Pat Posey Dead; Result of Pistol Shot

Accidental Discharge of Pistol in Slaughterhouse Caused the Fatal Wound

Pat Posey was fatally injured by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of a friend Thursday evening about 6:30 at Lubbock. He was shot at about 8:00 o'clock Saturday night. Posey was at the Lubbock Cemetery Saturday about two o'clock. Mrs. E. Green and of the city, cousins of the deceased, and W. L. Borer, wife and son, Frank, close friends of the Posey family, attended the funeral services.

Just a week more than 13 months ago Pat's father, J. B., Posey, formerly in the leather business at Floydada, and young son, Evans, were killed by gas and pistol in the hands of a friend. The case had been a mystery for the last few years, according to Pat's attorney when the event made when he recovered consciousness shortly before his death. He was at his friend's home when the accident occurred.

At the time of his death Pat was working in one of the slaughterhouses at Lubbock. He is survived by his wife and two sisters.

How to Plant Sweet Clover

By O. E. White in the Plainview Herald.

In answer to many inquiries as to when, where, and how to grow sweet clover, or Medicago, the following will prove successful in this region:

When to Sow.—The best results are obtained by early spring sowing, as soon as the ground can be prepared. It should be sown as soon as it is cool enough to work in the soil. It makes a better spring growth and during the summer than it does the previous year.

Where to Sow.—Any good farm land will do.

OXFORD, Miss.

It was a pleasant day on the road, a day of light and shade. The sun shone brightly, but there was a cool breeze in the air. The travelers were in good spirits, enjoying the beauty of the countryside. As they drove along, they noticed the vibrant colors of the flowers and the greenery of the fields.

The road was smooth, and the car traveled at a steady pace. The driver, a skilled and experienced hand, expertly navigated the vehicle through the turns and around the curves. The passengers, seated comfortably, chatted and laughed, their voices carried by the wind.

The landscape passed by in a blur as the car continued its journey. The travelers were lost in thought, each absorbed in their own world.

The sun began to set, casting a warm glow over the horizon. The road wound its way through the hills, the shadows stretching long behind them. The passengers, now quiet, admired the beauty of the sunset and the tranquility of the moment.

As the car approached their destination, they eagerly took in their surroundings, eager to explore what the day had in store for them. The journey had been long, but the reward was well worth it. They were ready to embrace whatever adventure the day held.

The Bitter Creek community raised $500 by private subscription last year for the purchase of school equipment. The old schoolhouse was removed, and a new single-dwell, blackboards, desks, chairs, Vanities, urinals, and seated stoves were provided for each of the three rooms. The purchase of the new equipment appealed to the pride of the pupils and they would have kept every piece of it clean, but in good repair has been encouraged to do so by the teachers, trustees, and principal.

During the vacation, in Augest, the entire happened to vacest that community. The doors of the schoolhouse had stood wide open upon the last day of school. The cows had converted two of the rooms into a stable, and it is said that made a very comfortable sty beneath the floor. One hundred of the volume library were lying on the floor in a corner like a heap of rubbish, the physiology charts were torn into tatters by the wind and rain beating against them through an open window, the blackboards and globes were looking considerably worse for wear, and there were several male tongue twisted dead bugs out of the United States Service, which stood on before school closed by boys who amused themselves by using those in the Lake Darke and watching it flow down the Mississippi. Knee to its invasion New Orleans. The open school house was a camping station for transient laborers, and the Sun-house was a camping station for transient laborers, and the Sunday school center for all the crank boys, and poker players in the community.

The absence of public property is liable to criminal prosecution. In this case the nominal and im-ted offenses if some­one or another goes to court would have to appear in the pres­ence of transient campers, idle boys, cows, pigs, and the weath­er. The real offenders, and the ones morally responsible, are the teachers, trustees, and parents in the community. The board of education gives them the tender to leave the schoolhouse in the afternoon without seeing that the doors are locked and the windows securely fastened. Neglect of this re­spect is equivalent to encourag­ing vandalism.

While the above case is an ex­treme one and by no means typ­i- cal, it is the loss a fact that hundreds of rural school communi­ties in Texas are very negligent in the care of their school property. The physical condition of the school property is a very sad index to the amount of civic pride a commun­ity has. It reflects the local sentiment for which adults, the men, women, and children in the community are jointly re­sponsible. If the school property is in good repair, or better to your community is suffering, do not shift all the blame to the boys, the teachers, and the boys. Take part of it to your­self. According to one of the leading jobbers of Fort Worth, his parents faced Texas jobbers within the next twelve months unless there shall be some relief obtained from the increased freight rates effective since last November. This jobber points out that out-of-state jobbers can ship to points within a very short distance of his wholesale house cheaper than he can himself. He says that Kansas City houses are a yugo within twenty-five miles of Ft. Worth and under him on account of the rates. His prediction is, "If there is not some kind of relief Texas will undergo a period of commercial depression that he can himself."
