Reese ends fiscal flying year on high note

Today marks the successful end of the fiscal flying year at Reese.

"We have had an outstanding year," said Col. Randy Gelwix, 64th Operations Group commander. "Made possible by the cooperative atmosphere that surrounds everything we do at Reese."

During the past 12 months, Reese has graduated 170 U.S. Air Force pilots and seven international pilots.

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AETCNS) — Inducting the commander of Air Education and Training Command into the Order of the Sword honors the general's leadership in steering Year of Training initiatives, according to CMSgt. Tommy Sanford, AETC senior enlisted advisor

Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr., will be inducted at a ceremony. Saturday at Mitchell Hall, Lackland AFB, Texas. He becomes the first AETC Order of the Sword inductee. Air Training Command had 14 inductees and Air University had two, prior to their stand-downs and the subsequent stand-up of AETC, the Air Force's newest command.

"General Viccellio is the architect for the Year of Training," Chief Sanford said. "He has empowered this command and its enlisted members to make Year of Training initiatives a success."

Chief Sanford credits Gen. Merrill McPeak, Air Force chief of staff, with unrolling the blueprints for the future of the Air Force, but he credits General Viccellio for engineering the design for future training.

"As the Year of Training architect, General Viccellio provided AETC members with the capabilities, manpower, facilities and money to build a training infrastructure to guide the deal about people," Chief Air Force through the 21st cen- Sanford talked about the tury," he said.

A town meeting will be held Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Reese Family Support Center. The meeting is open to everyone working or residing at Reese.

Col. Terry Weimer, 64th Support Group commander, will host the meeting.

Some of the topics scheduled to be discussed, include: Reese projects completed or funded in fiscal year 1994, proposed projects for FY-95, military family housing quarters improvement council, enlisted rollback, new resources center in the FSC, airman leadership school, club collocation, youth center and child development center activities, on-base driving, Halloween safety and the child fingerprinting program.

2 COMMENTARY

ROUNDUP SEPT. 30, 1994

From my perspective

by Col. Roger Brady 64th FTW Commander

We are now in the second week of the 1994 Combined Federal Campaign. By the time you read this the total for the end of the second week will be posted.

For those of you who have contributed, I appreciate your support to this great effort. If you haven't filled out your contribution card yet, I urge you to do so.

The CFC helps Reese people and many others in our community and across the nation.

Sometimes I hear second- and third-hand rumors about people who don't give to the CFC because they don't believe in the views or goals of some of the CFC supported agencies, or because they think the agencies are bloated bureaucracies that soak up funds without really helping anyone. Let me remind you there are hundreds of agencies to which you can target your contribution.

Do I support the views of all the CFC supported agencies? No, but there are many agencies that I can support, and I firmly believe that if we really want to help people we can easily find agencies on that huge list that we can wholeheartedly endorse.

But what about their efficiency, do they really get the funds where they are needed? Absolutely! I've seen the agencies and watched our local United Way organization "up close and personal" ... the money goes to help the people who need it!

Now let's get serious. We're a blessed people — we have homes, jobs, families, friends and lots of other things to be thankful for. Most of us have a support structure and the resources to handle life's difficulties when they come our way. But, some people don't, and it's our moral responsibility to help them. The CFC is a good way to do that. Team Reese is a valuable and valued part of this community. Last year we gave about $110,000. This year our goal is $95,000 — $5,000 more than in 1993, but $15,000 less than we gave last year.

Reaching that goal requires what we give every day to get our mission accomplished — team work. It takes all of us — not just some of us. I pledge to you that I'll do my part and a little more. If you will do your part, we'll get the job done. The goal will be no problem, but more importantly, we will help some folks who need our help and we'll all stand a little taller. Thanks for your support.

Success of quality Air Force culture requires leadership from every level of organization

by Col. Terry Weimer 64th SUG Commander

In 1993 the Air Force Quality Institute published The Quality Approach as a guide to implementing quality into today's Air Force. The underlying premise to the entire document was that leadership serves as the foundation for the quality Air Force culture.

Where do you and I fit into that concept? Does the term leadership mean that only commanders are leaders? Too often I hear leadership associated only with the wing commander, group commander or the squadron commander. To be the foundation for quality Air Force, leadership must prevail throughout the organization, not just at the top.

Leaders at all levels of the organization have several qualities the are essential to their success and critical to providing the firm foundation necessary for evolution of a quality Air Force culture. Each individual in the unit must be a visionary, a consummate team-builder and an active change agent.

Historically, long range goals setting and creating an organizational vision have been the responsibility of a unit's senior leaders. This is still true. For an organization to have a common focus shared by all its members and aspirations to strive toward, it must have goals and objectives established for future achievement. Being a visionary does not stop there, however. Each flight commander or supervisor must know where his group fits into the overall organization's future and what their role is to help the organization get there. The more aligned each squadron's, or flight's, or team's goals are with the group's or wing's goals, the greater the likelihood of success. This concept of alignment extends all the way to each individual in an organization. Each person that is a member of a team, flight, or squadron must know what his stake is in the long-range objectives of his unit. This vision of the future is a key ingredient in individual leadership and a vital ingredient in the overall success of an organization.

Team-building has long been a part of developing a powerful military organization and was very obvious in the preparation of forces for the 1991 Gulf War. Leaders at all levels of an organization must master this critical skill. All leaders, whether group, squadron or flight, must be able to form a unified team and draw on its strengths. Each individual must promote the team's success at the expense of individual recognition. When these traits exist throughout the organization, leaders place another stone in the quality Air Force foundation.

The third essential characteristic of leaders at all levels of the organization is to be an active change agent. At the heart of any organization's effort to improve is the need for change. Without change an organization becomes stale and uninspired. It then loses its desire to strive for those goals and objectives that are just out of reach. When that happens, the organization stagnates and ultimately fails. To prevent this internal decay, all members of the organization must continuously search for ways to improve the processes key to the unit's success.

Supervisors at all levels must be willing to implement the ideas of their team members. The real process experts are the doers. They must have the courage to suggest change and push their teams into uncharted waters. Without the skill of promoting change, leaders throughout the organization will be unable to create an environment that strives for continuous improvement and a key part of the Quality Air Force foundation will be missing.

Leadership truly is the key to success of an organization. It is the primary element that drives the organization forward. Leadership must extend from the very top of the organization to the bottom. Each individual, whether responsible for the entire organizational team or a team member, must display critical leadership skills. Everyone must have a vision of what part they play in the grand scheme of things and visualize their contribution to the team's success

Team-building must continue to develop. The organization can achieve much more working together than working as individuals. Team building is a force multiplier. Finally, leaders must be instigators of change. Without change the organization will wither and die. Leadership must permeate the entire organization. Then it will be a solid foundation for a quality Air Force environment.

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AETCNS) — Two members of the 12th Flying Training Wing Aircraft Fabrication Shop used scrap aircraft aluminum to create Air Education and Training Command's first Order of the Sword.

SrAs. Kevin Wyse and LeeRoy Smith III began work in August on the 5-foot, 20pound Excalibur sword, which is patterned after the legendary sword of King Arthur. Airman Wyse, a machinist, and Airman Smith, a sheet metal technician, created the sword for Gen. Henry Viccellio's Order of the Sword induction ceremony, Saturday.

Airmn Smith designed the sword's hilt with the aid of a computer, then transferred the design to a piece of aircraft aluminum. "The size and proportion of the hilt are critical because they act as counterweights for the sword blade," Airman Smith said. The blade slips into the hilt and is secured to prevent damage to the blade.

Airman Wyse used a milling machine and lathe to cut out the sword blade from a 5-foot-1ong, 8-inch-wide and half-aninch-thick piece of aluminum. He meticulously cut four sides of the blade to precise eightdegree angles, gently raising its surface to a point. After that, he hand-sanded the aluminum blade, smoothing out imperfections. "It took 10 days of patience and has been a challenge ... it's a lot of machine and hand work. I have learned a lot from this process," said Airman Wyse.

Their boss, SMSgt. Frank Mirabelli, 12th FTW fabrication flight chief, is happy that they volunteered to work on the special project. "It is great experience for them. Airman Wyse has used the lathe and milling machine in different ways than he has in the past. And while Airman Smith has done a lot of design work, this was an opportunity to see the process through - from beginning to the end," he said.

During the Saturday ceremony, the former Air Training Command Order of the Sword will be retired. The retired sword will be placed on permanent display at the Lackland NCO Academy, Lackland AFB, Texas, according to CMSgt. Tommy Sanford, the AETC senior enlisted advisor.

The AETC Order of the Sword will be displayed in the AETC headquarters building at Randolph . General Viccellio will take home a second sword, which was purchased through the AETC Order of the Sword committee for his induction.

SrAs. Kevin Wyse and LeeRoy Smith III apply finishing touches to the new AETC Order of the Sword.

Air Force. "He is genuinely happy to see the enlisted corps pursue educational goals," said the chief.

The general's encouragement extends beyond his own Air Force troops as he paved the way for Navy and Army instructors, who teach Air Force personnel, to earn associates' degrees from CCAF. "This is a step closer to developing a Community College of the Armed Forces where enlisted members of all services can pursue a degree," said the chief.

CMSgt. Arthur Haney, Senior NCO Academy commandant at Maxwell AFB's Gunter Annex, Ala., nominated General Viccellio based on his leadership during the command's first year. He also stressed the general's influence on many of the Year of Training programs.

"Among General Viccellio's five fundamental precepts of leadership is the admonition to 'Love your people,' Chief Haney said. This leadership style goes beyond respect, admiration and trust to require leaders to know who their people are and not simply what they do, Haney explained.

"General Viccellio is the catalyst for the rapid development and implementation of the three level, or apprentice level schools for every specialty in the Air Force," he said. This Year of Training initative alone eliminated direct duty assignments. It also helps in the creation of the Mission Ready Technician program. The program is designed to better prepare technical training graduates for their first duty assignments.

Chief Haney lauded the general's support of the College for Enlisted Professional Military Education. The college has consolidated the curriculum for all enlisted professional military education, including Airman Leadership School and NCO academies. "He has allocated significant funding toward the College for Enlisted PME'S educational objectives through technological advances, curriculum enhancement and standardized classrooms," he said.

I've had it!

If I read one more article asking to contribute to the Combined Federal Campaign, I'm moving to Somalia where people can really use my contributions.

This is America! Land of opportunity! What's the matter with these people who are constantly asking for my money? I've never asked anybody for help and I make it just fine

Well-OK, when I was young, I did join the Boy Scouts. And yeah, I did take swimming lessons from the Red Cross.

Sure...my cousin is mentally ill and she's gotten some help from mental health agencies. But that's the only person in my family who's gotten help.

Well...vou're right. Grandma did get transportation and stuff through a family in the nursing home. Took her to the doctor and the like, but, so what! She's dead now. Died of diabetes. Of course I noticed some of that CFC money goes to research for diseases like that. But, where were they when she needed them?

Umm, maybe I should've given my contribution to that organization. Maybe she'd still be around...Grandpa too...he died of cancer.

CFC already at work for you

Nope! I still think those folks in Somalia need my money more than us Americans. Oh...CFC money can go there, too?

Wait a minute, here! It's time to look out for old number one! I've had it rough. Dad was an alcoholic...Beat up on mom constantly. Really? CFC helps out organizations which fight alcoholism and spouse abuse, too?

Yeah. But, do you have any services agency while she was idea what a terrific dinner I through what I did; wait a could buy with that $120 share minute! I can! I'm supposed to contribute this year?

> Doesn't seem "fair" to me. What do I have to show for it? Beans and water? You mean that's what some people have to eat meal after meal?

Hold on, though. If I go giving all my hard-earned money to CFC, how am I going to pay $280 a month for my hot, new pickup truck? What? That's how much it costs for five days of residential care for a mentally retarded child? You mean like my cousin?

But...but...I've picked out this terrific-looking outfit at the mall I want for $63. What? Twenty-five hot meals for home-bound senior citizens? Why, that would have fed my grandma almost an entire month!

Hey! I was thinking of perming my hair. That costs $45. How much would that buy? Wow! Five days of residential care for a recovering alcoholic. My pop sure could have used that.

How about $160? That's what I blew this past weekend in Dallas. Ten days of shelter for a battered woman and her children, huh? Boy, if I could keep another kid from going Hey, can I tell them where I want my money to go?

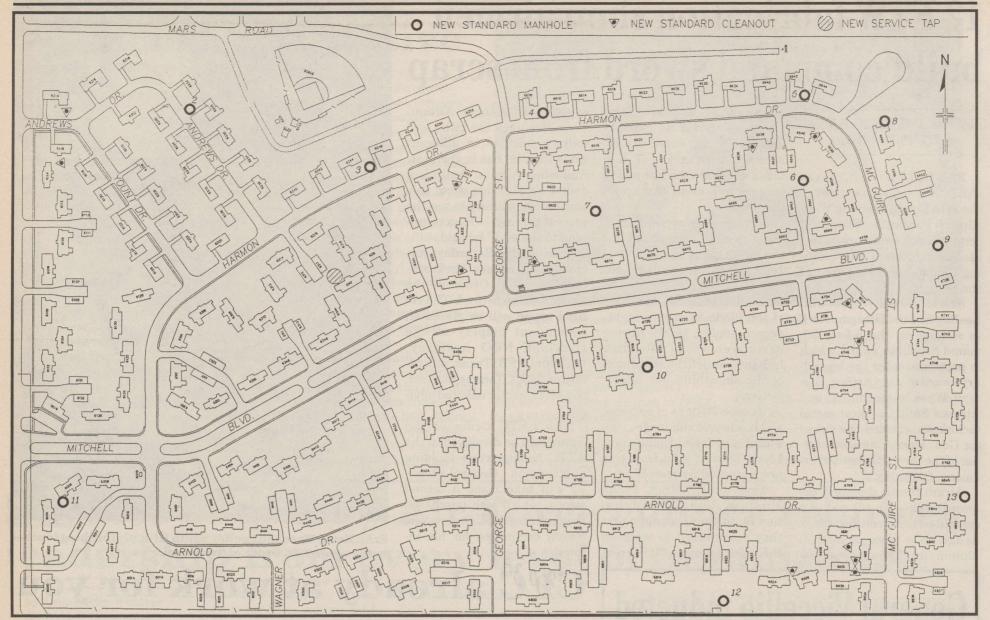

Great! Let's see, first I want to contribute to disease research, then of course, to that battered spouse shelter and then

AMC supports Uphold Democracy

SCOTT AFB, Ill. (AFNS) — Air Mobility Command people and units are playing a major role in the airlift of troops and equipment to Haiti.

As of Sept. 20, AMC active-duty, Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard aircraft had flown 239 missions, airlifted 4,470 passengers and transported 3,510 tons of cargo. AMC tankers have delivered 150,881 gallons of fuel during aerial refueling missions in Support of Operation Uphold Democracy.

At the Tanker Airlift Control Center based here, planning teams are working around the clock to plan and schedule airlift and tanker support for the complex operation.

TALCE manages Haitian airfield

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AFNS) — In only 24 hours, the civilian airport here was transformed into a major staging area by Air Mobility Command people.

Running the Air Force show at this hot, humid site is the 436th Airlift Squadron, Dover AFB, Del. Since receiving 250 support Air Force troops, and more on the way, from various stateside organizations, it's become the 436th Tanker Airlift Control Element.

A miniature air base on wheels, the foundation of a TALCE is built upon a cadre that acts as the command element. It's a deployed AMC organization set up at fixed, en route and deployment locations where AMC operational support is non-existent or insufficient. The organizational structure of a deployed TALCE mirrors that of a typical wing, with the cadre providing command and operations functions and deployed maintenance and aerial port people providing cargo and passenger handling duties.

The cadre is made up of airfield managers, loadmasters, navigators, pilots, communications people and aircraft generation equipment mechanics. Rounding out the TALCE are support people such as security policemen, civil engineers, medical technicians and personnel specialists.

SPs help keep Haiti quiet

Port-au-Prince, Haiti (AFNS) — Part of the peacekeeping force here is a 57-man security police detachment patrolling the interior of the Port-au-Prince airport.

Making up most of the detachment is a 44-member flight from the 436th Security Police Squadron, Dover AFB, Del. The remainder come from the 438th SPS, McGuire AFB, N.J.

The team's mission here as part of Operation Uphold Democracy forces is to provide internal air base ground defense. "We're making sure everything inside the fences (of the airport) is secured," said SMSgt. Terence Lydon, operations superintendent of the detachment.

Controlling the crowds of curious Haitian people who swarm the fences around this Caribbean airport are Army military policemen. They also patrol the immediate area around the compound.

Some Air Force SPs do, however, make some trips downtown. Sergeant Lydon sends out two- and three-men units out with Office of Special Investigations agents on reconnaissance missions.

While out on these patrols, the SPs are under peacetime rules of engagement. The men can't use force against any Haitian nationalist, Lydon said, "unless their lives are threatened."

While most of the SPs are veterans of deployments such as Operation Restore Hope in Somalia, some are on their first deployment.

Reese freezes CDC fees Center holds line against rate increase

Reese is holding the line option to freeze prices if deemed against child care cost increases, despite spiraling rate hikes in the private sector and a Department of Defense authorization to raise rates in military facilities.

According to Capt. John Povelones, 64th Services Squadron commander, Reese is freezing its fee rates at the Child Development Center at fiscal year 1993 prices.

"The senior leadership at Reese recognizes that even a modest increase would be a hardship for many of our child development center patrons," said Captain Povelones. "We are committed to providing a first-class program at affordable rates.'

Earlier this year, DoD directed military child development centers to implement a higher rate structure no later than Saturday. However, local commanders were given the necessary to prevent hardship.

Center fees vary depending on each family's annual earnings. For example, a family making between $23,001 and $34,000 will pay $47 per week for one child at Reese. The maximum allowable rate under the DoD plan for the same child would be $56. That translates into a Reese savings of $9 per child, per week. Over the course of a year, that family would save approximately $450

Center fees defray approximately one-half of the facility's expenses. The rest of the cost is made up by Department of Defense appropriated funds and Department of Agriculture program subsidies.

According to Linda Smith, who heads DoD's family policy support office, "There is no such thing as profit in DoD day care."

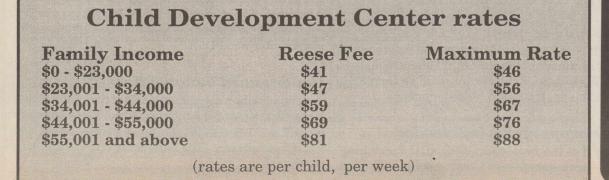

At Reese, as at all DoD centers, the rate fees are divided into five categories with fees rising in relationship to family earnings.

Those in the lower three categories (up to $44,000) generally pay significantly less than in the civilian sector. For example, the average cost of day care for a three-year old in Dallas is $64. The average cost of children enrolled at Reese is less than $50.

Captain Povelones also points out that the child development center offers many benefits in addition to low rates.

"The quality of our programs are second to none," he said. "We have exceptionally well trained staffs, offer a variety of developmental programs and enforce vigorous health, safety and environmental standards."

64th CES tops intramural bowling league

Sergeant Battles scores high game, Airman Demmerly rolls high series

by A1C Tim Dempsey Roundup Sports Editor

"Strike ... spare ... split ... gutterball!"

These were some of the words ringing throughout Windmill Lanes here as the intramural bowling season rolled into its second week of action Sept. 19.

The women were on target as SSgt. Kim Battles, 64th Logistic Squadron, had the high game, 230. But, SrA. Beverly Demmerly, 64th Mission Support Squadron, was the star of the night bowling a series high, 561.

The men's division was just as heated as the women's with MSgt. Vic Perkins, 64th Civil Engineer Squadron-A, and MSgt. Joe Hunter, 64th Medical Group, tied for the game high, 238.

Sergeant Perkins continued a hot night of bowling as he finished with the series high, 672. The 64th MDG had two bowlers who finished with the two next best series scores: Sergeant Hunter, 671; and SSgt. Roger Glover, 647.

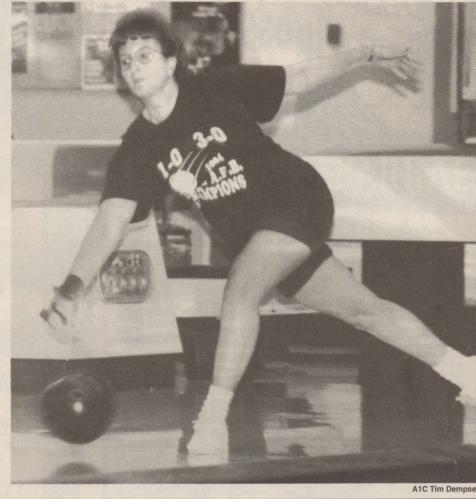

These high scores have helped the National League's top three teams to be three of the lead teams in intramural bowling.

The 64th CES continues to lead the competition,7-1, with the 64th Operations Support Squadron on its heals, 6-2. The 64th MDG finishes the division in third place, 5-3.

The AL division's top two teams, 64th Communication Squadron and 64th Contracting Squadron, are also tied with the 64th MDG.

The 64th CES-B and the 52nd Flying Training Squadron are tied for third place, 4-4.

SrA. Beverly Demmerly, right, practices for intramural bowling league play. Airman Demmerly rolled the high series in the women's division - 561.
