What is an electrician?

He is a man who understands the creation, transmission and expression of power.

What is a Chiropractor?

He is also a man, but who understands the creation, transmission and expression of mental currents in man. Simplifies things, doesn't it?

The Chiropractor, instead of being a "Wonderful person" doing "uncanny things" is but a common man understanding a common principle. With his idea of spines, with and without subluxations, is but an electrician dealing with intellectual currents. When you tell him your "stomach room is dark" he knows just what button in this line shaft is wrong, and he knows how to turn on that button. When that button is in position the currents flow forward to the organ connected at the other end and the stomach lights up (function is restored.)

Stop! Think!

When your car needs lubrication do not say to the service man—"Put in a quart of oil".

Your watch probably costs about $75.00 and will last indefinitely. Your car costs from $500.00 to $5000.00 and will last probably from three to five years, depending a great deal upon proper lubrication.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.-During the height of the New Orleans carnival season Jachin Fell, wealthy though somewhat mysterious cit-izen, and Dr. Ansley, are discussing a series of robberies by an individual known as the Midnight Masquer, who, invariably attired as an aviator, has long defied the police. Joseph Maillard, wealthy banker, is giving a ball that night, at which the Masquer has threatened to appear and rob the guests. Fell and Ansley, on their way to the affair, meet a girl dressed as Columbine, seemingly known to Fell, but masked, who accompanies them to the ball.

CHAPTER II.-Lucie Ledanois, recently the ward of her uncle, Joseph Mailard, is the Columbine.

CHAPTER III.

The Bandit.

Joseph Maillard's library was on the ground floor of the house; it was a sedate and stately room, and was invariably shut off to itself. Not even tonight, of all nights, was it thrown open with the remainder of the house. had assured him that there was no dit. His son was not among the num-The half dozen were nearly all elderly men, and, with the exception of Jachin Fell, all were men of prominent affairs.

About the table grouped Maillard and his guests. Maillard, standing before a small wall safe that flanked the open hearth, lifted his silver goblet asteam with beads. The moment for which he had been waiting was here; he launched his little thunderbolt with an air of satisfied importance.

"My friends, I have a confession to make!" he announced. "Today I received a note from the Midnight Masquer stating that he would be with us this evening, presumably at the hour of midnight, his usual time."

These words brought an instant silence. The half-dozen men were tense, watchful, astonished. But Maillard swung up his silver cup and laughed gaily.

"I took full precautions, gentlemen. The hour of danger is past, and the notorious bandit has not arrived-or, if he has arrived, he is now in the hands of the law. So up with your cups, my friends—a lifelong health to Mardi Gras, and damnation to prohibition and the Midnight Masquer!'

From everyone broke a swift assent the toast, a murmur of relieved ter

Fell in his apologetic fashion. "Your disguise is really excellent." "Thank you." The bandit's voice held a thin mockery. "Coming from you, sir, that compliment is most wel-

"What the devil does the fellow mean?" exploded Judge Forester. "Then you are not aware that Mr. Fell is a man of large affairs?" The bandit's white teeth flashed in a smile. "He is a modest man, this attorney! And a dangerous man also, I assure you. But come, Mr. Fell, I'll not betray you. Jachin Fell obviously did not appreciate the pleasantry. His shy and wondering features assumed a set and hardened look.

"Whoever you are," he responded, a subtle click of anger in his tone, 'you shall be punished for this!"

"For what, Mr. Fell? For knowing too much of your private affairs?" The bandit laughed. "Fear not-I am only an amateur at this game, fortunately! So do your worst, and my blessing upon you! Now, gentlemen, kindly withdraw a few paces. All but you, Maillard; I'm not through with you yet." The automatic pistol gestured; under its menace everyone obeyed the command, for the calm assurance of the bandit made it seem extremely likely that he would use the weapon without compunction. The men with drew toward the far end of the room, where a word from the aviator halted them. Maillard remained standing where he was.

The Masquer advanced to the table Here Maillard summoned half a and gathered the heap of money and dozen of his particular cronies and i scarfpins into the leathern pocket of friends, after the stroke of midnight his coat. During the process his gaze did not waver from the group of men, danger to be expected from the ban- nor did the threat of his weapon lift from the banker before him. "Now, Maillard," he quietly ordered,

"you will have the kindness to turn around and open the wall safe behind ou. And don't touch the button.' Maillard started.

"That safe! Why-why-d-n you, I'll do nothing of the sort!' "If you don't," was the cool threat,

The silver goblets were lifted, touched in a musical clinking of edges. and the aromatic breath of juleps filled the library as the drinkers, in true southern fashion, buried noses in the fragrant mint. Then, as the cups were lowered, from the recess of the curtained windows at one end of the room came a quiet voice:

"I thank you, gentlemen! But I must remind you, Maillard, that there was not a time limit set in the note." With a simultaneous gasp everyone turned. Maillard staggered; his face went livid. Every eye was fastened upon that amazing figure now advancing from the shadows of the recess. It was the figure of an aviator, clad in leather from top to toe, the goggles and helmet shield completely masking his head and features from recognition. In his hand he held an automatic pistol, which covered the group of men before him with its threatening mouth.

"Not a sound, if you please," he warned, his voice thin and nasal-obviously disguised. "I trust that none of you gentlemen is armed, because I am very quick on the trigger. A very pleasant surprise, Maillard? You'd given me up, eh?"

For an instant no one spoke. Then Maillard moved slightly, moved his hand toward a button set in the wall near the safe. The voice of the bandit leaped out at him like thin steel: button-

Maillard, kindly begin! I believe that you carry a wallet? If you please."

The banker could st but obey. His hands trembling with fear and rage, he took from his pocket a wallet, and emptied a sheaf of bills upon the table. One after another, the other men followed his example. When it

The exception was Jachin Fell, who, suddenly alert and watchful, had turned his attention to Maillard and the safe, a keen speculation in his gaze as though he were wondering what that steel vault would produce. All were silent. There was something about this Midnight Masquer that held them intently. Perhaps some were inclined to think him a jester, one of the party masquerading under the famous bandit's guise: if so, his last words to Maillard had recame his turn, Jachin Fell drew a moved all such thought. ## He's Always Well Dressed

The man who wears tailored-to-measure clothes is always well dressed. He can wear his clothes until they are practically worn to a "frazzle" yet that air of distinctly good dress is ever with him.

It pays in the long run to wear clothes made for YOU and no one else. Come in see us.

Bring us that old suit and see how we make it look, you will be surprised when we return it.

IT COSTS ONLY ONE DOLLAR TOO.

Remember we have some good shoes, furnishing goods, and hats that we assure you is always worth one hundred cents on the dollar.
