Substitute shopping fights inflation, consumers should eat less beef by substituting poultry, pork, and other protein foods. Although very few foods are lowpriced these days, the costs of some foods are going up more slowly than others.

If we could quickly shift to lower priced alternatives, we would not only help our pocketbooks but help to dampen inflationary pressures in the general economy by decreasing the demand for higher priced foods. As a rule, our purchasing habits are very rigid. This rigid purchasing behavior is as much to blame as are supply shortages for violent price swings. Coffee and sugar a few years ago and lettuce and beef more recently, are 4 examples where consumer and production of this energy source, according to Congressman Jim Collins of Texas, a senior member of the Energy and Commerce Committee which is in the midst of reevaluating how much natural gas America has.

In 1978, Congress passed the Natural Gas Policy Act (NGPA), which included provisions for phased-in decontrol of certain types of gas. According to Collins, these short-term price incentives created an increase in the exploration and drilling for natural gas. Gas production increased for the first time in 1979 since the peak in 1973. Reserve additions of 14.3 trillion cubic feet were made as compared with 10.6 trillion cubic feet of added reserves in 1978. New field additions of 2.6 trillion cubic feet were also made. "The NGPA, as it is now, is inadequate for the long run because it imposes 1970's prices on 1980's gas. If producers are limited to obsølete prices while incurring the higher costs of the 1980's, drilling will be discouraged. I have introduced legislation--H.R. 3246--that remove certain price controls from unproduced gas from a new reservoir or lease, or gas that is reached through an exisiting well if new drilling

Why gas is plentiful:

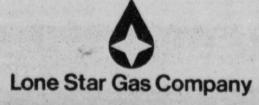

Two New Sources

There's enough natural gas in proven and existing reserves to heat America's homes and run its factories for many years. And now gas is flowing in enormous volumes from two new sources: the tight basins and the deep basins right here in Texas and Oklahoma. Experts believe each of these sources could double the nation's proven supply. And our pipeline system will let us deliver your share of this gas efficiently and economically. It's another reason to be glad you're served by the Lone Star system.

Gas. It's plentiful, efficient and right for the times.
