Some kids resorted to a subtle form of bribers - there were several tempting references to the milk and cookies that Santa could expect to find waiting when he emerged from the chimney, and one enterprising youngster taped a candy cane to his wish list to sweeten the The letters were later returned to postal officials with the assurance deal. But most of Santa's correspondents relied on the traditional quid pro quo of gifts for good behavior

Arms talks preparation shrouded to avoid 'unnecessary rhetoric'

WASHINGTON — The United States is preparing for its upcoming talks with the Soviet Union in extraordinary secrecy to prevent leaks that would tip the Soviets to weaknesses in U.S. negotiating positions and to prevent damaging rhetoric between the two superpowers, a White House official said Saturday.

The official, speaking only on condition he not be identified, said the administration does not expect the talks next month in Geneva between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei

Following the aborted Soviet proposal earlier this year for talks on space weapons, administration officials concluded it would be foolish to lay out its position in advance of the Shultz-Gromyko meetings, the official said

MIDLAND CHEER

Wednesday will be the final day for participating in the Reporter Telegram's Midland Cheer Fund to provide Christmas food baskets to the needy.

Checks should be made payable to Midland Cheer Fund and sent to Midland Cheer, c/o the Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702, or they may be brought to the newspaper office.

The 5 p.m. Wednesday deadline for receiving contributions is necessary since newspaper staff members will purchase and package the food baskets Thursday for distribution Saturday.

The program is being sponsored in cooperation with Gibson's Discount Center. Total contributions as of Saturday, now stand at $5,370.

Couple finally reaps profits from growing Christmas trees day has been a long time in coming for Hatto and Rose Berg.

But this yuletide season, they are reaping the profits from five years of planting, watering and cultivating Christmas trees.

They sell eldarica pines, a variety of soft, long-needle trees that thrives in the rocky, alkaline soil north of New Braunfels where the Bergs live. They also were the first to plant it in Central Texas.

The Bergs planted their first seedlings in 1980 and this year, they are selling their first, full-grown crop.

first tree down," Berg said, tromping through rows of bushy pines.

"It's just like raising show animals," Mrs. Berg said. "You have to decide you're raising them for a purpose. And you have to remember they are going in someone's home and making people happy

The Bergs settled on 15 acres here in 1979 shortly after they married.

Berg had farmed cotton and sugar cane for years near Harlingen and had retired in 1976. "When I retired I came up here and was looking for something to do," he recalled.

Then he saw an article in a magazine on the business of cultivating Christmas trees

No one had ever raised the eldarica pine variety in this part of Texas, so Berg set to work doing some pioneering. 'The county agent didn't know how to prepare the soil, how deep to plant the seedlings or what kind of herbicides to use," Mrs. Berg said.

I did a lot of experimentation with herbicides and fertilizers," Berg said. "I did all the testing and research myself. Once I got it figured out, it got interesting."

The hobby has now turned into a full-time job for Berg. "He lives out here," his wife said. The Bergs grow about 900 trees to the acre and based on a six-year cycle, they now should have Christmas trees every year.

A 3- to 4-foot tree runs about $15, while the largest — 11½ feet — sells for $75. A standard 6-foot tree sells for around $30, depending on how well-shaped it is.

The Bergs sold about 25 trees last year and turned away 50 people.

"This year, we opened the gates and started selling," he said.
"People never did bat an eye (at prices)," Mrs. Berg said. "They just ook them. The Bergs use drip irrigation, watering with the use of small hoses that seep moisture into the soil. Berg also spends a lot of time shaping the trees, which will grow as tall as 45 feet but will not be full and round unless they are sheered and pruned.

This Congress, we're going to be a force to be heard, 'says Charles Stenholm, from Stam-

The group was at its height in 1981 when it bucked the party leadership to back President Reagan's economic proposals and gained its nickname. But CDF membership has dwindled from 46 to 33 since then.

Of the 13 that we lost, three retired from office, three ran for other office, three switched parties, three were defeated and one just dropped out," Stenholm said.

'As a group, the Congress is right of center," says CDF member Buddy Roemer of Louisiana. "But within the Democratic Party, the numbers (of conservatives) are shrinking, not would retire after this term. Roemer and Stenholm said they told O'Neill they wanted him to promise not to block their legislation, such as balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. They said the speaker assured them of "a place at the table," and now it is up to the conservatives to get their share. 'We're going to be a lot smarter than we were four years ago," Stenholm said. "We learned a lot in the budget process. We've learned a lot in the last two years about what's do-able and what's not, about what a package has to look like if you're

AUSTIN - As has been pointed out, Texas has plenty of water. It's just not where it's needed when it's needed. And it appears that situation may not change any In 1983, it appeared that after years of wrangling, Texas Legislature would be able to pass a comprehensive water package. But that didn't happen, and despite efforts in 1984, no one is willing to bet that will happen in 1985.

There have been some hopeful signs, though, for folks wanting to see some legislative action. Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, and Speaker of the House Gib Lewis have united behind the concept of water legislation, which has been pushed as an attempt to end the deadlock from the last session.

The general concepts in the plan have support from many legislators, but once more effforts to work out the specifics are demonstrating that there's no unanimity, but rather considerable disagreement, on water

The "Big Three" water plan's major features include an additional $600 million in bond issuing authorization for the Water Development Fund — $200 million each for water quality, water supply and storage acquisition.

At least that's the way the sponsors have been describing it.

But critics argue that the latter two categories really amount to water development functions, and show that state leaders are still stressing development, instead of looking to water conservation.

The plan does provide that any political subdivision receiving state financial assistance would have to adopt a water conservation program, with the Water Development Board able to require applicants it believes aren't using water efficiently to adopt conservation pro-

But many environmental and coastal area groups aren't convinced that the state is really intending to try to stress conservation of water and they most definitely are not tisfied that the proposal goes far nough in protecting bays and Stuaries That question, more than any her, appeared to disrupt efforts in 83 to pass a water package.

It is the great flaw in the one ckage, in the view of Sen. Carlos ruan. D-Corpus Christi, who has mised to fight any plan which he views as detrimental to coastal needs.

Last session, legislation by Sen. John Sharp, D-Victoria, providing for freshwater inflows to bays and estuaries, appeared to have resolved the dispute. But unhappiness from some water interests, including some river authorities, resulted in the bill being modified and as a result, the coalition of environmental and development interests which had supported the package fell apart.

And thus far, it appears that the coalition, like Humpty Dumpty, can't be put back together.

The question of providing water to coastal areas is a difficult one to resolve, for two major reasons. First of all, no one is really sure how much water is needed. Secondly, there's the question of who should be responsible for any costs associated with releases for bays and estuaries.

River authorities which have water in their reservoirs argue they own the water after they impound it, and that they should be compensated for any releases.

Coastal groups argue the water belongs to the state and that water has been going down the rivers to the Gulf of Mexico ever since the rivers began running, and that it would continue to do so were it not for the dams built by the river auth-

The Texas Water Commission currently is hearing arguments over whether releases should be required from the Lavaca-Navidad River Authority to maintain estuarine areas

LNRA, TWC and Texas Parks and Wildlife Department became involved in a dispute over emergency releases of water this summer, with TWPD arguing that water from the state-owned portion of Lake Texana should be released to alleviate salinity.

The dispute isn't likely to be resolved soon or easily.

All in all, providing local entities additional assistance in financing projects appears to be the area most likely to receive legislative action, whether through increasing the Water Development Fund's authority or through a state-backed loan guaranty fund for local bonds.

Those proposals have two features legislators are likely to find appealing: they don't require any direct outlay of state money, and they leave the ultimate decision on matters to the voters, while allowing lawmakers to do something about water problems.

Bullock has been on hot seat

Legislators don't like estimates of revenue shortfalls

AUSTIN (AP) - State Comptroller Bob Bullock recalls Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby introducing him to a breakfast meeting of state senators as "the only man that can help us get more

"I could have fallen out and laid down dead." Bullock says.

The introduction was fitting, however, because tax man Bullock had a reputation of coming up with money when legislators needed it. Put the emphasis on "had." Those days, like Texas budget surpluses, apparently are over.

'I'd say they are, and I think they've been gone a couple of sessions," Bullock said in an interview.

"About three years ago," he said, I sat down with Hobby and Gov. (Bill) Clements, and I said, 'In the past, if you called upon me to come up with another $50 million or $60 million, I have done it, and there has been a time or two when it was really questionable whether I could

"I want you to know that I'm not going to do that anymore. I'm going to give you an estimate, and hope it's correct, and don't ask me to (raise it).' They never asked me to do it

Recent estimates of revenue shortfalls have put Bullock on the hot seat in Austin. But legislators know that he's been highly accurate in the past, and that his estimates are actually careful computer calculations developed with the help of indexes and experts from around statement at the beginning of each graph and do just about the same."

legislative session estimating how much money lawmakers can expect to have to spend. They can spend no more than the comptroller certifies is available, although the revenue estimates can be updated whenever Bullock thinks it's necessary.

Thus, a previous estimate that is revised upward gives the Legislature more money to spend.

To be safe, Bullock, comptroller since 1975, would issue conservative estimates and occasionally raise them to cover additional expenses coming up with another $50 mil-

Recently, however, Bullock said he would be forced to lower his revenue estimate by more than $250 million when the Legislature convenes in January unless world oil prices turn upward. He predicted a revenue shortfall of $900 million.

His accuracy on past estimates would indicate he's probably right on the money this time, too. Bullock's office prepared a sheet listing the accuracy of revenue estimates since 1947. The low "accuracy percentage" was 23.7 in 1951, meaning that the estimate turned out to be only 23.7 percent of the actual revenue. Bullock said that since he has been in office, the percentage has risen steadily to 88, 95.5, 96, 96.9 and 99.6.

Computers are only part of the reason why.

"With all due respect" to former comptroller Robert S. Calvert, Bullock said. "the computer over here was used mainly for mailing labels The Texas Constitution requires to send out sales tax returns. I the comptroller to submit a sworn believe I could take an Addresso-

Bob Bullock

Billy Hamilton; director of fiscal management for the comptroller, now has 16 economists and a room full of computers to work on reverue estimates. Hamilton is a graduate of the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, and Bullock says, He's the best there is.

Hamilton credits pressure from Bullock for better data for the larger staff and closer estimates. In 1978, Bullock said, his office began accumulating data and now has 1,600 factors that go into an estimate. Some factors, such as industrial production, new car sales and energy demand, are predictable. Others, such as the number of housing starts in Japan, are not. Those overseas housing starts, it seems, can affect the demand for Texas prod-

To refine revenue estimates, Bullock asked businesses and industries to "give us their economists one or two days each quarter to tell us what their predictions are in their business or industry. They have been very generous, for example, in telling us their expansion plans."

Also, Hamilton said, the comptroller's office surveys 300 major taxpayers each quarter, asking each 10 questions. "The main one is what is your outlook for the Texas economy better or worse? Outlook for your industry, your business, for profit? What's your outlook for capital spending? When do you think the recessionswill be in Texas?

Going a step further, the comptroller's office checks help-wanted advertisements in 12 newspapers, two from each of six regions. Hamilton said this enables the office to pick up certain signals on the economy before the information is available from the Texas Employment Commission. Fewer ads, for example, would indicate the economy is leveling off, Hamilton said.

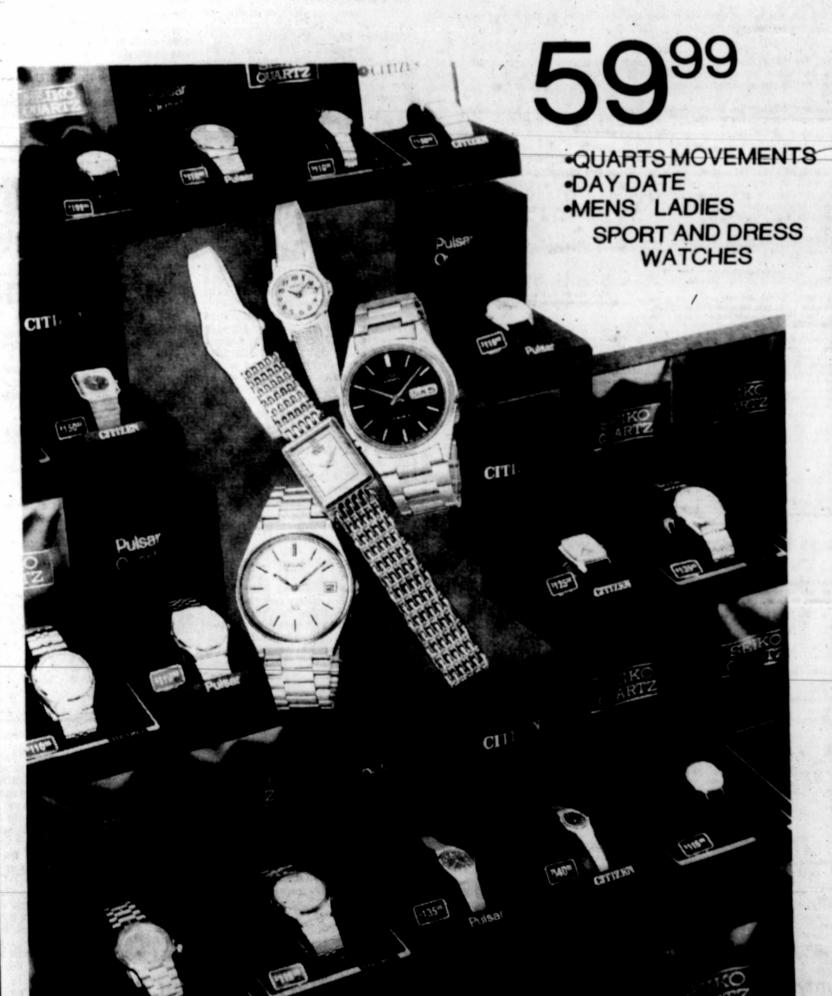

Nevertheless, Bullock said, "It's plain guesswork with revenue from oil and gas. I'm happy if we can call it fairly close.

Asked if long-range projections had made him a believer in annual, rather than Texas' biennial legislative sessions, Bullock, "We've got to have it, man, we've got to have it.

Showers for much of the nation and snow in some areas are forecast for today by the National Weather Service.

Warm temperatures due after cold, rain

From Staff Reports

Warmer temperatures and partly cloudy skies will give weekenders a break from this week's rainy cold spell, predicted the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The high will be in the lower 50s with winds from the southwest at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight will be fair and cold with a low in the upper 20s and winds from the south at 5 to 10 mph. Monday will be partly cloudy and windy with a high in the lower 50s.

Saturday's high was 42 degrees, a chilling 38 degrees lower than the record set in 1946. The record low was 15 degrees, set in 1972. Saturday's low was 31 degrees.

STATE

A storm system that dumped up to 18 inches of snow across New Mexico, and plagued West Texas and the Panhandle with freezing rain and light snow, brought a mixed weather picture to the Lone Star State on Saturday. A flash flood watch was posted for the western two-thirds of Texas, as bursts of tropical moisture from the Gulf of Mexico collided with a station-

Thursday left behind damage estimated at more than $20 million. Accumulations of up to four inches of snow had been forecast for the El Paso area, but by mid-afternoon Saturday, the temperature was hovering in the upper 30s and most roads were open, according to the Department of

About 1½ inches of snow were on the ground in El Paso, but most of it was melting by Saturday afternoon, DPS dispatcher Bill Edsall said.

Rain, freezing rain and a few thundershowers drenched much of the Plains on Saturday and iced highways in some sections, while snowfall tapered off in the southern Rockies as a new storm moved across the North-

Travelers' advisories warning of freezing rain and sleet were posted for western and northwestern Texas, south-central and southeastern New Mexico, northwestern Oklahoma, western and north-central Kansas, south-central and southeastern Nebraska, southeastern and east-central South Dakota, southern and west-central Minnesota and southwestern Wisconsin.

As much as a quarter of an inch of ice coated highways and power lines across western and central Kansas, and some areas had gotten more than 2 inches of rain in 24 hours. The westbound lanes of Interstate 70 from WaKeeney to Oakley had to be closed for several hours because of ice, the National Weather Service said.

In accepting the Soviet proposal to meet in Vienna, the United States announced it would insist on discussing medium and long-range missiles as well and would accept "no preconditions" on discussions. The Soviets, who earlier had suspended talks on limiting intermediate-range missiles in Europe and reducing the two sides' strategic arsenals, refused to engage in wider talks. Neither side showed up in Vienna.

But the White House source made clear that the secrecy also is aimed at preventing disputes within the administration policy-making apparatus from interfering with development of the U.S. position or giving the Soviets clues to internal prob-

In recent months, responsibility for developing arms control policy has been brought inside the White House, where officials have sought to resolve disagreements between key officials at the State and Defense departments.

Those disagreements, embodied in an ideological and bureaucratic struggle between Assistant Secretary of State Richard R. Burt and Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard N. Perle, were the subject of a recent book, "Deadly Gambits" by Strobe Talbott.

The differences remain, the official said Saturday, but they are being better managed within the new interagency arms control panel that McFarlane now heads.

Members of that panel, which includes Burt, Perle, their bosses in the Cabinet and other senior foreign policy advisers, have been required to sign a special secrecy oath not to disclose what goes on at their White House meetings or to distribute any papers they receive as participants in the panel's proceedings.

The official said Burt and Perle, who were suspected — but never officially accused — of leaking information to buttress their own positions in the internal arms control battle, "have decided to play by

Asked what would happen if they broke the special secrecy rule, the official said, "At a minimum, I don't think they'd be welcome at the meetings anymore.'

SEMINOLE - A Levelland man was killed and four men were injured in a two-car accident near Loop late Saturday afternoon, according to a Department of Public Safety spokesman.

David Wayne McElroy, 43, a driller, was killed when the 1967 Ford he was driving collided with a 1978 Chevrolet pickup driven by Ramone Valenzuela Armendariz at the intersection of two county roads, three miles southwest of Loop in Gaines County.

The DPS said McElroy was northbound on a paved county road when his vehicle was struck on the left side by Armendariz's, which was traveling east on a gravel county road. Both vehicles skidded off the road and rested upright.

The accident, which occurred at 4:15 p.m., left four men in Seminole Memorial Hospital with injuries.

Armendariz, 34, of Loop, was listed in good condition with head injuries and a broken hand. Also injured were Carlton Lee Oden, 23, of Levelland, listed in good condition with cuts and abrasions. Jasper David McElroy, 60, and David Wayne Varner, 33, both of Levelland, were in good condition with head injuries.

Top official says Soviet Union ready to ban many armaments.

By DAVID MASON Chief European Correspondent

LONDON - Mikhail S. Gorbachev, widely believed to be second man in the Kremlin hierarchy, said in London on Saturday that the Soviet Union stood ready to "even-tually ban" all types of armaments and would never "start any new round in the arms race.

Gorbachev, in Britain for a week during which he will confer with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, said upon his arrival Saturday that he hoped his visit would contribute to the betterment of the international situation."

Anti-Soviet demonstrators shouted slogans and held banners as Gorbachev arrived at the Soviet Embassy and when he toured London Saturday evening.

Two men were hustled away after shouting "Peace in the Ukraine!" in German inside the British Museum, where Gorbachev and his party were shown the reading room where Marx and Lenin studied.

Outside the museum about 40 protesters chanted and held banners to show support for the banned Polish trade union movement Solidarity, for Soviet Jews, and for people in the Ukraine. Some banners read, in Russian, "For oppressed Soviet Jews, Stalin lives" and "Gorbachev, where is Sakharov?" - a reference to dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov, who was exiled from Moscow to Gorky. British officials have said that during Gorbachev's trip they hope to glean some idea of the Soviet position prior to the Jan. 7-8 talks in Geneva between U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. The talks may set up a new phase in nuclear arms talks following the Soviet walkout from missile talks in November last year.

Gorbachev, smooth and smiling, spoke briefly to about 100 reporters at Heathrow Airport. He was closely guarded by strong police details. His remarks, made in Russian, and a separate press statement in English, appeared to set an upbeat tone for the visit of the eight-man Soviet parliamentary delegation, plus about 20 aides.

The statement said, "Our country has never sought, nor is it seeking military superiority. It has never been, nor will it ever be the one to start any new round in the arms race. There are no types of armaments that the U.S.S.R. would not agree to see limited and eventually banned in agreement with other states on a reciprocal basis.

Reagan aide may take new job

WASHINGTON (AP) - Michael K. Deaver, the White House aide closest to President Reagan, appears set to leave his post as deputy chief of staff for a $250,000-a-year public relations job, but several associates doubt he will actually make the

Deaver, who holds the title deputy chief of staff but who in fact is one of Reagan's three top aides and almost a member of the family, declines to talk about his future, even within the White House. But published reports and persistent rumors have made his future a topic of constant conversation, and some aides already are jockeying for positions they presume will open up if Deaver leaves and people he brought with him lose favor.

During a recent discussion in the Oval Office in which aides were advising Reagan what to tell inquiring reporters about pending topics, someone raised the question about Deaver leaving.

The 46-year-old Deaver, who once predicted his obituary would read simply, "Reagan aide dies," is said to $60,000-a-year government salary have advised the president: "Tell them, 'I've been trying to get rid of the little bastard for 18 years."

Speaking on condition they not be named, sources say Deaver met recently with Harold Burson, chairman of Burson-Marsteller, the world's largest public relations firm. Although no one in the White House or at the firm sat iff on the meeting. word spread through both places that Burson had offered the Reagan aide between $250,000 and $300,000 a year if Deaver would join Burson-Marsteller as a top executive in the Washington office, where his contacts and influence would be most valuable.

Several sources familiar with the industry said that salary range was about what Deaver could expect to make outside - if he leaves while Reagan is still in office.

Midway through Reagan's first term, Deaver expressed a desire to leave for a higher paying job, saying he and his family couldn't live comfortably in Washington on his and hears about the president.

Since then, his wife Carolyn has taken a job as a private consultant on art purchases.

Reagan let Deaver leave once, early in the 1980 presidential campaign, when then-campaign manager John P. Sears insisted he couldn't work with the longtime Reagan aide. When Sears himself was dumped a few months later. Deaver was brought back into the fold in a post that became known as 'keeper of The Body," the person who controlled Reagan's pace and schedule and knew the candidate's

Mattox wants proposed hospital moved because site is flood plain

HOUSTON (AP) - The Texas a problem for many of the patients hadn't seen it. Attorney General's office has asked the Harris County Hospital District to move the site of a proposed charity hospital from a flood plain, citing the "potential for disaster.

In a letter delivered Friday, Assistant Attorney General Dwight Martin said the county may have vio-lated the law by knowingly not telling state licensing authorities the site is in a flood plain.

The site for the $70 million, 300bed facility is in an area where roads often flood, residents say. During heavy downpours Oct. 25, for example, roads to the site were covered with water.

The possibility of needing to evacuate the hospital appears not to have been considered, Martin said.

The three, who all entered innocent pleas, were arrested near the South African consulate offices in Houston while protesting the African nation's apartheid policies.

Democrats meeting to pick new party chairman

Democratic governors to come up with their own candidate for national party chairman appeared to be foundering on the eve of a meeting that the governors hoped would produce agreement on who could rebuild the party after its 1984 election defeat.

Eight governors and about 35 state party leaders will meet today in Kansas City, Mo., to discuss who should succeed Charles T. Manatt as party chairman.

'There's no way, shape or form that the State Chairs Association as a group will endorse anybody," said Kathy Vick of Louisiana, president of the association.

There are six announced candidates for the job which will be filled Feb. 1, by a vote of the Democratic National Committee While those six have campaigned for support over the past several weeks, Govs. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona and Charles Robb of Virginia and Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri have led a search for someone the governors and state party leaders could unite behind.

So far, their search has been fruit-

Former advisers to Carter disagree on 'Star Wars'

By JOHN P. WALLACH Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON - Two former high-ranking advisers to President Carter, Defense Secretary Harold Brown and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, have squared off on whether the Reagan administration should proceed full steam ahead with "Star Wars," the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

They are both Democrats and their current open disagreement, on the eve of decisive new talks in Geneva early next month between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, mirrors the sharp behind-the-scenes policy battles they fought when both were in office. Brown thinks SDI is a mistake, that all Reagan will accomplish is to frighten the Russians into another hugely expensive nuclear arms race in space and that the Soviets probably will also react, if past behavior is any key, by vastly boosting their spending on offensive strategic nuclear weapons. Such an attempt will not ensure nuclear security, Brown said in an interview here. "Both sides will still be vulnerable to decisions made on the other side to launch a nuclear attack. The balance will become less stable in a crisis and both sides will be less secure than "That simply is intellectual stunting," countered Brzezinski in a separate interview. "...(Such) thinking hasn't moved beyond the conditions of the 60s. Brown is arguing the red herring notion of total population defense. But I don't think that's the issue.

The former national security adviser disagreed that the idea of moving away from Mutual. Assurred Destruction (M.A.D., the notion that both sides possess enough nuclear weapons to discourage the other from a nuclear first strike, towards space defense is destabi-

That, Brzezinski charged, is the traditional liberal 'emotional anxiety" that moving toward SDI "will somehow make nuclear war more attractive.

People argue it will make the Russians more beastly if the heavens are filled with our advanced technology," he continued. But he said he believes the opposite is true.

I feel that some degree of arms control is more. likely...if there is on both sides some limited strategic defense," he said. "I find it rather amusing that people say SDI will not work, it will cost too much and we musn't do it because the Russians are going to be frightened of it."

That's an absurd statement," Brzezinski said. because if it's not going to be effective, if it's going to cost too much, the Russians will be delighted by it. They're not that dumb!

Brzezinski added: "There's a kind of active intellectual arrogance on the part of the people who say that, because what they're saying is that we're smart and the Russians are stupid! The Russians know that SDI in some degree is possible.

Brown, who is chairman of the Johns Hopkins Foreign Policy Institute, charged that the concept of achieving "even a reasonable prospect" of a successful population defense is pie-in-the-sky and also reckless. The arms control talks are "too vital to be clouded by wishful thinking," he said.

'Reagan's advocacy of SDI has already changed the terms of the competition, and we should now expect a oviet response: in countermeasures, more offensive forces, an acceleration of their own defensive programs or all three, even if the actual U.S. SDI program proceeds slowly." Brown said

Countered Brzezinski: "That's the guilt complex...the idea that even if we do it slowly, we're guilty." He suggested SDI at the very minimum be used as a bargaining chip with the Russians, trading off the pace of U.S. "Star Wars" development for deep cuts in Russia's offensive nuclear arsenal.

SDI makes sense, he explained, if only to assure the survivability of America's land-based intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) defenses, which today are believed by many to be vulnerable to a Soviet first-

Brzezinski explained how such an SDI defense would

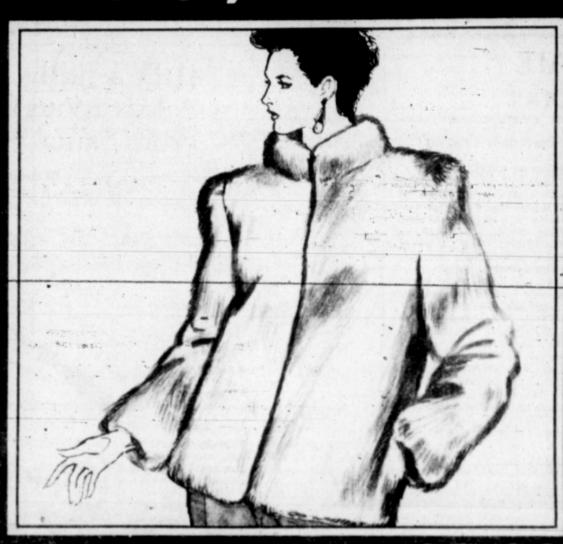

"If you had two screens, a terminal (screen) and an early boost-phase interception screen, each with only 30 per cent effectiveness (in destroying incoming Soviet ICBMs), that would reduce the number of incoming missile warheads to 49 per cent, which means that a Soviet first strike plan would make no sense.

To Brown that is the ultimate threat: that the two superpowers are poised on the threshold of a major new nuclear arms race in space. "That is a significant risk," he said. The Soviets aren't wasting time. They 'already have some (SDI) things underway them-

Witnesses in sex abuse cases recant testimony

JORDAN, Minn. (AP) - Two children who were key accusers in the Scott County sex-abuse cases have recanted testimony implicating more than a dozen adults in sex parties involving children, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Authorities are concerned that other children, placed in foster homes after the charges arose, will take back allegations of abuse to please their parents during Christmas visits, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune said in a copyright The newspaper said the latest developments emerged in interviews with people involved in the child sex-abuse cases, including attorneys, investigators and county employees.

A total of 25 people were charged with child sexual abuse; one man pleaded guilty in a plea-bargain arrangement, one couple was acquitted, and charges against the others were dropped.

Scott County-Attorney Kathleen Morris, who developed the cases but turned them over to state investigators two months ago, wept when she learned that the two alleged victims who recanted their stories would return home, a spokesman for her

"The message the adult world is giving them is that what they said must not be true, because we are sending them back into the same environment," said Minneapolis lawyer Stephen Doyle, speaking for Ms. Morris. "And any step doing that... might further encourage the children to do what's necessary to sur-

According to the newspaper, the two children who recently recanted had told of groups of adults, from three to more than a dozen, gathering for sexual play with children. They had described games, from spin-the-bottle to hide-and-seek, in which the adults would compete for a chance to abuse the children. One of the children, a girl, said her father had brandished guns and threatened to kill her and a friend if they told of the activities, the newspaper said. The other, a boy, gave extensive details of parties, games and the people who allegedly took part in them, the newspaper said.

Documents in the cases include reports on more than 100 interviews in which many of the 40 alleged victhus accuse their parents and other adults of sexually abusing them. Thirteen children, including the two who recanted, told of gatherings or parties as the setting for abuse, the Star and Tribune said.

The gatherings are at the core of allegations that adults were involved in two interlocking sex gings in Scott County, After the one guilty olea and acquittal of one couple, Ms. Morris said she dropped the remaining charges in October because she did not want to jeopardize an investigation "of greater magnitude.

That inquiry was into children's allegations that other children were murdered after being filmed for pornography. The investigation changed direction after authorities decided the children had fabricated

So far, judges have returned the three children of former defendants Don and Cindy Buchan to their home. Judges also have ruled that two other children could go to their parents' home this month and remain there pending a hearing.

Children will be allowed to see their parents at Christmas, many for the first time since being sent to foster homes when their parents were charged. Family court judges are considering whether to reunite the

The children's statements are the primary evidence Minnesota Attorney General Hubert Humphrey III will consider in deciding whether to reinstate criminal charges against the adults and whether to ask family court judges to keep the children out of their homes.

The gunman herded the group into a back room, forced them to lie on the floor and then shot them in the head and back, according to City Marshal Tommy Dale.

The search was expanded Saturday from Comanche County into Stephens and Cotton counties, and alerts were sent to Texas authorities, the highway patrol said.

FBI spokesman Dan Vogel said authorities were limited to ground searches early Saturday because of heavy fog and rainy skies.

The composite drawing is a major lead for authorities, FBI agent Tony Daniels told The Lawton Constitu-

The FBI described the gunman as a white male, 19-20 years old, 5-foot-9 inches tall, with shoulder-length blond hair and bad acne. He was wearing blue jeans and glasses with gold metal frames, and had a thin mustache and green eyes, they said. Daniels said the bank did not have any cameras or an alarm. "It would certainly have been a benefit to us if the bank had had a camera," he said. "We're trying to develop potential suspects through prior arrest records and what we can pick up. We're trying to identify suspects as far as propensity for violent crime, and we're interviewing people in the area.

Daniels said the weapon used was believed to be a .32-caliber revolver.

Hearing in Donovan's fraud case turns into

NEW YORK (AP) - What started as a procedural hearing in Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan's fraud and larceny case has swelled into a mini-trial of the state charges in a federal courtroom.

The transformation stems from the appearance of the chief prosecutor, Stephen R. Bookin, as a witness in the hearing — a highly unusual move that opened Bookin to crossexamination by one of Donovan's

The lawyer, Paul Curran, has delved into Bookin's legal theories, his former associates at Schiavone his evidence, his knowledge of a Construction Co., with retaining business arrangement that Bookin money that supposedly went to a says was illegal - and, under a minority-owned subcontractor on a judge's order, his grand jury rec-ords.

subway tunnelling project in 1979 Bookin charged that Jopel was a and 1980. He joined the Reagan cabi-

All this comes in a hearing intended only to determine whether Donovan can move his case to federal court from state Supreme Court in the Bronx, where he was indicted with nine other men on charges of fraud in a construction project.

"I'm high as a kite," Theodore W. Geiser, one of the defense lawyers, said during a break in Bookin's testimony last week. "I haven't seen any ray gun," or damning evidence in the state's case.

Donovan is charged, along with

State and federal rules said 10 per-cent of the $186 million project had to go to minority subcontractors. Bookin charged that project executives conspired to overstate payments to one such firm, Jopel Contracting and Trucking Corp.

They did it, he charged, by having the prime contractor, a joint venture of Schiavone and two other companies, rent construction equipment to Jopel at no cost, then count what it said was the rental value -$8 million - as part of its $12 million payments to Jopel as a minority subcontractor.

At a daylong hearing Thursday, Bookin charged that Jopel was a

New York City Transit Authority into thinking that it was a legitimate, self-sufficient minority firm. Instead, he said, it was funded largely by Schiavone, through $300,000 in interest-free loans.

Bookin charged that Jopel officials were to receive cash payments of $50,000 and $75,000 for their roles. But under Curran's questioning. Bookin said he did not know who was to pay the money or whether it had been paid, rental arrangement was proper and that loans to fledgling minority firms are common. Curran questioned Bookin on those issues, but focused on the evidence allegedly linking Donovan to the case.

Bookin said Donovan was linked by "his own testimony to the grand jury that he had a lot to do with the operation" of the subway project. But he conceded that the indictment was drawn up before Donovan testi-

"I don't think there's any significance to that," Bookin said.

"Let me judge the significance," interjected U.S. District Judge Lloyd MacMahon.

MacMahon joined the questioning Defense lawyers contend that the eliciting what defense lawyers said was an important concession from Bookin: that the state has no "con-van linking him to a conspiracy.

Bookin said evidence of Donovan's "personal participation" was a $200,000 check - part of the loan to Jopel - that he co-signed in March 1979. Donovan testified Wednesday that the payment was one of 90 to 120 checks he signed that day in his routine duty as Schiavone's executive vice president.

In his testimony, Donovan said he had virtually nothing to do with the Jopel subcontract. Further, he declared: "I know no crimes were committed.'

Donovan won the hearing to argue that he should be tried in federal court to prevent state interfercalled the Sept. 24 indictment an attempt to embarrass President Reagan before the election.

Researchers study child injuries

BOSTON (AP) — At least one in every five children is taken to a hospital each year for treatment of injuries suffered in bicycle spills, kitchen burns and other accidental tumbles and mishaps, a new study indicates.

The research, described as the largest of its kind ever conducted, surveyed all emergency room visits by youngsters in 14 Massachusetts communities.

The "impact of injuries is staggering" when the findings are used to calculate the number of mishaps on a statewide basis, the study said. The researchers estimated that Massachusetts' 1.7 million children and teen-agers can be expected to suffer

377,000 injuries requiring hospital treatment annually "The number is not surprising to people who are in the field, but I'm sure it would be a surprise to the average public," said Susan S. Gallagher of the state Department of Public Health. "The things that get the attention are child abuse and lost children. They are important, but this is a much larger prob-

The study, directed by Ms. Gallagher, was published in the December issue of the American Journal of Public Health. Ms. Gallagher said the kinds of injuries that befall youngsters probably vary from place to place, depending in part on whether they live in urban or rural areas.

In the communities studied, the researchers found that falls - often down stairs - were the most common accidents, followed by sports injuries, being struck by an object and being cut or jabbed by instruments or machinery.

Infants and older teen-agers are the most injury prone, and boys have more mishaps than girls.

The statistics were based on a survey of all emergency room visits over one year at 23 hospitals in 14 cities and towns around Massachusetts, chosen to represent rural and urban areas where there were 87,022 children ranging up to age 19. The researchers found that 2,239 of every 10,000 youngsters needed hospital treatment for injuries.

Ms. Gallagher said the findings provide a glimpse of the magnitude of the childhood injury problem nationwide, although the actual incidence of these accidents is probably

"It's an understatement of the problem," she said. "We know we missed some cases.

Visits to private doctors'offices, dentists and health maintenance organizations were not included, and the researchers also didn't include dog bites in their figures. Among their findings:

One of every 12 children under age 6 required treatment for a fall. Stairs, furniture, playground equipment and baby carriages were usually involved.

—Burns, though relatively rare, were most frequent among the pre-schoolers. Most happened in the kitchen and resulted from scalds or contact with hot stoves, radiators and irons.

More than one of every 80 elementary school children required treatment for a bicycle accident.

—One of every 14 teen-agers was treated for a sports injury. The largest number of sports-related injuries resulted from football, followed by basketball, roller skating and baseball. -One of every 50 teen-agers was hurt while riding in a motor vehicle. These accidents accounted for most of the seri-

Ms. Gallagher said she hoped the figures will encourage efforts to improve childhood safety.

"People think these things aren't going to happen to them, and there's no way to prevent them when, indeed, we feel there are in a lot of cases," she said.

Police shoot lion after it escapes from open zoo exhibit

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Police shot and killed a 3-year-old African lion a half-hour after the animal escaped from an exhibit inside a zoo Saturday, authorities said. No injuries were reported. The lion, which was named Suzanne and weighed more than 300 pounds, was killled rather than drugged because of the possibility that the animal might panic after being shot with a tranquilizer gun, said Alice A. Kuhn, curator of animals at the Mesker Zoo:

"It would take at least, if you got a good shot off,

15 minutes (for the lion) to go down," Ms. Kuhn said. the curator said. But the animal apparently was dis"During that time she could have run, we could have tracted by zoo visitors and fled the area. lost her. She could pass out then come out of the tranquilizer and still be lost, and we'd have no idea where

Shortly after noon, the animal apparently climbed a wall and jumped out of an open grotto exhibit "that had housed lions since the 1930s," Ms. Kuhn

"After she got out, she attempted to get back in,"

Police and zookeepers evacuated the fewer than 50 visitors at the zoo, Ms. Kuhn said.

The animal was found a short time later between the North American and South American exhibits near the center of the facility 'She just laid down, they gave her enough room," Ms. Kuhn said.

A short time later, a police officer killed the animal. The curator said she did not know what type of weapon was used

The lion, which was the youngest of four in the grotto exhibit, was born in the zoo and had some contact with humans when she was young

'She was very playful (as a cub). She liked to jump on your back and bite your neck," Ms. Kuhn said. But fully grown and weighing more than 300 pounds, the lion "could have hurt somebody," she said.

Lawmen

arrest drug ring members

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK - In a series of predawn raids, federal agents, New York City detectives and state troopers late last week arrested 32 people described as members of three interrelated heroin and cocaine rings in New York City. Seven other people are still being sought.

Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward said the arrests marked "a dismantling of interrelated drug importation networks" with bases in New York City "which did a combined gross business of $100 million

"These arrests reach very high in the drug trade in terms of importing narcotics," the commissioner said at a news conference.

The arrests were carried out in the city, Long Island, upstate New York, New Jersey and Florida. There was no reported resistance. Authorities said they seized five and a half pounds of heroin and a pound and a half of cocaine, with a combined street value of $3 million, and $137,000 in cash and seven guns.

Federal prosecutors, who joined Ward in announcing the arrests, said most of the defendants were natives of Sicily who had come to this country in the last 10 or 20 years and become American citizens. Many, they said, were related by blood or marriage.

Because of their backgrounds, they were "able to exploit contacts in Sicily who supplied them on demand with enormous amounts of higher quality heroin," the author ties said in a joint announcement.

The officials declined to say whether those arrested were involved with organized crime families in Sicily or New York, or with the so-called Pizza Connection, which has resulted in many arrests in recent months.

Rudolph W. Giuliani, the U.S. attorney for the Southern District, said that according to an affidavit filed in federal court, when an undercover agent who was buying drugs as part of the investigation complained about the price, one of the defendants replied: "The price is not set by me, it's set by the capo." The term usually refers to a highranking organized-crime figure.

Authorities said the defendents operated out of a barber shop, restaurants, an auto body repair shop and other places of businesses, largely in Brooklyn and Manhattan, to conceal their illegal activities.

The officials said that among the more prominent members of the rings were Joseph Spatola, 32 years old, and his brother, Frederico, 41, both of Astoria, Queens, and their both of Astoria, Queens, and their cousin, Salvatore Spatola, 36, of Maspeth, Queens; Vito Pepitone, 35, of Ridgewood, N.J., and Nicolo Argano, 41, of Williston Park, N.Y.

All 32 defendants were charged with conspiracy to self drugs and some were charged with the sale of drugs.

The arrests were the culmination of separate investigations started 18 months ago under the auspices of the President's Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force, composed of representatives of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other agencies, in cooperation with local authorities.

FBI agents find gun used to kill talk show host, police say

DENVER (AP) — FBI agents who raided the rural Idaho home of a right-wing extremist found the submachine gun used in the ambush slaying of Denver radio talk show host Alan Berg in June, police said. The discovery of the Berg murder weapon was the result of a recent series of FBI raids and shootouts with neo-Nazi groups in the Pacific Northwest. Idaho authorities said the murder weapon was found as they searched a home for an escaped prisoner, brother of the home's owner.

The acid-tongued Berg, who was Jewish, had received numerous death threats during his decade-long stint as a talk show host in Denver, and he said he once was confronted by a gunman who had ties to the Ku Klux Klan.

Chief of Detectives Don Mulnix said Friday that the RPB Industries 45-caliber MAC 10 was found Oct. 18 in an FBI raid at the home of Gary Lee Yarbrough near Sandpoint, Friday.

Teen booked in connection with his parents' deaths

MORENO VALLEY, Calif (AP) -A 19-year-old has been arrested and booked for investigation in the slaying of his parents who were found shot to death in a pickup truck outside their home, authorities said.

Kevin Arnold Warp was arrested Friday night at a tire store where he worked, said. Riverside County sheriff's Lt. Don Seley.

The bodies of Robert Warp, 47, and Patricia Warp, 48, were found Friday morning in the tarp-covered bed of a pickup truck parked behind their home in this community about 70 miles east of Los Angeles, said

Deputies found pools of blood in the front yard, and Seley said investigators believe the couple were murdered in the truck near the front of the house before the truck was driven to the rear.

Sheep illegally hunted

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) - Game wardens say they have found a wellstocked camp that appears to be a staging area for illegal hunting of endangered desert bighorn sheep.

The camp, complete with stored food, was discovered in a Santa Rosa Mountains bighorn habitat, near a water hole where the shy animals regularly drink, said State Fish and Game Capt. Edward DeGraffenreid.

Game wardens suspect hunters or dunting guides set up the camp, but DeGraffenreid said there was no sign of shooting while authorities were there

California's 4,000 desert bighorn are protected under state law, but are considered a great trophy by hunters' who, according to a recent state report, pay guides as much as $60,000 to be led to their habitats. The penalty for killing one is up to a $1,000 fine and a year in jail.

Storm knocks out power

ESPANOLA, N.M. (AP) - A transformer failed during a snowstorm early Saturday, knowing out power to nearly 20,000 homes and businesses in northern New Mexico, authorities said.

The outage began at 12:45 a.m. Saturday for about 12,000 customers of Jemez Mountains Electric Co-op and for about 7,500 customers of Northern Rio Arriba Electric Co-op, said Rodger Beimer, a spokesman for Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative.

Plains, which owns the transformer, sent a mobile transformer on a flatbed truck to the Hernandez substation near Espanola, and crews worked throughout the day to restore power, Beimer said.

The cause of the transformer failure had not been determined, but the storm "contributed to it." Beimer said.

White House tradition may end

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON - It happens once

Into the White House, on a chill December evening, file the members of the Washington press corps

Through the East Wing they pass, along the wide corridor that looks out upon the Jacqueline Kennedy garden, past the portraits of longdead presidents and their first ladies and up a marble staircase to the entrance hall where members of the Marine Corps band are playing Christmas carols.

Everything is quite splendid. The Executive Mansion and the news people are both resplendent in holiday finery. The tables in the State Dining Room and the East Room are laden with food and drink. Music fills the historic chambers that have housed every President except George Washington and a magnificent creche is displayed among bows of evergreens.

For a couple of festive hours, animosity and ideology are sheathed beneath smiles and niceties. No matter who the president might be, his most bitter foes, as well as his most loyal admirers, in the news media willingly partake of his hospitality at

He, in turn, greets them as though they had never written or spoken an unkind word about about him. Holiday cheer reverberates through the White House. The tradition of the president entertaining the news media around the brilliantly-decorated Christmas tree in the Blue Room is unique to a democratic society, and, in its way, beneficial to the nation.

It is the one time each year when the writers, reporters and broadcasters who serve as an informational conduit between the president and the American people can meet with him in a relaxed and joyous atmo-sphere and enjoy the historic splendor of the Executive Mansion.

But, alas, it also is a tradition that may have ended last week with Nancy and Ronald Reagan's Christmas Party for the press. Since Jimmy Carter left the White House, the guest list to the press reception has doubled, largely as a result of demand for invitations from news people. This has forced the Reagans to entertain members he pored over his stamp collection. of the media two nights in a row. And on each evening the rooms on the first floor of the mansion have been jammed wall-to-wall with peo-repeated next year, say White House aides, the Reagan's would have to resort to entertaining media personnel in three shifts rather than two. That is a bit much, especially when the president and first lady must spend close to 90 minutes in a receiving line, shaking hands and greeting hundreds of individuals they never have seen before.

So, a very pleasant institution may be about to vanish.

It would be great, of course, if every American could visit the White House at Christmastime. As Mrs. Reagan said in her printed greeting to guests last week, "The White House is always beautiful, but at Christmas it is very special."

Indeed, it is very special. The great house at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue belongs to all of us. It is both museum and residence and one need not have too fertile an imagination to envision Thomas Jefferson browsing through the library or Abraham Lincoln padding about in his slippers or Franklin Roosevelt eating dinner alone from a tray as

In Jefferson's portrait, there is wisdom and strength; in Dwight Eisenhower's there is directness.

But the rooms are not just adorned with portraits of Presidents and their wives. They also are graced with the fine works of Paul Cezanne, Mary Cassatt, Childe Hassam and Claude Monet and striking bronzes of Frederick Remington and Charles Russell.

'The prince's and the painter's' arts on exhibit

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON - An unlikely pair, a Prussian prince and a Swiss painter, spent 13 months in the 1830s living and traveling among the Indians of the upper Middle West and Plains and brought back to Europe a great record of a people whose era was, unknown to them, perilously near its end.

The observations of the Prince, Maximilian Alexander Philipp of Wied, and the watercolors of the artist, Karl Bodmer, were stored away, forgotten in a castle in what is now northern West Germany; surviving more than a century of war

That neglect is now being cor-rected with an exhibition of 100 of Bodmer's paintings and Maximilian's ethnographic specimens that opens next month at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of Natural History. The paintings, but not the politan Museum of Art in New York.

"We like to refer to them as the Prince and the painter," said Marsha V. Gallagher, a curator at the Joslyn Art Museum in Omaha, which has the works on permanent loan.

Maximilian correctly surmised that he had to act quickly to capture a record of Indian life before it was too late. "He thought the area would be transformed by the rising tide of immigration," Miss Gallagher said, and he was right, although he was worried about farms and communities disrupting tribal lands and could not have known that tragedy was impending among the tribes of the upper Missouri River, the Piegan Blgod Siksika, Atsina, Cree, Assiniboin, Crow, Mandan, Hidatsa, Arikara; Teton Sioux, Ponca, Omaha, Yankton Sioux, the Sauk and Fox and the Blackfoot.

Maximilian, not being a firstborn son, knew he could not go into the family business, which consisted of ruling a substantial portion of Prussia. He became a naturalist after fighting against the French in the Napoleonic wars. His travels took him to Brazil in 1815, and he wrote six books on his studies there, illustrating them himself.

He then decided on the North American trip and hired Bodmer, who had achieved some recognition as a landscape painter along the Rhine. The two set out for the United States in May 1832 and a year later started up the Missouri River on boats operated by traders working for John Jacob Astor's American agreed. It is the paintings of the littleknown Bodmer, however, that are the expedition's most enduring result. This specialist in landscapes performed his best work in the portraits of the Indians and so impressed some of them that they asked Bodmer to give them some paint and paper so they could try their own hands.

The watercolors of two Indians, Mato-Tope and Sih-Chida, in fact, are in the Maximilian-Bodmer show.

Maximilian and Bodmer suffered through bouts of scurvy and extreme cold. Maximilian collecting objects and keeping careful notes, and Bodmer painting 400 watercolors (when it was not so cold inside their tents that his paints froze).

After 13 months, they packed up the fruits of their trip, which included four live bears, and returned to Prussia.

Carbide plant doused with water against gas leak preparing for new pesticide pro-cessing at the Union Carbide Corp. plant shrouded it with a giant brown tarpaulin and doused it with water cannons today as precautions against a gas leak similar to the one that killed more than 2,000 people.

The operation was one of the elaborate safety measures to slow or stop any new gas leak when the U.S. based corporation starts processing the remaining 15 tons of deadly methyl isocyanate gas into pesticides

Spraying was done by government workers using a Soviet-made Indian air force helicopter. The tarpaulin was fitted over the top and sides of the plant by workers on the ground.

Authorities stressed they saw no new danger as a result of the processing, but the shanty towns near the plant, hit hardest by the Dec. 3 disaster, were virtually empty.

Madhya Pradesh state government officials said at least 70,000 of Bhopal's 900,000 people have fled rather than trust repeated government statements that they would not be endangered by the gas processing, which is expected to take four or five days.

The United News of India and the English-language Bhopal Chronicle estimated that about 250,000 people had left Bhopal.

Ten refugee centers have been set up far from the Union Carbide plant to house 50,000 people from the shanty towns. But by this morning, only an estimated 5,000 people had gone to the centers.

Because of the terror, they don't think they are safe in these camps. Most people fled to other cities,' said Dr. N.K. Gour, a volunteer at one of the centers.

"I am confused and scared about the future," said Hukum Chand, one of 154 people who moved into a refugee center set up in a sports stadium. Chand, 25, dressed in tattered shirt and trousers, said: "I am feeling very scared about tomorrow, but I am too poor to go elsewhere.'

Soldiers helped a few dozen people into army trucks and took them to the refugee centers today. Many more people were at the bus station, still trying to leave the city. Fully-loaded buses continued to leave Bhopal, often with people riding on the roofs

However, the exodus had tapered off since Wednesday, when the govremaining gas would be processed into pesticides

Srinivasan Varadarajan, a govern-ment scientist directing the processing, told a news conference today that "chances are now very low" of a new gas leak. He said the process to render the gas safe was identical to that used here for years to turn the methyl isocyanate into a pesticide called barbaryl. "We have chosen a method which is the most reliable," he said.

About 40 tons of the poisonous gas escaped from an underground storage tank earlier this month. Medical officials say more than 2,000 people died, but Indian news agencies place the death toll at more than 2,500, Doctors said they had treated about 60,000 people for injuries resulting from the gas leak.

Row after row of tin-roofed hovels and mud-brick huts near the plant were empty and padlocked today. Only a few score people remained, mostly those who were too old, weak, or dispirited to flee.

"My state can be compared to an injured bird which cannot fly," said Sarju Bai, an elderly woman. She said she saw her daughter and the news agency said ernment announced that the daughter-in-law die from the gas. Her son, the family's sole wageearner, is missing.

The city issued guidelines advising residents to keep plenty of water in their homes once production resumes at the plant, and to wash their eyes, mouths and noses frequently. The guidelines warned against sleeping outdoors.

Residents were told that should warning sirens be heard, they should cover their faces with wet towels and close their doors.

Indian scientists say they have found no genetic damage to survivors of the leak or contamination of vegetables collected in the plant's

State and privately owned radios said duels with long-range guns and multiple rocket launchers were fought around the coastal town of Jiye in the Kharroub region just north of Israel's frontline.

Schools, shops, banks and businesses were closed in major cities and towns throughout the southern third of Lebanon to protest an Israeli roundup two days ago in which four people were reported killed and dozens arrested, state-run Beirut radio reported.

Lebanese reporters based in south Lebanon said several Christian towns and villages joined in the strike to demonstrate solidarity with the Shiite Moslem population predominant in the region. In Jizzine, the south's largest Christian town, the Rev. Mobarak Aoun of the Maronite Christian community held a Mass for Shiite Moslems reported to be victims of Thursday's Israeli crackdown. "Let us again close ranks and coexist in national unity," the priest said in a sermon at Jizzine's main church. "Let us understand that seeking Israel's help means bringing the wolf into the courtyard of lambs. Lebanese Christians have been showing increased disenchantment with the 30-month-Israeli occupation that they initially supported to drive out Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas

In the town of Nabatieh farther south, Shiite youths burned tires in the streets as their elders assembled In the town's mosque and heard speakers denouncing Israeli occupation policies.

The call for the strike was issued by Nabih Berri, state minister for south Lebanon, who heads the nation's largest Shiite militia.

Berri told a news conference in Beirut that Israeli troops killed four people in the search-and-arrest operation in nine south Lebanese villages on Thursday: Military sources in Tel Aviv said two people were killed and 30 arrested by Israeli troops. The sources said the operation was aimed at Shiite guerrillas involved in attacks against Israel's occupation

Lebanon deems it necessary. Lebanon's U.N. Ambassador, Rashid Fakhoury, said in a letter to Perez de Cuellar that the raids occurred within the area patrolled by soldiers of a U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon.

Fakhoury said the U.N. force could not resist the Israelis "due to the heavy artillery and aerial fire om numerous Israeli helicopters. which took part in the operation.'

In the Egyptian capital Cairo, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy Saturday rejected calls for an international peace conference on the Middle East despite endorsement by Egypt and Jordan.

East German refugees go on hunger strike

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The government says a group of East Germans who have holed up in Bonn's embassy in Prague, Czechoslovakia, for the past three months have begun a hunger strike in an effort to gain asylum in West Ger-

West Germany on Friday renewed its appeal to the 70 refugees to abandon their sit-in and heed the East German government's advice to return home and seek exit visas through normal channels.

'Such desperate steps won't help solve refugee cases," chief government spokesman Peter Boenisch told a news conference.

Boenisch confirmed that a group of refugees had gone on hunger strike Friday but did not specify how many.

However, a high-ranking government source, speaking on condition he not be identified, said 40 of the 56 adults camped out inside the age or health, the source said.

According to the source, state secretary Ludwig Rehlinger of the Ministry for Intra-German Affairs went to Prague on Friday in an effort to persuade the refugees to drop their hunger strike.

On his return to Bonn later Friday, Rehlinger said the East Germans were in good physical condition but many feel "unbearable pressure spiritually."

Many of the refugees have been inside the embassy since Sept. 13. Bonn closed the building on Oct. 4 because it was filled to capacity with asylum seekers, who numbered up to 160 at one point. The number has steadily dwindled in recent weeks as more refugees give up and go home.

East Berlin has maintained an official silence throughout the case. Bonn previously has indicated the Communist authorities consider it strictly an internal affair.

East Germany has allowed more than 38,000 citizens to emigrate to the West so far this year, more than triple the number permitted to leave

Peacekeeping force in Cyprus extended

New York Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. The Security Council extended the mandate of the U.N. Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for six months Saturday, acting against a backdrop of apparently successful negotiations between Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot leaders.

The council vote was 15-to-0. The new mandate for the 2,300member force, which has sought for 20 years to keep the island's Greek and Turkish communities from fighting, will now expire next June 15. The troops are along a 113-mile-long border that cuts Cyprus in half.

In seeking the extension, Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said the Greek Cypriot president, Spyros Kyprianou, and the leader of the Turkish Cypri-ots, Rauf Denktash, meeting separately with him in what became known as "proximity talks," had made enough progress for him to schedule face-to-face talks here on Jan. 17, presumably to work out the details of an agreement on broad issues. These were believed to include establishment of a federal republic with a legislature of two chambers, one evenly divided between the two groups and the other roughly 70 percent Greek Cypriot and 30 percent Turkish Cypriot.

Belize's prime minister soundly defeated by opposition leader

BELIZE CITY, Belize (AP) — Prime Minister George. Price, who dominated politics in this English-speaking Central American country for a quarter century, suffered a landslide loss in election returns announced

Price, 65, was soundly defeated in his own district by a 25-year-old political newcomer in Friday's parliamentary elections; the first since the Union Jack was lowered in Belize three years ago.

Opposition leader Manuel Esquivel, a U.S.-educated mathematics and physics teacher, is expected to become the new prime minister. Under the Britishstyle parliamentary system, his conservative United Democratic Party names the new Cabinet.

He has 30 days to set up a new government. Price's center-left People's United Party won only seven seats in the 28-member House of Representatives, the government's Radio Belize said.

In Belize City's Freetown, Price's home district, he was defeated by Derek Aikman, a political novice, by 876 to 570 votes.

The total national vote tally was not released Saturday, but Radio Belize, which provided the official election results, said about 48,000 of the estimated 64,000 eligible voters, or 74 percent, cast ballots.

Many people who stood in voting lines around this city of 45,000 said they were going to cast ballots for the opposition because they were tired of Price and wanted a change.

Price was first elected prime minister when Britain granted Belize home rule in 1964. Before that he was chief minister in the colonial administration.

Price led Belize, known as British Honduras until 1973, to independence on Sept. 21, 1981, and has been labeled "father of the nation" by his followers. But reflecting the feeling of many on election day, a burly cab driver said: "That cat's been there almost 30 years telling people what to do and now the people going to tell him, man, you had your day.

Price's party ran on a platform that cited the party's achievements in health, education and road construction, an important issue in this thinly populated, Massa-chusetts-sized tropical country on Mexico's Yucatan

Opposition to Price was strongest in this raucous Caribbean port. His straitlaced ways didn't sit well with its inhabitants, who are more given to drinking rum and dancing to steel bands than to the belt-tightening he had ordered because of falling prices for sugar, the country's main export.

The opposition accused Price of mismanaging the economy, abusing power, taking kickbacks and being too friendly to socialist governments in Nicaragua and

PLO member gunned down

ROME (AP) - A man traveling with a false Moroccan passport who was shot dead in downtown Rome has been identified as a Palestine Liberation Organization representative, police sources and PLO officials said today.

The man, who was gunned down Friday near the capital's fashionable Via Veneto, was identified as a Palestinian, Ismail Darwish. Police sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, and PLO officials in Rome said Darwish was a member of the PLO, but they did not release the man's title.

Darwish died of multiple bullet wounds shortly after an unidentified gunman shot him with a silencer-equipped pistol.

Initial police reports had identified the victim as Moroccan busiKamal, 32. Police said today that the man's passport was false.

Soviets criticize Swiss editor

BERN, Switzerland (AP) - The editor of a Swiss weekly which revealed part of a secret Swiss war games scenario, prompting criticism from both the Soviet Union and Greece, was briefly detained for questioning by an army magistrate.

Urs Frieden, Bern chief of bureau of the left-wing Wochenzeitung, told reporters Saturday he refused to answer any questions on the article when questioned Friday. The article said the scenario assumed a Soviet invasion following a political upheaval in Greece.

The Wochenzeitung article prompted an official protest note to Switzerland from Greece and a sharply worded commentary by the official Soviet news agency Tass, which spoke of an escalation of "military hysteria" by neutral Switzer-

Maj. Gen. Gustav Daeniker, who headed last month's exercise, said the scenario did "not reflect an official Swiss political assessment" of the world.

Ethiopia searching for seed

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) The government has begun a race against time to acquire enough seed for next year's planting to help relieve Ethiopia's devastating fam-

'Everybody is panicking," said one foreign agricultural expert. "We need to place orders soon or there might not be enough to plant come

Desperate farmers in many areas ate what seed they had on hand to survive. And the government reportedly will resort to distributing unmilled wheat as grain seed to cover part of the requirements for the February-May growing season.

A major problem has been locating foreign sources of sorghum and drought-resistant maize, or corn. All major African producers but Malawi and South Africa have banned seed exports because of their own drought crises, said a Western consultant, who spoke on condition he not be identified, citing the sensitivity of the famine issue here.

To import seed from outside Africa runs the risk of introducing varieties unsuitable to Ethiopian conditions. And plant diseases and destructive insects, such as the great grain borer which was carried in South America seed shipments to Tanzania, can be spread this way, one expert said.

Sorghum, a fairly drought-resistant crop which originated in Ethiopia, is considered perfect for Wollo province north of here, perhaps the area hardest hit by drought.

However, the grain over the past 2,000 years has become extremely 'area specific," meaning one sort might be right for one valley but not for the next, said one specialist.

And conditions in Wollo apparently are not suitable for most foreign varieties, said the source, who like others interviewed requested anonymity

Wollo, where one-third of Ethiopia's 7.75 million famine victims live, has been a chronically grain deficient region due to overpopulation and serious soil erosion.

Most of the central highlands region has had rains fall two years in a row. The drought drew thousands of Afar nomadic herdsmen into Wollo from neighboring desert areas, only to see thousands of their cattle die there this year.

The country's institute of Agricultural Research is now determining whether Swazi red, a southern African sorghum type, might grow well in Wollo, where farmers "are naturally reluctant to try different new varieties," one Western adviser said.

"Swazi red may be less suitable than other foreign varieties, but it's the only one they've tracked down that's now available in Africa.

The purchase of 1,600 metric tons from a Malawi supplier is awaiting the institute's go-ahead, and then more than $1.5 million would have to be raised to airfreight the seed in time for planting, he said.

He said that adding to the overall problem is that no one knows the exact seed requirement for 1985. One foreign expert said attempts are being made to have 14,000 tons of seed distributed, although half the mount is now on hand.

Even with ample rains, a recent ssessment by the United Nations ood And Agriculture Organization predicted that next year's yelds vould decline a further 10 percent ecause so many draft animals mainly oxen - needed for plowing ave died or have been slaughtered for food during the 1984 drought

Inmate construction crew may be razed

By-ED TODD Staff Writer

The inmate construction program launched two years ago by Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith may be discontinued next year when Sheriff-elect Gary Painter heads up the law enforcement agency

Painter, however, said he will continue and expand other inmate work programs and is entertaining the idea of setting up correspondence courses for long-term inmates.

"I think it's been a good savings for the Midland County taxpayers, Painter, 37, said of the construction program. "It's been great that Dallas could allow a commissioned officer to do that work

That commissioned officer is Capt. Bill Decker, a 37-year lawman who is versed in carpentry and other skills, including iron work, welding, plumbing and electrical work. Decker, who manages inmates who assist him in construction work, has not been hired by Painter.

"He (Painter) told me he didn't need a carpenter." Decker said. Further, Painter said he can't afford one. Decker's pay is about $30,000 a year. My budget is trimmed down enough now," the sheriff-elect said. 'I can't afford a carpenter. Protection of the citizenry comes first. However, Painter said he would "like to see the (county) commissioners appoint" Decker to a position to take care of certain county building and remodeling projects. "It would be a savings of tax dollars for the people of Midland.

The commissioners reportedly are onsidering hiring Decker as a liai son between the proposed $9.9 million jail project and the Commissioners' Court and as supervisor-worker.

"He's a very uniquely qualified person," Commissioner Win Brown said of Decker. In addition to his building skills, Decker has expertise in jail security

'He's more schooled and skilled in locking mechanisms than Southern Steel (the San Antonio-based jail builders)," Brown said, "because Southern Steel has so much turn-

'The county needs someone with (inmate) labor. He has the personality," Brown said. For instance, Decker next year could be commissioned as a lawman by the district attorney or county attorney. And with the sheriff's consent, he could work with inmates, Brown said.

"I know Bill Decker has saved us many times over what we pay him in salary," Brown said.

Painter said his intent as sheriffelect is to "put more people on the street and to focus on the prevention of crime." That was his campaign promise.

In the past two years, Smith has engineered an inmate work program which has included remodeling courthouse offices for the judiciary and building a law library, sheriff's and constable's offices, and making jail cabinets. This Monday, Midland County commissioners, who said they have been pleased with the sheriff's work program and the savings it afforded, are to consider letting Decker and inmates remodel the Commissioners' Courtroom and convert it into a county court-at-law courtroom and a Commissioners' Courtroom. They may get the sheriff to send Decker and his contingent of skilled inmates into the courtroom to do the remodeling before Painter is sworn into office on Jan. 1 and the construction program is axed by

And the commissioners have expressed no quarrels with Painter, who as an elected official can do what he pleases.

'Mr. Painter runs the sheriff's department after Jan. 1," said Commissioner Durward Wright. "This work program has been acceptable and reasonably good for the county. We (commissioners) can't run the sheriff's office.

Though Painter said he was going to discontinue the construction program, he indicated he would continue with other inmate work projects, such as cleaning the litter out of bar ditches along county roads, washing county vehicles and performing laundry and other jail chores. The more trustworthy inmates and those not held for violent crimes are interviewed for work programs.

'As a matter of fact," said Painter, "if we can expand (the work program) we are going to. I'm going to try to get something for long-term inmates to keep them occupied." He suggested correspondence courses or similar character- or mind-building study courses which would tend to rehabilitate inmates.

"If I can help the county somehow, I'd like to do that," Painter

Painter, a former patrol lieutenant under the sheriff, defeated Smith in the May Republican Party primary and successfully warded off Smith's bid for re-election in a writein campaign in the November general election.

Decker was one of Smith's more loyal and aggressive campaigners. Of his work program, Smith said his intent wasn't "just to work them

I want to work them for the bottom-line gain for the county...to benefit the citizens," Smith said. Whether it's a rehabilitation tool, I don't know

In the past two years, Smith noted that Decker and inmate assistants have carried out several major remodeling projects.

We simply did not have the money to build a law library" and other areas where space was critical,

MMH's tours for children ease fears of hospital

By RON GILMORE Staff Writer

Most adults know what to expect when staying in a hospital. But for a child, the new world of chrome, plastic tubing and antiseptic smells can be a frightening ordeal.

Many hospitals are now offering tours for children who will be undergoing surgery. Taking the child through every step of the hospital-stay often alleviates much of the anxiety the child may be feeling.

"The goal is to ease the fears of hospitals and surgery," said Ethel Barnes, a spokeswoman for Midland Memorial Hospital. "We do this by demonstrating procedures and familiarizing the child with hospital rou-

Midland Memorial Hospital offers a tour for the children which takes them from the admitting office through different stages of the hos-

We have found that after the tour the experience is less frightening and that the child eats and sleeps better and recovers faster," said Ms. Barnes.

We try to be-honest with them, she said. "We don't tell them that bad experience at a hospital as well, . they are going to a birthday party. If they are going to get a shot, we tell them it will hurt, but not too much."

The children are generally filled with questions. Will it hurt?' and 'Will I go home?' are common questions," shesaid. "But the one aspect of the hospital stay that is most terrifying is the separation from the parent.

Some of the kids aren't in school

"The blood test is scary for them," said Ms. Barnes. "The children wonder whether all of their blood is being drained out. If they have a leg cast, they are scared that their leg will no longer be there when it is removed. A child undergoing a tonsillectomy has fears of his or her throat being slit," she said.

The MMH tour starts out at the admitting office where the kids are given an I.D. bracelet and told why they must keep it on. A walk through the laboratory explains how blood is drawn and how urine specimans are taken, as well as the lab tray with its tubes.

Before going into the surgical area, the children don masks, caps ard plastic shoe covers to show the need to be sterile. The tour guide explains why the surgeon and nurse must "scrub up," about what meditions work, and introduces the children to the nurses and staff who work in the area.

The children are taken to the recovery room next and shown where he or she will "wake up" following surgery, and is introduced to the staff there.

The pediatric floor is the last stop on the tour. Once there, the guide explains how the children will get back to their hospital room from the recovery room, says what kind of pain they can expect, shows how their meals will come on a tray and explains about the medications. The wheelchair that they will probably ride to the front door is shown last.

Local pediatrician teaching CPR techniques for children

Knowing how to how provide mouth to mouth rescucitation or chest massage to an adult won't do much good if the victim is a small child or infant, said a local doctor who recently began sponsoring cardio-pulmonary courses for infants.

That 'street people' style seems refreshing

When I first noticed the gentleman approaching me, hands waving and a broad smile on his face, my gut reaction was negative. "Good Lord," I thought. "What's he want?" I would have labeled him a Moonie, except he was black and wasn't carrying a bunch of flowers. That's one of the good things about blacks. They are dependable. They vote Democrat. They generally don't become Moonies and only on rare occasions do they stand on street corners making a nuisance of themselves with a bunch of flowers. But for some reason, this particuperson was unique. He kept racing toward me. He was wearing a sports coat and tie and walked with a noticeable limp. He had a slightlyworn briefcase. And that smile. He insisted on flashing it at me, a gesture that historically has made me very nervous. Show me a person who smiles all the time, and I'll show you a person who is up to no good.

Then it happened. Standing before me (I could no longer ignore his existence), he blurted out, "Good afternoon, sir. Isn't it a beautiful

'Yeah, right," I thought, mindlessly reaching for my spare change. 'Now, get on with your spiel.' But he didn't. He just grinned and said, "If I don't get a chance to see you again, have a Merry Christmas." Then he left. I was stunned. People aren't supposed to do that. They've got to have an ulterior motive, a con, if you will, for doing or even saying anything nice.

But this one seemed different. I can't be sure, of course, but I got the distinct impression he was legitimate. He didn't ask for anything in return and, indeed, it appeared he would have been offended had it been offered

He certainly didn't wait around in anticipation. He just moved along, searching for others to whom he could wish a Merry Christmas. And.

he found them, each time holding thought of nim. It was as though he had a mission to pursue and nothing was going to get in his way.

That's important in the art of being a street person. There can be no concern for something as petty as what others might think. Another point: Street people should be strange-looking, but in a charming sort of way. It is a fine line. In simple terms, they should intrigue others, without being inti-

This can be difficult but when done properly street people can add a whole new dimension to your community, giving it a cosmopolitan flavor. It also helps if they can play a musical instrument, though that talent can hardly be considered mandatory. Still, it is an added featurethat can't be overlooked.

The banjo, for example, is a good choice. And so is the harmonica. Ahh, music and street corners, what could be better? Mr. Bojangles would be proud.

So street people of America, both young and old, drop by for a visit and bring along your stories. We'd like to hear from you.

Nicholas Masten still doesn't like hospitals.

But after taking a tour of Midland Memorial Hospital prior to a hernia surgery, "he felt better about going in," said the 5-year old's mother, Susie Masten.

Nicholas is one many children who take pre-surgery tours at Midland Memorial Hospital to help reduce the fear of a hospital stay. The institution sees about 300 children a month in their pediatric area.

Although Nicholas remains wary of hospitals ("I'm suspicious of blood tests," he said), his parents saw his mood change drastically after the tour.

Before, he was really scared." said Mrs. Masten. "But the night about the tours

People of our community who make a difference.

Without top-quality leadership and volunteer workers, Midland never could have attained the enviable position it now holds as one of the state's major oil, business and agricultural centers," explains

W.H. (Bill) Collyns, former editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Mr. Collyns, a native of West Texas, has served as a strong leader and untiring volunteer since he made Midland his home in 1935. Committed to the business development of this dusty prairie town of 5,000, Mr. Collyns served as manager of the Midland Chamber of Commerce from 1936 to 1946, with the exception of a two year leave-of-absence (1944-45) for overseas service in the U.S. Army.

In 1946, Mr. Collyns accepted the repsonsibility of editor of the community's newspaper, The Midland Reporter-Telegram. As editor he got to see and be closely associated with the inner workings of the growing city. Mr. Collyns explains that striving to give full coverage to local activities was like "writing a day by day history" of the area. When he retired from his position with the paper in January of 1980

he was named editor emeritus. Mr. Collyns' awareness of community activity qualified him to serve The First National Bank of Midland as advisor on community and regional affairs from 1981 to 1983. Though this Midlander's career has had a great impact on the community, his service is not limited to his vocation. He is past president of a multitude of organizations including Midland Chamber of Commerce. West Texas Chamber of Commerce, and Texas Chamber of Commerce, as well as Midland Downtown Lions Club, Junior Achievement of Midland, Chamber of Commerce Managers Association of

West Texas, West Texas Press Association, Texas Associated Press Managing Editors, and Texas Editorial Association

In addition, he is an honorary member of the Midland Rotary Club and has served as a Jaycee International Senator. Moreover, the Jaycees recognized him as Midland's "Outstanding Young Man of 1943."

Over half a century of service for Midland has not slowed this gentleman down. Currently, he is secretary of both the Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc., and the Midland Industrial Development Corporation. He is serving as a member of the Midland Centennial/Sesquicentennial Commission, as president of the West Texas Chamber Foundation, and as vice chairman of the Board of Executors of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame. He is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers Association. At the First Presbyterian Church of Midland Mr. Collyns is an elder emeritus and trustee. Mr. Collyns serves on the board of directors of a number of organizations including Community and Senior Services, Midland Presbyterian Homes, Inc., Crime Stoppers, Clean Midland and Texas Good Roads/Transporation Association. Unrelenting commitment, deep insight, and action are why Mr. Bill Collyns makes a difference in Midland.

The difference is performance.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Final exams concluding

EDUCATION

All the classes are over and only final exams remain for students this week. By Thursday evening, the last of those will be given. Then students begin drifting around, looking at their grades. Instructors normally post them on some of the outside glass doors and windows, with the grades listed by Social Security number to assure anonymity.

Early counseling and issuance of permits continues all this week in the Office of Student Services for students planning to take credit courses during the spring semester. Hours are 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday.

All this pre-registration then will resume on Jan. 2 through Jan. 7 in preparation for official registration dates on Jan. 9-10. Classes begin Jan.

BUY CAKE NOT FROSTING

Would it make sense to marry a lady because you like the shape of her nose -- but everything else about her was completely unsuitable? If you did, chances are you would end up with a pretty nose and Yet, this is one of the common mistakes that a househunter can make. All too often, a family will fall in love with an eyecatching feature, such as a rock garden, a chandelier, a built-in radar oven or a fancy fireplace and end up buying the wrong house. This mistake happens frequently and in all price ranges. You have to resist the temptation of paying too much attention to a frill and forgetting the importance of the overall house, location and price.

Yielding to superficial attractions like these can result in your family winding up with a thoroughly unsuitable house. Bear in mind that these same, alluring features can usually be added to another house at a relatively small cost, considering the amount of the overall purchase. Buy the house -- not the frosting.

Fingerprinting a 'Touch of Love'

By JULIE HILLRICHS Staff Writer

Fewer people than expected turned out for the occasion. But representatives of Midland Police Department and the Midland City Council Parent-Teacher Association say they're no less enthusiastic about their commitment to the "Touch of Love."

The event was the sixth scheduled since the inception of the child fingerprint program in September of 1983.

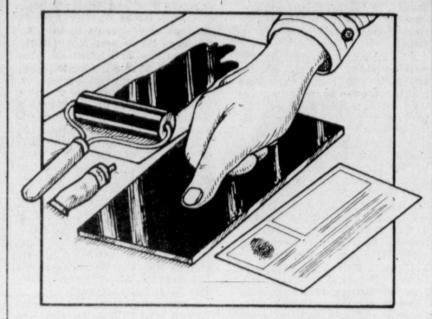

Sponsored by the Midland Police Department and the Midland City Council PTA, the program is designed to enable participating parents to aid law. enforcement officials in attempts to locate and identify their lost child through fingerprint rec-

Due to poor weather conditions, the child fingerprint program attracted fewer Midland parents and children than were expected Saturday at Dellwood Mall Shopping Center, Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue.

But the resulting low turnout doesn't mean the police depart.' ment is any less enthusiastic about the "Touch of Love" program, according to Sgt. Lalo Camarillo of the department's Crime Prevention Unit.

You take a child who is kid napped at 1 or 2 years old and kept by someone else for two or three years. It's very hard to identify these kids because their features change," he said.

We can tell a great deal if we have a record of their fingerprints because fingerprints hange very little. Fortunately, Midland has never had a case of an abduction. But then again, we can't take any chances. Although the police Identification Division, Crime Prevention Unit and the PTA volunteered their time, anyone interested in helping at the next session may contact the crime prevention unit at the police department. We plan to have two or three more sessions before the end of the school year," he said. "The exact dates will vary though, depending on the availability of officers and location.

Christmas decoration contest entries urged

From Staff Reports

Midland Parks and Recreation Department is urging Midland residents to enter the Christmas decorating contest.

Homes will be judged on the basis of originality, creativity and holiday spirit. Decorations can cover any part of the front yard or home. Deadline for entries is Wednesday at 4 p.m. Judging will take place at 6

Trophies and ribbons for first through third places will be awarded to the winners.

To enter, call the Parks and Recreation Department at 683-4281, extension 316, or go by the office at 300 Baldwin St.

In addition, the department is reminding citizens who want to do last minute Christmas shopping without youngsters tagging along can leave their children at the department from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Dec. 21 and 22. During this second Mother's Shopping Spree, the department will provide games, crafts, snacks and even a visit from Santa Claus. Children need to bring a sack lunch.

The shopping spree is limited to the first 30 children ages 3 through 12. Fee is $5 per child per day.

City Council to complete paperwork, prepare for holiday season

In its final meeting of the year, the Midland City Council will be wrapping up loose ends before adjourning for the holidays. The meeting will start at 10 a.m. Tuesday at City Hall Council Chambers.

The council will complete the paperwork and details to sell short-term bonds for financing construction of a new Air Park and additions at Midland Regional Airport. The bonds must be sold by the end of the year.

Council will consider authorizing the Aviation Department to proceed with advertising for bids to construct a utilities plant at Midland Regional Airport.

Public Works Department will ask the council to install stop signs at Crestgate and Crestway, discuss a drainage problem in Silkwood Addition, present a study of school zones, discuss widening and rebuilding Garfield Street and consider a waiver of a paving requirement on Houston, Tyler and Madison streets.

Improvements to McMillen Well Field and expansion of Paul Davis Well Field will be outlined. And the council will discuss issuing certificates of obligation to purchase a building for city offices

Council will consider a resolution that would authorize the settlement in a lawsuit filed by the League of United Latin American Citizens against the city. That suit was settled out of court last week.

The council also will consider

The council also will consider approving lease/purchase financing specifications and advertising for bids to secure a financial source for Computer Aided Dispatch at Midland Police Department. A change between the city and Burroughs Corporation regarding computer hardware for the Computer Aided Dispatch will be considered.

A lease of city-owned farm land, a grazing lease agreement on T-Bar Ranch and the damage schedule at T-Bar Ranch will be reviewed. At 11 a.m. a public hearing will be held on a request by Times Mirror Cable Television for an additional charge to the subscriber for copyright fees incurred for one channel.

At 1:55 p.m. the council will hold a public hearing on a request by West Texas Consultants for a zone change from PD, planned district, to an Amended Planned District on Saddle Club South north of Loop 250 and west of Lancashire Road.

A public hearing at 2 p.m. will consider a request by Paul Rochester for a specific use permit for the sale of beer and wine in a restaurant on the southeast corner of Midland Drive and Loop 250.

A public hearing at 2:05 p.m.

will consider the request of Pete Flores for a specific use permit for the sale of alcoholic beverages in a restaurant at the intersection of Midland Drive and Illinois Avenue.

At 2:10 p.m. a public hearing will consider a request, on appeal, by Thomas Flenniken for a zone change form IF-I, single family, to NS, neighborhood service district at the northeast corner of Baird and New Jersey streets.

At 2:30 p.m. a public hearing will consider the request, on appeal, by Jim Hughes for a zone change from PD, planned district, to Amended Planned District on the north side of Tealwood Place.

A 2:45 p.m. public hearing will consider the request by Jeff Barber for a zone change from LR-2, local retail, to PD, planned district, on the southeast corner of Sinclair Avenue and Loop 250.

At 3:15 p.m. a public hearing will be held on the request, on appeal, by Adam Ribera and others for a zone change from 1F-2, single family, MF-2, multiple family, LR-1, local retail, and PD, planned district, to MH, mobile home district on portions of Gardendale and East Midland additions, along Cuthbert, between Tyler and Carver Streets and along Cherry, Garden, Walnut and Mulberry Lanes between Lamesa Road and Adams Street.

Other items on the agenda include amendments to the City Code to revise fees for permits, applications and other services rendered by the Inspection Division, an amendment to allow No. 3 wood shingles and shakes, and a recommendation by the Planning and Zoning Commission regarding the annexation request of SBC Corporation and acceptance of public service plans for a tract of land at the southwest corner of Loop 250 and Highway 191.

Commissioners' Court

The Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday is to set the election date on the $9.9 million jail finance proposal.

Commissioners last week were forced into calling an election after the Tom Mitchell-led movement circulated petitions asking that the voters — and not the commissioners — decide whether or not $9.9 million in certificates of obligation should be issued to of obligation should be issued to finance jail. State law allows the electorate to intervene in such financing.

Almost two years ago, an $11.69 million bond election to finance renovation of the courthouse and a courthouse addition, including a jail, failed.

In other business, the commissioners in the 9 a.m. meeting are to:

— Consider a report on Monahans Draw by attorney Ted Kerr.

— Discuss remodeling of the Commissioners' Courtroom.

— Consider a request by 238th

Burglaries, thefts probed

From Staff Reports

A rash of thefts including five burglaries and two stolen automobiles were reported to the Midland Police Department. Three of the burglaries involved businesses and the other two were at private residences, said police reports.

Vernon Warner, manager of Apache Glass and Mirror Co. at 701-C S. Jefferson St. reported a stolen GMC pickup truck and extensive damage to three garage doors at the business. Police reports indicate that sometime between 6 p.m. and 10:49 a.m. someone had used an unknown type of vehicle to smash open an overhead garage door, gaining Glenn Rhodes, 516 N. Loop Drive, overhead garage door, gaining access to the garage where the pickup was stored.

The thief then drove the pickup through the garage doors, severely damaging one and partially damaging two more. One door was completely ripped from the wall. The truck and garage door damage was estimated at $7,996.

A man asleep in his bed failed to awaken when a burgler broke into his house and stole a pair of pants next to the bed containing a wallet with a check and cash and a Sony color television. The loss was estimated at $3,665.

The victim, Tom Gill, 1712 E. Pine, reported the theft at 7:30 a.m. Friday. Police reports stated the burgler gained entry to the nouse by using a pair of pliers to strip the lock on the backdoor and twist the door knob. Muddy tracks were found throughout the house, the back yard and down the alley.

'Planning for Profit' session slated

To help livestock ranchers and cotton producers make plans for a profitable year in 1985, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service has scheduled a conference, "Planning For Profit, 1985" on Jan. 10, 1985. This conference will be held at the Holidome, 4300 W. Highway 80 in Midland. Registration will start at 8 a.m. and the conference will adjourn at 3:30 p.m.

Maximizing profits in cattle, sheep and goat ranching operation in Far West Texas will be the central theme for ranchers, according to Dr. Gary Sides, Extension livestock spe-

Conference speakers will discuss. such topics as marketing strategies for sheep, goats and cattle; reproduction and nutritional management; rangeland improvements; wildlife management; financing of livestock operations; and economic analysis of the total ranching operation. Each speaker will attempt to identify the management factors most critical to profitable ranching operations of far West Texas. Emphasis will be placed on effi-labor invested rather than maximizing production.

With profit margins on cotton farming getting slimmer, the management skills of growers needs to improve each year. Information will be presented during the conference to assist growers with the hard decision making in the months ahead and to provide some solutions for alternatives, according to Charles Stichler, Extension agronomist.

Topics to be discussed will be the 1985 Farm Bill, Cotton Outlook, Production Economics, Agricultural Financing, Cotton Marketing (Option Markets & Alternatives), Irrigation and Management, Insect Pest Management and Crop Production. Speakers will include representatives of Cotton Incorporated from North Carolina and personnel with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. The program is arranged with a question and answer period at the end of each presentation for grower participation. This conference should be beneficial to ranchers and farmers in Midland County and I certainly encourage everyone to make plans now to ciency and return on money and attend. Persons with questions or

WASHINGTON (AP) - Half a mil- million tons of wheat and corn each lion metric tons of U.S. corn, initially destined for the Soviet Union, have been switched this week by United States must be consulted. private exporters to other buyers, says the Agriculture Department.

A routine sales announcement said Wednesday that 250,000 metric tons of corn - nearly 10 million bushels - had been changed from the Soviet Union to "unknown desti-

Sales are reported to USDA by private trading companies, whose identities are kept confidential, along with prices and other details.

The grain initially had been reported as sold to the Soviets for delivery during the 1984-85 year that began on Oct. 1, the second year of a long-term agreement which requires the Soviet Union to buy a minimum quantity of U.S. wheat and corn

Last month, Soviet representatives met here to discuss the grain supply agreement, a routine "consultation" specified by the pact.

At that time, USDA officials later confirmed, the Soviets raised questions about the quality of some of the American grain, including complaints of insect infestation. Efforts are being made to work out the problem, they said. Wallace A. Lindell, spokesman for the department's Foreign Agricultural Service, noted that the Soviets had complained about the quality of some U.S. grain. However, Lindell said he did not know whether those complaints were connected to the juggling in grain

Counting adjustments for the recent shift of corn orders, the Soviets have bought about 11.1 million tons of grain for delivery in 1984-85, including 3.33 million tons of wheat and 7.76 million tons of or 36.7 bushels of wheat. In 1983-84, the first year of the current agreement, the Soviet Union took 14.1 million tons, including about 7.6 million tons of wheat and 6.48 million tons of corn. Also,

No financial relief in sight for hurting U.S. farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Purdue University economist says he sees "no strong possibility for relief" in 1985 from the financial crunch that as hurt many American farmer

"Agricultural exports could be helped by a decline in the value of the dollar in 1985 or 1986, or by tight supplies elsewhere in the world," said William D. Dobson, head of Purdue's department of agricultural economics.

"However, I fail to see any devel-opments unfolding in 1985 that ould cause a large decline in real interest rates. Hence, the debate on next year's farm bill is likely to ccur against the backdrop of financial distress in parts of the farm

Dobson's remarks were in a paper delivered today at the Agriculture Department's 61st annual outlook conference, a three-day forum in which experts are invited to take a ook at what lies ahead for U.S. agri-

In looking at the "macroeconoic" or big-picture setting for next ear's debate on new farm legislaon, Dobson said there appears to be wo basic directions in which Con-

ss could go. "If the Congress and the adminisration reach an agreement in the irst several months of 1985 on tax and revenue measures which would cut prospective federal deficits below, say, $100 billion per year, then a move toward a marketoriented 1985 farm program might occur," he said.

The administration has indicated strong support for a "market-oriented" 1985 farm bill that would lessen farmers' dependence on fed-eral price support benefits and cash

"I doubt whether such a scenario can materialize in 1985," Dobson said. "Hence, I expect farm legislation to be crafted to offset part of the effects of macroeconomic developments and deal with symtoms of problems created by the deficits." Some proposals that Dobson said could emerge in the 1985 farm bill debate include: -Additional credit subsidies and loan deferrals to help hard-pressed farmers and agricultural bankers.

Additional export subsidies to help offset the effects of the strong U.S. dollar, which make it more expensive for foreign customers to buy American commodities.

-Higher target prices and price support loan rates, accompanied by traditional supply controls such as acreage set-asides and paid land

Outlook for soybeans softening

By DON KENDALL AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — Hardly a jiggle occurs in the world export situation without some effect being passed on to American farmers. And that usually translates into prices.

The soybean situation is a case in point. Some experts had felt for some time that the Agriculture Department's projections for exports in 1984-85 were a bit toooptimistic and that the market simply was not responding the way it should. A similar complaint was heard about USDA's corn project-

Last week, the department said in new supply-and-demand report that previous projections were somewhat out of line and that soybean exports wouldn't be as large as previously indicated.

Consequently, there will be more soybeans left over at the end of the 1984-85 marketing year than had been projected earlier. As a result, the outlook for soybean prices at the farm gate was softened. Instead of a marketing year average in the range of $6 to $7.20 per bushel, the new projection called or a $6 to $7 range.

The corn price for the 1984-85 marketing year also was trimmed to a range of $2.60 to $2.85 per bushel from indications of $2.65 to $2.95 a month earlier.

Farm exports overall are still at relatively depressed levels. The volumes and values are still huge and vastly important to American farmers, but nothing like the growth years of the 1970s.

Some encouraging developments have occurred, however, and perhaps even a few surprises

Actual volume of commodity shipments is expected to increase this year to 149.5 million metric tons from 143.6 million tons in 1983-83. The tonnage peaked in 1979-80 at 163.9 million tons before starting a four-year slide.

Lower prices for some commodities, notably grains and oilseeds, account for most of the expected drop in export value this year. Some comments from the report:

-Wheat and flour exports are forecast to decline to 40.5 million tons and $6.1 billion, down 2 million tons and more than $600 million, respectively. Strong competition, especially from record production in the European Community, is a big

Rice exports are indicated at 2 million tons, down from last year's 2.3 million tons. Overseas sales continue to be hurt by weak demand, large world stocks and the continued strong U.S. dollar.

Diners decide price at Juliano's

By TARA BRADLEY-STECK Associated Press Writer

WARRENDALE, Pa. (AP) — You can pay any price you want, at Juliano's restaurant.

And it's not a gimmick, but an act of faith, says Jerry Juliano, owner of La Casa de Pasta Italian restaurant, where customers decide what a meal is worth on the honor system.

"I don't have to advertise specials or two-for-one dinners," Juliano says. "You come in and make your own special. If you want a dollar off, you get a dollar off. If you don't like it, you don't have to pay.

The small family-run eatery about 25 miles north of Pittsburgh has been open for about 14 months, featuring heaping platters of spaghetti, manicotti and chicken parmigiana. But Juliano just took the prices off the menu two weeks ago.

Until then, "no matter what I did, it wouldn't work," he said of his past year in the restaurant business. "I would be in a stalemate. I wanted the Lord in this, but I wasn't putting Him first. So I said, 'It's yours. If you want it to go, it's yours. So far, he said, he isn't "losing a whether it's high or low. Juliano, 42, offers a regular menu with suggested prices to those customers who are uncomfortable with the price-less system.

I'd rather not show them that menu because they'll think that's what I really want," he said. "I had a lady who felt uncomfortable about not having prices. She looked at the regular menu and overpaid anyway. She was more worried about cheating me than about cheating herself."

Two recent customers, Don Hoover and his wife, Kate, drove 20 miles to try the restaurant, which is located on an isolated section of

"I just couldn't believe there was a place like this in the whole country that there was anybody who trusted in the Lord that much," said Hoover. "That first sentence at the top of the menu means more than

Catalogue offers archaic gift ideas

By JOHN J. MULLINS Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Running out of holiday gift ideas? Then why not step back into the 19th century for a Gatling gun, perhaps, or a Victorian corset, or a clawfoot bathtub?

History buff Alan Wellikoff has made it possible by publishing a catalog of hundreds of centuryold items - some reproductions, some replicas and some still being made as they were in the past.

"What I had in mind, ideally, was that someone would have the impression they were coming across an old catalog and when they opened it, suddenly discover, as in a dream, they could still order the things," said Wellikoff, of Springfield, Mass.

The products from all over the country are listed, described and often pictured in his "The American Historical Supply Catalogue, published in November by Schocken Books of New York.

From the House of Thoreau in Concord, Mass., shoppers can buy blueprints and wood frames for replicas of the cabin Henry David Thoreau built on Walden Pond.

The cabin is said to have cost Thoreau $28.12 when he built it in 1845. Construction cost today is estimated at $4,000.

The Gatling gun, a replica of the 1862 model, is said to fire 200 rounds of .50-caliber ammunition a minute and costs $10,000. The corset, white with black lacing and 37 bones, costs $59.95 plus shipping. It is listed by Custom Blacksmithing and Manufacturing of Waterloo, Iowa.

Clawfoot bathtubs, salvaged and restored, can be bought from Sunrise Specialty in Berkeley, Calif. Solid oak commode seats are at DeWeese Woodworking Co. in Philadelphia, Miss. Wellikoff, who was co-founder and president of a windmill manufacturing company in Buffalo, N.Y, says there is no "direct link" between his catalog and his five years of making windmills, but both ventures do illustrate the value of past technologies.

The germ of the idea came from junk mail received at the windmill firm. One day Wellikoff got a catalog from a man in Pennsylvania who made and sold copies of Conestoga wagons

That sort of plugged into romantic notions I had," said Wellikoff, who majored in American history at George Washington University.

He left the windmill company, talked to an agent and began research in specialty magazines. When he thought of an old item, he'd look in the Thomas Register of companies in the United States and their products to see what was available.

If he came across a product that especially caught his fancy, he'd look more closely into the lore around it.

He learned that McGuffey of "McGuffey's Eclectic Readers," those 19th century schoolbooks, "carried a red leather bullwhip to keep boys at bay. He used to be pelted with mud or snow, depending on the season. Readers discover that Bell's Seasoning for turkey stuffing was created by an engineer, and that cheese can be bought in Plymouth, Vt., from John Coolidge, son of President Calvin "Silent

Archaeologists dig for ancient Paris in courtyards of Louvre

By MARILYN AUGUST Associated Press Writer

PARIS — Silver hairpins that once swept up royal curls. Bronze crowns encrusted with golden fleurs de lys. Centuries-old apple seeds, insect wings and clay spoons.

The secrets of old Paris, long buried beneath tons of earth, are being recovered from two courtyards of the Louvre museum where archaeologists are undertaking the city's largest-ever excavations.

The Louvre has long been regarded as the world's leading museum. But it was also a sumptuous palace that housed French kings until the mid 1600s, when Louis XIV moved his court and the royal family to Versailles.

A century later, the Louvre and its surrounding areas had become part of downtown Paris, a bustling center of commerce and trade for France's burgeoning middle class.

Precious findings from the digs illustrate all this, and more. Experts say they provide a rare, inside look at the everyday lives of both royalty and commoners from the middle ages to the late 19th century.

Both courtyards are familiar to Louvre visitors, though they are currently off limits for security reasons. The Cour Carre, where archaeologists are uncovering the foundations Auguste in 1200, is the small, interior courtyard visible from musuem gal-

We can trace the evolution of Paris, from a rural area where animals grazed and farmers worked the land to a real city complete with hos-pitals and brothels," said Pierre-Jean Trombetta, assistant director of the excavation at the Cour Napoleon. We see how the people lived, what they ate and wore, and how they made their living over a six hun-dred-year period."

"This is a unique opportunity for urban archaeologists. Usually findings of this sort have long been buried under concrete," he added.

In the neighboring Cour Carre, another team is at work laving bore.

another team is at work laying bare the Louvre's origins as a military stronghold complete with dungeons, towers and turrets which Philippe Auguste constructed outside city limits to protect it from invaders.

Headed by Michel Fleury, a vet-eran archaeologist best-known for his work on the crypts of Notre Dame and Saint-Denis churches, workers have unearthed earrings, hairpins, the remains of jousting equipment dating from the 15th century and a priceless silver buckle probably from a sword scabbard, in near-perfect condition.

Digging began in both courtyards last summer, after President Franof the fortress built by Philippe cois Mitterrand gave the government's green light to plans to renovate the Louvre Museum.

Besides approving a controversial project by Chinese-American archirelics — from Turkish pipes to Venetian glass wine decanters — is the Mitterrand allocated nearly 50 mil-

Archaeologists have long been eager to excavate the Cour Napoleon, once a crowded, working class neighborhood that grew up outside the palace walls after the Sun King left Paris for Versailles in 1682. Artists and artisans occupied the palatial apartments and entertainers moved into taverns and shanties built up along the walls.

Among the most unexpected treasures taken from the Cour Napoleon is a rare collection of 200 silver coins found hidden in what Trombetta thinks was a public latrine. The coins are in generally excellent condition. Each one bears one of the three official portraits of Louis XV stamped on coins during his 18th

Romance used to sell catalogue items for business

By ANN OWENS GILLIAND

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)— "As I leaned toward the flickering candle, the black jet beads sparkled and the net veiling of my hat dipped over one eye. I caught Phillipe's look of total approval

"Thank goodness," I thought, "that women are wearing hats again!" Ashley D. Adams said.
The veiled hat is $80. The romance

Harlequin romances meets mailorder business — that's the latest venture of three Fort Worth entrepreneurs who envisoned a new way to market specialty items in a cata-

Exotic locales and sales pitches, romances and refunds, adventures and advertisements - that's the dichotomous world of Ashley D. Adams, a character created by Mary Elizbeth Ashley to appear, not between the sheets of a Gothic romance, but in the pages of a cata-

The catalog company, Nostalgia Shoppe Inc., is a division of Haltom International. Its idea was generated by Haltom's chief executive officer Ron Adams, businessman Bob Driscoll and the catalog's president, Mary Elizabeth Ashley.

The Woman's News wrote that 'Ashley's running commentary is high entertaining and only a little less camp than a Barbara Cartland

Ashley prefers sleeping on satin sheets — "ordinary sheets are so declasse," she says — deplores prac-tical things that look practical, and keeps her secret rendezvous key hidden in an elliptical opium box (priced at $70) that she discovered on a journey to India.

As the masked Ashley travels via her magic time machine through the pages of the catalog, her descriptive commentary is as imaginative as her romantic adventures.

"Under the scorching Indian sun, I imagine myself and Clark riding this horse-drawn carriage, with Gunga Din at the reins — frightfully unaware what awaits us," she says, referring to a $45 brass copy of an antique Indian toy horse and car-

Next to a selection of earrings, Ashley declares: "Lobe and behold,' I joked to William as he nibbled on my ear. To this day I'll never know if it was me or my geometric earrings that inspired his attentions.'

A $25 Victorian-style whistle inspires Ashley to say, "It was a dark grey night and Byron was late. Clutching this silverplated Victorian whistle, engraved with scrolls and flowers, I felt safe. Not only could I summon for help, but I was comforted knowing that inside this authentic replica of the 1893 original was a secret compartment containing a lock of Byron's hair. My friend Karensa uses her whistle as a key chain and for discreetly storing her smelling salts and cash

In another picture, wearing a $500 sequined gown, a flirtatious Ashley notes, "Some dresses are made for memorable nights. This one can cre-

And, as Ashley would expect, the first catalog has been a smashing success, Mary Elizabeth Ashley said, adding,"It has been way over projections.

We did followup calls on more than 400 mail-order customers," she said. "They said the story is so cute they saved it. People usually look at catalogs and then throw them away. Instead of being disposable, people were captured by the cover, read the story and were entertained by it. And that was our goal.'

Ashley also captured the attention of US magazine and CBS television, which plans to run a spot of the catalog and its character shortly before

What Mary Elizabeth Ashley stresses is that it is a "Texas" catalog with at least half of the items offered by Texas artisans, including 22 from the Fort Worth-Dallas area.

"I have always thought that Fort Worth - and Texas in general was rich, rich shopping ground," she said. "A lot of people skip hometown. They think New York's the place to go shopping, but it's right Silk flowers manufactured by an Arlington woman tempt Ashley to say; "Sipping mint juleps one spring afternoon, I pointed out the magno-lia tree to Montgomery, saddened that my favorite flower comes and goes so quickly. The next afternoon, what did I find but three extraordinary, handmade silk matgnolias lying on my swing!"

Although not everything in the catalog is Texas-born - including a $22,900 authentic replica of a 1929 Mercedes SSK (what else would Ashley use to whisk from party to party?) - Mary Elizabeth Asley wanted to ensure that it has a definite Texas taste, from a lunch box full of Gold Medal Pralines, to a red Christmas stocking filled with ashes and switches for bad little children, to haute couture designs, all created by Fort Worthians.

The Ashley D. Adams spring catalog is already in the works, as is a collection of letters and experiences that Mary Elizabeth Ashley plans to include in a future book: "How I Began in Mail Order and Got a Marriage Proposal.

"This is a very public business," she said, adding that the marriage proposal was real. It came from a mountain recluse who had seen her picture in the catalog and called long-distance from a phone booth to offer his hand in marriage

So far, she has heard from the editor of Forbes magazine, who suggested that a leather portfolio would be marketed better with his magazine peeking out of the case rather than another's. "Frederick and I share thoughts, jokes and secrets but not our supple leather portfolios!" Ashley says.

me of Mary Elizabeth Ashley's favorite stories come from people who send long letters along with their varicose veins. "People reveal so much by mail," she said. "They're just wonderful." Before joining Nostalgia Inc. Mary Elizabeth Ashley was a marketing

DeVries:Blood clot caused Schroeder's stroke

By BILL BERGSTROM
Associated Press Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The stroke suffered by artificial heart recipient William J. Schroeder was caused by a blood clot that probably formed in or around the plastic pump and moved to his head, his surgeon said Saturday.

Schroeder, 52, who is entering his fourth week of life with the artificial heart, was frustrated with the pace of his recovery from Thursday's stroke, a process that's "like being on a roller coaster," said Dr. William C. DeVries, who implanted the device in Schroeder's chest.

"I would say there's probably about a 95 percent chance that it (the clot) came from the device, the valves, or his natural atrium (heart chamber)," although test results have not determined the cause, DeVries said at a news conference at Humana Hospital Audubon.

He also said the clot could have formed in surrounding tissues and migrated to a blood vessel in his head. DeVries said.

But the doctor said he was "still optimistic" about Schroeder's chances with the artificial heart.

"I think he can do well. I think he can get out of here and get out of the hospital and live a good life," DeVries said.

Schroeder was "doing very, very well" for a stroke victim, but "he is still in bed, he's bedridden, if you wanted to get him up in a chair you would have to lift him," he said.

"All in all he appears like a normal patient who had a stroke," he said.

Despite the liklihood that the stroke was caused by a clot "from chest.

the device, the valves, or his natural atrium (heart chamber)," there are other possibilities, DeVries said.

For example, Schroeder is diabetic, he said, and "there is anywhere from a 5 to 15 percent chance that someone with diabetes will have a stroke without an artificial heart. The diabetes may be the cause of this and maybe it's not even the artificial heart that's causing the problem."

As a stroke victim, Schroeder can expect inconsistent progress, though he is "slowly, slowly going uphill," DeVries said. "Recovery on many of these patients is like being on a roller coaster, you have some times that are very good and some times that are very had"

that are very bad."

DeVries said it was "vividly explained" to Schroeder and his wife before the surgery that a stroke, like valve breakage or infection, "is a complication of the artificial heart."

At 8 a.m. Saturday, Schroeder could not be aroused enough to talk. But two hours later, when his wife Margaret and other relatives came to visit, Schroeder spoke with them and squeezed their hands, DeVries

By noon, Schroeder was sleeping again, but later he woke up and talked to his family physician.

"His voice was slurred, but you could understand it if he talked slow. He said 'How am I doing?"" DeVries said.

The stroke was Schroeder's first major setback since the night he received the plastic and metal heart, Nov. 25. Doctors were forced to perform emergency surgery that night to stop excessive bleeding in his DeVries said brain scans indicated "a very small deficiency. He is recovering function very rapidly and may be able, possibly, to be fully recovered" from the stroke.

He said it was normal for a stroke victim to be irritated about his condition. "He's frustrated with the fact that he can't get up and move around and do what he was doing," DeVries said.

While Schroeder might have been within a week to 15 days of leaving the hospital before Thursday, DeVries said the stroke will "add time to that." How much time could not be determined, he said.

Schroeder was unable to eat solid food Saturday and began receiving a protein formula through a tube, "essentially forcing him to eat well in hopes he will get better faster, his wounds will heal, he'll have more through "Devices aid."

strength," DeVries said.
Schroeder's condition remained serious but stable, Dr. Allan M. Lansing, director and chairman of the Humana Heart Institute, said at an earlier news conference.

Lansing said Schroeder would be fed more protein in hopes of reducing leg swelling that has not abated as expected since the operation. "All other functions being stable, we need to push on his nutrition," he said.

The retired Army civilian employee showed a marked recovery from the stroke, with his reflexes and vital signs "completely normal," Lansing said. "He moves both sides equally well on stimulation this morning.

"There is a slight weakness of the right side of the face, just a little difference between the movement in the two sides of the face."

Schroeder had been "weepy" Friday, and Lansing attributed that and the drowsiness partly to emotional and physical fatigue after the stroke

But he said "the fact that he is moving everything now will, I think, be an encouragement to him. So I don't think that whatever depression was there yesterday will last very long."

Lansing said the swelling, due to fluid accumulation, was present mostly in Schroeder's legs and back before the surgery, and persisted even though tests indicated that heart and kidney problems that could have caused it were no longer

"His cardiac output has been excellent, kidney function has been good," Lansing said. "So I do not think this is on the basis of cardiac or renal problems, I believe it is on the basis of nutrition."

Schroeder, of Jasper, Ind., also will be urged to be as active as possible both to stimulate his appetite and avoid worsening the swelling, Lansing said.

He said Schroeder "will still be able to eat and drink and talk and carry on."

The swelling was not making Schroeder uncomfortable, Lansing said, "but it's a bother to me that it's still present, because with everything else improved, it should have gone away."

He said it probably will be a week before an arteriogram can be done to examine Schroeder's blood vessels in search of the cause of the State to pay patient's heart-liver transplant

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — State officials have agreed to pay part of the cost of a heart-liver transplant for a 17-year-old Lake Worth teen-ager whose family doesn't have the money or the insurance to pay for the costly

According to a letter from the Texas Department of Human Resources, Medicaid funds will be available to pay for the liver transplant and 30 days of hospitalization for Mary Cheatham.

The girl's mother, JoAnn Cheatham, said she received the letter Wednesday, but waited until Friday to tell her daughter about the news so she could confirm the letter with authorities.

"We're a lot more hopeful, a lot more happy," Mrs. Cheatham said. "We are going to have Christmas Saturday, a little early since we might get to go any time. Mary will get some clothes, a few pieces of jewelry and hopefully a new heart and liver."

Mrs. Cheatham said she was hopeful that private donations would cover the cost of the heart transplant.

The entire procedure could cost $250,000, doctors say. Officials at a transplant program at the University of Pittsburgh are to notify the family next week of the amount of advance deposit necessary.

Mary Cheatham suffers from igible for familial hypercholesterolemia, a cials said.

and began suffering symptoms of impending heart failure this year, her mother said.

"The chest pains increased more and more," Mrs. Cheatham said. "There is shortness of breath. She can no longer walk long distances."

Mrs. Cheatham's husband is disabled from a stroke. She quit her job to care for her ailing family.

Although a special plea to the White House provided a guarantee that the federal government would pick up half the tab, state Medicaid officials had refused to pick up any of the bill, saying the procedure was considered experimental.

Dr. Hiliary Connor, deputy commissioner for the Texas Department of Human Resources, said the decision was changed after it was learned federal officials removed several types of conditions for children's liver transplants out of the experimental category.

"It's a tremendous ethical question and a very difficult decision to make," he said. "It's almost impossible when you are faced with one individual."

Heart transplants are still considered experimental — and ineligible for Medicaid funds, officials said.

COOKEVILLE, Tenn. (AP) -Harold Wilson had to burrow through 30 envelopes this year to get to a tiny Christmas card he received from James Hendrix.

The card, adorned with a red-and-white candy cane and the message "Season's Greetings," cost 10 cents and was first mailed with a 2-cent stamp 31 years ago.

"That little card was first mailed the year we were juniors in high school and absolutely the best of friends," Wilson said.

Wilson, who teaches at Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro, started the tradition by returning the card to Hendrix, with its original envelope inside a new one. Hendrix is an engineer at Redstone Arsenal at Huntsville, Ala.

The card's packaging has grown and insurance and postage now total nearly $5. It also includes notes about family graduations, weddings, births and jobs Now it contains the names of the children's spouses and the grand-children," Wilson said. "It started as a joke, but we continued because it is a remarkable record of our lives for the past 30 years."

"You know, I bet we haven't writen three letters in all that time, and probably we haven't seen one nother but maybe a half-dozen imes in 30 years. But that little card as kept us in touch," Wilson said.

Early morning fire kills seven children

BEASLEY, Texas (AP) - A blaze that eyewitnesses described as a "raging inferno" raced through a mobile home early Saturday, killing seven children and injuring their parents, one of whom failed at a last-ditch rescue

The seven children, five girls and two boys ranging in age from 3 to 8 years, were asleep when the fire broke out shortly before

4 a.m. Saturday, authorities said.
"The whole horizon was lit up with fire," said Jerry Brdecka, the manager of the trailer park.
"You could see completely through the trailer.

Sgt. Ken Lee of the Fort Bend County sheriff's office said 47year-old Daniel Montoya, father to four of the children, tried to run back into the burning mobile home, but was driven back by heat and flames.

The other three children who died belonged to Montoya's wife, Delia Martinez, 37.

Montoya, a carpet layer, was taken to the burn center at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston. Hospital spokeswoman Linda Westerlage said Saturday night that he was listed in good condition with second-degree burns over three percent of his body, primarily his left hand

Ms. Martinez ran for help and sustained only minor injuries in the fire, authorities said.

The mobile home, in a park three miles east of Beasley southwest of Houston, was fully involved when sheriff's deputies and fire department personnel arrived on the scene, Lee said.

The victims were identified as Jessica Ramirez, 3; Rachael Ramirez, 7; Elizabeth Ramirez, 8; John Montoya, 4; Esmerelda Montoya, 6; Mandy Montoya, 7; and Daniel Montoya Jr., 8.

Unbeaten Panthers gain state final berth

By BOB BRUNDAGE Sports Writer

ODESSA — "He's a heck of a player. I think you spell Dal with a capital 'W' for winner. It's no secret if we need the yards we're going to go to Dal," said Odessa Permian head coach John Wilkins Saturday after his Panthers qualified for their seventh state championship game by beating Highland Park 20-7 at Ratliff

"Dal," of course, is Permian full-back Dal Watson, 190 pounds of fullback who plays like he weighs 220. He scored all three of Mojo's touchdowns and, by himself, covered more yardage than the entire Highland Park backfield with 165 yards on 29 carries.

Watson has been instrumental in every game Permian has played in this 15-0 season. On third-and-one or third-and-long, few are surprised when he gets the call.

For good reason. Watson has carried the ball 272 times for 1,500 yards and 28 touchdowns this year. Watson has also impressed opposing coaches and players. Highland Park's Frank Bevers is no exception. 'He is a good football player, but I don't know if he was the difference between winning and losing the ball game. But, gosh he's a good player."

With a trip to Irving coming up on Saturday, where the Panthers will play Beaumont French - 22-12 winners over San Antonio Madison in the other semifinal game - at 12:45 p.m. in a televised game at Texas Stadium, Watson didn't mind the cold from the 39 degree temperature nor the soaked uniform from the hard rain before the game and steady drizzle throughout. His comfort was secondary to his and his team's performance in the game.

All we did was try to hit their eak spots and kept doing it all afternoon," said Watson. "Certain plays worked for us and we kept going to them.

THE GAME was a lot closer than the 20-7 final score would indicate. At halftime, the teams were tied 7-7 on the scoreboard and on each of the first two tie-breakers: 1-1 on penatrations and 9-9 on first downs. The Panthers held a six-yard advantage in the third tie-breaker: 134128 in

Not only did the score give the left in the game but put Highland

Park in a deep hole. The drive gave Permian a 2-1 lead on penetrations and a lead of seven in first downs. The Scots would have to score a touchdown and then go for the twopoint conversion because Permian Panthers a 147 lead with only 3:17 had the tie-breaker categories pretty Permian's defense took away Highland Park's final chance. Taking the ensuing kickoff to the Scot 26-yard line, Panther defensive lineman Jerry LeClair ran down quarterback John Stollenwerck on a pass play and sacked him for a 13-yard loss. An eight-yard completion and an incomplete pass put the Scots in a fourth-and-14 hole on Permian's 17.

With time rapidly running out, the Scots had no choice. They went for the first down only to see Stollenwerck's pass fall incomplete. Permian had the ball back on Highland Park's 17 and two plays later had a 20-7 lead. Clennon Williams carried for nine on the first play and Watson took it in from the eight on the next for the insurance TD. It was his third TD of the game.

Highland Park blocked the extra point but there was only 1:24 left, not even enough time to get one of the two touchdowns the Scots needed. Time expired with Highland Park at Permian's nine-yard line.

HIGHLAND PARK came out of the lockerroom at the start of the game like a team possessed, driving 70 yards in 15 plays to take a 7-0 lead. Stollenwerck capped the drive with a two-yard keeper into the end zone and Wayne Clements kicked the extra point. There was 5:42 left on

Saints nip Giants, 10-3

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) - ter for New York after a touchdown pass, Morten Andersen kicked a field goal and the New Orleans defense sacked Phil Simms seven times Saturday as the Saints defeated the playoff-hopeful New York Giants 10-3.

The game did not actually figure in New York's chances of gaining a playoff berth.

That is something the Giants, who went from 3-12-1 last season to 9-7 this year under Coach Bill Parcells, would like to see happen. The only way the Giants can earn a wild-card berth would be if Washington defeats St. Louis today and Miami beats Dallas Monday night.

Wilson, who became the Saints' starting quarterback last week, tossed a 2-yard touchdown pass to fullback Hokie Gajan on the team's first possession, capping 13-play, 72yard drive.

Andersen kicked a 37-yard field goal with 13:55 left in the game, and defensive backs Bobby Johnson and Frank Wattelet intercepted passes in the final 2:12 to kill the Giants' final

It was one of several penalties the Giants committed to slow their offense, and the Saints' defense did the rest, nailing Simms behind the line seven times for 51 yards in losses. Linebacker Whitney Paul and nose tackle Frank Warren each had two sacks.

Simms, who finished the season with 4,044 yards passing, became the eighth player in NFL history to break the 4,000-yard mark. Dan Marino of Miami and Neil Lomax of St. Louis also did it this year.

The victory gave the Saints a season ending record of 7-9.

Hoyas slaughter DePaul

By GENE SEYMOUR Copley News Service

LANDOVER, Md. - Now that the most viable question in college basketball ("Can anyone beat Georgetown this season?") has been answered ("No."), what's left? Saturday's blowout at the Capital Centre, won by top-ranked, 7-0 Georgetown 77-57 over talented No. 2 DePaul (6-1), indicated this year's collegiate struggle will not be for supremacy.

The most practical approach for Hoyas foes would be to treat those encounters like they would games with the Bullets, Bulls, Suns, Jazz or any of those middle-of-the-pack NBA teams that Georgetown more resembles. Become a better team for being-

It's said the Hoyas can be mentioned in the same breath as Bill Russell's San Francisco Dons or Lew Alcindor's UCLA Bruins. More likely, given the high-tech state of the college game in the 1980s, the NBA analogy is more accurate.

Georgetown has transcended the college game. What other explanation is there for a team that holds explosive DePaul to no field goals over the final 13 minutes?

"We're not as good as we can be yet," cautioned Hoyas forward Bill Martin Added Georgetown coach John Thompson: "Who knows who No. 1 or No. 2 is. It's totally insignificant this time of year. Joey (DePaul coach Meyer) and I are trying to work the kinks out.

But given the normal rate of nation-wide kink-shedding, it's diffi- Joey's first career butt-whupping.

cult to envision the gap between Georgetown and the pack - and you can throw the truly outstanding Demons into that group - less

The Hoyas may lose, but bad biorhythms, a flu epidemic, obnoxious officiating and a double-hernia to Pat Ewing would have to precede such an unlikely event.

HOW DOES a first-class team go about getting outclassed, as did DePaul? It's tempting to answer that with a name: Ewing.

When the 7-0 All-America and Olympian left with 5 minutes 6 seconds remaining in the first half, his team led 36-18. After stifling DePaul with his ominous presence in the middle of the Hoyas' 2-1-2 zone defense and a few spectacular skyhooks, Ewing's parting shot was forcing Demons standout Dallas Comegys to shoot an air ball.

The gutsy Demons, however. climbed back into the game in Ewing's absence, closing the lead to 45-38 at halftime.

'Sometimes," Thompson said, "for us to be successful, we have to have the courage to try things we wouldn't do at the end of the year. We didn't lose the lead because Pat was on the bench. We lost it because of foolish turnovers and mistakes.

"A year ago, we won the national title with our four-corner offense. city championship with it."

Today, we couldn't have won the Still, sitting Ewing down when he only had two fouls smacked of Thompson pitying Meyer during

"Pat's presence creates offense for us," said Thompson. "We haven't had shooters who could stick it in from the outside like we do now. And who's going to try and force it in to Pat when he's being guarded by three people?

Marty Embry, DePaul's burly designated center, played admirably for a 6-foot-9 strongman against Ewing, the game's premier player:

"You can't go into a game saying you're going to stop Pat Ewing," said Embry, who scored DePaul's last basket with 13:07 left. "You can stay with him and not back off. You can't be intimidated. If you back down, he'll kill you. He can't be stopped."

Ewing was the statistical standout in the Hoyas' balanced attack with 15 points, 15 rebounds and six blocked shots.

BUT STATS aren't the story when Georgetown is the subject. Defense and quick-strike offense are. And the ability to do it with anyone wearing a silver-and-black uniform.

"I was open all game," Ewing said. 'But their (Hoyas') jumpers were falling. In the second half, my teammates got the ball to me.

And it was then Ewing gave credence to the banner that read: "Ewing owns Dallas." He had 11 points, nine boards and four blocks in the second half.

There was more streaking this game than on the average college campus in the mid-1970s.

JIM MURRAY

If it's snake eyes, this must be Philly

Who is Leonard Tose and why is he like the guy who came home to his wife one morning and said: "Start packing. I just lost you in a crap game"?

Well, Leonard is the former truck driver who owns the Philadelphia Eagles football team and, if you can believe the advices out of Philly, he's something like $40 million in the hole, some of which he lost trying to make the hard eight on the tables at Atlantic City.

Philadelphia probably didn't realize it was backing his play but when the house won, as usual, Leonard Tose was down to his last white chip, which proved to be Philadelphia. Leonard needed cash. Gamblers

You figure a guy should do what other men do when he goes to the tables: hand his wife his case money and say, "Now, no matter what I tell you, no matter how much I beg, don't give me this money. Under-

In Leonard's case, he probably should have said: "Now, no matter what happens, don't give me the Eagles. Hold them out on me, you

Alas! You know what most of us end up saying. "Look! I don't care what I said. Give me that money, you hear! My luck's gotta change, so fork it over! It's my money, isn't it?"

SO, LEONARD Tose has got the Philadelphia Eagles up on the line. He doesn't want to sell them, exactly. He wants to put them up to get a bankroll.

He's found these investors from Canada. High rollers. There's just this one little hitch. They want the club, but they don't want Philadelphia. They want Phoenix. Which is about as far from Philadelphia as Benjamin Franklin is from Tom Mix.

Philadelphia reacted as though they wanted to move the Liberty Bell. Torch Independence Hall. I mean, surely this isn't what the founding fathers had in mind. This isn't what they suffered through the winter at Valley Forge for. Washington surely didn't cross the Delaware in the dead of winter for the Eagles' right to go to Arizona. Surely if the founding fathers had been able to foresee any perfidy of this sort, the first amendment to the Constitution would have been: "And the Eagles have to stay in Philadelphia." I mean, why else did we fight at Gettysburg? What do you think Lincoln was talking about there?

If the battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton, were the Philadelphia Eagles lost on the gaming tables of Atlantic City?

If so, there's a kind of poetic justice at work here because the club had been owned at one time by a guy who, so to speak, won them at the race track. That would be Art Rooney, who roughed up the books at Saratoga one day in the '30s when a hundred dollars would have bought you a yacht worth a quarter of a million.

IN 1940, Rooney bought the Eagles for a year after selling the Pittsburgh Steelers. He later swapped the Eagles back for the Steelers, and one year merged the franchises into something called the Steagles. It was decided to pool their losses, since the Eagles had gone in one stretch 1-9, 1-10, 2-8, and 2-9, while the Steelers had gone 2-9, 1-9,

It's not unusual for an owner to cover his losses at another wheel in the sports shuffle. The most famous case was Harry Frazee, the Boston Red Sox owner and Broadway showman who sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees for $125,000 and a loan of $300,000 with which he could produce the Broadway show "No, No,

Harry Frazee didn't move the Red

Sox to Arizona but he might as well have. He systematically sold off the other top players, too, till the team finished last nine times in 10 years. "No. No. Nanette" was a hit. But so was Babe Ruth.

Meanwhile what does football do? Put the league on wheels, send out cards: "Have football, will travel?" Put its franchises in the window with tags reading: "Small down. All bona fide offers considered"?

Of course, no matter what it does, its nomadic present can never catch up to its nomadic past.

To begin with, the Philadelphia Eagles, before even they were the Steagles, were the Frankford Yellowjackets. The Chicago Bears were, of course, the Decatur Staleys. The Washington Redskins were the Boston Braves for years before the move and the Redskins the year they moved. The Detroit Lions had

Back in 1919, according to Bob Creamer in his biography, "Babe," when Babe Ruth was sold, a Boston policeman was moved to observe in disgust. "I give up. From what I can see, there's no longer any sentiment in baseball." Whatever gave him that idea? I guess they were just cynics in those days.

NFL owners abandon ship on franchise stability

By WAYNE LOCKWOOD Copley News Service

In case you hadn't noticed, the rush to the lifeboats is on.

The Good Ship NFL is showing a pronounced list these days as more and more owners crowd toward the rail, seeking to scramble overboard or, at the very least, improve their

While the National Football League is in little danger of sinking, some of those aboard apparently believe that it has changed course and no longer is cruising toward prosperity. They are restive.

Within the past year, three teams have been sold, one has moved, another is attempting to move and still another is on the auction block. That does not constitute a stam pede, but it does indicate a good deal more turmoil than this staid gentleman's club deems suitable.

NFL franchises once were reliable moneymakers that entitled the franchise holder to a certain panache in the bargain. No longer was he just another rich guy. He was an owner, a man who hobnobbed with senators and movie stars and saw his name in print. A degree of that glamour lingers, but an increasing number of people have decided that, all things considered, they would just as soon own a piece of IBM. Computers never goon strike, after all, or attempt to ren-

As exciting as owning an NFL franchise may be - and where else do 60,000 people assemble to cheer your employees in the performance of their labors? - some have decided that it is no longer worth the cost, especially when you can get such a good price.

The Dallas Cowboys have been sold. The Denver Broncos have been sold. The San Diego Chargers have been sold. The New Orleans Saints the Colts and Eagles have a hot line to moving companies.

A CERTAIN amount of the upheaval can be regarded as coincidence. The Cowboys sale was prompted by the necessity to settle an estate, a circumstance that could have happened at any time. Former Chargers owner Eugene V. Klein suffered two heart attacks and preferred to redirect his interests into the more placid arena of the race

But there is this to remember about Gene Klein, too. He is, above all, a shrewd businessman. He go out of the used-car business at the right time. He got out of the movie business at the right time. And it may well be that he got out of the football business at the right time.

Klein observed prices paid for the Broncos and Cowboys, prices in the range of $70 million to $80 million, and sold his 56 percent of the Chargers to Alex G. Spanos for approximately $40 million. If the club's value continues to appreciate, fine. Klein will be content with his 500 percent profit for 18 years of owner-

Prices for NFL franchises never have been higher. Perhaps they will continue to spiral. Or perhaps they are preparing to follow the example of the Southern California real -estate market.

Competition between the NFL and USFL for playing talent has driven salaries upward dramatically, and they will remain there whether or not the new league survives.

Nobody renegotiates downward.

Professional football players, long underpaid considering the risks and trauma of their occupation, are earning a fairer share of the revenue they generate. But owners are operating closer to, and sometimes below, the break-even point.

How many movie stars can you meet before running up a deficit begins to lose its charm?

The Raiders' antitrust lawsuit. The NFL lost to Al Davis and the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission in federal district court. It lost again in appellate court. The Supreme Court refused to hear the case.

The meter is running on damages, which are trebled in antitrust cases, and costs. The tab could approach cessful in the penalty phase of the trial. One-twenty-seventh of $100 million is still a lot of money.

Declining TV ratings foreshadow declining TV revenue, and TV revenue is this sport's lifeblood. Noshows are worrisome because season-ticket holders who choose not to use their tickets have a way of becoming former season-ticket holders.

Daingerfield returns to Class 3A title game

Associated Press

Daingerfield 14, Vernon 7

Malone picked off two key interceptions to lead Daingerfield past Vernon in a Class 3A semifinal game Saturday night at Texas Stadium.

Daingerfield, defending state champions and unbeaten in 31 games, plays for a second straight schoolboy title next week against Medina Valley, which beat Sweeny 43-6 Friday night.

Daingerfield improved its record to 14-0-1. Vernon suffered its first loss of the year and finished at 13-1. Vernon took a 7-0 lead in the first quarter after Matt Elliott blocked a punt and Ronnie Boyce grabbed the ball on the bounce at the 10 and scooted in Robert Graff booted the extra point.

But with 21/2 minutes remaining in the first half, fullback Whitmore powered over the goal from two yards out, climaxing an 8-play, 55yard drive. The Tigers then went for a 2-point conversion, and the lead. Johnie Hurndon went around right end and dived over the goal for the Malone's second interception of the game set up the game's final score late in the third quarter. The Tigers took over on the Vernon 24 and needed nine plays before Whitmore scored on a one-yard plunge. The extra point try failed.

Ponies blow past Cowboys for tournament title

Associated Press

DALLAS - Guard Carl Wright used his radar-accurate jump shot to score 25 points as the 7th-ranked Southern Methodist captured the championship of the Dallas Morning News Basketball Classic for the third consecutive year with an 82-65 victory over outmanned Oklahoma State Saturday night.

Wright, named the tournament's most valuable player, hit from all angles as the Mustangs extended their unbeaten season to 6-0.

The Cowboys of the Big Eight Conference, now 42, made a fight of it after falling behind 38-24 at half-

Oklahoma State closed to within three points before the Southwest Conference's Mustangs wore them out with a run-and-gun fastbreak.

Winfred Case scored 18 points to lead the Cwboys and Joe Atkinson added 14.

Larry Davis scored 14 of his points 18 in the first half for the Mustangs. Seven-foot SMU center Jon Koncak missed the last 14:56 in the first half because of foul trouble. But he scored six points, got 10 rebounds and blocked seven shots for the Mus-

Forward Ulf Spears poured in 28 points to ignite the Idaho Vandals to a 75-63 victory over the San Diego Toreros in the tournament's consolation game earlier Saturday night.

Idaho of the Big Sky Conference advanced its record to 54 while San Diego of the West Coast Athletic Conference dropped to 4-3. Idaho earned a 34-29 halftime advantage, fought off a Torero rally, then won going away behind Spears and Steve Ledesma, who scored 15 points.

Frank Garza added 14 points for the Vandals.

San Diego was paced by senior Anthony Reuss who scored 18 points. Kiki Jackson added 15 points

Arkansas 70, Tulsa 66 LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - William Mills stole the ball with two seconds remaining and drove for a dunk to thwart Tulsa's chances of tying the game. Arkansas held the lead most of the first half as Tulsa turned over the ball nine times. Tulsa went ahead by a point at the end of the half, but Byron Irvin hit a jumper around the foul line to give Arkansas a 38-37 halftime lead.

Tulsa tied the game at 46-all early in the second half with help from Midland High product Herb Johnson's shooting.

Arkansas then built up a 10-point lead on the shooting of Joe Kleine and Charles Balentine, and a shot by Eric Poerschke made it 66-56.

Tulsa came back to within two points but Mills took the ball away to secure Arkansas' victory.

Kleine, who led the Razorbacks with 19 points, fouled out in the last digits for Arkansas were Balentine with 16 points, Mills with 13 and Irvin with 10. Arkansas improved to 5-1 on the season.

Johnson led Tulsa with 16 points.

Kansas 87, Houston 75

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Danny Man-ning, Kansas' 6-foot-11 freshman, scored 28 points to lead the 18thranked Jayhawks over Houston.

Manning, who ended his previous high-scoring game with 15, poured in 18 points in the first half as the Jayhawks, 7-1, streaked to a 42-28 lead at intermission.

Houston, 5-2, lost for the first time in five games. Led by Eric Dickens and Alvin Franklin, the Cougars staged a brief second-half rally and trimmed the lead to 12 points, 73-61, on a Franklin jump shot with 5:53 to go. But Greg Dreiling and Ron Kel-logg had two quick unanswered buckets to restore the Kansas lead to 16 points, 77-61.

Kansas jumped to a quick 10-4 lead at the outset, but the Cougars found their long-range shooting touch and jumped into a 16-12 lead midway through the first half. Manning hit a stuff shot and Calvin Thompson converted a three-point play a moment later to give the Jayhawks a 17-16 lead with 10:28 left, and they never trailed again. Kellogg had 19 points for the Jayhawks and Dreiling had 14. Franklin led Houston with 24 points. Greg Anderson had 17 and Dickens 13.

Texas A&M 66, Drake 49

DES MOINES, Iowa - Texas A&M, getting 20 points from Todd Holloway and 17 from Kenny Brown, d Drake scoreless for a stretch of 8-1/2 minutes over the two halves and beat the Bulldogs to win the AAA-Drake Classic basketball tournament

A&M (5-1), behind 20-9 midway through the first half, scored the final 12 points of the period to take a 31-26 lead, then ran off the first nine points of the second half to go ahead 40-26 with 16:50 left. Drake (5-2) cut the lead to nine points on three occasions after that, but never got scored 12. The Bulldogs, who missed 11 straight shots during their scoring drought, hit only 39.6 percent for the game.

Henderson hit four jump shots to help Drake build a 20-9 lead 11 12 minutes into the game and the Bulldogs were ahead 26-19 after Lloyd hit two free throws with 4:22 left in the half. However, Drake didn't score again until Henderson converted a threepoint play with 15:50 remaining in the game.

Holloway, who scored eight points during A&M's first-half comeback, was voted the tournament's most valuable player. He was joined on the all-tournament team by Brown, teammate Winston Crite, Lloyd, Curtis Rias of Valparaiso and Paul Meyer of North Texas State.

Rias scored 23 points, hitting seven of eight shot from the field, and Harry Bell and John Geary each had 12 as hot-shooting Valparaiso defeated North Texas 79-63 in the consolation game.

Valparaiso shot 65 percent from the field in the second half and 62 percent for the game to overcome an early 6-0 deficit and win for only the second time in eight outings this season. North Texas, which shot only 43 percent, fell to 1-6.

A jump shot by Geary and a free throw by Jeff Rekeweg put Val-paraiso ahead to stay at 17-15 with 8:16 left in the first half. The Crusaders built a 36-27 lead at halftime and continued their torrid pace in the final period, when they led by as many as 17 points.

North Texas staged a mild comeback and twice cut the lead to nine points, the last time at 66-57 on Larry Banks' turnaround jumper with 5:16 remaining.

Greenwood cagers split tourney finals

From Staff Reports

GREENWOOD - Greenwood got some good news and some bad news here Saturday night as the Greenwood Invitational girls and boys basketball tournament came to a close.

The good news was that the Greenwood Rangerettes won a 64-38 victory over Denver City to capture championship honors while running their season record to 13-1.

The bad news was that Denver City knocked the Greenwood boys from the ranks of the unbeaten with a 75-59 victory to win the boys title. The Rangers are now 11-1 on the year after the loss

Marla Morgette hit for 18 and Stephanie Smith for 15 to pace the Greenwood girls over Denver City while DC got 18 points from Wendy

In the boys game, Denver City's Matt Thompson chipped in 24 points and Chad Smith added 23 in a deadly two-pronged attack against the Rangers. Greenwood was led by 16 points from John Ellis and 12 from John Gilliam.

In other boys action, Slaton won third place honors with a 74-51 win over Iraan as Durham had-25 and Taylor 19. Godfrey led Iraan with 23. Consolation honors went to Klondike with a 70-59 win over Coahoma as Tim Cope hit for 25. John Sweeney had 14 for Coahoma.

In girls action, Lubbock Cooper took third place with a 46-42 win over Crane as Henrich had 11 points. Crane's Mitchell led all scorers with 17. In the consolation game, Reagan County won a 40-33 victory over Ozona as Gooch hit for 15 points. Miller had 10 for Ozona.

How the Washington Post sees West Texas football

By PAUL TAYLOR Washington Post

ODESSA - When the Highland Park Scots scored an upset victory last week to get into the state football semifinals against the Odessa Permian MoJos, all commercial air space was sold out within 30 minutes. No problem; the exclusive Dallas suburb chartered a fleet of 10

"Curtis LeMay would been proud of us," said Harold Giddens, president of the Highland Park Boosters Club, who herded fur-coated Highland Parkers onto 27 color-coded charter buses from the Highland Park Stadium to Dallas-Ft. Worth International Airport.

A couple of dozen corporate jets joined the temporary Texas air force on its run to the overcrowded Midland-Odessa airport 300 miles west.

"It's like launching the Spanish Armada," said Charles Seay, an insurance man and community leader. "I just hope we have better success Football is big in Texas. And this was a big game, a classic confrontation between the upscale folks of Highland Park, home of the Hunts and several other of Fortune's list of the wealthiest Americans, and Odessa, home of oilfield roughnecks and roustabouts who have spent a lifetime drilling for the liquid that made Highland Park rich.

But football Saturday also was the great social leveler. West Texas hospitality was the order of the day in Odessa. There was some thought of throwing a pregame barbecue for the well-to-do visitors on the tarmac at Midland-Odessa Airport, next to the parked jets, but the hosts settled instead for guests with whoops and hugs, marveled at the grandeur of their mode of transportation, but like Texans everywhere, they were not about to

"I told all the boys in the chuckwagon line serving the barbecue that if you got your Rolexes on, roll up your sleeves, and if you got your Timexes on, put them in your pocket," said one resident who added, "Print my name and I am in a heap of trouble.

The Odessa Police Department provided siren-wailing escorts for the Highland Parkers between the airport and the football field.

The Highland Park Scots had a Cinderella season, scoring an upset 1-point win in the quarterfinals last week to get into the semifinals with Odessa. It was incumbent on everyone who could get away for the day to get to Odessa, but a six-hour drive across drab West Texas just would

Highland Park is the sort of community where Cub Scout troops take field trips on Learjets, but even here, the scale of this operation tickled the Texas fancy for doing it big.

We'll have 4,000 or 5,000 at the game," Giddens said. "That's about percent of Highland Park.'

Highland Park High sends 96 percent of its graduates to college, but football is a religion here, just as it is all over Texas. It is a school of only 1,350 students, but its football team traveling squad has no fewer than 110 players. Illustrious alumni include Bobby Layne and Doak

However devoted they are to football in Highland Park, the rich suburbs do not hold a candle to the mania in Odessa

We don't have any lakes here or mountains or hunting or fishing," said Glen Atkins, an Odessa bank vice president. "About all we got to do is watch high school football."

And they do it in style. The MoJo's $5 million artificial-turf stadium seats 19,200. ("If there's a bigger high school stadium in the country, I haven't heard of it," said Permian Athletic Director Jack Brewer.) The marching band has 220 members, and the football team has been to the finals six times in the past 20

Odessa also goes to out-of-town games. When Highland Park was the opponent in the state semifinal four years ago, 10,000 Odessans made it to Texas Stadium outside Dallas for the game. But they all drove.

"These Highland Park folks sure know how to travel," said Jim Boyle, a member of the Chuckwagon Gang. 'It kind of takes your breath away There is little trace of envy in his

"This is just a real happening." Brewer added.

To understand just how deep the football feeling runs in Texas, keep an eye on the next session of the Texas Legislature.

This past year H. Ross Perot got the idea that high schools were placing too much emphasis on football. Under prodding by Perot, head of the Dallas computer company EDS and chairman of a citizens advisory panel on education reform, the legislature passed a "no pass-no play rule" to make sure high school athletes kept their grades up. But the upcoming legislative session is going to face heavy pressure to have the rule rescinded - not from the coaches, who are so livid about it they almost get tongue-tied but from the Texas Association of School Principals. The game? Odessa won, 20 to 7.

Sampson rips Mavs for 38 points in 117-115 win

Associated Press

Houston's Ralph Sampson scored 38 points as the Rockets edged the Dallas Mavericks 117-115 in National Basketball Association play on Satur-

Guard Mitchell Wiggins hit a 15foot corner shot with seven seconds left to secure the win for Houston.

The second-place Rockets moved to within one game of idle first-place Denver in the midwest Division.

Sampson showed signs of full recovery from an eye injury suffered on Dec. 3 by scoring 10 points and grabbing seven rebounds in the first quarter. Dallas's Jay Vincent, however, canned 16 points in the first quarter.

Cowboys face do-or-die game

MIAMI (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers provided the first half of a two-part scenario which could land the Dallas Cowboys in the National Football League playoffs. Now comes the tough part.

To gain a post-season berth, the Cowboys needed some help from the 49ers. They got it in the form of a 19-16 victory over the Los Angeles Rams Friday night.

That means all the Cowboys have to do to earn the right to play another game is beat the Miami Dolphins Monday night. But that means stopping record-thrashing Dan Marino and the 13-2 Dolphins before a sold-out Orange Bowl.

It could have been worse. The 9-6 Cowboys could have been playing Monday night with nothing at stake. With the Rams dropping to 10-6, though, the Cowboys can clinch the final NFC post-season berth with a

A loss, however, will leave Dallas out of the playoffs for the first time since 1974 and only the second time

"I don't want to think about it being over," said Cowboys running back Tony Dorsett. "We've had ample opportunities to secure a playoff spot and blew them. Now our backs are way up against the wall. But there's still a chance."

Dorsett, who has gained 1,131 yards on 283 carries in what he considers a "down year," may hold the key to that chance. Opposing teams have been bludgeoning the Dolphins defense in the past few weeks, keeping the ball on the ground and thereby keeping it out of the hands of Marino and company.

The Dolphins know what to

"Tony Dorsett is one of the greatest running backs ever," said Miami nose tackle Bob Baumhower. "He cuts back well and all he needs is a little room and he's gone. We are looking at this as a big test for us."

The Dolphins, after generally breezing through their first nine games, have been in battles each of the past six weeks. They trailed the Indianapolis Colts 17-7 at halftime last week before rebounding behind Marino's four second-half touchdown passes.

That improved the second-year pro's NFL record for TD passes to 44. Marino, who was voted to the AFC Pro Bowl team for the second time last week, also increased his passing yardage total to 6,744 to move within 59 of Dan Fouts' league mark of 4,802.

The next Dolphin touchdown will break the league record of 66.

But Miami isn't playing to set rec-ords. They want to win to ensure they will have the best record in the AFC and thus the home-field advantage if they reach the AFC title

As the Cowboys can attest, that's not quite the same as fighting for your playoff lives.

"It has been one of those years with a lot of ups and downs," Dor-sett said. "But we are still determined to make the playoffs. We are going to fight like the devil not to be the first (Cowboys) team in this decade not to make the playoffs."

The islands lie on the edge of the major oil tanker route from the (Persian) Gulf to the Cape (of Good Hope)," a British analyst noted. "Any power holding air or sea bases on Mahe (the main populated island) would enjoy easy surveillance, and perhaps control, over all traffic using the Mozambique Channel ...

How did the Soviets managed to replace the British as protectors of the Seychelles?

They were invited in by President France-Albert Rene, who seized power in a coup one year after the island nation was granted independence from Britain in 1976. The training touched off riots in 1979, elected head of state was attending a British Commonwealth conference at the time, leaving only a dozen policemen for Rene to overcome.

Rene rented 200 Tanzanian mercenaries to accomplish the coup, which resulted in three deaths. Now, Seychellois sources told my associate Dale Van Atta, Rene has at his disposal 750 of his own troops, a few remaining Tanzanians - 200 were too expensive to keep — plus 125 North Koreans and at least 50 Soviet military advisers.

Other sources estimate that there are more than 100 Soviet advisers in the islands, under command of Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Orlov, the former head of KGB operations in Turkey. Before Rene's coup, the Kremlin had no one in the Seybut Rene prevailed. The last internal opposition comes from the Catholic Church, but it is muted and ineffectual. The most significant opponents of Rene's dictatorship are in the Mouvement Pour la Resistance, led in exile by Gerard Hoarau in London.

Seychellois exile leaders complain that, far from helping them overthrow the increasingly Marxist regime, the Reagan administration has supported Rene by paying greatly increased rent for the U.S. satellite-tracking station on Mahe. From $500,000 a few years ago, the annual fee has gone to $2 million, and the United States also provides another $2 million in economic aid

What would they like from the United States? "We would like the same sort of intervention as the U.S. sponsored in Grenada," was the answer.

But the Soviet takeover is so complete and the military logistics so difficult that a Grenada-style invasion is unlikely. In fact, it's the U.S. island outpost at nearby Diego Garcia that is more vulnerable.

Some U.S. strategists are beginning to worry that the United States could be forced out of Diego Garcia, and the western Indian Ocean could become a virtual "Soviet lake."

"How did you know that?"

"I just got my phone bill.

Then you can see what we're up against. We're charging you more, and yet we're not making what we did before.

"I thought the whole idea of breaking up the telephone company was so it would be competitive, and cost the consumer less."

"It does cost less if you call Oslo,

"I don't want to call anyone in Norway, and I doubt if there are 10 subscribers who do. Why don't you double the rate to call Norway and cut back on what it costs to make a call in this town?

We're not sure. You see, no one ever broke up the phone company before, and therefore we never knew what it really cost to service our local subscribers. Now we're finding out it's much more expensive than we thought."

'Maybe it's a problem of management," I suggested. "Are you sure the people working for the local telephone company know what they're

He took this as a hostile question and said angrily, "We know exactly what we're doing. You have been living for years off the poor souls who were overcharged for calling Norway, and now you're angry because you have to pay your own

"I have a question. If the government broke up the phone company to create more competition, and we now can choose from a half-dozen long-distance firms, why can't we choose from three or four local phone companies, and take the one with the lowest rates?"

"Because if there was more than one local company in any given area you'd have anarchy

Then why did the government claim the consumer would benefit from breaking up Ma Bell? It seems that we're paying 25 percent more than we paid before.

But on Jan. 1, black crepe will go up in the boutiques because that's when the United States withdraws from UNE-SCO. Happy New Year.

Last year the United States gave the required one-year notice of its intention to withdraw. Now Britain has done likewise. Only a tiny minority of member nations have preserved admirable traditions of education, science and culture. Why should they "debate" as equals, which they are not? Anyway, who thinks that what UNESCO does is 'debate"? It is an echo chamber for Third World slogans about the 'North-South dialogue" and "redistribution" of almost everything.

But UNESCO is primarily a jobs program for word merchants. In reflecting over the accom-plishments of the past year, I would be remiss in not mentioning the various organizations and persons who have made the Midland Crime Stoppers program a success - a result dependent on three key elements: 1) the public, 2) news media, and 3) law enforcement agencies.

Local Crime Stoppers programs are established as non-profit corporations by applying for a charter under Texas law. Such statutes enable contributions to the program to be treated as charitable by donors on their federal income tax returns.

The program is governed by a civilian board of directors comprised of representatives of the community who oversee the general operation and administer funds.

It would be appropriate and necessary to thank the following persons who were instrumental in starting the Crime Stoppers program in Midland and those who serve as directors and take time out of their busy schedules for this commuity service -Sheriff Dallas Smith, George Irish, Bill Collyns, Murray Faskin, Ray Moudy, Roy Carley, John Dersch, Ed Weyman, Ed Wagener, John Hyde, Susie Hitchcock and Maxine Hannifin.

Citizens may witness all or part of a crime without being aware of what they have seen or may have direct knowledge that a crime was committed. Consequently, these persons possess key information that could aid a law enforcement agency in solving a particular crime.

In some instances, citizens do not contact a law enforcement agency out of fear of retaliation. In most instances, these will not come forward with information unless they can be assured ano-

Crime Stoppers provides a method of overcoming these limitations by involving the community in solving felony, crimes. Through Crime Stoppers, citizens who have knowledge of specific felony crimes are encouraged, to provide the specific information to Crime Stoppers. The program allows any citizen supplying information to remain completely anonymous. In this way, the citizen is assured that his identity will be protected and that any information relayed will be uti-

If information provided leads to the arrest and indictment of a felony crime offender, the informant is eligible for a cash reward. The board of directors determines the exact amount, based on the type of case, value of the information, amount of property or narcotics recovered, number of cases solved as a result of the information, and other relevant criteria.

When a criminal case is not solved quickly, the lead diminishes, the trial becomes cold, evidence becomes unobtainable, and the crime becomes increasingly more difficult to solve. For these reasons most law enforcement agencies files contain many unsolved cases. When this occurs, a method is needed to reawaken public interest in the case. A specific unsolved felony crime is chosen each week, and a fixed $1,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest or indictment of the offender(s). This unsolved crime is referred to as the "Crime of the Week". A reenactment of the crime is videotaped by KMID, KTPX, and KOSA television stations, through a rotating process, using pertinent facts and evidence after permission has been obtained by the victim and others involved.

In addition to the reenactments, shown by the TV stations on Tuesday nights as part of the 5, 6 and 10 p.m. news programs, a taped radio summary of the same crime is prepared using the facili-ties at KCRS radio. The radio summary is then dubbed to other tapes by Bill Bruder for broadcast on KCRS, KJBC, KNFM, KBAT, KKKK, KRIG, KYXX, KQIP, KWES, KOZA, KUFO and KXOI of Crane.

Additionally a written relase is supplied to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Odessa American and Thrifty Nickel to appear in conjunction with the TV and radio broadcast each Tuesday

The philosophy behind using one pre-selected date each week for television, radio, and newspaper coverage of the "Crime of the Week" is maximum saturation. All media promotion is donated time. Without the news media it is doubtful the program would have ever gotten off the ground.

With regard to cash rewards, no tax dollars are used. The money utilized comes from donations by citizens, the business community, private foundations, and local financial institutions. The past year, Midland Crime Stoppers was the recipient of funds from two fund-raising events. Jose Cuevas sponsored the "Jumburrito Crime Stoppers, Take a Bite Out of Crime Day" on July 4th and Milton Nickel spon-sored "The Honda Cars of Midland Charity Gold Tournament" held July 26. These two events helped Crime Stoppers raise over $5,000. Several citizens and businesses also made private contributions which raised total funds close to $9,000. Without the funds donated, it would be impossible to pay the informants. In the beginning, the Odessa Police Department and Odessa Crime Stoppers provided the much needed guidance to the Midland program which gave the solid foundation for a successful program. Basin Communications donated a telephone answering system for after-hour calls.

The information received is an investigative tool; however, it is sometimes the necessary link in the investigative chain to complete an investigation and arrive at an arrest, Grand Jury indictment, property and narcotic

Detectives, investigators and narcotic officers of both the Midland Police, Sheriff's Department, and other Permian Basin law enforcement agencies should be commended on a job well done. They have played a major role in success of the program.

We involved in Crime Stoppers feel that Crime Stoppers will have a major impact on crime in the community simply because it is a community effort. We can easily see the effects of the community getting involved by our growing number of Neighborhood Watch groups who play a major role in deterring crime and decreasing the number of burglaries in area of Midland. President Reagan recently said turning the tide on crime will take concerned citizens working with law enforcement agencies to protect themselves.

Crime affects all of us and the responsibility of preventing crime lies with each individual. Crime Stoppers is for the community - Crime Stoppers is the community.

Communication a daily concern

One of the world's biggest problems is the inability of people to communicate. We're all guilty at one time or another of saying one thing, but meaning another. Or of saying something, but omitting a part necessary for understanding. All too frequently, individuals who make their living by communicating - writers, commentators, journalists and the like — are the most flagrantly responsible for confusion resulting from miscommuni-cation. A lot of times the incidents aren't intentional; it's just that in this highly technical, speed-oriented society making oneself understood in the proper context is no small accomplishment.

Newspaper writers like myself face the problem daily and unceasingly. If a writer doesn't communicate clearly in a news column, personal column or editorial, misunderstanding can easily result. If confusion is the result, a disservice has been performed because the purpose of a newspaper is to inform - not to confuse - its read-

I can remember in high school hearing fellow students ask why they needed to learn to write effectively. Their complaint was they didn't intend to pursue a career in writing and, thus, didn't see how learning to communicate through writing would benefit them.

That seemed logical to me at the time. After all, I wasn't really certain why I needed to learn algebraic equations or to speak Spanish. Six-why I needed to study those subjects. I've used various skills learned in public school — and later in college — numerous times in my life. The ability to communicate - in writing and in speech - could not have been overstressed. It's vital for a doctor telling a patient how and why to take a certain medication a particular way, a farmer telling his son why it's important to plant certain seeds only so deep and at a particular time of the year and a technical writer writing a manual that an electrician will read to learn a particular wiring procedure.

Communication is vital, but more and more I see signs that people are not communicating as effectively as they should, a result that is holding society back from realizing its full teen years later there's no question if an individual misunderstands what is said or written — or spoken — that individual may interpret the statement in question as threatening when, in fact, it wasn't.

Many times arguments erupt between people because they did not communicate properly - in words or actions. Hostilities can result when no ill will is intended.

That's one of the greatest tragedies of all: Hatred resulting from ignorance. Only through understanding can people settle their differences — and progress — without resorting to violence. But understanding requires communication; there are no short-cuts.

Communication is a vital link in society. When it breaks down, society suffers.

Get understanding of 'downstream' side

Permit me to respond to John Pitts' article in the Sunday Nov. 25 paper entitled "Downstream woes may hit upstream wells.'

While the content of the article manifested your knowledge of the "oil industry," I would like to help you understand the "downstream" side a little better. You spoke of the hostility between petroleum marketers and major oil company refineries, and alluded to the accusation by the Texas Oil Marketers Association of unfair competition from the majors. TOMA is a fine organization and represents its members very competently, in spite of the wide diversity of interests, opinions and philosophy of its membership. I am a devoted member, but I disagree with TOMA's efforts to gain legislative relief.

Concerning the hostility toward the majors, let me assure you it is not industrywide. Let me also object to your statement, "The majors may want the marketers out." I can't speak for the metropolitan areas my knowledge of them is probably less than yours. But again I can assure you it is not true of the Permian Basin. Majors almost totally have withdrawn from direct marketing and assigned that responsibility to marketers like us. And let me add that majors made that decision because marketers could do a better and more voluminous job than majors. There was no magnanimity involved in that decision our method of operation carved our own place in the marketplace. The majors sought us.

Woman has right to make decision

We have a discussion - or debate - before your readers of 'Letters," the subject being 'child abuse" which is presently n the abortion area.

So as a defender of "abortion in 90 days," I wish to make some declarations.

1) A fetus is not a living soul until it is expelled alive from its mother's body. It then becomes a human being, having both soul

2) Only human beings can be murdered!

3) Unwanted fetuses are the only ones ever deliberately aborted! 4) Who owns the woman's body? a) does the Congress own her? b) does the Supreme Court

c) does any church own her?

d) does some man own her? I say definitely "NO!" The woman is sole owner of her body! 5) To give birth to an unwanted fetus is the ultimate in child

I would like to read anybody's opposition to number 4.

K.P. Walker

In his article, Pitts asked some questions. "One, are the majors legal in their ruthless pursuit of the retail market?" You can bet your earmuffs they are legal. It will be a cold day in hell when a major knowingly operates illegally. "Two, are they fair?" Most are, but a few will stoop to any level for a short-term profit. Three, do we really need petroleum marketers?" The consuming public definitely needs us. We perform services for the consuming public that only in carload lots the majors don't and can't. We deliver fuel and lubricants to drilling rigs. The majors don't. We lease tanks and dispensing pumps for gasoline and diesel to businesses, ranchers and farmers. Majors won't. We operate unattended self-service stations for security fueling systems with a detailed computer print-out of each purchase. Majors don't We sell lubricants and antifreeze by the drum and by the case. Majors sell

"Four, is the demise of petroleum marketers just a natural shakeout in a market that has been shielded from reality by government regulations...?" Hey, John Paul, wait up! Where did "demise" come from? My company has been in business 47 years and gains steadily annually in the marketplace. Don't feel sorry for the marketers - the majors love us - and desperately need us. Save your compassion and epitaphs for Gulf and Getty. They are majors who didn't survive. We are still here and plan to stay.

Permit me one more response to your statement, "Still, when all independents are gone and only the majors remain to serve us, we may wonder what kind of marketplace it will be." First, don't hold your breath. Second, you wouldn't like it. Marketers like us specialize in serving the consuming public with what they want, when they want it and where they want it.

We like the majors - we are their downstream extensions, and we cooperate with each other to the benefit of the consuming public. Jack Walcher, president in mind for deep

World leaders confident of American economy

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

NEW YORK West European governments and financial institutions look longingly at a generally smooth-running American economy and wonder aloud what President Reagan has cuts in the U.S national budget. Our friends and allies abroad have ignored their own deficits since World War II. For openers, the U.S. Treasury's tax reform plan, which got a cool reception at home, sent foreign confidence soaring with its imaginative ideas, including a bigger boost on the exchanges for our buck.

Capitalism also received an enormous boost when the People's Republic of China decided that the best way out of fossilized central planning — so cherished by Sovietled economists but unworkable in today's world - was to embark on a careful route to capitalism. Needless to say, the Kremlin sputtered angrily about China's decision but so far has refrained from any effort at direct interference.

Deng Xiaoping, overall Communist Party director of the most populous nation on earth, reported to a billion Chinese that the works of Karl Marx were written over a century ago and said "needed reforms" were long overdue in party thinking. Diminutive Deng's remarks, published in Communist China's 'People's Daily," drove Soviet planners and their East bloc puppets up Without awaiting any Moscow-run orchestration of vehemence, Deng and his regime supporters embarked on a national series of pilot capitalist programs, from well-run restaurants and tours to deals with Western companies. They even have an American college trying to line up prospects for investment in China.

Having stunned the Soviet bloc, businesses in the West began to prepare their sample shows for exhibition in the People's Republic which, interestingly, hankers principally to deal with us. It appears that nearly everyone, except critics and worrywarts at home, wants to copy the American economic stylebook as crafted by President Reagan. Hearst European correspondent Bernard D. Kaplan reported from Paris that Europeans see President Reagan placing the American economy on an even sounder basis during his second term. Kaplan, quoting Britain's "Financial Times," reported that Britain's best-informed economic journal characterized the Yankee dollar as staying "almighty," adding: "It has established enduring

I'm not trying to blow chauvinistic notes but the Kaplan report reinforced my view that the President knew what he was doing during his first term when a group of fainthearted advisers urged him to back off from his economic game plan and even induce some inflation. President Reagan at the time said no emphatically and pursued his economic strategy. He triumphed hand-somely and his resounding re-elec-

... We've started practicing preventive health care ... Our income prevents any ...

That was reflected swiftly abroad where the pocketbook issues loom most importantly to all governments. France's socialist government has sent regular study teams to America to try to learn just what President Reagan planned and implemented to dig the U.S. out of the morass and despondency he inherited from the previous administration which plummeted from crisis to crisis, solving nothing but throwing money at everything for a

Because of President Reagan's sure-footedness at doing the unexpected, the Congress is inclined to hold its fire rather than rush in to make demands for assorted slashes in the budget. The President has worked out with advisers a wide program of cuts and savings in government spending. Social Security is ruled out and so is the interest on the deficit. Everything else is wide open, which has Congress guessing.

While Congress holds its fire rather than find itself ambushed, tion victory showed the confidence friends and allies in Europe aren't so coy. The Reagan administration proposals caught the imagination of folks in all walks of life, the prominent West German newspaper "Die Welt" noted. The paper called it an American determination to exploit their economic advantage to reinforce their economic future.

> I find it curious that few in our political setup discern the same objective. Nearly all our politicos are asking for deep cuts in the military, which President Reagan hasn't ruled out, but he patently won't go along with hefty reductions so that we're back playing tin soldiers instead of having a sound military

We can and should be able to obtain equitable cuts in military expenditure but not in my view to the point of reducing us to the plight of recent years as a pitiful giant. Money is paramount for research and development, especially in the vast arena of space where the U.S.S.R. wants us to abandon all quests now while its militarists spend with no accountability.

That warning didn't originate with me. It came from, of all places, Peking, not once but repeatedly, to visiting free enterprisers who spoke to their Chinese hosts about needs for closer Sino-U.S. operation in many fields. As non-military people, the visitors were urged often not to cripple the American military defense posture. This advice was communicated by veteran Chinese officers and ranking political offi-

"Please remember, you Americans owe this to all your friends," was a remark brought back to me by a seasoned, well-traveled business acquaintance who could scarcely believe his ears. So he had the remark repeated and retranslated .

It all adds up, whether in Europe or the teeming populations of the Far East, that a sound American economy is a major defense against aggression and helps protect those who rely on us. We can't help anyone if we're dead broke. But we certainly can and will assist those in need - and pretty defenseless. This point America has proved since World War I.

Georgetown started its first run after DePaul's Tony Jackson was called for a foul on a block so clean that it was even apparent to paid observers in the nosebleed section who had to squint through clouds of legal and illegal smoke and arms from the moronic wavers

Next thing, it was 17-7 Hoyas, then 36-18 as Georgetown was on its way to 74 percent first-half shooting. But DePaul outscored Georgetown 18-7 over the last 5:06, Tyrone Corbin (13 points) primarily pulling the offen-

The Demons had a chance to go ahead in the second half. But Andy Laux missed a jumper after rebounding Ewing's miss at the other end. Corbin missed a chance to tie when it was 53-51. Before DePaul was able to garner a free throw Georgetown ran off to a 71-51 ead, and the rest is history

"We lost our composure. That's the bottom line," said Embry."We set the tempo we wanted. We had so many turnovers (18). It was a lack of concentration. We've never made plays like that before.

DePaul turned the ball over six times during Georgetown's secondhalf binge

"One thing we've done well this year is play with poise," said Meyer. But we let the crowd and Georgetown's quickness get to us. We competed. We didn't let down. But we didn't execute offensively. This is the first team that's made us play out of control.

'We feel bad for ourselves and for our coach," said DePaul guard Kenny Patterson. He had 10 points Georgetown had to contain.

But it was the Hoyas constant defensive pressure, which bludgeoned the Demons from the opening minute like a migraine, that broke down DePaul.

DePaul having beat Georgetown a year ago in Rosemont had bearing on the Hoyas' frame of mind. "No question about that," said Martin.

"Today provided a test," said Thompson. And there is no doubt the Hoyas are the head of the class.

The Scots looked even more impressive on Permian's first possession, forcing the Panthers to punt after an eight-play drive stalled on the Highland Park 47. In came the Permian kicking team and Watson's punt to the 14 put the Scots in a hole they couldn't climb out of.

The dominance of the Scots' first drive was gone. On each of the three plays Highland Park ran, Permian's defense knocked them backward one yard. Clements' punt from the goal line came down at the Scots' 49yard line and died, setting up the tying touchdown.

It took the Panthers seven plays to cover the distance with Watson picking up 29 yards on three straight carries to the seven. He got the final yards and a touchdown when he caught quarterback Alton Holloway's 31st TD pass of the year. Bryant booted the PAT for a 7-7 score that held up until late in the fourth quarter.

PERMIAN, WHICH outgained Highland Park 308-216 in total yards, played a tough, hard-hitting defensive game after the Scots' scoring

Defensive backs Thom Lish and Dan Swaim both had bone-jarring hits that caused seemingly completed passes to fall to the ground. They were the kind of plays the entire defensive unit was striving to

"That first drive I don't know what happened to us but we decided to bow up or they were going to have a field day against us," said Swaim. "Our offense stalled at first so we had to do the job on defense." Swaim added that he and his fellow defensive backs were inspired into making their crushing hits by a newspaper article they read Saturday morning. We got a Dallas paper this morning and it said the secondary looked like the weak spot because we're so small," said the 140-pound Swaim. "It's true. We're small but we hit big.

We wanted to prove we could do it. Now the Panthers are one game away from proving how good they can be. In six days they have a chance to win their school's fourth state football championship in seven appearances in the finale. As the No. 1 ranked team in the state for the past 13 weeks, oddsmakers will probably give them the nod.

Philadelphia, team owner Leonard Tose announced at a City Hall news conference Saturday night.

Tose and his daughter Susan Fletcher arrived at City Hall Saturday night, and Ms. Fletcher said she was "very happy" that the team will be staying in Philadelphia.

Tose and Ms. Fletcher walked smiling through a crowd of reporters to meet with city officials before making a joint announcement about the team's future.

"Are you happy to be staying in Philadelphia?" they were asked. 'Yes, I am very happy," Ms. Fletcher said.

The two arrived at City Hall less than an hour after an aide to Mayor W. Wilson Goode said an agreement to keep the Eagles in town appeared to be "90 percent" certain.

The Arizona Board of Regents, meanwhile, gave Arizona State University the green light Saturday to consider leasing its stadium to the Eagles if the team moves to Phoe-

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Eagles in Philadelphia "and the next Eagles football team will remain in 24 to 48 hours will tell us more than 24 to 48 hours will tell us more than we know now.

"I think the odds are now 7-to 3 in favor of the team staying in the city," Goode said. "I think we're at fourth down and 1 yard to go, and we're at the 1-yard line. We need to push it over the goal line and we're there. My job is to keep the football team here in this city, and I feel I'm making progress doing that.' But then Goode said, if negotiations fail, "we are prepared to go to court whenever he tells us he is going to leave. Goode also said he thought the NFL and Congress "ought to put into place some kind of rule or law where there would have to be some kind of process" before a franchise could leave a city.

"I shouldn't have to wake up at 6.30 in the morning and have the radio tell me that a football team that has been here for 51 years intends to leave the city," Goode in New York, probably with Tose, to discuss the Eagles situation.

A consortium of Philadelphia banks and insurance companies matched the Phoenix offer, which Goode put at around $42 million, but it was temporarily withdrawn when Tose refused to reliquish management control.

The investors wanted to have some input, a major input, over who would manage the team in the long term," Goode said. "Basically, they wanted more control than Mr. Tose was willing to give.

We are back talking about other alternatives at this time, but he said to me in no uncertain terms that 'I want to keep the team here.' We are trying to find a way to do it. We are working with him, we're talking with him, we're talking with his people, and I think it could be worked

City Solicitor Barbara Mather said all the cash would come from the lenders, but $12 million would be backed by deposits the city has in Philadelphia banks. Interest payments on the $12 million would be made to the city by Tose, not the banks, as part of the loan repayment

In Tempe, Ariz., Regent A.J. 'Jack" Pfister, who acted as spokesman for the board, said the next move was up to Tose. It's up to the Eagles to decide whether or not they're going to move to Phoenix," he said.

Asked whether the board would grant the Eagles a lease, Pfister declined to speculate. He said the board's decision would depend on what kind of public support is there for an NFL team using Sun Devil Stadium.

Another regent, Donald G. Shropshire of Tucson, said he was opposed to allowing the Eagles to use the stadium. "Such a contract is not in the sented the proposed lenders, said best interests of ASU," he said.

John McEnroe wrestles with his luggage in Gothenburg, Sweden, where he and the rest of the United States Davis Cup team begins play Sunday for this year's Davis Cup tennis title against Sweden. The U.S. is after its' fifth title in the last seven years.

Connors leads Davis Cup charge

GOTEBORG, Sweden (AP) -Jimmy Connors, never having played in a Davis Cup final, is finally there this year. Now, he's got another hurdle to overcome.

Connors will face Mats Wilander, Sweden's No. 1 tennis player, in the opening singles match Sunday as the United States goes after its fifth Davis Cup title in seven years.

The two have met twice in the past with Wilander winning both times. He recently beat Connors in the Stockholm Open semifinals and defeated Connors in the ATP Championships at Cincinnati last August. The Connors-Wilander pairing was set Saturday during the draw to determine matchups for the best-offive Davis Cup, which will be played on a clay surface.

John McEnroe will play Henrik Sundstrom in the second singles match Sunday. McEnroe and Peter Fleming, who are 140 in Davis Cup doubles, will face Anders Jarryd and for the second straight time last ter this time," Ashe said. Stefan Edberg in Monday's doubles, week. Sundstrom comes in and in Tuesday's singles, McEnroe will meet Wilander and Connors will play Sundstrom. The United States, winner of the Davis Cup a record 28 times, is 5-0 against Sweden in Davis Cup play.

The Americans last won the Cup in 1982, defeating France 41 on clay indoors at Grenoble. For Sweden, this is the second consecutive final, having lost to Australia 3-2 on grass at Melbourne last year. The Swedes won the title in 1975.

American captain Arthur Ashe has expressed concern over the long layoffs of his players, compared with the recent activity of the Connors and Fleming have not played competitively for five weeks. "I don't think it is so important for them. They are so experienced,' said Wilander, who came here after events in the past 11 weeks - the Transamerica Open at San Francisco Sept. 24, the Davis Cup semifinal against Australia and the Stockholm Open - and won all three.

He has not played a tournament since beating Wilander in the Stock-holm Open Nov. 5 on a hard-court. The Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion was banned for three weeks after his fines exceeded the $7,500 limit in Stockholm, then aggravated tendinitis in his left wrist while practicing for the recent Australian Open.

Ashe prefers McEnroe to play the first match against the No. 1 player on the other team, and for McEnroe to be drawn for the fifth match in case the series would be tied going into the last match.

"But we've got two 'horses' here winning the Australian Open title now, so the draw doesn't really mat-

Sundstrom comes into the final

McEnroe has played only three after his finest season ever. Ranked seventh in the world, he beat Wilander in the Monte Carlo Open last spring, reached the German Open final, played well at Paris and outlasted French Open champion Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the Davis Cup semis. All events were played on clay.

Sundstrom, who has a fine record on clay this season, never has played

McEnroe and Fleming, despite their stellar record together, lost their only match to the Swedish duo of Jarryd and Edberg. That loss came September in the semifinals of the U.S. Open.

To reach the Davis Cup final, the U.S. team beat Australia 41 at Portland, Ore., in a semifinal, while the Swedes topped Czechoslovakia 5-0 at Baastad, Sweden in the other semifi-

Seattle's sporting public hasn't responded that well, either, Walsh conceded. But there have been numerous reasons - football reas sons, he said.

The National Football League's Seattle Seahawks, who played Denver at the Kingdome Saturday in a showdown for American Conference West title, and the Orange Bowlbound Washington Huskies have gotten a major share of the attention in Seattle this week, he said.

Pros end 1984 regular season

Associated Press

The Denver Broncos, with John Elway passing for one touchdown and running for another score, beat the Seattle Seahawks 31-14 Saturday to win the American Football Conference West title, but the National Football League playoff situation remained tangled in the final weekend of the regular season.

Sunday games would determine whether Pittsburgh or Cincinnati wins the AFC Central crown and gets the final playoff spot in that conference.

Sunday games, along with the Dal-las at Miami contest Monday night, would decide the final three playoff berths in the National Football Conference among Washington, St. Louis, Dallas, the New York Giants and the Los Angeles Rams.

On Saturday, the New Orleans Saints got a 2-yard touchdown pass from Dave Wilson to Hokie Gajan early in the first quarter and beat the Giants 10-3. But because of the NFL's tiebreaker procedure, the Giants went into the game knowing a win or loss had no bearing on their playoff possibilities.

"I am not thinking about the variables," Giants linebacker Harry Carson said. "Right now, the way I look at it our season is over. I don't know what is going to happen in the other games. If it happens, it happens. I'm not holding my breath."

THE AFC Central title will be decided in two games — division-leading Pittsburgh, 8-7, against the Raiders in Los Angeles and Cincinnati, 7-8, at home for Buffalo. If the Bengals win and the Steelers lose, Cincinnati takes the title because their intra-division record is better.

The NFC playoff race is more scrambled. The Rams could have wrapped up a wild-card berth by beating San Francisco on Friday night, but the West champion 49ers prevailed 19-16.

Now, the big game Sunday features the St. Louis Cardinals at the Washington Redskins.

By virtue of the Giants' loss, the Redskins have virtually clinched a playoff spot - all Washington has to do is come within 46 points of the Cardinals to make the postseason playoffs.

If St. Louis wins by 46 or more points, then the Redskins and Rams capture wild-card spots and Dallas is eliminated.

But, a Redskins' victory would give them the NFC East title, give the Rams a wild-card spot and knock the Cardinals out of the playoffs. Also, a Washington victory would leave the final playoff berth to be settled Monday night - if Dallas wins, the Cowboys are in; if Miami

If St. Louis beats Washington by no more than 46 points, the Cardinals win the NFC East and the Redskins get a wild-card berth. Also, a St. Louis victory would eliminate the Giants and again leave it up to Monday night's game — Dallas goes to the playoffs if it wins, the Rams would go if Miami wins.

Los Angeles may start veteran quarterback Jim Plunkett, who replaced Marc Wilson at quarterback in the second half of Monday night's 24-3 win in Detroit after half the season on the bench with assorted injuries.

NFC Central champion Chicago, 9-6 and losers of its last two, will be trying simply to keep its players healthy for the playoffs and may even play 39-year-old quarterback Greg Landry, signed last week to help replace the injured Jim McMahon and Steve Fuller at quarterback. Detroit will be trying to salvage what it can from a 4-10-1 season

Houston, 3-2 after starting 0-10, could actually move into third place in the AFC Central if its beats 4-11 Cleveland. The Browns, 3-2 since Marty Schottenheimer replaced Sam Rutigliano, won the first meeting 27-10.

Cards-Redskins vie for NFC East

WASHINGTON (AP) - It will be all or nothing at all today for the St.Louis Cardinals as they bid to unseat the Washington Redskins as Eastern Division champions and win a National Football League playoff

"It's all there for there for the taking. This is the biggest game of my career and probably everyone else's in St.Louis," said Cardinal quarterback Neil Lomax, as the Redbirds try to nail down their first division title in 10 years.

"If they beat us here they deserve to champions," said Redskin assistant head coach Richie Petitbon.

The Redskins, who have beaten the Cardinals in nine of their last 11 meetings, have proven to be extremely tough during the stretch under head coach Joe Gibbs. In four years under Gibbs, the Redskins have not lost a game in the final month of the regular season.

'This is a money team," said Gibbs. "The guys seem to respond to the pressure and get down to business at this time of year."

The Redskins, 10-5, are counting on a victory to springboard the team to their third straight National Conference championship and another trip to the Super Bowl.

The winner of the game not only will capture the division title but also will earn $10,000 a man and the right to host a first-round game in the playoffs. The latter is considered crucial to the Redskins, who never have lost a playoff game at home, if they are to successfully defend their conference crown.

"The players, the coaches, the fans know what's at stake," said Gibbs. "I can't see anybody coming in flat for this one.

For St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan the problem is keeping his young team from getting too up for the

"Hopefully they won't be so tight they won't be able to perform," said Hanifan.

Both teams are coming into the game riding three-game winning streaks and off impressive showings last week.

St.Louis, 9-5, in a must-win situation, knocked the Giants out of a first-place tie with a 31-21 victory in St.Louis.

The Redskins gained sole possession of first place in the division as they overcame a 15-point halftime deficit to hand the Cowboys a 30-28 setback in Dallas.

Sunday's meeting between the two division rivals is the second of the year. In the previous game, the Cardinals edged the Redskins in St. Louis 26-24 and -yard Neil O'Donoghue field goa with three second remaining.

Both sides say the outcome of the first game favors their opponent Sunday.

'You have to give the nod to St.Louis," said Gibbs. "They have already beaten us. Statistically they are way ahead of us both offensively and defensively. In the first game we had them down (the Redskins led 21-10) and they came back. It was no fluke.

"The Redskins have all the advantages Sunday. They are playing in their own backyard, they have the revenge factor and they know they can do it," said Lomax.

Offensively, there is little to choose from.

The Redskins will try and establish a running game with John Riggins, 1,163 yards and 13 touchdowns. The Cardinals will counter with Ottis Anderson, 1,150 yards and six

Lomax, who has earned a spot in the Pro Bowl, is completing 59 percent of his passes for 4,151 yards including 26 touchdowns. He has been intercepted 15 times. His counterpart, Joe Theismann, is also completing 59 percent of his tosses for 3,093 yards including 22 touchdowns. He has been intercepted 12

Roy Green, who is averaging over 19 yards a reception for his 70 catches, represents the Cardinals deep threat. Green has scored 10 touchdowns.

Theismann's favorite target is Art Monk. The NFL's leafing receiver with 95 catches, Monk needs just six more receptions to tie Charley Hennigan's 20-year-old record for receptions in a single season.

Are you ready to own your own business and earn BIG $$$$? If your answer to this question is yes, why not the EGG business! It's a multi-billion dollar a year business, that's reason enough isn't it?

If you seriously want to own your own business, then you owe if to yourself to investigate the unique method we use to market our products. Products are sold to the consumer through retail establishments. We are now interviewing for local distributors to service these accounts. Would you pay 60∉ a dozen for egg's & collect $3.60 a dozen? We bet you would. As a matter of fact we will show you how our program does exactly that for our distributor. Our Chicken does indeed lay the GOLDEN EGG.

Don't worry about job security, do something about it. OWN YOUR OWN BUSINESS NOW.

If you are looking for a home in the '200,000 - '250,000 ange, come see this one, it really is special. 4BR, 3 full baths, 3 L.A., formal dining, island kitchen, utility room with sink, 3 car garage, many extra custom features, all built around an enclosed 20x14 ft (approx) heated and cooled atrium, on large lot in coveted Trinity Estates. Not the same boring floor plan you've already seen 100 times. Light and bright with 5 skylights but still has richness of beautiful wood picture frame paneling and lovely custom cabinets. Drive by and then don't be afraid to call for more information (or directions if you can't find it). No high pressure sales tactics. We like honest friendly negotiating and will work with realtors if you prefer home of Pam and Fred Walsh.

The Walsh staircase is laced by evergreen boughs and crowned with a large wreath.

Christmas is snow, togetherness, stockings hung by the chimney with care and children peaking over the banisters hoping to catch a glimpse of Santa.

Even though West Texans seldom experience a white Christmas, some local families are still able to go downstairs Christmas morning for a family celebration in front of a fireplace.

Mrs. Jack Hauke has had 27 years experience decorating fireplaces for Christmas. She and her husband gathered many treasured momentos through the infancies and childhoods of their three children. Some of these ornaments have been given to their children and grandchildren for their own Christmas decorating and some are still used by the Haukes in their Saddle Club home.

"I like the old-fashioned look," Mrs. Hauke said. "Lots of things around the house, lots of tinsel, lots of glitter ... and especially candles.'

For her fireplace she uses an enormous wreath to give the room a welcoming look. And she is careful not to place any decorations too close to the fireplace opening.

"I think people should be very aware of fire," Mrs. Hauke said. "... hanging stockings in front of the fireplace might be dangerous. Parents should be aware of that, especially with small children."

In addition to decorations with an oldfashioned look, she also uses evergreen, ribbons and bows, glitter and "lots of lights - I put twinkle lights everywhere."

Some fireplace decorations in the Dill's north Midland home are family traditions, including evergreen, red ribbons and the nutcracker.

The fireplace in the sitting room of the Pfiester's Saddle Club home is decorated in Colonial Williamsburg style.

Christmas

requires care

By LINDA ANDERSON Lifestyle Writer

A fireplace's warming glow and a gaily-decorated Christmas tree symbolize the traditional holiday season.
Unfortunately, the combination can be deadly.

According to Ernest A. Emerson, state fire marshall, nearly two-thirds of all fires occur in family dwellings, and a large number of these home fires happen during the holiday season.

"Evergreen Christmas trees as well as wrapping paper and decorative ornaments can all be highly flammable, especially when placed near faulty light wiring, worn or overloaded extension cords or heating appliances," Emerson said.

Fire prevention is important all year but during the Christmas season, with all its bright lights, candles, evergreen branches and other potential hazards, families should be especially aware of possible dangers.

Jerry Petree, fire marshall for the City of Midland, said many home fires occur at this time of year, when the weather gets cold and people begin lighting furnaces and fireplaces.

"WE DON'T RECOMMEND flammable-type decorations over the fireplace. When evergreen boughs are dry they are very flammable," he said. "Don't use them around fireplaces or candles."

Evergreen boughs and trees should never be burned in a fireplace, he said. "Evergreen burns just like gasoline."

He said each year several fires are caused by candles because "you can't predict what a candle will do." Petree recommended several other steps for using fireplaces safely:

— Never use a flammable liquid such as gasoline, charcoal lighter fluid to start a fire in

— If using commercially sold manmade logs, burn only one at a time.

These logs produce up to five times the heat of natural wood logs and are potentially dangerous if more than one is burned at a time.

Be sure the flue is open.
 Visually inspect the flue opening before starting a fire.

 Never burn trash such as wrapping paper in a fireplace.

— Inspect the fireplace periodically during the winter for gaps in the firebrick or metal box of the fireplace. Inspect the flue pipe from the top to be sure it has not shifted.

Never leave a fire unattended.
 Always close the screen when using the fireplace.

Do not place any decorative material or combustible materials near the front or sides of a fireplace.
 Place matches and other fire-— Place matches and other firemaking materials well out of the reach of children. Discourage use of the fireplace unless an adult is present.

Clean flues periodically to remove creosote buildup.
 United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. insurance company offered additional fireplace safety tips.

Keep a metal screen in front of the fireplace to prevent flying embers from starting room fires.
Don't use large amounts of paper to build roaring fires. Soot in the chimney can by ignited by overbuilt fires in the fireplace.

— Never burn charcoal in the fireplace, and never burn a charcoal broiler or hibachi unit inside. Burning charcoal gives off deadly amounts of carbon monoxide.

— Never allow flammable materials to decorate or hang down from the mantel. Sparks hitting such materials can cause a fire.

— Never close the damper when hot ashes are in the fireplace. Hot ashes can build up heat to the ignition point, causing the room to catch fire. Be sure the fire is out before going to bed.

— If the fireplace hasn't been used for some time, have it and the chimney checked before anyone

Follow directions on the package of man-made logs. Never break one of these man-made logs apart to quicken the fire.

FIRE PREVENTION at Christmas extends beyond the fireplace. Other tips Petree listed were:

— Purchase firm, fresh Christmas trees and keep them stored in a cool place with the base of the tree in water until ready to decorate.

— If artificial trees are prefered, buy those with the UL (Underwriters Laboratories Inc., a non-profit organization testing for public safety) label. These trees are classified as flame resistant classified as flame resistant.

— Check decorative light strings for frayed wires, broken cords and loose sockets — all conditions which are potential electrical hazards. Use light strings with the UL label.

— Don't trim trees with candles or other decorations which may ignite easily. Keep the tree away from sources of heat such as fireplace, radiator or television set, which may cause it to become dry and a fire hazard.

— Don't overload electrical circuits. Wires carrying more current than they can safely handle may overheat and cause a fire. Read and follow manufacturer's instructions on light strings and never use more than the recommended number of lights on one circuit.

- Turn off lights sets, colored spot lights and other decorations when leaving home or when going

— Don't use indoor Christmas lights for outdoor decorations.

Petree also advised to use care in using the correct fuel in kerosene heaters, install smoke detectors, keep fire extinguishers in homes. He warns using kitchen ovens to warm homes can result in carbon monox-

Mrs. Hauke said she spends about 14 hours over a period of several days decorating her home for Christmas hours of work. "I enjoy it. I get self-satisfaction and memories of Christmases when I was small or when the children were small. Every ornament has a memory attached."

MRS. DON HARVEY prefers an old-fashioned look to her Christmas decorations also. The Harvey home, in one of Midland's older exclusive neighborhoods, has a fireplace and an elegantly curved staircase.

Decorating the Christmas tree is a family event, Mrs. Harvey said, and much of it is done Thanksgiving afternoon when the entire family is home. "I think it brings the family closer together."

To decorate her staircase, Mrs. Harvey laces the banister with boughs of evergreen entertwined with red ribbons, twinkle lights and lacquered fruits. Potted poinsettias are placed on the steps.

The fireplace decorations echo

those of the stairway. Evergreen boughs with red ribbons and lights frame the hearth.

The Harvey's Christmas is centered around their worship services and their family. "Christmas is for the family to be at home when possible." Mrs. Harvey said.

THREE MEMBERS of Midland Junior Woman's Club club discussed Christmas decorating traditions at their own homes. The club exhibits homes of residents throughout the community for its annual "Parade of Homes," fund-raising project in the spring to benefit the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and other organizations.

PAM AND FRED Walsh and their two children decorate their Saddle Club home together. With its two fireplaces, entryway staircase and comfortable homey feeling, the Walsh's home is ideal for traditional old-fashioned Christmas decorations.

Each year the Christmas tree is placed downstairs in the formal living room. Mrs. Walsh, said tree-decorating time is always accompanied by several family traditions, including drinking eggnog and listening to Christmas music, building a crackling fire in the fireplace—"even if it's 80 degrees outside," she said—and roasting marshmallows over the fire.

The fireplace in an upstairs game/family room has a mantle on which all the stockings are hung. "We even have stockings for the dog and the cat," Mrs. Walsh said. As a fire prevention measure, the upstairs fireplace is not lit during the Christmas season.

The stairway is decorated in redgreen-gold plaid bows on the end posts and evergreen boughs entwined through the banisters. A large wreath is hung above the stairwell. When the couple entertains, fresh poinsettias complete the stairway decorations — silk poinsettias are used for everday decoration to prevent the children from risking potential plant poisoning.

The family usually decorates for Christmas in one weekend. "I like to dive right in and get it done," Mrs. Walsh said.

KATHY AND RON Dill and their daughter have several family traditions for Christmas, including displaying a porcelain village underneath the family Christmas tree instead of gifts, and setting up a Santa display in the living room's front window. The living room display is such a community favorite that "some of the neighbor kids think Santa lives here," Dill said.

The Dill's northwest Midland home has a fireplace and a staircase. Dill said their fireplace decoration tradition includes evergreen boughs, a wreath and "we always have the nutcracker."

The theme is carried out in the stairway which is decked with evergreen boughs, red ribbons and a large wreath. The stairs have a built-in safety feature — lights which automatically turn on when the room lights are turned off.

"I think the perfect Christmas is when you can have snow on Christmas Day," Dill said. "But it's not Christmas unless the whole family is in. The place doesn't matter as long as you're with family."

WHILE TRADITIONAL decorations are popular, Rebecca Pfiester, another Junior Woman's Club member, takes "old-fashioned" back another century to Colonial Williamsburg. This Christmas, the Pfiester's Saddle Club home is decorated as the Colonists decorated in early America.

Fresh fruit — including pineapples, apples, limes, lemons and prunes — and evergreen boughs are arranged on mantel of the living room fireplace. The theme is accented in the large wreath over the fireplace and in the Christmas tree, which also is laced with ropes of popcorn and cranberries.

The second fireplace, in the Pfiester's bedroom/sitting room, is also decorated in colonial style, with mantel ornaments featuring fruit and dried plants.

Mrs. Pfiester chose Williamsburg as her Christmas theme this year because "I like new projects. I'd been thinking about it for a long time. I really like that era."

A history buff and Christmas decorator, Mrs. Pfiester researched the era thoroughly before beginning her project. "Colonial ladies made Christmas decorations with cabbages," she said. "They had to use what they had. ... The pineapple was the symbol of Colonial hospitality."

Because she wanted as much authenticity as possible in her Christmas decorations, Mrs. Pfiester was "limited as far as material.... I used what they had.... some decorations are from historic houses in the South."

The Pfiesters' seasonal traditions include small artificial Christmas trees for their children to decorate any way they choose; nursery rhyme ornaments given by Mrs. Pfiesters' mother and hung on the children's bulletin board; and the entire family participating in setting up Christmas decorations.

Planning the decorating scheme took about a year, she said. Because she used real evergreen boughs—and because cut evergreen often dries out before the holiday season is over—Mrs. Pfiester said she soaked the branches overnight or longer in a water-filled bathtub. The branches absorb the water and retain their freshness longer, she

She also used leaves from the magnolia tree in her yard.

"It took a while to collect everything," she said. "Next year I will be able to do a lot more" because much of the necessary material will have already been gathered.

"If my magnolia tree survives, I will do it again."

To celebrate the holiday season, Maxine and Bob Hannifin, entertained with a cocktail buffet recently in the Wildcatter Room of the Petroleum Club.

Some 100 guests enjoyed good conversation and a sumptuous buffet supper. The serving table featured a charming Christmas scene, with a miniature carrousel as the focal point, and garlands of greenery, accented with silver pine cones

A few of the guests were the Hannifins' children, Linda and Mark Hannifin of Midland, and Dan, a student at Angelo State University; Sharon and Goss Yeager, Sue and Pete Snelson, Cathy and Dick Stump, Shirley and Monty Gist, Karen and Tim Thompson, Julia and Bob Chandler, Emily and Dave Goodfellow, Becky and Jack Huff, Frances Metcalfe, Buddy Davidson, Patricia (Mrs. Martin) Allday and Eddie Lou Hunter.

Approximately 65 former colleagues and spouses were present for the evening's festivities, which began at seven o'clock and continued will into the wee hours of the morning. Besides the nonstop reminiscing, guests enjoyed a clever 45-minute tape presentation of old commercials and also listening to records of the type of memory music that was the station's trademark.

In addition to Mike, former owners present included Max Howard, Wayne Weekes and Jim Galyean. Among others enjoying the evening were current station owner George Bakke and his wife, Judy; Bernice (Mrs. Milton) Cardwell, who was married to the late Rudy Rubin, one of the original owners; Mary Lou Cassidy, Mike McLaren, Jesse Grimes, Steve Henderson and his wife, Laurel, Alice (Mrs. Carl) Williams, Billie (Mrs. Sumner) Boyd, Jeanne (Mrs. James Jr.) Fitz-Gerald, Carolyn and Jim Fitz-Gerald III, and Dick Schuh and his wife. Carol, who came in from San Antonio just for the occasion. Phone calls were received from former staffers Misty Fincher of Lubbock and Jim Moore of Atlanta, Ga.

Although the group has gone on to a variety of media careers in West Texas and beyond, there is still an esprit de corps that binds them together and made their recent evening together so special.

FOR THE FIFTH consecutive year, Nancy (Mrs. Andrew) Lattu entertained with a Christmas party and cookie swap. Her friends look forward to this annual event, which is traditionally held on the first Friday of December. They exchange not only the cookies but the recipes, Nancy used her collection of gingerbread men to decorate this year, and she served Mimosa punch and peppermint ice cram in coffee, along with cookies.

Among the guests were Jeri (Mrs. John) Alloway, who recently moved back to Midland from Tulsa and enjoyed seeing many other friends again, and Peggy (Mrs. Randy) McClay, along with her mother, Mrs. Sara Hodges, a Midland newcomer from San Jose, Calif. Nancy and Peggy began exchanging Christmas cookies several years ago, and the party idea

THE HOME OF Frances and Larry Stapp was the setting last Sunday afternoon for a party given by the Midland High Band Boosters to honor the Bulldog Band directors and their wives.

Mayor Thane Akins was present to proclain Dec. 9 as "Clyde Wilson and Dan Green Day" in Midland. During Clyde's 17 years as director, the band has received numerous honors, including 15 successive superior ratings at UIL Contests and has been invited back for the second time in three years to march in the 1985 Rose Bowl Parade. Dan has been the valued assistant director for the past three years. Special credit also was given to Barbara Wilson and Judy Green for their work behind the scenes

The party decor feaured red roses, which were used in an arrangement on the serving table, atop a beautifully decorated cake and on the Christmas tree. A large balloon bouquet featured the school colors of purple and gold.

Among those present were Band Booster president, Chris Newman, and her husband, Fred; MHS principal Dr. Phil Peregrine, MISD coordinator of fine arts Leslie Hinds and his wife, Hilda; Brenda (Mrs. Alton) Yowell, Charlotte and Jay Harris and Mary Ellen and Bill

It will be a proud moment for Midland when the band appears in the parade and on nationwide TV Jan. 1. Approximately 250 persons, including band members and sponsors, will leave Dec. 26 for California, returning Jan. 3.

DEAR ABBY

Beauty shop 'gone to the dogs'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm new in town. I went to the neighborhood beauty parlor near my house because it was handy. It looked pretty nice from the cutside, but when I got inside I noticed the floor needed a good scrubbing. Before my beauty opera-tor put me in her chair, she went to the hamper and picked out a dirty towel and wined the chair with it! towel and wiped the chair with it!

I noticed two dogs sitting in the drying chairs, scratching to beat the band - both of them. I asked if they had fleas, and the operator said, No, my dogs are cleaner than most of my customers.'

She owns the shop, and there was a sign on her mirror, big as life, that said, "Yes, you may tip the owner"!

Before she set my hair she said, Who gave you this miserable haircut?" Then she reached for her scis-sors and said, "I'll see what I can do write to the Board of Cosmetology it's the worst botched-up mess in care of your state capital. I've ever seen.'

I told her not to cut anything, then I started to cough and asked for a glass of water. She brought me some water in a dirty glass with lipstick on the rim.

Abby, don't beauty shops have to pass some kind of inspection? I hate to be a stool pigeon, but who should report her to? This place was so filthy, I went home and took a bath. DISSATISFIED CUSTOMER

If you enjoy growing or showing off plants in containers, consider the wall pot. It's in the marketplace today in a variety of materials, from lightweight and cheap to heavy and costly, export, import, or locally

I may be attracted to classic terracotta wall pots, but there is also something inherently appealing about the lightness and availability of plastic, especially dark green or black; it can also be painted the same color as the wall against which it will be hung.

Another view about the wall pot is to use it more as a vase: Fill and hang with plants or flowers on occasion, then remove and store until

My apartment has structural columns in a range of 1 to 3 feet from all the windows, which happen to be south-facing and sunny. In various rooms I have wall pots of plexiglass, moss-stuffed wire, bark-mounted orchids, bromeliads and staghorn ferns and plastic, which I have "naturalized" by covering with woods moss tied in place with green florist shrubs. Pile peat moss, shredded bark, bark chips, straw or other natural material to a depth of six inches around the base of the new plant. This keeps the ground frozen hard and insures the plant won't be thrown from its new home during warm-cold spells.

Gardeners prepare tor winter

Clip dead leaves off perennials and pull out dead annuals. Dispose of fallen apples, crabapples and other fruit. Clean up all dead plant material, otherwise disease will consider it a nice home for the winter and return next spring with all sorts of expensive, difficult problems for you to solve.

Clean shovels, trowels, wheelbarrows and other garden tools. Coat the cleaned metal surfaces with a very light coating of household utility oil. Otherwise, six months of inactivity and winter moisture will bring on rusting. Don't throw away shovels and spades with broken handles. Replacement handles (often better than the original) are available at most hardware stores.

Disconnect, drain and store gar-MULCH OR cover newly-planted den hoses, sprinklers and top-of-

WHILE OUTDOORS, you may have stumbled over fallen apples and pine cones. Either can be used to create long-lasting decorations

To make a small, indoor apple wreath, core and slice a dozen unbruised apples into quarter-inch sections. Discard the ends. Dry the slices for a few days and then fashion the shriveled slices into a wreath, using sturdy brown twine. Dry the wreath on a sheet of wax paper. Pine cones are attractive when heaped in a basket or bowl with miniature Christmas lights intertwined. A few bright red bows of ribbon or twigs of evergreen add a bit of necessary color. Any pine cone will do; the bigger the better. If brought from the outdoors, let the cones air dry for a few days.

BEDROOM UPDATE

The decorative look in bedrooms has radically changed in the past few years. Interior designers have utilized a fresh approach in creating a sitting room ambience rather than a total bedroom mood. This whole new feeling is acheived primarily through the elimination of chests, armoires, wardrobes and old-fashioned bedroom suite. They produced a 'storage room' look that was cumbersome and unappealing. The new feeling is also achieved by the inclusion of additional furnishings that give the room comfort, convenience and the lovely appearance that is aesthetically pleasing. Nowhere is this updated look more appropriate than in an apartment or town house bedroom, where space is at a

Vinegar has lenghty history

Copley News Service

Vinegar is one of those items that no household is without, but which no one ever gives much thought to. It has a rather interesting history, though.

Wine is mankind's oldest fermentation product, and wine vinegar the second. Babylonians of ancient times made it from the wine of the date palm.

During Victorian times, straightlaced ladies packed themselves into whalebone corsets and fainted at the drop of a hanky. These ladies wore aromatic vinegars, or vinaigrettes, on chains around their necks in case of an emergency fainting spell. In Colonial times, American dames made vinegar scented with garden herbs to perfume the home and to ward off the plague.

Cleaner lawn stays healthier useless words or expressions.

Héarst News Service

Autumn's soggy days and chilly nights signal the gardener that just a few more weeks remain to get the lawn and garden in shape to face

This is a borderline season, for there's little joy in working outdoors. But it is also a season that pays big dividends when tasks are completed now. And a season that extracts a stiff price if tasks are neg-

Removing soggy leaves is one such task. No fun to rake, they must be removed. Left to winter over and removed in the spring, the leaves will smother and kill grass plants. A mat of fallen leaves also is a home for turf diseases that will be costly to eradicate next year.

Established lawns can be raked while wet, but new lawns or repaired areas where grass is younger than three months will be damaged by vigorous raking. Roots of young plants don't have a firm hold on sub-surface soil particles, so with a bit of extra moisture and a gentle tugging from rake tines, the plant is pulled out. There are two easy ways to remove leaves from new, tender lawns without hurting the plants. The first is with a rotary lawnmower and grass catcher. Set the mower deck one stop higher than that which the established lawn is cut. This is because new grass needs extra blade surface to help establish the roots. Run the mower/catcher only when the soil is dry to the touch. Otherwise, the mower's weight may crush tender blades as the wheels tend to sink into the soft earth. A preferable approach is with a leaf blower. Since there is no contact with the new grass, there is little danger of hurting it. Blowers retail for $50 to $85. That's a small price to pay if it represents the means of keeping a new lawn free of damaging leaves. The blower has become a handy tool now that manufacturers are offering accessories, such as a vacuum bag, gutter cleaning kit and fertilizer spreader. Before investing in a blower, check the availability of these accessories.

Plant spring-flowering bulbs before the ground freezes. Many garden centers, anxious to clear stocks, are selling hyacinths, tulips, daffodils and others at savings of 50 percent. These sales are usually a splendid opportunity to plant plenty of bulbs for both display and cut-

There should be nothing wrong with bulbs still left in the garden center. Choose those that are plump and firm; avoid any that have sprouted or are bruised or soggy. Look for bulbs sold individually from bins, rather than those sold in boxes. Bulbs packaged in cartons may be less vigorous because of storage time in cartons and a lack of air circulation. With bulbs selling for a dime or less, consider planting 50 or 100 to use as fresh flowers in the spring. Plant them in any sunny corner of the garden. Look for varities that bloom early in the season. A Juneflowering tulip is not as welcome in the winter-weary home as is an April bloomer. Even if the bulbs are pulled up and discarded next spring, you will have had fresh flowers for pennies per bloom. Lightly rake beds mulched with bark or chips, especially if the mulch has been in place longer than one season. Shredded bark is widely — and wisely — used in rose beds, foundation plantings and other landscaped areas. It holds in moisture and keeps the soil cool. Mulch has an important job in the winter, too. It ensures that once the ground freezes that it stays frozen. This is important, especially for newly-planted shrubs and bushes.

Toy trends take off

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Jody DiSalvo was frustrated. Her son, David, 10, was looking at an empty space with a $75 label on it. "I think," the mother said, "it would be cheaper if we went to Japan."

DiSalvo's consideration of a trip to the Far East was prompted by her son's attraction to the space formerly occupied by a Japanese made.

merly occupied by a Japanese-made robot in a Los Angeles toy store. The 15-inch-tall fantasy figure was gone.

Only the price tag remained.

It's not surprising that robots are selling about as fast as store managers can get them on the shelves. They are at the top of a lot of Christmas lists this year.

Surveys by toy magazines and interviews with local toy stores indicate the hottest toy items during the 25 shopping days 'til Christmas will be dolls (led by Cabbage Patch Kids), robots (led by GoBots and Transformers) and trivia games (led by Trivial Pursuit).

"The trends are pretty clear now," said Douglas Thomson, president of the Toy Manufacturers of America, the nation's toy industry trade asso-ciation. "Unquestionably, the Cabbage Patch Kids are most in demand everywhere." A Toys "R" Us spokes-woman said her retail chain's 198 stores in the United States each has an average of 5,000 names on Cabbage Patch doll waiting lists. A story in Culver City, Calif., is taking orders for July. Other dolls are being towed along in the wake of the Cabbage Patch Kids' success. Old standbys such as Barbie and Ken are ringing up big sales, especially the Great Shape Barbie and Ken with their little plas-tic bodies stuffed into the trendiest of exercise outfits.

Among other dolls on the "top 10" lists compiled by two trade journals, Playthings and Toy & Hobby World, are Rainbow Brite, My Little Pony and Care Bears.

Doils favored by boys a re having a big year. In general, they are known as "action figures" in deference to an aversion of many boys to being labeled as "playing w ith dolls." (Although, in truth, a lot of boys do play with dolls. Referring to Cabbage Patch Kids, a Toys "R" Us executive said, "There are an incredible number of boys who want them and have them.") have them.")

Robots, which lead the action-figure parade, have become so popular they have established their own niche in the toy indus try's lexicon.
"They started off as a action figures and then got so big that they spun off as a category of their own," said Frank Reysen, editor of Playthings.

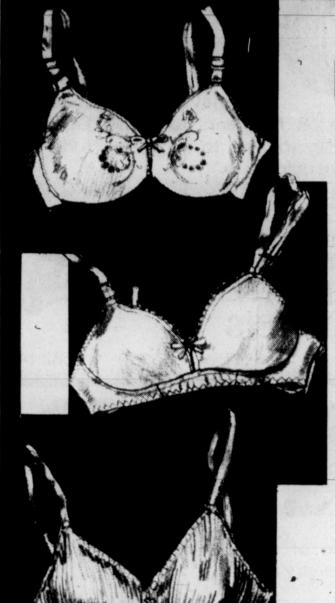

Top-selling robots are plastic or metal and plastic figures called metal and plastic figures called GoBots and Transformers. These toys, with prices starting around $3.50, start out looking like ambulances, jeeps, spor ts cars, tape recorder cassettes, jet airplanes, motor scooters and sundry other innocent-appearing o bjects. Horse rides help disabled children

MERCED, Calif. (AP) - It's hard to keep kids away from ponies, and the children in the ASTRIDE class are no different when they reach the equestrian ring at a Merced area

But these youngsters are different from most.

They are disabled. One suffered brain damage in a car accident, another has spina bifida, and another has Down's syndrome.

ASTRIDE stands for Academy for Special Therapeutic Ride. The free program offers horseback riding lessons to physically and mentally disabled children.

Riding provides the feeling of freedom, confidence, excitement and accomplishment for the handicapped person," said ASTRIDE director Lois Knoll, who coordinates the program at a ring next to her ranch house "The motion of the horse moves the rider back and forward and side to side, causing the rider to learn to compensate for this motion and adjust his balance," she explained. The class is the high point of the week for Christen Cameron, a brown-haired 6-year-old girl with spina bifida.

We wouldn't miss Tuesday evenings because we are reminded of it all week long," said her mother, Sandra, who adopted Christen when she was 4 months old after the spinal cord defect was apparent.

"She may forget therapy and swimming lessons, but she won't forget riding lessons," Mrs. Cameron said. "As soon as we get in the car, she is bubbling like a magpie."

Thomas Sullivan was leaning on the arena gate as his 8-year-old daughter, Katie, rode. She suffered a damaging blow to the left side of her head in a traffic collision that claimed the driver of the other car's life four years ago.

"These kids have limited occasion to smile," he said, as Katie worked to perfect her balance.

"Riding is therapeutic," noted Mrs. Knoll. "It will strengthen muscles and develop muscle control, balance and coordination. It also helps develop self-confidence and attention span for both the physically and mentally handicapped."

Tony Huish, 10, has Down's syndrome. He advanced in his sixth class to riding with breakaway stir-

"It doesn't look like much for Tony to handle the reins and squeeze his knees against the horse," admitted Mrs. Knoll, a kindergarten instructor who used to teach special education. "But it took six weeks to bring him to this point.

She and her husband, Mike, developed the program on the advice of Christine McPharland of Sacramento, vice presidnt of the North America Riding Handicapped Association. The program is supported by donations.

Her son, Josh, inadvertently was helpful in choosing the horse and two ponies for the program.

"One of the horses took Josh by the shirt and lifted him upright with his teeth. Immediate disqualification," Mrs. Kroll said. For the chosen three. "We ran at them with wheelbarrows, threw coats on their backs and pretended to fall off to see if they would stop.'

The horses were trained to ignore wheelchairs, crutches and a ramp used by the children for mounting. The animals also must be calm enough to tolerate three adults hemming them in: two beside the horse holding onto straps around a rider's waist and one in the lead.

"Our goals are safety, enjoyment and a sense of achievement for the riders," Mrs. Knoll said.

Study finds previous successful pregnancy lowers risk

CHICAGO (AP) — Although women in their late 30s face twice the risk of abnormal births in a first-time pregnancy as women in their 20s, a researcher says the occurrence of still or premature births remains low.

In both age groups, women who had one successful previous pregnancy faced less risk of such problems, while women with a previous abortion or miscarriage ran the greatest risk, according to a study, published in a recent Journal of the American Medical Association.

The study, conducted by Dr. Michele Forman, an epidemiologist with the federal Centers for Disease Control, and two colleagues, tended to support previous studies showing increased risks for women who delayed childbearing until their late

Babies' feedings cause concern

Hearst News Service

When to start babies on solid foods — and which solid foods — used to be matters of conjecture and cultural preference. Some cultures held that babies should be introduced to adult foods as soon as possible to "strengthen" the child. Others kept children on the breast long after mother's milk ceased to be enough.

Today, the answers to questions about when to wean and what foods to introduce are better known, but, ironically, it's the baby who gives them. Pediatricians, nutritionists and parents have learned to pay attention to the baby's own clues about readiness for solid food.

Marge Fujikawa, a nutritionist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture Food and Nutrition office in San Francisco, said researchers have developed height-and-weight graphs and charted growth curves to describe a range of normal infant development. The fact that baby weighs so much and has attained such-and-such a length is one indicator that it may be time to bring out the baby food food when people are eating.

But there are other indicators, says Ida Laquatra, a nutritionist for the Heinz company. These developmental signs include sitting up, making smacking and swallowing motions and showing interest in food when people are eating.

Public health nutritionist Shirley Franklin said these signs rarely are present before the ages of 4-6 months. In the case of premature infants, the development may be slower still. Referring to the 4-6 month guidelines, Franklin said it's often difficult to "hold mothers off that long."

Laquatra noted that there's a certain amount of social pressure to rush a child along the developmental path ("My baby is walking already," etc.). And some mothers are eager to be done with breastfeeding. As a rule, Laquatra said, babies below 4 months of age have no need for solid food. Breast milk or a proper formula provide all the nutrition they need.

Starting a child on solid food before that time may be dangerous, as very young infants do not yet have the ability to swallow naturally, Franklin said.

It also may lead to overfeeding and possible obesity, Laquatra said. A very young infant is not yet able to give the clues that say "I've had enough," she said. However, she said it's important to begin children on solid foods when they are ready because by 46 months a child's natural reserves of iron have been depleted and additional sources are Almost everyone recommends iron-fortified cereal as a baby's first solid food, said Franklin and Laquatra — often rice cereal because it tends to be the least allergenic.

At first, the child may take only a teaspoon or two, the nutritionalists said, and that's fine. But it's sometimes hard to convince mothers of this.

"We tend to belong to the 'clean plate club,' Franklin said. Even before solid foods are introduced, parents often force-feed children without meaning any harm, she said.
"If the child stops at 3.5 ounces."

"If the child stops at 3.5 ounces, we encourage him to take the 4 ounces to use the bottle up," Franklin said.

Fujikawa said pediatricians have found that bottle-fed children tend to be heftier than breast-fed infants for this reason.

"With the breast, you're not keeping track of how much the child has taken," she said.

"Babies are amazingly able to regulate the correct amount of food they need," she said. She noted that people often mistake fat babies for healthy babies, but fat cells developed in infancy stay with individuals throughout life, making them more likely to be overweight adults.

Franklin said nutritionists look for children who are "jumping graphs" on the weight chart but not gaining length at the same rate. When this happens, they warn parents against overfeeding.

"If the child needs to suck, you can use a pacifier or give plain water," she said. Often, parents don't realize that it's not the baby's need to eat, but their own need to feed the child that they're seeking to satisfy.

Once the baby is taking cereal comforably, the experts suggest introducing other foods one at a time — fruit, vegetables, mixed foods and meats, in that order. Franklin advises bringing in new foods no more often than every four days to give any allergies time to

One food which shouldn't be given to children under 1 year of age is honey. Franklin and Laquatra said there is a microorganism of the botulism family present in honey which can make infants ill. Older children and adults are able to process the "bug" without difficulty.

However, the new study, which reviewed data from nearly 175,000 births in Sweden from 1976 through 1980, was the first to examine the role of previous pregnancies.

"We should underscore that even though the risks are there for women in their 30s, we're still talking about rates that are very low," Ms. Forman said.

In the study, Ms. Forman, an epidemiologist from the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, and two colleagues reviewed data from nearly 175,000 births in Sweden from 1976 through 1980.

"We're not quite sure what to attribute the low rate of adverse outcome to, but it appears things like good obstetrical management and prenatal care are important factors" she said tors," she said.

"Those who are delayed child-bearers (in Sweden), like women in the United States, tend to be highly educated and health-conscious, and avail themselves of good medical care throughout the pregnancy," she said.

Ms. Forman stressed that similar studies should be conducted using data gathered from women in the United States.

"It's important to keep in mind that the ethnic and racial configurations of our sample group were markedly different from a sampling of women in the United States," she

"We know, for instance, the rate of adverse pregnancy outcome is higher for black women than for whites and these are the kinds of things we must continue to

Ms. Forman and her colleagues based their findings on studies of three groups of women ranging in age from 20 through 39 years.

The first group included women pregnant for the first time; the second group, those who had a previous pregnancy that ended in abortion or miscarriage; and the third group, women who had one successful pregnancy.

The lowest rate of stillbirths was found among the last group, the study found. For those women aged 20 to 24, with one successful pregnancy, the rate was approximately three stillbirths per thousand; for the 35 to 39 age group, the rate was 6.5 stillbirths per thousand.

the 35 to 39 age group, the rate was 6.5 stillbirths per thousand.

The rate of stillbirths for women ages 20 to 24 and pregnant for the first time was 4.4 per thousand, compared with 7.8 per thousand for the 35 to 39 age group.

Toy safety tips given

From Staff Reports

For families with young children, Christmas means new toys. And parents of these children want to know about the safety of toys before purchasing them.

Children twist, bang, pick at, taste, step on, bite, sit on, throw and squeeze toys. Therefore, buying playthings which will not break, chip, crack or peal under such abuse is important.

is important.

Information from Growing Child newsletter for parents stated that Federal safety regulations and voluntary industry standards call for manufacturers testing the toys for sharp edges, sharp points, brittleness and small parts. Devices designed specifically for these tests are:

— Sharp edge tester which identifies toys or other articles presenting an unreasonable risk of injury by cuts due to sharp metal or glass edges:

— Sharp point tester which identifies items posing a risk of injury by puncture or laceration due to nonfunctional sharp edges or points;

Bite test clamp which identifies mouth toys, or playthings reasonable intended to be placed into or in contact with a child's mouth, that are made of brittle material which may splinter or shatter when bitten;

— Rattle test fixture which identifies rattles which may cause choking or suffocation because their design permits them to enter an infant's mouth and become lodged in the throat; and

— Small parts cylinder, a small, plastic cylinder, which identifies toys or other articles posing a choking, aspiration or ingestion hazard because of small parts.

CONSUMERS, WHO of course don't have access to these tools, can still conduct toy tests of their own. Purchasers should be aware of the kinds of hazards present and examine each toy with an eye to the possible dangers both in the store and periodically as the toy is used.

Simple tests and observations consumers should make include:

— Checking toy construction for strength. Try to pull off eyes but-strength. Try to pull off eyes, buttons, wheels, parts, pieces and ornaments. These items can cause choking if a child pulls them off and swallows them.

— Checking rattles to make sure no part or end is small enough to fit into a baby's mouth.

— Dropping toys from a height

Dropping toys from a height onto a hard surface to make sure they don't shatter or break.

— Checking for flame-resistance of cloth items, and for safety of painted item. Today most paints used on toys are non-toxic, but be suspicious of coatings on antique or hand-me-down items.

— Running a finger around the edges of metal, plastic or glass pieces to check for sharpness. Sometimes molded plastics will have a rough edge of extra material at a seam. These can often be filed or sanded off. Sharpness designed into a toy should be avoided.

— Trying to push over items such as riding or sitting toys which are large enough to place on the floor. The base should be broad enough for stability.

— Making sure toy chests have lids with support mechanisms to keep them open. Many injuries, some severe, have been reported from toy chest lids slamming down on children's hands or heads.

— Checking for rough hards

- Checking for rough hardware, exposed screw and bolts, rough wood and splinters.

— Avoiding scissor-like mechanisms which can pinch, crush or cut

 Avoiding toys with sharp points or propelled objects which can injure eyes.

— Activating toys which make noise to make sure they are not loud enough to damage hearing if set off close to ears.

 Not purchasing items with heating elements for children under 8 years old.

— When buying outdoor play equipment, bicycles or tricycles, buying according to the child's age and size. Make sure there are no rough edges or exposed hardware. After purchase take time to assemble or install equipment properly and according to manufacturer's instructions. Place swing sets at least six feet away from houses, trees, sandboxes or other obstructions. Install equipment over sand, grass or dirt, but not over concrete or other hard surfaces.

FOR SAFETY and satisfaction, many manufacturers label toy packages with recommended ages.

— Safety: Toys which are too complex or too simple encourage misuse and often lead to injury. For example, toys designed for older children can have smaller parts than toys designed for pre-schoolers. A toddler who plays with a toy designed for a 6-year-old runs a greater risk of choking or swallowing one of those smaller parts.

— Satisfaction: A child given a toy too advanced will often feel frustrated rather than entertained. And a child given a toy too elementary for his skills will be bored.

Age ranges, when given, refer to the years when children are most likely to get the most pleasure and usefulness from a toy. A toy in the appropriate age range will challenge a child and help develop and expand skills

CHILDREN'S TOYS are tools for learning, exploring, discovering and developing new skills and talents, as well as for playing:

— A dangling mobile over a crib encourages a baby to kick his legs and swing his arms, thereby developing strength, coordination and awareness of his body parts.

 A nesting and stacking toy teaches a toddler size and shape con-

Twisting and turning toys give a preschooler practice in using hands and fingers in small precise movements, necessary skills in learning to write.

 A lacing toy helps coordination of hands and fingers and teaches space concepts such as in and out, over and under.

— Toys with lids or parts that fit together refine the ability of eyes and hands to work together, an important skill in perfecting physical agility and academic performance.

— Many toys and books teach color recognition, important in everyday life, such as when to cross the street by the color of the light.

Puzzles teach the relationship of parts to the whole and subtle shape differences.

 Board games can help develop reasoning ability and abstract thinking and planning, which contibute to readiness for school tasks.

Author urges talking to child about safety

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The best way to keep your children safe in the city, Grace Hechinger says, is to talk to

"I raised my children in New York," Mrs. Hechinger says, "and well-meaning suburban friends said, 'How can you bring up children in the city?' Frankly, I could have used some guidance."

In her book "How to Raise a Street-Smart Child" (Facts on File Publications, $14.95), Mrs. Hechinger offers other parents that guidance. In chapters on such things as mugging, sexual abuse, bullies and traffic, she discusses how to prepare children for unpleasant and dangerous situations and how to help them if they become victims.

Mrs. Hechinger, a writer who specializes in family life, education and women's issues, says it is important not to protect children from the reality around them, but to make them aware of the dangers they may

"Parents think their children should keep their innocence as long as possible," she said. "The world doesn't work that way. If parents ever have a choice between mentioning something to children or not mentioning something to children, they should mention it. If there's a choice between talking and not talking, always choose talking, even if it's more difficult."

Many of the things children should be taught, she says, are general: a broad understanding that the world is not perfect and an awareness that the rules for family and friends do not always apply to strangers.

In spite of the standard family caveats, she says in her book, there are times when children should not always answer a question when sked; should not, when spoken to by an adult, always acknowledge the adult with a smile or an answer; should not always do what adults sk them to do. And there are times when they should bother other people or make a scene because sometic is making them uncomfortable.

Much of the advice Mrs.

dechinger provides, however, is hore specific. She suggests playing what if?" games with children, to make them think about what they ald do in a certain situation.

Medical researchers try to preselect sex of child

Hearst News Service

In an era in which some medical researchers claim they can successfully preselect the sex of a child, little girls no longer are made of sugar and spice; they're made of X and X chromosomes. And little boys now are made of X and Y chromosomes, rather than snips and snails.

The most common method of predeterming sex is one developed by Dr. Ronald Ericsson, a Sausalito, Calif. reproductive physiologist and president of Gametrics Ltd., which has patented a procedure in which the sperm is separated from the seminal fluid by a centrifuge. The sperm is then placed in the top of a glass column filled with albumin, a serum protein found in the human

of the albumin, the swifter males outpacing the slower, more sturdy females so in two to three hours the fluid at the bottom contains more male sperm. The woman is then artificially inseminated.

Ericsson developed the technique in the '70s and claims a success rate of 77 percent. He is working on another technique for girls.

Other preconception methods center on changing vaginal secretions. The theory behind these methods is that an alkaline environment in the woman's reproductive organs will produce a male, while a more acid environment will produce more females. Hence the use of baking soda or vinegar douches, among other techniques.

The sperm swim to the bottom a 1982 book by Sally Langendoen and William Proctor, puts forth another method, accomplished through changing the diet to include foods high in sodium and low in calcium and magnesium for boys, and the reverse for girls. They claim a success rate of 80 percent.

"Your Baby's Sex: Now You Can Choose," a 1971 book by Dr. Lan-drum Shettles and David R. Rorvik, recommends douching, timing and orchestrating intercourse. The latter involves different positions and techniques. Shettles claims a success rate of 80 percent.

Dr. Edgar Henriques, vice chairman of the division of reproductive endocrinology and infertility of the departmet of obstetrics and gynecology at Albany (N.Y.) Medical College, will discuss the various preconception techniques, although he does not practice them and makes it clear the surest medical method available he regards them as unproven. Henri-ques carefully disassociates himself from the post-conception technique

Henriques says that "the statistics are not conclusive" regarding Ericsson's claimed success rate. Of the "Preconception Gender Diet;" Henriques says: "This is another way of changing vaginal secretions, but not everybody can go about this. The point here is people should not go and change their diets radically without knowing what they are working with." Of timing of sexual intercourse, different positions and techniques, Henriques regards these as "hocus pocus."

If there are problems with preselection, there are even more with

- the use of prenatal diagnostic tests such as amniocentesis to identify the sex of the child, and aborting the fetus if it is not of the desired sex. The questions here are not only medical but ethical.

Amniocentesis is a procedure in which a needle is inserted into the uterus to withdraw fluid, which is then tested for indications of abnormality. The procedure, which costs around $500, also reveals the sex of the child. Since aminocentesis is not done until around the 16th week of pregnancy and normally requires a few more weeks for results, that would place an abortion in the second trimester of pregnancy, which as Henriques points out, involves "more costs, more complications, more dangers.

Says Henriques: "Personally, I do not believe that we should really terminate a preganancy for the sex of the child." He adds that he would refuse a patient's request for an abortion for such a reason, but acknowledges other doctors believe it is the parents' right to choose. And there is nothing, he admits, to stop a determined couple from obtaining amniocentesis from an unsuspecting source and then going elsewhere for an abortion. However, Henriqes says, such circumstances

"Most women who have amniocentesis don't even want to know the sex of the child. They want the surprise. They just want to know they don't have a baby with a major birth defect.'

Children given surgery preview

NEW YORK (AP) - If children understand exactly what is going to happen, and why, the experience of undergoing surgery will not only be easier for them, but also for their parents and for the hospital staff, says Dr. Charles H. Lockhart, director of anesthesiology at The Children's Hospital in Denver.

To counteract fear of the unknown, more and more hospitals are using such techniques as videotapes, puppet shows and tours to explain what to expect, notes Lock-hart. Chairman of the committee on pediatric anesthesia of the American Society of Anesthesiologists, he recently spoke at a meeting of the 8,000-member group about this

"Our goal is to make both child and parent as comfortable as we can," he said in an interview in New York, discussing the way his own hospital deals with helping kids who suddenly find themselves in an unfamiliar environment among strangers, facing intimidating machines.

"Preparation starts at the time the family finds out that surgery is necessary — in the surgeon's office or the pediatrician's office," Lockhart

Held twice a week on a regular basis, the tour for prospective patient and family involves nurses, doctors, staff, the operating room and other areas.

"It is designed to speak to the child at his level," Lockhart points out. "It starts at the front door, then goes upstairs to the rooms or to the ambulatory surgery unit if in-andout surgery is scheduled. We show them the anesthesia machine, and they even get to hold the anesthesia mask and pretend to breathe the

The kids are allowed to ride on the operating cart and to familiarize ment by handling it. Then they are shown the "buffer" area outside the operating room, decorated with a Disney motif and supplied with toys and coloring books. There is a special tour for teen-agers.

"Each step is a reenactment of what is going to happen. Parents feel good about it, and you can see the kids getting into it," Lockhart

The kids get to ask questions, the most frequent of which, he reports, is "Will I have to have a shot?"

"If at all possible I tell them no, but if they do (need a shot) you have to tell them. And you have to tell them when they wake up they may have some discomfort, but will have medicine to ease it if needed; that they may be sick to their stomach and a little sleepy but that will pass very quickly."

> HOLIDAY

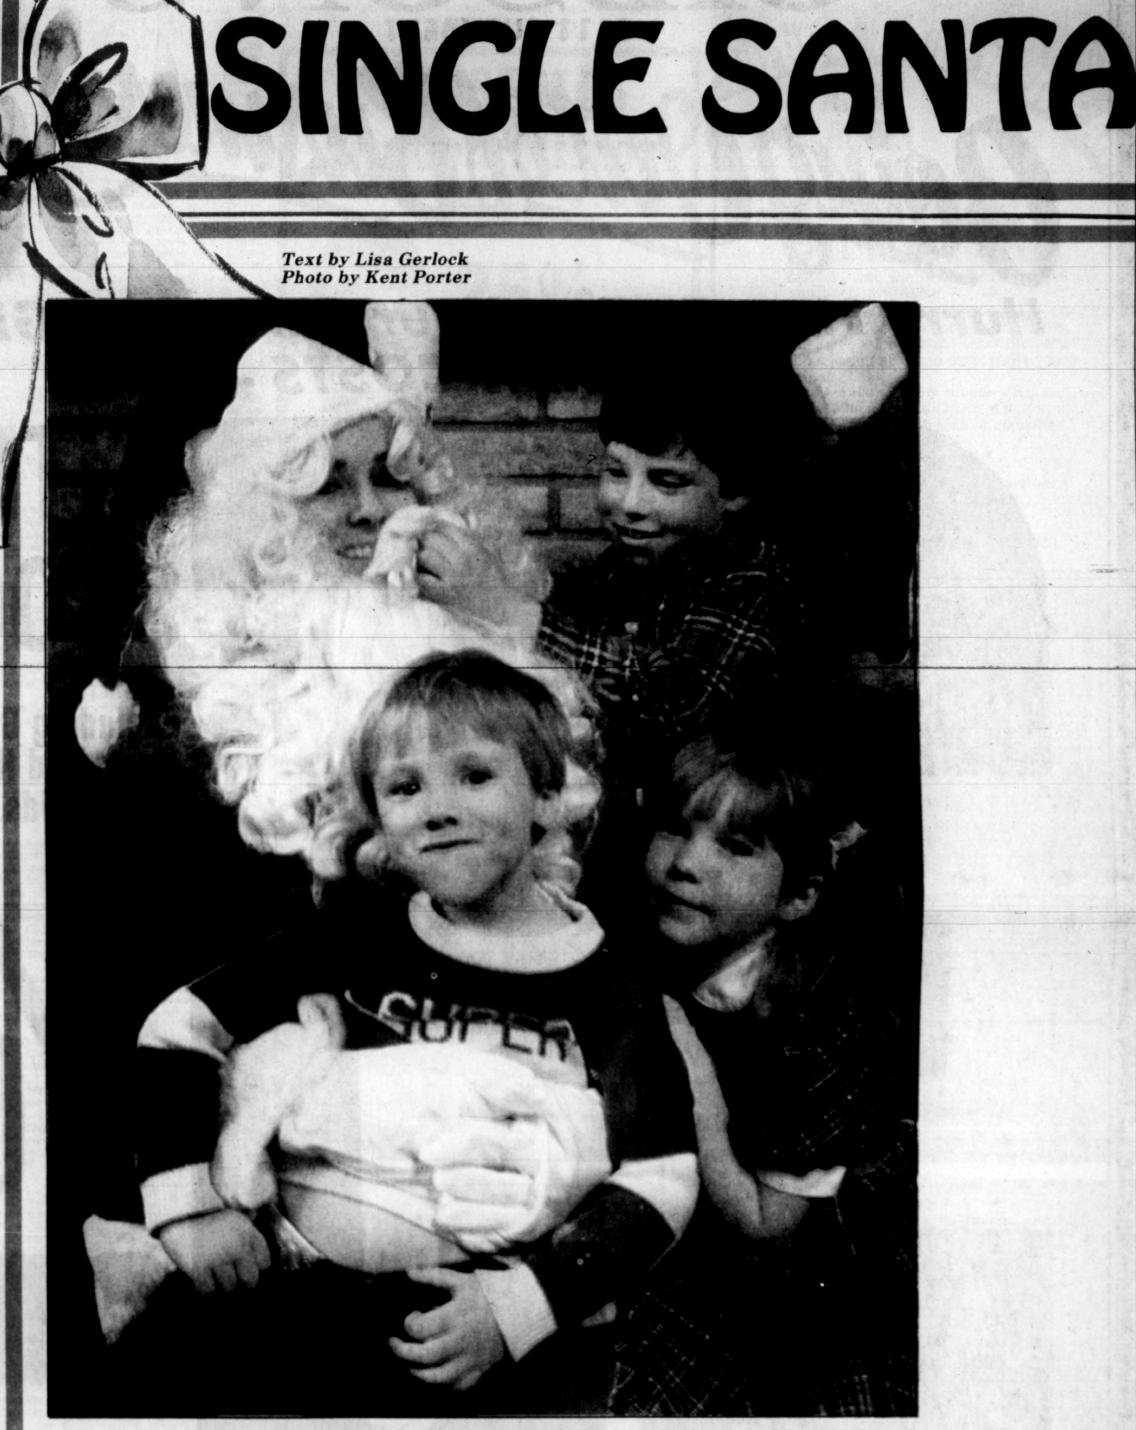

Sunday, December 16, 1984 Midland Reporter-Telegram

any single-parent families are former Season's Greetings post-card families mom, dad, brother and sister happily posed with the new Christmas puppy in front of a glistening tree.

But now the picture is packed away in a scrapbook. The puppy lives with Dad. And because Santa is not sure where the kids will be on Christmas, he stops at Mom's house and at Dad's or maybe even Grandma's.

In the family's earlier Christmases, Mom baked cookies and Dad assembled bikes and trikes. But it is not uncommon during the holidays to see a father deliver his homebaked bread as gifts for neighbors as he dashes off to pick up his children from rehearsal for the Nutcracker. Many mothers now have a set of tools for tinkering with toy trains in addition to their sewing notions for stitching up church play costumes.

SOME SANTAS and Ms. Clauses are on their own. In solo, one parent shops for all the presents, wraps them, hides them and discreetly delivers them. And there's the Christmas dinner, hosting family guests, and the list goes on.

The setting rings of old familiar joy — but while the parent goes through the motions, it may be while he is experiencing depression.

And the biggest worry for many custodial and non-custodial parents is who gets the children on Christmas and who will be alone.

Experts in Midland who counsel victims of divorce agree the primary reasons for depression are loneliness, guilt, social acceptance and worrying about not being happy during what society has deemed to be a happy season.

FINANCIAL PROB-LEMS may add to the seasonal turbulence, but some experts believe that is secondary to the emotional aspects.

Some single-parent families are geographically isolated from their friends and relatives and many cannot afford to visit them because of job time or budget restraints.

The single-parent family finds itself suddenly away from the storybook scene it sees on TV, said Dr. Jim Huggins, interim director of Family Services of Midland. And a parent may find himself with half the holiday budget to which he is accustomed.

In divorce situations, parents wonder if they will be able to spend Christmas with their children.

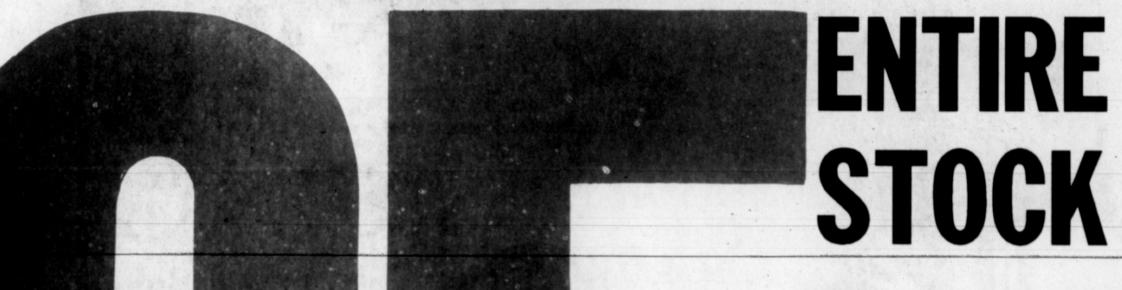

While the holiday preseason activities of shopping, wrapping and hiding toys is hectic for the now-solo performer, it doesn't seem to be a stress-causing aspect, according to several counselors.

MANY DIVORCED parents feel a sense of guilt and try to compensate their children by tossing their budget aside to buy more toys than they can afford, Huggins said. They feel they are making up to the children what they feel they have deprived them — and consequently spend themselves into a debt which may last for the next year.

And for the parents who can't afford the time off from work or the plane tickets home, it is a lonely

While many families endure these problems at Christmas, "there are several singles who have very happy Christmases," said Huggins.

And, according to the Rev. Steve Edwards, executive director of the Community of Senior Services, anyone can make their own happiness if they accept responsibility for it.

"WE, IN OUR society, want to be entertained; we want others to make us happy," said Edwards, who teaches a class for single parents at First United Methodist Church. But happiness is not dependent upon other people. Ways for snapping out of the blues, Edwards suggests, is for singles to accept their situation, resist depression and be creative in changing routine patterns. To resist depression is to "get outside themselves — giving in to depression ends in self-pity. They need to focus on their problems; their despair. Instead of waiting for a friend to call, they should do the calling and make plans to do something," said Edwards.

It is important, he said, to stay active without getting into a trap of running away from, being alone.

TO CHANGE ROUTINE. Edwards suggests "going back and taking a creative look. Take that piano lesson you've 'always wanted to take.' As adults, we think we have to quit playing. Be creative. Find time in the holidays to do things for other folks.

The most important thing for the divorced person to realize before attempting to have a happy holiday is that "divorce is like a death there are the same grieving patterns. Know these feelings will pass, they are normal, but they are real,"

And, while there is no timetable for any grieving pattern, the parent needs to allow time to grieve in order to go on with a healthy happy life. During this period, he advises counseling or any manner of gaining understanding of what has happened and how he can express anger, happiness, guilt, then build on it. Ask, "how do I learn from it?"

FOR THE HOLIDAYS, he advises the parent to use his imagination to answer the question. "How can we make this a nice Christmas?'

The Rev. Bill Weir, minister of programs at First United Methodist Church, said sharing time between families should be discussed and worked out between the couple. "There are a lot of hurt feelings for the one who gets left out.

'I would suggest he should be with other people significant in his life - family or friends. We encourage groups get together during the Huggins, Weir and Edwards agree no one should try to spend the entire day alone, even if it means spending a short time with others.

Huggins, Edwards and Weir agree that one way singles and single parents can enjoy the holiday is to gather with other singles or families on the holiday, sing Christmas carols, have a traditional dinner. Huggins suggests everyone brings a dish so no one person goes broke.

BUDGETING FOR the holidays is eritical for many single parent families. According to a U.S. News & World Report, the latest figures revealed that more than one-third of all female-headed families have an income below the poverty level. And for that 36.3 percent of the population, simple Christmas trees and tinsel are trimmings that are often trimmed from the budget.

Many single mothers with meager earnings also may have problems compounded by late or missed child support payments. Feeding and clothing their children year 'round is a challenge, which may make the yuletide season seem an insurmountable experience.

'About 90 percent of the single mothers we see deal with child support. And for many of them, if they ever do get it, it is late," Huggins

BUT HUGGINS has ideas - no matter how far-fetched they may seem - for solutions to some prob-

"There ought to be a way to work it out for the single mother. Perhaps the owner of the lot could offer a discount rate on trees he has to throw away anyway. That way the city wouldn't have to pay to have them hauled off either," Huggins

There are existing methods, however, said Huggins, to have a happy Christmas without over-spending. With some advance planning, family projects can bring a sense of togetherness and save money at the same

For the custodial parents, Edwards strongly encourages establishing traditions for the new family situation. It is important to have activities such as songs, crafts, decorations, games and stories.

HOMEMADE DECORATIONS. as an example, can be a project that involves children and the parent. Stringing home-popped popcorn and cranberries is an old-fashioned and economical way to decorate trees and it is a way to involve the children and the parents in a "togetherness project." Another inexpensive way a family can decorate a tree together is to make ribbons. "You see trees decorated like that at Dillard's and other department stores," Huggins

Baking cookies, making wreaths, or other types of Christmas crafts are other ways to involve the entire

Santa may want to substitute large expensive gifts with several smaller inexpensive gifts, Huggins suggested. "More children up to 10 years old are delighted with presents — any kind of presents," he

ANOTHER WAY TO ease the day for children of divorce is to let Christmas be their day, suggests Weir. "Spend time doing things the child likes to do." For example, if the child likes to go to the mall, the parent could take the child shop-

Some are so much better off, so much happier than before (the divorce). It is an answer that may be a better answer." he said. may be a better answer," he said.

Young children, he said, who spend Christmas eve with one parent and the holiday with the other parent are more likely to have a positive experience.

"That's two big uppers during the day instead of one. In a sense, it's a positive effect.'

ROSEMARY FISHER, 35, of Midland, and her three children will celebrate Christmas for the second year since she has been single after seven years of marriage.

Ms. Fisher said it is easier for her because the children's aunts, uncles, both sets of grandparents and their father all live in Midland.

And the Fishers have compromised on a holiday schedule which works out best for everyone. The children spend Christmas Eve with their father and Christmas day with their mother. Devising a budget and trying to stick to it is how Ms. Fisher affords Christmas for 8-year-old Jason, 6year-old Robin and 4-year-old J.P. "But if I see something I like, I'll buy it if I can afford it," she said. "But I want to buy them certain things and I don't go overboard.

"Christmas is all in the spirit of love. I don't like getting too materialistic. And I think children enjoy a small toy as much as a big toy.

AT THE FISHER home, Christmas is a celebration, a vacation. "I just really like holidays. And we celebrate Christmas as long as we can.'

The children insisted they put lights on an outdoor evergreen and decorated the indoor tree the day after Thanksgiving.

We look in the paper to see where Christmas music will be performed. I think that adds a lot."

Midnight mass is also in the plans for the festivities. Ms. Fisher doesn't believe the first Christmas wasn't hard on the kids Oh, they still wish momma and daddy could be together," but she believes the second Christmas will

A positive attitude is what Ms. Fisher uses for survival through the season and all year. "Not feeling guilty and having only goodwill toward people" makes it easier, she

SINGLE FATHER Tom Bruner and his two sons celebrate a Christmas tradition which begins on Thanksgiving weekend and involves traveling to Cloudcroft, N.M., to cut their own trees

This year, he said, they put three 8-foot trees in the living room, and one in his oldest son's room. The fun is going to get them. We enjoy the trip and the snow." The reason for three trees in the living room? Bruner said Michael, 11, and Marc, 10, being the clever kids they are, know it takes a lot more presents to fill up three trees than just one.

The Bruners have what he, the custodial parent, calls "a very workable situation" for a Christmas schedule: the children will spend the weekend before Christmas with their mother and Christmas with their father.

Another unusual tradition at the Bruner home is baking loaves of bread for gifts.

No puppy until you can take care of yourself. No more arguing with your brother. No more new cereal until you finish off that box. No one needs a shirt that cost $30. No sense in wasting all that food. No ... and that's the last time I say it!

Just when you think there are no more ways to say No, along comes

Don't screw up. Don't be selfish. Don't overeat. Don't starve yourself. Don't forget your sweater. Don't do as I do, do as I say. Don't forget to say thank you. Don't you dare talk with food in your mouth. Don't slouch. Don't run. Don't think it.

Don't you hear what I'm saying? Don't raise your voice with me. Don't say I didn't warn you. Don't see her again. Don't bring that into the kitchen. Don't you see that rug? Don't leave your room in such a mess. Don't lose your glasses. Don't miss your bus. Don't hang your head out the window. Don't leave the cap off the shampoo. Don't make me say

For sheer drama, there is nothing

Stop humming. Stop when you see a red light. Stop driving me crazy. Stop or you'll kill us all. Stop dating that creep. Stop snapping your gum. Stop punishing your mether. Stop what you're doing right now. Stop school and you'll regret it for the rest of your life. Stop acting like rest of your life. Stop acting like you're a big shot. Stop pretending you don't know what I'm talking about. Stop horsing around or you'll break something. Stop that noise or I'm coming up. Stop dawdling. Stop playing with your food. Stop trying to find yourself and get a job. Stop trying to be something you're not. Stop being so negative.

They're all familiar. We couldn't have survived without them. But wouldn't it be sad if No! Don't! and Stop! were the only things they learned from us ... and those three little words shaped their lives?

Migraine headache sufferers describe pain as 'throbbing'

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard people complain that they have a migraine headache when it seemed that what they really had was a bad headache. I'll get a headache once in a while, but I don't think I have a migraine. Is a migraine just a real bad headache? — Rudy, San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Rudy: People who suffer from migraine headaches, most of whom are women, often describe them as throbbing headaches that are felt on one side of the forehead or around the eye. Many of these patients experience an aura - that is, a warning that an attack is coming. Distortion in hearing and taste may also be a part of this warning, which may last for about 30 minutes. The headache itself may be associated with nausea and vomiting, chills, fever and diarrhea. It may awaken the patient from sleep and, unfortunately, continue for some

Migraine is believed to be caused by changes in the blood vessels in the head. The headaches usually start in adolescence but can begin at any time.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband is 54 years old and he is recovering from a heart attack. We asked his doctor about the chances that he would be able to return to work, and the doctor said they would be better than 50-50. Can you add anything to that? — Mrs. D.W., Moline, Ill.

Dear Mrs. W.: The results of a German study of more than 1,000 patients who had had a myocardial infarction showed that slightly more than one-half of those who were under 60 years of age were able to return to work within 18 months. Some of these patients could not go back to work because of medical complications; however, social conditions, such as a worsening of the employment situation, also had an

Hot Springs hopes to restore bathhouses' attraction

By PETER LARSON Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — The lavish bathhouses that once attracted millions of health-seekers to this Arkansas town have fallen on hard

In fact, business is going down the

'We're down to about 100,000 baths a year," says Roger Giddings, superintendent of Hot Springs National Park. "That's down from over a million baths in 1946."

The trend is deeply troubling to the federal government, which has owned the famous mineral springs since 1932. Six of the eight bathhouses built on federal land have closed since 1965.

THE PARK SERVICE, which owns the buildings, plans to lease the empty baths for use as shops, restaurants and art galleries to offset the expense of operating the spa, which exceeds $200,000 annually.

"Our goal is to have bathhouses with different kinds of operations in them," Giddings said.

The baths have declined steadily since the 1940s because of the development of modern drugs. Invalids who soaked in mineral water to relieve syphillis, gout, and arthritis are now treated with antibiotics, cortisone and painkillers.

Polio - the dreaded once-widespread disease that crippled Americans - is now held in check by vaccines. No longer are the baths filled with stiff-boned, stoop-shouldered

"In those days we had to lift people up on the table to give them a massage," recalls Orland Koonce, manager of the Buckstaff bathhouse. "Their joints were swollen with rheumatoid arthritis. You don't see that anymore.'

ONCE SACRED to Indian tribes, Hot Springs was visited by French trappers and explorers in the 1700s who discovered clouds of vapor rising from the valley. The healing properties of the springs have been a source of legend since.

In 1832, Congress set aside Hot Springs as the nation's first national preserve. Soon, legions of invalids were arriving by stagecoach to pitch tents beside the 47 bubbling springs.

Each spring attracted a different group of patients. Kidney Springs was believed to heal the kidneys. Alum Springs was prescribed for Springs attracted bathers with claims.

Only two of the springs are still open. The rest have been capped to prevent contamination of the sterile,... bacteria-free water.

The Park Service avoids making any claims that the mineral baths cure sickness or relieve pain. Still, the agency receives frequent testimonials from bathers, and the ser-

"We've had many letters over the years," says Hugh Crenshaw, a park official. "People with bleeding kidneys, bursitis, whiplash and rheumatoid arthritis claim the baths have helped them.

Other bathers claim relief from stress and tension. A Chicago attorney who visits Hot Springs every year finds the baths soothing.

"He's very high-strung individual," Crenshaw said. "But when he comes to Hot Springs, he doesn't need his tranquilizers.

Wary of quackery, the Park Ser-vice registers all doctors who send patients to Hot Springs for treatment. Forty-five doctors are currently approved on the government register, Giddings said.

MANY TOURISTS don't have time for the leisurely regimen of baths and hotpacks, Giddings said. "People live at a faster pace these days," Giddings said. "They don't have time to spend 12 to 18 days taking mineral baths."

Eight historic bathhouses are still preserved along Bathhouse Row, but only two remain open — the Buck-staff and the Lamar. The vacant buildings are falling apart, Giddings

With marble walls, mosaic floors, polished brass bannisters and some with stained glass windows, the bathhouses are relics of another age. The condition of these buildings is part of the problem," said Giddings. "People would rather take a bath in a newer-looking facility." At the Buckstaff, however, bathing is performed with ritual flourish. The bather reclines in a massive,

200-gallon tub that resembles nothing so much as a Roman sarcopha-One attendant scrubs your back. Another wraps your weary limbs in hot towels. The bathtubs are surrounded by curtains for privacy. "You come in gritting your teeth and you leave so relaxed you can hardly walk," said Francis Johnsons, of Portland, Ore., vacationing in Hot Springs with her husband. Most of the patients are still elderly, but few are crippled or disabled, said Koonce, who manages the Buckstaff.

"Ninety-nine percent of our cus-tomers are tickled to death," Koonce said. "We don't fuss about how many towels they use.'

BATHS ARE ALSO offered at four Hot Springs hotels and at a local health club and rehabilitation clinic. The health club, which offers coed bathing in hot tubs, attracts a large, younger clientele.

The Park Service is developing a master plan for the future of the spa, Giddings said. The empty bath-houses will not be leased until sometime next year.

The government will be extremely cautious about who leases the his toric buildings, Giddings said.

They will have to be compatible with the mission of the park," Gid-

Civil rights struggle remembered

By WILLIAM E. SCHMIDT New York Times News Service

JACKSON, Miss. - They are memories of an era that many here would just as soon forget: the charred frame of a wooden cross that once burned at a Ku Klux Klan rally, shards of glass and nails recovered from the debris of Mississippi churches bombed more than 20 year But now they are preserved, like icons retrieved from some distant land, in a permanent display in the Mississippi State Historical Museum.

The exhibit, "The Struggle for Equal Rights," marks what Patti Carr Black, the museum's director, describes as the single most important event for Mississippi in the 20th

"It is important that people can now say to themselves, yes, this did happen," said Mrs. Black, who has been working on the exhibit for nearly three years. "It is important that we acknowledge what took place, and then go on from there." The display, which covers 1954 through 1970, takes up barely a 10-by-12-foot corner of the museum's unfinished 20th century wing. But its presence in the halls of a building that, until now, seemed more preoccupied with celebrating the state's antebellum past is a dra-

have changed here since the days when Mississippi was a major arena in the struggle for black rights. Mrs. Black says the display is the first such permanent exhibit in the South, and probably the nation. The museum itself is in the building that served, from 1839 until 1903, as the Mississippi State Capitol

Here, amid a wall hung with framed copies of posters and pamphlets advertising anything from black protest meetings to rural Klan rallies, there is a glass door panel, taken from a Hattiesburg business, on which the words, "White Waiting Room" are stenciled. There is a metal sign reading "Colored Entrance," from a physician's office in Greenville.

There is a poster, circulated 20 years ago last summer by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, seeking information on Andrew Goodman, James Earl Chaney and Michael Henry Schwerner, the three civil rights workers whose bodies were later discovered buried in an earthen dam in Neshoba County.

There are old battered ballot boxes and an original copy of one of the convoluted official voter registration forms by which white registrars sought to discourage black voting by making applicants write out long handwritten answers to complex questions about the workings of the State Constitution.

Most compelling of all, perhaps, is a old black and white television set, from which a 14-minute video tape silently flickers scenes of black protestors being dragged off by police officers, of armed National Guard troops sweeping the campus of the University of Mississippi, of young men and women sitting in at the lunch counter of a Woolworth's in Jackson while crowds of whites

Mrs. Black says the importance of the display was driven home to her after she encountered black and white teen-agers on tours of the museum who did not know, she said, that their parents had attended segregated high schools."

But it ends on a positive note, with quotation from James H. Meredith, the black man whose integration of the University of Mississippi in 1962 touched off riots that left two peo-

'Soft' adventures designed for less rugged

By JAMES T. YENCKEL Los Angeles Times -Washington Post News Service

A "soft" adventure seems a contradiction in terms, but that is the newest trend in the burgeoning adventure travel business.

It's an opportunity to go to the world's remote and wild places, to explore on foot and in canoe, the way hardy trekkers do. But roughing it is kept to a minimum.

"A lot of travel agents kept telling us, 'Your trips are too difficult for the average person,' " says Nigel Dabby, vice president of Sobek Expeditions Inc. of Angels Camp, Calif., a major outfitter of interna-tional adventure tours. " 'Give us something easier.

As a result, Sobek has put together "soft" adventures in Nepal, Zambia and Peru. They are trips off the beaten track "that can be enjoyed by anyone regardless of age or health."

UNTIL THIS YEAR, Sobek has catered primarily to travelers who like their adventure "exciting and rough," says Dabby, including strenuous climbs into the high mountains. "That's our definition of adventure.'

The new trips are not so "elitist," he says. For them, adventure can also be defined as "seeing the most-exciting places you can see." Hiking and other outdoor activities are included, but they are kept at an easy-to-do level.

An example is the 12-day "Nepal Annapurna" trip, departing most months from now through the end of 1985. To most Americans, says Dabby, Nepal is "the other end of the world." However, most nights are spent in comfortable hotels, and individuals, but it can be a very slow no experience in mountaineering or trekking is necessary.

The trip includes sightseeing in Kathmandu, a flight over the Himalayas and a three-day, two-night camping trek at the base of the spectacular Annapurna range. On those days, hikers will walk about six to eight miles at a relaxed pace, with time to take photos and sip tea in Nepalese villages en route.

THE FAMED SHERPAS serve as guides, and Nepalese porters will carry all luggage and camping equipment. The two nights are spent in tents, sleeping on foam cushions. The porters set up camp, and meals are prepared by the tour staff. The trek ends with a short ride in a dug-

A stay in a jungle lodge in Chi-twan National Park, home of the rare one-horned rhino, is also part of the itinerary. Here travelers will scramble aboard elephants for a half-day's tour of the park through fields of tall elephant grass. Rhinos, the sloth bear, tigers, leopards and 250 species of tropical birds are among the wildlife that may be

The maximum size of each tour is 16. Depending on the month of departure, the cost ranges from $1,999 (Aug. 3) to $2,449 (October to December 1985). The hotel savings can be espe-cially good in New York City, where regular weekday rates are generally high. New York in any season can be exciting - theater, music, restaurants, museums, shops - but the city is particularly attractive dressed in holiday trimmings.

Among the hotel packages: The Hotel Beverly, a small, predominately suite hotel at Lexington Avenue and 50th Street, offers its holiday rates daily from Friday, Dec. 21, through Sunday, Jan. 6, at a substantial savings over its usual midweek

A one-bedroom suite (bedroom, living room with convertible sofa bed and kitchenette) goes for $89 a night for two during the holidays, and the rate includes a continental breakfast. One child under 12 is free, and a second child or additional adults, $10 each. The regular daily rate is $150 to $175 a night.

"Junior" suites, with kitchenette, are $70 a night for two, with continental breakfast. The usual rate is $109 to $129. One of New York's largest hotels, the Sheraton Centre on Seventh Avenue between 52nd and 53rd streets, is advertising complimentary champagne and caviar, as well as bargain rates, for guests staying between Friday, Dec. 14 and Friday, Jan. 4.

The holiday rate for two is $79.90 a day, including a coupon for one complimentary bar drink per person. One or two children 17 and under stay free. The regular daily rate is about $100 to $135. The New York City Visitors Bureau publishes a free directory of bargain packages available at city hotels throughout the fall and winter. These are mostly weekend packages, except for the holiday season.

The bureau also offers a "Winter Wonderland" brochure describing free and low-cost activities in the city. For example, many museums offer free admission one afternoon or evening a week. Half-price Broadway and Off-Broadway theater tickets can be purchased on the day of the show at the TKTS counter, Broadway and 47th Street.

FRANKFURT FLIGHT: Washington travelers bound for West Germany will soon have the option of flying nonstop from Washington-Dulles Airport. Currently, all scheduled flights to West Germany include a change of planes or stops in New York or Europe.

Pan Am has announced the new daily flight to Frankfurt, and return. beginning April 28. The eastbound flight will originate in Miami; the return will stop in Washington en route to Miami.

The additional flight, says the airline, reflects "Pan Am's optimism that European travel demand will remain robust well into the peak 1985 summer season.

Mexico opening complaint hotline

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Mexico is taking positive steps to solve and answer complaints of American tourists who encounter problems during visits south of the

Jorge Gleesen, director of tourism services for the government of Mexico, visiting Los Angeles to promote the geared-up assistance program, pointed out that a hot line, phone (5) 250-0123 or 250-0151, which has been in service during business hours, will be extended to 24-hour availabil-

Gleesen said that the hot line is manned round the clock by an expanded staff, and all complaints will be taken care of either at the time of the call or through correspondence. In every case, the person lodging the complaint will resolve the situation.

Gleesen, who has held the post of director for two years and was with Fonatur for six years before that, explained that his department is in charge of the Green Angels, tourist information and pricing, (hotels, restaurants, guides) as well as any com-

"Whenever possible," he said, "callers who report problems will be assisted at the time of the call. Otherwise we will follow through as immediately as we can. "For instance, if one of your readers feels he is being overcharged when checking out of a hotel and calls us on the site, we will ask to be transferred to the hotel manager and try to resolve the complaint

"Should the problem involve the police, whether they be local, state or federal, the caller will be given help immediately or we will follow through as quickly as we can to the correct channels, whether it be a mayor, governor, police chief or the Ministry of Communications under whose auspices are the federal police," Gleesen said.

The Green Angels, which have been increased to 1,100 patrolmen and 265 trucks, patrol 85 percent of the Mexican highways during daylight hours from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Complaints should be addressed to Jorge Gleesen, Director of Tourist Assistance, Schiller 138, Polanco,

Medical care provided on high seas

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

It is an episode that occurs with ominous frequency: One minute a person is perfectly healthy. A moment later he's severely ill, in need of immediate, lifesaving medical attention.

If you're going to get sick you're probably better off if it happens on the high seas, not because medical care or expertise is any more sophis-ticated on a cruise ship or ocean liner, but because emergency medical treatment is probably more quickly at hand than anywhere in the world except, of course, in a

"Our doctors are mostly emer-gency room physicians," said Ronda Broder, the medical coordinator for Norwegian Caribbean Lines, which operates five vessels including the world's largest cruise ship, the Nor-

Adequate medical care on the giant Queen Elizabeth 2 is of prime concern to its owners, Cunard Line. If a person suffers a heart attack on the 930-foot floating hotel, the ship's two physicians and three nurses are summoned by coded message. The team reaches the patient within two minutes from anywhere on the ship. Three minutes later the victim has been transferred to the one-bed intensive care unit of the ship's 14 bed hospital and connected to a cardiac monitor, getting intravenous medication and, it is hoped, is on the way to stabilization.

You can't do this anywhere else," said Dr. Nigel George Roberts, the QE2's chief medical officer. "We have one of the highest survival rates for coronary victims of any medical facility in the world."

Dr. Edward G. White, a Miami physician who serves as medical consultant for Miami-based Commo-dore Cruise Lines, requires his nurses to have had either coronary care, intensive care or emergency room experience.

"We get anything from birth-to death," said White, who once delivered a baby at sea.

White sometimes arranges a ship-to-shore telephone consultation with a specialist in Miami. Cruise passen-gers are vulnerable to sudden illness such as heart attacks, White said. "You get an older crowd. They stay up longer than they normally do. They drink when they wouldn't drink at home. They even dance when they haven't danced in years. They go on land tours and get over-

The newer the ship, the more up-to-date the medical facilities. The recently launched Nieuw Amsterdam of Holland America Line has medical paraphernalia that would be the envy of any landlocked hospital. The cardiac monitors in its intensive care unit are equipped with alarms that sound in the adjacent cabins of each of the ship's three nurses. The operating theater has the latest anesthesiology equipment. Modern radiology machines allow X-rays to be made of all sorts

One of the most frequent medical problems on board ship, doctors say, arises when passengers discover that they forgot essential medicines at home. Thus, the ships stock complete pharmacies.

Unless surgery is absolutely necessry, ships' doctors stabilize patients and try to get them to a shore hospital. With antibiotics and freezing procedures, even an acute appendix can be stabilized long enough to get the patient to shore.

Only on the QE2 does routine surgery sometimes become a must. Once the liner is six hours out of port it is beyond the range of even a helicopter. About four operations a year occur on the big vessel. Usually it is an appendectomy or a perforated ulcer.

'This is total medicine," said Roberts, who has worked on the QE2 for more than seven years. "It is like frontier medicine. Whatever comes through the door you have to deal with. There is nobody (specialist) to refer to."

There is a difference of opinion among shipping lines on whether to carry severely ill passengers. Dr. Irwin Potash, medical consultant for Parquet Cruises, said he recently advised the line not to accept 80 passengers with chronic lung disease. "I did not think it right or safe to have people walking around with oxygen tanks on board ship where other people are smoking," he said.

Capt. Aage Linstad, vice president for marine operations of the Royal Caribbean Cruise Line, said, however, "We cannot bar anyone, and even if some people are in bad health we don't say, 'No, you can't go.' If a private physician says it is OK to go, we allow them to go."

Thanks Midland

When Regency Realtors stuck its first sign in a Midland front yard in January of 1983 the real estate market appeared quite bleak.

In the past two years our firm has experienced substantial growth and our community has gradually built back from a devastating tight money crunch.

As we enter our third year we look to 1985 with quiet confidence. Midland's economy continues to strengthen. Local employment is up dramatically. Apartment occupancy rates continue to increase. And there is a very efficient attitude now in our community which, put simply, says "better days are immediately ahead'

We are thankful for our continuing growth in this dynamic city. We especially thank the Midlanders who had the confidence in us the past two years to trust us with one of the biggest transactions they may ever undertake--the sale of their homes.ay ever undertake--the sale of thier home.

We don't take our responsibilities to clients lightly

Thanks for your confidence in us in 1984. Competent, professional service will continue to be our goal in 1985 .- Dan Ellington Broker / President

New York City drivers: Survival of fittest

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK - "I would suggest," Bob Kousoulos says calmly to his driving student, Jules, "that you do something soon with the brakes. It is a red light, Jules.
"Jules, the brakes!"

Kousoulos, who has been teaching driving for 12 years and is a veteran of thousands of driving missions on the streets of New York, chainsmokes Marlboros, chuckles nervously and tries to maintain a veneer of calm.

"This pedestrian in the middle of the street," Kousoulos says softly as the vehicle picks up speed after the light, "has apparently decided to end it all. I know you have the right of way, Jules, but let her go, Jules —

"Jules," he says, as the student driver weaves his way tensely through pedestrians crossing against the lights, through fields of potholes, numerous construction projects, bicyclists, triple-parked cars and other obstacles that make up the New York motoring experience, "I am sure that this man ahead likes his car, that he would prefer you not hit his car.

"GET INTO THE next lane, Jules. Please!

"This is not the Indianapolis 500, Jules," he continues, as Jules tries to squeeze between double-parked trucks on either side of the street. Kousoulous suddenly grabs the wheel and stomps on his brake pedal on the dual set of brakes.

The student is eager to try some parallel parking. "Jules," Kousoulos says, gripping the edge of his seat, "we may not have to worry about the parking segment of your instruction if you don't stop for the - red light!"

THE SCHOOL USES old Plymouths spray-painted red, the better to be seen, the cheaper to repair. A pile of crash helmets sits in the corner, although none are used this

Herbert Williams, a student, comments that he has transferred to Model because his instructor at another school was always drunk. "I guess that's understandable in this profession," he adds.

Holt Sturgess, an instructor whose manner resembles the test pilot Chuck Yeager, likens the job to his days as an Air Force pilot. "You have to be constantly alert," he says.
"If you start picking the lint out of your navel, you're dead. You learn to live with the tension."

He teaches students who have never driven before.

You really must start the engine," he suggests at the beginning of a lesson.

"In what sense?" was the student's reply, and minutes later they were hurtling up Eighth Avenue with taxicab drivers honking and making obscene gestures at the car - perhaps because the student was driving a meager 5 miles an hour above the speed limit — and with Sturgess alternately urging the student to "slow her down" and grabbing the steering wheel to avert disaster.

Sturgess does not wear a seat belt, because he must have the freedom to grab the wheel. The trade-off is an occasional smack of the head on the windshield when a student driver unexpectedly mashes down on the brakes.

DELIO VALDEZ HOLDS a threehour classroom seminar at the school, having given up on street instruction after a student he was teaching at another school ran up on the sidewalk and froze with her foot on the accelerator.

He teaches students the rules of the road and then teaches them that there are no rules of the road in Manhattan, where using turn signals is a sign of weakness, and that the guiding principal of driving in the city is survival. "New Yorkers are a people in a hurry," he tells them. "They get frustrated sitting in traffic jams, and once they get momentum, they go as fast as they can go, and sometimes they don't stop for anything, including red lights.

He gives the students detailed. practical advice.

When you see someone hailing a cab who is leaning way out and stretching out the arm, it means the cab is on the left side of the street and will be cutting across in front of you," he said.

He discusses street hazards peculiar to New York drivers: bicycle messengers who heed no traffic laws, gridlock, horses, hot-dog carts, such distractions as pedestrians with blue hair and people who stagger in front of cars to wash windshields or

Students are cautioned not to slow down to allow a pedestrian to cross the street, because "courtesy is not expected by New York drivers, and you will get rammed in the rear.'

Valdez tells class members not to argue if they are involved in an accident. "People have been killed in arguments over 'fender benders."

"Well, that's interesting now, isn't it?" says a class member, Phylomena Barton, who is newly arrived from London. "Driving here is an alto-gether unruly business, isn't it? None of the rules in the book seem

"It's worse now," another class member says, "than when I was driving during the La Guardia years, and there were absolutely no laws then. La Guardia's idea was to let all the bad drivers kill themselves off."

"You would never get anywhere if you obeyed the rules," another student says. "Try keeping one car length between you and the car in front for every 10 miles an hour. At 50 miles an hour, five cars would slide in between.

"In London," Miss Barton continues in her British accent, "the system is you-go-first. It's quite different here, then, isn't it?"

"Quite," says Valdez.

A new phone company comes to Permian Basin

By JOHN PAUL PITTS Business-Oil Editor

Despite some skepticism about iming, ClayDesta Communications nc., the Permian Basin's first high tech communications company is off the ground and running - and running rather well according to

In the first nine days of sales effort, the Midland-based telephone company has exceeded sales projectons for the first 90 days.

"We're simply delighted with the response," said Clayton W. Williams, r., founder of the firm. "That's about four percent of the Midland-Odessa market we have captured in nine days, or 10 times more than we anticipated for this period.

Williams said the goal of the new firm was 15 percent of the Midland-Odessa market, which would be needed to achieve payout for the firm. Payout could come in three to four years on ClayDesta Communication's $11 million investment, but Williams is hoping it will be sooner.

"We are looking for good growth, and hope to hit payout earlier if we stay on the upside," he said. "The beauty of this deal," said the oilman, rancher, banker, "is that it doesn't as ClayDesta Plaza. To accomodate our tenants in ClayDesta Plaza, the next logical step was to put in a bank. When we had to wait three and four months to get telephones during the boom, we found it necessary to put in our own phone system in ClayDesta Plaza, so we have been in the phone business for several

He said that every business venture he entered usually wound up spinning off another venture.

Said Williams: "Who knows where our entry into high-tech communications will lead. We are always looking down the road to bigger and better things. We are getting into this next will come data transmission, then possible statewide expansion of the system. After that who knows what. The beauty of this business is the payroll.

THE CLAYDESTA SYSTEM which links Amarillo, Plainview, Lamesa, Midland-Odessa, Abilene, San Angelo, and Dallas with 40 microwave towers is a state-of-theart, digital communications system, exceeding the current analog system in speed and clarity.

The West Texas entrepreneur explained that the digital system regenerated the signal at each tower, removing noise and interferrence, whereas the analog system merely amplified the signal, noise and all, at each tower.

"We are four years ahead of AT&T," he boasted. "They won't have this system for another four

He added:"We will always be as good as AT&T and at least 15 percent cheaper. Our computer will track phone calls and will automatically deduct 15 percent of what it would have cost for an AT&T call. Sometimes the discount will be more than 15 percent because of volume." Data will be transmitted cleaner and at a savings, he says, as a result of the digital system, which transmits data two to five times faster than analog.

GIVEN A CHOICE, Williams might have preferred to delay start up of ClayDesta Communications, but a deadline date of January 27, 1985, which opens the nationwide phone system to access by anyone forced the issue.

We had to make a decision to be in or out by that date," said Williams. "We chose to be in.

The new West Texas phone sysbusiness with voice transmission, tem, which will probably be expanded to include Houston at a later date, now employs 60 people, but will eventually have over 100 on

November retail up 1.8 percent Top management team named

WASHINGTON (AP) - Retail sales, bolstered by early Christmas shoppers, climbed a strong 1.8 percent in November, the sharpest gain since April, the government reported.

The Commerce Department said sales hit a record $110.3 billion last month, 8.3 percent above the level of a year ago.

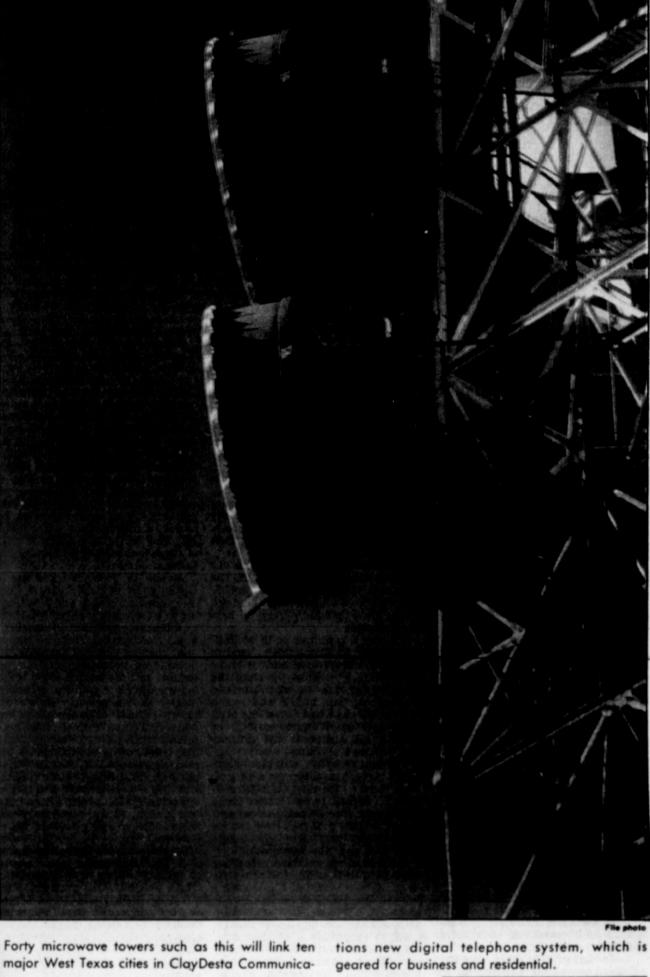

The November increase followed a tiny 0.1 percent rise in October, which originally had been reported as a 0.1 percent decline. The drop in consumer demand since July has been cited as a primary reason for the sudden slowdown in economic growth. The country's total output of goods and services, the gross national product, grew at an annual rate of only 1.9 percent rate in the third quarter after racing ahead at an 8.6 percent pace in the first six months of the Analysts, however, are hoping that a strong Christmas selling season will help lift economic growth back into a range of 4 percent next year. Consumer spending is expected to rebound, in part because interest rates have been falling in recent months and there have been continued gains in wages and salaries.

Today's news on retail sales was the second bright economic report in the last week. The government on Friday said that the civilian unemployment rate fell to 7.2 percent in November, down from 7.4 percent in October. It was the sharpest drop since June and was taken as a sign that the recent economic slump will not turn into a recession.

The November gain in retail sales was the strongest since a 3.5 percent rise in April. Sales had fallen by 1.7 percent in July and 0.6 percent in Sales of durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, were up 1.7 percent in November over the October level. Automobile sales climbed 1 percent following a stronger 5.9 percent gain in October. Auto sales totaled $22.8 billion in November, only slightly below the record of $23 billion set in June.

A.G. Greene, the most noted authority on Texas History, calls "Texas History Movies" one of the best in his book, "The Best 50 Books on Texas." Says Greene: "Along with several generations of Texans, I got my start in loving state history from FOR MILLIONS of native Texans this comic strip book."

> Senator John Tower called the book his primary source of Texas history. He said it stimulated his interest in Texas History to the point he's been reading it ever since.

TEXAS MILLIONAIRES have been known to plead (almost any price) for a copy of the comic book, and in at least one case a copy was reportedly used to get a traffic ticket dismissed.

It comes as absolutely no surprise to me that when these visions spring forth into my head, they are all in cartoon form.

Worker's compensation law changes being recommended to board

IAB representatives and an advisory group met to discuss possible changes, with group members failing to agree on recommendations for including rehabilitation services for some injured workers under the worker's compensation program.

It was agreed that consideration be given to increasing the rate of the gross premium tax from 45 to 75 percent with the funds going to the IAB, Executive Director William Treacy reports.

Treacy notes IAB is seeking to increase its budget from from $7.5 million to $9.5 million for the coming biennium, and that the increase would raise funds sufficient to cover the requested change.

The group agreed to recommend changes in subrogation rights to provide for recovery by the Second Injury Fund (a change in line with a recent appeals court decision), and to imposing a 12 percent penalty for failure to pay workers within 20 days from a finalizing of a settlment agreement or agreed judgement.
Group members also indicated they would like the

In 1983, arguments over the scope, and cost, of the program led to the matter being studied by various groups, including legislative committees

Supporters argue the program would result in savings for the worker's compensation center over the long run, but agree that the initial expense makes it difficult to obtain acceptance from employers, who could face increased premiums.

Texas Bankers Association plans to ask legislators to increase the permissable distance for "detached facilities" at banks from 10,500 to 50,000 feet, and will be state banking.

TBA executive committee members have suggested the 50,000 feet distance, TBA Executive Vice President Sam Kimberlin reports. TBA also plans to be monitoring efforts to change the Texas homestead law, but has not taken any final position on the change, Kimberlin says

"Generally," he reports, "we endorse the idea of submitting that change to the voters (as a constitutional amendment) . . . The executive committee was authorized to monitor the work of Texans for Home Value Access to determine if the legislation in its final form would be acceptable to our organization.

TBA's real estate and mortgage finance division would be working with the executive committee on that monitoring, Kimerlin says.

TBA plans to work on additional powers for banks including "some limited powers in insurance and real estate," in Washington during the coming year, he

"Our direction will be towards working at the Federal level on that," Kimberlin said.

TBA will work with other groups, including the Independent Bankers Association of Texas, in homes of obtaining a "consensus" on a regional interstate bank-

TBA is "not supportive" of any nationwide interstate banking system, he said, and also would not at the Federal level to prohibit the so-called "non-bank banks," which offer most, but not all, of the services of banks and which have been allowed on an interstate basis by the Comptroller of the Currency

Laurence Peter learned the virtues of competency as a child. The son of a Canadian railroad worker who died in a drowning accident, Peter grew up amid poverty in British Columbia.

"It was a primitive style of life," he recalled in an interview, "and in ered that he enjoyed teaching. He order to survive we had to make everything functional, getting the maximum use of our limited resources. Our home was just a shack. We cut wood out of the bush to give us fuel. We grew most of our food in the garden. It was unthinkable to waste anything.

'That particular failing - my supertenacious nature - enabled me to triumph over defeat at the hands of incompetent schoolteachers. And years later it helped open my eyes to incompetence in the educational system.

At age 15, Peter worked nights cleaning out railroad boxcars. Days he studied carpentry and woodcarving at a technical high school. Hired as a teaching assistant to instruct a boys' woodcarving club, he discovbecame an industrial arts instructor and in time landed a job teaching woodwork to youthful offenders in a Canadian prison. "They were mostly in the 17-to-20 age group, and many had come from so-called good families with plenty of money. What had gone wrong with them? The very quality that produces excellent teaching - a tendency to consider all angles of every subject, without a need to be decisive in any one area — also produces administrative bottlenecks. But for some baffling reason, the people at the top of the pyramid never seem to catch on. Good teachers are continually rewarded with promotion to administrative posts, where they flounder

In his new book, "Why Things Go Wrong," Peter offers a wide range of entries for the record books, including examples from the business world:

-General Motors equipped its cars with a shock-absorbing bumper, making a crash perfectly safe - at speeds up to 2.8 m.p.h. -A Los Angeles security guard

-At the Howard Hotel in Baltimore, after lighting fires in the boilers, contractors noticed they had forgotten to install the chimney.

Peter also offers examples from the military:

-Air Force Maj. Gen. Charles F. Kuyk told the Wall Street Journal that he was pleased with the C-5A even though "having the wings fall off after 8,000 hours is a problem."

After spending four years and $375,000 investigating military applications for the Frisbee, the Navy scuttled the project when it discovered that Frisbees do not always go where you want them to.

-Italian citizen Ugo Mamolo was drafted into the U.S. military in 1959. "I didn't speak much English."

he said, "so they made a clerk-typist out of me.

Peter also takes note of prophets:

-In 1912 Samuel Courtauld, a British chemist, offered the formula for rayon to Lister & Co., a Yorkshire textile mill. Lister declined with the judgment: "It will never catch on - the public will never accept artificial silks."

-Movie producer Darryl F. Zanuck dismissed the prospects for television: "Video won't be able to hold on to any market it captures after the first six months. People will soon get tired of staring at a plywood box every night."

House is not home for conservative money

By DONALD C. BAUDER Copley News Service

Generally speaking, a house is not a home for conservative money these days.

Economists expect the housing industry to stall out, as it normally does at this time in the business cycle. However, a handful of economists - and stock market analysts - think the housing industry will defy historical experience and reawaken in 1985. It would be unusual indeed - yet the stock market thinks it may eventuate: Housing stocks have shown some surprising strength recently. The consensus of more than 40 economists polled by Blue Chip Economic Indicators is for housing starts to close in 1984 at 1.79 million, up from 1.7 million in 1983 and an anemic 1.06 in 1982. The same economists expect next year's starts to edge down to 1.67 This is true even though economists polled by Blue Chip Financial Forecasts expect home mortgage rates to come down slightly.

But there are optimists. David H. Hale, chief economist for Chicago's Kemper Financial Services, said, "If capital flows continue to sustain the dollar at current levels, the U.S. economy may shatter all the traditional ground rules of the business cycle by having a housing boom during 1985."

Normally, housing is one of the first industries to boom in a recovery, as builders and buyers rush to take advantage of low interest rates. Then, as interest rates rise, housing takes a pratfall.

This time it has been a little different. Variable rate mortgages (VRMs) have grabbed two-thirds of the market. Some lenders offered VRMs with very low firstyear rates. Also, some lenders - often unwisely lowered credit standards aggressively. Housing stayed stronger during 1984 than economists expected, but interest rate behavior changed. As long-term bond rates declined by two percentage points during the last six months, mortgage rates were actually edging

Now, "If bond yields stabilize, fixed-rate mortgages should drop back to the 13 percent to 13.5 percent range and VRMs to the 11 to 11.5 range," said Hale. That would translate into average monthly payments of $600 - producing a payment/income ratio of 27.7 percent for American families, "a new low for both 1984 and this expansion," said Hale, who believes starts could climb back to a 2 million annual rate early next year, and during some months may zoom up to 2.5 million. Indeed housing could become "the economy's new growth leader," said Hale. In the investment community, some analysts also take this offbeat, optimistic view. "If one is optimistic about the downward bias for interest rates, as we are, then companies in the building materials industry make a lot of sense as undervalued stocks," said Rochester, N.Y.-based Harvey Research Organization. The firm likes plumbing leader American Standard, paint companies Sherwin-Williams and DeSoto, equipment maker Overhead Door and insulator Owens-Corn-

Stephen J. Albert of Wall Street's Kidder, Peabody is bullish on Sherwin-Williams. "Surging paint store gains" is one reason - also, new management has done an excellent job rebuilding this old-line company. Keep in mind, however, that paint sales don't ride the new housing curve that closely — paint sales can be reasonably good in a sluggish housing market. Albert is looking for 16 percent earnings growth next year to $3.25 a share, but is not looking for a strong economic environment. He rates Overhead Door a "hold.

Bert Dohmen-Ramirez of Honolulu-based Wellington Letter likes U.S. Home and mobile home makers Skyline and Fleetwood Enterprises.

But many analysts pooh-pooh such optimism. "Don't stay too long at the party," said Janet K. Milliken of Wall Street's Paine Webber. Recent housing starts and new home sales have been strong, but she thinks interest rates will rise. "We'd avoid the stocks for anything but a fast trade," she said. Also, falling interest rates won't be a panacea: Housing companies have suffered poor earnings recently because of non-interest rate-related factors — "overly aggressive expansion, a tight labor market, rising land costs and inappropriate product mixes.

Speculators might nibble on U.S. Home, but generally, she is not positive on housing companies Pulte, Ryan Homes and Ryland Group.

"The rosy housing scenario expected by Wall Street is unlikely to unfold," barked bearish T.J. Holt of Holt Investment Advisory. "Mortgages are still historically costly. Over-extended savings & loan associations are getting tougher in granting new loans. Fewer households are being formed and many of them can't afford

Tax reform analyses conclude it would reduce investment, gains

BY JANE SEABERRY The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Two new analyses of the Treasury Department's sweeping tax-reform proposal conclude that it would reduce investment, increase consumption and lead to no new gains in output.

Wharton Econometrics, a major national forecasting firm, said that, were the Treasury tax-reform proposal implemented, "After 10 years it would be a different economy," characterized by higher consumption, lower capital stock and a less competitive posture, according to Kurt Karl, Wharton's director of long-term service. "You would see more and more consumption of imported goods.

facturers said the Treasury plan was simpler for individual taxpayers and fairer than the current system. However, the plan also "ultimately (would) tend to depress long-run growth rates," said NAM Chief Economist Jerry Jasinowski.

The Treasury declined comment on the analyses until it has studied them, except to observe that some parts of the proposal were being disregarded in the studies.

The Treasury Department plans to release its own econometric study of its plan as soon as work on the federal budget is completed, a spokesman said.

Using an econometric model. Wharton found that the Treasury proposal would increase the cost of capital by 15 percent in 1986, rising rapidly to 20 percent on average for manufacturing industries after 10 years, Karl said.

For example, the user cost of capital for utilities would average 4 percent in 1986, rising to 9 percent; and for communications it would be 10 percent higher, rising to 15 percent. For primary metals, costs would rise from 15 to 20 percent, Karl said.

The increased cost of capital would be the result of the elimination of the Accelerated Cost Recovery System and the Investment Tax Credit. The reduction of the corporate tax rate from a maximum of 46 percent to a flat 33 percent would ower taxes for corporations in most cases and raise them in the others. The lower rates, however, would not diset the effe of the special business tax breaks.

The Wharton analysis confirmed the revenue neutrality of the Treasury estimates, and after about 10 years there would be no real change in gross national product, Karl said. However, consumption would increase significantly because individual taxpayers would have more disposable income. Consumption would increase 1 percent by 1994, Karl said.

Meanwhile, business investment would be 4 percent lower by 1994, Karl said. In the short term, there would be little change in business investment.

Early income tax planning eases pain on April 15

By JUBE SHIVER JR. Los Angeles Times

Even before she receives her W-2 income-tax form, Jackie West of Los Angeles begins preparing for the April 15 tax deadline by collecting household items to donate to chari-ties, organizing her deductible expenses and determining what income she can defer.

As a senior business administrator in the Redondo Beach, Calif., office of Cleveland-based TRW Inc. who moonlights as a tax preparer on her personal computer, West, 29, is perhaps more sophisticated than most taxpayers at this early stage in the game. But she said such planning can pay off at tax time.

Tax experts agree that steps taken this month can go a long way toward reducing your 1984 tax bill.

They add that December is also a good time to do some financial forecasting to minimize 1985's taxes. That's especially true this December because taxpayers could forever lose certain deductions in future years if the tax plan disclosed by Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan this month is adopted. Although passage of the controversial plan is by no means certain, those who are wary of the uncertainty created by the proposal might not want to postpone a tax saving venture that has the government's blessings this year.

Congress has already made some changes. In July it enacted the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, which limits deductions for business use of automobiles, reduces the benefits of

Tax simplification How change will affect will pay less will pay income averaging and changes the holding period for capital gains, among other things. Still, except for those with few itemized deductions, the basic tax strategy recommended by most experts remains the same this year: Postpone whatever income you can until next year and accelerate any

No tax rate reduction is scheduled for 1985. But there is another incentive for postponing income: Tax brackets and personal exemptions in 1985 are scheduled to be indexed upward by 4.08 percent for inflation. In order for an individual to reach the 50 percent tax bracket in '85, for instance, he would have to have taxable income of more than $85,130, compared with $81,800 this year, Arnold Golieb, tax partner at the Los Angeles office of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., said.

Thus, if you expect to receive any employee bonuses or payments for outside services, tax experts suggest that you try and get those payments delayed until next month.

Conversely, if you plan to buy a big-ticket item such as a car or computer, you should make the purchase before Dec. 31 so you can deduct the sales tax. And if the car or computer is to be used for business, you could also claim depreciation and an investment-tax credit of up to $1,000, under the 1984 tax law.

Beware, however, for a stricter law governing business use of such equipment is now in effect. The change affects equipment placed in service after June 18, 1984. It requires that at least 50 percent of the equipment's use be for business purposes and limits the maximum amount of depreciation taken in the first year to $4,000 and to $6,000 in all the following years until the cost is fully recovered.

Unfortunately, there is not much relief for gamblers. Losses can only be deducted to the extent of win-nings. That is, if you lost $400 one week and won $500 the next week, you pay taxes on the $100 net income. If you gamble once, and lose $400, you simply suffer the loss; it is not deductible

Rules for deducting stock losses are a bit more complex. Generally, the maximum deduction on net short-term investments - stocks held less than six months — is $3,000. The maximum deduction on longterm investments is also $3,000 but it takes $6,000 of loss to get the maximum deduction. Any remaining loss can be carried forward on both short- and long-term losses. Longterm losses are deducted on a 2-for-1 basis because the investor gets to exclude 60 percent of any long-term

Those with few itemized deductions will generally benefit by taking a zero-bracket amount deduction this year and carrying over any unpaid itemized tax deductions to next year. The zero bracket, available to all taxpayers, represents that part of a taxpayer's income that is not subject to tax. For married individuals filing jointly and for surviving spouses, the amount is $3,400.

'Let's say the zero-bracket amount is $3,400 each year and you only have $3,500 of itemized deductions; you'd only end up with $100 of benefits if you took the deductions this year," explained Charles J. Medallis, most disconcerting for those who a tax partner in the Los Angeles suffered at the hands of the stock office of the national accounting firm of Arthur Andersen & Co. "If your deductions are not much greater than the zero-bracket amount, you'd probably be better off taking the zero-bracket amount and carrying your deductions over until next year" when they might significantly exceed the zerobracket amount.

Medallis cautions, however, that in order to carry over itemized deductions such as medical bills, state taxes and interest payments, you will have to postpone paying them until next year. You can't, for example, claim $300 in doctor's bills in 1985 that you paid in the last week of December. What's more, you will generally need a larger amount of these deductions to itemize in 1985 than in 1984, because next year the zero-bracket amount is scheduled to be indexed for inflation.

Gifts to charitable organizations are an often overlooked method of increasing year-end deductions, experts say. Many taxpayers can get additional deductions by donating old household items or giving to charity stock or other property that has piled up a considerable gain.

In addition, experts say that although taxpayers have until April 15 to set up or contribute to an Individual Retirement Account, making early contributions to your IRA increases your savings because you earn more tax-deferred interest

Though it is generally known that self-employed persons can set up a Keogh retirement plan, Mark Granich, tax manager in the Los Angeles office of Deloitte Haskins & Sells, a

New York-based accounting firm. said individuals, such as consultants. who have part-time, self-employ-ment income, are also allowed to establish a Keogh plan even if they are covered by their employer's retirement plan or have an IRA. Maximum contributions to a Keogh plan depend on the type of plan selected — ordinarily about 15 per-cent to 20 percent of self-employ-ment income — and the Keogh plan must be established by Dec. 31.

The waning days of December usually brings a surfeit of advertisements for tax shelters that promise to cut your tax bill immediately. But experts warn that during this time of year, questionable tax shelters

"As it gets closer to the end of the year, people that are trying to promote tax shelters are preying on our sense of urgency," warns Jay Goldinger, an investment broker with Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co. in Beverly

He advises anyone looking into tax shelters to use this rule of thumb: "Make sure the person who is selling you the investment puts more of his money in than you are and that he can't get out (of the investment) until you get all of your money out,'

Experts generally recommend that taxpayers examine tax shelters next year when they've taken the time to make financial forecasts. That advice also applies to other popular tax savings measures such as establishing trusts to shift your income to relatives in a lower tax bracket - such as your children or your parents.

Dropping council could be linked to economic advice

By JOHN M. BERRY The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - The plan to abolish the Council of Economic Advisers appears to be a direct result of President Reagan's unhappiness with the economic advice hehas received from it questioning his chosen policy course.

Reagan is not the first president to reject the advice he has gotten from reject the advice he has gotten from the CEA, whose role one former chairman, Charles L. Schultze, summed up as that of a "realistic hairshirt." But no other president has considered abolishing the CEA, a unique institution within the U.S. government and among other governments around the world.

However, no other president also has come to office since the CEA was created in 1946 with a set of policies that challenged so many of the tenets of mainstream economics, and took pride in doing so.

Reagan's first chairman, Murray L. Weidenbaum of Washington Unionly after the course of economic policy was set. Last summer Weiden-... the president relies baum wrote, " on his economists primarily to help him sell and carry out his policies. Those economists quickly use up their good will with the president by pointing out inconsistencies and problems in the formulation of his pressure repeatedly by stressing the potential long-term damage that continuing large budget deficits could cause and by urging their reduction even if it took some tax increases to do the job. Unforgivably to the White House, Feldstein kept

Traditionally, the chairmen or the two other members of the CEA have not gone public over policy differences as Feldstein did, though rarely, if ever, did they have an opportunity to do so while backing an official presidential policy that the White House, when asked, reaf-

But a number of former chairmen have criticized Feldstein's public approach, and this week Weidenbaum blamed him in large part for the current proposal to drop the Weidenbaum noted that his successor, Feldstein, was designated At that point, the White House gave no thought to not naming a new chairman, "even though my arguments with the president were not appreciated by the senior staff," Weidenbaum said. When Feldstein left last July to return to Harvard, no new chairman was appointed, and neither of the remaining members was designated as acting chair-

'What's different?" Weidenbaum continued. "While I was there, I kept ily." In contrast, Feldstein "did more than indicate his personal disagreement" with the policy on taxes with 'the idea of locking the president into a position that he didn't want to be locked into," Weidenbaum said. Feldstein has defended his actions by stressing that he was always strongly supportive of official Reagan policy. Moreover, Reagan nei-ther asked directly nor suggested indirectly that he behave dif-ferently, Feldstein said.

William Niskanen, the current senior CEA member, said in a recent interview that he had recommended to the White House that the CEA's 'full internal role be maintained and that we reduce our external role, at least relative to the Feldstein period. I think that our role in the Cabinet councils is valued by almost everyone, even when we are in opposition

But Niskanen - whose own resignation was sought by senior White House staff in late 1981 because he said that, under certain conditions, budget deficits might not be signifi-- has received no reply. He is widely expected to leave the council once its annual report is completed if he is not named to the chairmanship. The remaining member, William Pools, will return to a profes-sorship at Brown University early next year, potentially leaving the CEA with no members.

A new book exploring the role of the CEA in the presidency has just been published. "The President and the Council of Economic Advisers," my disagreements inside the fam- edited by Erwin C. Hargrove and Samuel A. Morley of Vanderbilt University, is based on interviews with 10 of the 11 CEA chairmen who preceded Weidenbaum.

The introduction sums up how the council traditionally has been used by presidents: "The CEA's substantive mission coincides with presidential political accountability. The president has a strong incentive to seek good economic advice on the theory that knowledge is to be preferred to ignorance.

"It does not follow that the president acts on the advice; there may be short-run political reasons not to do so. But the politics of choice is still enhanced by knowledge. The president should know, and want to know, both the economic and political costs and benefits of alternative

But that summation does not seem to apply in a situation in which the president wants to use a different frame of reference than do his economic advisers. In the summer of 1983, when Feldstein and David Management and Budget, were warning about the danger to the then-strong economic recovery if budget deficits were not curbed, senior White House officials ridiculed the concerns.

"This is not the season to let the economists run the shop," one declared. "They wouldn't have been in a position to get tax cuts, to do the things that have brought on the recovery if we hadn't been elected. And we want to get re-elected."

The rally demonstrated the efficiency, economy and environmental benefits of natural as a vehicle fuel to thousands of Americans across

Analysis of final comparisons of natural gas fueled vehicles to gasoline fueled vehicles reveals natural gas outperformed gasoline in each car and truck in the rally. On a per mile comparison, the natural gas Ford Ranger cost 3.8 cents per mile while the standard gasoline Ford Ranger cost 5.3 cents per mile. The natural gas Ford Ranger fuel cost was more than $100 less for the same distance traveled.

The five Rally vehicles fueled by natural gas had an average cost per mile savings of about three cents less than half the cost of gasoline fueled cars and trucks.

Fuel costs were based on a 65 cent cost of a natural gas equivalent gallon and $1.15 cost for gasoline, however, throughout most of the Rally the actual cost of fuel in each city was used for comparison. As a result, it was found natural gas cost between 41 and 74 percent of the cost of gasoline for the same vehicle.

In addition, the clean-burning and environmental advantages of natural gas were evident throughout the cross-country tour. Among the more than 5,000 people who attended the Rally stopovers in the 18 major cities were more than 3,000 owners of

Sales cheer small-computer industry

By DONALD WOUTAT

Los Angeles Times,

Washington Post New Service

It is costing nearly $200 million in Christmas advertising and untold millions in price cuts, but the holidays to date have helped calm the nerves of the jittery small computer industry

Thanks in part to a resurgence of the once-moribund PCjr sold by International Business Machines Corp., dealers and analysts say that yuletide sales of personal computers and the paraphernalia that makes them work have so far generally met or exceeded their expectations after the unanticipated summer fal-

We believe we're seeing a very nice Christmas season," said Jan Lewis, senior analyst at Infocorp, a market research firm based in Cupertino, Calif.

The gains are modest compared to last year's blockbuster Christmas sales, however, and the good cheer is being spread unevenly. Machines costing about $1,000 have stolen sales from the firms that make under $500 computers. And retailers of all stripes say their margins have been trimmed so sharply by big price cuts that they have to sell perhaps 30 percent more machines to merely match last year's revenues. We had to hire two extra salespeople this year because we're moving a lot more units, but we're just not generating any more money," said Gary Nagle, manager of a Com-puterLand store in Charlotte, N.C.

It is all taking place in a blizzard of advertising, led by IBM and Apple Computer Inc., as the computer marketers continue to shift their dollars away from specialty publications and into the big-bucks arenas of television, newspapers and general-interest magazines.

The Television Bureau of Advertising in New York reports that on TV alone, computer-related advertising for the first nine months of this year surged by 76 percent, to $177 million, compared to last year's Communications Trends Inc., of Larchmont, N.Y., which tracks such things, estimates that IBM and Apple are spending about $30 million apiece in the fourth quarter on personal-computer advertising. Computer manufacturers together are spending about $160 million, and software firms are spending an additional $22 million, estimates Louis Giglio, the publication's managing editor, who says the ads are "up phenomenally.

Whatever the virtues of mass-market advertising for the computer industry, one major retailer credits this season's spate of commercials with getting Christmas started early. "You can't go five minutes on prime time without seeing some-thing on computers," said Rick Inatome, president and chief executive of Inacomp Computer Centers Inc., a 43-store chain of retail stores in California, Michigan, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Wisconsin and Canada. 'That's one reason for our early start. All these (computer firms) brought in these marketing geniuses, and they're going at it with every trick in the book."

At ComputerLand Inc., whose more than 700 U.S. stores report a Christmas dollar sales surge of almost 30 percent over last year and an even greater unit increase, marketing Vice President David Spencer credits the IBM and Apple ads with assuring skeptics that computers are easy to use

"We're seeing a whole new group of customers who are totally new to computers," Spencer said.

Reliable Christmas-season sales figures won't be available until late January, when research firms complete their surveys of retailers. Manufacturers don't divulge sales figures. The final week of December is a key period because business and home buyers rush to meet budget constraints or to take advantage of possible tax write-offs before the new year begins.

But Inatome said that surprisingly strong sales of the PCjr, which was attacked by experts and almost ignored by customers until lately, have convinced him that the industry is "relatively back on track" after a "skittishness" earlier in the year. "My entire Christmas order of the PCjr was sold out by Dec. 1," Inatome said.

The resurrection of the PCjr ring because of price cuts on exist-began after its price was slashed, memory expanded and keyboard improved last July in response to the bad reviews. The machine, the cheapest and least sophisticated personal computer to carry the prestigious IBM label, edged up from 3 percent of the market the first half of the year to a still poor 7 percent in October, the latest month for which Infocorp figures are available.

Since then, "it's taken off like of new ones, such as the PCjr. gangbusters," said analyst Lewis. "A lot of us are surprised. I think Apple was caught off guard. They didn't expect the junior to eat their lunch after not having sold for almost a

The dramatic recovery of the PCjr s likely to fuel the antitrust debate over huge IBM's elephant-like entry into the personal-computer market because it was accomplished with effective price cuts approaching 50 percent, offers of free software and what retailer Inatome called 'unheard-of incentives" to salespeople to sell the machines.

Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s business centers, considered a good pricing barometer, are advertising a $725 price cut to $895 for a PCjr, a monitor and a software program.
Said Jeanne Dietsch, president of Talmis Inc., a Chicago-based research firm, "The PCjr is selling because IBM forced its dealers to stock them and it's giving salesmen huge perks to sell them.

The PCjr and other machines in its price range - the junior typigoes out the door for about $1,200, says dealer Nagle, including a monitor, a printer and other equipment - are also benefiting from the buying public's willingness to spend more money on computers this Christmas.

Dealers say last year's popularity of such inexpensive machines as Commodore and Atari models, heightened by a $50 fire sale on a discontinued Texas Instruments computer, has subsided in favor of more expensive machines, such as the PCjr and Apple II line, that are less game-oriented and can perform more sophisticated and practical functions. Infocorp, for instance, estimates that while total sales of under-$3,000 personal computers will climb just 9 percent to 4.9 million this year from last, those in the $500-to-$1,000 price range will double their share of those sales, to 2 million. This is bad news for the bottom end of the market, where sales this year are expected to decline by about 10 percent to 2.5 million. Atari Corp. has cut the price of its 800 XL computer to $120 from $179, and Commodore International Ltd. held ts 64 model at $199

Regan warns Fed may lose freedom

Los Angeles Times, Washington Post New Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan has sharply attacked the Federal Reserve Board, accusing it of being "penurious" in restricting the money supply and warning that the Treasury was studying possible ways to restrict the board's independence.

"It's a hell of a way to start December," said Regan, referring to an anticipated drop in the money supply in the midst of the holiday shopping season. Moreover, he declared at a breakfast meeting with reporters, the Fed's monetary policy has been "remarkably tight."

The Treasury secretary's blunt language reflects Reagan administration fears that the Fed is moving much too slowly to stimulate economic growth by expanding the supply of funds available for lending by banks. Since last summer, the growth rate has fallen far below administration expectations, and officials believe that a monetary stimulus is essential to keep the economy from stalling.

Regan further underlined his emphatic public message to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker by raising the prospect of a Federal Reserve under more direct White House or congressional control. Although the president appoints members of the board, the Fed traditionally has been largely independent of the White House in making Changes in the Fed's role "are being considered at a low level" in the administration, Regan said. And although he carefully refrained from threatening any imminent, direct assault on the board's autonomy, he said, "We have to examine all the parts of government to see what should be done."

In Japan, France and Great Britain, the central banks that play the same role as the Fed are directly controlled by the government in power, the Treasury secretary noted. And "a lot of business people and Wall Streeters" think the Japanese economy, for example, operates well without an independent central bank, he asserted.

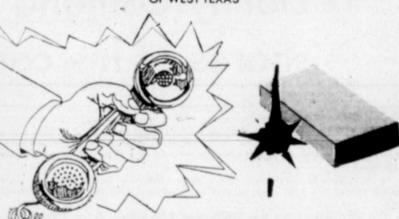

We're the only large industrial nation that has an independent central bank," Regan said, adding that the Fed's independence has ham-pered the "decision-making ability of every president."

Despite Regan's comments, it is unlikely that the administration or members of Congress will make any serious effort to rein in the Fed, especially during the term of Volcker, who enjoys widespread support and respect in the business community. The passage of congressional legislation would be required to alter the Fed's powers or indepen-

In recent years, the Federal Reserve has been an effective political lightning rod, absorbing complaints from both the administration and Congress. Without an independent Fed, presidents and members of Congress would face more direct and intense criticism from the public for the fluctuations in the economy.

But his strongly worded remarks about the Fed's recent behavior and his mention of the Treasury studies will bring indirect pressure on Volcker and other board members, making it unmistakably clear that the administration wants an expanded money supply to keep the recovery going. Regan and most economists expect that the nation's money supply will show a decline when the official weekly figure is announced

Need for fuel efficiency prompts computer technology advances

By MARSHALL SCHUON N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Computer technology in automobiles has come a long way, sparked by the need for fuel efficiency through precise engine controls. Those under-the-hood electronics are of interest primarily to engineers, but now the microchip is being pressed into service in new ways that are liable to excite even the sometime driver.

Specifically, the new technology involves video screens implanted in dashboards and hooked to the computers that control the car's audio, temperature and trip-monitoring systems. And Cary Wilson, a General Motors Corp. engineer, has 100 rolling examples of the car of the future.

They are Buick Rivieras, metallic rose outside, smelling of leather inside. Moving down the highway, they are well mannered and quiet, typical of America's idea of sporty luxury. And, in the center of their dashboards, they have video screens — cathode ray tubes, or CRTs.

Touch the word "Warmer" on the screen and the car's interior becomes warmer. Call up the trip program, touch "ETA," and the car will estimate your time of arrival. The Buick is one of 100 that are being evaluated across the country, and the Buck Rogers dash really belongs in an 1986 Riviera, where it will be standard equipment.

"There are going to be any number of things you can do with this," said Wilson, who is in charge of Buick's CRT program. "Satellite navigation is one of them, since the car will be able to keep track of itself on a video map. You'll be able to call up data banks and check your stocks, or ask what hotels are available in the city. You'll be able to call up maps and manuals, and you'll be able to program it with a directory for your cellular telephone. It is all very impressive. If there is any problem with the new system, it is that the screen could be distracting to the motorist, It would be easy to find yourself crawling along, obstructing traffic, while you play with the new toy on the dashboard.

The CRT for the 1986 Buick incorporates a five-inch square screen, surrounded by switches that summon the driver's desired program. That done, the controls are worked by touching the screen itself. "The switching uses two sheets of Mylar with inner conductive coatings," Wilson said. "The sheets are separated by space, and when you touch the screen you are deforming the upper surface and touching the inner one to close the circuit."

In the future, according to the Buick engineer, the division also hopes to expand the diagnostic capability of the system. "One advantage of centralized control," he said, "is that we know everything that is going on in the car electrically. With the CRT, we can interrogate the system, and it's a real wonder for the service guy, because it is going to allow him to do total

Like GM, the Ford Motor Co. and the Chrysler Corp. are experimenting with video dashboards, and Ford has built 50 Lincoln Mark VII models called Comtechs. They are fully electronic, with CRT dashboards, and if the evaluation goes well, as many as 3,000 will go on sale a year hence.

The cathode ray tube has an undeniable gimmick value, but that pales compared with its actual benefit to the driver, according to Wilson. "As we have been adding features, we are getting so many controls on the dashboard that they are confusing," he said. "With the CRT, we are able to organize all of that, and the screen replaces as many as 80 or 90 control buttons."

Another thing, he said, is a probable change in the way controls are marked. "With this universal display," he said, "we'll be able to get away from using words and go to graphics and animation.

Perhaps the most exciting idea, though, is satellite navigation. "This will be coming," Wilson said, "and it's very much the same as what aircraft are using First, you bring up a map of the area that you are in. Then all you have to do is move a cursor to show the position of the car. After that, the car bounces a microwave beam off a satellite and the vehicle's control system triangulates to keep track of the car's position on the map.

Chrysler has developed a similar system. Using four satellites at a time, the car's computer reads its position in four dimensions - latitude, longitude, altitude above sea level and time - and pinpoints the vehicle's exact location on the map in the driver's con sole.

Donny Osmond selling shares of his company

By MICHAEL BLUMSTEIN

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK - Donny Osmond is going public. For $5 each, investors can bet on his show business acumen, and buy on shares now being offered by the Donny Osmond Entertainment Corp.

Investment bankers said the singer with the broad smile aspires to be one of the first entertainers to tap the public markets for financ-

The $7 million from the public would be added to the $700,000 that has been invested by officers and directors of the company since its formation in Texas last summer. The company, according to the prospectus, is in the development stage, and has no financial history. Its only assets are the $700,000 in cash, it has no debts and its income has been limited to interest on the The prospectus gives neither financial projections nor the magnitude of the entertainer's past financial successes. But it said the company would benefit from his creative and artistic savvy and "from his contacts in and knowledge of the entertainment industry." The immediate plan is for the company to seek distribution rights to existing episodes of "The Donny and Marie Show" and "The Osmond Family Show." The 81 hours of programming from the 1970s would be edited into half-hour shows and offered for sale to more than 500 local television stations. The company also plans a children's series for the Disney Channel, a pay cable television network, as well as other film, video, music and

Donny Osmond, who is 26 years old, will collect a minimum salary of $50,000 a year, and has entered into a five-year employment contract with the company. According to the prospectus, he plans to spend about 60 percent of his time on company business, and will serve as chairman, vice president for project development and secretary. No other family members — not even his sister Marie — are involved.

Pat Custer, a Texas entrepreneur with energy and real estate investments, will serve as president for a minimum of $60,000 a year. Other directors include Tony Briggle, a former executive vice president of Neiman-Marcus, and Jim Morey, personal manager to Donny Osmond, Mac Davis, the Pointer Sisters and other entertainers.

For putting up 91 percent of the money, the public would own 77 percent of the company. Donny Osmond's stake would decline to about 6 percent, from his 25 percent before the offering. None of the original investors are selling shares in the offering, and all have agreements to hold their shares for five years, the prospectus said.

"Where do you stay?" Hazard

"When I'm between cities, I like to stay at clean, roadside motels," the barber said, referring to the $30-to-$40-per-night variety. "But when I'm in Las Vegas, I want to stay at Caesars Palace. And when I'm in San Francisco, not only do I want to stay at the Fairmont, but I want to stay at the best room in the place."

That was in early 1980, and Hazard left the chair with a little less hair but a lot more insight into how outsiders view his industry. "That barber was segmenting the market in his own mind," Hazard, 50, recalled in a recent interview.

The barber's answer convinced Hazard that it was time for a new direction in the lodging industry. And some observers credit Hazard's subsequent actions with triggering the multibillion-dollar segmentation that has set off a scramble in a hotel industry. industry that is still trying to recover from the recession.

While room occupancy rose slightly last year nationwide, an average of one room in three still goes unfilled each night. In an effort to gain an edge, hotels are testing every conceivable nuance, from inroom computers to electronic check-

In December 1980, Hazard and 16 other executives from Best Western decided to put the barber's words to the test. They left Best Western for Quality Inns International, and six months later they introduced a three-tiered lodging system, with budget, middle-of-the-road and luxury hotels all under the Quality umbrella.

Quality, where Hazard is chief executive, thus became the first journal.

hardly an industry factor. But in three years, the number of Quality hotels has more than doubled, to 743 from 339. The Silver Spring, Md. based company, a subsidiary of Manor Care Inc., an owner and operator of nursing homes and hospitals, is the fastest-growing chain in the industry. Other chains, including Holiday Inns, Marriott, Hilton, Ramada Inns and Howard Johnson, have since followed Quality's example. The past year alone has brought about 50 new hotel "brand names" such as Marriott's Courtyard or Holiday Inns' Crowne Plaza. "Normally, you might expect five in one year," said Melinda Bush, publisher of the Hotel & Travel Index, a trade

The HP Portable has 272K of random-access memory, a flip-up 16-line-by-80-column liquid crystal display, built-in modem, and read-only-memory-based software featuring Lotus 1-2-3. Chevron has also purchased battery powered Thinkjet ink-jet printers, external disk drives, and the Portable-Desktop Link, an interface card with software that allows users to upload data from the lap computer into a HP Touch Screen computer or IBM PC.

These marketing, sales, and technical personnel primarily use Lotus' 1-2-3 for spreadsheet applications. Users in the field enter data into the spreadsheets and upload the information onto their desktop computers when they return to the office. Many of these managers are computer novices, says Matto, so the simplicity of the HP Portable is important if managers are to teach themselves.

NEW YORK — Remember fla-vored ketchup? Frozen cookie dough? Liquid brown sugar, toaster pizza, low calorie cake mix? Probably not. They were among the new products that have come tumbling onto the market in record numbers in recent years. And they, like all but a few of the rest, tumbled right off again. In November alone, according to Dancer Fitzgerald Sample Inc., a New York advertising agency, 196 new products were introduced, the second-highest monthly total that Dancer has ever reported. As few as one in ten, some marketing experts say, are likely to survive. indeed, bringing out something new is risky business. And as a result, the experts say, more and more manufacturers are playing it safe, introducing variations of established brands — cheap imitations, some say — rather than interesting new departures. No more than one in ten new products being launched right now is innovative," said Robert McMath, publisher of a weekly consumer products report called Product

There are very few truly new products to the world," agreed Martin Friedman, the editor of New Product News, a monthly publication of Dancer. "Basically, we're talking about food and cosmetics products that have been around for

Definitions are often disputed, but in the marketing world these newproducts-that-are-really-just-variations-on-old-products are known as "line extensions" — basically, the same product in a different form or "flankers" — generally a similar product in the same brand line. Often, they are priced at a lower, level than the originals. To many analysts, the Procter & Gamble Co. has become a symbol of the new emphasis that manufacturers have put on flankers and line extensions in recent years.

Ivory Shampoo and Conditioner, Tide liquid detergent and Duncan Hines Chocolate Chip Cookies are flanker products that Procter & Gamble has introduced in the last year, analysts say. Other Procter line extensions, they add, include Lava liquid, Pringle's Cheezum, Decaffeinated Folgers Crystals, Lemon Scent Cascade and Sugar Free

P&G, however, denies that there has been any change in strategy. If the company is paying more attention to flankers and line extensions, said Marjorie Bradford, manager of corporate-media relations, it is only because it is developing more new products in general.

Although less insistent than P&G on the originality of their efforts, other manufacturers have also multiplied their offerings to consumers. This surge in new products began in 1982 and intensified in 1983 with lower materials costs, inflation and interest rates that accompanied the economic recovery

Until recently, the new product boom was thought by analysts to have been slowing. But surveys have documented a step-up in activity. The report by New Product News of 196 new products in November follows one of 190 in October. The survey reported its highest total - 226 new products - in May.

The October-November surge brings the 1984 total to 1,824, up 11 percent from 1983, and 36 percent from 1982. From 1964 to 1980, an average of 75 new products a month were reported, less than half of this year's average monthly total of 166.

The rise in the numbers of flankers and line extensions, experts say, is a reflection of many evolving market forces over the years. Not since the 1950s have manufacturers been able to rely on the steady growth of a product to gain market share, according to analysts.

In those days of virtually unlimited growth, a manufacturer was assured a healthy market share simply by developing another brand. For example, the analysts say, a new detergent or a new cleanser, simply by occupying a place on the super-market shelf, was virtually guaranteed success. But in recent years there has been a noticeable decline in the growth of unit sales. Some of them, like ket share of the original brand, the detergents and shampoos, are growing at a rate of just 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 percent a year.

In addition, inroads from generic or private label goods, which now account for nearly a quarter of sales of some products, have added to the competition.

Thus, faced with stiffer competition and declining sales growth rates, a manufacturer must develop new products to maintain its earnings. And the safest and cheapest way is to develop a flanker or line extension, which can spare a manufacturer the heavy promotion expenses associated with a new

'Today, when categories are flat,' said Hercules Segalas, senior vice president and a director of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "the only way to increase your volume is to get market share from somebody

Along with the introduction of new products has come computerized inventory control devices, such as the electronic scanners at supermarket checkout counters. These have sharply improved the ability of manufacturers and retailers to quickly and accurately measure the success or failure of new products.

What is happening is that marketing has become more sophisticated while consumers have become more demanding," explained John Bissell, group vice president of marketing at the Stroh Brewery Co. And the result has been market segmentation.

But when developing a line extension or flanker, there is always the risk of failure. Then, according to Jay H. Freedman, a household prod-ucts analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co., the manufacturer may confuse the people who have been buying his products, or worse, alienate

"It takes a manufacturer years to build up a loyal consumer base,' Freedman said, "so you don't lightly risk losing brand loyalty.

Still, in many instances the benefits are thought to outweigh the risks. Although a flanker brand may rate of consumer products in terms reduce or "cannibalize" some mar-

Texas eateries report hefty sales increase

AUSTIN—Texas has experienced a phenomenal business and population growth rate over he past five years, giving the state's foodservice industry a hefty boost in sales.

State foodservice sales have increased 84.5 percent since 1979, and 1984 second quarter sales have climbed well over $2 billion. The average Texan spends close to 39 percent of his total food budget on eating out at one of the state's 38,519 foodservice establishments.

Midland residents spent $208 on eating out during the second quarter of 1984, or 48.26 percent of their total food dollar. There are currently 2,978 foodservice employees in Midland working in the area's 270 units.

As the Texas economy forges ahead, outperforming the national economy, foodservice experts predict steady increases in gross sales. The Dallas/Fort Worth area appears to be the strongest market in Texas in terms of its consistent, steady growth. Residents of his area spend 26 percent more than the state average on eating out, while there are almost 13 percent fewer restaurants per capita.

Foodservice business people have every reason to be confident in the future of their industry in Texas. Eating out is becoming more of a necessary convenience as baby boomers mature and join the workforce. This growth shows that there is still room for intrepreneurs who in turn will offer employment opportunities to people interested in foodservice careers.

German firm presents data telex system

MUNICH, West Germany — West Germany's Siemens Electronics Group Wednesday presented what it said was the world's first automatic system to allow telephone subscribers to transmit texts, pictures and other data.

The concern said its new Hicom universal communications system could automatically adapt itself to a recipient's equipment by, for example, switching from the teletex to telefax systems.

In addition, it could be tied into the system of the German Federal Post Office's integrated services digital network.

Siemens board members Claus Kessler, introducing Hicom here, said the first systems would be installed for up to 600 subscribers during the coming year at a cost of around $500.

The company a world leader in the telephone and telex field, has revenues of some $10 billion a year, or eleven percent of the world mar-

API president calls for policy that builds domestic production, reduces imports

By CHARLES J. DIBONA President, American Petroleum

WASHINGTON-For energy consumers,1985 looks like another good year. Supplies of oil appear to be more than adequate and OPEC prices hae been falling. There is a surplus of natural gas and many economists believe that heating oil prices will increase only moderately. The conventional wisdom suggests that the "good times" are back for good and the nation can look forward to a decade or more of adequate supplies and stable prices.

But from beneath the surface. troubling trends are beginning to emerge. The most alarming fact centers on increased imports. Despite years of counting on conservation as the main key to solving our nation's energy problems, domestic energy demand rose by about five percent in 1984. And that increase in demand was met primarily by increased imports. In 1984, there was national dependence on foreign oil. Which could be used to expl with an equivalent increase in our imports from OPEC. By the end of the year, the United States was relying on imports for roughly one-third of our oil supplies, just-about the same level of dependence which existed prior to the 1973 embargo

Thus, the nation ends 1984 with lower prices, higher consumption and imports. But the end of the year has not ended America's seeming indifference to the critical task of trying to increase domestic produc-

The failure of domestic production to match the growth in domes tic demand os mpt a new phenomenon. Indeed, over the past ten years, domestic discoveries and supplies of oil and natural gas have remained relatively constant or even declined. In eight of the last ten years, for example, we used more domestic natural gas than we found. And during the 1970s, crude oil reserves dropped by nearly one-third. As a result, we are in the alarming position of needing to find more than three-fourths of the oil that we expect to use by the turn of the cen-

There are a number of factors which have contributed to this problem. The taxes imposed on the industry - and contrary to popular perception, we pay more in taxes than any about a 10 percent increase in our other industry - take away dollars oil and gas. And excessive environmental restrictions, which add years to the task of bringing discoveries "on line," have posed obstacles beyond those needed to protect the environment. Also, any business needs the prospect of being able to compete in a fair and free market.

the case today for oil but not for natural gas. But a related problem is just as important: there is a lost of land in the United States which containes a lot of energy, where exploratiion and production activities are delayed or prohibited.

aren't allowed to look for it. And you certainly can't produce oil if you haven't found it.

And that fact is being ignored all too often today.

Right now, the United States Geological Survey believes that more than forty percent of the oil and more than thirty percent of the nat-ural gas yet to be discovered are beneath the seas on America's Outer Continental Shelf. That area is controlled by the federal government, which, as a result of legislative moratoria and executive delay, has leased only three percent of the OCS for exploration and production. Until that record of inaction is reversed, consumers will be denied the benefits which could come from the ocean floor. For example, the Congressional moratoria in effect during Fiscal Year 1984 prevented any exploration from taking place on federal offsore lands estimated to contain the equivalent of more than 2.24 billion barrels of oil, more than five times the amount now stored in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

Tandy enters mobile telephone business

FORT WORTH-Tandy Corp. has entered the cellular mobile telephone business, offering customers one-stop shopping for cellular tele-phone service in Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, Pa., Los Angeles, Ca., Dallas/Fort Worth, Texas, Atlanta, Ga., Baltimore, Md., and New York,

Cellular mobile telephones are a new hybrid technology combining telecommunications and computer switching. It dramatically increases the number of available mobile telephone channels and provides communications quality equal to that found in business and home tele-

"As construction of cellular sys-tems are completed in other U.S. cities, Radio Shack will open the one-stop shopping in new markets, said John V. Roach, Tandy Corp. president, chief executive officer and chairman. "Tandy is committed to a long-term presence in the telecommunications field."

Convenient features, such as onhook dialing makes dialing easier since called numbers can be heard before lifting the handset. This speaker listening is also handy when calling for stock prices, weather and information services. Up to ten frequently called numbers may be stored and dialed by entering a single digit code number.

The cellular mobile phone's security switch provides protection from unauthorized use. It can be released only by entering the three-digit number assigned to the owner.

Federal organization reports reutilizing a billion dollars worth of equipment

A federal organization reported some great accomplishments to highlight the end of the U.S. Government's fiscal year.

The Defense Property Disposal Service (DPDS), based in Battle Creek Michigan, is responsible for the disposal of government excess and surplus items. The DPDS Reutilization program is designed to promote the reuse of items by one gov-ernment unit that are no longer of use to aother government unit.

This year items with an acquisi-tion value in excess of $1,056,000,000 were reutilized within the Department of Defense. This is the second year in a row that DPDS has broken ts reutilizatin record and the first time in its 12 year history that it has passed the one billion dollar mark. If the acquisition value of items transferred to Federal civil agencies and dpnated to non-federal public agencies and eligible non-profit organizations were included, the total figure would increase to over

$1,346,000,000. DPDS has 224 field offices in 19 countries, including the United States. In addition to the reutilization program, it administers the Surplus Sales Program, which sells items to the public. These items have survived the reutilization screening cycles. The DPDS also manages the scrap sales program. Last year these two programs returned $95 million to the U.S. Treasur

Another of the DPDS programs is that of Precious Metals Recovery During the past year, over 410,000 troy ounces of silver and approximately 695,000 troy ounces of gold have been recoered and sent to th4e federal depository.

Brigadier General Thomas B. Arwood, DPDS Commander, said, "All this occurred despite the fact that the Department of Defense last July put a moratorium on military units turning in excess equipment to DPDS because of a concern that good equipment was being disposed of too quickly."

'That," continued Harwood," dropped our transactions by 50 per-cent by mid-September.

Plan to make Commerce Department international in scope raises questions

By STUART AUERBACH The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - President Reagan's revival of his proposal to turn the Commerce Department into a new department of international trade and industry is likely to reignite a turf battle within the administration and raise again the basic question of whether bureaucratic reorganization can lower America's massive trade deficits.

The proposal, which has the strong support of Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, failed to get through the last session of Congress despite the presidential push.

The proposal is intended to end the fragmented responsibility for setting trade policy - split between at least a half-dozen cabinet agencies - and allow a leaner and more coordinated approach with a new department modeled on Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry. Even the acronyms sound the same — Japan's MITI versus America's DITI.

Congressmen, however, raised questions as to whether the proposal would do anything to improve the nation's trade deficit, which is expected to soar to a record $130 billion this year.

They also questioned whether DITI would provide any more coordinated approach to trade policy — especially because such vital areas as agriculture would not be included in the new department and a myriad of other government agencies, including the State, Defense and Treasury departments, would continue to play major roles in trade.

Baldrige has been lobbying with trade groups for months to strengthen the support the measure received from business interests during the last session of Congress But Baldrige has emphasized that it is the president's proposal, not his, despite reports that only his interest keeps trade reorganization alive in the White House.

Although White House spokesman Larry Speakes confirmed that the president wants to resubmit the DITI idea to Congress, the proposal does not have the full support of administration trade officials. U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock, for instance, said Monday that "other issues seem to have a greater priority.'

Baldrige spokesman B. Jay Cooper illustrated the vast gulf between the president's two top trade advisers when he said this week that DITI will be the first thing the president

ITT will sell 80 percent of Eason Oil to Sonat Exploration for $240 million

By PAUL RICHTER Los Angeles Times, Washington Post New Service

NEW YORK - ITT Corp. took another step in its long-running divestiture program Tuesday with an announcement that it has signed letters of intent to sell 80 percent of its Eason Oil Co. subsidiary for $240 million in cash.

The company said it has agreed in principle to sell the Oklahoma City, Okla., company's exploration and production division to Sonat Exploration Co., a unit of Sonat Inc., a Birmingham, Ala., oil and gas producer, for $178 million, Eason also signed a letter of intent to sell its gas-processing division to Sohio

Petroleum Inc., a subsidiary of Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, for $62 million

ITT has been under increasing pressure to shed slow-growing units, in part because of sagging profits which have dropped its stock price and stirred persistent talk that the one-time high flyer is a takeover target. The New York-based conglomerate has sold 60 units since 1979, most recently Continental Baking Co., which was sold in September to Ralston Purina Co. of St. Louis, for $475

In a statement, Rand V. Araskog, ITT chairman, president and chief executive, said the intended sale is "part of our continuing extensive program of asset redeployment. ITT, with 1983 revenues of $20 billionons, information and aerospace manufacturing.

In a separate statement, Sonat said the Eason property includes producing and undeveloped wells in 16 states and the Gulf of Mexico.

An ITT spokesman declined to discuss the financial performance of the unit, except to say that it has been profitable this year. He declined to say whether ITT plans to dispose of the remaining 20 percent of the company's assets, which include contract-drilling and oil field services units.

ITT said a definitive agreement is to be worked out with Sonat by Dec. 21; a definitive agreement is to be reached with Standard Oil of Ohio by Dec. 31. The transactions need deral antitrust approval; and approval of both boards of directors,

Old Man Winter is here again so it's time to see Midland Building Specialties

Old Man Winter is here to stay for a while. Low temperatures and cold winds are the norm instead of the exception. How do you protect yourself and your electric bill?

If you think that all you can do is bundle up in masses of blankets or take out a loan to pay your utility bill, you're wrong. Midland Building Specialties has a better way to help you keep warm, lower your utility costs and even save money on your income taxes. If this sounds like a solution that you could use, read on. Midland Building Specialties has storm windows and doors in a variety of colors at no extra charge. A tax credit is possible on most homes. So, you can see that storm windows and doors are not only aesthetically pleasing but are economically beneficial as well

Storm doors and windows also offer many other benefits. They are very useful as insulation to keep the cold temperatures on the outside. The additional insulation helps keep noise outside for a quieter home inside. Last but not least, storm windows and doors help protect you from the mess that can be made as a result of a West Texas dust storm.

If you need replacement windows, Midland Building Specialties is the place to go. These windows are designed to replace old wooden win-

Midland Building Specialties also carries Stanley replacement doors. So when it's time to get rid of your old wooden exterior doors, check out the wide variety of colors which Stanley offers. You could find a gold mine of a tax credit. These doors are designed with the do-it-yourselfer in mind, yet M.B.S. will be glad to install yours for you. Midland Building Specialties is always looking for new ways to serve do-it-yourselfers. That's why, beginning in January Midland Building Specialties will be open on Saturdays till 1 p.m. Their expanded services will include offering glass to walk-in customers. In addition, they will have a complete weather proofing center. Thresholds, weatherstripping, caulking, and screens will all be in the center.

Maureen Stapleton...

...thrilled to be a grandmother

Actress Maureen Stapleton has recently filmed the movies "Johnny Dangerously" and "Cocoon."

By Jane Ardmore King Features Syndicate

ctress Maureen Stapleton is ecstatic about the birth of her grandchild. "I mean, I expected to be thrilled with a grandchild; I didn't think I would go crazy. Alexandra Bambrey, the most beautiful red-headed baby in the world, and I'm not prejudiced at all. The daughter of my daughter, Kathy, and her husband, Rick. They live in Massachusetts, and that's just where I was when she was born."

It happened between the filming of "Johnny Dangerously" and "Cocoon." In "Johnny Dangerously Ms. Stapleton plays Mom Kelly, Johnny's adored mother who supports her orphaned kids by taking in washing. "Cocoon," a science-fantasy which took her on location to St. Petersburg, she's a member of a retirement community who encounters a group of beautiful, mysterious aliens.

"We shot down there forever," she explains, "12 weeks. I never did know what was taking us so long, to tell you the truth, and the heat was sweltering. You couldn't even walk in the daytime; you'd faint. I used to take a walk at dusk.

"But, of course, what made it bearable was being with so many old friends: Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn, Wilford Brimley (who plays my husband), Don Ameche and Gwen Verdon," all of them graduates of the Broadway theater whose friendship dates way back.

"Days when they were filming special effects, we'd make a big trip to the supermarket. On a really big day, we'd make it to the library, the post office and the supermarket. Nights we'd eat together, socialize.

"Gwen had her own little kitchen with an icebox and electric gadgets she cooked things on; but usually we went to Wilford's because he had a condo. Then we'd wind up the evening, at least I always did, playing Trivial Pursuit in the hotel lobby with Jessica usually and Dianna or Charlotte who work the desk at the hotel."

She admits to being "pretty good" at the game "except nothing after 1950. My specialty is old movies. Why not? I saw 'em all." Which is how she happened to become an actress.

"Right. I grew up in Troy, N.Y. I was crazy about pictures, especially those with Jean Harlow and Barbara Stanwyck. I still have a Robert Taylor autograph. It was Depression time, and back in Troy it was largely a matter of survival. My mom and dad had separated when I was quite young. My mom always worked, and as soon as I got out of high school I took off for New York to be an actress. My family thought I was kidding.

"I arrived in the big city, small, plump, with 100 bucks I thought would last forever.

"OK, so I went to work. Lots of jobs. All of them night jobs so I could make the rounds of tryouts like everyone else. I worked in hotels, behind the desk.

made up bills and took acting lessons. Certainly it was discouraging. You just keep on going. Always studying. I was at Actors' Studio before Lee Strasberg."

Her first job was an understudy in "Playboy of the Western World," starring Burgess Meredith. Next was "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" when Katherine Cornell reprised her famous role in 1945. A real part this time, she played Wilson, Elizabeth Barrett's companion

She remembers, "Katherine was a darling, great woman and a source of great inspiration to me, although I only realized that later. And, of course, it was her husband director/producer Guthrie McClintock who gave me my first three jobs: "Playboy," "Barretts" and then their production of "Antony and Cleopatra." I played Chairman, the slave girl. Guthrie was always in my corner, always there, always supportive.

As he explains it: His leg was shattered playing football, and he spent four months in a body cast. When he emerged from it, he was skinny, weak and forced to walk with a cane. His football friends deserted him, and he began to reevaluate his values and priorities. "It taught me, basically, that you have to always be nice to people,"

It also sent him in search of something to build up his self-image. Acting did it: "It showed

"He once sent me up for an audition for a musical. I kept saying, 'I can't sing!' He kept saying, 'You can ke a fool I went, and it was terrible. How did it go?' he asked me. 'Guthrie, it was terrible.' 'You'll practice,' he said. 'I will not. I can sing at 2 in the morning, coming home from a party, but

She went on to such stage successes as "The Rose Tattoo" in 1951 with Eli Wallach, in 1966 with Harry Guardino, and again in the '70s with Jerry Orbach; "Orpheus Descending" with Cliff Robertson; "The Glass Menagerie," "Toys in the Attic" with Jason Robards; "The Sea-"Toys in the gull" with Montgomery Clift; Neil Simon's "The Gingerbread Lady" and Lillian Hellman's "The Little She won Tonys for "The Rose Tattoo" and "The Gingerbread Lady," came to Hollywood to make "Lonely Hearts," "The Fugitive Kind," View from the Bridge" and Woody Allen's "Interiors," winning four Academy nominations and finally an Oscar for "Reds."

She went on to television, where she won an Emmy for "Among the Paths to Eden," kudos of critics for 'Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" (with Sir Laurence Olivier) and the hearts of the country for "Queen of the Stardust Ballroom.

Interestingly enough, she is that rare actress, with experience in all media, who prefers film. "I don't know why, but I always did. There's no stage fright, it's easier in a way because you shoot in small sequences, you have the director right there to depend on and they pay you more money. I like that.'

She gives one of those wicked grins. Also, she's one of those rare actresses who has really never known a slump. Some beauties reach 50 and find no scripts coming their way because they have lost the romantic parts to younger stars. Ms. Stapleton has always, essentially, been a character actress.

"I never had my eye on any particular parts. I figure it's tough enough to get a job without that. Besides, I think if you hang around long enough, you'll get to do everything. And all the wonderful reviews she's had probably never meant as much as the words of praise for her son Daniel's documentary "America and Lewis Hines," which was recently shown at the Lincoln Center Film Festival in New York.

"Lewis Hines was a very fine photographer who went down in the mines," she explains. "He took pictures of child labor, of immigrants, of the Empire State Building under construction, and Daniel has worked for several years on this documentary. Did you see the review in 'Vari-

Ms. Stapleton is very proud, very for her own, her agent, says he has 16 scripts and plays awaiting her, including "Agnes of God." She laughs, saying, "I'd better give him a call if he has that many." She has had the same agent, "a darling man," for more than 15 years, and they agree very well.

How does she decide on what she wants to do? "Well, let me see. I read it; if I don't throw up, I do it. That may sound frivolous, but it's the She says she would retire the fact is, she's loved acting, calls it a lazy life, and is so happy that she was in the theater in the beginning, since it enabled her to have time to marry and be a mother. "I never was far away when Kathy and Daniel were growing up. Maybe three weeks or so trying out a show. And there would sometimes be a year or so when I didn't work on stage at all and could be a full-time mom. It worked out fine.

And although her marriage to Max Allentuck did not last forever, it did last about 10 years, and they

"if I ever made enough money," but are still close. "Close? We're joined at the hip - which may be better than marriage. He runs the Birmingham Theater now in Birmingham, Mich." Her brief second marriage to writer David Rayfiel, she prefers not to discuss.

"I must say, I'm no great authority on marriage. I don't know anything about it, perhaps because I have no frame of reference. My mother and father didn't have a marriage, so I didn't grow up knowing what it was. And if they taught it at school, I was absent that week.

"But many of my friends are hap- her husband."

were always close. Daniel lives in New York, and I see him all the time. I shared a lot of the excitement when he and the girl who was then his girl friend were working on this documentary. I never urged either of the kids to get into show business. All I wanted was that they grow up to be reasonably happy. 'Kathy actually made a movie once when she was 14; but I had nothing to do with that. The producers, whoever they were, visited a lot of schools, saw her, and offered her the part. She had had no training, but she did fine. She really wasn't interested in acting at all. 'After school, she worked in the office of a theatrical producer, then she worked in the office at the Berkshire Summer Theater. That's where she met Rick. And even if I don't know much about marriage, I'd say they have a good one.

She may not have had much marital experience, but when it comes to acting, Stapleton can certainly portray a wife who cares, as in 'Cocoon." When, at the end of the picture, there are those who go off with the aliens "on a mission or whatever it is," she goes too, "not because she wants to go personally but because of her husband.

After all, in the film, she is a mother and grandmother with a grandson she cares a lot for - I understand that - I don't think she really wanted to leave them. But it's good marriage, and she goes with Ms.Stapleton thoroughly enjoyed working with the young people on this picture: director Ron Howard. 'who seems to have started in directing aged 2 and knows exactly what he's about;" Linda Harris who plays her daughter; young Ty Powers (Tyrone Power's son), making his film debut as one of the aliens. And then there were the retirement couples who are and have been for so long her own friends.

She laughs when you mention that actresses supposedly do not get along. "Jessica Tandy and I have been friends forever, and Helen Haves is a dear, dear friend. What an absolute first-rate, delicious lady, We had a ball doing 'Airport.' I told you that when I was a kid, one of my favorites was Barbara Stanwyck. One of my thrills in Hollywood once actually got to meet her. And you know what? She's more beautiful than she ever was!"

"One of the pluses of acting is the joy of working with good people. I recently filmed 'Sentimental Journey' with Jaclyn Smith. I play her secretary; and we had a fine time together.

"I suppose I'd never even think of retiring except that now I have my granddaughter. I want to watch her grow. I've been spending more time in Massachusetts than I have in my Manhattan apartment, and now that we've finished 'Cocoon,' I'm going to start looking for a place near Kathy and Rick and Alexandra. A young child changes so quickly from day to day, and I don't want to miss any of it. I've decided I'm going to be a burden on my kids. To hell with it!"

Scott Joplin Texarkana's most famous native son

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) - The Orr school building where he went to school still stands, but the building where he and his family lived on Laurel Street has long since been torn down. A piano he might have played was recently sold to a Houston auction com-

Some of the markers that have been commissioned in his honor haven't fared very well, either. A Texas historical marker in Bowie Park honoring him was vandalized and sat in a storage barn for a year until local businessman and musician Jerry Atkins found out

Scott Joplin, the great ragtime composer, is perhaps Texarkana's most famous native son. You wouldn't always know it.

A new mural in town, honoring the composer, on the south side of Ragland's Office Supply Co. may very well change all that. It's clearly the most visible of all the local mementos to Joplin. And Atkins, who co-owns the business, and who has been involved with almost every Joplin project here, couldn't be happier

He says now tourists can drive down Third Street, glance at the big brown hands on the wall playing the Maple Leaf Rag," and know that this is Scott Joplin's

Atkins hopes the mural is just another step in a series of events he hopes the city will continue to honor

'Visitors come to Texarkana and they say, 'I heard Scott Joplin was born here," says Atkins, explaining the mural's importance.

"Where's his grave?" they say. Well, the fact is he's buried in a pauper's grave in New York. Then they ask, 'Well, what can we see, then?' You can take them to the museum to see the bust of him that was commissioned, and the articles that we keep up. You really can't send them to Joplin Park. It's just a drainage project off of Highway 59. The mural is something they can see, something to be proud of."

It was Atkins who found out that the marker which he and others had worked so hard to get placed in Bowie Park had been vandalized.

"I was the most distressed guy in the world the other day when I walked through Bowie Park and found out the historical marker that we went through quite a lot of detailed work to get placed there was gone. The vandalized marker was repaired and put back up, thanks to Atkins and $75 from the Visitors and Conventions Bureau. Atkins has long been known as Texarkana's resident expert on jazz. He has played jazz most of his life, is usually involved in a jazz research project of one sort or another, and hosts a Saturday afternoon radio program where he features works from his vast record

He hasn't always had a passion for Scott Joplin, though. Atkins was a young man before he even heard his name. He still remembers that event.

'It was 1956, and a group of local musicians was doing a jazz benefit program for St. Mary's Church. The emcee that night was George Beasley, of Beasley Music Co. He came out on stage and started his talk by saying that in part, jazz was born right here in Texarkana, because of a young black piano player named Scott Joplin. That was the first time I ever heard his

It turned out to be a fateful encounter. Now Atkins has collected boxes of Joplin material. He is the man to see in Texarkana if you want to know about Joplin. This enthusiasm didn't come all at once, however.

After the 1956 concert Atkins forgot about Joplin for long time until the Texarkana Historical Society egan asking for information about famous Texarkanians. Atkins told the group about Joplin.
"I asked Katy Caver of the historical society if she had ever heard of Joplin, and she, like many others at the time, had never heard of him. I told her that he had written some music, and I thought it would be worth

It was by sheer coincidence that the rest of the nation began to rediscover Joplin, as well. New recordings were made of his music, and musicologists began researching his life and music. His music, rearranged by Marvin Hamlisch for the movie "The Sting," became popular again. And his folk opera, "Tremonisha," was produced on Broadway, for which Joplin received the Pulitzer Prize in music posthumously in 1976.

At the same time Atkins and others began pushing for more and more events and projects locally detailing the life and music of the black musician. The first big event was a special concert of his music during the city's centennial in 1973.

"We played his music and I wrote a narration about him which they read. It was a big day. They must have had about 1,200 people there. It was probably the first time that ragtime had been played in Texarkana

Over the past few years Atkins hasn't always had an easy time trying to keep the interest about Joplin alive in Texarkana. In addition to the Joplin projects, Atkins also keeps busy with the controversies about the details of Joplin's life that still arise.

One of the most famous of these controversies is over the true birthplace of Joplin. Whether Joplin was born in an outlying town or in Texarkana is still being Dick Reavis wrote a story in "Texas Monthly" about the false claim Texarkana had as the birthplace of Joplin, which the reporter cited as Linden, Texas. Again Atkins came to Texarkana's defense, writing a retaliation supporting the claim. "I could show you things that say he was born in seven different places. The fact is we're never going to know. My argument has always been that our town wasn't even an incorporated city in 1868, much less Linden. Here is a man (Joplin) in his late 40s, living in New York and is asked where his birthplace was. Of course he's going to say the largest settlement that he remembers, no matter where it was. The mural project was one of the more successful Joplin projects. It is the first major mural of any kind in Texarkana.

The project is actually the idea of Bob Burns, chief photographer of the Texarkana Gazette and a close friend of Atkins. Atkins said Burns told him about cities that had high school art classes paint murals on downtown buildings and that it would be nice if Texarkana could "pull it off someday." Well, he planted the idea, and the more I thought about it the more I thought it would be great. We had this big ugly wall and I thought that it would sure be nice to put something on it. Of course, we always thought it should be Scott Joplin."

The Texarkana Regional Arts and Humanities Council became involved, and the original plan to use high school students was later scrapped because of insurance and liability problems.

Finally, another TRAHC committee was formed, headed by Atkins, and the mural was completed by Little Rock muralist Debra Mosley and volunteers.

'2010' less powerful than '2001'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

It's not necessary to have seen the original "2001: A Space Odyssey" to enjoy "2010," but it helps.

The film opens with a mission report" that very briefly summarizes

Forrest where 1968's "2001" left off. In the year 1999, a black monolith was found on the moon that had obviously been left behind there ages ago by some unknown alien intelligence

Although the prologue doesn't mention it, in "2001" the monolith's creators had been responsible for teaching primitive man how to use tools (which man promptly turned into weapons).

Once uncovered, the moon monolith sent a powerful radio signal ripping across the solar system toward Jupiter.

To find out who - or what the monolith was communicating with, a spaceship, the Discovery, journeyed to Jupiter in the year 2001. On the way there, the ship's intelligent computer, the HAL 9000, went beserk and killed all but one member of the crew.

The survivor, played by Keir Dullea, disconnected HAL and managed to make it to Jupiter. There he discovered another huge black monolith orbiting the

When Dullea left the spaceship to examine this find he mysteriously vanished. The sequel "2010" takes off from this point.

In "2010" a joint team of American and Russian scientists set out abroad a Russian-built spaceship to discover what really happened out there in the cold depths of space.

Meanwhile, the political situation back on Earth is worsening. The U.S. and U.S.S.R. teeter on the brink of open warfare, leaving the astronauts (and cosmonauts) wondering if the earth will still be there when they return.

Many scenes early in "2010" are set on earth. Unfortunately, most of the world of the year 2010 looks a bit too much like modern California for comfort.

Once in outer space, the film's futuristic look becomes much more convincing. Stanley Kubrick's "2001" was a masterpiece of special effects when it came out in 1968. It wasn't until 'Star Wars" was released almost a decade later, in 1977, that any film rivaled "2001's" magnificent Even today, to our jaded eyes that have seen whole planets routinely explode on the big screen. there are very few effects in '2001" that really look dated.

The director of "2010," Peter Hyams, copied only as much of Kubrick's vision as necessary. For the Russian spacecraft, "2010" used the dimly-lit, heavily textured look of the spaceship Nos-tromo in the film "Alien" instead of the brightly pristine styling of "2001's" Discovery.

Although the special effects are integral to "2010" and extremely well-executed. Hyams doesn't revel in them quite as much as Kubrick did in "2001."

In fact, Kubrick seemed much more interested in the forces facing the characters than in the characters themselves. His crew of astronauts were a pretty bland

Hyams makes his cast a little more interesting but the story doesn't really go into any indepth characterizations. The only character that really demonstrates any growth during the film is HAL the computer.

Roy Scheider does a good job as the leader of the American scientists. Even though he has a smaller role, John Lithgow is even more memorable as an engineer who really dislikes floating outside the spaceship. Elya Baskin, Lithgow's humorous Russian partner, is probably the most likable cast member. Bob Balaban has an interesting but underdeveloped part as the computer specialist who has to bring HAL back to life.

Not only is Hyams' cast a little warmer than Kubrick's, his overall story - adapted from famed science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke's novel of the same title is generally more accessible. In "2001" Kubrick often seemed to go out of his way to make parts of the film deliberately obscure.

If, in some ways, "2010" is easier to watch than than "2001," it is also less powerful. The ambiguities that made "2001" such a difficult movie did give the audience some troubling notions to puzzle over after they left the theater.

"2010" will probably not leave that deep an impression on viewers. Most of what emotional power the film has comes from the images that Hyams borrows from "2001:" the monolith floating eeriely as the opening of 'Also Sprach Zarathustra" wells up on the soundtrack, the majesty of Jupiter and its moons, and the startling reappearance of Dullea.

Perhaps, because of this, only those who have seen "2001" will find "2010" as affecting as the director intended. Even then, some of those people may be disappointed because it lacks Kubrick's artistic ambiguity. Others, however, will no doubt be relieved that "2010" is more straightforward.

In the end, "2010" is a fitting companion piece because it concludes with a message of peace, while "2001" began with man's discovery of weapons.

"2010," rated PG for some intense situations, is now showing at North Park Cinemas.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Museum to show film dealing with geology of Yellowstone

A new geology film, "Faces of Yellowstone," will be shown at the Permian Basin Petroleum Musuem, 1500 Interstate West, on Saturdays and Sundays through Jan. 6.

Over the years, many films have been made about the scenic wonders of the world's first national park at Yellowstone. However, none dealt exclusively with geology of the park or centered on its volcanic origins. The Yellowstone Museum and Library Association approached Conoco about funding such a film. The oil company has been the only gasoline brand available in the park for many years. The result is a 22 minute film which simplifies the complex geologic concepts for all ages and educational

The film deals primarily with the role volcanic action has played in shaping the face of Yellowstone. Using puppets and other devices, the film demonstrates how the Yellowstone crater was formed some 600,000 years ago. Geologists have discovered there were three major volcanic actions in the park's history — the oldest some 2 million years ago when a crater 21/2 times the present crater was formed.

Saturday showings are at 2 p.m.; Sunday at 3 p.m. A special showing will be at 2 p.m. Jan. 1.

The Museum is open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. The Museum will be closed Christmas Eve and Christmas Day.

Midlander's work in Virginia exhibit

Julie Rogers, a fiber artist from Midland, has her work included in the juried exhibit "Crafts for the Elegant 80s" at the Cary Windsor Gallery in Richmond, Va. The exhibit features works from artists throughout the United States and will be on display through Jan. 5.

Ms. Rogers has been weaving for eight years since inheriting a loom from her grandmother. Both her grandmother and great-aunt were weavers in New England.

Ms. Rogers has been included in several national exhibitions including displays at Washington University in St. Louis, the London Historical Museum in Canada and the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago. She recently consulted with designers and submitted silk and gold tapestry samples for the interior of an aircraft for a Saudi royal family. The aircraft, a Boeing 747, is being installed with a special VIP interior in Texas.

Ms. Rogers teaches the beginning and advanced weaving classes at Midland College. Both are offered from 6 to 9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday this semester. For information on the classes, call Midland College.

City Heat' marred by too much violence

Dirty Harry and the Bandit travel back in time to 1933 to fight gangsters in "City Heat." Actually, that's not quite true. Neither Clint Eastwood nor Burt Reynolds really play their most amous characters in their new action-comedy. Instead they parody them Reynolds plays a womanizing. semi-sauve, good ol' boy of a private detective. Eastwood plays a rugged, taciturn police lieutenant with a sardonic sense of humor and a very big gun. Reynolds has demonstrated a certain flair for self-mocking comedy in several films, with probably the best being "Semi-Tough. "The End" and "Starting

Eastwood also has a talent for delivering beautifully deadpan lines, but in his commercially although not critically - successful comedies "Every Which Way But Loose" and "Any Which Way You Can," he ended up playing second banana to an orangutan named Clyde. Both performers play off their macho images for laughs quite well in "City Heat," but the plot never really gives the comedy a fighting chance.

Reynold's private eye partner, played by Richard Roundtree, tries to simultaneously, doublecross two rival gangsters. The mess he creates drags both Eastwood and Reynolds - and their respective girlfriends - into a no-man's land in a gang war.

Instead of playing this as a satire of old gangster movies, director Richard Benjamin tries to wring as much action and suspense as he can from the story. The result of his approach is a lot of deaths and injuries on-screen.

Many people may be disconcerted in the middle of a comedy when someone is thrown out of a window to smash bloodily onto the roof of an car.

The scene in which Reynolds and Eastwood pour ether on a wounded man and set him afire also may seem considerably less than hilarious to many viewers. There are, in fact, two scenes of men set afire in the perhaps appropriately-named "City Heat."
This sort of unfunny violence mars altogether too many scenes.

Puccini opera will be staged

Midland Opera Theater, Inc., in cooperation with Midland College, will be presenting a special centennial production of Puccini's "Gianni Schicchi" in

The traditional florentine setting of the one-act musical comedy will be updated to West Texas during the 1920s in honor of the Midland Centennial. Profits from the production will be used to benefit the Centennial Plaza," said Dr. Michael Jordan, coordinator of vocal music at Mid-land College. "We will need six basses, two tenors and five sopranos to produce the work.

Auditions for the production will be from 1 to 5 p.m. Jan. 6 and 6 to 9 p.m. Jan. 7 in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium choir rehearsal hall at Midland College. Persons who are interested in auditioning should contact Jordan at Midland College, 684-7851, extension 209 or 202.

Montgomery playing the heavy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Elizabeth Montgomery, usually the heroine, is the heavy in a CBS movie now being filmed on location in Ojai. Kirk Douglas also stars in "Amos" as a former baseball coach confined to a nursing home where Miss Montgomery is the head nurse. SAN MARINO, Calif. - Francesca Stanfill's small black pumps make a distinctive, delicate clicking sound as she walks across the cold stone floor, her perfume, a heady floral, follows in her trail. She settles into an early 19th-Century Russian gilt chair, facing an ornate 18th century screen in her family's sumptuous Italianate house. Soon, she is pouring hot tea from a silver service and offering madeleines - the rich, shell-shaped cookies that Marcel Proust wrote about in "Remembrance of Things Past."

But there is more than just tea being served here. This young woman, wearing pearls and pinstripes, is about to unravel a saga that caused ripples even in the unshockable Manhattan publishing

Miss Stanfill hardly appears the shocking type. Pale, with translu-cent skin, she is fragile-looking and rail-thin. She is also as pretty as a princess, with flowing hair and blue

Her life, too, has been the stuff of fairy tales: She was born in Oxford, England, where her father was finishing his studies as a Rhodes Scholar. She grew up afforded all the advantages of education and position: Polytechnic School in Pasadena, Calif., Yale University, summers in Europe.

It was after her first trip to Europe, at age 14, that she feels she began to blossom. "I'll never forget," she said. "I would divide my life into before Europe and after Europe."

Indeed, Miss Stanfill, 30, the daughter of former 20th Century Fox Film Corp. chairman and chief executive Dennis Stanfill, could almost walk off the pages of her first novel, "Shadows and Light," in which the characters inhabit a universe of wealth, society and cultural richness - much like the one Miss Stanfill inhabits in real life.

'It's simply the world I know, in the same way (Henry) James or Proust or Tolstoy wrote of what they knew," she explained. "I think there's a misconception today that in order to be literary you have to write a book about upstate Vermont or a mining town."

But after the book was printed early this year, Miss Stanfill said, Adrian Antoniu, the investment banker to whom she was briefly married in 1978, threatened to sue for libel, alleging that the book depicted their much-heralded marriage, which was annulled weeks after the wedding.

"Shadows and Light" is about a wealthy, beautiful but insecure Sotheby's art expert who meets and marries a charming banker involved in illegal bank scheming.

Miss Stanfill said that when Antoniu complained, the publisher, Doubleday, halted shipment of the books and asked her to change some minor details - which she did. But Doubleday, she said, also asked her to pay for reprinting costs. She said that she offered to pay for only the typesetting costs rather than the entire production bill. A Doubleday spokesman refused to comment. Miss Stanfill, who has maintained that the book is a "work of the imagination," said she became so "disillusioned" with Doubleday that her present husband - New York attorney Peter Tufo, whom she married last May — along with Floyd Abrams, the attorney who was representing her, suggested she buy the book back from Doubleday and submit it elsewhere. In March, Miss Stanfill said, she repaid her advance and immediately signed a new contract with Simon and Schuster. which published the book in Sep-

She describes the dispute with Doubleday) which is reportedly unprecedented in New York publishing circles, as "agonizing," and she contends that if the roles were turned and it was an ex-wife threatening suit, none of the "paranoid reaction" on the part of the publisher would have occurred. Little seems to intimidate her.

After graduating from Yale, Miss Stanfill went to work as a fashion and feature writer for Women's Wear Daily, and then joined the staff of the New York Times. In the fall of 1980, she authored a controversial Sunday magazine cover story on Oscar and Francoise de la Renta, in which she explored the phenomenon of the dinner party and how social connections are made. "It became quite notorious - to my delight," she said grinning. "I suppose there was a lot of jealousy. The people who had assumed they were the social arbiters didn't like the fact that they weren't chosen." She then departed the paper armed with her Doubleday contract.

Miss Stanfill is surprisingly un-

Though her father joined Fox when she was 16, and both her parents moved in a world of filmdom and genteel society, Hollywood seemed to have little impact on her.

With all her eloquence and ease with words, Miss Stanfill is hardpressed to recount any memorable Hollywood events or speak at length of a single actor, director, producer or studio executive, except to say that she thinks Fox is in good hands with Barry Diller. It is not because she is loath to talk Hollywood; rather, it seems, that she and the film capital just never clicked. "I have an ambivalent attitude about it," she reflected. "I've seen it close up. It's a very Byzantine world. I jokingly called it 'Byzantine

The name-dropping of literary giants comes much more naturally to her. Lawrence Durrell, Flaubert, James and the Brontes are particular favorites. Her godmother is writer Monica Dickens, the greatgreat-granddaughter of Charles Dickens. "She encouraged me to write," said Miss Stanfill. "It was at Monica's that I first learned to

Although she did not set out to become a professional writer (originally sne wanted to act in the theater), one of her Yale professors encouraged her. Then in the fall of 1973, the writer Antonia Fraser came to speak at vale and Miss Stanfill was hooked. "I thought to myself, this is what I want to do."

She stands firm that "Shadows & Light" is no more the story of her ill-fated marriage than is the novel she is currently writing a self-portrait. The new book is about a "poor and self-invented woman who is haunted by her background," she

Yet, she does not deny that a novelist uses life's experience to create a work of fiction. "Of course you draw on what you know," she con-tinued, sipping her tea. "I had been hurt very much, and as a writer you turn to your work to write out the pain. But I didn't turn to that exerience as an 'outline.' I turned to it in order to exorcise it.'

Miss Stanfill stopped a moment and then went on. "The unfortunate truth is that to a writer suffering is probably necessary. The sense of pain and what to make of the chaos. that turned me eventually to writing

Like the heroine of a good book including hers - Miss Stanfill has found happiness. Nine months ago, she gave birth to a daughter, Serena. She and her husband divide their time between a New York apartment and renovated house in Southampton, which was photographed in the New York Times. The couple can be private in Southampton, or they can move and mingle with New York's power brokers if they choose; indeed Sotheby's Holdings Chairman A. Alfred Taubman, a client of her husband, hosted the book's publication party.

'As a writer," concluded Miss Stanfill, "I've always known that you cannot fear notoriety and controversy. And I have had a lot of both."

Actor taking orders from his son LOS ANGELES (AP) - Actor Robert Hooks was taking orders from his son, director Kevin Hooks, the other day. The elder Hooks was a guest star in the NBC series, "V," and his son was directing. It will be a recurring role for Hooks.

"The experience was incredible," the elder Hooks said on the stage at the Burbank Studios. "I have a feeling of pride and respect because he's really a good director who understands the script and how to rectify any problems with it.

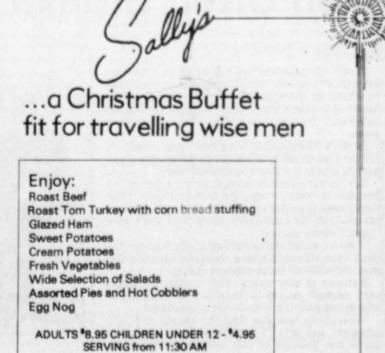

I'm in awe of working with him. I always have to keep in mind that he's the boss. Kevin Hooks, 26, starred in "The White Shadow" and has gone on to direct episodes of such series as "St. Elsewhere" and "Fame." He continues to act, and appeared with his father in the TV pilot, "Kinfolk."

Celebrities help in food drive

NEW YORK (AP) - The Ethiopian food drive is attracting scores of celebrities who want to help raise money for the starving people of that African nation.

Actor-comedian Eddie Murphy and New York's latest hot comic, Whoopi Goldberg, told jokes at the Comic Strip the other night to benefit the drive. Meanwhile, model Brooke Shields, baseball great Willie Stargell and rocker Ron Wood hosted a party at the Limelight to also raise money.

Steinem role model for modern women

Her road to independence wasn't an easy one

KATHY LARKIN King Features Syndicate

For 20 years, Gloria Steinem has been the voice of change for women. She has spoken out, she has written on, she has marched for changes in the laws and the lifestyles affecting women: questions of abortion, women in politics, the right to bear children outside marriage, equal pensions. She has worked, too, for purely human causes: civil rights, for example. It hasn't always been easy.

But Gloria Steinem never expected life to be easy. Her desperate, unhappy mother, Ruth Nuneviller Steinem — who struggled from working-class roots into college and finally a newspaper writing job she loved — had her first "nervous breakdown" before Ms. Steinem was born, when her elder sister was 5.

Her father, Leo, had a passionate dream: to revive a decayed, isolated Michigan lake resort as a show-business stop worthy of his 1930s big band era. He failed.

When Gloria Steinem was 10, her father left home.

For the next seven years, alone in a Toledo, Ohio, basement apartment with her ill mother, Ms. Steinem out running my own show. Gloria "made one last stab at being a showed me being a really strong child." It was already too late.

BORN WHEN HER mother was 35, Gloria Steinem grew up fast, caring for the once-resilient woman who made blankets during stark Depression winters; the woman married to a "kind, but financially irresponsible man"; the woman who was finally overwhelmed by and hospitalized for her emotional problems.

"My mother," recalls Ms. Steinem,

'turned from a fun-loving, book-loving woman into one afraid to be alone, a woman who could not hang onto reality long enough to hold a

But Ruth Nuneviller Steinem still had the guts to survive, the guts to lege education. And somehow, she found the guts to help both daugh-ters toward the independence she never had. In the end Ruth Steinem triumphed. And finally, so did her

Gloria Steinem's road to survival started with her 1956 Smith College graduation. It led through the two years as a Chester Bowles Asian Fellow, when she walked India's dusty, arid landscape "traveling through caste riots with a cup, a sari and a comb." And the current stopping place is her highly visible, pivotal role in the women's movement as oriented to sexual politics, not enough to the mainstream of where American women were. But basically, with respect to where women are now, I think everything contri-

"Certainly Steinem did. She became a glamorous role model for the woman who chose not to marry, not to have children, but still to keep her own identity as a woman, to have sex and a career.'

MS. STEINEM IS still breaking ground - and age barriers. She celebrated her 50th birthday recently with a splashy, funny, nostalgic VIP fund-raiser for Ms. Foundation (according to Ms. Steinem, "the only national women's fund in a country where no more than 3 percent of all U.S. corporate giving goes to women's causes"). And she soared across the half-century mark.

respect from the likes of party hosts Marlo Thomas and Phil Donahue; from Alan Alda, Carol Burnett, Bette Midler, Ralph Nader, astro-naut Sally Ride; from former Kentucky Governor John Y. Brown and wife Phyllis George; from workers of Cesar Chavez and from tiny feisty Rose Parks.

It was Ms. Parks, after all, who stood up two decades ago, in Montgomery, Ala., in the lifetime of Martin Luther King and said flatly: "I will not sit in the back of this bus." And changed the course of civil rights forever.

So many people had come so far to salute the wand-thin woman whose blond-streaked hair flowed to her bare shoulders above the blue halter-neck gown. But then, Gloria Steinem had touched so many lives.

And at her 50-mark, with a sexy gold band spiraling around one bare upper arm, and attractive, long-time friend, lawyer Stan Pottinger tucking her other arm into his, Ms. Steinem was radiant proof that there can be life and love after feminism and despite birthdays.

Said Ms. Thomas: "Gloria really helped me understand feminism. I was one of those ambitious women woman meant helping other women achieve their goals too."

ASKED TO SEPARATE the feminist from the friend, Ms. Thomas chuckles. "That's impossible. They're one and the same. Who else would send me, as a gift — and encouragement — a poster of the first leading female bullfighter?"

Alda, who feels the women's movement has gone forward, but not fast enough, found it "almost impossible" to put Ms. Steinem's contribution into words. But only because "she has given so much, gathered so many people around her, been an incisive thinker, a person able to do what is most imporsell her Toledo, Ohio, house for tant — identify the problems other money to fund her daughter's col-people see only dimly, focus on them and on solutions.'

Says Nader flatly: "Gloria means business. She has stamina. She doesn't give up. She is not susceptible to the novelty of social movements. She is determined to do what she thinks is right. Never mind whether or not it has glamour."

Ms. Burnett, another old Steinem friend, was praising the talent that came hardest perhaps to Gloria Steinem - the shy, burdened child who grew up surrounded by a refuge of books. Says Ms. Burnett: "When Gloria goes on TV or speaks out, she's poised, calm and definite."

In the early between commercial articles and a thought it was too much nagging sense of purpose, Ms. Steinem briefly became an undercover agent and an underdressed "bunny" (the uniforms were mostly a splash of neon blue or orange and a fluff of bunny tail) in Hugh Hefner's Playboy Club. The better to expose what went on inside a 'bunny" patch.

That article, reprinted in her justpublished paperback version of Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions," brought Ms. Steinem a $1 million-dollar libel suit, several obscene phone calls, and the realization that "all women are bunnies."

IN THOSE YEARS too, she wrote of traditional Christmas dinners for traditional women's magazines, while sneaking pizzas to radical Puerto Ricans and feminists "sitting in" at a Harlem church.

was paying $62.50 a month to rent a New York apartment and using my American Express card to finance expenses of the march, even Ted Kennedy's hotel room. It just seemed more convenient. In the end, my card was repossessed."

Many of the articles written after her "escape" from the women's pages were, by Ms. Steinem's critical perceptions, "too slick." She exempts a few stories along the way. She still cherishes her coverage of Harlem and its people when Martin Luther King was assassinated. She rates her coverage of many presidential campaigns as "good."

If the McGovern campaign was a learning experience - "I was raising money, scribbling speeches and still, as a woman, being treated with frivolity by the McGovern staff" it was Robert F. Kennedy who made child? I had no way then." Somethe strongest impact on Gloria thing, she says, that had already Steinem. He is, in fact, the one presimight have "made a difference.

SAYS MS. STEINEM, leaning back and running fingers through her hair: "He was the outsider of his family. The smallest. The one who had the hardest time keeping up. He identified emotionally with outsiders and underdogs. "And he was the one with a surprising capacity for growth and change. His life was saved by a Soviet doctor when he was traveling there and was very ill - with pneumonia, I think. Ever after, he could never depersonalize the Soviets. To him, they were people. Steinem insists: "I think if he had been in the White House, many more people - women, blacks might have felt...connected."

It is another day, another place: the offices of "Ms" magazine. A pale Gloria Steinem, clad in her nondescript working uniform of black knit top and matching pants grazing the scuffed tops of her worn brown working boots, has a cold. She sits in the corner of a cramped, two-desk office scarcely larger than the walk-in closet of a luxury co-op. Shelves of books, precariously overloaded, hover above her head. Her articulate, incisive comments are occasionally muffled by Kleenex. This is not your typical executive suite.

But is Ms. Steinem, editor and co-founder of "Ms," your typical execu-

Her name is listed, in alphabetical order, among a group of editors on the "Ms." masthead. She has never owned a car. Her only property is a two-bedroom New York apartment.

AND HER BOOK is dedicated not only to "My mother, Ruth Nuneviller Steinem, who performed the miracle of loving others even when she could not love herself." It also salutes "the father who taught me to love and live with insecurity."

And she means it. "No matter what happened," says Ms. Steinem flatly, "I always knew both my parents loved me. There was a turning point: the meeting where writer Gloria Steinem, assigned to cover the abortion issue, heard women stand to "testify" as she had heard others testify in the Southern churches and civil rights meetings of the 1960s. For Ms. Steinem, it was a thunder clap similar to the roll of a "born again" revival meeting.

She remembers: "They talked about rape. They talked about endangering their lives in illegal abortions. They talked about being asked to accept sterilization as the price of abortion.

And those women talked directly to Ms. Steinem's own memories, to the time, just out of college and pregnant, she worked as a waitress in England, staying with married friends — while hunting for a legal abortion. "They were nice people. Maybe I could have confided in them. But I didn't I told no one. Not them. But I didn't. I told no one. Not another woman. Not the father. Not

Gloria Steinem did not. "In Lon-don, recently, I went back and found the espresso shop where I was a waitress and I thought about being pregnant and having an awful

She is, after all, a self-described blend of her own mother and father: The survivor part of me is more my father. He was funny and streetsmart. The internal woman, the deeper part of me, echoes my mother. She was enormously idealistic, sentimental. She wanted to believe the best of people. So do I. I get taken sometimes.

These days, she dates different men - most recently magazine tycoon Mort Zuckerman. But she's close to lawyer Pottinger, who served under Presidents Nixon and Ford. They've been dating for nine years. They met while both were working for civil rights.

Stan is a Midwesterner like me. He is at once practical and idealistic. And when we met, he was a single parent with very young children, two boys and a girl. I didn't know him before he was a single parent, but I think raising children really has an impact on men. They become much more patient."

IN THE BEGINNING, says Ms. Steinem, the children tried to make her into a mother figure. "They were living in a neighborhood with matched sets of parents. But they have a wonderful mother. They didn't need me for that. So I'm sort of their Auntie Mame. I come around and tell them to do what everyone else tells them not to do."

Says Pottinger: "Gloria has a lot of qualities her critics often overlook. She is a very astute political person who can take an idea or a person or an institution and cut it into beautiful ribbons that somehow are better for the cutting.

"She is a strong critic, but never without a vision of how to be better. And," he suddenly grins, "she also knows about all those funny crazy things: the importance of tap danc-ing, how to hold a good cigar and what was really wrong with Sig-mund Freud. Whatever happens to us," (and marriage is not in the offing, say both of them), "we have a lot of love and affection that will stay between us forever.'

Meanwhile, there is "Ms" and the speaking engagements, however frightening, that began tentatively (and with knee-shaking stage fright) criss-crossing the United States with black feminist Dorothy Pitman Hughes, lawyer Florynce Kennedy and activist Margaret Sloan.

Ms. Steinem, a private person despite her learned public skills, was nervous, but she plunged into a new dimension.

'It was finally, this traveling and lecturing across the country that made me understand there was indeed an audience for a feminist magazine...We found two common cries. Women were desperate for everyday information: example, How do you start a day-care center?' And every question was fol-lowed by another: 'Where can I write for help?"

THERE WAS NO place. So she began the Women's Action Alliance, a central information service.

Birthing "Ms" was not easy. Would she do it again today? In an era where consciousness has been raised, according to Ms. Steinem, and the next step is changing institu-

Gloria Steinem throws her head back and chuckles. "A good question. I guess so. Because the truth is: If I could find someone with investment money, there are still so many other good magazines that should be started. I'd love to do a children's magazine, focused on both girls and boys, and their equality. No predetermined sex roles. And I would love to start a feminist version of "True Confessions" magazine.

As the interviewer's eyebrows rocket upwards, Ms. Steinem leans forward to explain: "No. Seriously. Ms' has an enormous influence. And I'm happy with it. But most Americans don't get their information from 'Ms.

'Now, the format of 'True Confessions' is really quite suitable for us. It can reach so many people. But with the new version, instead of ending up with a knight on a white charger, you end up with a little self-respect and some control of your own life. And that's what the women's movement is all about, after all.

Men often blamed for women's failures

King Features Syndicate

Jackie and Marlene are indulging in a favorite female occupation: complaining about men. The two men in question are "underachievers," the kind who make ambitious women — women ambitious for their men, that is - gnash their Jackie's ex-husband, who has been employed for several months, is behind in his support payments, which are about to end anyway. But Jackie recently turned down a better job because it wasn't "creative and fulfilling." She won't even consider asking her 18-year-old daughter to look for part-time work. Yet she's in a "panic" about money.

"I never could count on him," she fumes. "We can't even afford to take a weekend vacation this summer without those support checks."

Marlene is also angry. Her husband doesn't earn enough money to keep her in the style to which her married friends are accustomed.

"Everybody else has time for tennis and long lunches," she says. "I have to work at a job that bores me. Enough of this working woman routine! I'd like to quit, at least for a while. If he found a higher-paying job, I could stay home and take art lessons. I've always wanted to paint." Both women describe themselves as "feminists." They can tell you when and how their rights have been violated since the cradle. Yet they balk at assuming total responsibility for their own lives. They're really unhappy about some of the things they don't have - more money, creative freedom, job satisfaction — and they blame those deficiencies on men. 'Almost all women, at one time or another, blame men for what's wrong with their lives," says Dr. Sonya Friedman, the popular psychologist who hosts her own talk show, "Sonya," on the USA cable network. "Once I was among those women, so I know the feeling first-hand."

women, so I know the feeling first-hand."

Observation of typical female behavior, including her own, led Ms. Friedman to write a book, "Men Are Just Desserts." The title concept—that men are an enhancement to a life which is already complete without them—may seem to relegate men to a lesser position in our lives than we hold in theirs. It really doesn't.

"I don't like the idea of being considered a cupcake," commented a male friend. Then he laughed at himself. "Cupcake" was once his pet name for his ex-wife, the woman who left "a suf-focating marriage" to find her own life.

Women have always been "desserts," the deli-cious extra never intended to replace the main course. (Why else describe photos of scantily clad women as "cheesecake"?) The folklore of the sexes is built around a core belief: Love is only part of a man's life, but it is all of a woman's.

Their need for meat and potatoes has never been questioned. We, however, have been expected to exist on the high-calorie diet of romance.

Even today, many women who have made incredible strides professionally still depend on men to make them "happy." And blame men when they fail to do so. Blaming men for being providers, inept lovers or boring companons absolves us from the responsibility of making our lives interesting and financially rewarding.

"If you can blame a man for what's wrong with your life, then you don't have to do anything about it yourself," Ms. Friedman says.

That's why we put all our effort into finding the right man - and then leave everything else

To relegate men to their proper place, the dessert position on the menu, women must first relinquish The Fantasy. You can no longer be the princess in the tower (or Snow White asleep in the glass coffin) awaiting the prince whose kiss of awakening will cause real life to begin. "And they lived happily ever after" strongly implies that he takes care of her until the end of her days that he makes the "happily" part happen.

We seek unending passion, rescue by a heroic lover and a life characterized by steamy looks and devoted attention. This is love?" Ms. Fried-Basically every woman wants to be taken care of by some man. I never met a woman who didn't," says Len, a St. Louis psychologist.

This oft-repeated remark has caused Len to be ostracized at parties. "Women tell me I am years out of date," he says. "They point to their jobs and say, 'Look, I'm working, I'm an independent

But scratch the surface of an independent woman and you'll find a traditional woman who thinks she needs a man for financial or emotional security or both.

Well, why shouldn't we think so?

Women are conditioned to giving men top priority in their lives, to making them the main course. Isn't the quality of the main course the test of the meal? We've been told so often that nothing matters as much as love, we've begun to Read an interview with a successful female executive, politician, media darling. She will most likely say, "Of course my marriage comes first." Or, "I couldn't have done it without my husband's support." Or, "Yes I have all this, but I don't have love, so my life's not complete."

The gift of a book can be one of the greatest pleasures of Christmas and books you received as a child are permanently imprinted on your memory. LITTLE WOMAN, THE WIZARD OF OZ, and the LANG fairy tales were some of the treasures I received as a child at Christmas. Yesterday I went shopping for children's books in Midland and was delighted in the selection. The beautiful SILENT NIGHT with Susan Jeffs' illustrations may become a tradition to be read each year at Christmas. Charles Dickens' A CHRISTMAS CAROL, with whimsical illustrations by John Worsley is another book to be treasured. A MIRACLE ON 34TH STRET by Valentine Davies with paintings by Tomie de Paula will be a favorite for holiday reading. The 1966 copyright SANTA BEAR by Michael Brown will be enjoyed by children aged 3-5. The ever popular THE NIGHT BEFORE XMAS IN TEXAS THAT IS by Leon Harris and A CAJUN NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS by Trosclair are two of the regional Christmas books that are fun to read during the holidays. THE FAMILY BOOK OF CHRISTMAS SONGS & STORIES could become a book to depend on for Christmas carols and Christmas stories. It includes the editorial "Is there a Santa Claus?"

If you wish to give a classic, the Illustrated Junior Library, with 20 titles such as HEIDI, ROBINSON CRUSOE, LITTLE WOMEN and ARABRIAN NIGHTS are beautifully illustrated by different artists. These may be purchased separately. The HOBBIT by J.R.R. Tolkein with illustrations by Michael Hague will be a fine addition to any collection.

The poetry books of Shel Silverstein, WHERE THE SIDEWALK ENDS and A LIGHT IN THE ATTIC are ever popular and in demand. Judy Blume's new book, THE GREAT ONE AND THE PAIN, is also in demand.

For the youngest, THE CARE BEAR'S CIRCUS OF SHAPES by Peggy Kakn, DID YOU EVER PET A CARE BEAR, BEATRIX POTTER'S NURSERY RHYME BOOK, THE LITTLE ENGINE THAT COULD, GOODNIGHT MOON, NEVER TALK TO STRANGERS, and RICHARD SCARRY'S CARS AND TRUCKS AND THINGS THAT GO are good suggestions for the 48 age group. THE READ IT YOURSELF STORYBOOK is the perfect book for the child who has just learned to read. The beautiful WIND IN THE WILLOWS by Kenneth Grahame, illustrated by John Worsley, is a book to read and re-read. THE GIVING TREE by Shel Silverstein is a good choice. MOSES THE KITTEN by James Herriot is a book for all ages.

Two pop up books, SAILING SHIPS and INSIDE THE PERSONAL COMPUTER will be fun for children. The sticker book GHOST BUSTERS has been a big seller this year.

Series books such as NANCY DREW, HARDY BOYS, TRIXIE BELDEN CHOOSE YOUR OWN ADVENTURE and WHICH WAY books all make good

Boxed books come for all ages from A BEATRIX POTTER SAMPLER, (a two book set with story of Peter Rabbit and story of Tom Kitten) to the SWEET VALLEY HIGH books. Other boxed sets are Black Stallion books by Walter Farley, Best of Encyclopeida Brown, Madeline L'Engle's trilogy, Little House books, Wildfire Romances, and The Hobbit. May Christmas bring you and your children the book of your choice.

Author learns a lot about father

"Home Before Dark," by Susan Cheever. 243 pages. Illustrated. Houghton Mifflin. $15.95.

By CHRISTOPHER

LEHMANNHAUPT New York Times News Service

"I don't think I would have started this book if I had known where it was going to end," Susan Cheever writes in the preface to "Home Before Dark," a biographical memoir of her father, John Cheever. I suppose she means by this that her book ends not just with her father's painful death from cancer in the late spring of 1982, but also with her discovery of a number of things that would be difficult for any child to face about a parent. But her book has more problems getting started than it does with finshing. The problem at the outset seems to be that Miss Cheever has a hard time distinguishing herself from her father. Within the first few dozen pages, she reveals that it was her father, not she, who wrote the questions for a penetrating interview with him that appeared under her byline as part of a Newsweek cover story in 1977. This revelation may be trivial, but it is symbolic of the way the identity of the daughter becomes confused with that of the father.

sism. Perhaps Miss Cheever is trying to do stylistically what Joyce did in "A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man" - that is, to develop the point of view so that it reflects the author's progress from childhood to maturity. But if that's what she's doing, she hasn't gone far enough to signal the reader that she's in command of her technique.

There is, for example, an incident in the author's childhood when her cap blew off while she and her father were walking on Queensboro Bridge, "and Daddy couldn't catch it. We watched it as it floated down," she continues, "tumbling and spinning until it was a tiny speck lost in the eddying currents. It took a long time. After that, my father was afraid of bridges."

Lest we think this is mere fussy nervousness over the loss of an item of clothing, there follows an entry from her father's journal describing a full-blown and terrifying phobia. Does she expect us to believe that the cap was the cause of the fear, or is she hinting elliptically at something deeper going on? One can not tell, but the extreme identity of the author with her subject is consistent with the sense one gets throughout the first third of the book that Miss Cheever and her father lived in a world all their own.

Further along in "Home Before Dark," the author does seem to grow More damagingly, in the early sections of the book, it is often impossitions of the book in the book in the book is of the book. up and the fascinating result is the throughout his life - his sense of inauthenticity, his ambivalent sexA Review ual identity, his rage at childhood injuries, his guilt and furious denial. No wonder he hated psychiatry. No wonder he strove unremittingly after decorum. No wonder he dressed up his Bostonian pedigree and cultivated his aristocratic manner. At last we begin to understand his ambivalence toward the suburban world he charted - why he would ask the plaid-trousered neighbors over for drinks and then concoct satirical fables about them after

Miss Cheever even makes us sympathize with his discomfort over hislack of formal education. He was a man tortured by his sense of inadequacy. His fiction was as much an attempt to reinvent himself as it was to give vent to marvelous imagina-

There are copses and flowered meadows in the bleak landscape that constitutes most of this book bursts of bright foliage along the path into alcoholism and terminal cancer that concludes John Cheever's story. There are regal passages from the journals Cheever kept throughout his life. There is a palpable sense of the inimitable Cheever household — the promise it would hold of an escape into its master's fiction. There are arresting quotations from a 10-page letter from the author's youngest brother, Federico, who, despite his interest in history, seems to be the child most richly endowed with his father's sense of prose.

Cheever's final acceptance of his homosexuality — so evident in his penultimate novel, "Falconer" comes as a relief here rather than the curse he regarded it most of his life. What gives his story a tragic nobility is that its ultimate defeat and victory came simultaneously. After he overcame his addiction to alcohol and accepted his sexual attraction to men, he seemed finally to be at peace with himself. But the toll of these victories appears to have been too great. After a series of heart attacks and grand mal seizures, he finally succumbed to cancer. Or as Miss Cheever suggests, the lifelong strain of remaining younger than he was finally served to age him fatally.

What the author presumably regrets in her preface is that the act of writing this book has led her to conclusions that were sometimes difficult to face. But, she concludes, 'having written it I know my father better than I ever did while he was alive." The same thing can be said for the rest of us: as a result of her having written "Home Before Dark," we get to know a man we scarcely dreamed existed behind the elegant facade. It is a painful discovery, but it is to Miss Cheever's credit that she persevered. Not only has she finally identified her father, but in doing so she has begun the work of identifying herself.

Book history of Panama Canal treaties

"Pamama Odyssey," By William J. Jorden. 746 pages. University of Texas Press. $24.50.

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN New York Times News Service

Remember the Panama Canal treaties of 1978 and the bitter debates that divided this country on whether the United States should "return" the canal to Panama? It is only five years since the treaties went into effect, but they have aiready passed into oblivion. Ronald Reagan, who bitterly assailed Presidents Ford and Carter for their advocacy of the treaties, has said and done nothing about them since taking office.

In fact, Reagan warmly welcomed the president-elect of Panama, Nicolas Ardito Barletta, to the White House Friday. As the Reagan administration struggles with its Central American policy, the solid relations between the United States and Panama, one of the side benefits of the treaties, are a major source of satisfaction to the administration. Imagine the administration's problems, if in addition to El Salvador and Nicaragua, it also had to worry about protecting the Panama Canal gainst a hostile Panama.

William J. Jorden, a former correspondent for The New York Times, worked as a special assistant to President Johnson, who first tried to negotiate a new Panama Canal treaty in 1964. He was hired by Henry A. Kissinger as his Latin American adviser on the National Security Council in 1972, and was named by President Nixon as ambassador to Panama in 1974. He was kept on by Carter in 1977 and helped shepherd the treaties through Congress.

This first-hand experience at the center of the negotiations with Ambassadors Ellsworth Bunker and Sol M. Linowitz allowed Jorden to write a massive, Kissingerian memoir-history of the Panama Canal negotiations from 1964 to 1979. Jorden's book not only provides rich material on the events he witnessed first-hand from his vantage point in the White House and later in Panama, but also on the behind-thescenes activity from which he was excluded, such as the strategy sessions held by Omar Torrijos Herrera's government.

Like Kissinger's two volumes about his days in the Nixon White House (a third volume on the Ford White House is still to come), Jorden has woven personal anecdote, documentation and revealing detail into a highly readable, more-than-youmay-want-to-know book about the Panama treaties. For aficionados of diplomatic reporting, however, this is the "sleeper" book of the year, which gives the reader one of the rare opportunities to be invited into a crucial set of negotiations.

But more than that, it also goes into exhaustive detail on the bureaucratic maneuvering in Washington, showing how the Defense and State

A Review

Departments interact on something like the canal treaties, in which the Pentagon's inherent desire to retain its control over the canal, and the State Department's desire to avoid trouble in Latin America, initially clashed, but then were resolved when the Joint Chiefs of Staff concluded that it would not be worth the cost to have to defend the canal against an angry Panamanian population if the treaties were not

One of the more intriguing aspects of this book is its ability to penetrate the thinking and activities of the Panamanians. Most diplomatic memoirs reveal only a minimum of what the other side was up to. For instance, the spate of books dealing with the Russians can only guess, generally, at Soviet motivations. Who knows what Andrei A. Gromyko and Leonid I. Brezhnev talked about in preparing the way for the strategic arms agreements, for instance.

But the Panamanians, many educated in the United States, apparently decided that they wanted Jorden's book to be the definitive one on what obviously was the most important set of negotiations in Panama's history. Jorden acknowledged that the doors were open to him from Torrijos down. Thus, Jorden is sort of like a former battlefield commander going back after the war to interview his opposing generals and finding out what their battle plans were at the time.

There were many strange and unusual turns in the Panama negotiations, in part because of the sensitivity of the issues to the two countries. Jorden is lavish in his praise of Johnson and Carter for their efforts on behalf of the treaties, with Carter receiving special praise for his decision to make the canal treaty the priority foreign-policy goal in his first months in office. He provides details on why Ellsworth Bunker is considered the premier American negotiator of the century, and he has taken the time to give play-by-play accounts of the problems faced and surmounted by the State Department and Panamanian lawyers. Jorden could probably have used a good editor to cut away excess anecdote and detail. But he clearly was determined to get everything he knew about Panama and the negotiations into the account, and for those who want to recreate what it was like in the negotiating room, this is the ideal book.

Monday, December 17, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: New York Times columnist William Safire, author Erskine Caldyell, Boston Red Sox lefthander Bob Ojeda, actor Barry Livingston, Pittsburgh Pirate Marvell Wynne and the Houston Astros' Craig Reynolds share your birthday. Also orn on this date: poet John Greenleaf Whittier, Boston Pops conducfor Arthur Fiedler. Use all the abor-saving devices available to you and profits will rise. A family matter is finally solved to your satisfaction. Build your savings. A new love has great potential. Give it a chance to mature. Conscientious and thoughtful, you have what it takes to be a wonderful spouse and parent. Follow your heart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): There is more than one way to get what you want. Consider all your options and you will find a way to win big. Mate lends special support.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take the lead today and someone's respect for you will grow. Your extensive experience may scare those with less knowledge. Be diplomatic when showing others how to do things.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you sense that a special business offer is not all it should be, reject it. Your intuition is right on target. A higher-up gives you a helpful hint. CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have a chance to make a real comeback. Heed your first impression. Although paperwork irritates the difference between success and failure. Pay attention to detail.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Self-improvement activities play a large role in your plans. Your personal appearance can be a plus or minus in business. Lose those extra pounds before the holiday

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A romantic encounter takes you by surprise. Enjoy the fringe benefits that come with a promotion or new job. Pay bills promptly even if you cannot pay them in full.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put on your thinking cap and you will be able to overcome any opposition you encounter. Creative ideas abound. Member of opposite sex is helpful but distracting. Do not mix business with pleasure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You feel strongly attracted to someone. Follow the dictates of your heart. A work project should not be postponed. Keep your mind on business even if others are busy celebrating the holidays.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be firm about cutting your ties to negative people. A depressing companion has been dragging you wn for too long. moved when someone shows his/her affection for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Pull yourself together and make better use of your time. The holidays are almost here. Contact important people before they go on vacation. An investment does better than you anticipated. Dividends

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Something that happens today could take you by surprise. A person you thought permanent moves on. Be open to new ideas. Higher-ups admire flexibility. Welcome new responsibilities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spend your lunch hour doing some Christmas shopping. A lunch date can be put off for another day. Do not sign anything that can be put off for another day.

The bidding: North East Pass Pass Pass Pass Pass Opening lead: Five of .

The Four of Spades looked rather uncertain. "It's all fine and dandy going around carrying signs that read 'Power To The People," he remarked, "but I can't see it gaining us anything. After all, no matter now long I picket at the palace gate, I'll still be a fourspot and they'll still be the court cards. I just can't see myself winning many tricks by force!

"It's not that I begrudge all the attention fawned on the royal families," he continued. "I just feel that we must find some way for all of us to share the limelight.

For example, look at that hand the other day. It was touch and go whether I would be a factor -North might easily have elected to rebid three no trump, which would have made him the declarer. However, my man's four spade contract was eminently reasonable at least, until he found about the abominable trump split.

'West led a low club and East quickly bagged two tricks in the suit. By now he was beginning to regret that he hadn't doubled with the ten of trumps in dummy it seemed a sure bet that he would take two trump tricks.

"His club exit was won in hand by the jack, and when declarer led a trump to the king the horrible break was revealed. Lesser men

Detective finds 1959 plane parked on lawn

ROUND LAKE, III. (AP) - It didn't take private detective Jack Smith long to crack this case: The airplane sitting on his front lawn when he awoke the other day was a birthday gift.

"It surprised me as much as any-body else," Smith said of the 1959 Forney Aircoupe. "I've never seen anything like it. It's an unusual yard

Smith said he discovered that Timothy Genengels, a contractor in this community of 2,300 about 30 miles northwest of Chicago, had dropped off the plane for the detective's 48th

A licensed pilot who already owns one plane, Smith said that Genengels, 43, apparently had the plane towed or hauled to the house without its wings and assembled it for Smith's birthday.

Last year, Smith found a 3-foot turtle on his front lawn.

Despite aches pains of falling, 'ski bunny' returns to slopes

By ANNE LORIMER King Features Syndicate

I don't turn on to snow. I've lived contented 48 years without long underwear or thermal socks, because I see winter from the window, sitting by the fire and making hot chocolate for my family. I also put wet shoes in the oven

I do not ski, nor did I plan to learn at this late date in life, until my sons and I were summoned to family weekends in New England, where number-four son goes to college.

I collect the necessary wardrobe. Hot dog skiers like my sons traverse and parallel those slopes in jeans and sweaters. Not me. I buy a pair of brilliant red "warm ups" that resemble the snow pants of my youth. I want somebody to see me as I'm lying unconscious on a slope.

"Don't worry, Mom, I'll ski with you, so if you fall and start to bleed I can get help," promises my youn-gest. It is good to know he cares, bad to contemplate bleeding as well as breaking.

Blue thermal underwear goes under the "warm ups." I wish it had Dr. Denton feet. Then come ski pants and a jacket with all sorts of buttons and zippers and snaps and

"You put everything you own into those pockets, Mom. Nobody carries a pocketbook to a ski lodge," said number-three son, eyeing my trusty handbag with horror. Maybe I can hide it in a locker when nobody is looking.

I top off my wardrobe with a fur hat loaned to me by a friend. "Where did you get that hat?"

moans number-four son. "It looks like you'd slaughtered a litter of guinea pigs. You look like a ski bunny.

It was going to be a long weekend, but ski bunny or not, I quickly discovered that I wasn't going to shame my family for long. Once the lift tickets were paid for and I was pointed in the direction of the rental shop, they vanished to the expert slopes to do backscratchers and I lumbered into the rental shop tory was short-lived. Years of stirring at the stove have not developed my hands. I couldn't do up the buckles by myself. Luckily, a stranger who wanted my piece of floor did them up for me. I stood up to receive my skis and discovered that I could not walk.

Each foot must weigh a minimum of pounds, and the stiffened backs of the boots turned me into one side of a triangle. I should have been wondering what I was doing renting skis at my advanced age, but all I could think about was getting out of the room Blue-jeaned teens were prancing and wriggling their rears at the same time, while I hobbled to the desk with all the zest of a geriatric.

Skis and poles in hand, I head at last for the great white outdoors. I'm not going to get there. I fall up the stairs four times. Why are rental shops in the basement? Two men

Non-profit groups provide needed services

By ARLENE SILVERMAN

For Denver-based Gwen Schatz, it was a crisis in her marriage. Betty Nehemias of Bethesda, Md., discovered that there was no school which could teach her son properly. Nancy Sholkin, a San Francisco federal employee, realized that senior citizens were not receiving benefits due

Like many of us, these women looked around the community for agencies to help them with their concerns. Unlike most of us, when they found no help they went on to do something about it.

Ms. Schatz, Ms. Nehemias and Ms. Sholkin are typical of a special kind of entrepreneur — part of what John D. Rockfeller III has called the "third sector." The term refers to non-profit organizations which handle the social, cultural and educational needs of our citizens — needs not being met by either government programs or the private sector.

Indeed, by 1982, there were over 300,000 non-profit corporations in the country (excluding churches), up a whopping 50,000 from five years before. Not surprisingly, because females have been traditionally involved in caregiving and volunteer service, many of this country's non-profit organizations have been founded, and are effectively managed, by women.

Ms. Schatz is a prime example of that type of woman. When her husband left a lucrative position to start what turned out to be a five-year job search, Ms. Schatz looked in vain around the Denver area for help in defining her own role as a possible wage-earner for her family.

She explains her emotional state at the time: "I was not prepared for the realities in life. I had never been taught that I could do things for myself. When her husband finally found a satisfying position, Ms. Schatz resolved to do something for other their lives. Her first step was one able — in her case, in the area of job training and support for women.

WHAT SHE found was that there were partial job-centered programs scattered around the city but, Ms. Schatz remarks, "when you're emotionally down, you're not going to book 17 appointments!"

She did find, however, that a Displaced Homemaker program existed in Oakland, Calif., and she journeyed there to receive some harsh and practical advice: "You don't open your doors without money, and you don't open your doors without a board of directors.

After months of searching for funding sources, she convinced the Adolph Coors company to contribute seed money so that she could write an adequate proposal. "I then called a meeting," Ms. Schatz explains, "but met with each person individually first to explain the con-

Using her network of contacts garnered through years of volunteer service, she met with 30 people in fields as diverse as public relations and accounting. Happily, 27 of the 30 showed up at her first meeting, and many of these went on to comprise her first board of directors.

Today, Ms. Schatz's organization, appropriately called Passages, Inc., has come a long way since it started five years ago. Originally housed in a donated office, Passages now operates out of headquarters at Denver's Colorado Women's College

The organization has helped close to 1,000 women with job-search skills such as a resume writing and gaining self-exteem — everyone, says Ms. Schale, "from a minister's ex-wife to yesterday's socialite." Columnist Erma Bombeck spoke at a fund-raiser for the organization last year and stated, "Dignity is called by many names. In Denver it's called Passages.

Ms. Nehemias, a Bethesda resident, also had a family problem women going through transitions in which propelled her into action. Twenty years ago she discovered which is recommended for anyone that her 14-year-old son had dyslexia who feels that a need exists in her — that is, the inability of the brain community: She thoroughly to process the printed word in the researched what was already avail- traditional manner. He was called

Gwen Schatz

"lazy" by school personnel, and the only concrete advice Ms. Nehemias got was: "Take away his bicycle."

LIVING IN EUROPE at the time (her husband was with the U.N. in Switzerland), she vowed to learn as much about dyslexia as she could. However, upon her return to the United States, she found that there was little teacher training or knowledge about the problem.

"I contacted people at the university and asked them to design courses for teachers," she says, "but they didn't know enough." Finally, Ms. Nehemias designed and taught workshops herself.

When a United Way task force reported that 80 percent of delinquent teens had reading problems, Ms. Nehemias knew it was time to act. "I felt that I could start a school for the dyslexic teen-agers, where they would be treated as if they were valuable human beings." After spending months visiting schools in other parts of the country, she invested the family's savings in a line of credit and began the long process of filling out state and federal forms to receive non-profit status for her school.

To get community people involved, she publicized a series of 10 lectures on dyslexia to which 300 people showed up. Of those, several later became part of the board of governors of the newly formed Chelsea School.

Ms. Nehemias is the first to admit that those first steps were not easy. Local school districts were skeptical of her endeavor, and she found that only a handful of people were willing to work hard to make the idea succeed. She warns, "It's important to avoid the 'deadwood.' You need

By 1976 the school had opened in a and staff. Today, it has a permanent location in an historic mansion in Silver Spring, Md., with an enrollment of 48 students taught by 19 staff members.

Most of the school's funds come from the (now convinced) local school districts, from foundations and from local groups, including the Washington Redskins. Ms. Nehemias, at age 59, feels satisfaction from the years of work she put into making the school a success. "The dyslexic child has to be taught differently. This is their last chance.

IN SAN FRANCISCO, Ms. Sholkin puts the reason for her involvement quite simply: "I'm a risk taker. You can't gain one thing unless you stand at the edge of a cliff and flap your wings."

For 38-year-old Ms. Sholkin, the 'cliff" was her dissatisfaction with her government job coupled with a life-long affection for older people. In doing volunteer work with seniors, she realized that they were often deprived of their full medical and government benefits mainly because they were intimidated by the paperwork.

Today, Ms. Sholkin calls herself a "money finder," a one-woman Senior Advisory Group (although she must, according to California law, have a board of directors, and there are two members on her board). With a $3,000 inheritance check, Ms. Solkin started her work two years ago from a desk space she rented from a travel agent and finally, quite literally, out of a sup-

After sprucing up the place and buying some office equipment, she was ready to help seniors, at a nominal monthly rate, to wade through their medical-benefit paperwork. Even then, says Ms. Sholkin, "at first the phone just didn't ring." So she worked on getting the word out, through contacts with agencies and social workers who dealt with seniors ply closet.

Ms. Sholkin is proud of the progress she's made in helping her clients (including a 91-year-old woman for whom she's "found" church with a handful of students $3,000 in benefits of which the woman was not aware). She's also delighted to offer advice to anyone else who might want to get things going in her community.

She counsels, "Find something that you'd do for free - and do it. Know that what you're doing will succeed against all adversity. Prepare to spend seven days a week on

One suspects that Ms. Nehemias and Ms. Schatz would echo Ms. Sholkin's last bit of advice: "Hang in there. Don't ever give up!"

Suggestions for starting up: - Research your community. Be certain that no one else is offering the same service. You will need money, either through your own resources, friends or contributions from foundations. - Most non-profit organizations are incorporated. Be prepared to contact state and federal agencies for proper forms for incorporation and tax exemption. It's wise to get the advice of an attorney.

- Choose your board of directors carefully. The best board has members from various occupations with wide community influence.

Get the word out.

Family becomes closer on long car trip

squeaking — he's bothering me."

We had been on the highway 10 minutes. Four thousand miles stretched ahead of us. Our '81 12-passenger Ford van was stuffed with eight children, my husband, myself and six or seven suitcases (I never did get an exact count). Our 23-foot trailer carried our "kitchen, bath and bedroom" paraphernalia.

We were on our way from Anchorage, Alaska, to Tulsa, Okla. My husband's company had transferred him and since it was paying our expenses, most people thought we were crazy not to fly.

But we wanted to give our family—accustomed to cool, rainy Alaskan summers—a chance to acclimate to the 90-plus temperatures and humidity of Oklahoma. We also wanted to take advantage of our three-week intermission, with hopes of drawing our toddlers and teens closer together.

Traveling with children is a little like giving birth to them — often painful, but worth the effort. We had traveled by car with our children before, but we had never been in such close quarters for so long a time.

THE THINGS we learned about controlling, caring for and entertaining kids on long trips should be useful for anyone contemplating a vacation or transfer with one or more people under 18.

A large carton of cassette tapes was crammed under the driver's seat. Both door pockets were full of maps, stationery, Kleenex and confiscated comic books. Each child had his or her own back pack containing curling irons, teddy bears, miniature cars or other essentials. Each pack was supposed to be stowed neatly under the owner's seat.

Seats were assigned on a rotatingbasis and were jealously guarded. It took psychic powers to keep certain combinations separated and avoid screams of, "Gary's poking me!" "I am not!" "He is too!" "Roch's drooling when he chews," "I am not!"

My position as shotgun, surrounded by the cooler on one side, the trash bag at my feet and my satchel stuffed with bribes and tranquilizers on the other side, was a most relaxing and enviable spot. My husband pointed this fact out to me frequently, as he hunched over the steering wheel.

Whenever I offered to spell him for a while, however, he never accepted. Taking over my spot, which was so handy for passing out apple juice and pretzels, collecting empty banana peels and soiled diapers, and turning around to thunder, "Stop that right now!" would have been too boring.

He didn't want to deprive me of the rest and relaxation. He also thought I needed the splendid exercise that came from vaulting over the cooler to back up a particularly harsh threat.

MY MOST VALUABLE tool on the whole trip was a red spiral notebook with each child's name on a different page. After each name I kept a running count of points earned at each stop.

Everybody's behavior was rated on a one-to-10 scale — with 10 being perfect. This rating was carefully determined when we stopped to eat at an occasional restaurant, to stay overnight in a campground or any place else the children and people were liable to come into contact.

My special satchel was filled with treasures like Superman comics, hand-held games, Cracker Jacks and colorful pads of paper. Each object had a point-price written on it. Before we started, the children were told that they could have these prizes or two cents a point, as they earned them through rating points.

Our first stop illustrated the value of the point system. Eight-year-old Eric bounced ahead of us, lost a shoe and nearly tripped an old lady — that cost him three points right there.

Chagrined, he folded his arms and walked sedately to the table. But he got bored waiting for the waitress to take everybody's orders and began making piles with the salt and sugar. The piles lost him another two points. When his 7-year-old sister, Linda, sneezed, he lost two more—plus three for hitting her.

Four-year-old Micah lost two

Four-year-old Micah lost two points for spilling his water and another point for screaming, "You made me do it!" at his 10-year-old brother, Roch.

ELEVEN-YEAR-OLD Gary Willis maintained a superior air through the antics of the younger kids, but he lost a point by pounding on the table and crying when he was told to order off the kid's menu. Fourteen-year-old Sherri and 17-year-old Dolly sat in stoney silence, trying to emotionally remove themselves from the whole "gross" scene.

When we got back in the car and assigned points, Dolly and Sherri were the only one with more than three points. Eric was in danger of going into the hole.

After finally realizing they weren't getting anything beyond their food unless they earned the points, the children got into the spirit of things and became eager point collectors. Removing points for hitting, arguing or causing any other commotion brought occasional tears, but was more successful in maintaining order then pulling over to the side of the road for corporal punishment.

Several days into the trip, the system began to work smoothly. Any time I heard "Eric's chewing his gum too loud! Make him stop," or time I heard "Eric's chewing his gum too loud! Make him stop," or "Gary Willis is lying down on the whole seat and I'm stuck on the edge!," I deducted two points from the complainer and two points from the cause of the complaint — that way I didn't have to take sides. Bickering usually subsided to hisses of, "Now look what you did" and "Phoey, it's your fault, too."

was keeping track of the points and adding them up. I kept two columns—one for credits and one for debits. For a while the kids kept their own running tallies and I had to be extra careful. But when the newness wore off, I was able to relax.

Sometimes I glanced at the quietly reading, snoozing or gaming mob in the back seats and announced a special award of 10 points to the child with the biggest smile and stillest body.

I ALSO REWARDED the child who had just hugged a sister or taken extra time to occupy a younger sibling. The more opportunities I found for these special awards, the more peaceful the van became.

One situation that threatened to drive Daddy bonkers was someone yelling "Potty!" and bouncing desperately five minutes after we had stopped for gas or refreshment. To solve that problem, a small chemical toilet was purchased and installed behind the farthest seat.

Another source of parental anguish was constant snacking, then failure to eat restaurant meals. We finally stopped purchasing empty calories and stocked the cooler with fruit juices, yogurt, fresh fruit, cheese, crackers, dry salami and rope sausage. Small cartons of milk or pudding, miniature boxes of dry cereal and sweet rolls were favorites for breakfast.

While we ate breakfast in the van, we picnicked for most lunches. The lunch stop was at least a hour for the children to run and scream without restraint.

Since we spent 16 days on the highway and six to eight hours of those days crammed into the van, we had to be creative about entertainment. Children, especially small children, are energy-producing dynamos — they must expel that energy or blow up.

The best wiggle reducer we found was running 10 laps around the van and trailer at least every two hours. Ten-month-old Nathan, who didn't walk yet, was carried by someone. That person also went through some simple exercises with him before he was nut back in his car seat.

THE BI-HOURLY jog helped a lot, but whines of "I'm bored" and "Are we there yet?" were constant reminders that we had to let the kids do more than sit and pinch their neighbors for two hours if everyone was going to stay sane.

Besides the old standbys of books, pads of paper and crayons, we stocked several children's tapes and tapes with inspiring stories. The children especially liked listening to dramatized Bible stories and singalong recordings.

Family games were fun for everyone — especially for Mom and Dad, who could be closer to their offspring than usual. Alphabet games, where each person tries to complete the alphabet before anyone else by reading license plates or road signs, were always popular. The rules had to be clear before each round: No taking two letters from the same word. No turning around in your seat to read a sign, because the driver played too, and he had to

We also told running stories with an egg timer to set the limits. One person started the story. When the timer ran out, the next person immediately continued by saying the first words to pop into mind. Finger games and singing kept the littlest ones happy.

watch the road

We invented other games like "Who Can Make a Jelly Bean Last the Longest?" The advantage of this game was that it gained the most mileage from a sweet, while keeping the kid's mouth occupied with something other than talking or biting. A variation on the same theme was "Who Can Go More Than 15 Minutes Without Saying Anything?" Both of these games were great for creating silence.

"Tell us about when you were little" was frequently asked. As long as my throat held out, I could keep things quiet for hours.

We had planned to air-condition the van in Great Falls, Mont., but we didn't order the parts soon enough — so we were stuck with keeping cold-blooded Alaskans cool as we traveled into warmer and warmer August weather. Popsicles and jugs of juice disappeared by the barrelful.

MICAH HIT ON an effective coolant when he discovered that Nathan's bottle full of water made a great squirt gun. Nobody objected to the refreshing drizzle he splashed around the van.

Stories, games, jogging, the point stories, games, jogging, the point system and other gimmicks kept everybody happy and relaxed, but our most inviolate rule was: safety belts at all times.

Each child had his or her own safety belt and lost points if caught without it. A minor accident when several horses ran in front of the rig could have resulted in black eyes and bruised lips. All we got were racing pulses.

Safety belts also kept kids in one spot and avoided wails of "Linda's on the floor and won't let me put my feet down!" or "Gary won't scoot over!"

When we finally arrived in Tulsaon September 1, we were hot and sweaty, but everybody knew that Daddy had proposed to Mom in a burned-out redwood tree, and that Mom had had her very own goat. Dolly and Sherri became most patient with little brothers and could be counted on to loan a soft lap for a nap.

GARY WILLIS WAS a whiz in reading and almost always won the alphabet game, but Roch could add faster in his head than Mom could on the calculator. Eric had the wildest imagination and kept everyone convulsed with laughter.

Linda was a great baby-tender and could change a fast diaper. Micah liked to rub Dad's sore neck, which Dad liked, as well. Nathan, however, kept a shriek pitched above high "C" that nearly shattered glass, on occasion.

Our preparation and organization paid off in stronger loving family relations and unforgettable memories. For practical purposes the trip was a success, as well.

Tarzan's sidekick nearing age 50

NEWBURY PARK, Calif. (AP)

— He's a veteran of 13 movies and his face, with a cigar stuck in his teeth, is instantly recognizable. But the aging actor has never been immortalized in the cement of Hollywood's Chinese theater nor gotten a star on the Walk of Fame.

The lack of accolades doesn't seem to bother Chetta, Tarzan's best friend, who started working when he was just a baby chimpanzee after arriving from his native Liberia.

Now, nearing 50, he's living out his golden years with his trainer and lifelong friend Tony Gentry in this town 45 miles west of Los Angeles.

"He's just like my kid," said

Gentry, who picked up the 6-month-old, 10-pound chimpanzee in Europe in 1936. "He's just like a member of the family. He comes in the house and has coffee with me. He gets his bacon and eggs."

Tarzan movies — six with Johnny Weismuller, two with Buster Crabbe, one with Herman Briggs and four with Lex Barker — plus a few Tarzan television shows, is in semi-retirement now, occasionally performing in commercials. The average life expectancy for chimpanzees in captivity is 40 to 50 years.

"He's getting up in age," Gentry said. "He likes to work and he doesn't like to work. The thing he likes best about working is the ride he gets in the truck to the studio."

Gentry, who trained 116 chimps for the government's space program plus numerous others for at least 100 movies, noted that Chetta worked with a variety of actors in the Tarzan role.

"He got along with all of them," he said. "I never took any chances anyway. A good animal man will tell you there's no such thing as a tame wild animal.

Shaking babies can injure them

By JEANIE FRANZ RANSOM King Features Syndicate

It was a typical Saturday afternoon in December. Scott Bigham of Berkley, Mich., was babysitting his two children, 2-year-old Jason and 7-month-old Dana, while his wife went Christmas

Jason had always been an easy baby, but Dana had been difficult from day one, crying almost constantly so that her parents had never had more than five hours sleep a night since she had

The pediatrician said not to worry; that Dana would outgrow her crying spells. But the highpitched wailing was beginning to get on everyone's nerves. Even Dana's grandfather would sometimes retreat to the basement when Dana came to visit

Now, on this cold and dreary day right before the Christmas season, Dana began crying again. Bigham was a good father, but his patience had worn to a thin thread over the past few months, with no respite from his colicky daughter's fussi-

He had really been hoping for some peace and quiet that afternoon. He walked over to his daughter's crib, picked her up and tried to feed her. She continued to cry. Frustrated, Bigham shook her several times and laid her back in her crib. Miraculously, the shaking seemed to quiet her. It also killed her.

TWENTY-SIX-YEAR-OLD Scott Bigham has no criminal record or history of child abuse. He doesn't smoke, drinks very little, has a steady job and attends church every week. He and his wife, Judy, live in a house in a typical middle-class neighborhood, populated with other young cou-

Everything about the Bighams is average. Yet Bigham recently made headlines as one of the first people in Michigan to be charged with manslaughter for what is known as "the shaken baby syndrome." He is not alone.

Doctors estimate that a minimum of 50,000 infants a year suffer serious and even fatal injuries when adults shake them, often by accident or in play, causing the infant's brain to shear away from its skull.

The resulting injuries can include mental retardation, blindness, cerebral palsy, seizures and learning disabilities. Dr. Stephen Ludwig, a researcher in the field, fears that 50,000 is a conservative estimate. He feels that the majority of shaken baby injuries go undetected.

Parents either do not realize they have injured their baby, or they do not admit it to their doctor, who then overlooks the problem. Unless there are noticeable signs of injury, the shaking incidents may continue, causing further damage, or

Although doctors have known about the dangers of shaking infants for the past 15 years, most parents have no idea of the problem. It only takes one shake, and not even a very forceful one, to cause permanent brain damage in an infant under the age of 2. This is because a young child's head is relatively large in comparison to the rest of his body, and his neck muscles are weak and undeveloped.

COMBINED WITH the extra room inside the baby's head for the brain, it all adds up to a vulnerability few outside the medical world are

According to Dr. Ray Helfer, professor of pediatrics and human development at Michigan State University and a recognized expert on child abuse, "People know more about not squeezing the Charmin than they do about not shaking the Helfer, like many other medical professionals familiar with the shaken baby syndrome, believes that the majority of parents who shake their babies did not intend to injure them.

Instead, much like Bigham, they got frustrated, picked the baby up, shook him, and in a few brief moments, the damage was done. Says Helfer, Shaking infants under 2 years old is very risky

What happens when a baby is shaken? The baby's head jerks back and forth, which causes whiplash. Inside, the brain ricochets off the sides of the skull, causing bleeding and putting pressure on the brain. The extent of bleeding and tearing depends on the number and force of

With even a small shake, the baby may be unconscious only briefly, but the brain will never develop properly. Because there are rarely any exterior marks or bruises, parents and doctors often do not realize injury has taken place.

IN FACT, in past years, infants who were brought to emergency rooms with severe head injuries but no external signs of injury were thought to have started bleeding inside their brains just by chance.

It has only been in recent years that pediatricians have learned of a quick screening test to use on infants to determine if they have, in fact, been shaken. If the retinas of the eyes have hemorrhaged, it is probable that the baby has been shaken, even though the parent may insist the child fell off a chair.

There are a few other signs that point to a shaking incident. These include seizures (with no previous history), respiratory problems, irritability, lethargy, poor appetite, floppy posture, omiting and constipation.

It is interesting to note that, in a study conducted by Ludwig at the Emergency Department of The Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, most parents who brought their babies in mentioned respiratory problems or some vague complaint. None admitted they had shaken their child.

It is because so many cases go unreported or undetected that the shaken baby syndrome remains virtually unknown. But more and more doctors are attempting to learn about it.

Ludwig did a study of 20 shaken baby victims admitted to the hospital in one year.

ACCORDING TO him, "The prognosis in the shaken baby syndrome is poor." Of the 20 babies admitted with signs of the syndrome, three died and 10 others sustained permanent brain damage. Only seven appeared to have suffered no permanent injury. But doctors have found that injury caused by shaking in infancy may surface in later life, usually when a child starts school at age 5 or 6. It is then that the slight retardation, learning disabilities, or visual impairments become more noticeable.

Dr. John Caffey, one of the first doctors to touch on the subject of shaken babies, feels there is considerable evidence that shaking may be a major, heretofore unrecognized cause of mental retardation and permanent brain damage.

Caffey thinks that many slow-learning and clumsy children with IQs of 90 may have been intelligent and normally active children with IQs of 120 had they not been shaken during infancy.

Few would call the shaken baby syndrome child abuse. Most parents who would never dream of hitting their child think nothing of shaking a baby to make him stop crying or to stop a violent coughing fit. The fact of the matter is, over a period of time, the results of shaking a baby can be even more lethal than a deliberate blow to the child's head.

Another even more common parental practice that can cause injury is through play. Such innocent games as tossing the baby into the air, jogging him on an adult's knee or swinging the baby around in circles can be deadly.

SOME INFANT toys or equipment can also cause injury. Any activity which allows an infant's head to bob back and forth unsupported is a potential danger. Parents may not even think of the hazards of some of the less obvious ways a baby can be shaken, such as bicycling, motorcycling, horseback riding, snowmobiling, speed-boating or riding in a car driven quickly over a rough road.

Even if parents exercise care with their infants, there is always the teen or adult who occasionally babysits. Teens or others who are not used to caring for a small child may shake the baby out of ignorance and frustration. The parents may never even be aware that their child has been injured.

Day after day, in households of every size and income, in shopping centers, at playgrounds, in child-care centers, even in pediatricians' waiting rooms, the scenario repeats itself over and over. The baby is crying...the adult has had enough. He or she has tried feeding the baby, changing the baby, cooing to the baby. Nothing helps.

Frustrated, the adult picks the baby up and shakes him several times. On the outside, everything is back to normal again, as the baby seems to slip into what appears to be a peaceful sleep. But on the inside, the nightmare has only begun.

It is too late for baby Dana Bigham, who died after 10 days on a respirator. The autopsy revealed that her brain had turned literally into mush. But for those parents whose infants are very much alive and crying, remember, shaking babies is risky business.

How to prevent the shaken baby syndrome - Never shake an infant under the age of 2.

 Always provide support for your baby's head when holding, playing with or transporting him and instruct others that care for your infant in the proper support of the head.

Make sure that all those who are in contact with your infant know the dangers of shaking.

Learn what do do if your baby won't stop crying. All babies cry a lot during the first few months of their lives. It's a natural phenomenon they have little control over. It takes patience and understanding to get through these sometimes trying times. If you have tried feeding the baby, changing the baby, walking the baby or cooing to him, but to no avail, and you find yourself about to shake him, there are several alternatives: If you are alone with the baby, put him in his crib, leave the room and shut the door behind you; if another person is home, ask him to watch the baby for a few minutes while you leave for a few minutes to give yourself some space and get a perspective on things.

What to do if you shake the baby, either accidentally or on purpose: Even though you may feel embarrassed or guilty, it is imperative that you get the baby to the emergency room immediately. Bleeding inside the brain can be treated. but only if you tell the doctors you shook the baby. This will save your baby a lot of problems in the future...and possibly even save his life.

Couple cares for disabled children

By JOHN BOAL King Features Syndicate

While Jesse Jackson talked about painting a rainbow coali-tion, Josephine Brown of Ing-lewood, Calif., has been a provider for a rainbow collection of developmentally disabled children for the last 19 years.

As a community care licensee under California's Department of Social Services Small Family House program, she and her husband, Floyd, have nurtured lives and experienced a few deaths caring for more than 15 physically and mentally disadvantaged children and young adults, some white, some black, a Spaniard and one Indian named Jeffey Yelloweyes.

During their nearly two decades of devotion to the disabled, the Browns raised two children of their own. Tragically, one son and three grandchildren died in a fire in San Jose in 1978.

In a tidy home directly under the droning Los Angeles International Aiport landing pattern off Century Boulevard, the soft-spoken but effervescent lady of the house currently cares for three white and two black developmentally disabled young males, ages 16, 17, 20, 25 and 26, as either a foster parent or a legal guardian at a monthly rate of $659 per cli-

The Browns are also in the process of adopting an 18-month-old black infant named James Brown. "When the social worker brought him in," recalls Mrs. Brown, 58, "he was three days old and they said, Baby boy Brown, meet Mrs. Brown.' My husband and I think this is the way the Lord has given us back our son."

Natives of the San Antonio area, the Browns came to California in 1962. Mrs. Brown worked as a licensed vocational nurse at Veterans Hospital and at the old Cedars of Lebanon. Brown, while working for the Los Angeles County Parks and Recreation Department, had to take a disability discharge resulting from a lawn-mower accident in 1965.

That was the same year a schoolteacher friend of Mrs. Brown told her about the state program. Soon their first disabled child, Charles Hagelis, who is white, came into the Brown home when he was 41/4. "He was a muscular dystrophy child who had seizures," she says.

And even though she'd had many others come and go since then, Charles is still with the Browns. Their daughter and son, who were 18 and 13 at the time, didn't have any problems with their new white brother.

"I didn't see any jealousies," she reflects. "We were all musically inclined and my son, Junior, liked to dance and Charles and Cordell Nicks, who came in 1968, would imitate my son when he danced. The neighbor children knew Charles couldn't run as fast but other than that they didn't see him as any different.

During the years, the Browns continued taking a number of developmentally disabled young people under their protective wing. One, Bryan Flood, was dis-covered by a long-lost stepsister after he had been with them for eight years. At the new relative's request, Mrs. Brown drove him up to Northern California so he could stay and grow with part of his bona-fide family.

Others went back to institutions; a couple of children returned to their parents; and three died because of severe ill-

Yet while this family of eight has its share of physical and mental handicaps, they are by no means limited. In their recreational van, the Browns go to San Diego, Rialto, where one of Mrs. Brown's sisters lives, and Las

"I never have a problem," she says. "I call the motels and tell them in advance that I have developmentally disabled children. When I get there, they say, Lady, you are the craziest person we have ever seen. Is there anything we can do to help the

They also have a small summer place in Texas that's stocked with such ranch animals as cows, ducks, sheep and horses. "We used to go three times a year," she reports, "but now we go about once a year."

When they don't travel, on Sundays they go to the Greater Ebenezer Baptist Church in Los Angeles. "When I take every-body, then I don't sing in the choir. If I sing, then I take two who are very capable sitting by themselves.

To some, this home-care concept may appear as a family-run business. Not so, says Lee Weinstein, program manager of placement for the Westside Regional Center, a private, nonprofit agency that places the develop-mentally disabled in homes and then pays the care providers.

"Remember, it's providing 24 hours of care, 365 days a year," he says. "Their whole life is around these kids. They can't take a vacation from it and leave

Weinstein notes that at his center (one of seven in Los Angeles County; 21 in the state) there are 60 to 70 families caring for one to six developmentally disabled people in their homes.

'For babies with Down's syndrome without severe problems we have lots of homes," he reveals. "For older kids with behavior problems or with severe medical problems, then we have to hunt.

For a care provider to become licensed, the state conducts a criminal screening, fingerprint check and requires prior experience with the developmentally disabled or completion of a twosemester course at a community

Parents think participation in sports builds character

'Sports' build character" is certainly one of the most enduring and cherished of American myths.

USING THIS rationale, pro athletes should be near-saints. Why, then, are they starring in the drug and gambling scandals, those sordid sagas regularly appearing in our newspapers?

"We have elevated athletics to a religion and made athletes our hero gods," says psychologist Georgina Strump. "We blame the individual athlete for his drug habits or his anti-social behavior, but we still believe in the athletic system. In fact, the system probably pushed him into wrong-doing

A young man who has come up through this "system" to the pro level has been rewarded for getting ahead through the use of aggression. He has been elevated to unreal heights of public esteem or castigated unfairly — depending on his season record. As long as he wins, nobody cares how.

Jack Tatum, the pro football player responsible for paralyzing Darryl Stingley in an exhibition game in 1978, never apologized for what he did. He wrote a book bragging about how mean he was, how many people he'd hurt and how good it felt to hurt them.

Such an athlete never learned self-discipline because he never lived without a rigorous set of rules imposed upon him by others. What he has developed is muscle, not character.

Yet, for the sake of his "character," 8-year-old Robbie sacrifices 'Sesame Street" after school and lazy Saturday mornings at home. He be didn't play football with an can't sleep over at friends' houses injured knee, he was off the team because he might stay up past his

"CHARACTER," HIS father explains, means perseverance of an athletic goal through discomfort,

"I want him to learn good American values, like loyalty, respect for hard work and discipline, and the importance of being on top. He can learn those things through team play. That's what made this country great," says father of Chad, a 12-year-old junior-high football player.

Actually, there's nothing wrong with respect for hard work, discipline, loyalty and devotion to a team, country or belief. But is "the importance of being on top" a good old American value?

Ms. Strump questions whether "values" are taught by athletic programs at all. "What kids learn," she says, "is what they have to do to please adults.'

Chad says, "I'd like to quit football. I'm not really that good; and there are other things I could do with my time. But it means too much to my dad. I play in every spect and have since I was 6 He's sport and have since I was 6. He's never missed a game.

Chad won't make "the cuts" in high-school sports, so for him the quest for character and values is

THE PARENTS OF high-school athletes talk less about character development. They push their kids for money: athletic scholarships and pro football careers. These goals, however, are almost inobtainable, even for the "stars.

According to a Department of Labor study, of every 1 million boys who play in the Little Leagues next summer, 400,000 will play highschool baseball, 25,000 will play college ball (with far less than half playing on scholarship) and 100 will make it to the major leagues. Only a handful of those who do become pros will have a career lasting as long as seven years.

The odds are no better (maybe worse) for other sports.

William Bruns, former "Life" magazine sports writer and author of "Winning Is Everything and Other American Myths," says, "One reliable estimate is that pro football players are the best 1/10,000th of 1 percent of those exposed to the game. And the average pro football career lasts five years.

Kids have about as much chance of becoming movie or TV stars as pro athletes. Obviously talent, luck and single-minded dedication are the minimum requirements for an athletic career; and often they

Keith, a championship swimmer, tells a typical story. His parents were gearing him for the Olympics, not just for winning one of the few athletic scholarships for swimmers, though they wanted this too. A freshman at Northwestern University, Keith is not on scholarship. He doesn't even win anymore

My life always centered around swimming. Do you remember reading Linda Fratianne's stories about how she sacrificed a normal childhood to train for the Olympics? Well, there are a lot of stories like that but no one hears them because the people didn't make it." Keith lost the state championship every mistake I'd made in the water since I'd started competing."

If he could go back, Keith would "lose the first swim race I ever

But if his father could go back, he would hire a sports psychologist to spur Keith on.

Adolescent psychologist Andrew Trotter calls the new discipline, sports psychology, a "potential dan-ger for young athletes."

SPORTS PSYCHOLOGY focuses on the competitive situation, not the athlete's general mental health. The 'psychologists" condition athletes' minds through the use of therapies such as relaxation techniques. Some use biofeedback, a computerized machine that monitors various psychological responses (including fear of competition) and allows the athletes, with the psychologist's help, to control those responses.

Only 3 to 5 percent, of the members of the 450 in the North American Society for the Psychology of Sport and Physical Activity (founded in 1966) are psychologists certified by the American Psychological Association. Most hold other degrees - in areas like Physical Education.

Until now, sports psychologists have only served pro and Olympic teams and some wealthy children.

Trotter believes the day when high school teams will have a sports psychologist on call is not too far in

He says, "The field is growing too fast; and it's already full of many people who do not have a thorough grounding in psychology. The potential for harm is enormous.

'From what we already know about the way parents and coaches push kids to excel, can we really trust them with yet another tool the sports psychologist?

PARENTS SAY they want their youths in sports programs for their own good. But all too often the kids, like 16-year-old football star Clifford Wydown, see it differently.

'I try to win for Dad and Coach,' he says. "I hate to face them when I mess up.

Common Sports Injuries: No child should ever play in pain or receive cortisone shots in an injured joint so he can play in pain. Let him know you want him off the playing field, whether it's a practice or game situation, until the injury can be examined by your own physician - no matter what coach says.

Football: Damage to bone and muscles, particularly neck muscles. Most orthopedists and physicians do not recommend participation in football before high-school age ecause bones are still soft and developing.

Ice Hockey: Injuries to head and face, such as lacerations, lost teeth, skull fractures.

Swimming: Constant pulling of the shoulder muscles on the growth line results in "swimmer's shoulders." Also tendonitis, ear and sinus infections, and hair loss from rigorous training regimens.

Gymnastics: Damage to growth lines in the spine and shoulders. Risk of bone damage from falls.

Baseball: The most common and potentially serious complication: 'Little Leaguer elbow," chronic elbow strain from pitching too hard, too soon. Affects future growth in

Tradition permeates dinners for holiday celebrations

No matter how sophisticated, automated or computerized we become, it isn't easy to break with aradition - especially around the holidays and particularly Christmas. Without tradition there would be no toast goose, no plum pudding, fruit cake, eggnog or Christmas cookies. You just can't separate joy and food. Christmas Eve in many countries

All year long you've craved peace and quiet, a chance to go to bed early and sleep late, a time when the bathroom doesn't look as if it had been attacked by a wrecking crew. Last year you complained about Christmas preparations because it didn't seem that you had enough money or time, and the kids wanted everything from the elegantly wrapped presents to the sevencourse dinner. You tore your hair

But this year is different. As you drove your youngsters to the airport there were tears in your eyes. They were going to visit your ex, for the entire vacation, and suddenly quiet lost its charm. Feeling alone and, yes, purposeless added to the anxiety and depression that wraps itself around the holidays anyway.

Now you crave the pleasures of trying to stuff a huge, bristling tree into the back of your subcompact car. The thought of wrestling with a clammy 20-pound turkey is extremely appealing. You'd sell your soul to visit a crowded shopping mall and spend Christmas Eve struggling with bicycle parts that stubbornly refuse to come together. How do you get through the holidays without signing yourself into the funny farm?

Plan a trip. There must be someplace you've yearned to visit without children as travel companions. If you can afford it, maybe a long vacation is in order, but two days at a ski resort or a big city you've never visited can be a tonic, too. If your wallet is thin, visit relatives.

Take yourself out to dinner. This time pick a place you deserve, rather than Benny's Barf Burgers around the corner where they don't care about spills and lousy table manners. How about an ethnic eatery, one where your kids refused

Redecorate. Remember the last time you tried to paint the walls with your "helpers" in tow? Now's the time to tear up the house and put it back together again. You canhaving to lock the open can of paint in the tool shed first!

Read. Probably you have a list of books you've promised yourself to get around to, but haven't had the time to open. If not, browse at the book store and find some. If you're really in a wicked mood, get a best seller still in hard back. (Parents deserve presents, too.)

Share. Maybe you can't donate a large check to charity, but you can give your time. Offer to help cook and serve at a Christmas dinner given for the poor. Volunteer to wrap presents and supervise a party given by a social agency for needy you offer your time (which you have plenty of right now), you won't be turned down.

Mend old fences. Chances are there are relatives and friends from the past you seldom write to and haven't called in ages. Relationships take work, but unfortunately most of us don't have time to keep the old ties in shape. Get busy!

Reorganize. Pick up a paperback on personal efficiency and take a long, hard look at your life. Figure out ways you can arrange your life so you'll be able to have more free time when the kids are home. The credo here is: Work smarter, not harder. That takes some thought, so think about it. Get ahead. If you are like most people, you have piles of busy work lying around the house, things to do that keep you from spending quality time with the children when they're with you. Try mending the clothes and washing the blinds now instead of waiting and feeling pulled in opposite directions next month. Cook a few casseroles and freeze them while you're at it.)

Go on a diet. Because there are no kids in the house you don't "have" to buy candy, cookies and the usual holiday snacks. In two weeks everybody you know will be thick around the middle, but you'll look like a million.

Figure out what it is you really want out of life and then plan a strategy on how to go after it. Goal setting means evaluation and contemplation, something you don't have much time for when you're hassling with getting the kids to school, yourself to work on time and the dog neutered. You don't need to be a Communist to make a five-year

Get plenty of rest. Sleep late, go to bed early and take a few naps. Surprise! Those dark circles under the your eyes aren't hereditary after

Buy your presents during the after-Christmas sales. Getting bargains is more fun than paying full price for things you know will break half an hour after they're unwrapped. If you plan your household's celebration for after the 25th, you may even be able to afford a couple of "can't live withouts" for yourself.

Get involved in a complicated and messy project. If you never sew anymore because you have to take your junk off the table to serve dinner, now's the time to start stitching. Maybe you've been putting off doing even take a bathroom break without an oil painting or refinishing your antique trunk for fear the kids will make the necessary mess worse. Now's your chance.

Get ready for the garage sale you'll be having this spring. You aren't going to have one? Think again. Ruthlessly go through closets and basements. Box up everything you think you don't need. You'll have several months to change your mind about possessions and probably a couple of hundred dollars come spring. Aren't you smart?

Sign up for a lecture, meeting or seminar that would bore the kids to tears. Too often we get into the habit of defining our interests by kids. Take a lonely old person who the limits of their attention spans. can't drive on a shopping trip. When This time you won't need to pay a sitter either so you can ex something you think you might be interested in rather than a sure bet.

Make a new friend. When we're so busy we can't see straight, we don't follow up on interesting people and work at cultivating new friendships. There are too many pressing things clamoring for our attention. Now is the time to expand your network.

Being assertive is easier said than done

By GERALDINE R. FOTY King Features Syndicate

I am a do-it-yourself person. I collect all the books and articles labeled How To: "Give a dinner for 100 without calling the caterer;" "Reupholster your sofa in one afternoon;" "Teach yourself neurosurgery in two weeks."

So when I saw the big red book, "Learn How To Assert Yourself," I had to have it. There was a real need for it in my life. People have always said that I am easy to get along with, but I'm afraid it's a nice way of saying I give in too often. With my new book, I'd be on my way — a holy terror in one week,

If you have seen any of these selfimprovement books, you know they always start with a questionnaire. The point is to convince you that you do need the author's help.

Question One: Do you blush easily? (Yes, after all these years I still blush when someone tells a smutty Question Two: Do you cry often? (Always at the death scenes on the late-late shows, especially when Greta Garbo, as Camille, coughs herself to death in Robert Taylor's

Question Three: Do you ever run away from an unpleasant situation? (You bet I do! What else when inlaws are ready to come to blows?)

Question Four: Do you sometimes feel your heart pounding and your pulse increasing? (Yes, particularly when the motor in my old car makes the thumping noise and I'm 50 miles from home.)

Now that the authors and I have proved that I am definitely too unassertive, I went on to the next section - little tricks to improve my self-

Suggestion One: Think of something you do fairly well. Write it out.

Post it where everyone will see it. I printed neatly in red ink, "I make good bread." With a magnetic gadget I attached the card to the refrigerator door. According to the book, this should bring a response such as, "You certainly do!"

The next morning I discovered a few words scrawled at the bottom of my note. They read, "Man does not live by bread alone. Suggestion Two: Write a positive statement about someone in your family and pin it to the person's pilI wrote to my daughter, "You over and over again. "I am all thumbs" became "I can fix anything." It wasn't too hard to remember this propaganda. However, the dishwasher still would not run through its complete cycle. As a matter of fact, after putting this positive statement into action, the appliance became downright negative. It wouldn't even start.

Suggestion Four: If you have insomnia, which is often caused by negative thoughts, get up and do a boring task. You'll go back to bed and sleep like a bear.

Sleepless nights were sometimes a problem, so I had to try this. I read their list of boring tasks and chose to polish the furniture. It was really great to get to the job as easily and not have to work around people. When I finished, I considered running the vacuum cleaner, but decided that doing the ironing was a better idea at 2 a.m.

Suggestion Five: Use positive body signals. Don't be cold or inanimate

The next day when I went shopping, I looked the salesman right in the eye, smiled, leaned forward, nodded and complimented him. When he gave me my change, he took my hand and whispered, "Your place or mine?"

Obviously this book was not helping me. In disgust I tossed it into the waste basket. Later in the day I pulled it out to copy the name and address of the publisher. I had decided to write the authors.

"Dear Ms. X and Dr. Y: Although I appreciate what you were trying to do in your book, 'Learn to Assert Yourself,' I must tell you that from my point of view, you have failed. I have not become one bit more assertive. As a matter of fact, I think your book is useless, impractical, and, oh, yes, overpriced.
I am enclosing my sales slip because I want a refund. And don't tell me refunds are against your policy...'

Give yourself a new image. Right now you have the freedom to buy a purple sweater or get a different haircut without having to put up with comments from the peanut gallery. It's a lot easier to experiment on a new you without having to hear, "That looks dumb!"

Be selfish. Buy yourself a tin of imported butter cookies or a box of good chocolates. (You don't have to share them with anybody, ho, ho!) Move the Kiss and Prince albums to the back of the record rack and play your jazz and classical albums. Stay in the bathroom for as long as you

Plant or pet sit. Many people will be going out of town and they may jump at your offer to take care of possums or Phil the dendron. You'll feel you have something to get out of bed for in the morning

Take a job house sitting. If you can't afford a genuine vacation, you'll still get a change of scene. Probably, you'll be able to work your regular job, too. Check with friends, family members and acquaintances to find out if they know of anybody (preferably rich) who needs somebody to watch the mansion while they cavort in Aspen. Explore your environment. What things would you like to see if you were a visitor in town rather than a resident? Most of the time we live in place for years without hitting half of the attractions. Pretend you're from another planet and sight-see.

Learn something new. This is the time to buy the French records or to try cooking perfect omelets. Since nobody's around to see you fail, you can try a lot more things than you usually would attempt. So what if your pen-and-ink sketches look like they were done by a kindergartener? You're the only one who's going to see them.

Throw a party... an adult party. If you try hard enough, you can still remember what those are like. You don't need to child-proof the house, keep chasing the kids out of the room or talk in code. If you can't stand the thought of a Christmas party, invite lots of people to an after-Christmas gift swap at your place. It's a lot more fun than standing in line at the department stores.

Attend a live performance. Theater, dance productions and concerts are all possibilities. There's something spirit-lifting about getting dressed up and going out to see the "real" thing rather than a movie. Sure, forays into culture cost more than movies or a TV night, but think of how much you're saving on your

If you can't come up with the cash, check the paper for a gallery opening. You won't have to worry about little fingers touching the art and, besides, they serve free Cham-

Call your kids or write them a letter. No, they probably won't write to you, and when you talk to them on the phone, they may be eager to get off and go about what they were doing, But they'll know you still think about them when they're away and maybe even miss them a little. Even though they'll never tell you, they do need that

Woman receives legacy growing up with brothers

By CANDY SCHULMAN King Features Syndicate

I suspect that my brothers didn't know what to make of me when I was born. Little girls, after all, were ugar and spice and everything nice — and I'd been given a sweet name to prove it — Candy. How would I it into a family full of snips and snails and puppy dogs'

Even my mother was confused. "For the first month, diapered you like a boy," she told me later, recalling that little boys' diapers were shaped with an extra fold in the front to prevent leakage.

Diapers notwithstanding, I was grateful to grow up with brothers, especially when my friends complained about how much they hated their whining, sniveling isters. Jay and Peter, who were 9 and 10 years older than I, protected me, played Frisbee with me, tickled me. Even though they sometimes made me snivel and whine, I loved them. My brothers were big and strong and smelled of Old Spice cologne. They were hairy legs and Jockey shorts, having cups left on the bathroom sink, dirty socks, barbells and beer I began to imitate them when I could barely walk. I'd seen Jay and Peter strut about shirtless so often that I decided to do the same. In the years that followed, I kept trying to walk around topless. "Little girls don't do that," my mother kept saying, forcing a shirt over my head every time. She could never quite explain

Jay liked the Dodgers; Peter, the Yankees. I, searching for my own team, settled for leftovers: the Mets. Jay played golf; Peter threw the shot-put. Jay wanted to marry and have a family; Peter spent wild nights drinking beer with his friends.

Jay was a romantic, going steady at the age of 15 with the girl he'd marry six years later. Peter was a weight-lifter with muscles that, he insisted, "I deveoped by swallowing rocks."

I often begged to see those big biceps. "Flex your arms, please," I'd implore, making him demonstrate for my ogling, reverent girlfriends. "He swallows rocks," I told those brotherless friends, and they believed me. What did they know about brothers?

"You're so lucky," my friends told me, as they rei-terated how awful it was to live with sisters who sweated in your blouses, secretly used your razor, hogged the telephone for hours...even days.

Yes, I felt lucky to have brothers. They didn't always feel the same about me. Especially when I was their chaperone on dates — my mother's orders

(My presence was supposed to prevent them from having sex. Actually, I was more than eager to see some sex.) But whenever I secretly watched them "necking" in our darkened living room, I saw nothing.

I learned plenty, however, from the "Playboy" magazines my brothers stashed in their closets. Once I discovered them, I spent months poring over back issues while Peter was at track practice, Jay at the driving range, and I was allegedly studying algebra. Then, somehow, Peter obtained a tape recording of a couple making love. He hid it so well that I spent years trying to find it, certain that it would explain everything to me. When I finally did find the tape and played it, I decided it was more interesting than my brothers necking in darkened living rooms, but I still knew nothing more about sex than that it involved a bunch of funny grunts and groans.

What was sexy, at the time, was our convertible. That my brothers actually convinced our parents to buy a convertible was a sizable feat. No one in our neighborhood owned one, and I led an entourage down the block to wave my brothers home, as if they were astronauts returning from outer space, when they picked up our new 1962 black Bonneville with the red interior. Even though it was a chilly fall day, the top was down and my mother was trying in vain to keep her hair tucked into a kerchief.

My brothers brightened my life in other ways, too like the time a neighborhood bully was threatening to make my "face look like an anchovy pizza." I simply told him, "My brother Peter's so big and strong that he could fling you over that tree." Pointing to an elm that shaded our house, I was saved from plastic surgery.

I'm not sure if Peter really could have flung anyone over a tree. But when he once tried to block Jay from making a touchdown in a friendly football game, he broke both of Jay's arms in the process. "What happened?" my frantic mother asked.

Jay shrugged, simply explaining, "I bumped into Peter." With both arms in white plaster casts, Jay had to be fed for six weeks. My mother and I took turns.

After a lifetime of getting away with bigger portions of cake and ice cream just because he was bigger than I, my brother was now in my hands. I controlled his fate - as well as his intake of Twinkies, mint chocolate chip ice cream and Grandma's homemade apple

When he recovered, Jay returned to teasing me, taking advantage of me, and using me as entertainment. When Elvis Presley became famous, Jay taught me to respond with a scream and a mock faint whenever he spoke the gyrating singer's name. I performed on command for all his friends. And Peter taught me to answer 50 whenever he asked how old my mother was. She tearfully denied the cruel fact every time.

My brothers hid spiders in my bed, and tried to torture me with live caterpillars. Jay woke me one Saturday morning, made a retching noise, and dropped a rubber replica of vomit onto my pillow. I learned to grow up tough

And tough I was, especially when we fought. I remember being so angry once with Peter that I actually hit him hard. I swung my fist - he groaned, doubled over, and stumbled into his bedroom. Was I

"You didn't exactly hit him in the stomach," Jay told me years later. "You have to remember that you were pretty short at the time and although you aimed for Peter's stomach. Between fights, the three of us talked in Pig Latin and smoked cigarettes when my parents weren't home. I was only 9 when Jay taught me how to belch on command. Such are the unusual talents that brothers

Then I started falling in love with their friends. Barry, a blond who never wore shoes and sang in a rock-and-roll band, was my first crush. He viewed me as a cute little tomboy. He broke my heart. So did his brother, Bruce. And then there were David, Michael,

The worst heartbreak came when my brothers left home. First Jay, to attend dental school and later to marry his high-school sweetheart. Then Peter, to law school in Boston. I pretended to be delighted at the time, since their bedroom was finally mine.

They left behind old baseball mitts, "Playboy" magazines, orthodontic retainers, even the lovemaking tape. I moved into their room of walnut desks and brown bedspreads. I missed their smells, their tales of parties, their convulsive laughter when we all watched a Marx Brothers movie on TV.

My brothers left a wonderful legacy: ease that I still feel in being with men. I find it natural to talk to them, laugh with them, trust them. I replaced my brothers with boyfriends, and eventually married one. Living with a man came as no great surprise; I'd been living with men all my life.

Sometimes when I massage my husband's back, I think of the training I received from all those massages I gave my brother Jay. And when I play a fierce game of tennis against a man, I never expect him to give away points just because I'm a girl. (Peter taught me that lesson when he used to shut me out in squash, with no remorse.)

My husband, who has always wished he had a sister so that he might have felt more comfortable with women at an earlier age, says that I understand men. Maybe I'm just used to them.

Restorer of furniture, paintings helping out the White House

By NATALIE ROTHSTEIN King Features Syndicate

Although Rosine Green never has been asked to put Humpty Dumpty together again, this restorer of fine arts has been called upon to restore practically everything else. A lovely little bronze figurine somehow missing its head; an 18th-century goldleaf frame inexplicably covered over in gray-metal radiator paint or an oil painting left neglected in a barn, soaking in an inch of rain

If you owned one of these objects, or something similarly precious and damaged, what would you do? Probably what the curator of the White House did: Call Rosine Green Associates in Brookline, Mass.

In 1860, the first gift to an American president by a Japanese delegation was received by President Buchanan. In 1982, this same gift, a lacquer table of exquisite proportions and design, was in serious disrepair. Mrs. Green had viewed the table in the White House, but it wasn't until it was shipped to her Brookline studio that she realized how bad things were.

The table was "structurally in much worse shape than I had seen, because I hadn't really crawled on my hands and knees in the White House to look at it - which was what I should have done!" laughed Mrs. Green.

Close examination revealed the table had many cracks, some of the lacquer and gold was gone and previous attempts to repair damage, in the form of glue and clamps, had been applied "all wrong."

For months, Mrs. Green, along with two associates, worked on the table — taking it apart, building new ball feet, filling in cracks, adding gold leaf and lacquer. The result of all this effort is that the table is back in the White House, in use as a coffee table in the third-floor guest sitting room.

Noted for her exceptional lacquer work — the type employed for the White House table — Mrs. Green describes it as a highly complicated and tedious process. She perfected this technique in Japan three years

In Japan each spring, lacquer — a sap — is collected from trees "as we collect maple syrup from maple trees in New England," says Mrs.

Green. "Lacquer sap, however, is dangerous - the chemical composition is very similar to poison ivy and causes the same blistering dermatitis. No person who has worked with lacquer has escaped its

The story of how Mrs. Green came to work with lacquer or porcelain or paintings began in France where she was born. "There was no expectation that I would work or do anything but marry," says Mrs. Green, noting that she came from an affluent family.

Introduced early to hand arts, she credits this with her artistic development. "My nanny was an embroiderer and she taught me when I was very young. I loved the colors beautiful cotton spools. And my mother taught me to knit at 5...

In New York, in the 1940s, Mrs. Green designed textiles, working on Seventh Avenue, "a very rough place," she says. She went to work for Thorp Brothers where she learned cabinet making, refinishing and lacquering. She was taught painting restoration by the restorer for the Whitney Museum.

After 17 years in New York, where she established her own restoration business, it became necessary to move to Boston.

Mrs. Green's husband, Dr. Howard Green, formerly of New York University, currently chairs the physiology department at Harvard Medical

When I arrived in Boston, nobody knew me. I said I could do great things, but nobody believed me," says Mrs. Green, referring to that time 12 years ago when she was attempting to start out here in the restoration business.

Many of her New York clients were dismayed by her removal to Boston. "They were very nice; they stuck with me. But it became so expensive to run back and forth to buy an airline seat for a painting! it just became impossible

There were good painting restorers here in Boston and Mrs. Green was told that there was no room for her, that it was difficult to break in. "I was told that I would starve to death...and although painting restoration was my first love and I didn't want to give it up, well, I had to make a living..." Thus she decided to take up porcelain restoration. Mrs. Green's breakthrough came through work she did for the antiques department of Shreve, Crump & Low.

She suggested to Edgar Bingham, the head of the antiques department, "Give me a piece — any-thing," she told him, "and if you like it, you will pay me for it. If you don't, there'll be no charge."

Bingham agreed, and was pleased with the result. A long association with Bingham and Shreve's ensued, which led to her being recommended to restore the Peacock

The famed Peacock Bowl, dating from 1832, is owned by the Bostonian Society and is reputed to be the largest punch bowl in the country. is of Chinese Export Porcelain in the Mandarin style of the Famille Rose. It came to Mrs. Green in fragments with two large sections missing. Today, the bowl is on display at the Old State House invisibly mended with no hint of where the previous breakage existed.

In addition to invisible mending, Mrs. Green practices several other types of restoration. There is, for example, museum restoration. In this instance, repairs should not be invisible in order to convey the historical accuracy of the piece. Mrs. Green also does "hairline crack restoration" where a less than priceless object may have its repairs minimally visible.

The fourth example of restoration done by Mrs. Green is so unusual she may be the only practitioner of it in this country. Known as Oriental restoration, it is a process where "cracks in porcelain pieces are gilded and filled with real gold," says Mrs. Green.

Those who know and understand Oriental art respect this form of re-toration, adds Mrs. Green, notin that Oriental pieces come to he from California, with their close

Rich voice, simple style draw people to Dalai Lama

By JAMES CONAWAY Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON - When the Dalai Lama speaks, people listen. Even those unacquainted with the 14th incarnation of Avalokiteshvara, Lord of Compassion, are enthralled by the voice that seems to come from elsewhere - rich, timbrous, given to the occasional ruminative grunt, full of the collective wisdom of Tibetan Buddhism and all the romance of the exiled priest-king.

"I am just a simple Buddhist monk," he says. He is also, at 49, the spiritual and political focus of Tibetans everywhere, the second most famous religious personage on earth, and a symbol in the West of the lost innocence of Shangri-La.

He's a small man with a recruit's buzz-cut, a resilient smile and antic black eyebrows behind glasses with practical metal rims. He wears inexpensive shoes with ties and waffle soles, and a magenta robe as old as the millennium, with a splash of saffron in deference to Indian Buddhism and a traditional tuck under the right arm.

"The robe suggests an elephant," explains one of the Dalai Lama's retainers, referring to the folds of the fabric. "The elephant is very steady. And there are many auspicious stories connected with the ele-

The Dalai Lama is certainly auspicious. Unlike most celebrities, he approaches photographers and asks them how they became photographers. He giggles, holding onto hands until people look him in the eye. Those people do strange things in his presence — perform little bows, shuffle their feet. Some get

His mere progress through the halls of the Watergate Hotel here seriously distracts people in the restaurant, previously intent on nouvelle cuisine.

That's nothing compared with his effect on his countrymen. Imagine an American amalgam of Ronald Reagan, Walter Mondale, the pope, the archbishop of Canterbury, Jerry Falwell, Jesse Jackson and the Beach Boys. The mere rumor a few years ago that the Dalai Lama's emissary was to visit Lhasa, capital of Tibet, from his place of exile across the Indian border, turned out enough followers to flatten every barrier set up by the communist Chinese occupiers.

He had fled Tibet and his 1,000-room palace in 1959, disguised as a soldier, deprived of his glasses for the sake of anonymity.

"There was great risk, and great anxiety," he says, during an interview in his hotel room. "We passed by the Chinese military camp. If they noticed us, they could easily pursue us. Their bullets could reach

Their bullets did reach many Tibetans, although 100,000 managed to join the Dalai Lama in India and to launch an extraordinary cultural revival that continues today. Chinese gulags and starvation brought on by disruption of the Tibetan economy since the Chinese invaded in 1950 have killed more than 1 million Tibetans. Ninety percent of the Tibetan Buddhist monasteries have been destroyed, and art treasures melted down and sold

Asked if he hates the Chinese, the Dalai Lama says no. After a pause, he adds, "They're a small irritation." Tibetan Buddhism is based upon the ideals of knowledge, compassion, tolerance. "If something can't be helped, there's no point in worrying about it.... There's no use to feel hatred. Hatred destroys our own Happiness is an indication of a virtuous life. "Suffering is the only thing that makes happiness apparent."

So much for the Chinese con-

The Dalai Lama has been invited back by the Chinese to rule Tibet as a kind of theocratic puppet, but he rejects that. He is considering a visit to Tibet next year, although that too is subject to further negotiation. "Once you have been bitten by a snake, then you are afraid even of a piece of rope."

Meanwhile he maintains an uncommon interest in worldly affairs, and travels in the interest of preserving Tibetan culture born in the Kingdom at the Top of the World and nurtured for a quartercentury on the hot, dry Indian

"Before, my life (in Tibet) was more formal. Now I'm a refugee, there's no place to be formal. There's no point in it. So there's no pretense, everything's straightforward, more practical. More. ... "

He turns to an aide and they have an intense, sibilant exchange.

"More useful," says the Dalai Lama, pleased with the word. "My own nature is like this. Helpful. Now we are closer to reality. After all, human beings are human beings. Everything they make is artificial. Now we have less of those hindrances.

He was chosen at the age of 2 by monks who scoured the countryside for a child born the same year the previous Dalai Lama died. According to tradition, the spirit of the Buddha of Compassion passes to each successor, manifesting itself at that early age. The Dalai Lama picked an object out of a collection that had belonged to his predecessor, the traditional sign.

'My mother later told me that I had expressed certain things that of the United States and the Soviet she and my father recognized." Such Union must meet without all the as speaking the Lhasan dialect that complicated agendas. Let them meet neither he nor his parents had ever and talk on a basis of human underheard. "When the scouting party standing."

came, I spoke to them in Lhasan. It was easy," he says, meaning that the reincarnation was obvious for all to

He stresses the fact that he is not a god. The difference between that and the reincarnated spirit of the ultimate leader is a difficult distinction for westerners. "Buddha is a teacher. He becomes Buddha from being an ordinary sentient being. Through his own practice he gradually gains enlightenment."

As a child he had many thoughts from the past lives of the Buddha of Compassion. "They were more vivid then," he says, but in any case he doesn't want to talk about them.

There are only about 7 million Tibetans in the world. Outside Tibet and India, most — 2,000 — live in Switzerland. There are 300 in America, which must make the Tibetans the smallest minority. On the next Dalai Lama, he says, "It is up to the Tibetan people whether or not the institution continues. Only if it helps them.'

Ironically, the Dalai Lama's recent 44-day tour of America coincides with the presidential campaigns, in which one of the prime issues is church and state. "There is no contradiction between religion and politics," he says, "if you are sincere. Love and warm feelings are highly necessary in both. Politics becomes dirty because of lack of these things

Well, then, how about nuclear holocaust, the single largest contemporary anxiety? That also succumbs to tantric persuasion.

"Concerned people — the leaders must have willpower. That willpower does not exist. There's only suspicion, and that must be cleared through human contact. The leaders

How will

Mormonism face future?

By VERN ANDERSON Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY - Mormonism is the nation's fastest-growing religion but faces a "bleak and difficult future" despite its wealth and expanding influence, say the authors of a new book that has drawn criticism from a Mormon Church official.

An aging and authoritarian male hierarchy, a penchant for meddling in politics and unrest among women and foreign members are just some of the widening cracks in the outwardly serene face of Mormonism, according to "America's Saints: The Rise of Mormon Power.

Today, the Mormon Church is not even a pale shadow of its radical past. It is powerful and growing but fraught with tensions, many a result of that expansion and that power," wrote Robert Gottlieb and Peter Wiley, non-Mormon journalists from California who spent more than three years researching the 278-page book, published by G.P. Putnam's.

Since publication less than a month ago, the first printing of 6,000 copies has sold briskly in the West and is nearly exhausted, while libraries in Salt Lake City report long waiting lists.

Church officials, preparing for this weekend's 154th Semiannual General Conference at the Tabernacle on Temple Square, are miffed by what they believe is the book's "pervasive bias," and said as much in the faith's weekly newspaper.

"'America's Saints' ... is so preoccupied with politics, power, dirty linen and closet skeletons that the book captures little of the real essence of its subject ...," Richard P. Lindsay, managing director of public affairs for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

While acknowledging the book "makes interesting reading," Lindsay said it "widely misses the mark" because the authors chose to ignore the essentially spiritual nature of the church "and its mission to draw man closer to God."

"We didn't set out to write a book about the spiritual side of the church," Wiley said in a telephone interview from San Francisco, "but how the church interacts with the rest of the world."

Wiley and Gottlieb, of Los Angeles, who write a weekly column syndicated in 25 newspapers, focused primarily on the past three decades of the church's 154-year history, a period in which membership rose from 1.3 million to the current 5.5 million.

But mere numbers don't account for Mormonism's growing political and economic influence. More important, the authors maintain, are the authoritarian nature of its allmale hierarchy, an expanding bureaucracy to do its bidding and the premium placed on strict obedi-ence to what is an all-encompassing way of life.

For the leaders of the church. the issues are joined: continue and intensify the expansion while shieldng Zion from the evils of Babylon. Mormonism can then become, in effect, America's dominant religion, a religion that is at once a civil ociety and a theocratic empire," the uthors write. But they see problems now and for the future. Gottlieb and Wiley believe that upon the death of ailing church President Spencer W. Kim-ball, 89, his designated successor, former U.S. Agriculture Secretary zra Taft Benson, could take the hurch down a far more authoritarian and politically conservative

Man unravels voices on cockpit tapes

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON - Paul Crawford. Turner, 55, is the man whose job it is to listen to the contents of cockpit voice recorders (CVRs).

More commonly known as "the black box," a CVR tapes the final 30 minutes of crew conversation and radio transmissions on every flight of a large commercial aircraft. It almost always bears clues to why an airplane crashed. As chief of the Audio Laboratory of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), Turner has thus helped solve the mysteries of all sorts of air disasters — from an Iranian Air Force 747 that blew apart over Madrid to the Air Florida disaster on the Potomac

The Korean War broke out while Turner was in college and in 1950 he enlisted in the Air Force. He completed 63 combat missions before his Saberjet was shot down in August 1952 over the Yalu River. He spent a year in a POW camp. When he returned to the United States, he became an Air Force test pilot. When he resumed his studies he received a BS and MS in electrical engineering from the University of

After retiring from the Air Force in 1971, Turner accepted the NTSB's offer to work as an understudy in its Audio Lab. In three years he became chief of the lab, and his reputation has since grown steadily both here and abroad. When not feeding tapes through the hundreds of pounds of electronic equipment in his soundproof office, he lectures across the country on the state of air safety.

Turner and his wife of 32 years, Jo, live in Camp Springs, Md. They have three grown sons Turner was interviewed by William Triplett, a Washington writer.

Q: When I first met you and asked you what you did for a living you said — and it was quite humorless and very quiet — you said, "I listen to people die." Do you still say that?

A: Yes, perhaps. I listen on the tape recorders to people sometimes making mistakes, sometimes not making mistakes and sometimes fighting for their lives. But much of the time, yes, I'm with them when

Q: Is listening to the tape the first time through ever hard on

A: No. It's more curiosity the first couple of times through. It's a little later on that it sometimes reaches you and you begin to see the conversation more in its depth and then you can see where a mistake might have been made or where the accident could have been averted perhaps, and then it does bother you.

Q: Do you think much about the passengers and crew?

A: No, I try and think very little about the passengers and the crew. try and think of the machine and the men that are flying the machine. I like to think of being able to make it easier for the next man to fly the next machine rather than this last one. I look to the future rather than

Q: Is it possible to fix an average number of times you'll listen to a tape before you're satisified?

A: No. Some tapes have good audio. The conversation and what went on in the cockpit is quite understandable. Then maybe it doesn't take nearly as much time as if you have a mystery in there somewhere. That is particularly noticeable when there is no real answer on the tape - where the aircraft is flying along and very little is said and then the next thing it's broken up in the air or it's blown up or whatever. Q: Do you have a method of listening? Do you try to put yourself in the cockpit and recreate and revisualize things as they happen?

A: You just can't separate yourself from the cockpit when you have flown, because you understand what's going on. Flying is very much like a dance in that you anticipate what is coming up next. So you're looking for it and you're expecting to find it on the tape. And if you don't you wonder why. I guess it's at that point that you say OK, there is something wrong.

Q: Do you work on instinct or is it all by the book?

A: Much of it is on instinct. Q: What would be some exam-

A: The (Washington) 14th Street bridge accident investigation in which a 737 didn't have enough power - the Air Florida crash. There were two portions in there that made us wonder what was going on. One of them was the fact that the aircraft did not seem to have enough power. That began as an instinctive feeling and as we begin to examine it further using the laboratory equipment we found out that indeed it did not have enough power. The second portion of that was the strange way that the crew was discussing the problems they were having with the engine. It seemed to change on them while they were sitting on the ramp. First the left engine, or one of the engines, changed and then one of the other engines changed. At that particular time we were wondering ust what they were talking about. Why were the engines changing? What were the engines changing? What were they seeing on the engines that gave them this unusual feeling in the cockpit? Later on when we found that the engines didn't have enough power we went out to Boeing and had the test con-firmed and it immediately became (clear) what had happened. Those two times on the tape were the times that the pressure probes had iced. So we knew the exact instant of the icing of the probe on the air-

Q: Have you ever brought any of the tapes home with you? A: If there's a particularly interesting passage that we've been working on for hours in the laboratory I might stick it in my cassette player in the car and listen to it a number of times while it's back-ground to traffic. And sometimes the information will come out.

While you're listening to tapes in a laboratory environment, you're sitting there staring at the speakers, staring at the machine or holding a headset and trying to understand what's going on. Frequently I find that some of my most insightful actitivies are while I'm doing some other job and playing the tape in the background; then all of a sudden I will begin to recognize what is actually being said. Even moving around the room will give you a different insight as to what's coming on over the tape.

This happens with almost all of the tapes. Five or six passages will be bothering us because maybe the captain or the co-pilot will have turned away from the microphone. So you're not really hearing what he's saying, but you know he's saying something, and it's something there in the background. I'll put it in an area where I can play it in the background while I'm working per-haps on some other portion of the tape. Every once in a while it will in another room and if the tape is of a group in the back room. The room or my distance, perhaps, from the speaker tends to filter the noise

The strange thing about this, once it comes through clear and you know what it says, there's no question in your mind that that's what they said.

When you go out in the field to investigate an accident, the being listened to by, say, members field is full of tin — full of aluminum parts of airplanes. So you go out there and turn over every one of them to see what's on the other side, to see if there is something you can see that might give you a clue as to what occurred. It's not being done quite so crudely anymore but the term still sticks.

Q: From all appearances, air safety investigator means that you're part engineer, part detective and part mortician. How have very little to do with the mortician portion of it. I stay as far away from that as possible. It's just not my job. And when I have been out to accidents it's not pretty and I don't particularly like it.

Q: Do you think your experience as a prisoner of war in Korea influenced your feelings about life and death?

A: It might have. It's sort of traumatic to get shot down and bail out. So I sort of felt for a while that everything was gravy. When you get close to death in a situation like this you realize how it can happen to anybody, crossing the street or doing whatever they're doing in their everyday existence. It gave me a little insight that says, "Don't sweat it. It's going to happen to all of us one of these days." Some sooner, some later.

Q: What about the job appealed to you when the NSTB offered it

A: I enjoyed the detective work and working with airplanes. I've worked with them all my life. Q: What is the most difficult part of your job? A: One of the most difficult portions is to have something on the tape that you can't get off there and you feel that it may be the clue to the accident. Try as you will you're not satisfied that you have the

The other frustrating thing is the obvious. If you know the guy made a mistake on board the airplane or if something failed on the airplane that could have been fixed that perhaps you'd found before and it was not repaired or not fixed. Say, for instance, flying into a thunderstorm. The guy is going to make a landing at some airport and you're listening to the tape and you're beginning to see from the other people's conver-sations around — on other radio channels — that other people are having problems. That the winds have increased drastically at the airport. That there's a definite indication of wind shear even though it's not stated. That they can see the roil cloud over the approach end of the airport but they feel that they can go under it and land the air plane. You say, "Oh no, don't try it." Yet while I can sit here and say this while I'm in the cockpit with him and landing at that airport, I have to realize from my own background that there are many times when I did this, there was no problem and I landed successfully.

Q: Is there an easy part to your

A: Perhaps the easiest portion of it is the spectrum analysis of the signal traces. This I do myself in the laboratory and I don't have to interface with other people and run the

I don't sit there in a vacuum and do all this work myself. I have a group that assists me of people from the accident investigation staff of Douglas or Fokker or Boeing or some other company. I'll have people there from the airlines, and people who have flown with the pilot.

Future job prospects in U.S. uncertain, experts say

By MERRILL HARTSON AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON - Since mid-1981, there has been a decline in the number of Americans who earn a living by making goods and a sharp rise in the ranks of those whose work is providing services for people.

At the same time, the Information Age, replete with robots and desktop computers, has arrived, offering only mixed future employment prospects; high-technology and automa-tion will likely wipe out many jobs. All of these factors and others, such as the likelihood that women and minorities will constitute a disproportionate share of new job-seekers, make future job prospects in America uncertain, economists say. But declining birth rates should ease pressures on business to furnish enough jobs, analysts generally

It is difficult to assess how many jobs will be needed in 1985 and in ensuing years to maintain a high level of civilian employment and a tolerable level of joblessness.

The labor force — a sum of the number of people working and those who say they are looking for jobs — stood at 106.1 million in June 1981. It has grown by about 7 million since then. But government statisticians and demographers have given few precise figures forecasting the size of the labor force in the years size of the labor force in the years ahead.

But it is clear that the growth of the labor force is slowing. In 1983, for instance, 1.3 million people joined the roster of those searching for jobs, and that was the slowest growth rate since the early 1960s.

BEHIND THE unemployment rate - the sensitive monthly government indicator that gets most of the attention — are a host of trends which concern economists in and out of government. From June 1981 through last September:

The number of Americans employed in the manufacturing of durable and non-durable goods fell from 26.1 million to 25.5 million.

The total number of people and 1995. who earn a living providing services to others, such as medical, legal, hotel, restaurant and banking, soared from 66.2 million to 69.6 mil-

The number of Americans who accepted part-time jobs, only because they could not find anything better, rose from 3.7 million to 5.5 million, although the latter fig-ure is down from 6 million following the long recession.

The loss of hundreds of thousands tify. of jobs in heavy manufacturing throughout the so-called Rust Belt during the long business slump has fueled sharp arguments about where jobs will come from in the

"Contrary to some popular reports, manufacturing industries will still be an important source of new jobs during the next decade," the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It said that manufacturing, led by such industries as computers and

There are those who believe that the move toward high-tech industries will solve all industrial adjustment problems," she said, "and there are those who believe that the new technology will create serious labor surpluses.

Just such a conclusion was reached by the AFL-CIO's Committee on the Evolution of Work. In an August 1983 report to the labor federation's policymaking executive council, the committee instruments, is expected to account estimated that by 1990, there may be for one new job in six between now up to 100,000 robots and 20 million computers in use.

'As computers and robots take over more and more functions in the factory and the office," it said, "a two-tiered work force is developing.

"At the top will be a few execu-tives, scientists and engineers, professionals and managers, performing high-level, creative, high-paid full-time jobs in a good work environment...At the bottom will be low-paid workers performing relatively simple, low-skill, dull, routine, high-turnover jobs in a poor work environment," the AFL-CIO report

THIS DOESN'T worry Alan Schonberg, president of Management Recruiters International Inc. in Cleveland, a large talent-search organization, who said in an interview that "the demand for mid-management people has exploded."

But Schonberg acknowledged that this demand "is not in the industrial sector, it's in the service sector.'

economist, made in a grim report last May, titled "Storm Clouds on the Horizon: Labor Market Crisis and Industrial Policy.'

Bluestone wrote that the burdens of worker dislocation (in smokestack industries) in recent years were not shared equally by all Americans.

"Rather, they have fallen dispro-portionately on particular regions of the country, on urban areas, on minorities, and increasingly on the bluecollar middle-class," he said. "The fact that 63 percent of all the new jobs created in America between 1969 and 1982 were in industries paying an average annual wage of less than $12,500 spells real trouble for future political and economic stabil-

Bluestone's argument mirrors the AFL-CIO position that overall U.S. civilian employment, which is above 105 million, masks a trend in which new jobs, lower-paying, serviceoriented jobs, are gradually sup-planting the higher-wage jobs in manufacturing.

Temporary work gives view of working world

By The Associated Press

For the graduating student who hasn't decided on what career path to follow or for the person re-entering the job market after a long hiatus, temporary work can provide a window on the working world.

Even those seeking that first job who know what they want may find themselves lacking the basic business skills that will get them a foot in the door, according to employment specialists.

"For the recent graduate, temporary work can be equated with 'on-the-job training'," says William Olsten, board chairman of Olsten Temporary Services, a provider of temporary help nationwide.

Where else can a recent college grad have the opportunity to try so many different career paths from the inside in such a relatively brief period of time? Temporary work, he adds, can provide the job-seeker a chance to work for a wide range of companies - publishing one week, banking another and perhaps advertising or insurance during additionl assign-

"They also have a chance to buy time while considering whether they want to work for a small or large company, an oil company or a real estate firm," agrees Sam Sacco, executive vice president of the National Association of Temporary

"Since temping provides the opportunity to test the market without making a long-term commitment, once they see a business from the inside, they're often better able to decide on a career path.

Temporary services can offer a wide range of choices for short or long-term assignments through the nation. For example, Olsten Services divisions include office services, health care services, office automation, accounting, light industrial, records management, legal support and marketing 'The variation in pay rates throughout the country make it impossible to cite specific figures, but a general rule of thumb is that temps earn the same salary per hour as full-time employees, minus com-pany benefits," says Sacco.

"Clients pay temporary services, the services in turn pay the temporary the established hourly rate." For those who decide to try temporary work before leaping into a full-time position, the first step is to register with an established temporary service. 'Reputable temporary service firms usually have a substantial number of clients and will take the time to evaluate all of your capabilities, and explain what they have to offer," Olsten says.

Sacco explains that the impression you get when you telephone or visit the service's office is an all-impor-

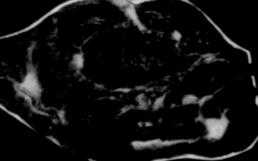

He also suggests asking yourself whether the staff seems professional, whether the service offers free training to improve your skills as you work, whether it offers a benefit plan and possibly a bonus plan for those who work a certain length of time

To recent grads thinking about temporary work, Olsten advises:

Before making a move to a permanent job in a business you viewed as a temp, plan to work for the temporary service for a reasonable length of time. Temporary services are not agencies, and they don't charge a placement fee. Under-standably, they're not in business to invest time and money in training you and then have you take a permanent job after only a few weeks.

 Keep your eyes open during every job assignment and ask the kind of questions that can help you learn the ropes. Absorb what you can from your supervisors and nurture the contacts you make.

Nursing students 'practice' on computer-generated crises

By STEPHEN W. BELL

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP) - A 46-year-old man was brought into a hospital emergency room here after collapsing on his front lawn. He was agitated, breathing rapidly into an oxygen mask, gripping the ambulance stretcher railing and complaining of the heat and humidity.

After correctly shifting the patient from the stretcher to a hospital gurney, a third-year nursing student decided that from a dozen possible actions she could take next she would increase to 100 percent the oxygen flow through the mask to help the man with his apparent lung problem.

Almost immediately, the man went into cardiac arrest and before the nursing student realized what had happened, the man was in critical condition and he eventually died. Will the hospital be sued for malpractice? What will it mean for the nurse's career? Is it murder?

No, it's a computer simulation. The simulation, which will present third year nursing students with real-life decisions registered nurses face daily, is one of several developed at the new Marist College School of Nursing, which accepted its first freshmen in September.

When the 15 freshmen and 43 registered nurses in the four-year baccalaureate nursing program reach their third year, they can expect to find 30 computer programs designed to help them reach the correct health care decisions in the proper order in a variety of situ-

Nursing is a profession more often known for its tradition than its innovation, says Marist nursing director Dr. Barbara Hynes. "Any other group has known how to get more, but nursing in a sense has settled for less," she says. Computer-aided learning, so prevalent in other pro-fessions, is long overdue in nursing training, she says.

In addition, a school starting to train nurses in a state with 100 other registered nursing programs needed a distinction. "The computer does something that really hasn't been done before," in nursing, Ms. Hynes Asked if such a program will prove a boon to nurses, Dr. Josephine LaLima, director of nursing education for the New York State Nurses Association, says, "Absolutely. That is the coming thing to have students make decisions. No question about it, we have to use the technology from other fields available to us. It is already being used in the health care facilities to plan treatment.

Ms. Hynes recruited nurses from St. Francis and Vassar Brothers hospitals here, the Dutchess County Health Department and Benedictine Hospital, in Kingston, to help plan, authenticate and check the computer programs she is preparing for her students.

Nursing students should be trained as more than technicians. Ms. Hynes says. Nurses will need to help make decisions so patients are helped on a variety of levels, she

Knowing how to insert an intravenous tube or take a patient's blood pressure will remain part of a nurse's job, she says, but making a myriad of correct decisions on how, when and why care should be administered is as important. "We set out to design a curriculum that is entirely different. It is focused on decision-making," she says. "Nursing is the biggest part of the health care profession, I think there are 200,000 nurses in the state, but we have not been part of the decision making process

In 1983, there were 165,434 registered nurses in New York state, Ms. LaLima says, and 1.66 million nation-

Marist, with 3,500 full and parttime undergraduate and graduate students, is located on 108 acres on the Hudson River on this city's western fringe. Not far from the Hyde Park mansions of the Roosevelts and Vanderbilts, the school is taking advantage of its proximity to International Business Machines Corp. offices here.

Earlier this year, IBM donated $4.5 million worth of computer hardware and software to the school. Ms. Hynes runs her six completed nursing simulations on IBM PCs and will eventually have 30 simulations for students to start using in 1986.

CPC has good news for job seekers

By ERICH SMITH

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) - The College Placement Council, which surveys both graduating seniors and the company personnel managers who hire them, has good news for those starting a job search now.

"The job market's demand for college graduates has increased significantly," says Judith Kayser, manager of statistical services for CPC. The classes of '82 and '83 bore the brunt of the recession, and there was some lag time in job offers as we moved into the recovery.

But in broad terms, there is going to be a much better outlook for the Class of '85," Ms. Kayser says.

A recent CPC survey of the hiring plans of 399 major companies found the trend continuing except for a slight decline for the liberal arts.

Graduates in the technical fields continue to enjoy the best outlook in the job market. At the bachelor's degree level, CPC found employers planning to hire 7 percent more engineers than they did last year.

In other categories, employers predicted their hiring like this: science, math and other technical fields, up 11 percent; business, up 4 percent; other nontechnical - the liberal arts, down 1 percent.

But an expanding job market doesn't necessarily mean expanding

'Employers are determined to hold the line on salaries," Ms. Kayser says. "Where we did find salary gains, it was in the range of 2 to 5 percent in those fields with the greatest demand. With inflation apparently under much pressure to offer bigger and bigger paychecks, CPC found. What's more, graduating students appear to have moderated their own expectations.

Economists and politicians may be bating the meaning of the present slowdown in the economy, but CPC isn't worried.

'Our impression is that this is just a slowing to a more sustainable pace," Ms. Kayser says. "Employers tell us they plan to continue hiring through 1985. They will be going to more campuses and interviewing more students.

What's hot? "The technical and engineering fields, especially electrical engineering. The Bureau of Labor Statistics says this will be one of the fastest growing fields for the rest of the decade.

Jobs in future will require flexibility

By GENE SCHROEDER

NEW YORK (AP) - If America makes an intensive effort to develop space, it could create new careers leading to millions of jobs on earth, along with thousands more in space, says the chairman of the Congressional Space Caucus.

"We are moving toward a very dif-ferent world," adds Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., in a new book titled, Window of Opportunity.

Through this "window" can be seen an opportunity to create a bright and optimistic future for our children and grandchildren, according to the conservative congressman, whose theories have received a mixed reaction.

"Many jobs of the future are going to be found dealing with space, space-based manufacturing or spacebased communications," Gingrich, 41, elaborated in an interview. Revolutionary uses of the computer and biology, he says, also will contribute heavily to a very different world.

The space industry, Gingrich believes, will create jobs in a way similar to the airlines industry, where for every pilot flying a plane there are mechanics, reservations clerks, people at check-in counters, baggage handlers and maintenance

The Space Caucus, he explains, was formed by a group of congressmen to sponsor and promote the idea of America moving into

What courses should be empha-sized and what kind of jobs will be available for students now in college and soon to be launching careers? "Clearly, there are going to be greater economic opportunities for people who major in mathematics or science and engineering than there has been in the past 20 years," says Gingrich, a former history profes-"But also, I think the real key to being successful in the next 35 to 40 years is a willingness to change and be flexible. It doesn't matter nearly as much what your major is in college as what your attitude is and your willingness to keep learning and keep training yourself and acquiring new knowledge and applying it.

"Jobs in the next generation are going to require a lot more flexibility and a lot more willingness to change careers.

"Most college graduates should plan to have at least four or five jobs in their lifetime, and they may indeed be in very different careers. We can afford to spend more of our lifetime changing jobs, partly because we live longer and partly because we are going to continue to see a tremendous rate of change." For those dropping out of school early or not going on to college, the congressman suggests, the most important assets are a willingness to go to work and showing up on time.

And they must plan to keep on learning if they want to get anywhere in their careers, he adds, explaining that could mean learning at night, going to school on weekends, or training themselves by videotape, home computers or correspondence courses.

"Jobs in the Information Age are not going to be just the running of computers," says Gingrich. "The whole health spa fad, for example, is a very rapidly growing field. Lots of people are going into such things as physical therapy and aerobic dance instruction - and those are information-age jobs.

"We are at the beginning of a new era of very different kinds of jobs than ever seen before. I think the horizons are going to be wide open."

Will women share equally in these new career fields?

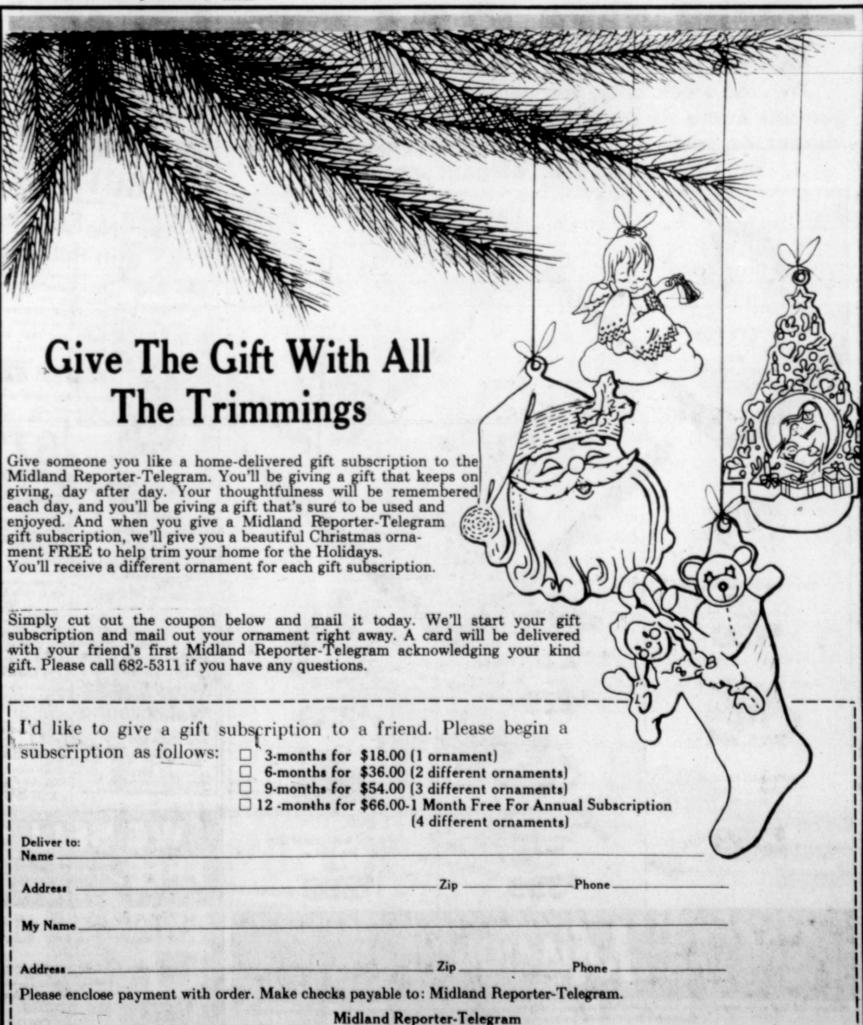

"I think women are likely to share at least equally and maybe more than equally," Gingrich says, "in the sense that beginning with the typewriter and now accentuated by the word processor, power steering and the like, the difference between men and women in terms of physi-cal strength becomes less and less

"Physical strength was very important if you plowed behind a mule or worked in a steel mill. It's irrelevant if you work as a typist. In fact, women have certain advantages, such as being physically able

"So, we're going to see relatively equalizing factors over the next 20 years in which women, if anything. have more choices and are going to have to think through their lives more carefully than men because women are going to have a choice of deciding such things as:

"Do I voluntarily stay home and have children? Do I have any children? Do I have my children go to a day-care center? Do I have children and stay home for three years, then go back to my career? Do I find a areer that lets me work at home Gingrich believes there also is wider acceptance of the notion that men have more to bring to par-enting than in the past, and there-fore with some couples the man may stay at home three or four years while the wife follows a career. Therefore," he says, "I think we're going to see more diverse and complex family relationships than we've seen in the past."

Ireland struggles to keep identity

By MARCUS ELIASON

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Irish prime minister's official title is Taoiseach, an ancient Gaelic word meaning clan leader. His political party is called Fine Gael, the Tribe of Ireland.

Such titles tell much about a land struggling to preserve its identity under the shadow of Britain just across the Irish Sea. They imply a sense of family, proud of its history and determined to remain a family in the age of European supranationalism and the global village.

Ireland is to Britain what Belgium is to France, or Canada to the United States — the weaker, less populous but occasionally wiser next-door neighbor.

The word often used for Ireland is soft — soft rain, soft voices, soft green land. People are warm and welcoming. They go straight to first-name terms, even with the Taoiseach, pronounced TEE'-shuck.

Part of the family atmosphere is linked to the fact that Ireland, 97-percent Roman Catholic, is the most church-bound country in Europe. Divorce and abortion are banned. The sale of contraceptives is severely restricted. The indirect result, thanks to modern medicine, is a baby boom that has made it Europe's youngest country. Half its 3.5 million people are under 25.

The Irish freely admit to having an inferiority complex.

IN THE Dail (Parliament) recently, the opposition was lambasting the government over the fact that Britain had congratulated Ireland on its handling of the search for an Irish Republican Army suspect.

"A patronizing pat on the head," complained opposition leader Charles J. Haughey.

"I think it is part of our national inferiority complex to miscontrue compliments and take them as insults," retorted Justice Minister Michael Noonan.

An Irish woman is shown demonstrating against abortion in Dublin recently. Britain's next-door neighbor is trying to retain its identity through a sense of family, linked to the fact Ireland, 97 percent Roman Catholic, is the most church-bound country in Europe.

in 1921 after centuries of British rule stained by massacres, persecution and campaigns to stamp out the Irish identity. English became the official language. Irishmen were forced to trim their beards to English norms, and take English surnames.

Something of the ancient British contempt for the Irish lives on in the "Irish jokes" which are a staple of comic routines in Britain, and the so-called "Paddy Factor," which British troops in Northern Ireland mention whenever an IRA operation goes awry.

Independent Ireland went through a severe anti-British backlash. Ireland left the British Commonwealth, stayed neutral in World War II, and just two years ago managed to annoy Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher by refusing to give full support to Britain's war with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

IRELAND STILL maintains Gaelic — it is called Irish here — as an official language alongside English, and it is compulsory in schools and on government signs and documents.

"1/2 uair a chloig — 5p," say the signs on Dublin parking meters. Half an hour costs five

But it is spoken less and less. The state radio and television broadcast mostly in English. Parliament conducts its business in English. Civil servants are required to have taken a course in Irish but only an estimated 5 percent of the people speak it well.

"When my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then and not until then, let my epitaph be written," declared the Irish freedom fighter Robert Emmet before the English hanged him in 1803.

That place among nations still seems to elude the Irish. They refuse to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and declare themselves neutral in the East-West conflict, but are ardent members of the European Common Market. They are a liberal Western democracy where hundreds of women and men, deserted by their spouses, can never remarry because the church so decrees.

THEY HAVE a modern industrial state, yet on the main bridges across Dublin's Liffey River sit women with infants, Irish citizens wrapped in blankets, begging.

Their constitution commits them to seek unity of Ireland and the British-ruled province of Ulster. Yet none but the most diehard nationalists — and they are dwindling in number — still imagines regaining sovereignty over Ulster. It has become something of a national myth.

The Irish memory of past injustice remains strong. No country responded faster and more generously than Ireland to the Ethiopian famine. The national trauma of Ireland's own famine in the mid-19th century, in which an estimated 1 million died, lingers

On a recent TV talk show, the host signed off by reminding viewers of "Clogs" Gallagher, an old man who traveled around the island playing the fiddle and dancing a jig. He had recently appeared on the show.

"I thought, just to remember him, you might want to know that he died on Thursday," said the host, Gay Byrnes. "All right? Well, there you are. Sad note to end on, but you would think it peculiar if I didn't mention it."

Soaring aid from U.S. worries Salvadorans

EDITOR'S NOTE: The United States helps El Salvador fight leftist guerrillas with millions in military aid. It also is handing over $1 million a day to keep the nation's economy afloat.

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP)
— Soaring U.S. economic aid is causing concern that this once self-sufficient country could become addicted to it.

While wealthy Salvadorans who fled at the start of the civil war five years ago are returning with their money, foreign investment is virtually nil.

Some economists and businessmen predict an overhaul of its tradition-bound agricultural base is all that will get the war-battered Salvadoran economy rolling again.

economy rolling again.

American aid has poured in to help make up for the lost investment, help pay for nearly $1 billion in direct war damages and keep the economy afloat.

economy afloat.

Most of the aid is economic support funds, known bureaucratically by the initials ESF, intended for imports of essential American-made goods, although there has been some evidence of misuse.

U.S. funds pay for about 30 percent of El Salvador's imports and underwrite about a third of the Salvadoran government budget.

"Foreign capital will not come back in any big way until the conflict here is more resolved," said a foreign economist who watches the situation closely and agreed to discuss the economy only on condition of anonymity. "Attempts to bring back foreign investment have not borne fruit. The major push will have to come from Salvadoran capital that left the country or is still here."

Between 1979 and 1981 an estimated $1.1 billion was sent abroad for safekeeping, mostly in U.S. hanks. The drain is much slower now and some economists say it has virtually stopped.

The Salvadoran economy plunged when violence picked up in 1979 and by 1982 gross domestic production had dropped by 25 percent. The purchasing power of an average Salvadoran had dropped by a third.

Economists predict an economic growth of 2 percent or less this year against a population growth of about 2 percent with further recovery dependent on the conduct of the war and confidence of the business community in the five-month-old government of President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Some American assistance is trying to help find new sources of income beyond the traditional cash crops of coffee, cotton and sugar.

"These crops need to be maintained but they will not be the growth leaders," said a U.S. Embassy economist, also speaking on a basis of anonymity.

He said new kinds of cash crops, small manufacturing and agri-business are the keys to economic recov-

American economic assistance, meanwhile, has soared, mostly to provide ESF dollars, which reached $210 million this year.

Overall, U.S. aid now runs at about $1 million a day and has totaled about $1 billion since 1979.

"It is worrisome to find that we depend on a million dollars a day from the United States," said Juan Vicente Maldonado, executive director of the National Association of Private Enterprise, the country's most influential private enterprise organization.

"We thank the American people but worry that it is establishing a dependency on our part. It is not a normal relationship between countries. The impact is tremendous but we know it cannot go on forever," he said in an interview.

"Before 1979 there was no significant American economic aid. El Salvador does not like being a burden. It's not our style."

"We can easily be the Taiwan of Latin America," he said, comparing this country's large labor force, high output and relative lack of resources to the Nationalist Chinese island.

San Francisco Supervisor Wendy Nelder wrote the office smoking policy law of the city. It requires employers to write a smoking policy which gives precedence to non-smokers.

Smouldering conflicts ignite smoking laws

EDITOR'S NOTE: The efforts by groups such as GASP and ASH to restrict or even abolish smoking in the workplace and in public buildings has met with varying degrees of success. But even in tobacco country the anti-smokers are gain-ing a toehold.

It plays like an old western movie, with showdowns on Main Street over territorial rights as smoke swirls on the horizon.

But when a smoker faces off with a non-smoker it's hard to tell who's wearing the white hat of the good

Who is infringing on whose rights in this effort to fence off smokers and who has the right to infringe?

In the last decade or so, various states have considered more than 2,300 anti-smoking measures and passed less than 300 of them. So, often thwarted at the state level, anti-smoking crusaders have taken the fight to the local level with bet-may be expelled. Among the organizations trying to place tight restrictions on smokers are two national anti-smoking groups: ASH, the Association on Smoking and Health, and GASP, the Group Against Smoking Pollution. GASP made an end-run around balky state legislatures by seeking smoking bans in smaller jurisdictions, such as cities and towns. In Fort Collins, Colo., they helped back an anti-smoking referendum that won 2-1, despite picketing and a city council meeting where smokers sucked on elegant but cold pipes. The futile protest was raised by a group called "Growing Resentment Over Anti-smoking Noises," GROAN.

The American Cancer Society says

18.5 million, about a third of the nation's 55 million smokers, tried to quit for at least a day during last month's Great American Smokeout,

In previous smokeouts, up to 5 million who tried made it through the day into the next without lighting up, the ACS says. The techniques are increasingly sophisticated. This year's campaign had non-smokers providing cold-turkey snacks of celery stalks and candy, mounting "smokebuster" attacks on their addicted brethren and adopting them wholesale like so many recalcitrant Cabbage Patch

Nevertheless, there were about a million less attemptees this year than last, which could mean that anti-smoking activists are now reaching the hard-core smokers.

That may be why confrontations between smokers and non-smokers seem to be getting more serious

EVERGREEN, Texas (AP) -Before blacktop roads snaked their way through these woods, it was a two-day ride to the closest big town,

Like a scene from a Western movie, local lawmen would handcuff their prisoners to trees while they slept under the stars on their overnight journey to jail.

This is still the country known by the city slickers as "the sticks." But only 60 miles from hustling Houston, Evergreen and other small communities sprinkled throughout San Jacinto County are now into a second childhood.

For the first time in 100 years, people are moving here for relatively low taxes, clean air, elbow room and Lake Livingston.

"People come in this store nearly every day asking if we know where there's any land for sale," said Doug Cox, a Houston firefighter who helps out at Everitt's Evergreen Grocery on his days off.

Cox, 43, was born, reared and married in Evergreen. Although he works for the City of Houston, when his 24-hour shift is over he can't wait to head home, where the living is "nice and easy," he said.

Some of the older folks don't like to see the subdivisions coming in, but there's nothing they can do about it," Cox said. "I don't have anything against them. The people are real neighbors. But well, I thought I was going to be away from ranchers there.

WITH INTERSTATE 45 to the west and U.S. Highway 59 and Lake Livingston on the east, however, it suddenly became easy for everybody to find Cox's hometown hide-

The Evergreen Grocery, owned by Cox's sister, Falvey Everitt, and her husband, is one of several roadside general stores on Texas Highway 150 between New Waverly and Coldspring. Except for homemade signs for yard eggs posted on trees, the stores are the only sign of commerce.

Most places have a gas pump outcounter inside and cold drinks and hot sandwiches for hungry people from McDonaldland.

Evergreen proper is just east of or shape.

A scrapbook history of the Ellisors' journey from South Carolina to the promised land between the Trinity and San Jacinto rivers and of their descendants can be found in Evelyn's Grocery. It is on the west side of "town."

THE OWNER, Evelyn Ellisor Niederhofer, 57, has devoted 30 years of filling in the holes of her family tree with names and personalities. The best-known branch on her chart is for Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire. But Mrs. Niederhofer's obvious favorite relations are the three Ellisor brothers who came with family, friends and slaves to untamed Texas 130 years ago.

Evergreen is providing a haven for another man of the cloth, former Methodist lay minister Dearing Estes Jones of Conroe. Jones was convicted in 1982 of felony theft for defrauding two elderly sisters out of nearly $89,000 in a land-buying scheme. He is now on 10 years' probation and is paying restitution of

During his trial, Jones had the moral and financial support of the Interfaith Church in Evergreen, which sponsored barbecues to pay his attorney's fees. He continues to preach there every Sunday to a forgiving congregation that includes Mrs. Niederhofer.

'We can't believe he'd do something like that, and even if he did we couldn't just turn our backs on him," she said. "I would just die if anything happened to Brother Jones. He's as much a part of this church as the pulpit and songbooks

The church's history, however, dates well before Jones. Since it was organized in 1862, it has switched location and affiliation and now is recognized by the State of Texas as a historical site.

THE CHURCH was barely 30 years old when John Jackson was born in Evergreen, the child of former slaves owned by one of the first

Jackson lives alone on his father's homestead, back off the main road. It's the type of isolated rural area that's last on the list to have electrical service restored after a disaster such as Hurricane Alicia.

But Jackson, 91, knows how to take care of himself. His parents, he said, were good teachers.

Every morning he builds a fire in his small wood stove to cook his day's meals. He stays in by the fire when it's cold and on the front porch when it's hot, and when he feels good he works on his baskets.

A basket built by John Jackson will probably last even longer than side, a friendly face behind the he has. Using skills taught him by his father, Jackson transforms poles of white oak into containers strong who find themselves so many miles enough to hold as much as a man can lift. He can make them any size

"All you have to do is tell me," he

For an extra large basket, Jackson splits his timber into 5-foot slats and slices off the webbing with a draw knife. After laying out the ribs and surrounding forest for sermons, weaving the bottom, he shapes the songs and socials. The churches arrived with three product of a day's work costs $10.

'Socialist experiment' Communia fails as commercial community

Associated Press

COMMUNIA, Iowa - This tiny once-upon-a-town, sitting on a bend of Clayton County Road X-3C, was founded in the 1840s as a socialist experiment, but failed in the 1850s. Now, it seems, capitalism also has failed in this former commune.

Ruth Harris, the only resident of Communia and owner of the Communia Store the past 25 years, went out of business as winter set in.

"I'm glad, really," she said. I just couldn't pay the bills." She was tired of seeing business dwindle to an occasional sandwich, can of pop or candy bar, and she was tired of keeping the store open six days a week from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The store, built sometime between 1847 and 1854, was recorded in the 1882 county history as a saloon. It was sold in 1926 to Mrs. Harris' mother, and Mrs. Harris grew up in the store. She ran it with her first husband, who died in 1971, and with her second husband, who died two years ago.

The store still has its original wood floor and tin ceiling. But it has changed a bit since the 1930s, when it had everything from bulk onions to rakes and nails.

"They all liked (the store) because they could come in and sit down on chairs and visit, instead of going in the supermarkets," Mrs. Harris said. She shakes her head. "Today, everybody's in such a hurry. Mrs. Harris sits on a wooden rocker near a north window and pulls out a cache of fading newspaper clippings about her store and the history of Communia.

A date in one of the newspaper articles catches her eye.

"Look at this!" she exclaims. The article says that on Nov. 3, 1847, John Enders came to the colony accompanied by the first two women in the settlement. "That's the same day I had the auction and closing out," Mrs. Harris says.

One of the clippings says the colony was founded by six Germans.

Other stories name nine German artisans and one Frenchman as the founders.

The settlers sometime between 1845 and 1847 acquired 1,400 acres of land worth $1.25 an acre in the northeast corner of the state, about 30 miles northwest of Dubuque. Each took a turn at farming part time and working at their individual crafts part time.

They called themselves "Free Thinkers," and advocated religious toleration and the brotherhood of

But the commune ran into problems. Heinrich Koch, the first colony president, was ousted by 1849 when the others accused him of moving the others accused him of moving the land and colony assets into his own private account. Another man, Joseph Venus, became president.

The colony changed again in 1851 when William Weitling, a socialist theoretician, visited Communia. Weitling persuaded the residents to give their assets to his socialist Workingmen's League. In return, he spent $15,000 of the league's money for development in the settlement.

Constant bickering apparently was the downfall of the venture. Women protested their chores. Men asked for higher wages. Goods sold at less than the cost of production. Crops failed.

Finally, the League wanted a return on its investment and Weitling could not produce. Communia went up for sale in 1854. No one wanted it, and by 1856 the property went into receivership. Property rights battles continued in court until 1864.

Today, only the cemetery and the empty store remain.

New life in store for 'Thuy'

PHANAT NIKHOM, Thailand (AP) - At the age of 21, Thuy is a survivor of genocide in Cambodia, a sixmonth forced march to Vietnam and five savage pirate attacks while adrift for seven days and nights in a boat in the Gulf of Thailand.

Born in Cambodia to Vietnamese parents, Thuy arrived in Thailand in June 1983, on a small refugee boat whose female passengers were beaten, abducted and repeatedly raped in the pirate attacks.

She has a future now, one for which her parents in Vietnam stashed away money.

She will be resettled as a refugee in Sydney, Austrlia, under the sponsorship of a Roman Catholic church. Her parents remained in southern Vietnam because they didn't have the money to flee on a refugee boat as Thuy did.

Thuy is not her real name. She asked that it not be used to protect her parents, who survived the Cambodian war in the early 1970s and the emergence of the communist Khmer Rouge faction that killed 10 of Thuy's relatives as they brought a reign of terror down upon the country after their 1975 victory.

This is Thuy's story, told to a reporter recently at this camp about 55 miles from Bangkok, Thailand's capital. It cannot be confirmed independently, but her account of pirate attacks is similar to accounts given to United Nations officials by other

They raped and then tried to kill us, but they didn't succeed," she said of the pirates who attacked her, her brother and 36 other "boat people" as they sailed in a 36-foot boat from Songdoc, on Vietnam's southern Ca Mau Peninsula, to southern Thai-

In the first attack, the refugees were robbed of everything and the boat's 11 women were dragged onto the pirate boat, repeatedly raped for two days and returned to their boat.

Thuy was abducted by another pirate boat the next day. This time, she said, the pirates were "very cruel," and she jumped into the sea and swam back to the refugee boat. They threw out a rope and tried to catch me. In the fifth attack, the pirates tried to take the refugee boat's engine, but in an ironic twist, the refugees were saved when the pirates involved in the first attack returned, took pity on them, and paid off the fifth pirate boat.

All the refugees landed June 10, 1983, in Thailand at Songhkla, "right on the beautiful beach with many beautiful trees" - the ordeal over, lucky to be alive.

According to the Thailand office of the U.N. High Commissioner For Refugees (UNHCR), pirates killed 724 refugees headed for Thai shores from 1981 to the first half of this year. In 624 recorded attacks during this period, pirates also abducted 560 refugees, most of whom were never seen alive again. Separate figures show that 882 refugee women were raped.

UNHCR officials believe most of the pirates are Thai fishermen, but they do report a few cases of Vietnamese attacking refugees.

High Commissioner Poul Hartling, in an interview with The Associated Press in Bangkok, quoted senior officials in Vietnam as conceding there were "a couple of cases involving Vietnamese pirates, and that they were "severely punished."

Thuy's story continues: She and her parents survived the fighting in Cambodia in the early 1970s, but faced a new ordeal when the Khmer Rouge carried out mass executions, emptied the cities, and forced people to work in the coun-

Thuy's family, which ran an import-export business in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, was given three days by the Khmer Rouge to move out of the city in April 1975. A six-month march to the Vietnamese border followed, and the family was forced "many times" to work in the fields along

WASHINGTON - When Michael Fox looks down 18th Street from the steps of the old town house that serves as the headquarters of Push Literacy Action Now, a privately financed group that teaches adults to read, he can easily see the Washington Monument.

New York Times News Service

By DAVID BURNHAM

But in many ways, the 44-year-old educator and the organization he runs in the Adams Morgan section in mid-town Washington are considerably more distant from the capital's official bureaucracy than the view of the towering stone shaft would

One measure of the distance is reflected in different views of the size and nature of the adult illiteracy problem in America and, indeed, in the District of Columbia.

ACCORDING TO THE official statistics of the Census Bureau, 99.5 percent of all Americans are literate, an estimate arrived at by assuming that anyone who manages to get through fifth grade can read. But Fox and many other specialists in the field feel this official definition of literacy is seriously misleading.

They tell of various studies indicating that about one out of five Americans is functionally illiterate, reading below the level of fourth grade, unable to grasp the meaning three-syllable words and understanding two-syllable words only with great difficulty.

"What these national studies mean," Fox said, "is that within the borders of the District of Columbia there are about 100,000 functionally illiterate adults, 50,000 of whom are parents, people who read so poorly that they find it very hard to operate in our society."

Despite all the wealth, power and contributions, 19 percent from consophistication that the capital city tracts to conduct literacy training exudes on the surface, he added, many Washingtonians are unable to comprehend their children's report cards or write their children's names or even read Dr. Seuss books

"About half of these people," he continued, "can't write their full address or fill in a credit application or understand a consumer consent form or read most of the mail that is delivered to their door."

A SECOND MEAUSRE of the distance between official Washington and Michael Fox's literacy group can be perceived from the fact that since 1980 none of the group's operating funds have come from a government agency. (Before that it got some money under the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act.) Last year 63 percent of its $50,000 budget came from private for concerns such as the city's gas utility and 15 percent from tuition paid by students.

Despite the lack of official support, however, Push Literacy Action Now, with the help of about 50 volunteers, is helping hundreds of Washingtonians each year improve their reading ability.

"In the last few years we have worked with more than 3,000 students, 80 percent of whom stayed with us for more than six months, Fox said. "The majority are between 20 and 35, predominantly black, and with four hours of training a week we can usually raise a student's reading ability by 1.5 to 2 grade levels in one year.

Fox, originally from Syracuse, began teaching reading to adults as a volunteer while finishing a degree at Syracuse University in the mid-1960s after a four-year hitch as a teaches two four-hour classes a week, tutors students individually and is involved in such related chores as job placement.

The Fox method of teaching people to read has attracted national attention partly because of its success rate. Fox says that a higher percentage of students stick with the course than the national average for most other literacy programs.

UNLIKE MOST METHODS, in which students typically are provided individual instructors, most students in Fox's program are grouped in small classes.

Fox says more progress can be made with small groups. "We have found it works well because the students understand they aren't freaks and because they are able to encourage each other, help each other, cor-

Meantime, Fox also has become something of a national spokesman for adult literacy programs through a monthly news letter, The Leader, that he publishes. It goes out to about 2,000 interested organizations and individuals all over the United

But because he believes that his program is reaching less than 5 per-cent of the residents of the District of Columbia who cannot read, he has begun a broad effort to help the city's functionally illiterate popula-tion understand the world about

This year, for example, through Project Word Watch, he has been helping the Chesapeake and Poto-mac Telephone Company re-write all its consumer materials in a simplified form.

Historical records go 'high-tech'

By TAMARA JONES Associated Press Writer

HAMBURG, West Germany -Tourist-hungry Hamburg is offering some high-tech help to those who want to trace their roots among the millions of North Europeans who set sail for the New World between 1850

Housed in the polished former officers' mess of the 79-year-old steamship Werner at the Museum of Hamburg History, the fledgling Historic Emigration Office boasts the only complete historical record of Northern European emigration for that period.

The names, villages, occupations and vital statistics of about 5 million emigrants were recently transferred from the original 36 crumbling volumes in the state archives to 274 microfilm files. For a fee starting at 75 marks ($30) curious descendants can pinpoint not only the day a relative left Hamburg, but the name of the ship, its captain and port of destination.

The service has enjoyed such overwhelming success since it began in April that the waiting list is now three or four months long, said Bernd Nehls, one of the office's two part-time researchers.

More than 1,000 applications have .

been processed so far, both by mail and in person, Nehls said in an inter-While the majority are Americans, several Australians, New Zealanders, Guatemalans, Chileans and Germans have also written or come by, he "What we're trying to do is attract tourists to Hamburg by offering to help trace their roots. We've already had people visit the city solely for that reason. Others are visiting the area anyway and just drop by. During the mid-1800s, economic and social conditions forced countless hopeful emigrants to swarm Europe's largest harbors - Hamburg and Bremen in Germany, Le Havre in France; Antwerp, Belgium, and Rotterdam, Netherlands - to make the journey westward across the Atlantic.

Because people often had to wait weeks for a ticket on a trans-Atlantic ship, the docks became fertile ground for thieves and con men, promptinHamburg to pass an Emigrant Protection Law in 1855.

Among other things, the law required booking agents to give authorities a list of all ship passengers, complete with names, sex, age, occupation, hometown and depen-

"The idea was to hinder unsavory characters like pickpockets from getting aboard," Nehls said.

As a result, Hamburg now lays claim to what a brochure touts as a "unique collection of emigrant data in Europe.

The meticulous data has wrought a few surprises.

'We found out that one woman had made herself younger when she reached America, and someone else learned that a forefather came over from Prussia with seven children, not four - the rest must have been black sheep," Nehls said.

'A woman who came here from Hemet, Calif., a few weeks ago found herself on the lists," Nehls said. "Her family had emigrated when she was an infant.

Another woman "was moved to tears when she found the name of a grandfather who died before she as born. He had escaped Poland during a time of Jewish pogroms by the Russians," he said.

The Emigration Office can only research up to 1914 because of the likelihood that people who emigrated later are still alive, making information about them confidential under West German privacy laws. Applicants must provide the emigrant's name and the probable year of departure. If the year can't be narrowed down, the Emigration Office will research any number of years for an extra fee of 25 marks ($10) for each year.

If the application provides suffi-cient clues, Nehls said, the microfilm hunt takes only an hour or two.

But when someone comes along looking for a long-lost relative with a common name like Schmidt and no departure date, "we just fall apart," Nehls said.

"Something like that is going to take a day or two. The problem is that the lists were made up not alphabetically, but in the order people were standing in line.'

The office's success rate is about 50 percent, Nehls said, "and it's as disappointing to us as to the client when we can't find someone's name on the lists."
