KANSAS CITY MARKET

Kansas City Stock Yards, September 11, 1922.—Cattle receipts were larger today than on any previous Monday this year. Most grades held steady and some common kinds were slightly lower. Demand showed considerable volume, and the general railroad situation was improved. Hogs opened fully steady and closed 10 cents higher in the face of declines at more eastern markets. Sheep and lambs were steady.

Receipts today were 35,000 cattle, 8,000 hogs, and 9,000 sheep, compared with 25,000 cattle, 9,000 hogs, and 8,000 sheep a week ago, and 30,550 cattle, 7,150 hogs, and 10,150 sheep a year ago.

Demand for cattle today was active, and in keeping with the large supply offered. Some of the best fat steers and butcher cattle were slightly stronger, with bulk of sales of all kinds except common grades steady. Fed steers were in moderate supply, and none showed prime finish. Most of the offerings sold at $9.75 to $10.35. Grass fat steers sold at $4 to $9.25 and maintained about the same price spread as last week. Good to choice grassers sold readily, but there was some dullness in the ordinary classes. Veal calves, cows ,and heifers sold have increased demand. Notwithstanding 10 to 15 cent desister at Roaring Springs Saturday clines at more eastern markets, hog prices here ruled 5 to 10 cents higher under an active demand. The top price was $9, and bulk of sales $8.50 to $8.90. Local receipts were moderate, while the run in Chicago was larger than for several Mondays past. Pigs were in active demand at $8 to $8.85. Trade in the sheep division was active at strong to 25 cents higher prices The better grades of lambs showed the full advance. Western lambs sold up to $12.90, and native lambs at $12 to $12.50. Light weight ewes sold at $6.50 to $6.75.

Receipts and volume of trade in the horse and mule market showed further increases. Prices held steady. There s considerable inquiry from southern

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—During the height of the New Orleans carnival season Jachin Fell, wealthy though somewhat mysterious citizen, and Dr. Ansley, are discussing a series of robberies by an individual known as the Midnight Masquer, who, invariably attired as an aviator, has long defied the police. Joseph Maillard, wealthy banker, is giving a ball that night, at which the Masquer has threatened to appear and rob the guests. Fell and Ansley, on their way to the affair, meet a girl dressed as Columbine, seemingly known to Fell, but masked, who accompanies them to the ball.

CHAPTER III.—In his library Joseph Maillard and a group of friends are held up and robbed by the Midnight Masquer. CHAPTER IV.—Lucie Ledanois, the last of an old family, is in straitened circumstances. Joseph Maillard's handling of her funds has been unfortunate. Fell is an old friend of her parents and deeply interested in the girl. Henry Gramont, really the prince de Gramont, son of a French father and an American mother, but who spurns the title of prince, is enamored of Lucie and believes himself a not unfavored sultor.

CHAPTER V.—Gramont's chauffeur, Hammond, sergeant in the American army in France, and there known to Gramont, lives with him. He was the original Midnight Masquer, and Gramont, for a particular purpose, after discovering Hammond's activities, assumes the role. Where Hammond had been a robber for financial gain, Gramont, of course, is not. He arranges to return the "loot" to those whom he has robbed. The jewels and money, in individual packages, are got ready for delivery next day to their original owners. That night they are stolen from Gramont's auto.

CHAPTER V.—Gramont's chauffeur, He was the other, sudden-look with Chacherre and the other boys?"

"What's that?" The glittering eyes flamed up with suspicion and distrust, "Here—with them? No, I didn't. I been away fishing all afternoon. What to use such an accumulation of expensive cars!

Gramont glanced around, but found no trace of machinery in the barn. Remembering the motor that he had beard be trued from the deorway to their original owners. That night they are stolen from Gramont's auto.

CHAPTER VII.—Lucie summons Gramont to her home and shows him the packages from his auto. He admits he is the Midnight Masquer, but convincer or that he had no thought of robbery. He refuses, however, to explain his purpose. The packages are returned to their owners.

The packages are returned to their owners.

CHAPTER VIII.—That evening Fell, Gramont, and Dr. Ansley, at the Krewe of Comus ball, are accested by an intoxicated masked individual whom they recognize as Bob Maillard. He invites them to a convivial party in a private room. They refuse, and Gramont leaves the building. Joseph Maillard seeks his son, fearing public scandal as a result of Bob's condition. With Fell and Ansley they find the room where the revels are going on. Entering they discover an individual, attired as an aviator, in the act of robbing the intoxicated youths. In a struggle that ensues Maillard is shot and killed. The "Masquer" escapes.

CHAPTER X.—He cannot see the speakers, but the conversation ends singularly abruptly. Gramont does not investigate. Hammond finds a dead man in some woods and is charged by Ben Cacherre and two other men with murder. Gramont can do nothing. The men take Hammond to the town of Houma. Later Gramont finds a bloodstained knife where he had heard the voices. He then realizes that Cacherre was one of the men talking, and is the murderer.

He would then go on to New Orleans and have Gumberts arrested, although he had no expectation that the master crook could be held on the murder-accessory charge. If this place were used for the lotteries, even, he was fairly certain that Memphis Izzy would have his own tracks covered. The men higher up always did.

They were lined up as deep as the barn would hold them, crammed into every available foot of space; well over a dozen cars, he reckoned swiftly. What was more, all were cars of the Fell's roadster. Directly before him upon the mind of Gramont; a moment later it became certainty, when he came to a stop before an automobile engine lying on the bench. He found it to be the engine from a Stutz-the latest multi-valve type adopted by that make of car, and this particular bit of machinery looked like new. Gramont inspected it, and he saw that the men had done their work well. The original engine number had been carefully dug out, and the place as carefully filled and leveled with metal. Beside it a new number had Gramont left the covert and walked been stamped. A glance at the electrical equipment around showed that these workers had every appliance with which to turn out the most fin-

> As he straightened up from the engine Gramont's eyes fell upon a typed sheet of paper affixed to the wall above the bench. His gaze widened as he inspected it by the failing light. Upon that paper was a list of cars. After each car was a series of numbers plainly comprising the original numbers of the engine, body, radiator and other component parts, followed by another series of new numbers to be inserted. That sheet of paper showed brains, organizing ability, care and attention to the last detail!

Remembering the motor that he had don't know what's happened here this one's been talking." CHAPTER VI.—Ben Cacherre, an individual of unsavory character, appears to be associated with Jachin Fell. He has a peculiar interview with one Memphis Izzy Gumberts, notorious influential crook, in which there is significant reference to a mysterious "hess."

"Do you know Fell's writing?" asked Gramont, with difficulty forcing himself to meet the situation coherently. Jachin Fell—the boss!

"I know his mitt, all right,"

From his pocket Gramont produced a paper-the memorandum or agreement which he had drawn up with Fell the previous afternoon, relating to the oil company The other man took it and switched on an electric light bulb overhead. In this glare he was revealed as a ratty little individual with open mouth and teeth hanging out-an adenoidal type, and certainly a criminal type.

It crossed the mind of Gramont that one blow would do the work-but he stood motionless. No sudden game would help him here. The discovery that Fell was "the boss" paralyzed him completely. He had never dreamed heard of. He stood motionless, know- of such a contingency. Fell, of all

Gramont's brain worked fast. By overcoming this guttersnipe he might have the whole place at his mercy—but that was not what he "Who are you?" demanded Gramont, | wanted. He suddenly realized that he had other and more important fish to fry in New Orleans. Gumberts was there. Fell was there. What he must do demanded time, and his best play was to gain all the time possible, and to prevent this gang from suspecting him in any way.

"Did you see Ben Chacherre?" he countered.

"Uh-huh-seen him just after he come. Gumberts will be out day after tomorrow, he said. The boss is framin' some sort of deal on a guy that he wants laid away-some guy name o' Hammond. Chacherre is running it. He figgers on gettin' Hammond on account of some car that's bein' hunted Gramont laughed suddenly, for there was a grim humor about the thing. So Jachin Fell wanted to "get something" on poor Hammond! And Chacherre had seized the golden opportunity that presented itself this afternoon-instead of "getting" Hammond for the theft of a car, Chacherre had coolly fastened murder upon him!

"Ben is one smart man; I expect he thinks the gods are working for him,' said Gramont, thinly. "So you don't know what happened today, eh? Well, its great news, but I've got no time te talk about it. They'll tell you when they get back-"

"Tell him yourself," Gramont laughed, good-humoredly. "Gumberts is coming out day after tomorrow, is be? That'll be Friday. Hm! I think that I'd better bring Fell out here the same day, if I can make it. I probably won't see Gumberts until then-I'm not working in with him and he doesn't know me yet-but I'll try and get out here on Friday with Fell. Now, I'll have to beat it in a hurry. He rushed into the house, found the fire had died down beyond all danger, and swiftly removed the few things end of that time you'll be free." they had taken from the car. Carrying these, he stumbled back to where he had hidden the automobile. He put a hand through the bars. scarcely dared to think, scarcely dared to congratulate himself on the luck that had befallen him, until he found himself in his own car once more, and with open throttle sweeping out through the twilight toward Paradis and Houma beyond. A whirlwind of mad exultation was seething within him-exultation as sudden and tremendous as the past weeks had been uneventful and dragging.

Gramont, in common with many others, had heard much indefinite rumor of an underground lottery game that was being worked among the negroes of the state and the Chinese villages along the gulf coast. And now he knew definitely.

Lotteries have never died out in Louisiana since the brave old days of the government-ordained gambles, laws and ordinances to the contrary. No laws can make the yellow man and the black man forego the get-richquick heritage of their fathers. On the Pacific coast lotteries obtain and will obtain wherever there is a China-In Louisiana the days of the grand lottery have never been forgotten. The last two years of high wages had made every negro wealthy, comparatively speaking. The lottery mongers would naturally find them a ripe harvest for the picking. And who would gravitate to this harvest field if not the great Gumberts, the uncaught Memphis Izzy, the promoter who had never been "mugged!"

Here, at one stroke, stumbling on the thing by sheer blind accident, Gramont had located the nucleus of the whole business!

Gradually his brain cooled to the realization of what work lay before him. He was through Paradis, almost without seeing the town, and switched on his lights as he took the highway to Houma. Sober reflection seized him. Not only was this crowd of crooks working a lottery, but they were also managing a stupendous thievery of automobiles, in which cars were looted by wholesale! And the man at the head of it all, the man above Memphis Izzy and his crooks, was Jachin Fell of New Orleans.

Did Lucie Ledanois dream such a thing? No. Gramont dismissed the question at once. Fell was not an unusual type of man. There were many Jachin Fells throughout the country, he reflected. Men who applied their brains to crooked work, who kept themselves above any actual share in the work, and who profited hugely by tribute money from every crook in every crime.

To the communities in which they lived such men were patterns of all that wealthy gentlemen should be. Seldom, except perhaps in gossip of the underworld, was their connection with crime ever suspected. And-this thought was sobering to Gramontnever did they come within danger of retribution at the hands of the law. Their ramifications extended too far into politics; and the governors of some Southern states have unlimited powers of pardon.

"This is a big day!" reflected Gramont, dismissing the sinister suggestion of this last thought. "A big day! What it will lead to, I don't know. Not the least of it is the financial end of it—the oil seepage! That little iridescent trickle of oil on the water means that money worries are over, both for me and for Lucie. I'm sorry that I am mixed up with Fell; I've enough money of my own to drill at least one good well, and one is all we'll need to bring in oil on that place. Well, we'll see what furns up! My first job is to make sure Hammond is safe, and to relieve his mind. I'll have to leave him in jail, I suppose-"

Why did Fell want to "get something" on Hammond? To this there was no answer.

He drove to Houma to find the town abuzz with excitement, for the news of the sheriff's murder had stirred the place wildly. Proceeding straight to the courthouse, Gramont encountered Ben Chacherre as he was leaving the "Hello, there!" he exclaimed. "Lost my read. Where's Hammond?" Chacherre jerked his head toward the courthouse.

"In yonder. Say, are you going back to the city tonight?"

"Yes." Gramont regarded him.

"Take me back, will you? I've missed the last up train, and if you're goin' back anyhow I won't have to hire a car. I can drive for you, and we'll make it in a couple of hours, before midnight sure." "Hop in," said Gramont, nodding toward the car. "I'll be back as soon as I've had a word with Hammond.

"Not a chance," said the other, conclusively. "Six deputies up there now, and quite a bunch of ex-soldiers comin' to stand guard. You goin' to

No danger of his getting lynched, fight the case?" "No," said Gramont. "Can't fight a sure thing, can you? I'm sorry for him, though." Chacherre shrugged his shoulders and got into the car.

Gramont was much relieved to find that there was no danger of lynching, which had been his one fear. It was with much persuasion that he got past the guard and into the courthouse, where he was received by a number of deputies in charge of the situation. After conferring with them at some length, he was grudgingly taken to the cell occupied by Hammond. The latter received him with a wide grin, and gave no signs of the grueling ordeal you summon, by making publication of through which he had passed.

"Listen, old man," said Gramont, lished in the county of Floyd if there earnestly. "Will you play out the game hard to the end? I'll have to be a newspaper published therein, but leave you here for two days. At the if not, then in any newspaper publish-

Floydada's Trade Territory is Expanding; Local Business Houses Are Alive to Situation

That Floydada is the logical distributing point for this section of the state is no longer disputed, and it may be said that business men of this city are alive to the situation. The retailer has prospered for a number of years, and in many instances their various businesses have grown until they more resemble wholesale institutions. However, until recently, Floydada has never figured in the wholesale world, even though there has been considerable demand for larger dealers.

The city of Floydada is one of the most beautiful in all the Panhandle, and is surrounded by as fertile farming land as will be found anywhere. Each year scores of families from various sections of America come to this county to procure homes. This

PRODUCERS REFINERY CO.

Mr. Nelson is successful simply because he believes in his line. He will tell you in a moment that there is no better gasoline and lubricating oil than that put out by the Producers Refining Company. And as a matter of fact these products have stood up under some very severe tests. We allow at least three square feet of floor space per bird and more would be better. Less means trouble sooner or later. Overrowding in the houses means frequent leaning, which is expensive.

Lime is also a good disinfectant to ise around the hen house, especially on the droppings. Wood ashes should not be used directly on the poultry fertilizer, because it injures the value of the fertilizer. Sand may be used to sprinkle over the droppings. Not ong ago, I visited a successful poultry keeper in Stamford, Texas, and it would have done your heart good to see the perfect cleanliness of all nouses and yards. Everything in and about the houses was clean. Needless to say, the chickens were in perfect health. Some people don't know how to clean a hen house, these of course never will have clean hen houses. Some people are too lazy to clean up around the place. One man told me once he didn't believe in cleaning hen houses, it was too much like work, that he had rather move the hen house. Another man had the house full of blue bugs, so he preferred to burn the house, because it was too much like work to kill the bugs by using carbolineum properly. We can offer nothing to them. We do not believe it necessary to go to the extreme of cleanliness because it costs money.

Some hen houses we have seen were overcrowded with old and young chickens, roosting all over the inside, nest boxes, drinking vessels, etc. The house was poorly ventilated, and the animal heat when the chickens had all The chickens had to be driven inside and it was easy to understand why they had rather roost in trees than roosting in such a stuffy close and filthy house. In these houses soon a roupy odor makes its appearance and then the mortality increases.

To raise chickens successfully it is necessary to consider the welfare of the birds. We have seen many farm flocks that could have had free range penned up in a small and dirty yard year after year. We have seen many more farm flocks of young chickens raised year after year in the same yards. This is a practice which should be condemned very vigorously, because if anywhere, surely on a farm, the chickens can be raised on fresh ground each year. Scatter the coops out and give the chickens a chance to dig in fresh dirt as much as possible.

We believe it better to keep the fowls inside a hen house all the time the entire year around than to let them run on small, wet and dirty yards, it is at least possible to clean the houses. There are many ways of of the most popular in the Panhandle cleaning yards. The first is not to overcrowd them, and the next is to plow or plant them into something green and growing. Growing crops quickly purify poultry yards. Lime may also be used regularly to advant-
