To The Graduate

June, 1973, is to be the first month of post-school life for millions of young Americans. Since they enter the stage of life at a time when there is much printed and spoken abuse of their country and its government, a word on the U.S. record is in order.

Our country's constitutional republican form of government has survived in its present form longer than any other in the world. The founding fathers of the nation, when they established the system, were ahead of their time, and they built a system flexible enough to change with changing times.

There are imperfections in the system and injustices in government and governing, but taken as a whole, the average citizen in the United States has something closer to an equal chance, economically and socially, than in any other major country. That is saying much for America, because we are a melting-pot nation of many races and religions.

We are an experimental nation in this sense. At our beginning two hundred years ago many sophisticated European scholars and philosophers predicted the idealistic principles and laws on which the new republic had been founded and would operate could not possibly survive; they felt a country composed of so many divergent nationalities and beliefs could not coalesce into a united nation.

Looking back on history, what has been the record? It is not perfect, but the people of this country have built the richest nation in the world, a nation of individual freedom for all, a nation which has never lost a war, a nation which constantly seeks to improve itself, to uplift the disadvantaged. We have a long way to go, yet, but that is not a bad start. Every newly-graduated young citizen should not casually accept these many blessings without an humble sense of thanksgiving and appreciation of the efforts and accomplishment of those who have gone before—who have done so much for all those starting out in 1973.

A Surprise Surplus

Recent disclosure that the United States achieved a trade surplus in the month of April—for the first time since 1971—is heartening news. No doubt it helped revive the stock market and restored some confidence in the dollar abroad.

The surplus of exports over imports was $196 million, which contrasts sharply with the average monthly deficit in 1972 of $529 million. By March of this year the monthly deficit had dropped to $53 million and thus a trend seems to have been established.

This is no doubt a result of the two recent devaluations of the dollar, in December of 1971 and again in February of this year. Trade experts say these two devaluations produced a "trade-weighted" gain of 17.68 per cent for the United States.

Last year was the lowpoint in the history of the nation's foreign trade balance, producing a $6.3 billion deficit. The latest news indicates 1973 will mark the beginning of a recovery, a gratifying turn and one which was almost desperately necessary.

Walter Cronkite, probably the most popular of the television newscasters, was recently asked if he agreed most television newsmen were left of center. Cronkite admitted they were liberal, possibly left of center as well.

This admission points to the problem today concerning America's news media. It's a well known fact that newspaper and television station ownership tends toward a conservative view.

Similarly, it's widely known that the working press—employed newsmen—lean toward the left. There was a time when ownership editorials, in the average rural and city newspaper, set the national media tone (though this has never been consistently decisive in electing Presidents, as the record shows).

Today, however, there is television, and in addition several large newspapers are distributed widely now by air mail to every part of the nation; therefore the three major networks, the two wire services and several national newspapers play a much greater proportionate role in influencing public opinion. How they slant the news almost certainly influences public opinion to a great extent.

That a small group of New York executives controls the selection and news comment going into most American homes every day, on the three networks, via the two wire services and in the nation's leading national newspapers, is disturbing to many moderates and conservatives. There are, actually, few conservative newscasters, such as the pressure, bias and power of the left on the working press level. There may be no answer to the problem; however, it is a problem and should be understood.

Consumer Prices

The Nixon Administration is still failing in the field of consumer prices; recent news that April prices rose at a seasonally adjusted rate of 7.2 per cent after a 10.8 annual rate for March, news which was "welcome" by the President's Council of Economic Advisors, may or may not mean much.

If the slowing rate of rise is the beginning of a trend, to reduce the rate of rise nearer the Administration's goal for the year of 2.5 per cent, April figures are good news. If that's not the case, the Administration is already late in taking forceful action to check the rapid rise in consumer prices.

For the three-month period, February-April, the rate of rise this year has been 9.2 per cent. That means many wage earners are seeing their salaries, in effect, reduced and losing buying power; the nation can't expect labor to accept the current guideline figure of 5.5 for wage increases when consumer prices are rising at a much higher rate.

The fuel shortage is something that has the people wondering just what the facts are.

Every day we read in the daily papers about even local stations closing or rationing gas, but so far I have not encountered any such thing, and our car travels about a thousand miles a week, regularly.

The other day I asked a local station, where I buy quite a bit of gas, about the situation, and he said he had no problems so far. I asked him, "Suppose I get down about Olney or Seymour, and run out of gas, and can't buy any?" He smiled, and answered, "Just call me and I will come and bring you some."

And he may get a ring some night about midnight.

I don't claim to have any knowledge of the situation, as to how much gasoline there is, or how severe the shortages are, but I do have an idea of my own.

I think that if suddenly the price of gasoline was raised about a nickel a gallon, then there would be a plentiful supply of gasoline.

I share the opinion with a great many other people that many of the shortages we are witnessing, is only a squeeze play by the people who control the markets to get the price of the products raised. I may be wrong, but I am entitled to my guess the same as anyone.

I have expressed it here before, and I am still of the same opinion that the worst thing that happened was the president's so-called price controls.

Since that time prices have risen at alarming rates, and continue.

Every time you go to the store, or every time a merchant buys something, the price of that item is up, up, up.

Even before Watergate the President had lost control of the economy. Now it is even worse. Unless he gets his team at work, and that quickly to stabilize the economy, national financial chaos is going to be the result.

Perhaps the most interesting, and comprehensive editorial I have read on the current scandal in government, came from a syndicated column written by Roscoe Drummond, and printed in the Abilene Reporter News. It deals particularly with the idea that some are discussing now, and that is the possibility of the impeachment of the president. We reproduce it below:

One of the fascinating aspects of Watergate is the way the Democratic congressional leaders shudder at the possibility of impeachment.

They don't want to initiate impeachment; they don't want to talk about it, hear about it or see it happen under any circumstances; and they hope the President won't resign.

There are different explanations why the Democrats are almost as reluctant as Republicans to contemplate impeachment.

One explanation comes from Democratic Rep. James G. O'Hara of Michigan who says that if his party starts pushing impeachment proceedings they will be tangled in partisanship and bring adverse public reaction.

Another reason is that impeachment has a sorry and unworthy history. It has been tried only once, against Andrew Johnson in 1868. So-called "radical Republicans" in Congress sought to drive him from office, not for "high crimes and misdemeanors" as required by the Constitution but because the President was trying to carry forward Lincoln's conciliatory policies toward the South after the Civil War. "The impeachment was a great act of ill-directed passion and was supported by little else," wrote historian Eric L. McKittrick in 1960. Although it failed by one vote in the Senate, it created bitter divisions in the Watergate is a much more usable issue in the congressional elections next year and even in 1976 with a defensive President still warding off the blows in the White House. They don't want him to escape into retirement; they want to keep him on the spot, a visible target and a continuing reminder of the Watergate crimes.

The Democrats do not want to see Watergate dissolved into the back of the public mind by a fresh reformist Agnew Administration vigorously pressing Congress to enact stronger post-Watergate reforms than some Democrats might wish.

This could be the overriding reason why impeachment is the last nation and brought the government to a near

There is a third reason why the Democrats are shunning any plans for impeachment and in doing so can look very virtuous. It's practical politics. And if the tables were reversed and a Democrat were in Mr. Nixon's plight in the White House, the Republicans would be pursuing the same tack.

The Democrats don't want Richard Nixon out of office; they want to keep him there. They don't want him to resign; they want him to stay to the end.

thing that Democratic leaders desire. This could be the most plausible explanation why Sen. Sam Ervin's committee is turning aside the proposal of one of its own Democratic members that it call the top White House staff witnesses at once to determine as soon as possible whether the President is guilty or innocent of prior knowledge of the break-ins and the coverups.

Samuel Dash, the committee's chief counsel, says this would break the pattern of orderly testimony. It would, but it would also enable the committee to try to get to the largest truth—its conclusion as to whether or how much President Nixon himself was involved—far sooner than would otherwise be the case.

It is only candid to report that many Democrats simply don't want Watergate to be cleared up too soon. And I hasten to add that Republicans would be doing the same thing if they had a Democrat on the spot the way Mr. Nixon is.

Certainly many people, as the polls show, find it hard to believe that the President did not have some advance knowledge of all the unethical and illegal things which were going on around him or to understand why his trusted top aides did not go at once to tell him for his own protection and ask him what to do.

Undoubtedly there will be more disclosures, but I can see one explanation coming more sharply into focus. Even those on the White House staff who should logically have gone to the President had powerful incentive not to do so. They were covering up for themselves, hoping that neither the President nor the public would learn the truth.

Nader and his sympathizers in the government are trying very desperately to make people riding in cars use their seat belts at all times. A lot of people refuse to use them, and some who use them, do not do so at all times.

For some time I buckled up every time I got in a car. But I have not used them in a long time. The seat belt is definitely not the life saver that some people would have you believe.

I am sure there are times and situations, the use of the seat belt would actually save a life. But there are also times and situations where the seat belt would be a liability.

In the head-on collision between a Buick car and an ambulance south of Ralls a few days ago, there is no way the driver of the Buick could have come out alive with a belt fastened. It is inconceivable how he came out alive any but he did. The impact of the collision was so hard on the front of the vehicle that the steering wheel was shoved back right against the seat—just in time for the driver to and still live. It is known how he was thrown out of his driving position but he was, and that apparently saved his life. The belt would have thrown him in, and caused the life to be crushed out of him.

From now on, I think will take my chances at the seat belt.

In a head-on, it seems the best thing to happen is to be thrown free of the car. Maybe the experts have information to prove this theory false, if so I will listen.

When in doubt about a controversial subject, keep quiet.

It's pretty evident that we have topped the little red schoolhouse. Ideas we had about economics, science, race and education itself, have come and gone. New ideas are broaching the surface of life and thundering over us.

Campus unrest and street demonstrations make us reappraise old values and ideas.

But one idea remains steadfast. It is the idea that God loves man and men, and that He cares about what happens to our lives.

Are shouting television newscasts and bold headlines overwhelming you? Then you need an open mind and a steady faith. God's love is for you. Your church is where you find it out about it. Try it next Sunday. It will help you grasp an old idea, even if it is a new one for you.

German Potato Salad

- 8 medium sized potatoes
- 2 hard boiled eggs chopped
- 1 onion minced
- 3 slices bacon
- 1 egg
- 3 T vinegar.

Boil potatoes in their jackets. When well done pour off the water and remove lid allowing potatoes to dry off. Next pare and chop or slice while hot. Add boiled eggs which have been chopped and the minced onion. Fry the bacon cut into bits and when crisp remove from the grease. Add the hot drippings to 1 well beaten egg, very gradually. When the mixture is thick as mayonnaise, add vinegar, slowly. Beat well and add to the potatoes, being careful that the salad dressing reaches every bit of the potato mixture.

To vary this recipe omit the eggs and follow same directions—pour hot bacon fat over potatoes then follow with vinegar. Toss until well mixed and keep warm until served.

Your pressure cooker is valuable in that it saves time, cooking fuel, and is excellent for tenderizing cheaper cuts of meat.

Whipped butter or margarine goes further with a large family. One pound equals 6 sticks, or two 8-oz. containers, or 3 cups.

Chelsea Flower Show Reveals Englishman's Love For His Garden

By Marion Shores
(European Correspondent)

LONDON--An event that takes place every year in London in May is the Chelsea Flower Show. This is staged by the Royal Horticultural Society in the grounds of the Royal Hospital, a home for old or disabled soldiers, who are easily identified by their red uniforms and are affectionately known as the 'Chelsea Pensioners'. The Royal Hospital was founded by Charles II and designed by Sir Christopher Wren. The grounds are open daily to the public. The Flower Show was first held here after outgrowing its former home in the Temple Gardens in 1913.

The Chelsea Flower Show attracts people from far afield and mirrors the nations love affair with gardening. The really keen gardeners are the members of the Royal Horticultural Society (they get in on their membership cards while the public pay quite a lot; the price is reduced on each of the three days the show is open to all). The members of the society look with a knowing and critical eye on all the magnificent displays.

However, just as many people go who know little or nothing about gardening but are fascinated, impressed and thoroughly delighted with it. The show creates its own aura, and having been once most people try to go every year.

For rose enthusiasts there are many varieties, and often the first showing of a new species.

There's a Scientific Section for those interested in the study of plants. The exhibits are designed to show and pass on knowledge acquired by many years of study and experience.

Every plant that is suitable for an English garden, greenhouse or home seems to be on display; the profusion of them is astonishing to the uninitiated. Happily the more common ones are very much in evidence as well. Also for the vegetable grower there are some marvelous cauliflowers, carrots, potatoes, etc.

A list of all the items isn't a just description of the Show. Sufficient to say that to visit it is an experience worth remembering, and perhaps for an overseas visitor a little insight into the Englishman's love of his garden.

CLOCKS THROUGH THE AGES

Records indicate that the first mechanical clock was built around 1630. It was made of iron, with a 500-pound weight, a gear train and one hand showing the time. A crude device called the "crown wheel and foliot" controlled its motion. The clock erred by about two hours a day.

Galileo proved in 1583 that successive swings of a pendulum take place in equal intervals of time. In 1656, Christian Huygens used the pendulum to control the rate of motion of a weight-driven clock. With the addition of the escapement designed by Robert Hooke, pendulum clocks became accurate timekeepers.

Pendulum clocks for the home were brought to perfection during the "golden age of English clockmaking" (from about 1680 to 1820). First, the brass movements were covered by hoods with the pendulum and weights exposed. Later they were in tall floor or hall cases, which were nicknamed "grandfather." The minute hand was added to the dial before 1680. A few years later, the second hand was added.

These tall clocks were equipped to strike the hours. Some also had chiming and musical attachments as well as moon phases and calendars. They were so exact that the principles of design and construction have remained unchanged after 280 years. American clockmakers of the 18th and 19th centuries produced many attractive types of grandfather clocks. Today Bulova updates a classic pendulum clock into an ultra-modern electronic wall timepiece. The stark white, recessed case is crisply contrasted with an ebony face. Numerals are not to be found anywhere... instead, radial lines cut the dial's surface and a circle of white indicates the 12 o'clock position. The cord has disappeared as well... the electronic movement operates on a standard flashlight battery for more than a year. When it comes to handsome decoration as well as telling time, this clock is sublime.

EARLY ACNE TREATMENT

Acne should not be dismissed lightly, a California dermatologist urges in an article in Clinical Medicine, a publication for physicians.

The physician observes that "the physical and emotional scarring which can result from severe acne will influence academic performance, personal relationships, employment success, marriage and most important, the development of self-esteem."

He advocates early, consistent treatment to prevent permanent disfigurement.

Acne is essentially a "chemical disease," the physician contends, and is influenced by heredity and hormone activity.

In the article the physician recommends removal of comedones by a physician before they become pustules and cysts; broad-spectrum antibiotic therapy; and topical therapy, which he writes is also very important.

Detergents reduce the oil content of the surface, he explains. (One that recently became widely available is pHisoDerm, a creamy liquid that does not dry out the skin, it contains rich emollients that replace natural oils usually lost in washing.)

Don't overscrub, the physician cautions. Washing with the cleanser twice a day is sufficient. He also notes that bacteriostatic agents inhibit bacteria. The one he mentions can now be obtained only on prescription.

Among the commercial preparations available that he mentions as useful are medicated covering creams. (One of these just recently reformulated especially for use at night, is pHisoAc. It is virtually odorless and greaseless and works together with the skin cleanser to help clear skin.)

He lists medications and treatments the physician may prescribe, and warns against picking and squeezing blemishes and the use of greasy cosmetic creams.

Concerning diet, he observes that "the disease is punishment enough without adding further misery by complicated unnecessary restrictions."

MEMBER F. D. I. C.

As It Looks From Here

By Rep. Omar Buleson
Member of Congress, Texas

Washington, D. C. -- The issue of revamping and redirecting federal aid to public school education will be resolved in the weeks ahead. Some programs have worked well in some areas while the very same program has been a costly failure in others. Informed people on the subject point out the difficulty of applying the same yardstick to every section of the Nation. It has not worked and they say it never will.

In addition to proposals for granting direct payments made to them to send their children to private schools, are efforts to give greater discretion to local school officials in administering programs, possibly based on the concept of Revenue Sharing.

Thus far the courts have ruled that aid to parochial schools is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court has yet to pass directly on the matter of payment for a part of tuition cost to parents who send their children to private schools.

An interesting experiment is to be carried out in the state of New Hampshire. It involves the use of the so-called voucher system of education.

Under a plan agreed to by federal and state officials in New Hampshire, a certain amount of money will be allocated to each school-age child in the State which can be used for payment at any school they choose. The purpose of the voucher system is to apply the principles of the market economy to elementary and secondary education. It is said that this is not aid to private and church-affiliated schools but aid to parents--all parents.

The contention is that many parents are paying double for their children's education. They pay tuition at private and church related schools and also pay taxes for public schools which they do not use.

There is dissatisfaction in many places with the present system of public education, which in many areas has broken down. Many public schools are blackboard jungles where teachers and law-abiding students fear for their safety and where the educational process is almost at a standstill.

There are examples right here in the Nation's Capital. Not far away are Philadelphia and New York where militant teacher unions have struck devastating blows at the school system. A ruling by the Supreme Court which bars public school officials from firing a teacher who refused to lead her pupils in the "Pledge of Allegiance" to the Flag, furthers the demand of many parents for aid to send their children to private schools. There is a growing popularity for private and church-affiliated schools where academic and disciplinary standards are better maintained.

The argument goes that the voucher system would encourage free enterprise in education and give a diversity in choosing the school offering a particular type of training -- schools for students seriously interested in college, vocational schools, schools for the retarded and schools for children having special problems.

The public wants better education for less money. The free enterprise system of teaching, using educational vouchers has an appeal. The success of the GI Bill of Rights concept is used as an example. It is said by supporters of the idea that companies and corporation would establish schools as a regular business operation. Some business organizations are already running schools with the latest educational techniques and equipment. It is argued that with the widespread use of the voucher system, business would have an incentive to assign skilled financial and planning personnel to school operations. The experiment to be launched in New Hampshire will be watched with great interest.

CARD OF THANKS

God made this world of ours. He holds it in His hand; He has the key to countless things.

We'll never understand. But one thing's plain to me. He very wisely knew His children would have need Of friends, And so He sent us YOU.

Our appreciation to each of you for your help in our hours of need.
