the mine's entrance today as rescue workers burrowed toward the missing men. Officials said there was little chance the miners were alive.

Cave-ins hampered the efforts of the rescue workers, who have recovered the bodies of 33 miners. Only one survivor has been found since the Wednesday explosion that officials believe was caused by methane gas, which they said exists naturally in coal mines.

The 33 men died from inhaling carbon monoxide. The remaining 61 men are trapped about 1.2 miles from the entrance to the Haishan Yikeng Coal Mine in Shanshia, 16 miles southwest of Taipei, and officials said they too may have succumbed to carbon monoxide.

Mexican man to be tried

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — A Mexican accused of leading a smuggling gang which killed four Salvadoran illegal aliens near Houston has been ordered to stand trial in his own country.

Second Federal Judge Carlos Chowell Zapeda certified kidnapping and murder charges Thursday against Arturo Martinez Herrera, 28. Chowell is to accept evidence from prosecutors and defense attorneys over the next year, then render a verdict. The case will not be heard by a jury.

The bodies of the Salvadorans were found bound together on the banks of the Brazos River near Richmond, about 25 miles southwest of Houston, on July 16, 1982. Each had been shot in the back of the head.

Cleanup of slick begins

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (AP) — Maritime authorities today dispatched four motorboats loaded with chemicals to combat a large oil slick of unknown origin off this Mediterranean coast city, a senior official said.

Aly Soleiman, operations chief at Alexandria harbor, told reporters two navy helicopters sent over the area Thursday reported the slick was four miles long and two miles wide.

Since it was detected Thursday, Soleiman said, winds have pushed the slick a little farther from the coast to a point five to seven nautical miles northwest of the city, Egypt's second largest and a major summer resort.

Soleiman said that if winds change direction and the slick floats to shore, it would cause "a serious case of pollution."

Blood packs recalled

TORONTO (AP) — A pharmaceutical company has announced a worldwide recall of a blood transfusion pack linked to the death of a 73-year-old leukemia victim.

The recall announced Thursday by Travenol Laboratories Inc. came a day after an inquest into the 1983 death of Evelyn Lee of Toronto. The inquest included an Ontario provincial health study that showed the number of adverse reactions to transfusions doubled while the pack was in use.

"Travenol has voluntarily agreed to recall PL1240 (the plastic container) worldwide," said Maynard Youngs, a company attorney.

Use of the pack by the Canadian Red Cross was halted the day Ms. Lee died after her lungs filled with blood-tinged fluid following a blood transfusion. Five days earlier, another patient who has not been identified also died after a transfusion involving the blood pack.

The blood packs have remained in wide use in the United States and Europe, and Travenol has received no reports of medical problems, Youngs said.

Red Brigades convicted

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A court convicted and sentenced 19 Red Brigades terrorists to life imprisonment for eight murders committed between 1978 and 1983.

The verdicts came Thursday in the trial of 112 suspected members of a Milan cell of the leftist terrorist gang that has been weakened in the past few years by arrests or by members surrendering and turning state's evidence.

Eight defendants were sentenced to 30 years in prison each and 13 were acquitted.

The 19 given life terms, the harshest penalty allowed in Italy, were found guilty of involvement in one or more of eight homicides in the Milan area between April 1978 and July 1983.

The victims included policemen, businessmen and the medical director of a public hospital.

Hungary shuffles leaders

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Communist government has moved Gen. Lajos Czinege from defense minister to a deputy premiership and retired one of his senior aides.

Czinege, 60, was replaced Thursday by his former deputy, 58-year-old Col. Gen. Istvan Olah, the official MTI news agency reported. Czinege became defense minister in 1960 and Olah deputy minister in 1966.

MTI said the aide, Col. Gen. Karoly Csmei, state secretary of the Defense Ministry, "has been allowed to retire...with recognition of his merits."

There had been no public indication that the changes were imminent and their significance was not clear immediately.

Four Peruvians killed

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Police say rebels killed four people and nearly overran a rural army post in what appeared to be part of a campaign to disrupt 1985 presidential elections.

An estimated 50 rebels of the Maoist Shining Path movement attacked a police patrol at a road check point in the guerrilla stronghold of southeastern Peru on Wednesday, killing a civil guard and a civilian, police said Thursday.

Two days earlier, suspected guerrillas killed two police guarding a suburban Lima bank.

Israel working on Jordanian peace initiative

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM — Three of Israel's top leaders were on overseas diplomatic missions today, and Israeli sources said the government was trying to lay the groundwork for a peace initiative with Jordan.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said contacts have been under way behind the scenes to explore cautiously the intentions of King Hussein and the possibilities for Middle East peace.

Said one of the sources Thursday, "We are inching toward negotiations." He described recent events as "very promising, but very fragile."

The sources refused to specify if the contacts were being made directly or through third parties. But they said Egypt kept Israel informed of President Hosni Mubarak's talks last week with Hussein and that the Jordanian monarch showed a "more realistic" attitude than in his public statements.

The flurry of diplomatic travel included a trip by Prime Minister Shimon Peres to Paris to discuss prospects for new peace efforts with French leaders. Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir leaves today for the United States, and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin was in London, where there was speculation he might meet with Hussein.

Hussein, also in Lodnon, said Thursday that Israel's goal in the Middle East are beginning to resemble Iran's, which he described as breaking up existing Arab states in order to dominate the area. In a speech to a defense institute, he said "an explosive situation" would develop unless there was a change in Israeli policy.

Citing Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon and its control over the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, Hussein said Israel's policy was designed to leave "every Arab state like Lebanon — in disarray." The West Bank and Gaza Strip were Jordanian territory until the 1967 Middle East war.

Peres has a rough timetable that envisions a diplomatic breakthrough by 1986, the second year of his administration. That would give time for a moderate Arab alliance to consolidate, allow Israel to end its occupation of south Lebanon and give Peres a chance to repair Israel's shattered economy.

The opening of any public dialogue concerning the Palestinian problem and the status of Israeli-occupied territories would likely tear asunder Israel's coalition government and force new elections.

Peres, head of the socialist Labor Party, leads a government that includes the right-wing Likud bloc, which opposes Labor's proposal for returning parts of the occupied West Bank to Jordan in exchange for peace. Shamir, leader of Likud, has said the "time is not ripe" for new peace efforts.

Officials close to Peres said he is far more encouraged by the emerging alliance of Jordan, Egypt and Yasser Arafat's moderate wing of the Palestine Liberation Organization than he has dared to say in public.

In a speech to Parliament on Monday, Peres rejected a call by Hussein and Mubarak for an international peace conference under United Nations sponsorship.

Peres also reiterated the government's refusal to talk with the PLO, which Israel considers a terrorist organization bent on destroying the Jewish state. But he said Israel would speak with Palestinians who were not PLO members.

Officials indicated that this formula could open the way for Palestinians close to the PLO to negotiate on its behalf, thus overcoming a major barrier to starting peace talks.

Egypt's foreign minister, Esmat Abdel-Meguid, told a news conference Thursday that the United States should consider embarking on a new Middle East peace effort and he urged Washington to negotiate with the PLO without necessarily recognizing it.

Abdel-Meguid said Egypt remains fully committed to the 1978 camp david framework agreement on a Palestinian settlement but would welcome any other approach that proved viable.

He said U.S.-sponsored negotiations and an international peace conference were not mutually exclusive.
