Most Local Sales Taxes Are Up

Some time ago, I lamented the passing of "coathangerous commonus". Well, it seems that another old favorite is about to fall by the wayside.

It isn't gone yet, but it definitely qualifies for the endangered species list. It's replacement has many uses too, but still, it's nature is inhibited.

I speak, naturally, about paperus grocerius, or the common brown paper grocery sack. It is seen less and less as stores go to plastic bags.

Plasticus grocerius is pretty useful, it can serve as a rain hat, or to haul things around in tied to the handles of a bicycle, or to seal things in.

But it simply can't stack up to the paper bag variety for sheer usefulness.

Brown paper bags make great wrapping paper for mailing packages. Brown paper bags are the perfect material for cutting out patterns for quilts, dresses, toys, wood projects or other projects.

It makes a great emergency memo pad. It also makes great emergency paper supplies for rainy-day-bored kids.

Decorated, it can be turned into some really neat Halloween masks, just cut out eye holes and let them go!

It will soak up a puppy puddle, pick up the spilled "poly pop" in the bottom of the refrigerator, and serve as a trash sack.

Admittedly, a plastic sack will store items being saved for a garage sale or help pack for a move just as well as the brown paper variety. But the plastic sacks are so NOISY rustling around in the bottom of the pantry as if they had a life of their own.

Without brown paper bags, what would the decorations at the local Cub Scout banquet be done out of!

How would kindergarten students make Valentine sacks!

They'll serve as a dust pan or emergency floor mats in cars, or at the front door during really rainy weather. They are the perfect mat for cleats and tennis shoes, and a great work table covering.

But the writing is on the wall, the future clearly in the crystal ball! Brownus Grocerius is on the way out, replaced once more by plastic in a high tech world.

Of course, there is one great disadvantage to them that the plastic variety has solved forever. The bottom of a plastic bag does not turn dark brown, then, at the most inopportune of moments, split open, covering the feet with groceries or garbage, whichever the case may be!

one dollar per day. In the fall, members of the families picked cotton and received fifty to seventy-five cents per one hundred pounds. The beginning of school was always delayed until October in order that children might earn money for clothes and shoes.

Prior to the school year of 1935, many students dropped out of school after finishing the fifth or sixth grades. But in the fall of 1935, the school trustees and two new teachers, Mavis Lum and Imogene Fogleman, decided to try and change this trend. Basketball for both girls and boys was begun that year in an effort to keep students in school. The sport caught on like wildfire. Interest in school and grades among the students improved. Although House Bill "No Pass, No Play" was unheard of then, the Maple community school required passing grades for those participating in the sport. Folks in the community took pride in their school and supported the basketball teams one hundred percent.

In 1937, the Maple boys team entered competition with other schools. For the next four years, the team made a name for themselves in the Red River County Rural Basketball Conference by winning the playoffs in 1937-1938 and 1939. No conference tournament was held in 1940. The rural basketball conference was composed of Burkham, Cuthand, McCrury, Lydia and Maple. There was no conference for the girls basketball at this time.

The Maple boys that spent countless hours trying to improve their basketball skills on a dirt court were David Knowles, John Moore, Steve Knowles, Austin McConnell, Russel Moore, Ellis Moore, Wesley Odonnell, Leslie Robertson, Charles Stewart, Nowlin Lovell, Bud Eudy, Cecil Williams, Wade Moore, Talmadge Sneed, Bernie Wooten, Sam McConnell, David Henry Askew, James Orbin Sidden and Burl Moore. Coach for the team was E.G. Lum, better known at that time as "Professor Lum", who was not only a coach and principal, but also a very influential resident of the Maple community. Maple school students and teachers held their first reunion in 1986. The next reunion is set for the first Saturday in August, 1988.

Professor Lum is still living and resides in Boxelder and helped in preparing the information for this article. His positive influence in the Maple community and the lives of those who were taught by him is remembered by all of us.
