It's decided!

Affected civilians to get priority on employment with selected contractor

A conditional contract for aircraft maintenance here has been awarded to Lockheed Support Systems Inc., Col. Monroe S. Sams Jr., 64th Flying Training Wing commander, announced Wednesday.

Total contract cost for the 58-month period is $80,113,098. The initial contract period runs from Dec. 1, 1989 through Sept. 30, 1990. There are four additional option years.

Final award of the contract may not be until Sept. 29, when the review period is complete.

Contract employees from Lockheed will begin replacing approximately 900 military maintenance personnel Dec. 4.

Reese is the fourth undergraduate pilot training base to go to civilian maintenance. Base officials have been working for some time to ensure the transition is a smooth one.

"Every measure necessary to make certain the conversion goes well has been and will continue to be made," said Colonel Sams during Wednesday's announcement in the Officers' Open Mess.

"Such a dramatic transition would not be made if we felt it would hamper our ability to accomplish our mission," he added.

The conversions at Reese and other ATC bases (except Vance AFB, Okla.) are the result of an Air Force cost study directed three years ago which examined the potential conversion to contractor or civil service maintenance operations.

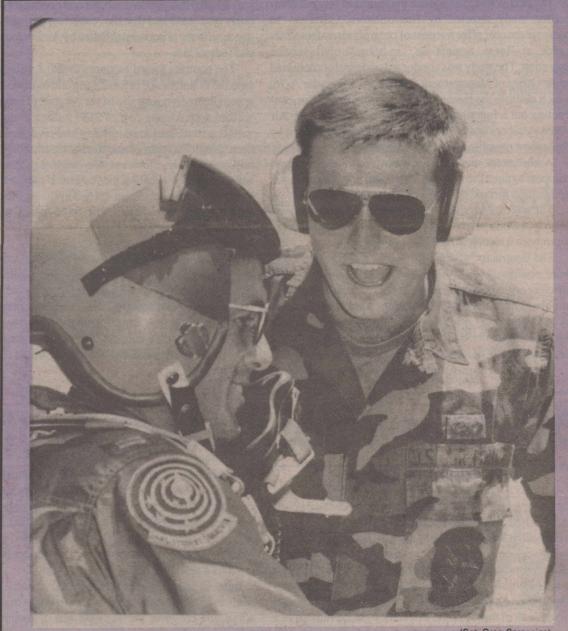

A comparison of contractor versus in-house costs was accomplished following an in-depth review of bids.

Proposals from civilian contractors were received and compared with the civil service proposal submitted by the Air Force. The Air Force civil service bid was $96,034,437.

Air Force civilian employees affected by the conversion to contract maintenance will be offered maximum employment assistance.

In keeping with Air Force regulations and federal law, the contractor will provide displaced federal employees the right of first refusal for employment openings on contract positions for which they are qualified.

For further details on the conversion announcement, see "Commander's perspective," page two.

Final Torchlight for Reese military maintainers

Personnel service to improve with PC III

By Sgt. Kimberly Nelson staff writer

A program to improve the quality and efficiency of personnel service at bases worldwide is being implemented by the Air Force.

Currently being installed at Reese, Personnel Concept III is planned for activation in February. During the next four years, PC III is planned for installation at approximately 125 Air Force bases throughout theworld SSgt. Gene Webb, base personnel systems manager, said there are three main reasons for the Air Force's implementation of the program:

☐ Today, the paper, labor, time and procedures required to update personnel information and process personnel actions does not provide the best possible support for commanders or customers. Once PC III is activated much of this will be eliminated and the proper support will be provided

A second reason for PC III is the pressure personnel offices receive to reduce staffing. Upon activation of the system, manpower authorizations can be effectively moved from the personnel career field to other career fields where they are urgently needed.

☐ PC III provides the types of information processing technology and equipment required to improve personnel service at more reasonable prices ll be provided.

Reese is projected to receive

□ A second reason for PC III is pressure personnel offices reprinters and 41 laser printers.

"The end points will be installed in functional area offices around the base. These areas include squadron orderly rooms, supply, communications, civil engineering and the Consolidated Base Personnel Office," Sergeant Webb said.

"Once activated, organizations can transmit information internally, thus eliminating the hand passing of paperwork," he added.

PC III will allow authorized end users direct access to the personnel data system through the personal computers and equipment located within their work areas.

Meetings are held for PC III unit project officers at 1:30 p.m. the second Monday of each month in the wing conference room. All interested wing members are invited to attend.

For more information, contact your unit's project officer or call Sergeant Webb at 3322.

Commander's perspective

By Col. Monroe S. Sams Jr. 64th FTW commander

Three years ago the Air Force directed Air Training Command to convert its inservice maintenance organizations to civilian maintenance. At that time, contract employees had been performing maintenance at two pilot training bases, Vance AFB, Okla., and Sheppard AFB, Texas, for several years.

Columbus AFB, Miss.,

was the first base to convert under the new Air Force directive. It became a contract operation in April 1988. Laughlin AFB, Texas, followed in April 1989. This time, however, the conversion was to civil service.

Although Reese was scheduled to begin its maintenance conversion this October, the process was delayed two months in order that we might incorporate "lessons learned" from the Columbus and Laughlin experiences. Williams AFB, Ariz., the final base to convert, will make its transition next spring.

It is now time for us to proceed with our conversion process, so that we can begin phasing in the new organization this December.

The first step is to announce the results of the cost comparison study directed by Headquarters, USAF — to compare the cost effectiveness of contract aircraft maintenance at Reese against an "in-house" civil service operation. The study was conducted under rules contained in the Office of Management and Budget's Circular A-76, which outlines the method for comparing the cost of contracting out a function currently being performed by Air Force members against the cost of continued operation by the leanest possible civil service organization.

A contractor was selected from multiple offerers to compete against the most efficient civil service organization, which formed the basis of the government bid.

The selected contractor was chosen to compete because its proposal offered the best value among several entries—from both a technical and cost point of view.

The contractor's target price and mobilization costs were compared with those of the civil service's most efficient organization under the rules specified in the A-76 circular. The necessary computations were made Tuesday by our Manpower Office here and approved Wednesday by Air Training Command headquarters and the office of the Secretary of the Air Force at the Pentagon.

The result of the cost comparison process is that Reese mission capability.

will convert to contract maintenance this December. The contractor chosen to perform this important function is Lockheed Support Services Inc.

The new contract organization will number approximately 500 people with the proper mixture of skills necessary to do the job. Although not currently performing this type of maintenance for the Air Force, the company does provide maintenance support for Navy pilot training at four bases. They certainly appear to have the organization and background to run an effective maintenance organization at Reese.

The Air Force realizes that this decision will cause serious concern among our current civilian workforce, many of whom have served our maintenance complex faithfully for many years. We are sensitive to these concerns and will make every effort to ensure their employment options and vested benefits are protected. Current maintenance employees will have the "right of first refusal" with the contractor for jobs for which they qualify. If an employee elects to remain civil service, several Air Force, DOD and federal programs are available to assist in placement. However, we know this will be a disruptive time for these valued government employees and we pledge our support in making their transition easier. Naturally, we hope most will choose to remain at Reese performing similar duties for the contractor.

This decision, however, is subject to a 15-day period of review by all interested parties, followed by a 30-day period in which appeals or protests may be rendered. We are satisfied that the civil service and contractor bids were fairly evaluated and that the result was derived in accordance with the criteria established by Air Force regulation and federal law.

The contract award amounts to $80.1 million to provide the maintenance organization and manpower for the approximate five-year life of the contract. This compares with an approximate cost of $137 million to do business with our combination of military and civil service members today. This will result in savings of more than $10 million per year. However, the original purpose of this action was to better align the Air Force's limited military manpower to more combat-related systems. Most of 800-plus military maintainers will be assigned to the Air Force's other major flying commands to fill critical positions.

Although our workforce in the maintenance complex will change, the pride, professionalism and attitude of the Reese team will remain steadfast. Changing the composition of Reese maintainers without affecting our mission—to train the best military pilots in the world—is the key to this conversion's success. Such a dramatic transition would not have been made if doing so would reduce our mission capability.

Fraud Waste Abuse

We need to be on guard

By Lt. Col. Michael J. Whitney 64th FTW inspector general

Fraud, waste, and abuse is a topic of great concern of which all Air Force people should be knowledgeable.

Any action that results in wasting government funds or resources is considered unacceptable and should be reported at the lowest level possible. Some fraud, waste, and abuse examples are: taking government property for personal use (pens, notebooks and other supplies); using government equipment for personal benefit (discounts at stores, free products and services).

All Reese employees, military and civilian are responsible for their own actions as well as for reporting all known cases of fraud, waste and abuse.

If you know of a situation in which government funds or resources are being abused report it immediately. Using your chain of command is the best way to approach such problems. start with the individual who is performing the wrong act. Confront him or her and tell them they're doing wrong. If the person continues to abuse government assets then report it to their supervisor, the section quality assurance evaluator or the squadron commander.

When abuse continues to occur regardless of your efforts to report it through the chain of command, contact me. As the wing inspector general it's my job to review the case and take steps toward stopping the abuse! I'm available any time, in Bldg. 800 to hear complaints. Special permission or an appointment is not required, but appointments can be made by calling 3409. I will ensure that all facts, opinions and attitudes are held in confidence except to the extent necessary to accomplish corrective action. (Adapted from a story in the Vance Airscoop)

Off-duty involvement is of vital importance

By Lt. Col. Paul J. Knudsen Grand Forks AFB, N.D.

The new evaluation systems for officers and enlisted people have refocused attention on performance.

In the past, it was perceived as essential to have "resumes" showing work on a college education or advanced degree, the right professional military education and participation in civic activities such as scouting or church programs. That perception was based on the idea that unless we were well-rounded, involved in all of these things, we probably stood little chance of getting the high level endorsements which often tipped the scales in favor of promotion.

Now there's not as much blank paper to fill up on the performance reports. In fact, there's barely enough room for the most essential words about duty performance. Levels of endorsement have also been limited which means much of the competition for high level endorsements is gone.

Now that the pressure is off, should we only do our job without worrying about giving up personal time for extracurricular activities?

Well, it depends on your point of view. Not long ago, I heard someone ask: "If evaluations are going to be based on job performance, why is the Air force leadership still concerned about community involvement?"

That "9 to 5 attitude" concerns me. It's an attitude that should be recognized, talked about (perhaps in feed back sessions), and dealt with.

America doesn't have a tradition of a large, standing military force. We used to depend, almost entirely, on mobilizing civilians as the need arose. This Army of "citizen-soldiers" has been the backbone of every major conflict in which our nation has been involved. The citizen-soldier, a name commonly associated with the Reserve and National Guard forces, remains a vital part of our national defense.

But aren't those of us in the regular Air Force also citizensoldiers? Don't we have as much diversity in our political, social and religious views as the rest of society? We are a microcosm of that society. We pay taxes, have the same voting rights and I believe we also share some of the obligations.

One of those obligations is to be more than a mere citizensoldier; we need to be soldier-citizens. A soldier-citizen is a soldier, or any military member, who participates. That means participating in unit and bade activities, special projects, and Officer's Clubs, because that's where our peers, subordinates and supervisors see us and learn what kind of person we are.

It also means participating in organizations such as the Air Force, NCO and Air Force Sergeant's Associations, because they support legislation important to us and publish literature with outstanding information about our Air Force. It also means completing the appropriate level of professional military education because that gives us the tools to be better soldiers.

Finally, it means participating in our specific profession through related education programs or professional societies.

A soldier-citizen is involved in the local community, as well. This is extremely important, because most of us ar from hometowns far from where we are stationed and our duty stations become our home for three years or more.

Like it or not, we are part of the local social and political community. We represent the Air Force to the community and have an obligation to give to the community what we can.

We have the opportunity to share with the community things we have learned elsewhere and things that concern us as members of the military. We have an opportunity to express our views, and from my experience, people are genuinely interested in what we think.

When we are involved in unit, base, Air Force and professional activities, we have the knowledge and communication tools to express ourselves. We are better able to promote the Air Force as a way of life.

When we are known as participants in the community, we have established credibility with our audience. In the words of one squadron officer's school instructor, all of this makes us able to fulfill an obligation to be "articulate advocates of aerospace power."

That's why Air Force leaders will continue to be interested in our involvement in unit, base, Air Force and civilian communities.

We are more than "nine-to fivers." We are soldiers; we are soldier-citizens! (Air Force Communications Command News Service)

A disease that can be seized Alcohol abuse: messes up Air Force careers

By Sgt. Kimberly Nelson staff writer

With the upcoming maintenance conversion, alcohol seems to have become a popular remedy for relieving stress at Reese, according to MSgt. Frank Lechuga, noncommissioned officer in charge of the 64th Mission Support Squadron Social Actions Office.

"Until recently," said Sergeant Lechuga, "the level of alcohol abuse on base was moderately low. But with the changes about to take place, people have found it easier to vent their stress through drinking.

"At Reese, alcoholism is considered and handled as a disease," he said, "The severity of the problem differs in each individual. Once someone is diagnosed by a physician, it's up to that person's commander to determine how much help is needed."

In 1956, the American Medical Association gave formal recognition to the disease concept of alcoholism. They stated that recognizing alcoholism as an illness implies several things:

☐ The illness can be described — the alcoholic's compulsion to drink is manifested in drinking habits that are inappropriate, unpredictable, excessive and constant. The individual may be good at hiding the compulsion, but it is always there. Also, that person might say that compulsion means you have to have a drink, and backs it up with "I make the choice so I'm not an alcoholic."

☐ The course of illness is predictable and progressive it will get worse. Sometimes the drinking behavior seems to stay constant and occasionally it seems to make an improvement, but over a period of time the disease heads toward deterioration. Deterioration can be physical, mental or spiri-

☐ The disease is primary and not a symptom of another disease- for a long time, medical and psychiatric profespsychological disorders. Now these people have come to realize that alcoholism is a primary disease that causes mental, emotional and physical problems.

☐ The disease is permanent — once you have it, you have it. The only solution is to seek help to permanently arrest the disease — the earlier, the better.

☐ The disease is terminal — if you have this disease, and you do not successfully arrest it, you will die from it. Death certificates use a lot of euphemisms for alcoholism, but the end result is still the same — the victim is dead. Whether the chemical complicated a heart condition, high blood pressure, liver problems, a bleeding ulcer or precipitated suicide, it is still the agent that caused the death.

Within the Air Force, there are five ways that individuals are identified as alcohol abusers. The first way is through individual self identification, where the individual identifies himself/herself as having a problem that he/she knows he/she is unable to handle.

The second way is through the individual's commander or supervisor. If a person's duty performance and personal behavior becomes poor, that person is referred to social actions to determine if an alcohol problem exists.

Third is the medical/accident report identification method. A person becomes involved in an automobile accident, is hospitalized, and later is identified as being under the influence of alcohol — possibly the cause of the accident.

Another way is the traffic-related apprehension — a person is picked up for driving while intoxicated or has his/ her name placed on a police blotter for being over the legal blood-alcohol content level. According to Air Force regula-

'The problem is the behavior, not just the drinking..." -MSgt. Frank Lechuga

sionals treated alcoholism as a symptom of emotional or tions, that person is automatically referred to social actions for treatment or rehabilitation.

> Last is identification through non-traffic or domestic disturbances. This involves persons who are under the influence of alcohol and are picked up for fighting in clubs, dormitories or the home.

> According to Sergeant Lechuga, if someone is identified as an alcohol abuser through self identification, he or she won't lose promotions or other Air Force privileges that could be lost through other means of identification.

> "Each problem is handled on an individual basis. Once a person is identified as an alcohol abuser and the commander determines that help is necessary, social actions provides two programs for rehabilitation," said Sergeant Lechuga.

> Military members and their spouses identified as alcohol abusers are sent to the Alcohol Rehabilitation Center at Sheppard AFB, Texas (spouses must self identify to receive treatment). It's a 28-day program under the direct care of physicians specially trained to handle alcoholism.

> There is also a one-year local program for someone whose problem is not as severe. "Occasionally, if an individual is not motivated enough to solve their problem — the problem is the behavior, not just the drinking — then the individual will go through the local program," the sergeant commented.

> "If an individual gets to the point where the drinking cannot be stopped, the commander has ordered the individual to quit, the individual has attended the programs and the behavior is still substandard, a commander may request a discharge," Sergeant Lechuga pointed out. "But if the individual does quit drinking and the behavior returns to standards, that individual's file will be removed from the Consolidated Base Personnel Office Records Section and from social actions and the one-year probation will be lifted."

> "The only reference to an alcoholism problem will be in the person's medical records, where it is identified as a disease," concluded Sergeant Lechuga.

Magistrate system going into effect

By Sgt. Kimberly Nelson staff writer

Under the previously announced U.S. Magistrate System that begins here Sept. 1, any civilian who commits a misdemeanor offense on Reese may be subject to trial before a U.S. Magistrate Court judge.

Civilians include all retired military, dependents, grade-scale, wage-grade, non-appropriated fund and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Division employees, as well as all civilian visitors. Active-duty military members come under the Uniform Code of Military Justice and will continue to receive the Department of Defense Form 1408, Armed Forces Traffic Ticket.

"The magistrate system, a Department of Defense-wide program, has been in use with some of the other services for approximately 20 years," said SMSgt. Darrell Johnson, 64th Security Police squadron Law Enforcement Section. "The majority of Air Training Command bases, due to the large percentage of civilian employees, have recently initiated the program.

"Throughout the month of August, the 64th SPS will be issuing and processing a 1408 under the current system for all civilian traffic violators. The SPs will also warn the violator, based on Vernon's Civil Statutes of Texas, the price of that offense beginning Sept. 1 when DD Form 1805, U.S. District Court Violation Notice, is issued.

"Please keep in mind," he commented, "that during this period, a violation will not go unnoticed if the on-duty SP feels the citation is warranted."

If you receive an 1805, the SP will advise you about mailing the fine to the Central Violation Bureau in San Antonio. Depending on the offense, you may also be told of a possible appearance before a federal magistrate judge; the date will be established by the bureau.

Trials will be held in the Reese Court Room, Bldg. 230, third floor, and will be presided over by Judge J.Q. Warnick Jr. of the U.S. Magistrate Court in Lub-

Upon receipt of an 1805, points will be placed on the individual's state driving record. If enough points are received, the state issuing the license will determine what actions are necessary.

"Just as with a traffic ticket received downtown, if an individual fails to pay a fine, he or she will be subpoenaed to appear before a court," said Sergeant Johnson, a subpoena will also be issued if a person fails to report to trial.

"If you feel there is an error on the violation notice, contact the security police chief prior to paying the fine or going to trial," said Sergeant Johnson.

"For other than traffic-related violations, such as vandalism, breaking and entering and theft, the base legal office will determine if the violation fails under the magistrate system," the sergeant added.

There are exceptions to almost every rule and this program is no exception, the sergeant pointed out. The 1408 will be issued to a civilian if that individual is operating a government vehicle at the time of the violation or if he commits an offense that is specifically only prohibited by Air Force regulations or wing supplements, such as a motorcycle operator not wearing highly reflective clothing.

The more 1408s a person acquires, the more on-base points they accumulate. "Once a person reaches the 12point limit, the base commander will determine the action to take place, such as revoking on-base driving privileges for a designated period of time," the sergeant commented.

For more information, visit the security police in Bldg. 500 or call them at 3612/3333.

35th FTS brings home Air Force unit award

By Sgt. Greg Spraggins staff writer

The 35th Flying Training Squadron has been selected for the Air Force Outstanding Unit Award.

During the period, the 35th FTS accomplished its primary mission of training "the best pilots in the world" while maintaining a commendable safety record, according to Lt. Col. Buster Ellis, 35th FTS commander.

In addition to this, the squadron fostered an attitude of cooperation and friendship with the civilian community through active civic involvement.

"After you have been associated with a unit for a year, you tend to look back at work that's been done to assess whether or not you are on track," said Colonel Ellis. "The outstanding unit award wasn't just awarded to the 35th because it was our time, but because of a lot of hard work by a lot of good people."

"The members of the squadron have sacrificed a lot of extra time," said colonel Ellis. "I think professionalism is something you do when no one is watching, and these are some of the most professional officers, NCOs and airmen I have ever worked with. It makes me proud to know that we have dedicated people who are out there trying to make it better."

According to Colonel Ellis, the unit isno stranger to awards, accumulating several during 1988-89.

The squadron was selected for the Air Training Command Unit Flying Safety Award for 96 accident-free months, Aug. 20, 1988.

Capt. Craig Hughes, a 35th FTS instructor pilot, was selected as Reese's and ATC's IP of the year for 1988.

The squadron's competitiveness in the annual Torchlight flying competition has been superior, as they came home victorious two of the last three years.

Colonel Ellis said that working for people like Col. Monroe Sams, has allowed him the freedom to attempt to excel as a squadron. "They're very supportive and have allowed me and my folks to do our job," he said. "I really value the lessons I have learned from them, and their styles of leadership."

Colonel Ellis said that the outstanding unit award is the pinnacle of a year of hard work, dedication and professionalism. "It's been very gratifying to see people set high goals, work extremely hard to maintain high standards, and then be recognized for their hard work. With all these accomplishments, there is only one thing to do and that's get better."

American, Soviet officials sign accord to prevent accidents

Phone

763-6002

By Army MSgt. Mary A. Peterson American Forces Information Service

An agreement designed to help prevent accidental aggression was signed June 12 by Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. William J. Crowe Jr. and Chief of the Soviet General Staff Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev.

The agreement requires both countries to take steps to defuse potential situations that could escalate.

Under terms of the Prevention of Dangerous Military Activities Agreement, both countries agreed to contact each other before taking defensive actions for:

☐ Force majeure — the reaction to an unintentional entry into the other's territory; ☐ Hazardous use of lasers;

Disrupting areas of high tension in a specifically designated special caution area; and ☐ Interference of command and control. A senior military official explained that the agreement has "created an environment in which people would think about contacting one another before they overreact.

"It's a creation of a positive environment," he said, "and a commitment on both sides to deal with inadvertent and unintentional potential confrontations and to peacefully resolve them."

The agreement, which takes effect Jan. 1, is an outgrowth of a discussion in 1988 between then-Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci and Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov in Bern, Switzerland, the official said. Several incidents occurred in the past that endangered U.S. military equipment and personnel which could have increased tensions between the two countries' military activities, he said.

"The secretary asked Admiral Crowe what things might be done to avoid confrontations in the future," he said. "A working group was established, and talks began in October. The Soviet team that negotiated the agreement was under strict orders to cooperate — so there was an impetus to come up with something workable."

A joint commission must still be established to develop procedures for contacting each other when the situations identified in the agreement occur.

The official explained scenarios in which a force majeure situation could occur:

☐ An aircraft low on fuel might divert to an alternate airfield in the other's territory.

☐ A border incursion caused by a "simple navigational error or equipment malfunc-

The "hazardous use of lasers" provision results from several past incidents, including one in which a laser aboard a Soviet vessel temporarily injured a Navy pilot.

"Disrupting areas of high tension in a specifically designated special caution area" is analogous to the United States involvement in the Persian Gulf, the official said. By making the gulf a special caution area, where Soviet and U.S. naval vessels have been deployed, the Dangerous Military Activities Agreement will provide a mechanism to "set up procedures for how we operate in the area," the official said. "We would deal with the Soviet Union on a case-by-case basis."

The increasing use of sophisticated electronic communications and navigation equipment has caused the United States and the Soviet Union to devise ways of jamming signals. "The number of lasing incidents in the past few years and electronic jamming [have increased]," the official said. "This is technology we haven't had until recently and of course haven't addressed before.

"Jamming is done in exercises from time to time. Jamming radio transmissions at critical times could result in disastrous events,"

"If jamming is experienced, we should contact the Soviets on the designated radio frequency and ask if they are in the area and if they're jamming reception. Under the terms of the agreement, they are required to check their location and determine of they are causing the interference, then stop," he said.

Marshall Harrison has written a remark able memoir of aerial warfare in Vietnam. As a FAC, "forward air-controller" he was job in the air war: to fly "low and slow, skimming the treetops, alone in a lightly armed and vulnerable prop plane, trolling for enemy fire with himself as the "bait."

You are with Harrison on one secret mission when he is shot down and forced to spend a harrowing night in the jungle, with enemy troops searching for him while Special Forces plot his rescue

A Lonely Kind of War is the first book to tell the story of these brave pilots, whose ranks suffered staggering losses, and their little-know but vital role in Vietnam.

DOD deputy revamps Pentagon commercial acquisition program

Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Atwood is revamping the Pentagon's commercial acquisition program, emphasizing reduced costs and simplified methods for buying commercial items.

A highlight included in the revised program will provide a framework for considering factors other than pricing when making contract award decisions.

Commercial products include those items that are readily available on the commercial market, such as a special wrench sold in a local hardware store.

The intent of the program is to cut down on the multitude of requirements and paperwork a worker must go through to get the wrench, or other items, in the fastest possible

Several studies and two Defense Science Boards have cited the benefits the Department of Defense can gain by increased use of commercial products. These benefits include savings in research and development dollars, reduced acquisition lead time, improved quality and reduced acquisition and support costs. Mr. Atwood's plan takes a threepronged approach to achieving reduced costs and simplified buying. It entails:

☐ Changing the guidance related to buying commercial items.

☐ Providing tools directed at expanding DOD's capability to use commercial items.

Providing additional training to the DOD work force.

Other highlights of the plan include:

☐ New guidance on preparing and using commercial item descriptions instead of military specifications for buying these products and services.

☐ Revising sections of federal acquisition regulations dealing with the buying of commercial items, to include cost and pricing requirements.

☐ A pilot program for using multiple award schedules for large dollar items such as construction equipment. Multiple award schedules are used mainly by the General Services Administration and list products that meet a generic product description along with price, delivery terms, and so on. From this information, buyers can select specific items that best suit their needs.

Demonstrating DOD's ability to use commercial microcircuits and commercial hardware and software successfully.

☐ Meetings with industry to seek out and eliminate specific contract requirements that discourage commercial contractors from doing business with the Defense Department. (Air Force News Service)

EWC working to improve life in community

by Sgt. Mike Breslin editor

One aspect of life in the military is the comraderie that the service inspires in its members. This facet of service life is an important one, given the often demanding lifestyle that military members go through together.

While the rigors of life in the Air Force is often thought of only in terms of its effect on the military member, the demands can be just as great on the spouse.

One organization that works to make the military lifestyle an enjoyable one for spouses is the Reese Enlisted Wives' Club.

"A lot of people complain there's nothing to do around here — I've heard that from a lot of women," said Sandy White, EWC president. "Then they join and find out that there's a lot of things they can get involved in."

Currently, the EWC has several events slated in the coming months. They include a membership drive Aug. 21-25, during which club members will be going door to door through Reese Village to let people know about the advantages of EWC membership; a mobile bake sale in September (date to be announced); a Breakfast with Santa for children during the holidays; an auction on Nov. 4; and the Sweetheart's Ball, the club's big fund-raiser each year, according to Mrs. White. The next one is scheduled for February.

Another important part of the EWC's work are the contributions they make to improve the base community for their members

"They (non-members) don't realize how badly the club is needed until they get involved and see the fulfillment they can get from doing things to help the base community," she said.

"We have members who attend meetings of the exchange and commissary advisory councils," Mrs. White pointed out. "Because of that, it gives the enlisted spouses a chance to better the community by speaking up."

Mrs. White commented that the club is looking to double its membership in the coming weeks. The club is open to spouses of enlisted members as well as spouses of civilian employees who are EOM members.

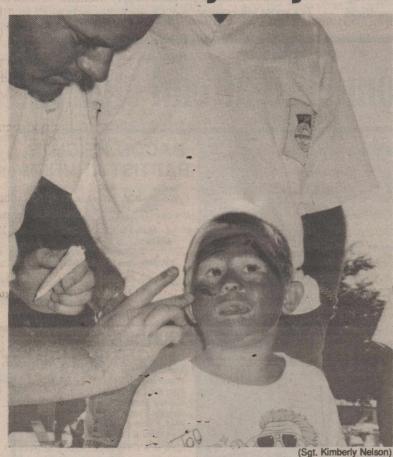

She also pointed out that people should automatically dismiss the idea of joining just because they are affected by the upcoming A-76 maintenance conversion.

"Many of these people would be surprised at the help they can get and the support they could have from the club," Mrs. White said. "Even though many of us are leaving, people still should get out there and keep things going."

The EWC meets at 7 p.m. the last Monday of each month in the EOM. Non-members can attend one meeting to find out if they club is for them.

For more information on the EWC, call the EOM at 3156 or Mrs. White at 885-4215.

Community Day: a big success that was fun for all

By Sgt. Kimberly Nelson

staff writer

Approximately 400 people made their way through the streets of Reese Village Saturday during the Community Day Street Sale.

Participants of all ages began arriving at 8 a.m. They came to buy, sell and trade at some of the 70-plus stands. Some even came just to talk to their neighbors.

Background chatter throughout the day ranged from children pleading "Mommy, can I have one of these?" to the real bargainer saying "I really like this, but instead would you accept..."

Strategically located at the beginning of the sale area, Reese Chapel members were ready to greet people and provide information on the many programs offered through the church, such as choir, Sunday School, various masses and specialty groups like the Young Adult Group.

Food concessionaires consisted of a barbecued ribs and chicken stand sponsored by the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron and a nacho booth operated by Detachment 11, 24th Weather Squadron.

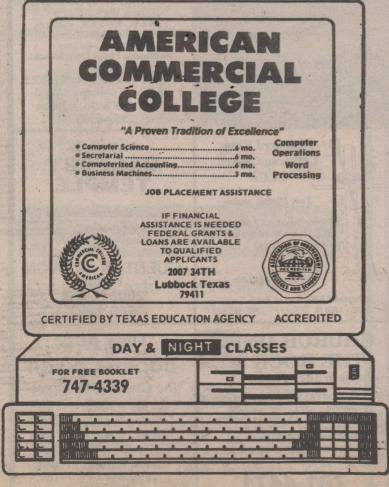

Many of Reese's people were able to rid themselves of those "too good to throw away" items that tend to sit around collecting dust and taking up space. This was the case with Carol Smith. "I pulled up in my truck at 10 a.m.," she said. "Before I could begin unloading, people were dragging stuff out of the back asking 'How much?' Within the first 20 minutes I made at least $70." By 1 p.m., almost everything she had brought was gone.

Various craft items, such as Mayra Chavez' teddy bear baskets, were also displayed for sale. "I sold quite a few on display and have received orders to last me until the end of summer," she commented.

"The day is a success," commented passers-by and sellers alike. "We've had a lot of fun and are looking forward to community day next year."

When it comes to talent in the Air Force, these folks are . . .

Force colonel). Thirty-nine years later, the show's goals remain the same today as when it began — to provide professional, quality entertainment to Air Force members, with emphasis on performing at remote and relatively isolated installations around the world. For 235 consecutive days per year, Tops in Blue performs 230 shows spanning thousands of miles.

Today's cast members were selected from more than 250 finalists from the 1989 Worldwide Talent Contest held in May.

These 250 contestants were selected from thousands who competed in base-level and command-level contests all over the world. Once they reached the worldwide competition, contestants were subject to extensive competition, interviews and auditions. At the end of this week-long process, the Tops in Blue candidates were chosen.

Once chosen, these candidates were still a long way from being Tops in Blue members.

Air Force Entertainment at Lackland AFB, Texas, they spend 18 hours a day for one month developing and rehearsing the theme and content of the show.

Prior to rehearsal, not a note is written, thus allowing the show to take on the personalities of the multi-talented performers. At the end of that long grueling month, the members are ready and the show begins.

In 1985, Tops in Blue was selected as the Super Bowl XIX halftime entertainment. In 1987, they were given the opportunity to participate in the nationally-televised Bob Hope Special at Pope AFB, N.C. Throughout its history, Tops in Blue has performed in almost every imaginable situation and to almost all conceivable audiences possible.

Managed by SSgt. Percy Lewis Jr., the 1989 Tops in Blue cast consists of: SSgt. Gerald McMillan, Sgt. Derrick Wright and A1C Audra Isaac, Vandenberg AFB, Calif.; Sgt. Darren Lanmon, Bergstrom AFB,

Texas; MSgt. Joseph Fablano, Goodfellow AFB, Texas; TSgt. Lawrence Koehler, Hill AFB, Utah; Sgt. Vincent Anderson and A1C Joseph McDonough, Minot AFB, N.D.; SSgt. Tommy Lebow, Offutt AFB, Neb.; Sgt. Georges Sanon, Lowry AFB, Colo.; A1C James Cline, Dover AFB, Del.; A1C Troy Gogan, Travis AFB, Calif.; TSgt. Michael Robertson and A1C Bridget Hamby, Scott AFB, Ill.; SrA. Kirk Chavez, Ramstein AB, Germany; 1st Lt. Christian Moore, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio; 1st Lt. Mara Vanderburgh, RAF Mildenhall, U.K.; TSgt. Elmo Tillar Jr., Kelly AFB, Texas; SSgt. Rattlers make ATC team

Two members of the Reese Rattlers softball team are playing on the Air Training Command team participating in the Air Force Championships which wrap up tomorrow at Goodfellow AFB, Texas.

Todd Cogdill and Andre Hartley were chosen to attend the ATC training camp after playing exceptionally well at the command tournament. Cogdill's fielding was also outstanding, according to Rattlers' coach Gary Grant.

Unfortunately, the two Lady Rattlers who were recently selected for the ATC training camp didn't fare as well. Terry Patterson and Melissa Ward were unable to make the cut for the command team that participated in the Air Force women's tournament at Vandenberg AFB, Calif.

Training camps

Anyone interested in attending the Air Force soccer or powerlifting training camps in October and November, respectively, should submit an Air Force Form 303 to the Reese Physical Fitness Center.

For more information, call Jake Trevino at the center,
