A large crowd from Rebekah Lodge No. 88 participated in the Rebekah Assembly of Texas, 56th District, in Aransas Pass, Thursday.

In the group were Mrs. Fred Cloberdants, noble grand, Miss Katie Lee Clark, Miss May Dietrich, Mrs. Mabel Thompson, Mrs. Mellie Edminson, Mrs. Edwin Bal-lou, Mrs. Annie Weber, Mrs. Floy Rooke, Miss Ruth Lipscomb, Mrs. Nora Casey, Mrs. J. L. Summer, Mrs. Annie Evans, Mrs. L. V. McLester, Mrs. Mary Moss, Mrs. William Garrett.

Mrs. W. G. Harriet is now home after a week in Thomas-Spamm Hospital.

T.E.L. CLASS ENTERTAINED AT HOME OF MRS. SMITH

The T.E.L. class of the First Baptist Church was entertained at the home of Mrs. Jim Smith Friday night, with Mrs. Iona Van Dyke co-hostess. After reports from all officers and the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, a social hour followed.

Among those present were: Mrs. Nora Casey, Mrs. Mabel Thompson, Miss Ruth Lipscomb, Mrs. Sallie Townsend, Mrs. Clara Der-vage, Mrs. Loretta Raulerson, Mrs. Amy Simmons, Mrs. Floy Rooke, Mrs. DeForest, Mrs. J. A. Walling, Mrs. Flora Wellman, Mrs. Katie Moss, Mrs. Bernice Mc-Knight, Mrs. Lela Crawford, and the hostesses.

Refreshments were served to the 16 guests.

Pirates Defeat Orange Grove to Stay in Second Place in District

Fans backing their favorite Aransas County High School Pi-rates under the chilled weather witnessed a good defensive battle with the Pirates coming out on top 20 to 0. The first quarter went scoreless with the Pirates running three and four yard gainers but not able to hit their receivers on passing situations. The Bulldogs were held to shorter gains by the whole defensive Pirate line; con-sisting of Jim Weatherly, Gene Gregory, Dale Barnard, Mickey Casterline, Eugene Satsky and John Goff. These boys were well backed by Clyde Townsend and Bobby Close.

The second quarter went very much like the first with the Pi-rates picking up consistent short drives except Clyde Townsend, John Cabaniss, and Eugene Satsky were increasing their runs to longer yardage and after driving the ball down to the 11-yard line, Dan-ny Adams hit Mike Townsend for a pass over the goal line for the first Pirate counter, with Eugene Satsky kicking the extra point. Also during this quarter Adams hit Cabaniss for two completions and Goff for one. Satsky hit Adams for one completion, and the first half ended with Satsky bootlegging a fake kick for eight yards.

Early in the third quarter Adams hit Mike Townsend with a 20-yard touchdown pass to bring the score to 13 to 0. The Pirates completed several more good plays in this quarter and completed two more passes for 15 yards each.

In the fourth quarter the Pirates continued their wide play tactics with Clyde Townsend getting off on a 17-yard sweep. Orange Grove went to the air passing but were soon discouraged by the hard rush-ing of Gregory and Barnard. Also to the Bulldogs passing was the fine pass interception by Mike Townsend and 45 yard return for the last Pirate touchdown. Eugene Satsky again converted for the extra point.

WOMAN'S CLUB MONTHLY MEETING SET FOR NOV. 12
Tuesday, Nov. 12 at 3:30 p.m. Dick Weekly will give a talk on "Christianity Against Communism" at the monthly meeting of the Woman's Club of Aransas County. All members and their guests are invited to attend and hear this talk which promises to be very interesting.
Refreshments will be served.

MR. AND MRS. B. H. ALLEN, AFTER YEARS SPENT IN INDIA, PLAN TO MAKE THEIR HOME IN ROCKPORT AFTER INSPECTING COAST

Mrs. B. H. Allen arrived in Rockport recently from Alabama, via the U. S. Government's Point Four Program and India, where she was the first U. S. home economist most of that country had ever seen.

"I was there five years," she said, "and at first I was the only woman sent over from this country to help the Indians to raise their standard of living. Officials there hardly knew what to do with me. I was supposed to teach the women, and, after all, they said, nobody can do anything with the women. They're like they are, and nobody can change them.

"So for two years I went out among the people of rural India, from one end of the country to the other, and I talked to state officials, to villagers, and finally, to the women. I lived in almost every resthouse and dak-bungalow in India and visited over five hundred villages, and after that was able to put forward a program that the Indian government adopted on a national scale.

"One reason it took so long was the fact that officials and people both thought of progress in terms of electric light and things like that, and with everyone so desperately poor they knew they couldn't have anything of that kind. Eighty-five percent of India is rural, with an average cash income of only about $50 a year, and so I had to convince the people in charge that I could help. They didn't know what a home economist did, and until then it was difficult at times.

"That and the fact that there are no modern means of communication available to many of the little villages that dot the countryside."

In southern India, Mrs. Allen said, the houses are spaced out, and have little plots of ground around them, but in the rest of the country the dwellings, mostly of wood or, in some cases of sun-dried brick, are crowded closely together, all of them alike in their dirt floors mixed with cow dung, and their thinly plastered walls.

Inhabitants of one village are generally of one family, with the oldest woman acting as head of the clan, and, through centuries of living, the farms have been broken up through inheritance into parcels of land that rarely averages more than three acres.

"It's hard to tell you how pitifully poor rural India, which is the real India," Mrs. Allen said.

"There's nothing in the Indian home. A well-to-do villager with a big family may have a charpoy, a bed framework laced with strings, on which he has no covers. He may have a sort of pad and he wraps up in this like an Indian in his blanket when he sleeps, but besides this and a very few cooking utensils the family has nothing.

"The fire is contained in a chula, which may be either a hole in the ground or a dirt and cow dung stove on which meals for the entire family are cooked, and the fuel is more cow dung which has been dried. There are no chairs, no tables—nothing.

"Food is generally dried grain, ground and cooked at every meal. They grind it in a mortar and pestle arrangement, or between two flat, circular stones, and most of the time, day in and day out, they live on a sort of mush which is all they have. This is in the wheat country in northern India.

"They also make chupatties, which are like tortillas.

"In the south, they use rice instead of wheat, and southerners reared on rice will almost starve to death before they will eat anything made of wheat, they are so set in their prejudices, and vice versa."

There are other differences, too, Mrs. Allen said.

In western India, women of the states of Saurashtra and Rajasthan wear skirts and a halter effect that covers their shoulders but leaves their midriff bare. Aboriginal females of Tranacore-Cochin, in southern India, wear a skirt, and, if they're wealthy, enough necklaces to cover most of their upper body, and let it go at that. Through the rest of India, women and girls wear the graceful saris.

Burdens are borne on the women's heads, in brass or copper pots, or bamboo baskets made grain-tight with the omni-present dirt and cow dung, to which many Indians attribute antiseptic and therapeutic properties.

Water is borne from a common watering place that may be, and often is, shared with water buffaloes, bullocks, bathers, and the villages wash women.

Big white or fawn-colored zebus are the draft animals, yoked to huge, two-wheeled carts with wheels of wood, covered with arched and interwoven canes, or surrounded by stakes that help contain their loads.

"The people themselves are, in lots of ways, like people in this country," said Mrs. Allen.

"The northerners are much like those from the northern part of this country; the southerners are more voluble, and extremely hospitable. Northern food, being based on wheat and little seasoned, tends to become monotonous, but the farther south you go the spicier the food becomes.

"Those of us who were from the southern U. S. found it easier to adjust in many cases than people who came from the northern states. We were more used to heat, and most of us had some experience with highly seasoned foods along the Mexican border or somewhere like that.

"The southern Indian is extremely hospitable. If a village knows you are coming, there is always a welcoming committee out to greet you and generally some sort of little tumpa-tumpa band, they'll drape you with garlands of flowers at the slightest chance. Even when a village is so poverty-stricken that the people may only be eating one meal a day, they'll insist on sharing it with you.

"These rural Indians are India—not the city dwellers. They're curious; almost, sometimes, what we would consider impertinent, but they're not dull. They're ignorant through no fault of their own, and part of the trouble encountered in planning a program for the women was due to the fact that they're slaves to tradition, and we had to show them that there was a better way. The way they live is the way that has been handed down from mother to daughter for thousands of years as the best way to live within their economy.

But they're eager to learn, and all of them, men and women, are energetic, keen, and ready for a change.

"But once we'd shown them that home economics meant something besides electric lights and television and things that they knew they couldn't have because they were so poor—ways by which they could help themselves, they were anxious to learn. We showed them things like hygiene and sanitation, production of different kinds of food to supplement their diet, and better ways of producing that food.

"Then, too, we helped them to learn better or newer ways of preparing their own food and the new ones we taught them how to grow; we taught them the value of kitchen gardens; and one of the biggest items of all was the instruction in child care which they were pathetically eager to learn. Even today, with all the strides that India has made, fifty percent of the children die before they are five years old.

"One thing that India needs badly is better food, the right kind of food, food that will give both children and adults the nourishment they need. Many of them are suffering from malnutrition, and nutritional diseases are rife throughout the country.

"Another thing that women wanted to learn was to sew. Since time immemorial, men have been the Indian tailors, and have made all sorts of clothes that needed a seamstress. They're good, but the women knew that if they could learn to sew they could make their own and their babies' clothing much more cheaply than they could have a tailor do it. For about half the money, in fact."

The program that Mrs. Allen planned has grown greatly.

When she went to India in 1952, she was the only home economist there. When she left, five years later, there were fifteen from the United States and untold thousands of Indian women and girls had also been trained.

Moreover, home economy with an Indian twist was being taught in many of the secondary schools and colleges throughout the land, training still more teachers to use for an extension program.

During the time that Mrs. Allen was in India she traveled over practically every foot of it except Pakistan and a couple of the smaller native states. From there she brought back a world of treasure trove for the home which she and Mr. Allen, who she met in India, are planning to build at Rockport, after having looked over most of the Texas coast.

"Now these," she said, "are images of Ganesh, the elephant-headed Indian god of good luck and money lenders," and she set out, one after another, a number of little, squat figurines with elephants' trunks on a human body, some mounted in gold wire so they can be used for pendants, others as ear rings, and still others as pins or brooches.

"This one, of dark green and pale pink, is a flawed tourmaline that the jewel carver made into something out of the ordinary. Here's another one of Indian jade, and this one is topaz.

"I used to get the stones from one man and have another one mount them. The trades are handed down from father to son, and if you can find the right group of people, they can make almost anything you can name, if you can make them understand what you're driving at.

"Take these, for instance." These proved to be a series of photographs of Indian scenes, mounted in a plain little album and numbered. Closer inspection showed that they were photographs of paintings, rather than the actual scenes themselves.

"These are all water colors that I bought at a ridiculous price while I was in India, and that Bob, my husband, photographed for me afterwards. They were all done by one man, whose father and grandfather were artists before him, and he can duplicate any of them so closely, even to color, that you think you're looking at a lithographed copy."

In the pictures, dancing girls from the north and south of India vie with one another. An ash-smearing Sadhu or holy man, shows by these same ashes that he had been to pray that morning in the temple. Bearded Sikhs, ringed men from the Punjab, peer out of the pages beside a snake charmer holding an Indian cobra and a python.

"And that's another thing," Mrs. Allen said. "You hear about the snakes of India before you get there, but I never saw any, but those snake charmers had. This one is typical, and you can see them all over India.

"This fellow here," she said, "turning to another picture, 'is a Tibetan.'"

young lady with a sort of bridal veil effect surmounting her smooth black hair, while heavy jewelry encircles her neck, and long silver ear rings frame her face from either side.

An Indian musician, a young girl, smoking a big cheroot, with all the devilment in the world peeping out of her eyes; Rajputs, sons of a thousands of a thousand kings; a pretty girl with a polka-dotted, transparent sari, sporting a ring through one nostril; and the holy city of Benares, all peep from the pages.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen met in India, while both were there on government service, and were married only a short time ago. They plan on settling in Rockport.

ROCKPORT PUBLICITY SPREAD WIDELY LAST MONTH SAYS CHAIRMAN

According to the Chamber of Commerce publicity chairman, Rockport publicity was widely spread last month, with releases going out to over 500 newspapers and radio stations on the drag races held here last Sunday, and on the upcoming outdoor art show, scheduled for Nov. 8-10 at the Rockport School of Fine Arts.

Mrs. Cleo Smith returned Monday after a week's visit in Abilene.

Test Cores

two this went down as far as 20 feet.

At hole four, opposite the northern end of Little Bay Shores, the sediment increased to six feet; then there were three feet of hard sand and two feet of shell, before hard sand was encountered again. Hole five, at Canoe Lake, showed six feet of sediment and then hard sand.

Apparently, in past centuries, Little Bay was a basin with hard sand bottom, six or eight feet in depth, and it was slowly filled with silt brought down by the swales that run through Canoe Lake and the Tules, whenever heavy rains caused enough runoff to move the top soil.

The survey was ordered made a couple of weeks ago by the Navigation Board, in view of requests by the Highway Department for additional right-of-way along Highway 35, and mounting public interest in development of Little Bay itself.

Starting at Cornwall Street a 20-foot strip runs north along Broadway to the junction with Highway 35. The unit widens to 200 feet, between the present 100-foot right-of-way and Little Bay, and while all that is necessary to present plans is an extension to the junction of the highway and Lady Clare Street, Yoess said that, eventually, the Department hoped to acquire an additional extension, reaching to the Y at the northern end of Rockport, where the Fulton beach road leaves Highway 35.

Present plans call for channelized traffic in the southern edge of town, where Highway 35 and the Rockport business route separate, and at the point where these rejoin, with curb and gutter through the city on the business route.

Later, the Highway Department may wish to widen the highway between the traffic channel and the Triangle south of Jane Ellen, although no plans have been made for this so far.

In any event, the requested right-of-way will reach into water's edge, and will be acquired as a joint venture by the City of Rockport and the State Highway Department when the time comes for the development.
