A Valuable Little Card

AUSTIN--What is a Texas drivers license?

That small, laminated card that more than 7.4-million Texas residents carry is issued by the Department of Public Safety in Austin and is designed to certify that the holder has qualified and is eligible to share use of the public streets and highways with others.

A. F. Temple, chief of the Driver and Vehicle Records Division at DPS, said that's the only official purpose the license is designed to perform. "This is the only reason for such a card to exist," he said.

However, he's quick to state, the Texas drivers license actually serves many secondary purposes. The license was never intended to "indicate to anyone that a person has money in the bank yet it's used in cashing checks;

'It was never intended to establish a person's age in order that the individual might purchase intoxicating beverages;

'Nor, was the drivers license designed to reflect the fact that the holder is a stable, conscientious person who is qualified to fill certain positions in life," Temple noted.

The license is used in these instances, and there are many other circumstances in which the Texas drivers license is utilized over and above its intended purposes. For example, some people put their license number on personal property for identification in the event of theft or loss.

Said Colonel Wilson E. Speir, DPS director, "The licensing and the improvement of unsafe drivers may well be called the first line of defense in our overrall traffic improvement program. Without knowledgeable and well-trained drivers, safety on the highways suffers.

"Driving in modern-day traffic is no simple task. It can be easier, safer and more pleasant if everyone knows and understands the fundamentals of street and highway safety. Your survival may depend on your understanding and knowledge of driving and the laws which our department upholds.

Lt. Murry Peterson, a 23-year veteran of the Drivers License Service, said there are three primary classifications of licenses issued by DPS. These include the operator's license, which authorizes the driving of passenger cars and light commercial motor vehicles that have a manufacturer's rated carrying capacity not to exceed 2,000 pounds; a commercial license that is used in the transportation of property; and the chauffeurs license for persons who drive motor vehicles for wages, compensation or hire, or for fare.

Chief Temple said other licenses are also issued by the department. One is the instruction permit which permits a student driver to legally practice when accompanied by a licensed driver. The minimum age for such a permit is 15 with driver education with approval of a hardship application.

Another type license is the motorcycle permit for the young at heart who operate a motorcycle, motor scooter or a motorized bicycle. This license may be issued as a separate. restricted license for motorcycle operation only, or as a 'motorcycle also'' endorsement on a license already held by the driver.

The minimum age for the two-wheeler license is 18 (16 with approved driver education courses). Another type motorcycle license allows 15-year-olds to operate two-wheelers that have an engine piston displacement not exceeding 100 cc. (Driver education is not required under this latter condition.)

Occupational licenses are issued to persons whose licenses have been suspended, and who must drive in connection with their occupation. Temple said applications for this type license must be made to the District Court Judge of the county of residence and if a need is found to exist, the court will authorize the Department to issue such license within the guidelines established by the court.

How, then, does one go about getting one of these handy little cards which has just one primary purpose, yet is so versatile that merchants in Texas seem to require one to ascertain certain traits about the holder?

When you or I initially apply for our drivers license, the first step at one of the 223 different statewide examination stations is to fill out the appropriate form. Applicants are required to list their full name and establish evidence of their legal date and place of birth. "A birth certificate is needed in order to accomplish this," Lt. Peterson added, or in the case of an out-of-state resident who is moving to Texas, his former valid drivers license is acceptable.

Peterson went on to add that once a newcomer to Texas has established residency in the state for 30 days, then that person is required by state statute to acquire a valid Texas drivers license. "That's the law," he emphasized.

The application form, which is made a permanent part of your driving record, includes among other items, personal history information and your medical history

Peterson said when the application form is completed a vision test is administered. This is followed by a written test, and then it's time for a behind-the-wheel examination with a DPS trooper riding in the front seat with you.

"The one exception to that is if you are applying for a motorcycle license. Then you are required to have another driver and passenger vehicle to transport the examining trooper who will accompany you throughout the road test with a motorcycle. We use a horn-signal system to indicate when the rider is to turn or make a simulated emergency stop,' Peterson said.

After these steps are accomplished and all the requirements are fulfilled successfully, a color photograph is made and a temporary driving receipt issued. "After the required fees are collected and the temporary permit issued, in about 27 to 30 days, you receive your drivers license by mail," he added.

But, behind the scenes are a multitude of people working to serve those Texans holding a Texas drivers license.

Film cassettes containing the color photographs and applications from each of the examining stations in the state, are forwarded to the DPS headquarters complex in Austin.

Chief Temple said as each box is received other actions are begun before the applications are processed. The film count must agree with the number of applications and the fees collected must balance. "An audit trail has begun," he said

"At this point the applicant's permanent file is started from the basic application form and the film is taken to another area for processing and printing the actual license," he added

The division which Temple heads serves as the central repository for more than 8,000,000 drivers in the state and issues almost 3,000,000 licenses annually, in addition to other administrative tasks of the overall drivers license program.

The Drivers License Service, consisting of some 375 uniformed troopers plus clerical personnel in the field, conducts about 800,000 examinations for driver licenses each year, and carry out approximately 250,000 driver improvement actions annually. This field service is a unit of the DPS Traffic Law Enforcement Division, commanded by Chief Joe Milner of Austin.

But the supporting services offered by Temple's almost 300 full-time employees play a major role in getting you license to you. When the film processing of the license is completed and returned to another section within the division, each license is checked for accuracy and to ascertain that the supporting records correctly reflect proper status. When all is in order, the driver license is mailed to you at your Temple explained that as part of the total responsibility of licensing drivers, the DPS is required to state statute to maintain an up-to-date case history file on each licensed driver for use in identifying individuals who either cannot or will not share use of the public streets and highways with others in a reasonably safe and legal manner.

'We have a driver improvement and control bureau which is designed to improve identified problem drivers." Temple said. "We want to improve this type driver if possible. Otherwise, we must by law restrict or suspend his license," he emphasized.

A driver is defined by law as "habitual violator" if the ndividual receives four or more convictions arising out of different transactions or offenses which occur within a 12-month period, or seven or more convictions during a 24-month period. Temple said that before the DPS can suspend a license an administrative hearing must be conducted by the judge of a traffic court (justice of the peace or municipal court) in the county in which the driver resides.

'The department's position at such a hearing is to present the records and facts in the case for use by the judge in determining whether or not the driving privilege is to be restricted or suspended." he said.

Driving records of individuals are maintained at the DPS headquarters by means of a third-generation computer system to make pertinent information readily available.

"All traffic convictions and reports of motor vehicle accident involvement are entered into the system." Temple said, and added, that "any subsequent application for renewal is checked to determine if that individual is entitled to a new license. We are a large volume administrative agency," he stressed, "and must utilize available high speed resources to properly serve public needs and provide reasonable safeguards to prevent unqualified and ineligible persons from obtaining licenses."

Automatically, certain entries in driving records are purged when they become five years old, Temple said. "The data processing system purges moving traffic violations and motor vehicle accident entries from a driving record five years after the date of occurrance. An insurance company bases rates and establishes penalty points generally, on an individual's past driving history. However, the insurance rates and penalty assessments are on a driver's immediate past three-year history." he added.

Reasons for the driver improvement program, according to Temple, are to prevent the development of a bad driving record through early warning, to determine the causes of unsafe driving, to secure the cooperation of the driver in correcting faulty driving and to protect the public from drivers who cannot or will not be corrected.

All states in the United States require licensing of drivers. First licenses were issued in 1903 in Massachusetts while the last state in the US to require licensing of drivers was South Dakota in 1952.

Texas' program was begun with the creation of Senate Bill No. 15, that was approved Nov. 15, 1935. That act required each driver of a motor vehicle to possess either an operator's or a chauffeur's license on and after April 1, 1936.

Originally in the Lone Star State, the county tax assessor-collectors were designated as the Department's agents to handle the issuance of licenses, without examination.

The DPS became responsible for all functions in nnection with the licensing of drivers on May 19, 1937. In order to properly administer the amended law, the DPS trained and assigned 32 troopers to the specific duty of examing applicants for original Texas licenses. They were assisted by other troopers and clerical personnel. The first real attempt to develop a driver improvement program through the suspension of driving privileges also came about in the same year.

Extensive progress was made in standardizing and oproving examination procedures between the years of 1937 nd 1911 Temple said.

The Regular Session of the 46th Legislature in 1941 passed the present Drivers License Law and for the first time prescribed a fee for the issuance of a driver's license. Operator's licenses were 50 cents: commercial licenses were one dollar and chauffeur's licenses were three dollars. Presently. drivers are levied a $7 fee for a four-year operator's license; $10 for a two-year commerical license and $13 for a two-year chauffeur's permit.

Shortly after the law was passed. Temple was promoted to captain and moved to Austin as chief examiner of the division in October, 1942. He joined DPS on Aug. 2, 1937. working first as a highway patrolman and later as a drivers license patrolman. He was promoted to chief of the Drivers License Division on Oct. 1, 1945.

In 1950. Temple assisted in the development and installation of a mechanical license issuance system which enabled Texas to be the first state to notify drivers 30 days prior to the expiration of their licenses.

Seven years later, when the Legislature authorized reorganization of the DPS. Temple was named chief of the Driver and Vehicle Records Division, a position he continues to hold.

In 1971, the Legislature authorized DPS to issue personal identification cards, occupational licenses and instruction permits. The ID card is issued for a four-year period for $5. Occupational licenses may be issued up to one year for $3 fee. An instruction permit has a minimum fee of $2 and can be issued for up to one year from the applicant's next birth date.

That handy Texas drivers license which about two-thirds of the state's nearly 12-million residents have is backed and processed by hundreds of "professional public safey workers." as Temple calls them.

The advice of a DL trooper is often sought on new and unusual problems in the safety field--which adds interest and incentive to the job. "Thus." he continued. "the driver license troopers continually add to their mental alertness. legal knowledge and social awareness--characteristics which automatically tend to prepare an individual for positions of greater responsibility.

The work which our troopers do for every applicant may literally mean the difference between life and death. Therefore, a professional Drivers License trooper may take just pride in the feeling that he is serving in a position of trust and responsibility." Temple concluded.

'OUR SYSTEM OF FREE ENTERPRISE BROUGHT TO THE PEOPLE of this Nation economic and social gains unparalleled in history. The opportunity to fulfill one's own dream through participation in , the system has been an integral part of what America has always stood for. While the opportunity to test one's own ideas and resources and courage in the marketplace does not guarantee success. the denial of such an opportunity guarantees a loss of faith in the ultimate justice of our economic system.

WHEN AN AMERICAN REACHES THE CONCLU-SION THAT OUR ECONOMIC system is inequitable, he is making a philosophical as well as an economic judgement. He is criticizing ultimately basic principles rather than economic techniques. Such a criticism cannot be answered by references to the gross national product. It must be answered in the terms in which the criticism is framed. The member of a minority group who feels he has been left out of the American dream says: "Show me." It is not enough to provide statistical data or inspirational rhetoric demonstrating the abstract fact of progress. He must be shown the worth of the American system in the only way that demonstrates that worth -- by making sure that he has fair access to it. "A

Vitamin C is the answer to everything around here. Feeling listless and unable to stay awake? Take a vitamin C. 'Head cold? Chest cold? Aching muscles? Take a vitamin C

I said: "I've tried that vitamin C route before. I took enough to practically qualify as an orange. It didn't do a thing for me.

The debate about the value of vitamins bounces back and fourth like a tennis match. Some nutritionists say vitamins will cure you of everything from itchy scalp and falling hair to tired blood and double vision.

If you feel like you're over the hill, take vitamin E. Pretty soon the hills will be alive with the sound of music.

Other nutritionists say the vitamin business is a silly game that Americans pay several billion dollars each year to play.

Well, we are in the game around here. Playing it for all it's worth. (And it's worth quite a bit. I looked at the price tags on some of those

LET'S REMINISCE

By HELEN M. PAGEL Copley News Service

It isn't much of a problem to decide how much of anything you want to buy at the supermarket today. Everything is neatly packaged in containers which cannot be broken open, so you very often are forced to purchase more than you want, which means that you throw away the surplus and then try to figure out what to do with the disposable container so that you won't add to the pollution problem.

But 60 years ago supermarkets were nonexistent and the neighborhood grocer was always willing to sell you half a pound of rye flour or 10 cents worth of sugar if that's what you wanted.

And as for disposable containers, there weren't any. Containers were meant to be used until they wore out, which was usually never. Most commodities arrived at the grocery store in barrels or boxes and were measured out according to the custom-er's orders. And the customer usually had his own container and knew to the last ounce just how much it held.

Suppose, for instance, Mamma was making pickles and needed extra vinegar. Quite likely you would be called in from play to go to the store and get it. Mamma brought out the vinegar jug which held exactly one gallon (Mamma had measured it years ago by means of a quart measure). The lower part of the jug was made of earthenware while the top part, which slanted towards the neck, was of brown glaze. There was a short, narrow neck which was stoppered with a cork which was pounded firmly into place, and you carried the jug by means of a little round handle on one side of the neck. You might be somewhat reluctant to leave your play and trudge down the dusty road to the grocery store, but Mamma usually bribed you with the promise of a penny to

It was nice to have company on the way home, for the full jug was heavy and help in carrying it was very wel-come, but it also meant dividing the proceeds of the penny purchase, so altogether it was weighty question.

When you reached the store you handed the jug over to the storekeeper with the statement that "Mamma wants a gallon of vinegar," and he carried it to the back of the store where the barrels of vinegar and molasses and sugar and flour and such things were kept. There was a spigot in the side of the barrel and sometimes it was fun to stand and watch as the grocer turned it and let the vinegar run into the jug. But usually you spent your time in front of the candy

MONEY Housing slump continues

By JAMES J. MITCHELL Copley News Service

While many sectors of the U.S. economy have been buffeted by the one-two punch of inflation and recession, none has suffered more than the real estate and construction industries.

The number of housing starts - a prime indicator of how the construction industry is doing - fell from 2.05 million in 1973 to 1.34 million last year. That 35 per cent drop is the largest year-to-year decline since 1943, the Commerce Department said. Although most economists agree that there will be an upturn in housing by yearend, there are signs that we may have to wait awhile before it begins. Housing starts in December dropped to an adjusted annual rate of 868,000, down 12 per cent from November's figures. Some economists, including Michael Sumichrast of the National Association of Homebuilders, think that the rate could drop even lower in the first months of this year.

The groups most directly affected by this decline have been the nation's builders and their employes. Countless small home builders have gone out of business, and of the largest firms many have suffered enormous losses and are pulling in their horns. Employment in the construction industry has also dropped off dramatical-

But there's another important, if less conspicuous, group which has also taken its lumps because of the real estate and construction downturn. This group is composed of the people and companies that provide much of the money for construction the bankers - and the people who bring the lenders and the borrowers together the mortgage bankers. Leighton B. Tuck, United California Bank's senior vice president in charge of the real estate industries division, says, "The last 18 months have been almost, but not quite, disaster for the mortgage banking business." He cited such problems as low volume of loans, high interest rates, liquidity problems, and lack of mortgage money

Commercial bankers have also had their problems, in part because banks have had o keep loans longer before passing them on to permanent lenders (such as insurance companies or, in the case of homes, savings and loans). Banks in 1974 also had to satisfy strong demand from other borrowers and at times had to scramble for funds Tuck said he disagrees with the rather standard prediction that mortgage money will slowly become more available while interest rates gradually decline and that in July, housing would turn up-

'My own present opinion is that during the next six months, mortgage money will be more plentiful and interest rates will drop, but now am afraid nobody will want . And I also suspect that enders with available funds or construction will restrict the volume of lending."

He said he believes that lenders will "clean up present problem loans and go on a diet, as it were, on new loans. "Having just gone through a long period when big names well as average borrowers were in trouble, I don't think lenders are going to be in any rush to lend money based on a the next nine months are gobe better' theory.
