Chem-Security Continuing Dump Site Location

Chem-Security, Inc., which had proposed a Chemical Waste Dumping site located East of Cunningham, apparently is continuing their search for a site in the general vicinity, even though they have abandoned the Cunningham location.

Mrs. William Rozell of Bogata stated that her son Neil, who is the president of the First National Bank of Bogata, was contacted by a Chem-Security representative about land Mrs. Rozell owns near Highway 37 north of Bogata. She said that she did not have her land for sale for such a purpose as a dump site, and had opposed the original site, since she owned pasture land near that site also.

The contact for the land took place in early June before the official announcement on June 23 that the company was abandoning the site near Cunningham.

The Sulphur River Watershed Concerned Citizens organization, the group which actively opposed the dump site near Cunningham, stated that they will continue to oppose any site within the region, even if it is not in the watershed of Sulphur River. They have sent a letter to that effect to Chem-Security, Inc., and will continue to monitor the company's attempts to locate a dump site in the area.

Nichols Worth

By Nanalee Nichols

Did everyone have a nice Fourth of July? Admittedly it was a little damp, but that surely didn't bother many farmers in the area.

A wet fourth of July has been an unheard of thing for the past several years, in fact, a wet day anytime in July has been pretty rare the past few years!

Even though it ruined a lot of picnics, water skiing and outdoor activities, a July rain is a rare and beautiful jewel to trees, grass and crops.

Most folks seem to have taken the rain in good spirit, moving inside with the air conditioning to roast hot dogs, fix sandwiches and tell the kids, "sure it's a picnic, there just aren't any flies or mosquitos!"

Barn Swallows, Deligent Parents, Fantastic Flyers

By Nanalee Nichols

Flight, in its purest form, might be expressed in the movements of the common barn swallow.

It does not possess the awesome fierceness of the hawk, nor the clear, piercing notes of the meadow lark, neither does it possess a startling color like a cardinal nor an endearing repertoire of song like the mockingbird. What it does have, however, is one of the most graceful flights of any bird, plus a more practical aspect—that of catching mosquitos and other insects by the thousands.

The barn swallow, or Hirundo erythrogastra, to be scientific, is steel blue in color, with a rosy breast area, deeply forked tail, and short beak. They build their nests in old barns, under eaves, in garages, or anyplace of like nature.

They seem to positively delight in human company, much as their cousins, the Purple Martins do.

The nests, constructed of mud, grass and twigs, serve the pair from year to year, and most years the busy parents rear two separate families a season.

The male and female barn swallows take turns sitting on the nest, although the female does most of it, with the male roosting nearby protectively.

But when the babies hatch out-look out! For such tiny little morsels of bird-dom, they have appetites like bengal tigers. Both male and female keep in the air almost constantly, flying in with insects to poke down wide-hungry mouths.

At first all that can be heard is the peeps of hungry little ones down within the nest, then bright yellow mouths, with a tiny bit of eye and fluff behind them, begin to appear. When mom comes in with a meal, all mouths, usually four or five of them, open wide and a twittering din arises.

The little birds grow with startling rapidity. Soon they are replicas of their parents, and the nest is so crowded that it seems to overflow. When that happens, mom and pop start showing off, flying back and forth in front of the babies, and coaxing them off the nest for short flights.

For a week or two the little ones return each night to the nest to roost, then they are gone, off on their own.

The parents take a few weeks' rest, then re-inforce mud structure and start all over. Soon after the second nest full is gone, they are too, migrating south for the winter.

Nothing is more fun than watching their return in the spring. They fly in, darting, diving and twittering, inspecting everything around them until satisfied that the old homestead is secure. Then they begin the tiring business of raising their young once more.

One year a parent bird was killed on the highway, and the single parent was observed desperately trying to continue to feed the young. The young survived to adulthood, but the poor parent was "feathers and bone" before it's ordeal of double duty was over. They are fantastic little creations of nature. It is hard to find anyone who doesn't appreciate them. Their flight, twisting, soaring, diving at incredible speeds, truly inspirational, and their diligence as parents commendable. The service of bug catching can be appreciated by the most unsentimental of people, and the increase of the birds in the area is pleasant to behold.

Watch for them, make room for them, and anyone with a ledge, shed or barn can be rewarded by the presence of the barn swallow. It is a goal worth obtaining.

HUNGRY MOUTHS—baby barn swallows are mostly bright yellow beak during their growth stages. They line up in their nest, waiting for mother or father bird to come with a nice insect for their meals. (Staff Photo)

1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1/4 cup (1/2-stick) butter
1 leek, chopped
2 tablespoons flour
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1/8 teaspoon pepper
4 cups light cream OR half-and-half
1 cup dairy sour cream
Chopped chives, if desired
Sliced fresh mushrooms, if desired

Toss mushrooms with lemon juice. Melt butter in a 3-quart saucepan. Saute mushrooms and leek until tender, about 8 minutes. Stir in flour and seasonings until smooth. Remove from heat and gradually stir in cream. Heat to boiling, stirring constantly. Boil and stir 1 minute. Cool to lukewarm. Stir in sour cream until well blended. Chill, covered, several hours until icy cold. Serve garnished with chopped chives and fresh sliced mushrooms. Yields 7 cups. United Dairy Industries Association

By J.W. Hood The cool weather over the weekend got me to thinking of the days when we were living on the farm south of Deport, and how we hated to cut wood for winter when it was nice weather in the summer. That fireplace was a monster to me. We would spend day after day in the summer cutting wood just to feed the fireplace, and in the summer it seemed that winter would never come again to me. I always figured that I could have spent the days playing ball or learning to swim instead of cutting wood. It took me a long time to swim, as my Mother would not let me go swimming until I learned to swim. Now, figure out how I could learn to swim without getting wet! I slipped off to go swimming. The day I learned to swim my brother, Forrest Parks and myself had gone down to the creek and found a hole deep enough for us to swim in, so we disrobed and jumped in. I was equipped with two old syrup buckets and had tied them together with a piece of wire. We had cut the fence to get that wire. I put the bailes over my arms and thought that I had water wings. Well, I got out into water about waist deep, and began to swim like crazy because I thought it was so deep I would drown if I didn't. After that I didn't need the syrup buckets. Anyhow, when we had a big old wood pile it seemed that

TAC SYSTEM
The thermostatic air cleaner (TAC) on most cars built since 1968, keeps air entering the carburetor between 90° and 105°. This allows the engine to run on leaner fuel. A faulty TAC causes poor gasoline mileage, among other problems, and should be kept in good working order.

Ag Briefs

By Paul D. Payne
Midge numbers in area milo fields have increased significantly during the past few days and could severely affect grain crop if unchecked. The early infestation level is about 10 days earlier than normal. Farmers with milo still blooming should check their fields daily to determine the level of midge activity. An average of one per head when 25 to 30 percent of the heads begin to flower would indicate a need of applying chemical.

The tiny insect is most active in the early morning and late evening hours. They are a tiny fragile-lookin, orange colored fly. They can be seen flying around milo and Johnson Grass heads. They deposit eggs in the spikelets of flowering heads.

Once the milo passes the flowering stage, there is no need for a farmer to spray. The key is protecting the plant during that period of time that the plant is flowering. This period will last from seven to nine days for an individual head. However, that period may be extended for two weeks or more for an entire field due to delayed maturity caused by wet spots, etc.

There are several insecticides that have label clearance and will do an effective job of controlling the insect. Producers that have not received their copy of B-1220, "Insect and Mite Pests of Grain Sorghum" should request one from our office.

Farmers with heavy weed infested wheat should consider an application of sodium chlorate at this time. This material will burn the green vegetation and enable one to harvest a higher quality grain resulting in less price discount.

The special emergency-use permit for the chemical was issued by the Texas Department of Agriculture June 25 to alleviate this situation in wheat. The urea fire retardant sodium chlorate should be applied at the rate of four pounds per acre in eight to ten gallons of water.

There is a seven day wait until harvest and 14 day delay before grazing. The special permit expires on July 9.

Bill Hatch, who farms in the Taylortown Community of Lamar County, planted Guar this past week. Bill planted 37 acres. It was drilled in 10 inch rows and 0-40-40 fertilizer and Trellan herbicide was applied. It was planted on fairly light soil, so this should give us some indication of Guar potential for the area.

COOL MEALS
Preparing cool meals can be a challenge to any cook who waits until warm weather arrives. It's a big help having some fresh ideas ready to try before 90-degree days become a reality.

Think of all the chilled soups that make such nice beginnings to meals. Vichyssoise comes to mind, but there are many others with great possibilities: grated carrot, leek, spinach, avocado, cucumber, tomato, watercress and mushroom. They have a creamy base and offer quick preparation.

For a delightful mushroom soup, saute sliced vegetables in butter. Mushrooms need tossing with lemon juice to prevent darkening. You have to make certain the leeks have been thoroughly washed since they tend to be gritty (with earth) unless grown on small hills or with "paper collars," as French gardeners do. Both half-and-half and dairy sour cream add creaminess. Why not cook in the morning and let it chill until dinner?

Listening At The Library

By Bosley Bookworm

There has been such excitement here at the library these last few weeks with all the boys and girls having such fun with the reading program. On one wall there is a monster meter which records the progress of each young reader and some have already rung the monster bell. To do this, ten books must be read. When five books have been read, which would be half way up the reader, a prize of a book bag is given. An when ten books have been read there is a prize of a poster. What a selection of posters to choose from, owls, dogs, cats, pandas, birds, dinosaurs, football and baseball. That's great!

new books, "Twentieth Century Dolls," Lousi Tifany, Rebel in Glass" and "Magic of Dance" by Margot Fontyn. Drop by your library anytime, there is always something going on!
