Quitaque's First National Bank to Celebrate its Seventieth Anniversary

The First National Bank of Quitaque will celebrate its 70th year of business on August 2, 1990.

The Quitaque banking institution opened on August 2, 1920, and has been in continuous operation ever since. It was one of the few banks in this part of the country to remain open during the severe depression of the thirties.

Officers and employees on opening day were Amos Persons, president; J. B. Russell, vice-president; Orlin Stark, cashier, and Gladys Persons, bookkeeper.

Members of the board of directors were J. B. Persons, Amos Persons, O. W. Stroup, J. W. Taylor, G. Tunnell, P. O. Woods and L. E. Graham.

The First National Bank of Quitaque has become recognized as a leader among area communities, with many depositors continuing to bank there even though they have moved from the area.

The bank originally opened with loans and discounts of $4,010.55, cash assets of $29,820.43 and a banking house with furniture and fixtures totaling $5,183.55.

Due to continued growth, the original Main Street building was remodeled in 1951. In 1979, plans for a new banking facility were drawn up and the First National Bank moved in August 1980 to their current home two blocks east of the original location.

The popular "Comings, Goings & Doings" newsletter began as an occasional publication in 1953 by President O. R. Stark, jr. The newsletter was so informative and enjoyable, the depositors responded and began looking forward to each issue. Thus, was born one more friendly, home-town convenience of the First National Bank of Quitaque.

A gala open house is being held today (Thursday, August 2) at the bank for people of the entire area in celebration of seventy years of continuous service. Records, photos and scrapbooks of the past 70 years of Quitaque hand-in-hand with the First National Bank will be on display at the open house.

Briscoe County's 98th birthday.

Advance tickets will be $3.00 for adults and $2.00 for children under 12, but tickets bought at the gate will be $4.00 for adults and $2.50 for children.

Tickets may be bought from any of the queen contestants: Monica Arnold, Christa Tucker, Carrie Baird or Kimmie Blazier. Tickets also may be purchased from Raye Smith at Briscoe Implement, Leon Lavy at Silverton Well Service or from Betty Nan Tiffin.

A Voice From the Country

Earl Cantwell
Gems & Allegorys

The lazier a man becomes, the more work he plans to accomplish tomorrow.

Sometimes the wedding cake lasts longer than the marriage.

We will never develop a love for music by listening to someone blowing his own horn.

Playing the horses is no indication of horse sense.

Man owns not only his services, but himself to God.

Better to be unborn than to be ill bred ... Gratitude is the mark of noble souls.

It is not reassuring any more to be told "You are as sound as a dollar."

The bonds of matrimony are a mutual fund that can—with good management—pay rich dividends in happiness and contentment.

You perhaps ought to consider making some changes in your thinking if your eraser wears out before your pencil. Try fixing the mistake, not the blame.

Church membership is not an elevator to heaven but rather it is a ladder.

The busy little hen is a good example of luck. She keeps scratching for worms whether it is a good year or a bad one. If the ground is dry she digs deeper. If she strikes a rock she digs around it. No one ever saw a pessimistic hen; she doesn't wait for the worm to come to the surface, but keeps on scratching and laying eggs, and never cackles until the egg is laid.

Some people are called "plus" people—giving off more than they take on ... others are "minus" folks—when we deal with them we feel we have been "taken".

To consider our mistakes as bad luck means that we are headed for failure. To consider a failure only a mistake means we are on the road to success.

The woods would be a silent place if the birds with the most beautiful calls were the only ones to sing. Little would be accomplished in the world if only the five talented folks tried, because there are so many more with fewer talents.

Knowledge comes a lot easier after we realize our ignorance. A smart aleck is a person who has been vaccinated against learning.

What we call luck is simply pluck; doing our best over and over. Courage, will, perseverance and skill are the leaves of good luck clover.

The best kind of helping hand is the one at the end of "your" arm.

A morning prayer: "Fill me with joy to last the day—enough to keep all hate away."

Our happiness can never be perfect until we learn to plant seeds of kindness in the garden of our friends. Our joy will grow as we watch for the bountiful harvest.

Farmers markets help farmers, consumers, environment

(AUSTIN)--"Texans who shop at farmers markets aren't just getting the ripest tomatoes, the sweetest corn, and the juiciest watermelons--they're taking yet another little step to save the planet at the same time," Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said, announcing that the Texas Department of Agriculture would assist more than 90 farmers market facilities this year.

"Locally grown produce doesn't need expensive and often environmentally damaging preservatives and packaging, and it doesn't drain energy resources by having to be shipped here from California, Florida, Washington, and other faraway states. Many Texas farmers markets feature organically raised produce certified by TDA," Hightower said.

Since 1983, TDA has provided organizational, promotional, and marketing assistance to communities and producers seeking to operate or expand a farmers market.

TDA-assisted markets now operate in such major Texas cities as San Antonio, Fort Worth, El Paso and Austin, and in such smaller communities as Elgin, Comfort and Mineola. Farmers markets are also popular in major agricultural areas of the state, including Lubbock, Plainview and Amarillo.

Four new TDA-assisted markets, in Addison, Fairfield, Three Rivers, and George West, will hold grand openings this summer.

"For the past few weeks, a lot of Texans have been giving special thought to the little things each of us can do for the environment. I can't think of any more pleasant and satisfying way to do your part than stocking up on fresh, healthy fruits and vegetables right off the farm," Hightower said.

"Across the state this year, some 3,700 farmers will reap a larger share of the fruits of their labor by selling directly to consumers. Last year, sales at TDA-assisted farmers markets topped $30 million, with the average farmer earning about $8,500 through their market sales. Sales are expected to increase 15 percent this year," said Paula De la Fuente, TDA farmers market coordinator.

"Farmers markets won't solve the most serious economic problems facing agriculture today, but they are certainly making it possible for participating farmers to diversify their production and increase their acreage," Hightower said.

For John Doak, of Bowie, selling produce at the Fort Worth Farmers Market may have been more of a good thing than he had in mind. After retiring eight years ago from the Soil Conservation Service, Doak planted 12 acres of peaches just to give himself a reason to get out of bed in the morning. He may be wishing he'd bought an alarm clock, because he's now working just as hard as ever running a full-scale diversified vegetable and melon operation at the Fort Worth market. He farms more than 100 acres and employs two full-time workers, with as many as six workers during the busy summer months.

In Central Texas, Andy Viduare of Natalia is beginning his fourth year of selling at the San Antonio Farmers Market. Viduare, his wife Blasa, and their two children, Nancy and Buddy, work jointly to raise and sell produce at the market. The family farms about 20 acres and has just purchased "his and hers" tractors with some of the proceeds from market sales.

"Raising produce to sell at the farmers market has helped us catch up on our bills and to work together as a family," says Viduare. "We like the atmosphere of the market, and we like getting paid immediately for what we sell."

Fruit and vegetable farmers aren't the only ones who make a sizable share of their profits from these markets. Jorge and Silvia Hernandez, operators of Garden View Growers of Midland, raise and sell decorative plants and tomato and pepper seedlings through local farmers markets.

The Hernandez family belongs to the Permian Basin Farmers Market Association, which was formed with TDA assistance. The association sponsors four farmers market sites, two in Odessa, one in Midland, and one in Big Spring.

Farmers markets throughout the state participate in a variety of food programs to benefit children, senior citizens and others.

Several new programs for low-income Texans have helped expand the customer base of farmers markets and encouraged the opening of markets in low-income neighborhoods. More than 30 markets now accept food stamps as payment for fresh produce. Last year, some 57,000 low-income women were also able to buy farm-fresh produce using WIC farmers market coupons at local farmers markets as part of the federally sponsored Women, Infants and Children Farmers Market Coupons Program. Texas is one of 10 states receiving federal funds for this three-year program, which was launched as part of legislation sponsored by the late Texas Congressman Mickey Leland. In 1989, the program brought in more than $1 million in new sales to 11 TDA-certified farmers markets. This year, markets in Jacksonville, Gonzales, and Tyler will also participate in the program.

Last year, markets in Beaumont, Corsicana and Stephenville shared $20,000 in funds provided by the Texas Department on Aging to make fresh produce available to needy senior citizens. TDA is currently working to secure funding to continue this popular coupon program.

Miss Gerhardt Nominated For National Who's Who

Miss Tonya Gerhardt recently received notification of her nomination to be included in the 24th annual edition of Who's Who Among American High School Students. Every year nominations are received from teachers, advisors, administrators and scholarship agencies throughout the U. S. The major objective of Who's Who is to recognize the nation's most outstanding students who have contributed to their schools and communities by their achievements. Only 5% of all students nominated are honored each year to receive this prestigious award.

As an honor student at Graham High School, Miss Gerhardt has received numerous honors and awards in recent years. She has been an active participant in the school's UIL competition, taking awards in voice, math/science club, STARS, and the Young County Teen Court System. This past spring she attended a biology field excursion to study marine biology at the A&M Research Station in Galveston. She also was named as a recipient of a scholarship to the University of North Texas Math/Science Academy for the 1990-92 terms.

On August 8, 1990, Miss Gerhardt will be honored at a luncheon hosted by the Lions Club for her outstanding contributions to the community through the Young County Teen Court System. She has served as chief defense council for the Teen Court for the past two years.

Miss Gerhardt will be a junior at Graham High School in the fall and plans to pursue a career as an attorney.

She is the daughter of Jackie Crawford of Graham and is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Tate of Silverton.

Buckle Up!

Texas Coalition for Safety Belts

The 50-member board of directors of Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. July 11 adopted a $310,125 budget for the 1990-91 fiscal year, up from $294,075 in 1989-90.

In other action the board voted to "do all that can be done" to secure federal disaster assistance on this year's crop and voted to express its "extreme concern" for the threat to cotton's future posed by ongoing General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) negotiations.

The budget increase, pointed out PCG Secretary-Treasurer and Finance Committee Chairman Frank Jones of Lamesa, primarily reflects higher insurance costs and an increase in the allocation for salaries and employee retirement. The latter increase may be needed, PCG President Larry Nelson of Tulia explained, to cover the cost of an overlapping of personnel in preparation for the pending retirement of Cotton Fanning, a PCG employee since 1962. On balance all other budget items were raised less than three percent.

The need for a disaster program was made abundantly clear by board members' reports on dryland crop conditions. In a word, crops west and south of Lubbock were described generally as "gone". Saddest of the lot was the report of Yoakum County's Rickey Bearden. Of the county's estimated 70,000 to 75,000 dryland cotton acres, no more than 200 are left, Bearden said. And he quoted an old-timer in the county as saying crops are the worst he's seen in 60 years.

Prior to the PCG vote on disaster aid, discussion revealed that four disaster bills have been introduced in Washington, one in the Senate and three in the House, but none "appear to be going anywhere." PCG Executive Vice President Donald Johnson further said getting a disaster measure through this budget-conscious Congress would require, first, that it can be funded by projected savings in deficiency payments, and second that crop conditions in the midwest and elsewhere become bad enough to engender a broader base of political support.

On GATT negotiations, the board instructed PCG officers and staff to "express to the appropriate senators and representatives, the Secretary of Agriculture and the office of the U. S. Trade Representative PCG's extreme concern for the future of U. S. cotton if, as has been indicated, U. S. trade representatives are willing to sacrifice its well-being as a means to achieve other objectives in pursuing an all-inclusive international trade agreement."

The fundamental U. S. policy calling for global elimination of all agricultural subsidies and import barriers, long a source of anxiety in cotton circles, of late has become even more portentous in light of indications U. S. negotiators may now lean toward accepting something less than a tit-for-tat commitment on subsidies from foreign competitors.

PCG past president and director Lloyd Cline of Lamesa, who also serves as Chairman of the National Cotton Council's International Trade Committee, stated that the council has repeatedly registered its objections to including cotton in any subsidy ban. But, he said, so far all protests have fallen on deaf ears.

Hidden at the center of the largest cotton patch in the world is the finest crop of cotton researchers and research centers you will find anywhere. So says Myrl D. Mitchell, past president of Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. of Lubbock, chairman of PCG's Plains Cotton Improvement Committee (PCIC).

Singing the praises of Dr. John Gannaway, cotton breeder at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, and his associate, Dr. Jane Dever, Mitchell remarked, "We are fortunate to have such good facilities right here in our own backyard and such outstanding people as these working for us in them." Dr. Gannaway's work in developing cotton plants with high fiber qualities, increased yield potential and cold tolerance has been funded by PCIC through a dime-per-bale checkoff since 1983. Some of the improved cottons that have come from this breeding program have been certified in recent months and others are in the advanced strain testing stage. Major improvements have been made in strength and length.

The research effort, that receives funding of $125,000 per year from PCIC, was set up to be a long-term program that would give area producers a higher return from cotton that would better meet the high fiber quality demands of the textile industry.

As well as breeding research the Hub of the Plains is able to boast having the USDA's Ginning Laboratory and Texas Tech University's International Center for Textile Research and Development (ICTRD). Mitchell, a cotton producer and ginner in Martin County, uses stripper modifications developed by the ginning lab in his own farming operation and fine tunes his gin utilizing their recommendations.

An example of cooperation between all aspects of the industry is seen in a study being carried out by ICTRD into the spinning qualities of barkly cotton. This study, also being funded by PCIC, is geared to assessing the spinning performance of various levels of bark contamination and to develop a basis for reducing the severity of the current barkiness discounting system. ICTRD is able to simulate mill conditions of all aspects of textile production in a research environment and so can determine what results may be expected from the cotton being produced and developed on the Plains of Texas.

Within almost a stone's throw of Lubbock is so much that is beneficial to our industry, concludes Mitchell. As well as those already mentioned he points out that work is being done on insect research and plant pathology at both Texas Agricultural Experiment Station and Texas Agricultural Extension Service together with studies and practical demonstrations of irrigation, land-use practices and marketing strategy.

The cotton producer, by supporting research, is investing in the future. Bringing about increased demand by producing a more marketable product that commands a better price are some of the benefits that come from that research. Through cooperation the industry is continually improving cotton, keeping it America's number one fiber.

Hats Off to Parents

Parents, you are the most important people in your child's life! You are their first teacher. You can most effectively build up or tear down their self-esteem. You are the ones from whom your child should know that he/she can receive unconditional love—no matter how "bad" or "good" they may behave.

Your child should feel that you will always be there for him no matter what. Have you ever thought how it would feel to be a child who is unsure about whether his parents will come home, or if they have an argument whether they will walk out on him? Parents are the only real stability a child has. If he feels this stability is threatened, it is a frightening feeling. So, you see, you are your child's rock of safety, security and support. You shape their values, their thinking, and their ways of relating to others.

In my work with the 4-H program, I see that the kids who get the most from their 4-H experiences are those whose parent are beside them leading and guiding them—not behind them pushing nor ahead of them dragging them. Kids need encouragement and occasionally some prodding to help them try new experiences and to see some possible long-term benefits of choices they make when they are young.

Naturally, I believe in 4-H and its benefit to a child and his family. But it is, as we say, a "family affair". Few boys and girls have the motivation to attempt many of the projects and activities without their parents' support and encouragement.

Four-H record books cannot be done without some help from an adult. Clothing and food projects need assistance, usually from moms. Parents must provide transportation to care for pigs, sheep, cattle and horses.

Money and transportation from parents helps kids get to camps, contests and activities. Parents make posters and help write method demonstrators. Parents come to their child's contests and activities and cheer for them and say, "I'm proud of you for trying" even if the child doesn't always win a blue ribbon.

I was thrilled with the attendance of the parents and some grandparents at our 4-H Family Fun Fest Friday night. Sure, the parents who came could have been home watching TV, doing their laundry or farming, but they chose to come and watch their kids have fun. We wanted parents to see some of the more serious aspects of 4-H camp-type activities like the patriotic flag ceremony and the inspirational vespers service. We hope you are glad you took the time. Parents are always welcome at all 4-H functions.

Hats off to the parents who support their kids and their activities! You will make a positive difference in their lives!

Texas Folklife Festival Presents "Kids' Day" August 5

Kids are noted for many characteristics which make them especially unique. Those attributes which generally come to mind are a sense of wonder, a vivid imagination, boundless energy, a thriving appetite and a constant need for fun.

The 19th Annual Texas Folklife Festival, scheduled for August 2-5, has designated Sunday, August 5, as "Kids' Day," and all of the previously mentioned traits of the younger set are recognized and fulfilled. In addition to the important fact that children under 12 are admitted free all day on their special day when accompanied by an adult, there are so many things to see and do that even the most energetic youngsters find plenty of activities to capture their attention.

Sponsored by The University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio, the Texas Folklife Festival is a celebration of the state's rich heritage. Featuring the music, food, dances and crafts of the many ethnic groups of Texas, the Festival blends education and entertainment in an event the entire family can enjoy.

When a youngster sets foot on the Festival grounds, 15 acres of wonder open up. The bright colors, happy music and wide panorama of activities stir the imagination. Upon entering the "Back 40" area behind the Institute, the sands of time in the hour glass seem to have been reversed, taking the wide-eyed youth back to the 1870s to a frontier fort. An enlistment form is filled out and, before the dust has settled, the young person is being taught to drill, along with the other troops who are protecting the West Texas frontier. The Fort Concho Living History program makes this possible, and Robert Bluthardt says, "The kids learn these drills faster than adults, because they strive for perfection."

Next, the young visitor to the Texas

Folklife Festival may be wondering, "How in the world could anyone ever walk in wooden shoes?" The Dutch Cultural Group of Nederland provides that exact opportunity. They display wooden shoes called Klompens that come from Holland and children can put them on and actually "Klomp" around. In addition to the wooden shoes, Betty Dixon of the Dutch group also is very proud of their beautiful costumes which are made from scraps of material reflecting the conservative nature of their culture.

Perhaps the most popular trait of those who are "in the growing stage" is the thriving appetite which they possess. The young guest can sample an almost endless variety of foods, from exotic international dishes to those which are regularly enjoyed as Texas fare. A popular attraction at the Festival since its beginning is the New Braunfels Wurstfest booth. They not only make and serve delicious sausage, but also encourage young ones to help in handling the meat and actually stuff their own sausage. Michael Dietert of the New Braunfels group says, "Kids who participate receive free samples."

Bruce Montague's trick roping presentation has been a highlight of the Texas Folklife Festival for 13 years and offers fun, entertainment and learning opportunities for youngsters. Kids are invited to be a part of the roping demonstration and are also taught various roping techniques. Montague remarked, "Roping started out as a necessity for the cowboys and is now considered an art by many and an important part of Texas history."

Practically every activity at the Texas Folklife Festival has something unique for "Kids' Day," which is designed for both the young and the "young at heart." For this day to really sparkle with enjoyment all one has to have is a sense of wonder, a vivid imagination, boundless energy, a thriving appetite and a constant need for fun.

The Festival is an extension of the Institute of Texan Cultures' role as a statewide research, education and communication center focusing on the history and culture of Texas. It is held annually on the Institute's ground on HemisFair Park in downtown San Antonio.

Festival hours are 5:00 to 11:00 p.m. on Thursday, August 2; noon to 11:00 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, August 3 and 4; and noon to 10:00 p.m. on Sunday, August 5.

Tickets to the Festival are $6.00 for adults, $2.00 for children six to twelve and free for children under six. Advance tickets may be purchased at the reduced rates of $5.00 for adults and $1.00 for children six to twelve.

On Friday, August 3, admission will be $1.00 for adults and free for children under 12 from noon to 1:00 p.m. only. Children under 12 will be admitted free all day on Sunday, August 5, "Kids' Day" when accompanied by an adult.

For more information about the Festival or to order tickets, call the Texas Folklife Festival, (512) 226-7651.

On Top

The Bible, "God's holy word," is still the best seller, and most quoted book. From the original Greek and Hebrew this book has been translated into many languages.

Through the centuries men have devotedly studied and sought out the truth in the Bible. When one reads the Bible with an open mind, God's word is "as sharp as a two edged sword."

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.
