It's the man who really counts in farming. Fertile land is necessary, but a master mind must solve the problem of production.

It is while roaming through the fields in the country that we hear Nature's sweet sympathy in all of its glory.

Live at Home

The maritime news columns of the press announce that a large vessel loaded with canned goods at Baltimore has sailed for Galyeston, to supply the Texas with canned goods, and the incident serves to forcefully remind us that we are not buying at home.

It is the old, old story of carrying coal to New Castle when we ship our fruits to the East and buy back the canned products; or worse still, to permit our vegetables and fruits to rot on the ground for want of canneries to use them. There is nothing that so builds a country as turning waste into profit, and there are many Texas products that have golden opportunities along this line.

A Factory on the Farm

Farmer Radford has pointed out that a silo is a factory on the farm and therefore lends itself to co-operation of the commercial and agricultural interests, and the farmer gets the profit of both producer and consumer.

We need more of these twin agencies of prosperity, and commercial clubs cannot render a better service to their communities than in encouraging the building of silos. The silo is a great business educator. It srouses the spirit of enterprise, awakens the joy of ownership.

ALEXANDERS FOOTERY

FOR LADIES

Our Fall line of Krippendorf-Dittman shoes is ready for you. Nearly every well dressed woman in Haskell has worn a pair of these shoes, and if there is one who hasn't we would like for her to see this new line before she buys another pair. Notwithstanding the advance in materials and the cost of labor we are able to give you just as good values as we have been for the last four years, and when you see the new line, those of former seasons will suffer in comparison as to style. We think the styles for this season are the prettiest they have been for several years. Patent leather is the leader of them all both in dress shoes and shoes for the street. We have several styles in patent both in lace boots and buttons. You will have to see them to appreciate them. Of course we have the dull leathers as well and a beauty in a satin boot for strictly dress wear.

Don't forget that we fit your foot. On account of the large assortment that we carry, and the different widths, it is like having a pair of shoes made to order when you get fitted here.

DEVELOP THE CHILD By Mrs. E. P. Turner

The old idea that children were individual students of all things this has been tried the boys and girls find a greater pleasure in both work and study, and a higher standard of childhood is being established. The idea is based upon the theory that children are, or should be. interested in healthy sports and that by banding them together in large numbers a greater degree of efficiency can be developed. For instance, if one of the children shows signs of unusual development, the balance of the boys and girls will strive to reach the same perfection and therefore the entire number will be benefitted. A workshop where the boys can congregate and build articles of furniture and a cooking school for the girls have been included in the work of

In the first place, the variety is great. A few general ideas will be found in all of the garments, and

Each Coat, each suit, each dress in this display has the same trade-mark, which is reproduced here. We call attention to the trade-mark, because all over the country it means quality-

It Always Helps

says Mrs, Sylvania Woods, of Clifton Mills, Ky., In writing of her experience with Cardui, the woman's tonic. She says further: "Before I began to use Cardui, my back and head would hurt so bad, I thought the pain would kill me. I was hardly able to do any of my housework. After taking three bottles of Cardui, I began to feel like a new woman. I soon gained 35 pounds, and now, I do all my housework, as well as run a big water mill.

I wish every suffering woman would give

The Woman's Tonic a trial. I still use Cardui when I feel a little bad, and it always does me good." Headache, backache, side ache, nervousness, tired, worn-out feelings, etc., are sure signs of womanly trouble. Signs that you need Cardui, the woman's tonic. You cannot make a mistake in trying Cardui for your trouble. It has been helping weak, ailing women for more than fifty years.

The deceased was a young man, only about thirty-four years of age. A man of exceptionally manly qualities. A fine business man, and one who won and deserved the friendship of all who knew him. It is unfortunate indeed that the wife and children are deprived of the happy companionship of this husband and father. Sometimes we think condolence and expressions of sympathy are idle, but those who have to pass through such ordeals know they help to bear the sorrows that come in this life, and such words have a meaning that only the bereaved can interpret. In expressing the universal sorrow of this community over this untimely death and extending our sincere sympathy, we hope, if posssible, to encourage resignation and forttitude in bearing the sorrow Death has brought to this ideal home. May eternal hope in a triumphant immortality comfort the bereaved.

Ladies Aid Society

Our meeting Monday at the Baptist Church was very enthusiastic and a large number present. The president opened the meeting after the song service by reading the 15th chapter

The Society decided to take a special course in missons. This series consists of one lesson a month. The motion was also carried to have a public jubilee meeting in the near future. This meeting is to celebrate the number of years the women have been pressing forward to lead people to a higher life. We hope to make this a very interesting program and will be delighted to have everyone attend who can possibly do so.

We are to have the new year book to help us along in the work; in fact this society intends to lay hands on all the important features to carry forward the cause of our God.

A goodly num subscriptions to the mission journal, and we'd be glad for each member in the church to read these journals and keep in touch with the work. Its a beautiful idea to keep nure literature handy for the children to read, if the older ones haven't the time. They'll be sure to things they get out of reading. Could we feel but a thousandth part as much where eternity is riously and fervently would we inquire, "And is God indeed my God?" How inexpressibly desirable is such a friend, a friend whose knowledge no enemy can elude, whose power none can resist, whose wisdom none can baffle, and whose love none can comprehend. Come and let us put forth our best efforts, for this, our eternal friend. Your body is preserved, your life spared, of how many comforts has he been the giver.

Diplomacy

By F. TOWNSEND SMITH

Count Rudolph Breitstein, secretary of the German embassy to the United States at Washington, was called one afternoon to the private office of his chief, who said to him:

There is the paper you are to take to Berlin. Take it home with you and keep it in your hiding place for important documents till your departure. But be careful. If the French office should get hold of it we would be ruined. It refers to payment for the French work on the Panama canal."

Count Rudolph took the paper, at the same time saying to the ambassa-

"It is said that no spying is done in Washington, but I do not believe it. I have reason to suspect that my biding place—a little safe in a wall in my home--is known. Let the place where I keep the key be known as well and a document might as well be laid out on a table. I will hide this paper till Saturday, the day I leave."

Miss Agnes Winterton, the daughter of an admiral of the United States navy, but whose father was dead, maintained a social position in Washington that she had inherited, but which she could not have retained in poverty in any other city except Washington. Miss Winterton was sit. ting in the drawing room of Count Breitstein, having sent up her card to the count's mother, with whom he lived, when a latchkey was put in the front door lock, and Count Rudolph himself entered the house.

The rain was coming down in torrents, and the room in which Miss Winterton sat was quite dark from the storm and the heavy window curtains. The count came into the room, where she was sitting in a shaded corner, and, though he looked about the room. did not see her. But he wore glasses and had not wiped the moisture from them after entering the house. Going to a bookcase, be took down a volume from the left hand corner of the top shelf, opened the volume, put a paper in it, closed the case and left the room unconscious of having been observed Mounting to his room, he threw himself on a lounge for a brief rest before dressing for dinner.

The countess, who was changing from street to dinner costume, kept Miss Winterton waiting some time. After Count Rudolph left the drawing room the young lady, yielding to a natural feminine curiosity, went to the bookcase and took down the book in which Rudolph had placed the paper and, opening the former, took out a document which she read.

"The information contained in that few pages of matter," she said to herself, "if used by me would make us all rich." Then, folding it, she put it hack in its place and resumed her

It is singular that one who could yield to a temptation to gratify a curiosity she had no right to indulge could have had the fortitude to resist the temptation to make a fortune by means of the information derived. But we are all bundles of inconsistencies, and women, though more likely than men to yield to some petty folble, are by no means behind the sterner sex in resisting great ones.

The countess did not mention to her son Miss Winterton having called, and he remained in ignorance of the young lady's having been in the house at the same time as himself. He left for Berlin in a few days and was not back in Washington again for several weeks. On the night after his return he met Miss Winterton at a reception given by a member of the cabinet. He chatted with her for a few minutes. uot for a moment suspecting that she held a secret that would make her rich and secure his dismissal from the German diplomatic corps in disgrace.

Time wore on. The diplomatic business bearing upon the building of the caual was settled, the necessary treaties were signed and the work commenced. Meanwhile Count Rudolph and Miss Winterton were thrown occasionally together. The countess was especially pleased with her and often invited her to her house. The count had no idea of marrying an American wife, but felt that if he were so inclined Miss Winterton would be his choice. Washington gossip had it that Miss Winterton had set her cap for the German secretary of legation, but there was not a word of truth in the report. The count was a man of the world and, above all, a diplomat. He asked her to be his wife simply because he made up his mind that he couldn't very well get on without her. Added to this. he knew that when he introduced her in Berlin she would take high social rank there. She was quite clever and passably comely. But, above all, there was a high bred air about her that would always make her prominent in any society in which she might be introduced. So he proposed to her and was accepted.

One evening not long after the engagement they were sitting in the drawing room. Miss Winterton arose. went to the bookcase, took out the book she had taken before, opened it :blas bes

Love In the Stock Market

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

About the close of the last century. when shares on the stock market were rising and falling like the waves of the sea under a storm, James Rigdon was for a time a power in Wall street. When it was reported that Rigdon was selling a stock everybody rushed to sell. When he bought the price would rise like the thermometer on a July morning.

Rigdon was a bachelor, and as soon as it became known among his women friends that he knew what stocks were going up and what were going down he received more attention than the handsomest man in New York. One of these ladies, Miss Martindale, he wished to claim as his own, but despite all he could do he couldn't find out whether she had any use for him other than to learn how to make money in stocks.

One evening while with her she importuned him to give her a tip on some stock that was about to be "put up." He explained to her that when he boomed a stock, if it were known that he was booming it, it would rise in value, but the trouble was that, when he wished to unload, the moment it was known that he had begun to sell, down would go the market and he would be left with a lot of "undigested securities" on his hands. He was about to put up the market price on a certain stock, but he could not take her into his scheme, for if it were known that she was buying and selling by his advice it would result disastrously for him.

"But I won't tell," she said. "Can I rely on you?"

"Certainly." "Very well. Buy Onarora Copper. It is selling at 7 cents a share."

"How awfully kind of you!" "I can rely on you?"

"Surely."

She gave his hand a special pressure when he left her and, running to the telephone, ordered him to purchase 1,000 shares of Onarora Copper. He did so without disturbing the market price of the stock half a point. Then she fell to thinking that her father and her brother and her sister would be delighted to participate in her good fortune, so she told them she had bought Onarora. There was no need for them to ask her why, because they knew she had for a long while been endeavoring to get a tip out of Mr. Rigdon. Surely there was no breach of confidence in this. So the Martindale family put what spare money they had in Onarora Copper, and each told his broker his reasons for doing so. Each broker had a number of speculators hanging about his office who were given the tip. The stock rose slowly and beautifully like sent an ambassador asking for the n sailing up toward the sky Now and again it would fall back, a few thousand shares being thrown upon the market

Her Blemish

By SAD'E OLCOTT

King Exageres of an island of Greece had but one child, a daughter, who was born with a great biemish, inasmuch as she was what we now call cross eyed. The king, fearing that his defect would sour her disposition, ordered that she should be brought up without ever seeing a reflection of her face. Her mother, the queen, who was a very beautiful woman, concurred in this plan and undertook to carry it out. The child was kept in apartments in which there was no polished surface capable of revealing to her her misfortune, and every one who came near her was directed on pain of death to refrain from mentioning it to her. The princess was carefully brought up to contemplate the good. All selfishness, untruthfulness and other evil things were held to be something apart from her. Generous motives, honorable treatment, pity for the unfortunate, were held up to her as models. The consequence was that she having naturally inherited a sweet disposition. grew up with an incongruity between her spiritual and her material self-a beautiful character, but the defect in her eyes gave her a disagreeable ex pression.

It is quite possible that had the priness grown up conscious of this look on her face her disposition might have partaken of it. At any tate, it is prob able that the beauty of her soul would not have developed as it did had a certain malignance there was in her face been constantly before her.

When the princess became of an age to marry the problem before the king and queen, her parents, was a serious one. Nevertheless she must marry, and the king entered into negotiations with a neighboring prince for an alliance. The prince came, saw the princess and went away, making some excuse for not proceeding further with the negotiations. Again and again King Exageres entered upon plans for an alliance for his daughter, but whenever the suitor saw the lady he was to marry and her blemish he withdrew

Then the queen came forward with her woman's wit to accomplish what her husband could not. She persuaded the king to enter into negotiations another time for their daughter's hand, but this time to introduce the sultor to the princess' soul pefore permitting him to see her in the flesh

It so happened that a king of a neighboring Island died at this time and was succeeded by his son, Chalcus. This young sovereign, being ambitious to extend his domain and knowing that. King Exageres baving no son, his daughter would be queen at his death, princess' hand. Word was returned to the king that his suit was acceptable to the king and queen and inviting him to enter upon a courtship, but that he must do his wooing blindfolded. Only the day before the wedding could be see his bride, and if he chose he could refuse to marry her.

King Chalcus, not having heard of the princess' blemish, was at a loss to understand such a provision. Being young and with a bit of romance in He replied, "Not yet." And the stock his being, he consented and arranged went higher. Then suddenly it be- to leave his kingdom for a season and

The lecturer, having been introduced by the hostess, cast one meaning since down at the ladies directly beneath him, then delivered his facture. It was considered rather dry by his audience. It contained no reference whatever to marriage, experimental mar-riage or any of the substitutes which

Captain Molynoux?

"I am Captain Molynoux." "I am commissioned by his eminence Cardinal Richelieu to say to you that he has heard of your duel with this young Jules Ferrier, whom you have wounded nearly to death, and to say will be your last."

Having thus spoken, the messenger turned and went away, leaving Captain Molynoux to understand that if he fought another duel the cardinal would have him executed under an edict recently promulgated Molynoux desired that the fact that he had been forbidden to fight again should have publicity in order that if occasion required him to vindicate his honor the reason for his refraining from doing so might not be misunderstood He determined therefore to celebrate his retirement from the field by giving a supper to the most eminent fighting men in Paris. He chose twelve persons to be his guests, but it appears that even at that day a fatality was attached to the number 13, for the captain, on remembering that host and guests together would make up that number, withheld the last invitation, which had not yet been sent.

Several of his guests had "been out" with him and had lived to become his friends. Indeed, if any one turned up who had fought with him he canceled an invitation in order to bonor his former opponent. These details took up some time, and it was several weeks before the supper came off. All Paris was talking about the coming affair, and many with regret that Captain Molynoux would not now be punished for his two last duels, for which he had been much blamed. In the first of the two be had killed a young man who was engaged to Mile. St. Claire, the very day before the wedding was to have taken place. To avenge this murder her brother, a stripling of seventeen had challenged paign, being in London. Molynoux and had been dangerously wounded for his pains. It was natural, therefore, that all who detested such heartlessness should regret that the captain had been ordered not to fight again, for it might happen that he would in time meet a man capable of punishing him for his acts.

The supper took place at one of the noted bostelries of the time on that street which is now the Rue Rivoli The cloth was laid in a private room. with an antercom where the host received his guests.
