AETC graduates mission ready crew chiefs

Training program provides improved product to customer

by Sgt. Pauline Aldridge
AETC Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AETCNS) — A special kind of F-16 and C-141 crew chief graduates from Luke AFB, Ariz., and Altus AFB, Okla., these days:

a mission ready crew chief.

These crew chiefs become task-certified in Air Education and Training Command's new mission ready technician program. The program is broken into two phases "cold training" and "hot training."

In cold training students learn academic information; in hot training they learn skills that previously required field training detachment instruction and six months of supervised on-the-job training. AETC's new training style provides war-fighting commands with airmen who are ready to go to work when they arrive at their first duty assignment.

"The mission ready technician program allows AETC to keep trainees in the pipeline a little longer to provide training on actual aircraft and equipment they will use or maintain," said CMSgt. Brian Bastow, headquarters AETC technical training resources, Randolph.

Air Force F-16 and C-141 crew chiefs begin technical training at Sheppard AFB, Texas, where they learn the basic information—from flightline safety and other general topics to airlift, landing gear and flight control systems. The course is broken into a fundamental phase of 26 training days and the cold training phase of 60 training days.

After cold training, students move to an operational base for hot training—either Altus for C-141 training or Luke for F-16 training. There students work with operational flying squadrons receiving practical knowledge and experience. "We teach students through hands-on demonstration performance with F-16 aircraft," said MSgt. Michael Mlodzik, 56th Logistics Group Luke AFB. "They will be allowed time for practice and a seven-level instructor will come out and do the certification."

From my perspective

Maj. Joseph Vivori
64th MSS Commander

As the Air Force in general and Reese in particular continue to embrace and utilize "Total Quality" principles in managing the world's most respected Air Force, we need to take a hard look at how we are going to implement these quality methods and tools.

As an organization, the Air Force has a proud tradition that began the moment the Army bought its first Wright Flyer to the subsequent establishment of the Air Force as a separate service in 1947 and through the stunning display of air power during Desert Storm. Air Force people can rightfully be proud of this long history of meeting and overcoming the adversities we faced. Given this proud history, it is quite understandable that Air Force people would be reluctant to change. Why change what already works?

Unfortunately, those who don't change to meet the ever changing ebbs and flows of history are left stranded on the shores of time. The Air Force is currently engaged in the largest force drawdown since the Vietnam conflict ended in the mid-70s. Given these internal changes, as well as dramatic changes in the world political environment, it behooves all of us to reexamine how we do business and to explore ways to do that business even better.

Total Quality allows us to fully utilize the talents and skills of every single member of the Air Force by pushing decision-making down to the lowest appropriate levels. The use of a structured system to implement Total Quality will provide a much needed roadmap to achieve these goals and help overcome resistance by providing our people the training and tools to understand and maximize quality principles.

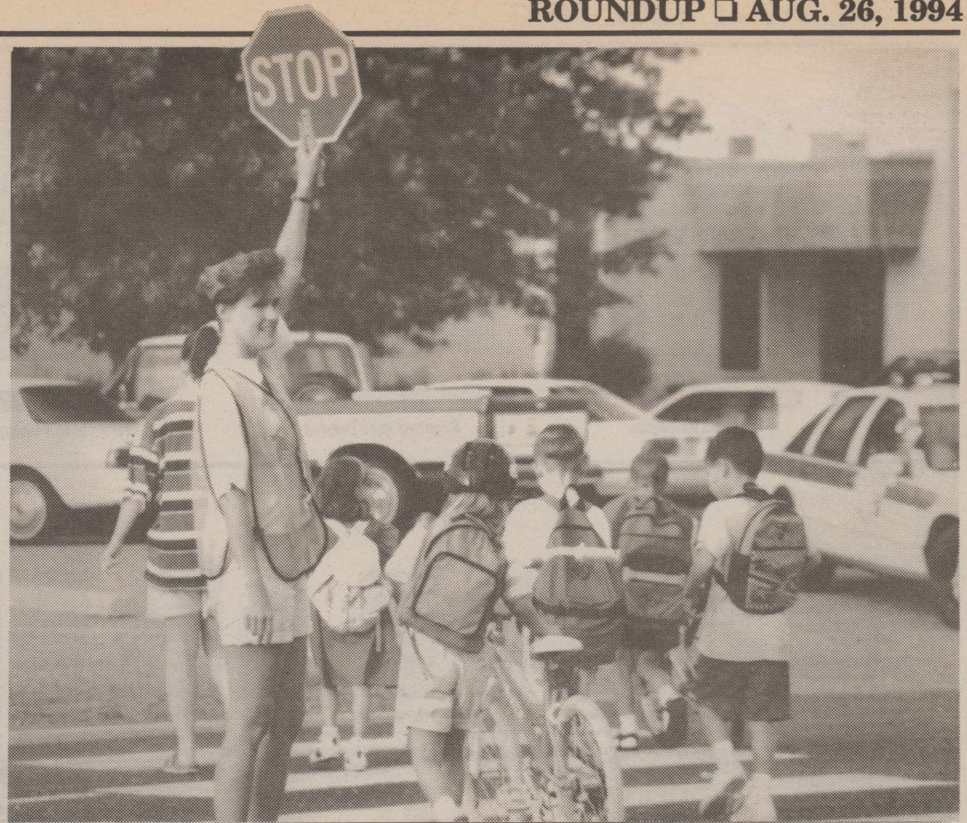

In order for a structured system to be successful it must encompass strategic planning, identify the customer of the services provided, develop metrics to gauge the success of all programs, develop steps to improve the processes used in meeting each task, recommend the tools needed to achieve a Total Quality organization and involve every squadron, flight, and section.

To design a structured system, an organization must first assign a design team to lay out the roadmap, then design distinct steps for strategic planning, customer identification, metric development and process improvement. It must tailor the system to the culture of the organization, and develop time lines and methods to monitor implementation. Lastly, it must have a method to relax the structure once the organization has embraced the Total Quality philosophy and is using the tools in its day-to-day activities.

By using a structured system we can ensure our people have defined guidelines on goals and objectives of a Total Quality organization as well as the methods and tools to achieve these goals. In our "pursuit of excellence" Total Quality is a management philosophy that will help us to improve mission effectiveness in order to meet the challenges of the 21st Century.

Drive carefully

Pam Williams holds traffic on 4th Street for Reese Elementary students. Drivers are reminded that area schools are back in session and that extra care needs to be taken when driving near schools at any time of day.

From your perspective

"A Careline column provides one of many opportunities for a commander to find out what people are thinking, what's bothering them, what they like, etc. If you've wondered why we do something, or just want to make a comment, don't hesitate to call. You can call the Careline 24 hours a day at 3273. If you leave your name and telephone number, we'll get back to you and answer your concern by telephone. Calls of interest to the Reese community will be published, without the caller's name, in the Roundup the following week. I look forward to hearing from you."

Does shift work authorize BAS

I live in the dormitory and am wondering about working mids and the night shift. I am getting my three meals a day and I know that there is no midnight meal at the dining hall. Shouldn't people working mids and night shifts receive basic allowance for subsistence because the dining hall doesn't offer a midnight meal.

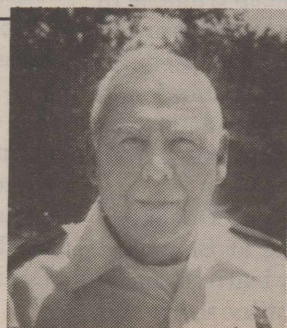

Military personnel are not entitled to BAS solely on the basis of our inability to provide midnight meals. Currently, all eligible personnel have access to three hot, nutritious meals at the dining facility.

Additionally, AFM 177-373, Vol II gives squadron commanders the latitude to determine if BAS is justified based on duty hours, distance to dining facility, the facility's capacity and specialized duties. Commanders may also designate personnel to pick up meals for members who are unable to obtain a meal during scheduled duty hours. Authorized representatives must prepare an Air Force Form 2039 to pick up meals from the dining facility.

Finally, individuals who miss meals as a result of a bonafide military commitment may claim missed meal reimbursement by using DoD Form 1475, Missed Meal Voucher.

Good neighbors can reduce child neglect

Protecting our children is everyone's responsibility

by Kay Dyer
Family Development Specialist

"Neighborhood Watch" is a concept for keeping our material possessions and properties safe. The same concept will also keep our children safe.

Parents in any community must be diligent in their supervision of their children and watchful toward other children in the neighborhood.

Concerns about the well being of specific children in the community can be handled initially neighbor to neighbor.

In some instances, when communication has failed to remedy the situation, and the concern has become a continuing one, the problem may be a form of abuse called neglect.

Neglect, comprising about 50 percent of all child abuse cases in the United States, is the most easily ignored form of abuse until it becomes a tragic statistic. As a public, we have been made ever increasingly aware of the issues of abuse within the American system.

Neglect is the action or non-action that places a child in danger due to the lack of concern or involvement by the parent or care giver. Examples of possible neglect are: the child who consistently does not have his or her physical or dental needs met; a child being left unattended; a child going without appropriate nourishment to sustain health and growth; or a child who is constantly inappropriately attired for the weather conditions.

Consideration is always given to the circumstances and to the age and developmental level of the child in question.

However, children, especially those under the age of four years old, need supervision.

We all face times of stress. And times when we question our skills at rearing our children. Unfortunately situations do occur. Let's be aware, be watchful and be supportive as neighbors for the safety of our children.

Reese Village streets close for resurfacing

All streets in Reese Village will be resurfaced beginning Monday.

According to Jim King, 64th Civil Engineer Squadron, the resurfacing will be done in three stages.

Stage One will be Monday and will include: Mitchell Blvd, north and south from Arnold to McGuire; George Street, 4th Street to Harmon; and Mars Road, War Highway to Harmon.

Stage Two will be Tuesday and will include: Arnold, Mitchell Blvd. to McGuire; McGuire, 4th Street to Harmon; and Harmon, McGuire to George.

Stage Three will be Wednesday and will include: Harmon, George to Mitchell; Mitchell, War Highway to Arnold; Andrews Drive, from Harmon to War Highway; and Yount Drive, Harmon to Andrews Drive.

King stressed that Reese Village residents need to ensure that their vehicles are not parked on the streets scheduled for resurfacing. "Vehicles left on the street will be removed at the owner's risk of damage," said King.

Although parking on the streets will be prohibited during the resurfacing, residents requiring travel on the streets to reach parking areas will be allowed to enter and exit, although there may be delays.

In case of bad weather, the resurfacing schedule will be pushed back accordingly.

Reese Village residents are encouraged to keep all children and pets away from the construction work. In addition, 64th CES officials ask adjacent residents not to water lawns during the resurfacing.

AETC graduates first mission ready crew chiefs

According to TSgt. Richard Ottoson, C-141 instructor for the 97th Logistics Support Squadron, Altus AFB, "The operational squadrons provide a learning environment where students are taught everything they need to know about their aircraft."

The C-141 instructor staff teaches preflight and post flight inspection, actual launch and recovery on operational aircraft, refueling, towing, and block servicing. At the end of "hot training," the students are certified and are fully qualified apprentices when they arrive at their first permanent duty station, according to Sergeant Ottoson.

The sergeant describes a less organized training structure when he went through crew chief training. "We got 20 days of 'here's a technical order, here's safety wire, here's a screwdriver, here's a hammer. Don't hit your thumb.' That was pretty much it," he said.

Following the initial skills training, Sergeant Ottoson remembers how he and several others of his team members learned the job after arriving at their first assignment. "They would send us to our bases and have a field training detachment class which was about a month long. 'Here's a C-141, here's how you ground it. Don't stick your head in the engine.' Then they would give you to the flightline members for OJT," he said. "There you spent six months following around a trainer who would have to show you how to do pretty much everything," he said.

The MRT program provides for a tighter quality control according to SSgt. Steven Peters, C-141 crew chief instructor.

"Students get more benefit out of this because they are working directly with a qualified instructor versus somebody that knows the task and tries to show them how to do it their own way," he said.

Students are already recognizing the benefits.

"Working with the aircraft before I move onto my first base has helped me to see what I am expected to do," said Amn. Alexander E. Drozdick, C-141 crew chief trainee.

The first class of new C-141 crew chiefs graduated mid August and the newest F-16 crew chiefs graduate mid September.

New combat definition limits jobs to women

Air Force leads services with 99.7 percent open

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Air Force continues to lead its sister services with more than 99.7 percent of its total force positions open to women.

However, because of the new Department of Defense definition of direct ground combat — effective Oct. 1 — some jobs will be closed to women.

The change comes at the end of a three-phase DOD review started last year and done to increase the number of jobs open to military women.

Edwin Dorn, under secretary of defense for personnel and readiness, announced the new definition for direct ground combat July 29. It states:

Women cannot be assigned to units whose primary mission is to engage in direct combat on the ground or be assigned to units that require collocation with direct ground combat units and to certain special operations units.

As a result, assignments as MH-53J and MH-60J helicopter pilot are closed to women officers, Air Force personnel officials said. Women are also restricted from applying for combat control officer and air liaison officer.

All fixed-wing special operations aircraft assignments will remain open to women, personnel officials said.

Positions closed to enlisted women are combat controller, pararescue, tactical air command and control, and MH-53J and MH-60 flight engineer and aerial gunner. The ground radio communications and radio communications fields are restricted.

Women are restricted from positions which conflict with the new definition of direct ground combat.

As a result of the review, in the 15 months since the increases started, more than 260,000 jobs have been opened to women in all services.

The Navy has the second highest rate of jobs open to women — a better than 94 percent rate — and women are eligible for 67.2 percent of Army jobs. Women Marines can apply for 62 percent of Marine Corps jobs.

A decision had to be made, Dorn said, which met the criteria of all the services, but which was also easy for the general public to understand and support.

"There has been long-standing support of putting women into combat aircraft and onto combat vessels," the secretary said. "There has not been that public support for putting women into direct ground combat."

Recycling Rate Grows

(NAPS)—Here's some good news for friends of the environment. The recycling rate for PET plastic containers in the United States continued to grow last year, reaching an all-time high of 30 percent. The newly-released rate confirms PET (polyethylene terephthalate) as the nation's most recycled plastic.

In 1993, consumers nationwide recycled 450 million pounds of PET plastic—a 23 percent increase since 1992, according to an independent national survey. The survey conducted by Robert A. Bennett, Ph.D., associate dean, College of Engineering at the University of Toledo, was commissioned by the National Association for Plastic Container Recovery (NAPCOR).

"This increase supports the fact that curbside recycling works," said NAPCOR President, Luke B. Schmidt. "But more can be done. The demand for recycled PET is greater than today's supply, and we know the key to increasing supply is curbside recycling.

Currently, PET plastic containers are collected in more than 3,100 curbside collection programs nationwide, serving more than 27 million households. However, the growing demand for post-consumer PET will be met only of the number of collection programs increases.

According to an earlier 1993 study by Bennett, demand for post-consumer PET could reach one billion pounds by 1997.

Your used water or soft-drink bottle can be recycled into dozens of other new, high-value products such as ski jackets, T-shirts and cassette tapes.

PET plastic is identified by the number one symbol on or near the bottom of containers. It is a strong lightweight form of polyester used to make containers for products such as water, soft drinks, juice, salad dressing, cough syrup and cleaning supplies. In addition to new food and non-food containers, PET can be recycled into dozens of other new, high-value products, like fiber for carpet, sleeping bags and ski jackets; fabrics for T-shirts, jackets and other clothing; athletic and casual shoes; cassette tapes; and car upholstery, bumpers and headliner fabric.

Reese airmen update base dormitory rooms

by A1C Tim Dempsey
Reese Public Affairs

Since the beginning of this year, residents of the junior enlisted dormitories on base have seen improvements in their living standards.

These improvements have included new furniture, carpet, refrigerators, lighted ceiling fans and upgraded laundry rooms.

"We've been pushing for the improvements in the dormitories as long as I've been here," said MSgt. Rick Miller, who has been the first sergeant of the 64th Civil Engineer Squadron for one year. "The problem was until a year ago, funds weren't available to support this upgrade."

Reese Senior Enlisted Advisor CMSgt. David Ptomey said Col. Roger Brady, 64th Flying Training Wing Commander, wrote the first check for the new furniture and carpeting within a month after his arrival.

"He's very big on the concept that if your people are happy where they work and live, their product is going to be 100 times better," said the chief about the colonel's strong views toward quality of life issues. "He likes to have a good working and living environment for his people.

"Once the money was allocated and the materials ordered, it was a waiting game for everything to arrive," the chief said.

"We had to wait awhile on the refrigerators because I didn't want to replace the refrigerators with like refrigerators that were ineffective," explained Chief Ptomey about the compact freezers on the old refrigerators.

"After months of searching, the 64th Contracting Squadron found refrigerators that would fit in the space where the small refrigerators were. The new refrigerators have more capacity and a large freezer" continued the chief.

Even with these improvements, there is still another plan for improvements to the dormitories, a third floor cooking room, which has already been installed in Dorm 320.

"The third floor cooking room was the brainchild of SrA. Eric Silver," said Sergeant Miller about the former dorm manager of Bldg. 320. "He dreamed it up, designed it and physically helped build it along with SrA. Charles Reneau (current dorm manager of Bldg. 320). Airman Reneau did most of the work."

Chief Ptomey said the self-help kitchen project in dormitories 220 and 420 should get underway in the near future.

According to Sergeant Miller, there were many people who played a key role in making the improvements. "It's been a collective team effort with the first sergeants; Rocky Shaw, a civilian in CES's furnishing management section; MSgt. Tony King, also in the 64th CES; and all the dorm residents, who provided input and did a lot of the installation."

The sergeant credits the dorm residents with playing an important role in making their lives better.

"Now the most important thing is for the people to take care of it," said Sergeant Miller.

A1C Tim Dempsey

Armed Forces Voters Week begins Monday

A voter registration campaign will be conducted at Reese and throughout the Department of Defense Monday through Sept. 3.

Armed Forces Voters Week, sponsored by the Federal Voting Assistance Program, encourages potential voters to request registration and absentee ballots for the 1994 general elections. Although election laws differ from state to state, most state election boards require absentee ballot requests at least 30 days before the general election.

With Election Day on Nov. 8, Armed Forces Voters Week may be the last opportunity many have to register for federal, state and local elections.

"It is critical that unregistered citizens submit the FPCA (federal post card application) as soon as possible," said Phyllis

Taylor, Federal Voting Assistance Program director. "Some states require ballot receipt before the day of the election, which cuts further into the time the voter has to return his or her ballot."

Voters can receive information on specific candidates by contacting the DoD Voting Information Center at 1-703-693-6500 or DSN 223-6500.

At stake this year are 435 seats in the U.S. House of Representatives, 35 seats in the U.S. Senate, four House delegate positions and 36 state governorships. In addition, voters will elect other state, county, city and village officials and decide local issues that affect their hometowns.

For additional information, contact the appropriate squadron voting assistance representative.

Skills development center offers dog obedience class

by Becky Piliphant
64th Services Squadron

The Reese Skills Development Center will offer dog obedience classes starting Sept. 7.

Instructor Sandy Kaufman will be conducting puppy and adult dog classes Wednesday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m. and from 7 to 8 p.m.

"The focus of these classes is to teach the owners how to train their dogs through positive motivation and situation training," Kaufman, said.

Topics covered during this five-week course include: social manners, basic obedience, behavior problems and basic grooming.

Social manner lessons involve dog with people situations, such as loud noises and other dogs, so the dog will be less fearful, therefore less likely to bite.

Basic obedience covers motivational methods to teach sit down, stay and come commands to your dog.

Behavior problems covers such common complaints as back-yard digging, chewing, jumping and nipping.

Basic grooming training will familiarize you and your pet to the benefits of body touching and brushing.

Kaufman believes that your dog is a member of the family and therefore everyone should be involved with the training. By using games, food and praise, she will demonstrate how to train the dog to be a responsible and trustworthy member of the family.

Throughout the course, she has developed fun and stimulating ways to include all family members in the process and

Becky Piliphant

Sandy Kaufman, Reese dog obedience course instructor, demonstrates how dogs should behave in public with Baron and Lucky.

stresses the importance of everyone's involvement.

Classes cost $40 for five sessions and must be paid in advance of the first class.

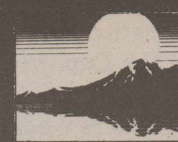

Sign up begins today at the center. Class size is limited to a minimum of three students and a maximum of 10 students.

All dogs must have proof of vaccinations.

For more details about the obedience classes call the center at 885-3141.

Roundup Sports Tip

How to chip

by Capt. Chris Mineau
64th OSS

When chipping, keep your feet close together and put 70 percent of your weight on your front leg.

Keep your hands ahead of the ball, while keeping your hands and wrists locked.

Eliminating wrist and hand movement will make you a more consistent player around the green.

With a slightly downward stroke hit the ball and then the turf.
