Agricultural Agent Texas A. e. M. College Extension Service The area around farm ponds is usually forgotten when it comes to weed control. On most farms this area could be a good grass producing spot if weeds were controlled. Besides interefering with possible grass growth these weedy areas are also seed producing centers that will spread weeds on the rest of the farm. Any of you having this problem and interested in the control meth-

Weed control around farm ponds mean more grass, better recreation facilities and a better watershed program.

Spring usually means repairing and building around the farm or ranch. Before you start building this spring, drop by our office and pick up a catalogue of "Building and Equipment Plans' so that you can order free plans and publications for just about any type of farm building that you may have in mind.

This catalogue lists available plans that range from home buildings to homemade machines and equipment. Plans to build all types of barns, sheds and pen are also listed.

Why don't you take advantage of these free plans and use them when you build this spring.

Several livestockmen have already picked up a plan for building the portable cattle head gate being used by the Brucellosis testing crews here in the county.

Fertilizer nutrients, if applied in the correct amounts, will lower cotton disease losses, says Harlan E. Smith, extension plant pathologist. For example, slightly susceptible bacterial blight varities become resistant with adequate nitrogen but more susceptible when nitrogen is Adequate amounts of available potassium help prevent Fusarium wilt and Verticillium wilt. In contrast, excessive use of nitrogen should be avoided in Fusarium wilt and Verticillum wilt soils. It is known that Verticillium wilt can cause more losses if available soil nitrogen is on the excess side.

Unbalanced availability of nitrogen, phosphorus and potash causes plants to be more susceptible to attack by disease organisms. Therefore, for disease control avoid creating unbalanced conditions when applying fertilizers. Unbalanced fertility created by improper application of fertilizer can lead to disease losses which will nullify fertilizer benfeits.

Boll rots may be more severe when excess nitrogen causes tall, rank cotton. In 1960, wet weather in several areas was blamed for some losses in cotton quality and yield when boll rot diseases were actually the cause of the trouble.

It has been determined that cotton plants free of seedling diseases and nematodes make more effective use of fertilizer nutrients. This relationship should be taken into account when seedling diseases or nematodes are controlled with fungicides or nematocides. In general, high fertilizer rates should be lowerde somewhat once seedling disease and nematodes are under con-

A sound fertilizer program must be based on many factors, including cotton diseases that are most likely to damage plants. You may have already fertilized for this year, but you can plan improved use of fertilizer next year.

The proper use of all cotton disease reduction practices will tend to take is healthier plant, and a healthier plant on make better use of soil fertilizer nutrients. With this in mind, fertilizer for yield, quality and disease control. By following these practices, greater profits will be realized from fertilizer.

A soil test will help take the guesswork out of buying and applying fertilizers. Don't guess, soil

Yarborough Opposes Poll Tax System

In a recent newsletter U.S. Senator Ralph W. Yarborough stated, "In an effort to assure that more Texans exercise their democratic right and responsibility to vote, I'm co-sponsoring a Joint Resolution proposing a Constitutional Amendment to abolish the poll tax in federal elections.

It is no mere coincidence that in the 1960 presidential election that five of the seven states which had the lowest percutage of citizens purchase of a poll tax as a ticket liene Friday. to the voting booth.

The 1960 Election Score Board, a highly informative booklet prepared by The American Heritage Foundation, shows that our own state of Texas ranked down in 44th place among the states with only 43.3 percent of us Texans of voting age casting a ballot. Other states where payment of a poll tax is a prerequisite for qualifying to vote ranked low also.

This is not to say that the poll tax is by any means entirely responsible for the lamentable failure of many to participate in our incomparable system of government by consent of the governed. But it is to point out the undeniable fact that the poll tax is one of the several barriers to voting and it should be removed.

There are those who scoff at the idea that having to pay $1.50 or $1.75 for a poll tax in January keeps people from the polls in July or November. But let us consider that matter. If you were head of one of the thousands of low income families in Texas, with weekly pay of $30 or $40 or less, what week would you feel like you could spent $1.75 or $3.50 for yourself and your wife for poll taxes? You know, $3.50 will buy meat and potatoes and beans for several meals for a family that's barley getting by, many families in Texas and America who can't find the jobs they need even to earn the necessities of life.

Thos who contend the poll tax is no barrier to voting generally admit that it may keep a few people from the polls, but they say it is no serious deterrent. I disagree. Like most Americans,, I consider the privilege of voting to be our most precious heritage. The fact that a poll tax keeps even a small percentage of people from participation in their free government is sufficient grou-7:30 in the Hall | nds for its abolition, so far as I'm

> The Joint Resolution, which I am co-sponsoring, would abolish the poll tax in federal elections by sound Constitutional proceess. The matter would be submitted to each of the fifty states for natification. It is the concensus that once Congress acts in this field, that the State Leg

Over many years, both here and at the state level, I have worked for elemination of the poll tax, and I once again assure all concerned that I will cooperate with any responsible group at the state level to remove this voting limitation in state elections as well as for other sound election law reforms.

It is my hope that with many Senators, both Democrts and Republicans, supporting this proposal that it will receive prompt action.
