DOD working to provide help for those forced out

The secretary of defense is asking Congress for legal authority to implement a program to assist servicemembers and their families facing discharge as part of a plan to reduce the size of the Armed Forces.

Among the benefits sought in the proposal is a plan to give those involuntarily separated up to 26 weeks of unemployment compensation, comparable to what civilians receive when they lose their job through-no fault of their own.

"These men and women volunteered to serve their country and they have done so in the finest of American traditions," Secretary Dick Cheney said in a Pentagon statement released Aug. 1.

"We have an obligation to see that they are prepared to compete in the private sector."

Secretary Cheney said the Military Personnel Transition Assistance Act, sent as a legislative proposal to House and Senate leadership, is necessary because existing laws do not provide the Defense Department with needed authority to fully help displaced people adjust to civilian life.

"This legislative proposal will give us the legal tools we need to do the job," he said. The secretary is urging swift enactment of the proposal by these on Constal Util proposal by those on Capitol Hill.

Other benefits that could come about as a result of the plan include:

Extended medical benefits for 31 days after separation for servicemembers and their families, as well as treatment for up to a year on conditions such as pregnancy existing at the time of discharge.

□ Expanded eligibility for enrollment in the Montgomery GI Bill for those who separate involuntarily through Dec. 31, 1993.

Expanded transition assistance to provide employment and training information to servicemembers and their spouses within 180 days of discharge.

□ Voluntary registration for service members and their spouses in an automated job referral service.

The Directorate for Transition Support and Services is serving as the focal point in DOD for coordinating existing and proposed services/benefits for displaced military and civilian employees and their families.

Officials within this directorate are working with other federal agencies and the military departments on a variety of military and civilian benefits and programs, including education, family support, and compensation. (Air Force News Service)

COMMENTARY

Roundup Aug. 10, 1990

From my perspective

by Col. Bill Henny 64th FTW commander

I'm again impressed by the people of the 64th Flying Training Wing. During my recent visits to various sections I've seen overwhelming enthusiasm and commitment to our mission.

You made it a pleasure for me to show our new commander, Lt. Gen. Ashy, around the base. It was obvious to him, as it is to all our visitors, that the "Reese team" genuinely takes pride in our community. This was kind of a homecoming for General Ashy since he is a UPT graduate of Reese. Consequently, he was able to appreciate the vast improvements that this base has undergone since his days as a student pilot.

The facilities and grounds haven't looked better since my arrival early last year. Despite the extremely hot summer we've had, the superb condition of the base is directly attributable to everyone's hard work.

Since the people of Reese are our most important resource, it's time that commanders and supervisors examine the programs that help get folks recognized for the hard work they do. The bottom line is — people can't win awards if they're not nominated for them. It's up to every level of leadership in the wing to identify and recognize exceptional performers. If your people are exceeding mission expectations, we need to give them the thanks and recognition they deserve. Whether it's at the unit, wing or command level, there is a variety of award programs designed to recognize the outstanding mission contributions of your people.

In times of tighter manpower and budgetary constraints, taking care of people is job one at Reese. In so doing, we'll be able to sustain the quality of life that makes this base a great place to be!

Outgoing HOSP commander reflects on his time at Reese

by Col. Edward McGovern 64th FTW Hospital

(Editor's note: Colonel McGovern wrote this article before relinquishing command of the hospital.)

After serving at Reese for 28 months, my departure for Williams AFB, Ariz., is filled with mixed emotions.

I am enthusiastic and eager about my new assignment at Williams; however, the challenges and rewards that have occurred here—and the people with whom I have been associated—are unsurpassed.

My grateful appreciation for their help and support is extended to the three wing commanders under whom I have served, with special thanks to Col. Bill Henny, and to Deputy Commander for Resource Management Lt. Col. Stephen Maddox and his staff for their superb help and cooperation in processing the many contractual agreements and blanket purchase agreements.

And lastly, to Maj. Howard Altschwager and his Legal Office staff for the outstanding and prompt assistance they #### rendered.

You, the men and women of the hospital and wing, have made this an enjoyable assignment for Patti and me. I would be remiss in not also mentioning the superb support of the many volunteers who contributed so much toward the hospital accomplishment of its mission.

Retiree volunteers worked a total of 3,334 hours and Red Cross volunteers worked a total of 4,989 hours during the past year—a phenomenal feat. The hospital could not have survived without their help.

Likewise, we appreciate the support we received from the civilian community, particularly that of retired Lt. Gen. (Dr.) Bernhard T. Mittemeyer, executive vice president of the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Medicine, and Dr. Claude Ricks, director of the Veterans Administration Outpatient Clinic. Their assistance, accommodation and contribution toward furthering our delivery of quality health care helped us attain mission accomplishment.

My gratitude goes to every member of the hospital and base. I encourage your continued 100-percent support of the hospital and its new commander, Lt. Col. Joseph Contiguglia.

> Pedestrians have right of way on Reese

Reese drivers are reminded that pedestrians have the right of way at all times on base. 64th Security Police Squadron officials emphasized that cars should stop for people in crosswalks.

What, me again? Urinalysis can happen to anyone at anytime

by 1st Lt. Mitch Sibley-Jett Reese Social Actions Office chief

Many people recently have asked me, "How come I come up on the urinalysis roster every month?" It is a valid question, I think. This list is then sorted by squadron, and sent out to the applicable squadrons the day prior to the test (the day and time of the test are also selected randomly to avoid any pattern).

(SSgt. Mike Breslin)

The individuals on the roster are notified no earlier than the day of the test, and are asked to report at a specific time. This

Let me take a minute to explain how the system works, and why you may come up more than once.

According to Air Force Regulation 30-2, everyone is subject to urinalysis testing at any time, regardless of rank, grade or position. The theory is that individuals who might be tempted to use illegal drugs will be discouraged by the possibility of being identified and the penalties that would follow.

By the way, our statistics bear this out, as about .6 percent of the base population was identified for illegal drug use in 1989.

The selection process works like this. Each quarter, we receive a quota of the number of individuals we are required to test from Air Training Command. At Reese, we test between 60 and 80 people every month. We use computer software to randomly select 3 numbers, which we then use to pick those 60-80 individuals.

process is repeated each month.

We have set up the system so that the computer does not remember who it selected the previous month. If it did (and if those individuals were exempt from testing), then the system would not be random.

Some individuals' names come up quite frequently, while others go years before they're selected. It's really the luck of the draw.

Between varying the individuals selected and the date/time of the selection, we think we have a pre ty sound program.

We are always looking for ways to improve it, so if you have any suggestions, please stop by the Reese Social Actions Office and let us know. If your name shows up and you are called to "contribute," please understand that everyone's chances are the same. By supporting the program, you are supporting a drug-free Air Force. Who knows, maybe your luck at being selected for the urinalysis will translate into luck at being selected to win the "Lotto!"

Reese instructor excels at Randolph trainers' course

by Sgt. Greg Spraggins Reese Public Affairs Division

A member of the 52nd Flying Training Squadron was recently cited for his performance at pilot instructor training at Randolph AFB, Texas.

First Lt. Jack Daniel's performance at PIT featured an outstanding contact check ride, which along with his academic performance, put him at the top of PIT Class 90-12.

Lieutenant Daniel, a 1988 graduate of the Air Force Academy, graduated with Undergraduate Pilot Training Class 89-15 here in September 1989.

The Austin, Texas native sees patience as the virtue most needed by an instructor pilot. "It's exciting," said the lieutenant. "The students do a good job of keeping you on the edge. You never know what maneuver they're going to invent next."

Lieutenant Daniel said he enjoyed flying at PIT, but said the evaluations after each ride were "draining," especially after the past year of evaluations in UPT.

"By the end of PIT, I was ready to get back home and be the evaluator instead of the evaluatee."

Lieutenant Daniel relates PIT to "varsity pilot training." "They're not going to send you back unless they feel you can do the job," he added.

Lieutenant Daniel likes being a part of the 'hard-working' instructor pilot force.

"Someday I'd like to fly with Tactical Air Command," he said, "but for now I just want to be the best IP possible."

Reese 'peacekeeper' shines at competition

by Sgt. Kimberly Nelson assistant editor

A member of the 64th Security Police Squadron took honors in the 1990 Air Training Command Peacekeeper Challenge July 23-27 at Lackland AFB, Texas.

Reese's A1C Paul Zahn took second place in the M-203 grenade launcher competition. First place in the event went to TSgt. Johnny Kraatz of the 3498th SPS at Goodfellow AFB, Texas.

Three other Reese members competed in Antonio, but this year this year's competition. They were A1C Ron Mines, assistant M-60 gunner; A1C Shawn Baxter, who was the best Reese M-9 gunner; and Amn. David Nuessle, M-60 gunner. TSgt. Scott Thornton joined the members as the team captain.

"This year's team performed better and scored higher than last year," said Sergeant Thornton. "I believe this is mainly because of the longer and more strenuous training program they underwent (versus last year)."

Before going to competition Reese's members spent five weeks (about 12 hours per day) training for the five events: grenade launcher, M-16 rifle, 9mm handgun, M-60 volves tests of marksmanship and physical fitness skills used in a combat environment. The weather made the competition more gruelling this year than last, according to Sergeant Thornton. "We expected the heat and humidity of San we also encountered several severe downpours."

Even though visibility for many teams was reduced to 300 yards, the competition was not halted and teams were not allowed to reshoot.

Aspects of this year's competition included:

The grenade launcher competition consisted of a rugged course with multiple and single targets, some of which were electroni-

□ In the M-16 rifle competition, particiapants were allowed two minutes to prepare before the start of the event. After getting two magazines with 10 rounds each and four fiveround magazines, shooters proceeded to the starting point and ran to the 400-meter line, where they began their course.

Targets ranged from 100-400 meters and shooters were given only seconds to aim and fire 10 shots at each of the four targets.

At the end of the course, points were subtracted for each round fired from an improper position.

First place in the M-60 machine gun competition went to the 47th SPS team of Goodfellow's A1C Kevin Culp took top honors in the course by getting 14 hits (the maximum amount possible) in the least amount of time. The winner scored 165 points, which placed Airman Baxter close behind with 160 points.

The physical fitness competition, which replaced the obstacle course, measured the physical endurance and strength of each member. The competition consisted of a twomile run and completing as many pull-ups, push-ups and sit-ups as possible in two-minute time-frames - all was performed in combat boots and the battle dress uniform.

SrA Jonathan Williams, 82nd SPS at Williams AFB, Ariz., was the most physically fit.

"Our team's performance was very commendable," said Sergeant Thornton. "The award that Airman Zahn won, in addition to all the knowledge and experience the team gained made this year's competition very profitable to everyone involved.

"I am already looking forward to next year's competition," concluded Sergeant

'Looking Glass' cuts flying

The Strategic Air Command's Looking Glass command post has ceased continuous airborne operations. However, the aircraft will still fly random missions each week, SAC officials said.

The decision to cut flights, made by Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney with the concurrence of the president, ends more than 31 years of continuous airborne alert missions by the EC-135, a modified version of the commercial Boeing 707.

Referred to as Looking Glass because it mirrors the capability of SAC's underground command center at Offutt AFB, Neb., the fleet has logged more than a quarter million hours of accident-free flying.

When not airborne, the Looking Glass and crew will be on "quick reaction" ground alert, just as SAC bombers and tankers are presently poised. Should the need arise, Looking Glass would be able to go airborne within minutes if it were not flying.

The decision to cut back on Looking Glass flying is expected to save about $18 million in fiscal 1991 and more than $23 million the following year. (Air Force News Service)

AFAFC announces change

The July payroll deduction for the Dependent Dental Plan will be collected from August paychecks, according to the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center in Denver.

The delayed deduction is the result of a miscommunication between the center and the Civilian Health and Medical Plan of the Uniformed Services, or CHAMPUS. CHAMPUS originally told the accounting center that the new rates (the result of a monthly premium increase) would take effect Aug. 1; however, the effective date was actually July 1. July premiums were not deducted.

The new rates are $4.57 per month for one dependent, and $9.14 for two or more dependents. For more information, call the Reese Accounting and Finance Branch at 3201.

Ready for the Talons For student pilots, the T-38 is a whole new ball game

by Sgt. Kimberly Nelson assistant editor

(Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series about what it's like to go through undergraduate pilot training at Reese.)

"Tweet complete" and ready for the "Talons."

Reese T-37 instructor pilots begin with people who have the bare minimum in flying experience in military aircraft. After almost six months, these instructors transform these amateur "flyboys" into T-37qualified student pilots who are now ready for their biggest challenge yet — the T-38 Talon.

First two weeks of the T-38

Their first day in the 54th Flying Training Squadron, students were introduced to their instructors. They also attended their first T-38 academics class and learned the basics about the jet's systems.

In addition to academics, students were given their first rides in the T-38 flight simulators, while preparing for their first systems test. After they gained basic knowledge of the jet, they were also given their T-38 "dollar rides" — their first ride in the aircraft.

"It was a big change going from the T-37 to the T-38," said Capt. Bruce Dobbins of UPT Class 91-02, a privately licensed pilot with about 120 hours in a single-engine aircraft.

"In the T-37, the IP sits right next to you and can show you what to do. In the T-38, the instructor is behind you in a separate compartment and can only tell you what to do," said Captain Dobbins, AFROTC graduate from Angelo State. University, Texas, with prior ... we were able to fly out to the experience as an F-4 navigator. practice areas," said Lieutenant

First Lt. Sean Bradford of 91-02 pointed out that in a T-38, the student is the one who usually starts the jet. "So we have to be familiar with the basic functions of the jet before we can even go on our dollar ride," he said. Now a member of the Air National Guard, Lieutenant Bradford is a graduate from The Citadel, S.C., and a former USAF missle launch officer.

Basic flying and aerodynamics

Following their systems test, the students moved to basic contact flying and aerodynamics. During the students' next six weeks, IPs "firehosed" them with more information than they ever thought they could handle.

"Firehosing," explained 91-02's 2nd Lt. John Marsini, "is when the instructors teach us as much information and as many flying manuevers as they possible can in the time they are allotted. It is then up to us to grasp as much of it as we possibly can."

Meanwhile, instructors work on improving the students' flying and landing abilities. The students also get a review of all the maneuvers that the T-38 is capable of performing. Once the IPs feel they are ready (usually after 11 flights) the students take their first solo flight.

Captain Dobbins did his first solo on June 22. On June 28, the two lieutenants had their turns. All three agreed that soloing was great.

"It gave us a sense of relief and accomplishment to be up there all alone," said Lieutenant Bradford.

"It is also more challenging, since in the T-37, we could only .take the jet out into the pattern during our first solo, said Lieutenant Marsini. "In the T-38, Marsini. "Knowing the instructors trusted our skills enough to let us leave the protected area of the pattern helped build our confidence levels even more."

No carryover between jets

When the students move from the T-37 to the T-38, their performance slate is wiped clean, pointed out 1st Lt. Chris Kauffman, 54th FTS 'G' Flight IP.

someone who didn't do so well in the T-37 may excel in the T-38," Lieutenant Kauffman said.

Second Lt. Jeni Lank, Reese Undergraduate Pilot Training Class 90-13, gets ready for a T-38 flight Monday.

As the students continue to build their airmanship, they also find that the more they learn, the harder it gets. During T-37 phase, the emergency procedures senarios that were given would normally be straightforward.

before you can even get to a conclusion, you have to figure out what route you are going to take to get to your planned ending."

Also, because of the complexity of the T-38, there is less room for error.

The glass-encased pencil

"In the T-38, it's like we are

Sgt. Kimberly Nelson

"Someone who may have been 'top stick' in the T-37 may not be in the T-38. At the same time,

"You either got it right or wrong (in the T-37)," said Lieutenant Bradford. "The scenarios they give us in the T-38s are very brief and can often have many conclusions. But sitting at the end of a 'glassencased pencil," said Captain Dobbins, referring to the way the Talon cockpit is set up.

"Since our instructors are behind us, we can't see them. Without the intercom system, we can't hear them. So we must always be ready to take control in the event communications are lost," added Lieutenant Bradford.

Once the students reach the T-38 portion of training, they are treated more like pilots instead of students.

"It's a whole different atmosphere in T-38s," said Lieutenant Marsini. "Here, the instructors are no longer holding our hands and guiding us through like children. They're letting us make the decisions, and most of the time they accept the decisions we make."

Second Lt. Steve Stephens, UPT Class 91-03, prepares for flying "Talons" in a T-38 simulator.

Medal of Honor winner discusses impact of award

by A1C Mark Songer Travis AFB, Calif.

Among the 10,000 residents of the Connecticut village of South Windsor, there are many who probably don't know that one of their neighbors is a living legend among Air Force enlisted people.

"And I don't really want them to know either," said John Levitow, whose name ranks high on the list of historic firsts that bluesuiters must learn and remember.

During a recent visit to Travis AFB, Calif., he was honored by the faculty of the 22nd Air Force NCO Leadership School. Like many other enlisted professional military education schools, this one's top award is named after John Levitow, who more than 20 years ago became the youngest, lowest-ranking and only Air Force enlisted Medal of Honor recipient.

As a young airman not long out of high school, he risked his life in the skies over Vietnam by hurling a flare out of an airborne aircraft before it ignited, saving the aircraft and crew members from exploding into a giant fireball.

Born in Hartford, Conn., Levitow enlisted in the Air Force two years after graduating from high school in 1964. "The reason I joined the Air Force is simple," he said. "I didn't want to walk. I figured if I was drafted into the Army, I would be sent to Vietnam-something I didn't want to do."

Nevertheless, in 1968 he was assigned to the 3rd Special Operations Squadron, Bien Hoa AB, where he flew more than 180 combat missions before that fateful day that would change his life.

After being awarded the Medal of Honor, Levitow was the only enlisted person in the Air Force at the time not required to salute anyone except the President and other ranking Medal of Honor winners.

But that honor carries with a heavy burden of responsibility, one that made life tough for the young hero. "It can be a tedious affair, living up to the reputation of a Medal of Honor winner," he said. "Once you receive the recognition, you're not the same person.

"You have a lot to live up to. If everyone in my hometown knew, I would be under constant scrutiny. If I did so much as get a speeding ticket, everyone would say, 'Look what the hero did.' The medal doesn't come with an instruction manual."

Even before the medal was awarded, the fact that he had been nominated plagued his transition back into the civilian world. "My last couple of months in the service, my bosses-staff and technical sergeants-were asking me to do things they should have been telling me to do," he recalled. "Very few people in my shop would talk to me, and I was just nominated for the award and hadn't received it yet.

The whole thing was a rather precarious situation."

Having traded in his dress blues for a pin-striped suit, the 45-year-old recipient is now chief of medical administration at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Newington, Conn. After years of living behind the hero image, Levitow has learned a lot about the meaning of the word "hero" that he likes to share with young people.

"Hero is a conceptual word," he said. "You don't have to do what I did to be a hero. A hero can be someone who manages to keep their family off the streets on a limited amount of income. A hero can be someone who overcomes a physical problem-be it a disease or an addiction.

"Or a hero can be someone who manages to get their aircraft off the ground under the most difficult situations.

"When your time comes, be ready. Be a hero."

Reese Sewage Treatment Plant provides vital service to base

by SSgt. Mike Breslin editor

There's a section on base where the work really "stinks," but you'd never know it by asking the workers there.

The Reese Sewage Treatment Plant, located at Bldg. 2001 by the High Plains Golf Course, is responsible for filtering waste water coming from base facilities and Reese Village. Manned by five military members and three civilians, the plant accomplishes its mission through a several -step process.

"Water coming into the plant initially goes into the primary settling tank," said Sgt. Anthony Cohn, noncommissioned officer in charge of the plant. "What comes in initially is 99 percent water, but it still needs to be treated."

While in the plant the heavier sewage, or "sludge," in the water is separated and sent into one of three sludge pools located about 30 yards north of the U-shaped treatment channel. The sludge dries in the pools, and it is then scooped out and taken to the far side of the base by the firing range. The dried sludge poses no environmental hazard, according to Sergeant Cohn.

Once free of the heavier sewage, the water proceeds through the treatment channel where it is purified further. Other steps in the process include aerification (where air bubbles are introduced to force any remaining grease to the surface and also to replenish the oxygen in the water) and disinfection. During disinfection-the final treatment-chlorine dioxide is added to the water, killing any germs that may remain.

Once through the plant, the water is sent to one of the lakes on the golf course. Although not drinkable, the water is clean enough to help keep the golf course green.

• Although there is no question of the importance of the plant mission, workers there do hear one question frequently.

What about the AROMA? "You get used to it after a while," said Amn. Kevin Evans, one of the environmental support specialists at the plant.

"Despite what some people might think about what it's like to work here, I like it. The lab work that goes with the job has given me a chance to learn things I wouldn't have learned in other fields."

Ron Rush, a former NCOIC of the Reese plant who's now a civilian worker there, echoed Airman Evans' statement.

"I've been doing this sort of work for 26 years," Mr. Rush said. "Like some things that go with other jobs, the odor is something you get used to. Once you get past it, the job can be pretty interesting."

54th FTS excels at meet

by Sgt. Kimberly Nelson assistant editor

The 54th Flying Training Squadron showed their abilities aren't limited to the air Saturday, as they took first in the Reese Intramural Swim Meet at the Sea Breeze Pool.

Placing first in six of the seven events, the 54th FTS finished the meet with 40 points. 54th FTS member Chuck Gruber was the event's top swimmer, as he participated in four of the six wins.

The 35th FTS placed second overall with 34 points; followed by the 64th Flying Training Wing Hospital with three points.

Swimmers from five squadrons took part in the competition, which consisted of indi- respectively. vidual and team competitions.

Winners in each event were:

The 54th FTS team of Jeni Lank, Darren Sprunk, Andrew Gogan and Steve Hankins took first in the 200-meter medley relay with a time of 2:27.56. Second place went to 35th FTS's Margaret Duffy, Gary Godwin, Jody Vernlund and Paul Felton with 2:28.78: while HOSP members Mike Hunter, Leonard Acevedo, Sharon Lawrence and Richard Lawrence finished third at 3:08.41.

□ A time of 38.05 in the 50-meter breaststroke gave Gruber his second win of day. Second place went to Sprunk who finished at 38.60, followed immediately by Godwin at 38.65.

General Kent Borchelt, 35th FTS, took top honors in the 200-meter freestyle with 2:52.07. Long followed with 3:05.79; while 54th FTS's Kevin Mock came in third at 3:10.25. Taking first in the 50-meter butterfly was Gruber who clocked in at 35.87. Second and third places went to Grandy at 36.44 and Nelson Koeck (35th FTS) at 36.69.

The 54th FTS wrapped up the competition as J.R. McDonald, Joe Arcate, Gruber and Psaromatis teamed up to take first in the 200-meter relay with 2:05.95.

Firepower at plate propels RM 'A' to IM softball crown

Furious last-minute rally by CES "B" comes up short

by SSgt. Mike Breslin editor

Resource Management "A" withstood a furious, last-minute rally by the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron "B" team Monday evening to capture the 1990 Reese intramural softball title, 12-7.

RM's victory seemed unquestionable for most of the game. They jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the top of the first inning, and they spent the rest of the game building on their lead.

They picked up single runs in the second, fifth and seventh, while they sent five runners across home plate in the third and sixth innings combined.

RM's offense was well balanced as nearly every batter contributed to the attack. Catcher Terry Reiley, known by opposing teams for his chatty, boisterous play behind the plate, was a particular standout, going three for four at the plate and driving in several runs.

Having gotten virtually every break through most of the game, it seemed unlikely that RM would fall prey to an upset. Many of their hits seemed to have had eyes, as RM outfielder Mike Wilson took the ball into left batters skirted the inside of the foul lines and had hits just make it past civil engineering's gloves more than once.

By CES's last-at-bat in the bottom of the seventh inning, RM had built 10-run cushion.

With CES's back against the wall, RM discovered just how much they needed insurance those runs.

With one out, CES put a runner on first base on an RM throwing error. Civil engineering's Wayne Musselwhite then drilled one past the shortstop to put men on first and second.

Two more CES shots to the outfield made the score 12-4. After a fielder's choice put men on first and third with two out, CES

Unfortunately, CES's luck ran out at that point as their next batter grounded out to the shortstop.

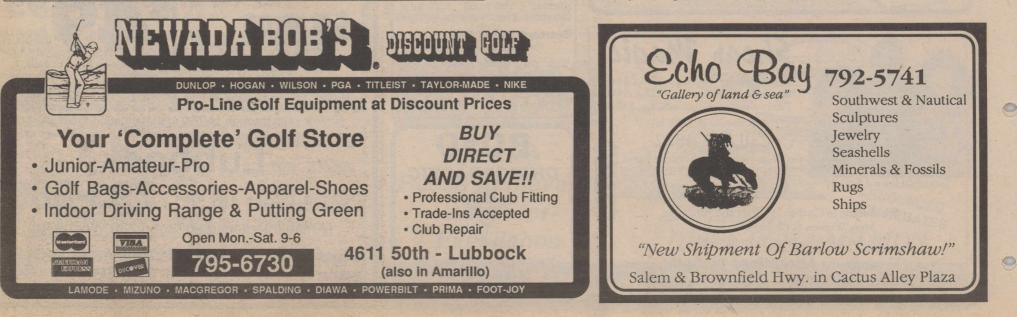

Although RM walked away with a fiverun victory, CES definitely got their attention.

"We had a letdown going into that inning," said Erik Ely, RM player/coach. "CE showed a lot of heart by coming back like RM wrapped the season with a 21-5 record (including the playoffs), while CES finished at 21-6.
