Names have always fascinated me. I simply love trying to figure out what place to be named Broken Water, ssouri or even "Cut N Shoot" Texas.

In our recent trip to England, it was the pub names that were so fascinating. I began to write down the names of every one we passed.

Each and every one of these establishments has a neat, colorful sign painted and hanging above the entrance or emblazoned above the

Some of the names are pretty obvious, the Prince of Wales, Seymour Arms, Kings Head or Moat House.

But where, pray tell, did the Flounder and Firken come from? Well, it used to serve fish and a firken is the cask that ale was stored in!

The Dog and Badger, Fox and Goose Bull and Bush have signs In what one would expect, with pictures of the animals in question.

But the Pit and Whistle? Sure enough, there's a pig playing on a tiny little flute-like whistle!

The Freemasons and the London Apprentice obviously were founded by members of the profession represented.

The Printer's Pie? Well, Printer's Pie is the English expression for what we here at the paper call "typos"...in other words, the typographical errors. Printer's Pie is located, naturally, on Fleet Street among all the major newspapers The Rising Sun and Orange Tree, the Finches and Harcourt Arms were along the way to one of our trips.

The Highway Man and Spainards Inn were both made famous by the long-ago outlaws who used to roam the highways and rob coaches.

The Slug and Lettuce...slugs are common little critters there, and the absolute curse of gardeners.

The Three Hammers and Six Bells were self-explanatory.

The oldest pub in London is the Chesshire Cheese.

The Dirty Duck (which features a mug weilding fowl much the worse for drink on it's sign) is where the Shakesperian actors gather at Stratford upon Avon after performances.

The Olive Branch extends the gesture of peace, while the Old Mill is located where the ancient grist mill in Mill Hill was.

The names go on and on, a litany that expresses a wry sense of humour or a sense of tradition. To me, they were a major part of what I think of as England...from elaborate to simple places, the names will always remain with me like a song

Shakespeare Tops List Of Attractions

Note: This is the third in a series on visiting friends in England. For Shakespeare fans, Stratford is surely a "must".

On our Monday in London, we decided to pack up and leave the city. Loaded into two vehicles, with Mic riding with Valerie, a friend, and Lee driving Thomas and myself, we headed out the M1 motorway to go to Stratford Upon Avon, birthplace and home of William Shakespeare.

For us, the eighty mile drive was nothing, but for people used to traveling shorter distances (remember, the whole country isn't quite 800 miles long), it was a bit more of a drive. Their cars, because of high fuel prices and narrow streets, are considerably smaller than ours, and get excellent

It is a gorgeous place, the river wandering through it, half timbered buildings everywhere.

We stayed at a hotel built in the 1600's with huge English Oak beams and white plastered walls. A tiny rooftop garden graced the view from our room, and downstairs fireplaces and shining brass accented the lounge.

We hired a taxi to show us the town, rather than tryng to find parking places, and discovered "Gold". He was regularly a college professor, earning money in the summer by driving a taxi for a friend. He was full of interesting facts about the area. having lived there all his life.

We made the usual rounds to the beautiful churchyard where Shakespeare is buried, simply and quietly, then onto Ann Hataway's cottage. This thatch roofed structure boasts a garden filled with plants typical of Shakespeare's time.

Within a cut-away section of the wall reveals the careful workmanship that built the house, and the distinctive pattern on the roof gable is the mark of the thatcher who did the work...as distinctive and individual as the catle brand is here.

Next morning we took a short drive to Warwick Castle, pronounced "Warrik". Here we went within a castle hundreds of years old, still complete with dungeon and torture chamber. I came up out of the torture chamber pretty fast...the realization that all those hideous implements were actually used on human beings centuries ago may have sent my imagination into overtime, but I would swear the place smelled like death.

Suits of intricately etched armor, weapons from long ago, arrow slits on the castle walls were punctuated by a more lighthearted display of wax figures by the famous Madame Trussard's Waxworks.

A Victorian houseparty with many famous people were in various attitudes throughout the castle, dressing, visiting, singing.

A stop at an ancient, timbered restaurant, the Wobbly Wheel, provided lunch. Within it was warm and glowing while outside the rain came down and the wind was chilly.

Thomas tried that most traditional of English dishes, steak and kidney pie. Unfortunately, a lifetime of not eating it apparently kept him from really liking it. I tried another traditional meal, Gammon steak with cheese and pineapple. Gammon steak is a thick slice of specially cured ham, and was absolutely delicious. Accompanying it were "chips", or what we would call fries. What we call chips, such as potato chips, they call crisps. A drive through rolling, misty countrysides took us to Bleinheim Palace. Here we were entranced by magnificent painted ceilings, fabulous golden tables and riches designed to stagger the eye.

In a small room off the main ballroom, Winston Churchill was born. The Duke of Marlboro, Churchill's uncle, claimed the palace as home at the time. Winston's American momma was at the ball there when Winston decided to arrive

The grounds at Bleinheim are studded with fountains, pools and gardens of beauty.

The large grounds have peaceful sheep and cattle grazing.

The drive back to London was quick, if rainy. Coming into London, however, we hit some very heavy traffic. Coupled with the pouring rain, it took nearly as long to get hme to Mic's as it did to drive the previous fifty miles...the price one pays, I suppose, for living in any huge city.

A simple supper fixed us up and ready for bed. It didn't take long to get to sleep after two days of beautiful sights and a lot of walking.

When you saw the twinkle in his eyes and a smile, you knew he was going to come forth with his gentle tea He also liked to talk about and world affairs. He always enjoyed visitors, especially his family. When he was feeling good, he never wanted them to leave him. He highly appreciated any attention that was given him while he was in the nursing home. Mr. Singleton was eagerly looking forward to his freedom from pain and joining his Heavenly Father. It was with enthusiasm that he told his visitors that he was ready to leave this world, and that he could go at any time with the assurance that he was a child of God. His only reason for lingering on earth was, "Trudie doesn't want me to leave her."

But we'll go along on the assumption our readers will like it. By Ed Bryson

This is a graveyard ghost story that goes back in my mind to 1912, when I became five years old.

It was told to me by a great-aunt, the widow of a Confederate Army soldier who drew a small pension and und among her kin, including

Shortly after the burial, the man's ghost started showing up now and then at the hme of the family who lived just west of the road that was then on the east side of the cemetery.

It was a dark and narrow road at night. Usually lonely and deserted. Members of the family would be sitting around the fireplace talking low and fearfully waiting for the unwanted visitor from the graveyard. Its coming was always the same and always about the same time at night. The clop-clop-clop of iron horseshoes on the winding road, the silence as the horse stopped at the front yard gate, followed by the soft scuff of shoes on the walk from the gate to the house and the flare of the coal oil lamp flickering as the spectral visitor walked through the closed door and came into the living room. Then the father of the family stood up and offered the ghost his rocker. The ghost sat down and stared silently at the fire.

Dressed in its burial suit, the ghost had a shadowy face and deep set eyes. After a while, as the family sat silent and afraid, the ghost got up and left through the same closed door it had entered. Then, outside, the sound of creaking saddle leather was heard, followed by the clop-clop of the horse carrying the ghost back up the road

"Sleeping Beauty", one of the classics of Disney animatio, will make its exclusive World Television Premiere on The Disney Channell this fall. "Sleeping Beauty" is the seventh full-length Disney animated masterpiece to make its television debut on The Channel, following "Pinocchio", "Alice in Wonderland", "Dumbo" and other timeless favorites.

Home Cable TV is participating in Disney's "Family Reading Program," which is featured in The Disney Channel Magazine. This new and innovative program is designed to help stimulate your children's interest in reading. The program includes articles by noted authors and advice for parents on selecting books, as well as activities and suggestions for encouraging children to read and write. Home Cable TV mails the magazine regularly, at no extra charge, to all subscribers of the Disney Channel. It is a full-sized, fullcolor publication that also provides programming information. Free sample copies are available in the Home Cable TV office.

"We know that what children learn from television today can stay with them for the rest of their lives," said Jim Short, Home Cable TV Genral Manager. "We have added programming to the cable system, like The Disney Channel, which is stimulating and educational as well as entertaining. We also want to do what we can to encourage children and their families to keep reading. The Family Reading Program is an excellent way to build a partnership between quality television and quality literature.

In an effort to make this excellent programming available to as many people as possible, Home Cable TV will offer a Back To School Sale for new subscribers to The Disney Channel, featuring free installation and a free first month's service. "The offer begins August 1 and ends August 31," said Short. Anyone who is interested in subscribing or getting more information about the Family Reading Program is invited to contact Home Cable TV at 784-0991.

Travel Scams On Increase

"Everybody loves travel bargains, including crooks," warned J. Don Clark recently, director of the state highway department's Travel and Information Division.

Clark said that Texas travelers are being victimized by spurious "travel packages" offered by shady travel service operators. "Initian contact is often by telephone," Clark said, "offering what sounds like a certificate good for round trip air fare to Hawaii, for only $29."

'Actually," said Clark, "the certificates are usually nothing more than reservation forms for advance bookings. After the first payment, more fees keep appearing, deposits, pre-payment for transportation, lodging and other hidden costs than can amount to hundreds, or thousands of dollars.'

Clark voiced special caution against giving telephone solicitors your credit card number. "If a travel package sounds too good to be true, it probably is," he emphasized.

He cited a recent "come on" related to investment in vacation resort time sharing. A potential investor was told that she had already won an all terrain vehicle, requiring payment of only $29.95 for handling,

Clark said that people who receive phone calls or post cards announcing they've won a travel bargain, or have been selected by computer for some fantastic travel deal, should be immediately suspicious. "I'd recommend that anyone who's approached with a cut rate travel scheme, check it out with one of our many reputable travel agencies, or the local Better Business Bureau," he cautioned.

Over 23 million Americans own

U.S. Savings Bonds, our nation's most popular security. Sales of U.S. Savings Bonds increased 24 percent in January 1987 to $710 million, compared to $575 million in January 1986. The month's sales helped bring the total value of Savings
Bonds held by the public to $93.11 Bonds held by the public to $93.11 billion, the highest level ever and a 16 percent increase in the past

New Series EE Bonds held five years or longer earn interest based on 85 percent of the average return on five-year marketable Treasury securities during their lifetimes, or a minimum rate, currently six percent, whichever is higher.

Many people plan for the future by buying bonds through a Payroll Savings Plan. If you set aside just $50 bi-weekly through such a plan for your child's education, you can accumulate over $19,000 over the next ten years, if the Savings Bond variable interest rate averages eight percent over that period, Call 1-800-US-BONDS for the current interest rate. #### Rich Plan Freezer Was Part Of Family

By Mollie Williams

A member of my family was struck by lightning a couple of weeks ago and put out of commission. Now that I have your attention, I'll relieve you by explaining that the family member was a deep freeze which had been in our family for many years.

Is an upright freezer and the brand name was "Rich Plan". Now, that should tell many of you just how old the freezer was. It was one of those freezers that was sold in this area long ago with a plan that brought ordered food right to your freezer.

The deal sounded good, so my mother and dad decided to give it a try. Needless to say, the freezer lasted much longer than the food plan. However, we did enjoy several months of eating "high on the hog" and beef, too. I will never forget the day the salesman came and made his pitch. My brother and I lurked in the doorway to hear the conversation. To us, it sounded almost too good to be true.

When the salesman began to tell our parents about all the different frozen items they could order, our eyes got big and our tummies began to sing. After we saw that Mom and Dad were convinced, we went outside to continue our playing.

We were so excited and felt we just couldn't wait for the freezer and the first food order to arrive. Don said, "Just think, we can have grape juice and hamburgers anytime we want. It never occurred to us that the food would cost extra.

Soon the freezer arrived and the delivery man stocked it full of frozen juices, meats, fruits and other mouth tempting items. Don and I felt for the first and only time in our lives that we were rich. I'm not really sure just how much we ended up costing our parents by having all the different foods so readily available, but like most kids, we weren't too conservative.

I remember eating the frozen juices from the cans with spoons on hot days and the delicious strawberries frozen in sweet syrup. The plan must have been pretty good for the consumers, because it didn't last very long. After a time, we were unable to order the food, but at least the freezer was ours for good. My mother received money for selling the "Rich Plan" to our neighbors and I remember she had quite a time collecting the money.

As I was contemplating this article in my mind, I went to my refrigerator and got a soft drink. I couldn't help but think about how my brother and I would have reacted back then to what I saw. Soft drinks, several flavors, candy bars, ice cream in the freezer compartment, grapes, apples, oranges and almost anything else you might want. Things are certainly different for kids today in that respect. A lot of older folks, and some not so old, can remember when apples and oranges were treats received only at Christmas.

As my husband and my brother-inlaw pulled the old freezer out of the house to make room for the new one, I had the thought of how wonderful it would be if only the freezer could have recorded all the memories that took place in our home through all those years, and then as I remembered some of my adolescent days, I thought to myself, "Well, maybe not all of the memories."
