Constitutional Government or Mob

Which shall we have in Texas, a constitutional govern mob law?

That is the issue the people are called upon to decid present campaign.

James E. Ferguson's race for the governorship is, to all and purposes, a defiance of organized justice.

It is in contempt of the court which convicted him, and nullify the constitution which disqualifies him. He can be nominated by the democratic party without any written statute. He can receive a majority of votes on election day w fringing any established provision.

But he can not be seated in the governor's chair without ting the organic law of this commonwealth and challen political sovereignity.

The essence of his effort is to defy the state, as a state, lify the constitution.

Call it by any term you please, but what it amounts to rection.

Popular government does not mean unliscensed liberty. by the majority does not comprehend unrestricted capri

History proves nothing so clearly as that democracies orderly and systematic if they would survive. James E. Ferguson is opposing the democracy of Tex essential respect.

His campaign is neither more nor less than a shriek of with the constitution and the methods it provides."

He is virtually asking the people of this state to reput legislature and set aside the verdict of a regular court. He is virtually demanding that they scrap the fundar which they themselves enacted.

He is virtually saying what the Prussian ambassa England-proclaiming written agreements to be not than scraps of paper.

His attitude is kaiserite to the core, no matter what it pear to be by pretense.

His thought is to rule by force, and regardless of authority.

The allied world has gone to arms to prevent that y and if we can't endure it on the other side of the At certainly shan't stand for it here at home.-(Political A
