More sanctions

Colombia's Foreign Minister Rodrigo Pardo reacts to the U.S. decision to cut off most aid for not doing enough to fight drug trafficking, at Bogota's presidential palace Friday. Official estimates indicated that President Clinton's decision could affect almost $1.5 billion in loan requests Colombia has made to international lending institutions.

Zoo's bacteria

DENVER — When Taina Vitt took her 6-year-old son Coleton to the Denver Zoo to see the Komodo dragons, he got almost close enough to touch the lizards — and close enough to contract salmonella. Within three days, Coleton developed bloody diarrhea, vomiting and a 104-degree fever. He apparently had grabbed some straw from the pen of one of the four reptiles. "There was a time I didn't think he'd live, he was so badly dehydrated," his mother said. The boy was among 50 people stricken with a rare, particularly virulent type of salmonella bacteria after visiting the Denver Zoo exhibit during five days in January.

MIAMI — Leaders of a Cuban exile flotilla pledged to stay in international airspace and waters when they commemorate the deaths Saturday of four people shot down by Cuban fighter planes. # Peru's worst jetliner crash kills all aboard

Two Americans were among the 123 people who died when plane crashed into hillside five miles away from its destination Thursday night.

Associated Press

AREQUIPA, Peru — Hundreds of somber relatives watched from a ridge Friday as firemen lined up rows of bodies at the bottom of an Andean hillside where a fiery plane crash killed 123 people.

The Peruvian domestic airliner burst into flames and exploded, breaking into small pieces, when it went down Thursday night five miles from Arequipa.

Bodies and body parts were scattered across the dusty hillside. A man wearing pinstriped pants lay next to pieces of the fuselage, flames flickering from his torso.

A black singed area of dirt marked the point of impact. The largest intact piece of the plane was its tail, which still bore the red-and-white logo of Faucett Airlines. Nearby, an undamaged ceramic coffee cup lay among litter from the plane's kitchen.

Fifty-one foreigners, including two Americans, were among the 123 people aboard the flight to Tacna with a stop in Arequipa, Peru's second-largest city. Transportation Minister Manuel Vara Ochoa said 103 bodies were recovered by noon, but that everyone aboard was dead.

At the morgue in Arequipa, about 500 people stood in silence outside the building's chain-link fence, while grieving family members wept inside. Coffins of various sizes were stacked three high in the yard.

MHS to name new head football coach today at conference

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Apparently, the search for a new head football coach at Midland High is over.

The Midland Independent School District has called for a press conference at noon today in the board room of the Administration building at 615 W. Missouri Ave. for the purpose of naming a new head football coach for MHS, a position vacated in January by Ronnie Reeger, who has since become an assistant coach under John Parchman at Midland Lee.

The MISD search committee would not release the name of the individual who will be the new man in purple.

"Since the board has not officially announced that move, it is not for us to say," said Tom Holland, MISD personnel director and head of the MISD search committee.

Holland said early Friday morning that the committee had scheduled three interviews for the day, but would not say who the three interviews were with.

However, it is known that David Browning, the current head coach and athletic coordinator of Corpus Christi King, was in town Friday. It is not known if the other two interviews took place.

One MISD employee, who wished to remain anonymous told the Reporter-Telegram Friday, "David (Browning) is the man."

2 Dems seek justice-of-the-peace nomination

Editor's note: This is the sixth part in a series on candidates in contested races in the March 12 primaries.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Two Midland men are vying for the Democratic slot in the race for Precinct 3 justice of the peace in the March 12 primary.

The winner in the Lon Dominguez and Michael Wallace race will face Republican incumbent Keith Jobe in the November election.

Dominguez is an assistant fire marshal with the Midland Fire Department and has been a resident of this city for 25 years.

Dominguez credits his service in the department with giving him experience in working with the public. He is called upon to make decisions regarding code enforcement that effect people's lives, just as justices of the peace are called upon to make hard decisions.

As a certified peace officer, Dominguez is familiar with the laws, although it is not a prerequisite for service as a justice. "It is an asset to have knowledge of the law," he said.

"I sincerely feel that this position requires the varied background in law enforcement and public service that I can bring to it," Dominguez said. "I intend to be firm, but fair."

"I want to make a commitment to the citizens of Midland, as I have done in the past, to be available and accessible to their needs," he said.

Dominguez is married and has three children.

Also interested in fairness is Wallace, who vows to administer the duties of that position in a fair

South African president announces health troubles after much denial

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — After repeated denials of any health problems, President Nelson Mandela hinted for the first time Friday that something may be wrong.

He told reporters that he visited a cardiologist Friday morning and would undergo further tests.

The rumors that Mandela was ill, perhaps with a heart problem, began after he opened Parliament on Feb. 9. One source of the rumors was a reporter who saw an ambulance outside the parliament building and thought it was for the president; instead, it had arrived to tend to a security officer.

The rumors have helped cause South African currency, the rand, to plummet in value three times.

"Before they give me a clean bill of health, they still want to do some further tests," said Mandela, who turns 78 in July. He said the tests would take place sometime after his three-day trip to Mali and Togo in West Africa that begins Saturday, and results would be announced publicly.

Mandela is considered crucial to South Africa's success after apartheid, especially by foreign investors who fear instability without his pragmatic leadership. He has said he will not seek re-election when his five-year term ends in 1999.

Mandela and his office have persistently denied any health problems in recent weeks.

He looked and acted as usual Friday, walking stiffly and joking with reporters. There was no indication of any changes to his schedule.

"Feelings can be superficial, but ... I feel on top of the world," he said, adding that the further tests followed by a clean bill of health might finally end the persistent rumors.

Mandela has kept up a busy schedule in recent weeks, including the delivery of his annual address opening Parliament and hosting visiting dignitaries such as Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland and Danish Queen Margrethe.

He also continued his regular schedule of Cabinet meetings, holding talks with other political leaders and making visits around the country. He flew to neighboring Swaziland on Friday to see King Mswati III, who is under pressure to embark on democratic reform.

Mandela's entourage to Mali and Togo would include a physician, his staff said this week.

By far the most popular figure in the country, Mandela holds near-mythic stature as president.

Whites who dismiss other leaders in Mandela's African National Congress as radicals embrace Mandela because of his calls for racial reconciliation.

China says no to speculation in futures market

BEIJING (AP) — In an attempt to further regulate the fledgling and once-chaotic futures market, the Chinese government has banned state enterprises from engaging in futures speculation.

State enterprises and government departments will only be allowed to trade futures securities for protection against financial risk. Friday's order from the Securities Commission said.

In addition, state enterprises and government departments must provide documents showing that they have been approved by the administration or board of directors of futures exchanges before they can trade futures.

Futures exchanges and brokerages face fines or suspension of operations if they violate the ban. The notice also prohibits all financial institutions from conducting commodities futures trading themselves or for clients.

Futures are contracts to buy or sell securities at set prices on set dates in the future. They generally are traded to hedge against future price movements in commodities, currency and other investments. But the market also is used by speculators betting on price swings.

The new rules are a further attempt to standardize China's 6-year-old futures market.

Russia's Finance Minister proposes increase in tariffs

MOSCOW (NYT)—Contradicting assurances made to the International Monetary Fund only a week ago, Russia's Finance Minister has proposed a broad increase in import tariffs.

The plan, which would raise tariffs by an average of 20 percent, appears intended to boost the political fortunes of President Boris Yeltsin by raising revenue for new social spending. It could also placate angry farmers and industrialists hurt by foreign competition.

But in trying to soothe a disgruntled electorate, Russian officials have alarmed the IMF, which has promised to lend Russia $10.2 billion on the condition that it continues market reforms and reduces trade barriers.

A senior IMF official warned Friday night that if it carried out the plan, Russia could jeopardize the loan, which Michel Camdessus, the fund's managing director, described as necessary to insure that economic reforms were "irreversible."

Perplexed Western officials said Friday that the Finance Ministry plan might be a sign of disarray in the government, with some Russian officials pushing ways to increase spending while others make commitments to Western bankers.

Alternatively, the plan could reflect Moscow's calculation that the IMF is so determined to help Yeltsin's re-election that it will loosen its requirements. Less than four months before Russia's presidential elections, polls show the Communist candidate, Gennadi Zyuganov, with a clear lead.

In any case, the plan for broad tariff increases runs directly counter to promises made to the fund.

In a confidential statement on economic policy, which Russia provided to the fund, the government promised to reduce the average tariff by 1998. Russia also pledged that the average tariff would not be increased before then, according to Western officials.

With Communists promising to protect domestic producers, Yeltsin is under pressure to adopt more protectionist policies before the election.

Farmers, for instance, have complained that much of the food sold in Russia is imported. And last week, the government responded to the concerns of Russian poultry producers, whose sales have declined by 40 percent, by threatening to ban U.S. poultry exports as of March 19, ostensibly because of concerns over the levels of chemicals and bacteria in American chickens.

That move, which would block more than $500 million in annual sales by American companies, has provoked sharp protests from Washington. Concern in Western capitals has risen further in recent days as senior Russian officials have talked of even broader protectionist measures.

Vladimir Panskov, Russia's Finance Minister, sparked the worries by saying on Thursday that his ministry "has proposed to the government that it raise import tariffs by an average of 20 percent."

Also on Thursday, Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin added his voice to the growing protectionist choir, though without endorsing specific tariff rates. "A range of protectionist measures will be introduced in the field of foreign trade," Chernomyrdin said.

The United States and the European Community have warned that tariff increases could jeopardize Russia's bid for membership in the organization, which is dedicated to free trade.

"Raising tariffs would be a step back from liberalization and would likely prove an ineffective means of strengthening Russian industry, as protectionist measures have proved elsewhere in the world," said Charles Blitzer of the World Bank's Moscow office.

Princess Diana's former lover to tell all on national television

LONDON (AP) — The end of the royal marriage is shaping up to be a royal pain.

Princess Diana may be freeing herself of Prince Charles, but not of her trouble with men: Her former lover is reportedly offering to tell all about their romantic affair on television.

Charles flew off to Switzerland on Friday, leaving his lawyers to handle a nasty wrangle with Diana over the terms of their divorce.

A dispirited Diana skipped her gym session Friday, disappointing the pack of photographers waiting outside, and remained at home in Kensington Palace.

"The princess has nothing planned but may see friends or talk to friends on the telephone," said her spokeswoman Jane Atkinson. "She is fine in the circumstances and is hoping to pick up on her public engagements next week."

In addition to the divorce, Diana faced man trouble on a second front. The Sun newspaper said a TV team is hawking a tell-all interview with her former lover James Hewitt — ex-riding instructor and current social outcast.

The newspaper said Hewitt and Anna Pasternak, who wrote a book about the affair in 1994, hope to negotiate a broadcast deal.

The man whom Diana said she "adored" answers Ms. Pasternak's questions "on every aspect of the affair," The Sun said.

"Mr. Hewitt is very frank, honest and candid about their physical relationship in the same way as the princess was" in her television interview, Ms. Pasternak was quoted as saying.

Sky Television's news chief Ian Cook said the network was aware of the Hewitt interview "but has rejected the program and will not be screening it any shape or form."

But Nick Ferrari, head of programming at Live TV, a London cable channel, said he was ready to offer a six-figure sum. "We are not moral guardians or censors. Our job is to entertain and inform," Ferrari said.

When Diana announced Wednesday that she had accepted a divorce, her office said she had agreed to a number of terms: her future title would be Diana, Princess of Wales; she could keep her Kensington Palace apartment and offices at St. James's Palace; and she would continue to be fully involved in the upbringing of the couple's sons, 13-year-old William, who is second in line for the throne, and 11-year-old Harry.

Queen Elizabeth II was "interested" to hear Diana's decision, Buckingham Palace said, but it insisted nothing had been settled apart from an agreement to divorce.

Heavy rain also fell to the north in Georgia, with 1.38 inches at Macon and 0.72 of an inch at Lafayette.

Overnight into today, scattered rain also was likely from southern Mississippi through North Carolina.

A disturbance moving northward along the East Coast was expected to spread snow overnight across parts of Virginia and continue moving toward the northeast.

A total snow accumulation of 1 to 3 inches was possible in Virginia by Sunday, with as much as 4 inches threatened along the coast of New England.

In the north, areas of snow and gusty wind developed in Montana, Wyoming and northern Colorado as a new Arctic front moved across the region.

Light snow was expected in the Great Lakes region, with 1 to 3 inches possible during the night in northern Michigan.

The rain in the Southeast came after a February that was the driest on record at Hollywood, Fla., with only 0.58 of an inch of rain during the month.

At the opposite extreme, it was the wettest February on record in parts of flood-soaked Oregon, with 10.03 inches over the month in Portland, 13.01 inches at Salem and 16.89 inches at Eugene.

Friday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 16 below zero at Eveleth, Minn., to an early afternoon reading of 84 at Miami. The lowest wind chill, the rating that combines temperature and wind speed, was 26 below zero at Devil's Lake, N.D., and Ely, Nev.

Putting records in electronic format could generate new revenues

By Mella McEwen

Staff Writer

The Texas Railroad Commission's high-tech data project could mean high finance for the state.

Commission member Charles Matthews said Friday that converting 130 million hard-copy records into an electronic format could generate an estimated $233 million in new revenues for the state each year.

"If you say that an oil or gas well, over its economic life, produces $2 million in gross dollars (and) if we're able to do what needs to be done to digitize these records, it would cost less than $10 million," Matthews said in a phone interview from his Austin office. "If those records help find five new oil wells, we've done something."

"There are 68,000 fields in the state of Texas and if we can find new wells in 10 percent of those fields, or 20 percent, we're talking hundreds and hundreds of wells and a lot of economic dollars. Imagine what it will do for local taxing entities — school districts, counties."

Matthews said he plans to present the project to the other two commissioners, Barry Williamson and Carole Keeton Rylander, next week. The commission will then look for ways to fund the project, which he said could take three to four years.

The first phase could be in place in 12 months with 30 million hard-copy records available in digital form, he said.

The records would then be available on computers in the commission's district offices in Midland, Abilene, Corpus Christi, Houston, Pampa, San Angelo, San Antonio, Wichita Falls and Kilgore and, later remote via computer modem or the Internet.

Matthews said he began talking about this project over a year ago and, not wanting to use any state funds, asked the Gas Research Institute to fund a study on converting the commission's records. The GRI contracted with the Radian Corp., which performed the study, identified the most important information, what needed to be done and what the costs could be.

"Dr. Bill Fisher, head of the Bureau of Economic Geology, has said he believes most of the fields in Texas have been discovered and that we will find few new fields. Most of our discoveries over the next 30-50 years will be in existing fields. If he's correct, these old records will be worth more than they've ever been worth in the history of our state," Matthews said.

For example, "our W-2 forms where operators report well completions and recompletions — that information indicates wellbore depths, geological formations and which parts are open to the wellbore. Recompletions can identify new completion zones. That information is necessary to identify formations being drained, information not now available to someone except perhaps through a data service."

"If that person had the opportunity to pull that information up on a computer there in the Midland office, that information could be extremely valuable."

Matthews pointed out that the information's value extends to protecting the environment. He said the environmental community is taking a look at the project, which could help the commission's Oil Field Cleanup Program, providing data on groundwater protection and site assessment projects.

"Everyone sees the benefit, and the payback will come not only to oil and gas producers but to ordinary consumers and the state of Texas and, ultimately, the whole country as it lets us reduce our dependency on oil imports."

NAME: MHS to announce new head football coach

(From 1A)

Browning, once an offensive line coach at Midland Lee under Spike Dykes in the early '80s, also has been an assistant coach at Texas A&I (A&M Kingsville), Appalachian State and Oklahoma State.

Browning was an applicant for the Midland High head coaching job when Reeger was given that position four years ago. He was also a candidate for the Midland Lee position that went to Parchman last year. However, he was not one of the original 32 applicants in the first posting of the position when Reeger resigned.

Judging from the MISD release, the school board is prepared to confirm the search committee's nomination today.

The search committee reopened the position for applications a little over a week ago after failing to find a head coach to succeed Reeger. The original application list numbered 32. Five were chosen as finalists.

Jim Ledford, an assistant coach at Lake Highlands, dropped his name from that list to become the head coach at Class 3A Madisoville. Randy Quisenberry, an assistant coach at Odessa Permian and a former assistant at Midland High and Lee, also dropped out of the race, leaving Jim Carson, head coach at El Paso Socorro; Jim Edwards, an assistant coach at Midland High; and Mike Unger, head coach at Kingwood.

"We had some good coaches on that list," Holland said, "but when Quisenberry dropped out, we quickly began to get the feeling that we were going to have to re-post the position."

The search committee had scheduled an on-site interview with Carson in El Paso. On the same day that interview was taking place, Holland made a visit to Artesia, N.M., to see Cooper Henderson, a coach who had been recommended to the search committee by Mike Ford, a member of the local Committee on Excellence (COE) at Midland High. Several members of the COE accompanied Holland to Artesia that day.

That created a stir in coaching and private sectors across the state. The perception grew that Carson had been thrown out while they were still asking him to stay in the race and that the committee was conducting interviews without the position ever being reopened. Some felt that the COE was exerting the force and the power behind the coaching search.

"At that point, we felt the position would be re-posted," Holland said. "We felt like time was of the essence, and if we reopened, we wanted to make sure there would be some quality candidates for the position."

"I had heard about Henderson (apparently from the COE) and I called the superintendent (Joseph Barresi) and told him I should make a trip to Artesia. The superintendent thought it would be a good idea and said it would be OK to take some of the committee (COE) members with me to let them feel they were involved."

"They came with me at my request. I did 95 percent of the talking."

Henderson dropped out of the race for the MHS position earlier this week. Ford said that the controversy surrounding the interview was a factor in his decision to withdraw.

Tim Whalen, Midland athletic director who is also on the search committee, said that Henderson had other family reasons to stay where he is and "recognized that controversy can occur in these types of searches."

"I don't think Cooper wanted to subject his family to this kind of controversy. I think it was a factor, maybe not the only one, but a factor in his pulling out," Ford said.

The COE feels that a bad light was cast on its group from the incident. The incident probably would never have come to light if the meeting with Henderson hadn't taken place on the same day as the Carson on-site interview. That's when public perception of the event began to take a turn for the worse.

"We've never done anything but work with the search committee," said COE member Gary McCright. "We even asked them if we were in the way to tell us and we would step back. We were invited to make the trip to Artesia and we served as hosts on his visit to Midland. We're also all (football) booster club members. When they were searching for a head football coach at Lee, they had booster club members show the visiting coaches the facilities and the town. That's all we've done. All we want is a good football coach for Midland High."

The position for a head coach at MHS was reopened on Feb. 21, the day after the Carson interview. Holland said that 16 applications were received by the 5 p.m. reopening deadline Thursday.

It is also known that the search committee contacted and talked with additional coaches not on the list of 16 applicants.

The following is a list of the 16 applicants after the Feb. 21 reopening, which was released Friday by MISD:

- David Bourquin, head coach and athletic director, Weatherford.
- David Browning, head coach and athletic coordinator, Corpus Christi King.
- Robert Christmas, head coach, Jefferson Forest.
- Steve Gunther, head coach, Smithville (94-95).
- Ronald Hedtke, offensive coordinator, United South High.
- Bill Henry, defensive coordinator, Amarillo Tascosa.
- Billy Mitchell, defensive coach, Lewisville.
- Valton Osborne, offensive coordinator, Irving.
- Don Payne, assistant coach, North Mesquite.
- Larry Peel, head coach, athletic director, Ingleside.
- Also, former Abilene Cooper head coach and assistant coach at both MHS and Lee.
- Dave Perini, head coach, Carlsbad, N.M.
- Paul Talbert, head coach, Wall.
- Rodford Taylor, head coach, athletic director, Madison, and an applicant on the original 32.
- John Tyree, head coach, Riverside, Calif.
- Kendall Wheaton, head coach and athletic director, Annapolis, Ark.
- Mark Wilson, offensive coordinator, Abilene Christian.

EXPLODE: Crash kills everyone on board

(From 1A)

"How can any of us ever get on an airplane again?" asked Millie Juarez of Tacna, who lost several friends in the crash. "They tell us they check everything, and then you close your eyes and when you open them again, part of your life is gone."

At the Arequipa airport, family members scuffled with each other, with photographers and with police, angry that they were prevented from examining the bodies. As an official read from a list of the dead, a woman shrieked and began to shake violently. Two others held her as they, too, gasped for air.

As word spread of the crash, the relatives and friends hiked to the barren, rocky site two miles from a highway to watch the firemen, dressed in orange jumpsuits, work from several hundred feet away. Most of them stood in silence. Some wept quietly.

Thousands of onlookers joined them, most drawn by curiosity, although in previous Andean plane crashes there has been looting. Rescue workers complained that spectators' cars blocked the road and made it hard for emergency vehicles to get to the crash.

More than 500 police and soldiers surrounded the area to prevent anyone from approaching the crash site.

Back at the airport, 250 mourners marched with an Andean brass band playing dirges. The mourners carried the flags of South American nations in memory of the foreigners killed in the crash. Several priests marched with them.

"When people spill their blood on our land, they are our family," said Flora Quispe, who said she had neither friends nor relatives among the dead.

Workers found the plane's flight data recorders, and officials wouldn't speculate on the cause of the crash until they are analyzed.

But an official at the Lima airport, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the crew of an Aeroperu commercial flight reported seeing the Faucett jet flying in flames. Local residents said they heard the plane explode on impact.

Lt. Col. Marco Velasquez, spokesman for the air force, could not confirm that report.

Flight 251 left Lima at 7: 10 p.m. and was due to arrive in Arequipa, 465 miles away, at 8: 15 p.m. The crew was last heard from at 8: 10 p.m., and "everything was normal," Faucett spokesman Jorge D'Acunha said in Lima.

The weather was foggy at the time of the crash, but that had not stopped other flights from taking off or landing at Arequipa.

In addition to the 66 Peruvian passengers and six crew members, Faucett Airlines listed 51 foreign passengers, mostly Chileans. Others were from Canada, Bolivia, Belgium, Brazil, Argentina and Mexico.

But the Canadian Embassy said two passengers identified as Canadian were actually Peruvians who had bought tickets in Canada.

Authorities also said the plane carried two Americans: Lynn Davidson, 42, a Baptist missionary from Santa Fe, N.M., and Juan Lorenzo DeSzyzlo, who had dual U.S.-Peruvian citizenship and whose hometown and age were not known.

Mrs. Davidson, a mother of three, was returning to her home in Arequipa from a missionary team meeting in Lima, according to Mark Kelly, a spokesman for the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board in Richmond, Va.

Mrs. Davidson and her husband, Dennis, had been missionaries in Peru since 1988.

The crash was the deadliest in Peru's history, surpassing a Dec. 24, 1971 crash near the jungle city of Pucallpa in which 91 people died.

Residents mark death of little known soldier

SAN ANGELO (AP) — San Angelo barely knew 19-year-old Army Pvt. Tracie Joy McBride. But its residents still grieve over what happened to her.

About 150 soldiers paid their respects to the slain soldier at Goodfellow Air Force Base on Friday, the day before the one-year anniversary of the discovery of her body near a bridge, 22 miles north of San Angelo.

Miss McBride had been at the base little more than a week when she was abducted from a base laundry room on Feb. 18, 1995. Louis Jones held her captive in his San Angelo home for several hours before beating her to death with a tire iron and then dumping her body in Coke County.

A jury found Jones guilty in October and sentenced him to die. But that brought little solace to a community that once thought itself too small, too friendly, too West Texas to be the site of something so horrific.

"It has been a year of change, of personal growth and of a search for justice against those who take life so thoughtlessly," said Army Capt. Kelly Snyder, Miss McBride's company commander for just nine days before the abduction.

At a memorial ceremony for McBride Friday at the base, those who knew her said their pain remains.

"I think for those of us who are still here, it's gotten a little bit easier but not all that much," said Col. James Faust, who commands Goodfellow's Army battalion. "It's hard to get over a loss like this."

Goodfellow's flags flew at half-staff all day. During the memorial ceremony, soldiers stood at attention as a flag was raised, then lowered and folded. It was to be sent to Miss McBride's parents, Jim and Irene McBride, in Centerville, Minn.

"I think the healing is never finished," Mrs. McBride told the San Angelo Standard-Times from the family's home.

One of the issues Miss McBride's death highlighted was domestic violence. A criminal complaint filed by Jones's ex-wife, who said he raped and beat her two nights before Miss McBride's abduction, broke open the case.

Valerie Tillery, program director at a San Angelo family shelter, said counseling was once an option for Jones. He was encouraged to attend the shelter's anger management classes before the breakup with his wife.

Jones never contacted the shelter, Tillery said.

Midland County Sheriff's Department seizes crack cocaine, valued at $2,500 in an early-morning drug bust, Friday.

Sheriff's Department arrests nine in drug bust

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

Nine people were arrested and crack cocaine, valued at $2,500, was seized after an early-morning drug bust by the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Authorities also seized a pistol, marijuana, a bong, a crack pipe and $2,000 in cash that Sheriff Gary Painter said was used in drug deals.

The arrests and seizures were a result of a six-month investigation. Drug deals made by undercover agents led to 14 warrants for the delivery of drugs. Of those 14 warrants, six suspects were found and arrested in Friday's drug raid.

Authorities also had five search warrants for which they were able to make three more arrests on charges of possession of cocaine.

"Drugs lead to several crimes and taking these people and drugs off the street reduces crime," Painter said.

Most of the suspects were arrested on charges of selling or possession of cocaine; only a small amount of marijuana was found, Painter said.

The Midland and Reeves counties sheriff's departments and the Pecos Police Department began the arrests and seizures at 6 a.m. Friday.

The following were arrested during Friday's drug raid: David Hill, 34, of 500 N. Colorado St., charged with possession of cocaine; Ramesha Brewer, 20, of 1202 E. Hickory Ave., charged with possession of cocaine; Charlotte Kay Smith, 32, of 1203 E. Oak Ave., charged with possession of cocaine; Vicki Coleman, 39, of 1100 E. Oak Ave., charged with delivery of drugs; Patricia Cooks, 39, of 1105 N. Carrizo St., charged with delivery of drugs; Andre Gill, 21, of 1308 E. Chestnut Ave., charged with delivery of cocaine; Kenneth Phillips, 31, of 1505 N. Main St., charged with delivery of drugs; David Polk, 26, of 940 N. Weatherford St., charged with delivery of drugs and burglary; and Angela Williams, 28, of 1110 E. Chestnut Ave., charged with parole violation.

All of the suspects are in custody except Gill, who was released on a $3,500 bond.

Bond amounts have not been set for the other suspects.

Police look for bus-stop rapist

McALLEN (AP) — Police Friday were looking for a man accused of raping five Mexican women after offering them rides from city bus stops.

The women, all in their 30s, accepted rides from a man at a stop near Interstate 83 and the downtown Valley Transit Bus Station in January and February, Hidalgo County sheriff's deputies said.

The man then took each woman to a rural area and sexually assaulted them, authorities said.

Deputies would not provide details on the rapes, locations of the crimes or identities of the women, saying the cases were under investigation.

Valley Transit buses make an estimated 20 stops in McAllen and run about every hour to Brownsville, Harlingen and Reynosa, Mexico, said company supervisor Oscar Cepeda.

Cepeda said he was unaware of the rapes.

"I haven't heard about this, but there obviously is concern for people waiting at bus stops," Cepeda said. "Especially for women who are waiting alone."

The problem is heightened by the fact that many women, particularly those from Reynosa, pay for rides in so-called bandit taxis or accept free rides across the border.

"The buses are often late," Iris Navarro, a Reynosa resident waiting at a bus stop Thursday afternoon, told The (McAllen) Monitor. "When the buses are late, that's when I start thinking about trying to find a ride."

The "bandit taxis," driven by unlicensed taxi drivers, cost the same as buses, Navarro said.

Other women said accepting rides might be risky, but they felt there was little choice.

Serbs make new home in former Muslim massacre site

SREBRENICA, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — To Rajko Brajic, a Bosnian Serb refugee, Srebrenica has an eerie feel. "It stinks of death," he says. "And it simply won't go away."

The Serbs killed thousands of Muslims in the U.N. "safe area" of Srebrenica last summer, and drove the rest away. The destroyed city and suspected mass graves in the area, believed to hold up to 7,000 Muslims, have become the symbol of the worst Muslim suffering of Bosnia's war.

Now, thousands of Bosnian Serbs fleeing Sarajevo suburbs that are being turned over to the Muslim-Croat federation are settling into former Muslim homes in Srebrenica, trying to bring life back to this city of the dead.

But for some Serbs, the task is impossible. Bosnia's worst killing field, scene of the most vitriolic of the war's many hatreds, is haunted by ghosts they cannot ignore.

"We all know that thousands of Muslims were massacred here," Brajic, 47, said in a half-voice, looking around so no other Serb would hear him. "But we don't talk about it. It's a taboo."

Brajic sat in a small apartment in a four-story, drab socialist-style block.

"Most of us have a feeling of guilt as we move into places whose owners are probably dead," he said. "But we had no choice — either here, or out in the open."

Srebrenica (pronounced SREB-re-nee-tuh) had about 6,000 inhabitants before the Bosnian war broke out in 1992. By the time Serb rebels seized it last July, its population had swelled to more than 30,000.

It is an ancient town whose silver mines — "srebro" in the local language means "silver" — gave it its name. Chunks of ramparts from the Middle Ages still stand.

Today, the town's life has a medieval quality once again.

Huge mountains of garbage — dishes, furniture and everything else rampaging Serb soldiers tossed out of Muslim apartments last summer — make the main street almost impassable.

Despite freezing temperatures, the stench of decomposing garbage is so overpowering that many people hold handkerchiefs over their mouths and noses. Stray dogs scavenge the dirt, looking for food. At night, huge rats take their place.

"This makes you close your eyes and bang your head against the wall," said Jovka Miric, a school teacher who fled the Sarajevo suburb of Ilijas with her two little girls. Her husband was killed in battle during the war.

"If someone doesn't remove this garbage soon, we'll all die of some epidemic," she said, sobbing.

The family now lives in the drab apartment block, where the heavy wallpaper is peeling off the walls.

"Whoever on earth wanted to capture this doomed city in the first place must have been crazy," she said.

She acknowledged the irony of the city's destruction.

"Our life in this place is like God's revenge for what our boys did here," she said.

Outside Miric's apartment, in pitch dark corridors, Serbs moving into neighboring apartments collided with each other, arguing as they tried to squeeze through with washing machines and refrigerators.

"I don't know why we're doing all this when we have no electricity or water," said Mica Grbic, carrying an electric stove on his back. "I should have trashed all this."

Grbic and other Serbs settling in Srebrenica said that in addition to the catastrophic despair hanging over the city, the crime rate is soaring, with looters robbing the new settlers or even killing each other over booty or still empty apartments.

With an irony that only twists the knife of Srebrenica's pain one turn deeper, the main street is still named after Marshal Josip Broz Tito, the Communist strongman who ruled unquestioned over the many peoples of the old Yugoslavia for 35 years.

Border closings bring West Bank to a halt: Workers struggle to earn

JERUSALEM (AP) — The closure of the West Bank and Gaza Strip didn't stop Jamil Abdel Khader from sneaking into Israel to look for work.

The 56-year-old Palestinian from the West Bank village of Yata shared a taxi for most of the 40 miles to Jerusalem, then hiked the last three through the hills around the city.

"Whenever I saw a roadblock, I went another way," he said.

Like hundreds of Palestinians desperate to make a living, he risked a night in jail and $150 in fines — equal to six days of wages — to find work. On Thursday, Abdel Khader waited along Jerusalem's No. 1 road, an area known as a "slave market."

On a normal day, hundreds of Palestinians from the West Bank wait there for Israeli contractors to pull up and offer them work. But in the days following Sunday's two suicide bombings by Muslim militants, just a handful of workers made it through.

Israeli soldiers were out in force, patrolling the back roads on which Palestinian workers usually enter.

Eighteen Palestinians were caught at a surprise checkpoint on a road between the West Bank village of Jabal Mukaber and Jerusalem.

"It is better if they slit our throats," said Khaled Shekerat, 26, who has been caught twice before. A construction worker, Shekerat has to provide for a wife and two young children and said he has no choice but to take the daily risk.

Israel has sealed the West Bank and Gaza 14 times — for a total of 79 days — since the start of Palestinian autonomy in May 1994. The Gaza Strip alone was sealed for another 18 days.

Each day the borders are closed, the Palestinian economy is prevented from generating $2 million in wages and $2 million in exports. Arafat has complained that the cost of the closures has wiped out the benefits of foreign aid.

Cuban exile flotilla expecting rough seas for comrades remembrance

MIAMI (AP) — Leaders of a Cuban exile flotilla pledged to stay in international airspace and waters when they commemorate the deaths Saturday of four people shot down by Cuban fighter planes.

"Anybody who deviates, we consider them a provocateur," said Jose Basulto, head of the Cuban-exile search-and-rescue group Brothers to the Rescue.

Thirteen airplanes and 13 boats were to head for the spot where two Brothers to the Rescue aircraft were downed by Cuban MiGs last Saturday.

But they faced literal rough water: Saturday's forecast was for 6- to 7-foot seas, possibly increasing to 9 feet, and 23 mph winds, with thunderstorms that could produce 40 mph gusts. Small boats were cautioned to avoid open seas.

"It's a moderate-to-high risk," National Weather Service forecaster Jim Lushine said. "I myself would think twice about going out in those conditions."

Participants on the water planned to hold a prayer service and lay floral wreaths at the same time of day the planes were shot down. The air convoy was also to throw flowers on the same spot before heading back to a memorial service at Miami's Orange Bowl.

"We are saying to Castro, 'You are not the hoodlum of the Florida Straits,'" Basulto said. "That message carries through to the island."

As of Friday afternoon, flotilla organizers were still going ahead with plans. None of the boats are smaller than 30 feet, and all will be inspected for their seaworthiness before leaving Key West on Saturday, the Coast Guard said.

The Clinton administration has ordered the Coast Guard to escort the flotilla and cautioned participants not to stray into Cuban territory. And the Cuban government warned that anyone who trespasses risks the same fate as the four men who were shot down.

The use of 13 airplanes is significant: Exiles want to commemorate the sinking of a Cuban tugboat, the 13 of March, by Cuban authorities on July 13, 1994. Some 41 people, many of them children, were killed.

The last Cuban-exile flotilla, on Sept. 2, was canceled mid-way when one of the boats sank in bad weather and a man died of a heart attack. Three protesters were injured July 13 in another memorial flotilla when two Cuban gun-boats sideswiped the lead boat, which had crossed into Cuban waters.

Basulto, the one surviving pilot of last week's mission, said: "Of course I am scared, but I have learned to overcome that fear. There are going to be losses along the way, and I may be just one of them."

Cuba has defended shooting down the planes, saying they strayed into its territory.

Cuban officials also warned that anyone who did it again could face similar retaliation. On Friday, though, Cuban Foreign Minister Roberto Robaina said that Cuba "will act with the utmost restraint to avoid new incidents."

The site of the air and sea service is about 21 miles northwest of Havana, beyond the 12-mile limit of Cuba's territorial waters.

"If people enter Cuban territorial seas without permission, they may place themselves and others at serious personal risk," said

Coast Guard Adm. Roger T. Rufe Jr.

However, the Coast Guard will not forcibly stop boats from going into Cuba's waters, he said.

President Clinton fights war on drugs with Colombian sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton slapped economic sanctions on Colombia Friday, concluding that Colombian authorities had not fully cooperated with the U.S. war on drugs.

Official estimates indicated that the decision could affect almost $1.5 billion in loan requests Colombia has made to international lending institutions. According to federal law, the United States must oppose such requests from countries found not to be fully cooperating in the drug war.

"The decision is unjust," Colombian Foreign Minister Rodrigo Pardo said in Bogota. "We consider unacceptable this intervention in our internal affairs."

Friday's announcement was preceded by a bitter internal debate in which some officials argued that the sanctions package was disproportionate to Colombia's shortcomings in the anti-narcotics campaign.

They contended that weakening the legitimate segment of the Colombian economy would leave the Cali cartel in an even more dominant position than presently exists.

The counter-argument was that the Colombian government — from President Ernesto Samper on down — is substantially corrupt and had not done enough to alter the country's role as the world's leading producer and distributor of cocaine and as a major supplier of heroin and marijuana.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said that in Colombia, 1995 "was a year in which we made no progress compared to where we were a year ago."

Robert Gelbard, the State Department's top anti-crime official, said there were some promising developments in Colombia in 1995, including the arrests of some leading drug chieftains.

"These efforts have been undercut at every turn by a government and a legislature not only plagued by corruption, but which are fostering corruption in order to protect themselves," Gelbard said.

"The Cali traffickers have been running their operations from prison, and the prosecutor general has been the target of a public campaign to undermine and discredit his efforts."

A spokesman for Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, hailed the decision, citing "an avalanche of evidence" incriminating Colombian authorities.

South Carolina Christians choose carefully in primary

COLUMBIA, S.C. (NYT) — For the Christian Coalition, Saturday's Republican presidential primary in South Carolina is a time of soul-searching.

Votes of religious conservatives could decide the election, and all the candidates are angling for their support. In a key test for the movement, members now must decide between the purity of their principles and practical politics.

Ralph Reed, the national director of the Christian Coalition, has been winking in Bob Dole's direction ever since the GOP race began, apparently with the thought that Dole would be the best candidate to take on President Clinton this fall.

But a majority of his organization's members in South Carolina appear to be rallying behind Pat Buchanan, just as Christian Coalition members in other states have done in previous voting.

The conservative Christian community apparently would rather follow their convictions — particularly their opposition to abortion and gay rights — and back a losing cause than compromise, let Reed play power broker in the GOP and possibly win.

"You've got to follow your convictions, and Pat Buchanan says exactly what he means," said Paulette Callander, 26, who traveled the 100 miles from her hometown of Charleston to attend the Christian Coalition's "God and Country" rally here Thursday night.

"He loves God. He loves America. And I've got to support him, no matter what," she added.

Not all the nearly 1,000 Christian Coalition members in attendance were as firmly committed to Buchanan. "He's like the boy in high school who makes your heart go pitter-patter, but you just know he's no good for you," said Colleen Morrow, 45, a social worker in Columbia. She is supporting former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander.

But most of the comments offered by the rallying Christians echoed Callander's. And none of Buchanan's rivals for the GOP nomination got the rousing response that the former television commentator did.

Although Dole brandished three Christian Coalition report cards scoring him 100 percent on the organization's issues, the Senate majority leader got a polite but cool reaction from the audience.

Dole has the endorsement of Gov. David Beasley, himself an evangelical Christian, who has persuaded some local Christian Coalition leaders to back the senator. But most Christian Coalition members are suspicious of Dole's opposition to abortion.

"I have a flawless record of protecting the unborn, and that's not going to change when I become president of the United States," Dole said Thursday night.

Earlier in the day, however, Dole resurrected doubts about his commitment to end abortion rights when, during a debate, he gave a rambling answer to a provocative question from a female reporter.

When the reporter asked if he would be opposed to her getting an abortion if she had become pregnant from a rape, an unsympathetic-sounding Dole replied, "Yes, I would."

Executive bias? White House males make more money

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's gender gap is showing: More men than women are pulling down the fat White House paychecks.

To much chagrin, the salaries of 407 White House employees were mistakenly published in a Senate report — then splashed across the pages of The Washington Times on Friday.

Heads were shaking across the West Wing as staff members compared paychecks. One aide handed out business cards proving she was an "assistant" to the boss and not — as "that list" said — a mere "receptionist."

Though it's an old list, submitted to the Senate last July, it provided a snapshot of White House personnel that underscores a predicament Clinton shares with private employers: Men are often paid better than women.

Of the 21 aides who were earning $125,000 or more, 14 were men. And of the 32 earning $100,000 to $125,000, 20 were men.

"The White House is no different than the rest of society," said public relations executive Sheila Tate, who worked in the Reagan White House. "The truth is, you look at the president and you do not see a lot of professional women surrounding him. His inner circle is generally white Caucasian men. That's an issue that hasn't changed."

The White House declined to release a more up-to-date list. But spokesman Barry Toiv said his internal calculations show that 14 men and eight women currently earn $125,000 or more. Of the 27 people earning $100,000 to $125,000, 17 are men, he said.

"This president by far has the strongest record of any president ever in terms of appointing women to very high-level jobs both in the White House and in the Cabinet," Toiv said.

Women have had high-level roles in Clinton administrations since he entered public life. Most prominent among them is his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, who does not draw a White House salary. A woman, Betsey Wright, was his longtime chief of staff in the Arkansas governor's office.

Three of Clinton's 14 Cabinet members are women and he has won high marks from women's groups for appointing women to the federal courts in far greater percentages than his two Republican predecessors. Laura Tyson heads Clinton's National Economic Council and Alice Rivlin recently was nominated to the Federal Reserve.

But Clinton's inner circle, his most trusted advisers, consists mostly of men.

Tate, who said the problem was no better under Republican presidents, acknowledged it can

White House aide accosted by former pro basketball

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former professional basketball player has been charged with accosting a White House aide at gunpoint and forcing him to withdraw cash from several bank machines.

Charles Vincent "Hawkeye" Whitney, 38, a former North Carolina State star who played two seasons in the National Basketball Association, was arrested Thursday night at District of Columbia Police headquarters and charged with armed robbery.

On the night of Jan. 26, Whitney and another man allegedly accosted Mark Fabiani, the White House spokesman in the Whitewater affair, as he left a subway stop in suburban Alexandria, Va.

Police said Fabiani was hustled into a car and driven into Washington, where he was forced to use his bank card at several automated teller machines to withdraw about $1,500.

The robbers also took Fabiani's Rolex watch, his briefcase and a cellular telephone, but those items were returned — along with $10 for a cab ride home — after Fabiani withdrew the cash. He was released unharmed.

Police said they were still seeking a second suspect.

Salmonella rife at Denver Zoo

DENVER (AP) — When Taina Vitt took her 6-year-old son Coleton to the Denver Zoo to see the Komodo dragons, he got almost close enough to touch the lizards — and close enough to contract salmonella.

Within three days, Coleton developed bloody diarrhea, vomiting and a 104-degree fever. He apparently had grabbed some straw from the pen of one of the four reptiles.

"There was a time I didn't think he'd live, he was so badly dehydrated," his mother said.

The boy was among 50 people stricken with a rare, particularly virulent type of salmonella bacteria after visiting the Denver Zoo exhibit during five days in January. Eight people, including Coleton, were hospitalized.

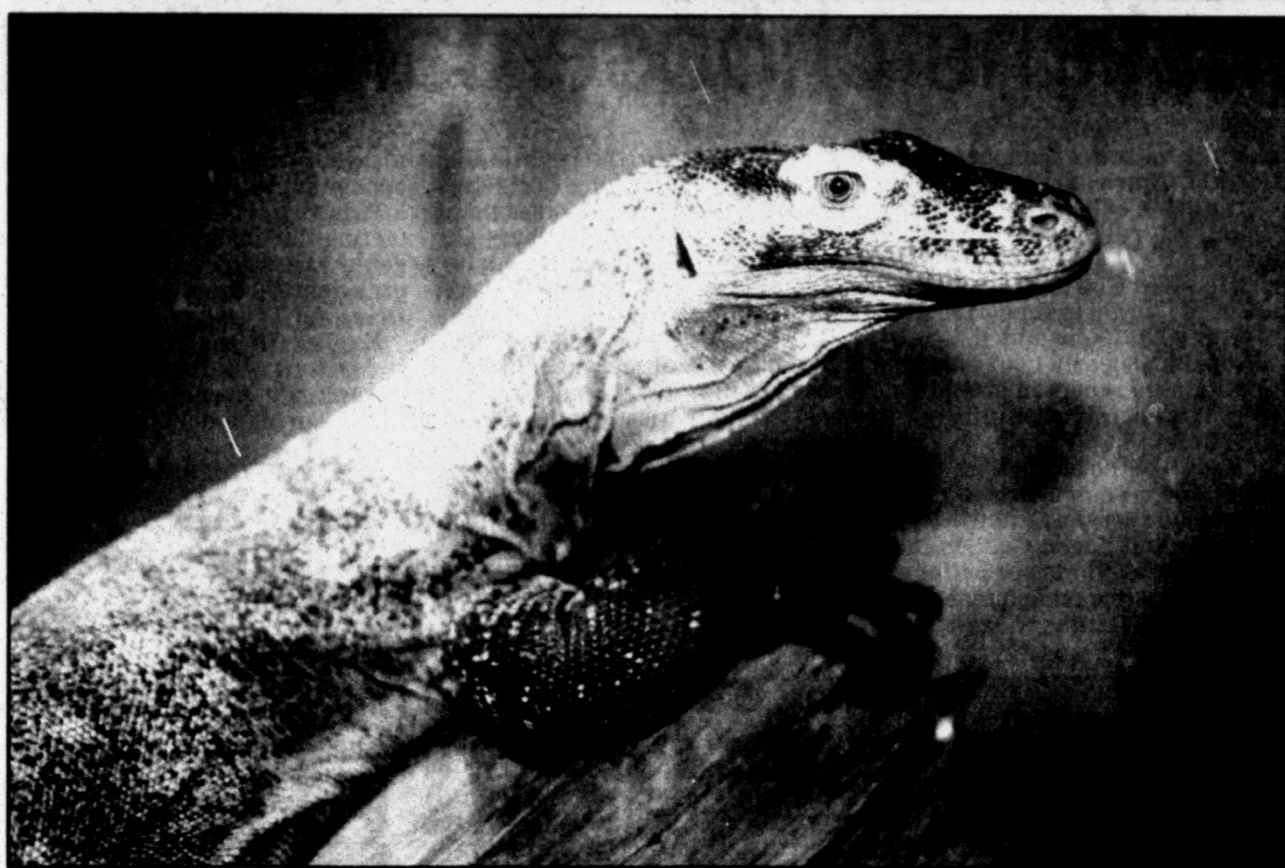

Some the victims had stroked one of the reptiles as it was being held by a zoo employee, while others had simply touched the tops and sides of the wooden enclosure, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

In a preliminary report Thursday, the CDC said that of the four Indonesian lizards on display, one tested positive for the salmonella strain.

The dragons had been moved into the wooden enclosure from their usual glass cage for the zoo's "Dragon Days" exhibit. It was not known how many people visited the exhibit.

The victims ranged in age from 3 months to 23 years, with most under 14, said Dr. Richard Hoffman, an epidemiologist with the Colorado Health Department. No zoo employees were infected.

The Komodos apparently defecated in the enclosure and then walked around, spreading the bacteria to the barriers, Hoffman said. The salmonella strain was particularly virulent — 78 percent of the victims developed bloody diarrhea, compared with 40 percent to 50 percent during a typical outbreak.

Kuto the Komodo dragon sits on display at Denver Zoo Wednesday. About 50 people were infected by salmonella bacteria while viewing a special exhibit on the world's largest lizard.

The dragons have been returned to their glass cage, where visitors cannot touch them or the inside of the enclosure, and will never go on exhibit again, zoo spokeswoman Suzanne Juhas said.

"This was considered a one-time event," she said.

About 30,000 cases of salmonella are reported each year in the United States, according to the CDC. Many people who get it don't even realize it. But in babies, the elderly or those with AIDS, the bacteria can kill.

Most cases are contracted from raw or undercooked chicken, beef, or eggs.

The CDC reported in 1995 that 90 percent of reptiles carry salmonella in their feces. And in 1994 and 1995, health departments in 13 states reported unusual strains of salmonella bacteria that were traced back to reptiles.

In October, a 3-week-old Rochester, Ind., boy died of salmonella he apparently contracted from his family's pet iguana.

The spread of salmonella can be thwarted by washing hands after using the toilet and by cooking food at high enough temperatures to kill the bacteria.

In its report Thursday, the CDC recommended that zoos stop visitors from touching the reptiles, erect double barriers to keep animals and humans apart, and provide warning signs and facilities for people to wash their hands.

"We are waiting for a formal report in writing from them before we make any final decision," Juhas said Friday.

Defense spending cuts to be requested by White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Higher military spending the Clinton administration says is needed would be put off until the end of the decade under a defense budget request the White House is unveiling next week.

As Pentagon officials conducted closed budget briefings Friday with senior congressional staffers, some analysts questioned whether combat readiness can remain high and weapons spending be increased without reducing manpower below 1.4 million.

Figures provided by defense sources indicate that Clinton will seek $243 billion in Pentagon spending for next year, which, adjusted for inflation, amounts to a $14.7 billion decrease from this year's defense budget. Without inflation adjustments, Clinton's fiscal 1997 defense request being announced Monday would be $11.4 billion less than the budget for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30.

Weapons spending would remain at a 45-year low, while research and development spending will decline through the end of the decade.

"Defense spending will continue to decline for the foreseeable future," predicted Andrew Krepinevich, director of the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments, a Washington-based think tank that examines defense policy.

A fairly rapid decline in defense spending since the peak years of the Reagan buildup "is beginning to bottom out, but not this year," he said.

Defense sources familiar with Clinton's 1997 request said it represents a status quo proposal without major policy shifts. Current policy emphasizes combat readiness and quality of life of the troops, with a leveling off of manpower at 1.4 million as recommended in a 1993 Pentagon review. The review, known as the BUR, set force levels at 10 Navy aircraft carrier battle groups with a spare carrier, 10 active-duty Army divisions and 20 Air Force fighter wings.

But with Clinton's spending plan laying out only slight defense spending increases beginning in 1999, the Pentagon faces a problem.

"How do you keep the BUR force level, keep readiness up while also increasing weapons procurement?" Krepinevich asked.

Brookings Institution defense analyst Lawrence Korb, who has criticized defense spending as excessive, said the $7 billion added to this year's defense budget by the Republican-controlled Congress finances weapons that Clinton had planned to buy in later years. As a result, Clinton can afford to ask for less in those years because the Republicans have provided it in advance. Moreover, lower inflation rates mean the military can buy as much as planned with less money, Korb said.

Others, however, predict a crunch, probably following the November election.

"I suspect these guys are going to try to slide by the election," said Baker Spring, a defense budget analyst with the Heritage Foundation.

Dole hopes South Carolina won't let him down

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — In a conversation late last year, Bob Dole spoke of how his 1988 presidential campaign was crippled in South Carolina, and how things were going to be different this time.

"If all goes according to plan, we should just about lock things up there," the Senate majority leader said. All has not gone according to plan.

After defeats in New Hampshire, Delaware and Arizona, Dole's "firewall" strategy in South Carolina will be put to a critical test in Saturday's GOP presidential primary.

And even if Dole gets a victory — polls showed him with a comfortable election-eve lead — it would be just the first step in a comeback scenario that requires winning in most of the nine states that quickly follow with primaries on Tuesday.

If he gets his wish over the next few days, Dole would wake up Wednesday in control of the Republican race again, and once again the favorite to win the nomination. But there would still be obstacles, chief among them Dole's own inconsistency as a candidate and the deep-pocketed candidacy of Steve Forbes.

Still, the mood in the Dole camp has turned from sour to optimistic over the past week.

"South Carolina may set the tone for next week because there is so little time to change things," said Emory University political scientist Merle Black. "Obviously Dole cannot afford to lose."

"If Dole wins in South Carolina then he will likely sweep most of the primary states on Tuesday and it will become very hard to stop him," said Todd Domke, a GOP consultant in Massachusetts. "After a wild few weeks, I sense that if he can prove himself, the Republican rank and file will generally feel enough is enough."

On Sunday, Dole is heavily favored in Puerto Rico's primary. Then on Tuesday, Washington state awards delegates at GOP caucuses and there are eight primaries: Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Vermont. All told, these contests offer 240 of the 996 delegates needed to clinch the GOP nomination. New York follows these states next Thursday, with 93 of its 102 delegates at stake then.

"By this time next week we will know who is for real in this thing," said Dole strategist Don Sipple.

On the eve of Saturday's South Carolina voting, Dole held the lead in every state up in the next week. Oddly, there was no evidence of Forbes advertising in any of the March 5 states.

Bacon Bits

Actor Kevin Bacon, seen here at a rehearsal for a 1991 episode of "Saturday Night Live," is the subject of two new games: A bar game called "Six Degrees to Kevin Bacon," and a game on the Internet called "The Kevin Bacon Game." Either way the rules are the same: Name any actor, then hopscotch from connection to connection until you reach Bacon through a chain of co-stars. On the Internet, go to <http://www.metronet.com/~jmacfee/kbacon.htm>

The Web vs. TV — No real winner

The good news is I'm watching less TV. The bad news is that I've traded that boob tube for another: my computer. And instead of channel surfing, I am — you guessed it — surfing the Web (although drowning is more accurate). Drawing the line on this addiction has been futile ("OK, 3 a.m. and THEN I'm going straight to bed"). But it's tough to hit the hay when the barn door keeps opening to some strange new world. For example, thanks to the Internet, I've "learned" about vegetable aphrodisiacs (<http://www.bart.nl/sante/aphrodisia/hrhome.htm>). The very shape of asparagus, the page states, "indicates its potential as an aphrodisiac." There's one catch, however: "... asparagus turn men on but women off." Getting into the Chinese New Year spirit, there's Sabrina Liao's extensive Chinese astrology page (<http://found.cs.nyu.edu/laos/horoscope.html>), which says that as someone born in the Year of the Monkey, charm and humor are the keys to my popularity. As for marriage, it says "I'm most compatible with the rat. (As long as she isn't mousy.)" And don't forget Brendan's Anagram Generator (<http://mmm.mbhs.edu/bconnell/anagrams.html>). Type in your name and see what other words are derived from it. For example, "Marcus Chan" becomes "A Ranch Scum." As for "Pat Buchanan," try "A Bath Cap Nun" or "NCAA Bah Punt" (there's a joke in there somewhere).

Heck, with stuff like this, who needs TV?

But then there's Club Methane (<http://www.apcsci.com/clubmethane/>) which calls itself "the original support group and social club for the profoundly flutulent." After reading about how flutulence has had an impact on civilization, you have to wonder if this is even worth bathroom-reading material.

And while there are many great home pages created by individuals who see the Internet as an outlet for their pains, passions and opinions, there are those who have confused the Web as a medium for exhibitionism instead of expression.

Hmmm ... on second thought, anyone see my remote?

Marcus Chan can be reached online at methanefans.com.

The talk show that never signs off ...

N.Y. Times News Service

Pat Buchanan, antisemitic, homophobic, misogynistic, sympathetic to Nazis, racist? Or Pat Buchanan, social conservative, courageous, patriotic, a dream come true?

Well, he's definitely a dream come true to people who love lively debate. All the above opinions and more are available in the Usenet arena, the collection of thousands of newsgroups open to Internet users.

Just a list of a few group names suggests the volatility of the debate: alt.politics.elections, alt.politics.usa.republican, alt.fan.rush-limbaugh, alt.politics.clinton, talk.politics.misc, alt.fan.ronald-reagan, alt.impeach.clinton, alt.politics.perot, alt.politics.usa.misc, alt.politics.correct.

You don't even have to prowling around the groups. The most fanatic partisans — and for my money the most fun — can't resist spraying their opinions around, a technique called cross-posting.

It's the equivalent of phoning a couple dozen radio talk shows at once. If you've ever phoned G. Gordon Liddy's show to talk about hidden messages in pizza or invading troops disguised as flouridated water, you understand the impulse. And if you have listened to such a caller, you understand the impulse to scream at the radio.

Well now you can scream at your computer monitor. Here's some dialogue on the Republican primary campaign of Pat Buchanan:

■ "Pat is a social conservative and an economic conservative. He is a real conservative, unlike Bush or Dole. Defend your Freedoms FIRST, your Peace SECOND, because without Freedom, Peace becomes oppression."

Sex assault victim gets help on 'Net

By Kelly Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The startling message was filled with sorrow and desperation.

"I need to know how to get rid of this dirty feeling," the woman wrote. "I feel people are looking at me and pointing the finger. I'm scared and don't know what to do."

To the Rape Crisis Center of San Antonio, those troubling words were all too familiar. The shelter hears similar accounts from rape victims daily. But this particular message was unusual.

The plea for help came from a woman in Scotland via the Internet.

The San Antonio Rape Crisis Center established its web site last year and receives about four or five messages weekly from people seeking information or help. Some come from other parts of the United States. One arrived from Mexico.

It is one of several resources for rape victims on the Internet. The Scottish woman found the San Antonio center's site using an Internet search engine.

"I wonder if there is anyone who would give me help through email. I'm too embarrassed to speak about what has happened to me even on the phone. I was raped on Saturday night by two men," the woman wrote to the crisis center's site on the World Wide Web.

Her initial message arrived Feb. 19, two days after the attack. The woman, who was not identified by name or city by the crisis center, wrote that after the rape she "cried bitterly and spent most of the night in the shower trying to wash it all away."

Ron Aaron, the rape center's executive director, said the feelings she expressed and the language she used told him instantly this indeed was a rape victim.

"Her description of the emotional roller coaster she was on following the rape is exactly what victims tell us face to face," he said.

■ Cyber Issues

Aaron wrote back, telling the woman the rape was not her fault, offering the name and phone number of a therapist and listing other web sites she might find helpful.

In an e-mail reply, the Scottish woman thanked Aaron for his help but again said she didn't feel she could speak with anyone about the attack.

Aaron said that reticence is typical. Forty-two percent of all rape victims never tell anyone about the assault, said Aaron, citing a U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee report.

"I get home from my work and sit and cry. I cry myself to sleep and wake up in a cold sweat after reliving it all in my sleep," she wrote. "I don't know how to open up and talk about things, and to talk about this... I just can't do it! I'm sorry I bothered you, thanks for getting back in touch."

Then Aaron asked if she might want to communicate via the Internet with a Los Angeles woman he had been corresponding with by electronic mail.

The California victim, who agreed to be identified by her first name, Brooke, was gang raped last year. She was so badly beaten she lost her hearing and now mainly communicates by e-mail.

A day later, the two women were talking by computer. "I'm thankful for email and for being alive!" the Scottish woman wrote back to Aaron. "(Brooke) sounds as if she's had a horrific time of it herself."

In other publicized cases, the Internet has been used for medical support groups and in one case was used by a man in Europe to call for help when he thought he was having a stroke.

Aaron noted that except for the technology involved, the Scottish woman's trauma doesn't differ from those the Rape Crisis Center deals with every day.

"She's saying what we hear from victims all the time," he said.

The shout is called a kakeoge, and it sounds like something that would come out of a barefooted person who has just stepped on glass. Instead, it is an expression of audience appreciation for kabuki, the Japanese theatre art form that you can learn about <http://www.fix.co.jp/kabuki/kabuki.html>

Matthew Johnson, a native of southern California who has lived in Japan since 1991 developed the kabuki homepage. "Because it is a form of theatre that has always striven for visual and aural beauty, the Web is actually the best place for an introduction to kabuki, says Johnson. The page, he adds, not only explains this form of theatre to the world, but affords people living in Japan a schedule of upcoming kabuki performances.

Besides the sounds of kakeoge and instruments known as the taiko drum and the three-stringed shamisen, the site also includes video clips of kabuki events, articles or kabuki history with a series of the major plays and a lesson in how male performers, through make-up, are transformed into female characters.

Johnson gets several e-messages a week from people wanting to know more about kabuki, particularly from theatre students who are interested in its use of make-up. "The world of kabuki is quite complex, and it's very hard to give more than just the simplest introductions with the page," says Johnson. "But we are aiming at something that gains people's attention, so they will go out and find more material about the theatre."

American business people beware: Japanese companies are not litigious,

Speaking of overblown hype, believe it or not, someone claims to have spent three years and $50,000 of his own money trying to find what he calls "Elvis Aaron Presley, The Great Jet Story Never Told." Laugh along (unintentionally, of course), at snippets which tell of Elvis' sister, who is now a cloistered sister in a convent and "unavailable for comment," as well as the latest on Elvis' long lost son. # Users say Buchanan's popularity will grow

GOP candidate's following no fluke, BasinLink voters feel

BasinLink respondents may not necessarily be fans, but they do feel Pat Buchanan's success will continue to grow.

AP Laserphoto

Staff Report

BasinLink users feel Pat Buchanan's success in the new Hampshire primary will continue to grow — but the vote was only by a narrow margin.

Fifty-four percent of the 265 voters say Buchanan's success will continue during the primary process; 487 percent say that the journalist's message will fade, something that was evidenced in this week's Arizona primary where Buchanan was expected to win, but finished a disappointing second to billionaire Steve Forbes.

Just 72 of 262 respondents said they considered themselves a Buchanan supporter, and 73 said they were more likely to cast their vote for him now that he is considered a viable GOP contender.

Fifty-four percent said they felt Buchanan's win in the new Hampshire primary would eventually prove divisive to the party and only help President Clinton's re-election chances.

Respondents to the poll, conducted largely before Bob Dole's disappointing third-place finish in Arizona — where the Kansas senator had been endorsed by party elder statesman Barry Goldwater — also said they felt Dole would be the most likely candidate to win the nomination, and the one man most likely to have the ability to unseat Clinton. Sixty-one percent of the voters said they felt Dole would win the GOP presidential nomination.

On-line services join indecency lawsuit

By Peter H. Lewis
N.Y. Times News Service

Asserting that the boundaries of free speech in the 21st century are at stake, more than 20 corporate and trade organizations have initiated a major legal challenge to the new Communications Decency Act.

Their civil suit, organized by the American Library Association, America Online and the Center for Democracy and Technology, is expected to be filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia. There, it will be consolidated with an earlier suit against the law filed by the American Civil Liberties Union and a dozen other civil rights groups.

The decency law, part of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, makes it a felony to knowingly transmit indecent or patently offensive sexual material over communications networks where children may see it. It was passed overwhelmingly by Congress and signed by President Clinton.

U.S. District Judge Ronald Buckwalter, one of three federal judges who will hear arguments in the consolidated lawsuits beginning March 21, has already ruled that the provision in the new law barring indecent material was unconstitutionally vague.

He declined to strike down other parts of the law, which imposed more restrictive standards of speech on the Internet and other computer-based communications networks than those for books, newspapers or other printed material. The government is expected to argue that speech on the Internet and on-line information services should be regulated just as it regulates what can be broadcast on radio and television.

The Justice Department, which is the respondent in both suits, has agreed not to investigate or prosecute anyone for suspected violation of the law until the three-judge panel issues its ruling, some time after government lawyers present their case on April 11 and 12.

The new plaintiffs include the four largest consumer on-line information networks — America Online; CompuServe, a unit of H&R Block; Prodigy, jointly owned by IBM and Sears, Roebuck, and MSN, the Microsoft network. Netcom On-Line Communications Services, one of the country's largest Internet access providers, and Microsoft Corp. are also plaintiffs.

Others joining the suit include the American Booksellers Association, the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the Association of American Publishers, the Recording Industry Association of America, the Interactive Services Association, the Society of Professional Journalists and the Citizens' Internet Empowerment Coalition, a diverse group whose members include Americans for Tax Reform and People for the American Way.

"The Internet is the communications medium for the 21st century, and the most important thing that has happened to communications since the printing press," said Judith Krug, director of the American Library Association's Office for Intellectual Freedom.

"Our main argument is that you cannot limit ideas and information to the lowest common denominator, which is what this law does. It is unconstitutional to force adults to limit the information they can see to a level suitable for children."

The library association represents more than 80,000 public libraries, which are increasingly making books and other information available on line. More than a third of the libraries provide citizen access to computers connected to the Internet.

Supporters of the law contend that the government has an obligation to protect children from pornography and objectionable forms of information that can be obtained over the Internet, a global network that links millions of computers and tens of millions of people, most of them outside the United States.

Jerry Berman, executive director of the Center for Democracy and Technology, said the focus of the new lawsuit would be to explain the technologies that made the Internet fundamentally different from broadcasting and more like publishing.

"The thrust is to focus the court's attention on what policies should be applied to new media," Berman said. "Congress passed this law without ever once holding a hearing. If the judges don't understand the Internet, they may pick the wrong paradigm, and this case of first impression will decide the limits of free speech for the 21st century."

Aryan nation? If you want Clinton to win, Vote for Pat and his sheet."

"I guess I'll have to get used to this type of attack on P.B. from now on. Aryan Nation? Bigot? Racist? Jew Hater? I yeah, right."

"So I suppose Pat never told Elie Wiesel that President Reagan must not surrender to 'Jewish pressure' against visiting a German cemetery where SS men were buried."

"I'm going to have to start pulling for Mr. Pat now. The sight of left-wing wackos going nuts would certainly make up for the fact that he's not really my preferred candidate."

"Thank YOU! Please promise you'll vote for him. Honest. We're all just terrified that Pat will run against Clinton. Please don't throw us in that there briar-patch!"

"Anyone whose beliefs differ from those of the Liberal Media Elite is labeled as being an EXTREMIST. Anyone who doesn't want America's individual Sovereignty traded away to become a weak worthless cog in The New World Order is called an ISOLATIONIST. People who have the gall to speak out against the Liberal Media Bias and their slanted spin on everything (pro-homosexual, pro-drugs, pro-abortion, pro-immorality, pro-welfare state, pro-one world government, anti-family, anti-God), and people who have the nerve to TAKE A STAND for DECENCY, MORALS and TRUTH, are dismissed as being members of the RELIGIOUS RIGHT."

Welcome to the information age. You gotta love any communications medium that combines the urgency of broadcast with the ability to SHOUT IN CAPITAL LETTERS.

In the political groups of Usenet, computer users will learn the thrill of bring pundits as they post any opinion they want, in all its unexpurgated glory. If they've ever felt frustrated by a newspaper's policy of only one letter to the editor per month, they can go to town on Usenet.

They also will experience quick reaction from their readers. Some of it will be unkind, sarcastic, profane or vitriolic. There's nothing so humbling as a posting for all the world to see, delicately stating, "Hey, bozo, are the restraints cutting off circulation to your brain again? Truman ran against Tom Dewey, not Tom Dooley!"

Usenet, the World Wide Web and other computer technique also will electrify the arguments, letting thousands of home users with minimal computers to dig up candidates' records and speeches and wave them cybernetically for the world's inspection.

The language on this frontier is often rough, much of which we can't print here, you can bet that the Internet will win a place as an important medium in the election of '96. Like television in '52, it will open unimagined channels of discourse and styles of debate.

Internet's style hasn't been seen since the saloon brawls of Andrew Jackson's candidacy, only this time the piano player won't be in the line of fire.

but if provoked and cornered, they will employ every legitimate means at their disposal to preserve pride and face.

This is just one of the many insights you'll gain at <http://www.japanese.com/>, where Japanese Language Services, a Cambridge, Massachusetts-based company, attempts to make doing business with the Japanese a little easier.

According to Carl Kay, JLS president, even when Americans and Japanese people communicate in English, misunderstandings due to culture can easily arise. For instance, he says, official meetings in Japan are often purely ceremonial, with the real brainstorming taking place in informal get-togethers. Americans, on the other hand, expect to do serious negotiating at the formal meetings. "The end result is that American feel frustrated that nothing seems to get done," says Kay, "while the Japanese think the Americans are too aggressive and superficial in their approach."

Most intriguing at the JLS site are back issues of Japan Insider, a company newsletter that helps to bridge the cultural gap between the Japanese and Americans. The site also contains a cybrary containing video training clips on doing business with the Japanese more effectively, advice on developing a Web site in Japanese and suggested places to learn Japanese.

When the Chinese-chess team arrived in New York City from Shanghai, the only group notified of its appearance was the

New York Chinatown Chess Association. This created a stir in New York Chinese-chess circles, and the promoter who arranged the meeting was lambasted for keeping it so hush-hush.

Yes, Chinese-chess, or Xiangqi players take their game very seriously. And if you would like to join their ranks, or just find out what all the commotion is about, look to the Xiangqi homepage at <http://www.io.org/~sung/xq/xq.html>

The site begins with news briefs devoted to Chinese-chess players and events held in both China and the West, including viewpoints on these happenings. If these items intrigue you, follow a link to the rec.games.Chinese-chess newsgroup and its FAQ to learn how to play the game. The site also contains links to Internet Chinese-chess servers for long distance real-time competition, game records and profiles of master players.

According to Elton Yuen, president of the Toronto Xiangqi Association, more and more Westerners are learning about Chinese-chess as a result of links to the Xiangqi page from traditional chess homepages. # Education officials get paid night on the town courtesy of Citicorp

AUSTIN (AP) — A company that holds a lucrative state contract treated Texas education officials to dinner at a posh private club, prompting concerns from a government watchdog group and an official who wasn't invited.

"I didn't think it passed the smell test," State Board of Education member Diane Patrick of Arlington told The Associated Press. "The problem, as I see it, is primarily the appearance of impropriety."

The meeting at the exclusive Austin Club wasn't publicly posted. Mrs. Patrick raised questions about whether it was proper for state officials to be treated to "an expensive dinner" by Citicorp.

A state lawyer has said no laws were violated. But Patrick and Suzy Woodford of Common Cause suggested board policy should be revised to bar such gatherings.

"Being wine and dined by someone they have a contract with is a clear appearance of impropriety. If they don't have rules in place, they should get some rules in place."

Someone they have a contract with is a clear appearance of impropriety. If they don't have rules in place, they should get some rules in place," Ms. Woodford said.

Citicorp has state contracts in connection with the Permanent School Fund that will be worth more than $1.1 million annually when fully implemented, according to Texas Education Agency spokeswoman Debbie Graves Ratcliffe.

TEA general counsel David Anderson said no laws were violated by the Jan. 11 dinner.

It was attended by seven of the 15 Education Board members, including four of the five members of the board's Permanent School Fund Committee. Education Commissioner Mike Moses and several TEA staff members also attended.

Citicorp lobbyist James Jonas and company officials also attended the dinner arranged by Education Board member Robert Offutt of San Antonio, according to Offutt.

Other board members attending, Offutt said, were Donna Ballard of The Woodlands, Mary Helen Berlanga of Corpus Christi, Will Davis of Austin, Monte Hasie of Lubbock, Geraldine Miller of Dallas and Rene Nunez of El Paso.

Anderson said public notice wasn't required since official business wasn't discussed. He said a board quorum wasn't present.

Offutt said the dinner was for the Permanent School Fund Committee to hear an education speech by Bill Honig, former California superintendent of schools. He said a separately scheduled Honig speech conflicted with a school fund panel meeting.

Citicorp's involvement came because Jonas had asked Offutt to arrange a meeting between the company and Moses, Offutt said. He said Jonas suggested the company host the dinner. Offutt said he agreed after running the idea by Anderson.

"There's no impropriety. We were 100 percent within compliance of Texas ethics rules," Offutt said. "Mrs. Patrick was ticked because she wasn't invited."

Offutt said he thanked Citicorp at the dinner, and arranged for a Citicorp official to be seated next to Moses. But he said no business was discussed. The dinner, he said, "was chicken. It was not caviar."

Moses said in a statement, "I was asked to come hear Bill Honig and that's what I did. I never discussed any financial business with Citicorp representatives and haven't as of today."

Jonas and Citicorp officials didn't immediately return phone calls from the AP.

The Education Board last year approved two, two-year contracts with the company that took effect Sept. 1, Mrs. Ratcliffe said.

A contract to oversee Permanent School Fund securities lending has paid the company $116,460 from mid-September of 1995 through Jan. 31, she said.

Another contract — to hold the fund's stocks and bonds and handle the money exchange in financial transactions — will be worth $1.1 million when fully implemented. The company gets less this year because the fee is divided between domestic and foreign issues, and only domestic business has been done so far, she said.

Mrs. Patrick said she believes new board policies are needed on meetings.

"According to his (Anderson's) interpretation, they did follow the letter of the law," Mrs. Patrick said. "My concern is as we move toward private management of the Permanent School Fund that we make certain as a state board we have procedures in place that would prevent even the appearance of impropriety."

D/FW metroplex links up with commuter rail systems

IRVING (AP) — The mayors of Fort Worth, Dallas and Irving hope that, come December, many Dallas-area residents will share the attitude of Catherine Enin-Okut, an enthusiastic mass transit fan.

"I'd definitely ride the train because I could do a lot of reading," said Enin-Okut, 28, an Arlington resident who did homework for her architecture degree riding a bus from Carrollton to the University of North Texas in Denton.

By December, Enin-Okut and thousands of others will be able to ride a commuter train from south Irving to Union Station in Dallas for a dollar. There, they can transfer to Dallas Area Rapid Transit's new 20-mile light rail starter system, set to open in June, or the Amtrak passenger rail system.

Fares for other segments of the system have not been determined.

At a groundbreaking Friday for the 10-mile stretch of track between Dallas and Irving, officials said the commuter rail project shows the same spirit of regional cooperation as Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

"They say it takes a whole village to raise a child," said Fort Worth Mayor Pro Tem Jewel Woods over the roar of planes taking off from the nearby airport in Irving. "It's going to take the whole Metroplex to make our system work."

The Dallas-Irving segment is the first leg of the newly named Trinity Express Railway. The $234 million line will eventually link downtown Dallas, downtown Fort Worth and the airport using the Railtran corridor. Officials expect up to 10,000 riders a day.

The Trinity Express Railway — "Texrail" for short — uses 34 miles of former Rock Island Railroad track between Fort Worth's historic T&P Depot on Lancaster Avenue and Dallas' restored Union Station. Dallas and Fort Worth bought the track from the bankrupt railroad in 1984 with plans for a commuter rail link.

Dallas Mayor Ron Kirk thanked Irving Mayor Morris Parrish for backing the rail system just south of Airport Freeway and said he is confident North Texans can be persuaded to leave their cars in the driveway.

"I think people are going to be surprised about who will ride transit and who won't," Kirk said. "Clearly one of our jobs is to convince people that you can get where you need to go cheaper, faster, by using public transportation."

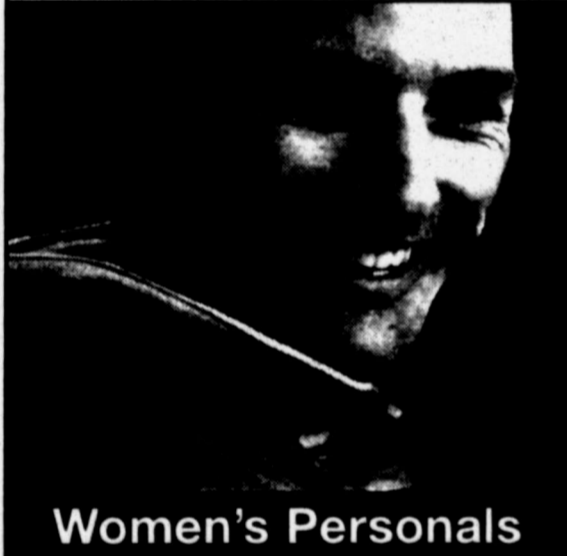

DART is responsible for the line from Dallas to Irving. The Fort Worth Transportation Authority, known as The T, will build the western half of the line, set to open in 1999 with stops in Richland Hills, Hurst, Arlington and Grand Prairie. Service to the airport will begin in 2005.

Videotape of Kennedy's, girlfriend's fight becomes subject of bidding war

NEW YORK — Let the bidding begin: The National Enquirer said Friday it has received offers "in the $100,000 range" for a 30-minute videotape of John F. Kennedy Jr. and his girlfriend in an ugly Central Park confrontation.

National Enquirer receives offers for video of John F. Kennedy Jr.'s confrontation with girlfriend.

The tabloid, in an issue due out next week, chronicles the Sunday morning spat in an 11-photo spread that was shot at the same time as the videotape.

Executive Editor Steve Coz declined to say how much the Enquirer paid for the pictures of "a major lovers' quarrel."

The surreptitious photos captured Kennedy, 35, and live-in girlfriend Carolyn Bessette, 28, in an argument that became physical at times as the couple was walking their dog through the park.

Bessette repeatedly shoves Kennedy, who loses his temper and yanks an emerald-and-diamond ring off her finger, Coz said.

According to Coz, the video shows the pair "arguing loudly and violently about something.... She goes after him one time too many, and he slams his hand down on her wrist and fingers, and rips that ring from her finger."

The end of the argument finds Kennedy in tears before the couple walks off in "an uneasy silence," Coz said.

Coz said some of the argument is audible on the videotape, which has already become the subject of a bidding war. "It's amazing. We've had so many calls," Coz said. "The offers now are in the $100,000 range."

MOSCOW — Sharon Stone brought a little heat to winter-bound Moscow, helping to launch the first Russian edition of Harper's Bazaar magazine.

The issue features a seductive picture of the actress on its cover and an interview inside.

"For an American it is a dream come true to visit Russia," she said at a reception Friday. "It's a dream full of mystery and fantasy. When I came here I had no idea what to expect. What I have seen is a people that is incredibly warm and kind and soulful."

The magazine is a welcome foreign exchange, said fashion journalist Yulia

Yakovleva: "Russia has no fashion industry, and at least this way we'll know what the West has."

BOMBAY, India — Demi Moore: actress, mother — philosopher? The world's highest-paid female movie star spoke about her spiritual side Friday to corporate high-fliers.

"We're all on a journey, and the journey is actually the destination," she told the global Young Presidents Organization.

Moore, making a four-day visit to India as a guest of New Age guru Deepak Chopra, shared the stage with Dave Stewart, formerly of the rock band Eurythmics, and Indian screen legend Amitabh Bachchan.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — He made their day. They made his night.

Clint Eastwood fans and fellow stars including Jim Carrey and Mario Van Peebles attended an American Film Institute tribute Thursday night to the actor-director.

"He hired me when I wasn't being hired," said Carrey, who had a bit part in "The Dead Pool" and remembers Eastwood as "very encouraging" toward him early on.

Van Peebles, who worked with Eastwood in "Heartbreak Ridge," said the actor introduced him to the people with whom he later made "New Jack City."

Eastwood "basically made my day," Van Peebles said.

PARIS — Mon dieu! Lt. Columbo has been promoted to chevalier.

Peter Falk, who endeared himself to American and French TV audiences as the rumpled, wily detective on "Columbo," was made a Chevalier of Arts and Letters, France's highest arts honor.

Film star Gerard Depardieu, a long-time friend of Falk's, bestowed the honor in a Culture Ministry ceremony Thursday.

"Peter Falk is one of the 15 best actors on the planet," Depardieu said. "Two thousand years from now, he's someone the whole world will still be in love with."

French television — like its American counterpart — frequently shows reruns of the series.

"This role of Columbo has been one of the best and the worst things for me," Falk said at the ceremony. "If I hadn't played this role, I surely would have become a better actor and had a different career."

Religious humor celebrates 10 years
By David Briggs
Associated Press

When "Family Circus" cartoonist Bill Keane first began putting religion into his work in the 1960s, some religious conservatives took offense at the irreverence of mentioning God on the funny pages. Today, when one of his young characters reinterprets a commandment as "Humor thy father and thy mother" or threatens to tell his mother that a sibling at prayer is "goin' over her head," he gets accolades from the same group.

"Even the strictest religious person from the strictest religious sect allows a little levity," Keane said. "Today, they congratulate you for carrying the Christian message into the comics."

While Keane says he has been doing the same thing all along — reflecting the reality of religion as a part of family life — there has been a noticeable change in the pews, say many religious humorists.

Christian comics are finding dates in church halls, where they may be greeted by portraits of a smiling Jesus. And clergy are discovering a little humor from the pulpit is welcomed by congregations seeking more joy in their faith.

Celebrating this trend on its 10th anniversary is one of the strongest advocates for religious humor — the Portage, Mich.-based Fellowship of Merry Christians. The fellowship has come out with a new book: "Holy Humor: The Best of the Joyful Noiseletter," published by MasterMedia Limited of New York.

Some samples from the collection, which offers some of the best jokes and cartoons from the organization's newsletters over the past decade, encourage churches and religious individuals to laugh at themselves a little.

■ A paramedic said his most unusual 911 call came from a church, where an usher was concerned that an elderly man had passed out in a pew and appeared to be dead.

What was so unusual about that? "Well," the paramedic said, "we carried out four guys before we found the one who was dead."

■ A good sermon should have a good beginning and a good ending, and they should be as close together as possible.

■ An inexperienced preacher was conducting his first funeral. He solemnly pointed to the body in the coffin and declared: "What we have here is only a shell. The nut is already gone."

■ Musings on a 950-year-old Noah: "Do you go through a series of midlife crises, or just the big one at 400? You know, wearing the gold chains and driving a sports chariot."

Cal Samra, fellowship president, remembers borrowing $1,000 to produce the first 4-page newsletter distributed to 200 people in April 1986.

Today, more than 10,000 people subscribe to the Noiseletter and the association, which offers an array of services from sales of humor books to playshops in churches, has a mailing list close to 40,000.

"We found so many people were searching for something more. Where is the joy? Where is the humor? Where is the celebration in Christianity?" Samra said.

Samra said what has fascinated him over the years is how so much religious humor crosses denominational lines, revealing "how really human we are, no matter what our denomination might be."

The Rev. Dennis Daniel, a Southern Baptist pastor who draws the "Brother Blooper" cartoon, can attest to a change in attitude in his denomination, where some members are among the most "straight-laced and straight-faced" of Christians.

"I think people are experiencing the joy, and want it expressed," said Daniel, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Fountain Hills, Ariz.

Liz Curtis Higgs, a Christian comic and motivational speaker from Louisville, Ky., said she used to spend about 5 percent of her 100 speaking dates each year with church groups. Now, half of her engagements are sponsored by churches.

She said there is a place for humor alongside more serious worship practices and biblical reflection.

"We also desperately need to laugh. Our pews are filled with people in pain," she said.

Or, as the English writer G.K. Chesterton once said, "Angels can fly because they take themselves lightly. Never forget that Satan fell by force of gravity."

Is Jesus card-carrying Republican?
By J. Michael Parker
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — The Christian Coalition is idolatrous in portraying the Republican Party as the party of Jesus, a best-selling Christian author and lecturer said here this week.

Christians should reject the extremism of both the religious right and the religious left but support the best of both conservatism and liberalism, said Tony Campolo, a professor of sociology at the Baptist-related Eastern College in St. David's, Pa.

Campolo spoke at a conference on violence that was sponsored by the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission.

"When we tie Jesus up with one particular party as Christian Coalition has tied him to the Republican Party, we become idolatrous and create a god in our own image," he said.

"We believe that's dangerous for society and for the church. Society can suffer from religious totalitarianism and the church can lose sight of what the biblical Jesus is all about," Campolo said in a post-conference interview.

In his one-hour speech, Campolo denounced the "power game" in which conservative religious leaders threaten politicians who don't follow their lead.

Conservatives can play that game, he said, but then "you can't come back to people and say you're here to bring the love of God to them."

Campolo and Sojourners founder Jim Wallis launched a movement called the "Cry for Renewal" last year to offer a balanced evangelical Christian vision for American society as an alternative to the religious right.

He and Wallis were among 55 evangelical Christians arrested in December in the rotunda of the U.S. Capitol while protesting proposed budget cuts they said will hurt the poor.

"We wanted the message heard from one end of this country to the other that some evangelicals aren't happy with the budget cuts," Campolo said.

He said the Cry for Renewal combines the conservatives' concern for personal responsibility with the liberals' concern for compassionate government.

"Both are right, and to emphasize one without the other is to fail to come up with conclusive answers," Campolo said.

Wallis, he said, is organizing town meetings throughout the nation to bring liberal Democrats and conservative Republicans to talk about ways they can work together.

"We're tired of polarization, the absence of stability, and hatred in the political debate. Want town meetings where people can talk together to become normal in our political discourse," Campolo declared.

Church accepted

Community Bible Church was accepted into full membership with the South Central District of the Evangelical Free Churches of America at the annual district conference in Austin Feb. 23.

Evangelical Free Churches are united by a common doctrinal position which is grounded in the Word of God. Every church and pastor must affirm that the Bible is the inerrant, inspired Word of God and they must hold to the basic truths of orthodox Christianity.

"Free" means the churches are free of any hierarchical structure from without or within. Each church is autonomous, owns its own property, calls its own pastor, makes its own decisions, determines where and how its money is spent and is free from outside authority.

"Evangelical" means that each church agrees to the fundamentals of the faith including the inerrancy of the Scripture in the original manuscripts.

The Community Bible Church is temporarily located at 1108-B S. Midland Drive, but will be breaking ground for a permanent building east of the Midland Central Appraisal District office on Andrews Highway within the next several weeks. The mailing address is P.O. Box 6002, Midland, Texas 79704. The telephone number is 689-0655.

Vespers scheduled

Midland Lutheran Church, 2705 W. Michigan Ave., will continue its observance of the Lenten season with traditional Lenten vespers at 7 p.m. Wednesday during Lent.

Prior to the service, at 6 p.m., a meal will be served in the Fellowship Hall for a nominal fee.

Sunday morning services at Midland Lutheran begin at 10:30 a.m. The Christian Education hour begins at 9:15 a.m. with classes for all ages.

The Rev. Glenn Kramer continues his class "The Use of the Means of Grace: a statement on the practice of word and sacrament" each Sunday during the education hour. For more information call 694-1373.

Midland Lee and Midland High will finally face each other in the Tournament of Champions, but not under the circumstances both had wanted.

San Angelo handles cold, windy Midland Invitational

By Stewart Doreen

Mother Nature once again played cruel tricks on the Midland Invitational. First, the cold weather from early Friday morning did its best to delay the tournament held at Green Tree Country Club. After temperature finally rose, high winds took their turn and played havoc on the golfers.

In the end, San Angelo Central was the team less victimized by the elements, posting a 349 to take the lead by 10 strokes over 1995 champion Snyder.

"We are pleased considering the conditions," said San Angelo Central assistant coach Jim Bartlett. "The girls are not as pleased with the score."

Central, who finished third last year at the state tournament, tied Snyder last year with identical scores of 356. Snyder, however, won the tournament due to a

Trinity gets payback, beats Abilene Cooper in OT

And then there were two. The Eulless Trinity Trojans gained the revenge they were looking for in an thrilling overtime 61-58 win over Abilene Cooper while the El Paso Irvin Rockets blasted past Fort Worth Dunbar 81-72 at the Region 1 tournament semifinals at Chaparral Center Friday night.

Irvin and Trinity will square off at 1 p.m. today, with the winner advancing to the Class 5A Final Four next week in Austin.

While Irvin was beating up on tournament toughie Dunbar, it was the Cougars who nearly sent shockwaves throughout Class 5A.

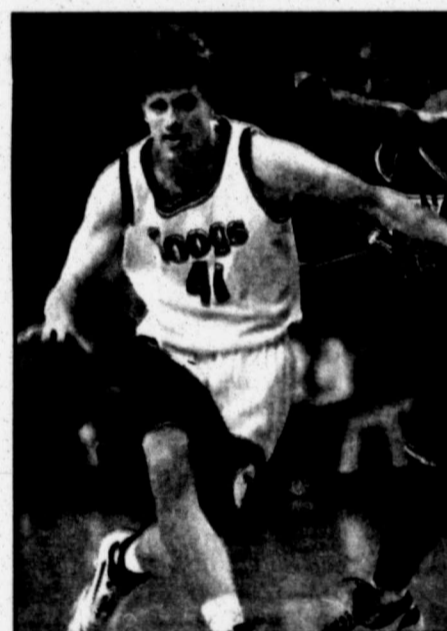

According to the Trinity coaches, the Trojans were on a mission to avenge last year's last second buzzer beater to Cooper in the same round of play last year.

But their mission developed a problem in the likes of the Cougars.

Trinity used its height advantage early in the game by going on a 10-2 run.

Cooper, which finishes the season at 24-10 did not help its own cause by going 0-for-9 shooting during one stretch in the first quarter. But the Trojan weren't exactly shooting the lights off the scoreboard either. Trinity made only five of 13 from the field for a 13-9 first quarter lead.

Brandon Schmitz, the Cougars leading scorer with 16 points, chipped in six of those in the second quarter alone. Already trailing by 11, it was his 15-foot jumper at 4:21 of the second period that broke a 10-minute scoring drought for Cooper.

The Cougars were just too stone cold in the first half, but they only trailed by a 30-19 margin at intermission. "Our guys just didn't want to quit," said Cooper coach Greg Gober.

The Cougars began their comeback in the third quarter when they AUSTIN — Amber Tarr scored 18 points and grabbed 10 rebounds as defending champion Ozona defeated Poth 57-47 Friday in the Class 2A semifinals of the girls' state basketball tournament.

Ozona (36-2), which beat Poth in last year's semifinals 65-42 on its way to the state title, will play in Saturday's championship game against Gunter (35-1), a 48-37 winner over Edgewood in the other semifinal. Poth, led by Jacqueline Jansky with 14 points and nine rebounds, finishes the season 32-6 after making its third trip to the state tourney.

Ozona, which is dominated by sophomores, took control of the game in the first quarter as Tarr scored nine points, including a 3-pointer, in helping the Lady Lions build an 18-3 lead.

The margin bulged to 34-13 at halftime as Ozona connected on 15-of-33 shots (45.5 percent) in the first half compared to Poth's 5-of-21 (23.8 percent).

Poth had 10 turnovers that were converted into 14 Ozona points in the decisive first half.

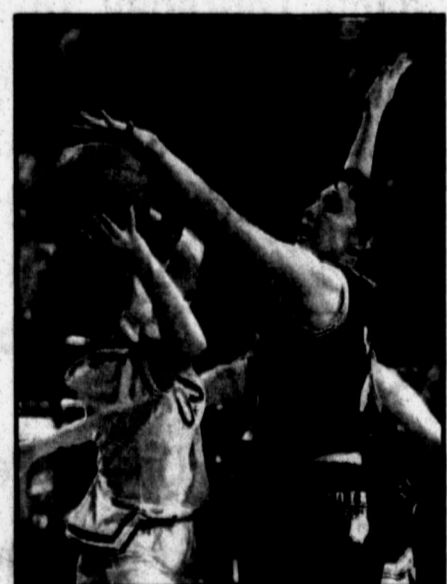

Shelly Sullivan had 10 points and Amber McWilliams and Tara Wilkins each added nine points for Ozona.

Leslie Kopecki and Lisa Gorzell each had eight points for Poth.

Ozona is quarterbacked by 5-foot-2 sophomore point guard Bobbie Bryson, who applies relentless pickpocket pressure and creates steals for easy transition baskets. She frequently looks for Tarr, a 5-11 sophomore who was 7-of-12 from the field and can score inside or outside.

Abilene Cooper standing in way of Lady Rebel title aspirations

■ Win over Lady Cougars would clinch Midland Lee tie for first place; MHS boys face Abilene High.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

The last time the Abilene Cooper girls soccer team came to town, Midland High stopped their 22 game winning streak. This time Midland Lee can do much worse. With a win at the Lee Soccer complex at 2 p.m., Midland Lee will clinch at least a tie for a first place spot in the District 5 standings. In other action, Midland High will travel to Abilene High to keep its district title 3 hopes alive. On the boys side, Midland High will host AHS while the Lee boys travel to the key city for their regular-season ending game with Cooper. All games start at 2 p.m.

Midland Lee (14-4 overall, 9-2 in district) came into the second half of district play two games behind Cooper and one game behind Midland High. But the Rebels defeated MHS 1-0 in a shootout win and got help from their intracity rivals, who defeated Cooper 3-2 in their second half match up.

Now the Rebels are ready to show they are playing the best ball in the district and ready to take their first title in the program's brief four-year history. Getting a first-ever win over Cooper would also be nice.

"There are a lot of things in the game," said Midland Lee coach Van Gravitt. "The district title is at the top of the list. We also haven't beaten Cooper and that is a monkey we want to get off our back."

"We have to go to the field playing like district champions," said Lee midfielder Erin Blinka. "We have to go to the field, have fun and everything will fall into

Four Tall City players make 4-5A All-District

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

District 4-5A's 1996 All-District basketball team is punctuated by the presence of two juniors in two of the league's most prestigious positions and by the absence of one major senior.

Odessa High junior Derrick Workman, who set a single game scoring record of 50 points game, was named as the loop's most valuable player while Midland Lee junior Amron Washington was tabbed as the newcomer of the year.

Normally, the league gives out a sophomore of the year award, but decided this season to go with a newcomer of the year since there were not any spectacular sophomores who played an entire district schedule. Thus, Washington became the newcomer of the year as a junior. Washington averaged close to 16 points per game for the Rebels during district play, becoming one of the premier players in the league.

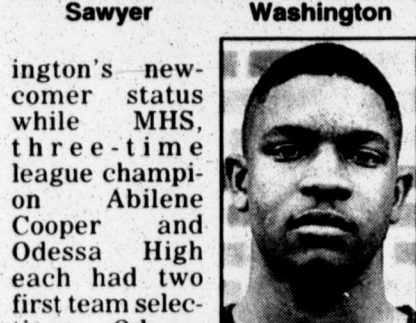

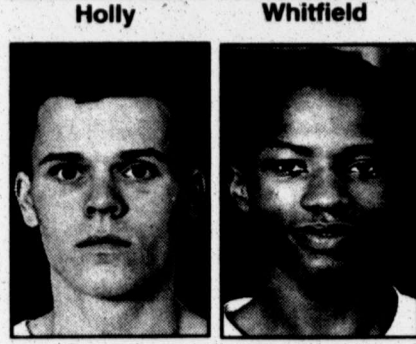

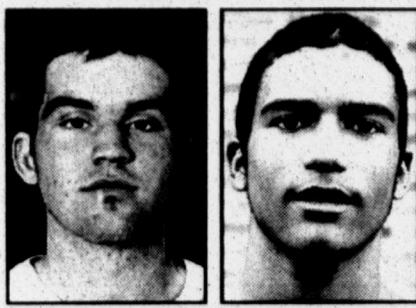

However, not listed on the first team was San Angelo Central senior Bobby Townsend, who was a first-team selection in basketball in both his sophomore and junior seasons. This adds to Townsend's roller-coaster ride in the District 4-5A sports world since he was involved in the infamous quarterback controversy with the Bobcats during the football season.

Midland High and Lee both placed two players each on the first team. Midland High senior Terry Johnson was a unanimous selection to the first team along with senior Dustin Franklin of Odessa Permian and junior Brandon Schmitz of Abilene Cooper.

MHS' other first team selection was senior guard James Whitfield. Lee also put two guards on the list in dependable Keith Sawyer and three-year player Mark Holly.

The other two first team selections were Jermon Grimes of Odessa High and the high scoring Mark Smith of Abilene Cooper, both seniors.

Lee, second in the district race, had three players receive first team honors if you count Washington's newcomer status while MHS, three-time league champion Abilene Cooper and Odessa High each had two first team selections. Odessa Permian had one while Abilene High and San Angelo had no first team picks.

Lee also placed senior Israel Boyd on the second team while MHS had senior Josh Lane on the second team.

The team was selected by the coaches of the seven league teams.

Midland High 8, El Paso Hanks 2

The Bulldogs could not get the big hit when it needed it in the loss to Permian, but took advantage of a second chance against Hanks.

"We struggled early, but we got the key hit when we needed it," MHS coach Lew Kennedy said. "Hanks is always tough to play — we had them down in El Paso earlier — and it would have been easy for the kids to roll over after the Permian loss, but they came back and did what they had to do."

Midland High's Clay Johnston smacked a bases-loaded triple in the fifth to break open a close game as the Bulldogs stayed alive in the tournament.

Senior pitcher Keith Lant allowed just five hits and struck out a career-high 14 batters in picking up the win, and also belted a home run in the seventh inning to boot.

Odessa Permian 3, Midland High 2

The Bulldogs loaded the bases in the seventh inning but could not push across the tying run as Permian escaped with a second-round, winner's bracket victory over Midland High.

Permian's Jeff Dinger allowed only six hits in 6 2/3 innings and struck out five to pick up the win. Jeremy Delcore got the final two outs for the save.

El Paso Hanks 5, El Paso Bowie 4

The Hanks Knights scored two runs in the bottom of the seventh to pull out a second-round win over city rival Bowie, knocking the Bears out of the double-elimination tournament.

Amarillo Tascosa 6, El Paso High 3

A four-run outburst in the fourth inning turned out to be the difference as Tascosa beat El Paso High in a second-round consolation bracket game played at Lee's Ernie Johnson Field.

Lubbock Monterrey 11, Amarillo Tascosa 1

The Plainsmen stayed alive in the tournament by breaking open a close game in the seventh with eight runs and beat Tascosa.

game," said Gravitt. "You can't focus on one player when you are trying to shut us down." MHS (13-4 and 8-2) has two games left and taking care of its own business comes first. That means going to the Key City and defeating AHS (3-14 and 1-9). Of course, getting some offensive support would not hurt Scott Hodgkinson's ball club.

Abilene High may have more on the line than the Midland High boys. The Eagles (10-7 overall) hold third place in district at 5-5. 1/2 game ahead of Odessa High. One of those two teams will finish third and make the playoffs.

The first-place Bulldogs (9-1, 12-4) still stand only 1/2 game ahead of second-place Lee. Only a major upset will keep the Rebels (9-2, 12-4) from beating last-place Cooper (2-8, 4-10-1). So the Bulldogs will probably have to win to stay alone in first, making it a significant contest for both sides.

Ahmad Brooks leads the Eagles with five goals and Kris Mabry has four. The Bulldogs beat Abilene High 2-1 on Feb. 6 in Abilene. It was one of two district games they have won by one goal.

Lee beat Cooper 5-0 Feb. 6 in Midland. It was the Rebels' second-highest goal output of the season. They scored six in beating San Angelo 6-1 a week ago.

The boys playoffs begin March 15 with bi-district play.

Gunter 48, Edgewood 37

Jill Sutton hit a state record tying six 3-pointers, including three in a decisive fourth-quarter run that lifted Gunter to a 48-37 victory today in the Class 2A semifinals of the girls' state tournament.

Gunter (35-1), which lost in last year's semifinals to Cooper, will make its first trip to the finals on Saturday, when it faces the Ozona-Poth semifinal winner.

Edgewood, led by Keesha Randle with 21 points and 10 rebounds, finishes the year 33-3 after making its first tournament appearance.

Edgewood went up 26-25 with 38 seconds left in the third quarter on a pull-up jump shot by LeeAnn Howell. But Sutton, who also had 10 rebounds and four steals, answered with three 3-pointers in an 11-1 run that gave Gunter a 36-27 lead with 6:34 to play.

Class 5A Semifinals

Austin Westlake 56, Amarillo 55

Sarah Howden scored 14 points and defending champion Austin Westlake survived a furious fourth-quarter comeback to defeat Amarillo 56-55 Friday in the Class 5A semifinals of the girls' state tournament.

Westlake (35-2) will attempt to repeat as 5A champions in Saturday's final against the winner of the Georgetown-Alief Elsiek semifinal.

But the Chaparrals were lucky to move on. After trailing 55-42 with 2:31 left, Amarillo (29-9), the 1994 5A

NCAA looks into Tech men's programs

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association has sent Texas Tech a letter of preliminary inquiry on possible men's basketball and football violations beginning in 1991.

In a written statement released Thursday, Texas Tech president Robert Lawless said the school will cooperate with the NCAA. Enforcement officials from the association visited the campus the week of Feb. 19.

"The NCAA letter does not imply that Texas Tech has violated any rules nor does it charge Texas Tech with any violations," Lawless said. "It simply formalizes continuation of the questioning and interviewing process."

Based on additional interviews, the NCAA enforcement staff will decide whether to continue its investigation and recommend sanctions.

The investigation was triggered by a series of stories by the Houston Chronicle detailing alleged improper benefits and academic problems involving athletes.

NCAA and school investigators are examining charges that Tech athletes received free legal assistance, bail bonds and other special treatment through arrangements by coaches and boosters. Football and basketball players who were charged with traffic offenses and criminal acts allegedly received free legal services from a Lubbock law firm whose partners include a member of the Texas Tech board of regents.

Former Tech basketball player Damon Ashley and his mother told the Chronicle in December that men's basketball coach James Dickey lured the player by promising to arrange a job for his pregnant girlfriend. Ashley played for the team from 1991 to 1993.

Other allegations surround the academic record of former basketball player Nate Jackson and irregularities surfacing his 1992 arrest on an outstanding traffic warrant. Jackson played in the 1992 season.

Dickey said he is referring all questions to Texas Tech faculty representative Robert Sweazy.

Sweazy did not immediately return a telephone call made by The Associated Press Friday.

REGION: El Paso stops Dunbar again

(From 1C)

outscored Trinity 18-12, which led the drama in final eight minutes.

Then they came within three at the 1:28 mark when Cedrick Shields tucked his 5-5 frame under two of the Trojan giants and made a reverse layup to trail 50-47.

Cooper's Tony Roach contributed another bucket to trim the deficit even closer, 50-49.

After a Trojan miss, the Cougars had an opportunity to gain the lead, but a steal led to an easy Trinity duce.

Cooper got the ball to Mark Smith, who banked an NBA three-pointer at the buzzer and sent the game to overtime. But the Cougars ran out of miracles in overtime.

Irvin's Rockets became the second El Paso team in two years to put a halt to the high flying Fort Worth Dunbar Wildcats in the semifinals of the Region I boys basketball tournament.

Irvin belted Dunbar 81-72 at Chaparral Center Friday night to vault into today's finals against Eules Trinity, a 61-58 overtime winner over Abilene Cooper in the other semifinal.

El Paso Riverside defeated Dunbar in the semifinals last year on the way to a state berth in Austin. Dunbar has been to the Region I tournament for 11 consecutive years and is used to landing a berth in the region finals.

"The kids new about Dunbar's tradition, but they weren't intimidated," said Irvin coach David Castillo. "We took it to them right from the beginning."

Irvin was led in scoring by Freddie Chavez, who had 17 points.

Also, Marcus Faison had 15 points and Jose Escobedo chipped in with 16 points. Edmond Stansbury had 11 crucial points in the fourth quarter to ice away the victory.

Irvin's biggest lead of the game was 17 points in the third quarter when they were up 64-47. The Wildcats trimmed the lead midway through the third with a 10-2 run, but never got any closer than seven points.

"Dunbar began to get their rhythm in the third quarter, but we just stepped it up defensively and did the fundamental things" Castillo said. "I told the kids not to panic and they came through."

Irvin will meet Trinity at 1 p.m. today at Chaparral Center. The winner will be headed for Austin. Irvin, who lost to Riverside in the region quarterfinals last year, now has the same chance to experience what Riverside accomplished a year ago.

INVITE: Lee in fourth place after 363 round

(From 1C)

better score from the fifth golfer. The Central girls are looking for some redemption.

"They are still thinking about that," said Bartlett. "Synider will be tougher (today) and it will be a battle. We will be in the thick of it."

Snyder is second at 359 while Abilene High (362), Midland Lee (363) and Borger (368) round out the top five. For the Lady Rebels, taking the fourth place spot was a relief, especially after the disappointment on the golfer's faces after the round. The position means that the Lee golfers will be grouped with the top three teams. That will not only be a chance to make up for Friday's round but good experience for the future.

"We have our major (district) competitors here and we are a few strokes within both of them," said Kelly Feavel, who led the Lady Rebels and is tied for third place in the Purple Division with an 86. "We have experience coming back and they know how to do it."

The Lady Rebels did out play Central in last years regional tournament before and Coach Phyllis Sutton thinks that, if the four juniors and one sophomore go about their business, making up strokes can happen.

"I think we have a chance to win," said Coach Sutton. "They can shoot lower. The 14 strokes is not that much. If all of us play, we will be successful. If you play close or beat district teams, it helps when district starts."

Midland High is tied for seventh with Hereford at 370. The performance is an improvement from the score of 391 shot in the one round last season and shows the strides the program is making.

Emily Conine took charge for the Lady Bulldogs with a first-round 86, which ties her with Feavel, five strokes behind Marissa Gortney of Odessa Permian. Conine had mixed feelings about the tournament despite being well-ahead of the goal (a top-10 finish) she set for herself.

"The wind wasn't much of a problem and it seems I would have shot better," said Conine. "I was hitting the ball well. I just didn't make any long putts."

In the Purple Division's medalist race, Gortney does have a three-stroke lead over Venus Lau of San Angelo Central. Conine and Feavel are five back.

The Maroon Division, Dumas' Jamie McInturff also came in with an 81 to take first place over Suzanne Sowers of Lubbock Coronado. Sowers shot an 84 for the Lady Mustangs, who leads the Maroon Division team race by 47 strokes over Amarillo Tascosa. Coronado would be in fourth place in the Purple Division.

Giants offer Cowboy reserve lineman Stone $10 million

IRVING (NYT) — Cowboys restricted free agent Ron Stone, who started one game on the offensive line in 1995, was signed to a five-year, $10 million offer sheet by the New York Giants yesterday.

The deal includes a $1.8 million signing bonus with base salaries of $1.3 million in 1996, $1.5 million in 1997, $1.6 million in 1998, $1.8 million in 1999 and $2 million in 2000, said Brad Blank, Stone's agent.

The Cowboys, who tendered the minimum qualifying offer of $356,000 to Stone, have seven days to match the offer or receive the Giants' fourth-round draft choice as compensation.

Cowboys vice president Stephen Jones said yesterday that the club would "use the entire week to analyze," the situation but that the Cowboys are not expected to match such an offer for a player not projected in next year's starting lineup. The Cowboys have $2.5 million remaining under the salary cap with which to finance a draft and renegotiate running back Emmitt Smith's contract. Losing Stone would leave the team with four healthy offensive linemen under contract who have started an NFL game.

The Giants' offer would make Stone, 24, their second-highest-paid offensive lineman, behind 10-year veteran Doug Riesenberg.

"We feel that here's a guy who is young, who's big, and who has a lot of talent," Giants pro personnel director Tim Rooney said. "We recognize the fact that he was behind two very good guards and two very good tackles."
