

By Nanalee Nichols I wonder if this is what they mean by one of "those things that happen as we get older"?

Have I actually reached a time in life when learning new things has become more difficult?

I've known lots of peopole like that. Of course some of them weren't old at all....just not open to new ideas.

Recently supplies for our old (and we do mean OLD) addressograph machine became impossible to get. Therefore we decided it was time to get a computer program and a labelling machine to send our papers out with.

Of course that means we have to learn how to operate the computer program, and operate the labelling apparatus. And we had to learn how to use the new type lable paper in our dot matrix printer.

Then we installed a new program to help make ads on the computer.

It's absolutely wonderful, giving us new capabilities, new type fonts, new borders...a world of stuff. But I admit after a morning with the instructor I was just about mind-boggled down to a nub! It was almost (note the almost) easier to keep using our old program than to struggle with the new one! About this time the post office changed our mailing rates and sent us a nice, fat packet of new style second class mailing forms. By that time I was so baffled by all the new things on the computer I nearly blew a gasket at the idea of having to deal with all these new government forms! My mind refused to consider it...instead I tossed the formsinto a drawer and will worry about it (like Scarlett O'Hara) tomorrow!

So many new things to deal with...so little time...so little inclination!

After a stern lecture to myself, (you should hear those arguments sometime) I have dug back into the drawer and found those forms and considered them. I'm working very hard at learning the new ad program, and the circulation program is licked. I'm leaving running the new labelling machine to someone else for while...wouldn't want to shortcircuit my brain cells.

But now I have to work on permanently re-installing that quest for knowledge, desire for new things and inability to get in a rut in my mind. I will not refuse to learn. I will not refuse to accept new things. After all, I don't want to be eighty years old some time in the future -outdated and still clinging to the last vestiges of late-990's technology when it's been replaced by something else! But boy, it's gettin' harder!

Calls to the Dallas area branchs of the service revealed that on a Nation-Wide level recruitment was up slightly.

Major Tracy of the U.S. Marines reported that" Nation wide we exceeded our goal for enlistments for the month of January." The major continued that "gener-

Major Tracy also said that according to these figures people "certainly weren't avoiding enlistment because Petty Officer Alan Baribeau of the Dallas Navy Recruiting Office did not have national figures available. He did have figures for Northeast Texas, however.

He stated that in August through December of 1989 the Navy signed up 873, 103% of their goal for that time period. In the same time frame for 1990 they signed up 684 in the North east Texa area....114% of their goal. Although the numbers were down, the percentage was up. This was because Navy recruitment figures depend on how retention is going in the fleet. "If more are staying in we need to recruit less" Officer Baribeau said.

Also", he said, "we recruited a higher quality of people. Our aptitude scores and number of high school graduates was way up."

As a "sidebar" to his statements he said that Pety Officer James Patterson, who is in the Paris Navy Recruiting office, was "one of our best people and we are lucky to have

"Many of these are people with prior military experience who because of one reason or another (age, etc.) aren't qualified". She also continued that there was a definite feeling of patriotism causing many to inquire. No figures were available for the month of January.

Sgt. William Perry of the Air Force reportedthat the Gulf crisis hasn't made much differance in their recruiting. "We are getting about a 200% upswing in inquiries" he did say. Perry continued that a feeling of intense patriotism was evident in these inquirires.

Dorothy plans to fish this summer and whatever she catches, she eats. She prefers bass and crappie, but won't turn down anything.

They have a big garden, also, and she has already started purchasing seeds. She loves to grow blueberries and strawberries, and she cans vegetables, fruits, pickles, etc.
