HPRF Field Day Events Expanded To Two Days

As agriculture grows on the High Plains area, so must everything else and officials at the High Plains Research Foundation at Halfway have set aside two days for the Annual Field Days in September to show High Plains farmers and residents just how much agriculture has grown.

According to Frank Moore, president of the Foundation, "As we enter our 15th anniversary year at the Foundation, we feel that we have accumulated 15 years of agricultural information that can be of real benefit to area farmers, especially the information we have compiled on irrigation."

The 15th Annual Field Day Thursday and Friday, Sept. 9 and 10, with field tours to be conducted both afternoons from

1:30 p.m. until 4:30 p.m.

Moore said the theme of the 15th annual presentations will be, "How We Can Stretch Our Existing Water Supply," and all information given in lectures and talks at the various field tour stops and a special indoor program will emphasize the aspects of irrigation conservation.

Years of Information

"After two years of drought, our irrigation water is more important now than it has ever been and we have 15 years of information on practical irrigation efficiency that can be of great benefit to our area," Moore noted.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner John C. White will be the guest speaker for Field Day activities on Friday. Moore said White will be the main speaker on the program which will begin at 5 p.m. He also added that the Friday program will be over at approximately 6 p.m. so football fans will have time to make the evening games.

The expanded field day activities will include a two-day farm equipment display which has been of more and more interest each year.

Moore said farmers attending the equipment display will see exhibits by farm equipment dealers and manufacturers, irrigators, seed companies, agricultural chemical companies and exhibits by other farm related businesses.

The Struves' 5-Month Trip

(Editor's Note: Mr. and Mrs. Arno Struve were on a five-month trip late last year and early this year. Their travels took them to the Orient, South Pacific, Australia, New Zealand and other interesting places. The Review requested a series of stories on their trip.)

After the kangaroo chase we came back to the homestead and took a swim in a big tank. It couldn't be classed as a swimming pool but it was a welcome relief from the heat and flies. In swimming with us were one little white girl and two abo children. These little black fellows were very intelligent and happy children. We enjoyed being with them. We learned later that they were descendants of the original white homesteader. They were great grandchildren of Louis Bloomfield, the first owner of the station. This makes them one-eighth white. Their father worked for the station and we later became acquainted with him too. The all-white lineage of the original homesteader still owns the major part of the station. Only a very small acreage in the immediate vicinity of the homestead belongs to the tour company. Slab cabins have been added for the guests. Evaporative coolers are very effective in all of central Australia because the humidity is so low and we found them to be a great boon especially in the middle of the day at nap time.

Our bus driver who was also our tour director was a "character" in his own right. He has a heavy red beard and a shock of red hair and he introduced himself as having the name "Blue". It was said that he had an older brother who had taken the name "Red," so they called this one "Blue." Still it might be that Australian humor causes the name "Blue" to be generally applied to redheads.

"Blue" wasn't ever in a hurry to do anything. This is probably a good thing in a hot climate. If it happened that we didn't get around to everything we were supposed to do that was OK too. This, also is a fairly common characteristic of tours in Australia in general. It grows out of the "easy going" nature of most Australians. They are not in the least aggressive and for this reason Americans are in demand there for getting things done. Australians think more about sports and long weekend than they do about "getting ahead" as we say. Of course there are exceptions. They love horse racing and you'll find it everywhere. Every little town has a racecourse and its a big day when a race meeting is in progress. Itinerant book-makers go from one race meeting to another and operate entirely legally. At the race meetings there will be a small stand where a ladies club will sell sandwiches and soft drinks, but there will also be a much larger pavilion where beer and mixed drinks are sold. Minnie lost a dollar or two on some races but I am too stingy to bet on somebody else's game.

To return to my story at Ross River: After supper the first day at the station "Blue" took us into the parlor of the old zone homestead. He told us the story of Louis Bloomfield and his early day exploits. Louis had two sons. One was all white. The half-caste was adept at taking care of himself and herds of horses in the dry outback where water holes are few and far between. He was also an accomplished horse thief and would make for days hundreds of miles down into New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia for the purpose of gathering up other peoples horses. He would bring them back to Ross River. The police and trackers could never catch him because he was to knowledgeable for them. He out-manuevered them every time; his experience across the deserts and arid lands was too much for them. His father, Louis Bloomfield, had a contract with the Australian cavalry to supply mounts and after he got the stolen animals in shape again he would drive them the fifty miles to Alice Springs and ship them out. At least that is "Blue's" story.

Blue showed us a water pipe that came into the parlor through the wall. He said that Mrs. Bloomfield demanded to have running water so Louis laid a pipe to the well down by the "river", but since the well was lower than the house no water ever flowed into the house. Blue could spin a good yarn even if it often seemed stretched a little. Mr. Bloomfield bought an automobile in the early days, but he never quite mastered its operation. On one occasion he was driving the car in the vicinity of the homestead and he got confused and couldn't stop the engine and he got stuck in it down to the sandy river bottom where the car came to a halt when the wheels sank into the deep sand.

There was a water crisis of sorts while we were there. They were having to deepen the old well.

Louis Bloomfield's white son is still living and though he is a wealthy man and has a nice modern home he still prefers sleeping out in the open and still spend ten months or more of the year in the bush of his huge property.

The half-caste son is no longer living but a black grandson is still on the place and work for the tour company to help entertain the tourist. His name is Maxey Bloomfield. We met him the second day. We found him to be quite intelligent and an interesting person. As far as we could tell there was no house in the homestead area for Maxey and family to live in. They slept on the ground and on cots behind one of the barns. In the unlikely happenstance that a rain would come they probably retreat into one of the barns. Incidentally, we did see a good rain while we were there.

The second morning I arose early as I usually do and so that the noise of my stirring around wouldn't keep her awake I left the cabin to take a climb up the bluff behind the homestead. But to my sorrow and extreme discomfort the swarms of flies were out ahead of me. It was just impossible to keep them off. It took both hands slapping to try to keep them off but without any success whatever. After a very few minutes I had to give it up and get back inside. I don't know how there can be such swarms of flies where there is no moisture. The fact of the flies seems to be a well guarded secret in that one never reads about them in the books and brochures on Australia. The fly scourge is all over the whole continent. They are not so bad in the cities but in the back country they are absolutely unbearable. The only relief from them is to go into a darkened room where they will not follow and this offers a measure of protection against them. In the dining room we wanted to turn off the lights so as to discourage them but the management didn't see it that way so we had flies.

Evaporative coolers work wonderful well there.

In the afternoon we visited the school at the homestead. A young fellow from Canada was the teacher and he had about five or six students.

A couple of the kids were white but the rest were blacks. The blacks were Maxey's children. The teacher tried to get the students to "perform" for us but they were too bashful. The cute little five year old who had been swimming the tank with us the day before read for us and did surprisingly well at it. She isn't officially enrolled in the school but comes and absorbs what she can. The Australian government pays these teachers and sends them to stations all over the country. We learned also that the teaching profession in Australia is very poorly paid. Wages in general are something like half of what they are here.

Later in the day we went swimming again in the big tank. The little blacks came too. They had lost some of their bashfulness and were pleased when we watched them "showing off" in the water.

There was one tiny little black who was too small to get in the tank, but he stayed around while we were swimming again. His nose ran two ample streams toward his mouth and the flies helped themselves to the salty liquid. He didn't protest the insects at all but just let them crawl all over him. I guess they just get used to them while they are young and are thus able to tolerate them forever.

After the swim I went for a walk in search of barbed wire to bring to Ed Crow and Dot Struve. I had seen an abandoned fence corner in the morning and thought perhaps it might yield something for the barbed wire collectors. The wire proved to be the very sharp entanglement type used in World War I. It was a little difficult to handle without cutting hands but we wapped enough paper around it to protect the clothes in the suitcase. About two weeks later we mailed the wire with some other things back to Abernathy.

After "tea" which some of us still call supper and some call dinner we went to the parlor again to hear more of Blue's tales. Quite generally you hear about the aboriginals being very peaceful but Blue had an entirely different concept. It seems that they were just as capable as any other people of resisting when their territories were violated. Blue had a collection of spears and boomerangs and other instruments of self defense that he demonstrated and explained to us. After everybody else took off to bed Minnie and I were still listening.

The next morning early I discovered that I had lost my little pocket notebook that contained many bits of information that I didn't want to lose. I turned everything upside down but found no notebook. Where could it be? Where could it have jumped out of my pocket? The bus cranking episode was the answer. After breakfast Blue and I went in the big old bus to the spot where we had cranked it and sure enough there it was, undamaged.

Our trip for the morning for the group was down the Ross River bed about three miles. Maxey and I went by horseback and the rest came later in the bus. As we rode along Maxey would point out things to me that I would have missed completely had I been alone. He pointed out a white mountain goat way up high on a mountainside and called my attention to a type of lizard called a "bicyclist" because as he runs his forepaws are in the air and it looks for all the world like it is riding a bicycle. We could hear the different bird calls as we rode along and he would tell me the names of the birds we heard. He explained how to get water out of a Eucalyptus tree and how an aboriginal is able to survive when a white man would perish in this unfriendly land. Maxey had a very good English vocabulary but said he never went to school much. He was always running away from school because he was "crazy for horses". Maxey struck me as being a very fine person.

The bus and people had arrived ahead of us at the rendezvous under a big eucalyptus tree in the river bed. Maxey washed his hands and mixed up some "damper" which he was to cook in the fire that Blue had lighted. Damper is a kind of bread made from self rising flour. Maxey put the mixed dough in a Dutch oven and put it in the fire and heaped hot embers on the vessel and covered that with earth.

While Maxey stayed with the damper the rest of us went to a gorge nearby where there were pictographs made by the natives perhaps centuries ago. The pictographs were very simple and looked much like the doodlings of someone today who is sitting at a lecture or seems to be no particular meaning to the pictographs that anybody can figure out.

When we got back to where Maxey was the damper was done. Maxey had heated water for tea and had butter and molasses to go on the damper. It surely tasted good although we had had an ample breakfast not to long before. The butter was real butter too. Australians do not go for oleo like we

We met the other tour group bus along the way and the drivers changed buses and thus we lost our story teller. Our new driver was not quite as rough a driver as Blue and we had a very pleasant run on into town. It had rained in town and as a matter of fact it was rainy the rest of the time we were in Alice Springs. The streets were not designed to dispose of run-off water so that there was a lot of rainwater standing. This is not too much of an inconvenience as seldom as it rains there.

The day we returned to Alice Springs was Friday and the aboriginals had started their weekly drinking bouts by the time we got back there. Both men and women were sloppy drunk on the streets; it was really very pitiful. Years ago it was illegal to sell the natives alcoholic beverages but all restrictions have now been removed and it is just simply awful. They are not trulent when they are drunk only very happy, but oh so hideously sloppy. The country abos are far better off than those who live in the towns, in spite of their primitive living conditions.

'Better Cotton'

"We must get maximum profitable production from the 1971 cotton crop and concentrate on getting it harvested and ginned with an absolute minimum of waste," Dr. C. R. Sayre, president of the National Cotton Council, declared, keynoting the second phase of the campaign for Better Cotton Yields for Profits and Markets.

The first phase was concerned with organization. Now Extension specialists, ASCS, industry leaders, and others are engaged in extending the program to every cotton farm, giving special attention to harvesting and other late season practices.

They are stressing that a better yield can bolster net income, increase the grower's payment yield under the new farm program, and build greater markets for cotton.

Adequate Supply

The industry leader reiterated the need for an adequate supply, noting that the 1970-71 season just ending is the fifth consecutive season in which the United States has consumed and exported more cotton than it has produced. Carryover at the end of the present marketing year is expected to be no more than 4 1/2 million bales, lowest since 1952.

Dr. Sayre praised the progress that has been made since the better yield campaign was launched at a press conference in Washington early in June. Since that time, three area planning sessions and 15 state task force organizational meetings have been held. Attendance approximated 700. An industry leader and the director of the state Agricultural Extension Service are co-chairmen in each of the 14 major cotton-producing states.

In all states, better harvesting operations have been selected for special emphasis. "The importance of harvesting efficiency is pointed up by research and grower records showing that no more than 89 per cent of the crop in machine-picked areas reaches the trailer. The other 11 per cent is left in the field. Losses on many farms run from 15 to 20 per cent," Dr. Sayre explained.

Harvest Increase

"While 100 per cent efficiency can't be achieved, experts agree that the amount harvested can be increased to 94 to 96 per cent. Such an improvement would be highly significant.

"For example, the 1971 payment yield for machine-picked acres, reflecting the harvesting loss, averages 607 pounds of lint per acre and 89 per cent of that actually grown. If 96 per cent of the cotton grown could be put in the picker basket, this would add 48 pounds to the 607-pound average, or around $12 to $15 to gross income. In addition, the 48 - pound increase in 1971 would add 16 pounds (1-3rd of 48 pounds) to both the 1972 and the 1973 payment yields - or $2.40 per acre (16 times 15 cents)."

The harvesting program is

STRUVE SENDS BOOKLET TO HARDESTY

Last week there was a letter in The Review from former Abernathian Wesley Hardesty, now of Friona, requesting a copy of the booklet published for Abernathy's Golden Anniversary Celebration in 1959. Arno Struve had a spare copy, and he mailed it to Mr. Hardesty.

Danny Kelly was on the Dean's Honor Roll at Texas Tech University for the Spring Semester. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Kelly.

18-Year-Old Voting Now Is Official Here

Hale County Tax Assessor-Collector Bill Hollars recently received official notice from Texas Secretary of State Martin Dies Jr. that registered voters who are under 21 years of age may now vote in all county and state elections as of July 1, 1971.

Before that time, the 18, 19 and 20-year-old voters that had registered could vote only in federal elections in Texas.

The 26th Amendment to the United States Constitution lowering the voting age to 18 in all elections recently was ratified by the required number of state legislatures as set out by the constitution. According to the Federal Register, the new amendment then immediately went into effect.

Persons who turned 18 after the close of regular 1971 registration may still register for the current voting year. The certificate is effective for any election held 30 days after registration.

According to a notice sent out by Dies' office, it is not necessary to separate these late registrations from any other age classification on the list of registered voters.

FREE AIR AND ELECTRICITY

Formula suggests positive results and that's what you're looking for in air conditioning. The successful formula for COOL is free air and electricity. Electric air conditioners are as dependable as your electric refrigerator, can be easily serviced by your neighborhood dealer, and cool your home or business no matter the outside temperature... even when the thermometer hits 100 degrees or more. Insist on the correct formula for cooling success.

ELECTRICITY... IT DOES SO MUCH GOOD FOR SO MANY PEOPLE!

Becton And Heckville News

(By Mrs. M. A. Waters)

The H. P. Harris #1 oil well drilled near Heckville was abandoned this week. The equipment was moved and brought disappointment to landowners here who had watched the drilling with anticipation. Mr. and Mrs. Don Smith and children of Denton were visitors in the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E.J. King. The children stayed for a longer visit. Mrs. S.H. Rosson Sr. of Idalou visited Mrs. Flora Dean here Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Courtney Jr. of Borger were recent visitors of Mr. and Mrs. W.A. Waters and Dean. Mr. and Mrs. M.A. Waters and Dean visited Mr. and Mrs. D.B. Adkisson of near Muleshoe Sunday afternoon. A pleasant activity here in the immediate Becton area is watching a pair of Roadrunners (Chapperal) and their two little cubs as they roam about the townsite. In Canyon area like White River Lake occasionally these birds are seen, but as far as residents here can recall these are the first to actually live, for months, in this area. Their peculiarities are interesting to observe. Tuesday night we received 1/2 inch rain in the immediate Becton area with no rain one mile west on Hwy 400 crops here are looking real good. Mr. and Mrs. Dan Bell and family spent several days recently vacationing at Lake Texhoma. The annual singing school at Harmony Plains, (Cone, Tex.) will begin Monday attending from this area will be Mrs. R.B. Stanton and children, Mrs. Flora Dean and Dean Waters. The school is held five day and participants come from many states to attend.

A Lay Witness Mission is scheduled for August 6, 7 and 8, at Abernathy's Northside Baptist Church. Members from other churches will work in the Lay Witness Mission along with members of the Northside congregation. Everyone is invited to attend.

Tuition Equalization Plan Applies To WBC
Wayland Baptist College in Plainview is one of 44 private colleges in Texas that have qualified as "eligible institutions" to accept students receiving state tuition equalization grants under a new program enacted by the 1971 Legislature. Lubbock Christian College was also approved. To be eligible for the program, their participation had to be approved by the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System which recently adopted rules for the program and will administer it. The school also had to be a regular or correspondent member of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to be eligible. Use Classrooms The Legislature established the program of grants to students attending private schools in order to make better use of available classroom space at the institutions which charge tuitions which are generally several times those in state-supported colleges. The 44 colleges and universities which have been approved include 36 senior and 8 junior colleges: Rice University, Baylor University, Texas Christian University, Southern Methodist University and Trinity University are among the larger schools in the group. Coordinating Board members noted that the tuition equalization grant program will be small the first year and is likely not to be of substantial help because the Legislature appropriated only $1 million for 1971-72. To be eligible to receive a state grant, a student must be a freshman this fall, be a Texas resident under the state residency law, be enrolled in an
