There will be a lot of changes in store for them, although most probably will fast adjust or barely recognize the differences.

• Teachers will begin work a little earlier, and classes in some areas will start earlier.

• School year will stretch out from 175 classroom days to 180. • Teachers will be on duty 10 more days of non-teaching work for in-service training and to help with school opening and closing.

Training of local teaching teams in 1,206 school districts is slated to start in September and October.

• Twenty-two school districts in major population and geographic areas will be pilot testing three key facets of the state's emerging plan for special education. These districts will serve as a proving ground for efforts in comprehensive special education. early childhood programs for exceptional children andteaching tailored for children with language and/or learning disabilities.

Even broader changes may be in store for pupils of 16 school districts sued in federal courts ai Austin and Tyler for racial segregation. Districts held conferences at Texas Education Agency last week to prepare plans for conversion to non-discriminatory systems. Plans are due to go to courts by Friday (Aug. 21.)
