'Quality' isn't just another program

by Col. Roger Brady 64th Flying Training Wing commander

Do you ever think that if you hear the "Qword"— quality — one more time, you'll gag?

Sometimes I think people have that reaction, and that's unfortunate. But since some do, we need to address that situation because this movement has such great potential for helping us accomplish our mission and take care of our people.

Having thought about it quite a bit, I've decided that some people develop a negative attitude about the quality movement for two reasons—and they are both worthy of a negative attitude.

The first reason is that it often looks like just another program, another "thing" you have to do, another additional duty that adds to the work load without really adding any value to mission accomplishment.

The second is that too many people are verbally espousing the quality gospel but not really doing much about it — lots of talkin' but not much walkin'! If either or both of these situations have made you a little skeptical about this quality "stuff," we're on the same wave length and now we can move on.

My purpose in this article is to tell you what I think quality is, and isn't, what is going on currently in the wing to move us down the quality path, and what I think we all need to do to make it really work for us in a meaningful way.

First, what is quality? Well, there are about a jillion books written by gurus of the movement, some of which are actually worth reading, and I would encourage you to do so. But let me tell you what I want it to be in the 64th FTW

For starters, the 64th FTW is a quality organization now-our goal is simply to make it better. Quality is a striving for excellence in everything, by everybody. It involves our customers-both inside and outside the wing. It means knowing what they want and delivering it. It means listening to and using the talents of everyone in the wing, recognizing the importance of every wing member, and giving them a stake in the action.

What quality is not is just another program. It must be a mindset, a determination to be better and do better. It's a lot like safety — it happens between your ears. It's not just fluffy platitudes, pareto charts or meetings where we impress each other with our skills in "qualityspeak." It's also not doing stuff we don't need to do. If it isn't a legal or regulatory requirement, and it doesn't help us do our job, we need to quit doing it.

Over the past months, there have been several efforts focused on finding out where we are in the process of improving ourselves as an organization. for "walkin." Over the past three weeks, the group commanders have gone back to their units and begun a very critical process. They are looking at the results of the quality culture survey and the unit assessment and addressing themselves to concrete, measurable actions designed to make us > better and meet our stated goals. And that's where each of you comes in as well. You should each be a part of the development, critique and refinement of those measurements as we go along. You, the airman basic or the second lieutenant, are frequently the expert regarding a particular process. If the group commander, squadron commander or flight commander is barreling headlong down a path that is wrong or unnecessary, you may be the only one who really knows that and can point it out. And frequently you are the one most qualified to determine not only what we should do, but how we should measure what we do. Your flight commanders and supervisors will involve you in identifying the key jobs in your area and how we know how we are doing in getting them done. You are absolutely indispensable in this process. The message here is that quality can't be just top down. It has to be bottom up also, or it will fail.

What do we need to do now? Several things. First, commanders and supervisors need to make sure, on a daily basis, that the commitment we've made to a first-class professional living and working environment for our people is a reality.

Second, each of us needs to continually recommit ourselves to excellence, personally and professionally, and step up to our individual responsibility of making our unit, our piece of the mission, the best it can be. We must each be a part of making things better.

Third, we need to provide our people with whatever training they need to be a more effective member of the team. Most of you have training in the quality approach, and you will get more as you need it.

This effort is, at gut level, nothing more than making the most of the talents of everyone on the team to get the job done for our people in the 64th FTW, the Air Force, our sister services and the Air Reserve component, and America.

It's really pretty simple, but it's also extremely important.

We're doing a great job, training the world's best pilots and preparing ourselves to provide the very best support to the world's most respected air and space force.

Let's do it even better in 1995!

answered on a personal computer. Those results have been tabulated and are ready for us to address. Second, we accomplished a Unit Self Assessment 'in which many individuals across the wing, including me, gave their impressions of how we are doing when measured against a series of Quality Air Force criteria. Third, the wing's senior leadership, the group commanders and I, have spent over 30 hours together in the last two months discussing where the 64th FTW fits into the Air Force vision, what our mission is, what our operating philosophy is, and what our goals are for the next year. Having hammered these issues out, we sent them down to squadron commander level for feedback and refinement. The results of that effort are reflected on the adjoining page. This tells us who we want to be, what our mission is, and the things we believe we have to do to ensure our mission is successfully accomplished. Each of us can find our niche on that page. All of us have a role to play.

OK, we've got this thing written now and we have something to type on a brown piece of paper and put on the wall, so how does it become "quality?" We've done the "talkin" part-now it's time

General Fogleman continues worldwide tour

Chief of staff cites quality of life issues

RAMSTEIN AB, Germany (AFNS) — Providing stability to Air Force people in Europe after several years of extraordinary downsizing, relocation and a high ops tempo is a top priority for the new Air Force chief of staff.

During his first European visit at Ramstein Dec. 5, Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman said stability is a definite quality of life issue and emphasized his commitment to focus on the everyday things that affect the mission and morale.

"I'm going to emphasize that quality of life is a leadership responsibility and encourage leaders at all levels to pay attention to the broad spectrum of things that impinge on people's everyday lives," General Fogleman said. "Quality of life to me is not only compensation, housing and working conditions, but goes beyond that to how we treat people, how we approach them, what we expect from them in their jobs.

"It's directly related to the way our people think of the Air Force and their way of life. So on my watch, to the extent that I can, I want to take a which have been heavily pause from internally gener- tasked this year, could be ated changes, put the external changes in the proper context and allow us to take advantage of a period of relative stability to give our people better quality of life and a better outlook on job security."

Another area which is very much on the chief of staff's mind is the current operations tempo in Europe and its impact on people. U.S. Air Forces in Europe's extended road trip began in 1990 with Desert Shield and continues today with people deployed to hot spots throughout the European region.

Since the Gulf War, USAFE units have supported five other contingency operations, often simultaneously.

General Fogleman announced several initiatives designed to lighten the US-AFE load in the coming year.

He said active-duty units from other theaters will be brought in and USAFE will continue to make great use of Guard and Reserve forces to give troops some welcome time at home.

swapped out with F-15Es from Alaska which haven't seen nearly as much heavy tasking. General Fogleman said.

"We're working on some arrangements where we can get these F-15s from Alaska over here to pull some TDY and let the troops from Lakenheath go home. We're going to look at that across all the functional areas across all of the Air Force," he said.

Stressing teamwork, General Fogleman said that if the Air Force is to achieve its full potential, people have to understand that whatever specialty they work in, they are part of a team and no one part is any more or any less important. It's that team, he said, that's going to bring core competencies to the challenges that lie ahead.

"That's going to increase our core value to warfighters out there and that's really what we're after," said the chief of staff.

Air Force lists force structure changes

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -The Air Force announced Nov. 29 that it plans to make some force structure changes, primarily affecting Air Combat Command.

The announcement included the following changes:

Barksdale AFB, La. — Because of the 1995 Defense Authorization Act, the Air Force plans to assign eight B-52H aircraft to the 2nd Bomb Wing in late 1994.

This will give the wing a total of 40 B-52H aircraft, with the 917th BW, an Air Force Reserve unit, maintaining its eight B-52Hs. The additional aircraft will increase military manpower by 367 people.

This action updates previous announcements regarding the Nuclear Posture Review and provides the base with the remaining B-52s associated with the 1993 Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act.

The 28th BW will convert 12 B-lBs to reconstitution reserve status in early 1995. This will decrease manpower at the base by 428 people.

This means the wing will be the 5th BW in late 1994, giving the wing a total of 26 of these aircraft.

> The additional aircraft will increase manpower by 524 people. This action adjusts previous announcements associated with the Defense Posture Review and the 1993 Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act, which gave the 5th BW eight aircraft instead of 10. In addition, the Air Force announced that the 931st Air Refueling Group will activate at McConnell AFB, Kan., as the Air Force Reserve's first associate KC-135 unit. The unit will activate in early 1995 and is scheduled to be fully operational with two squadrons by late 1996.

Manpower impact is an increase of 424 drill and 125 fulltime civilian manpower authorizations.

President seeks DOD increase

However, Secretary Deutch was more specific on the breakout of funds earmarked for military pay increases, saying $1.5 billion was proposed for a fiscal 1996 hike.

In fiscal 1997,1998 and 1999, military pay would increase by

"We have seen the military, frankly, have to deal with an amazing number and variety of unanticipated challenges," the president said. "We ask much of our military and we owe much to them in return."

The president also said he believes the American people "expect us to do right by our men and women in uniform and to maintain our readiness and preparedness and to plan for the plans to assign 10 B-52H to future. And that's what this budget does."

A B-1B Lancer is readied for a training mission. The Air Force will reconstitute some of the bombers to reserve status as part of a force structure change.

Air Force cracks down on credit card abuse

by MSgt. Louis Arana-Barradas Air Force News Service

WASHINGTON — Air Force is cracking down on the illegal use of American Express government travel charge cards and is handing offenders stiffer punishments.

At the same time, American Express officials said they intend to sue some of those card holders with delinquent accounts, which presently total more than $13.2 million.

"We have a problem. Too many people are using their travel cards to charge things not associated with official travel," said Michael G. Weber, Air Force's American Express card coordinator.

Topping the list of offenses are cash withdrawals from automatic teller machines. Of accounts that are more than 90 days past due, 70 percent stem from these kind of transactions, American Express officials said.

"People are withdrawing money from ATM machines even though they don't have orders and are not going on a TDY. Instead, they use the money to buy new tires, a television or stereo or to take their spouse to dinner," Weber said.

Officially, charge cards may only be used for reimburseable travel expenses — TDY or permanent-change-of-station moves — or for travel advances authorized by travel orders, he said.

In the Air Force, American Express' biggest government account, those charges add up to a lot of money. Since switching to American Express Nov. 30, 1993, the more than 262,000 card holders have made more than 2.2 million charges worth more than $262.5 million — about $119 average per charge, Weber said.

"And we're issuing about 14,000 new cards each month," he said.

Both Weber and American Express officials agree that, previously, there was little action taken for wrongful card use because the program was new and account data was being gathered and developed.

"Some people found the card worked easily and that there were no repercussions for wrongful use — they were getting away with the abuse," Weber said. That's no longer the case.

"The Air Force considers misuse of the government-sponsored charge card to be a very serious matter," said Col. Robert E. Reed, chief of military justice, Air Force Legal Services Agency, Bolling AFB, Washington, D.C.

"Commanders are paying particular attention to violators and will deal with them accordingly," he said.

Violators face administrative actions, such as letters of reprimand; nonjudicial punishment, such as Article 15 action; or trial by court-martial, Reed said. There is currently no Air Force-wide program to track misuse cases, so Reed said not much information is available on how many people have been disciplined or are awaiting disciplinary action. But, action is being taken.

At Nellis AFB, Nev., an airman was court-martialed and given a bad-conduct discharge when he failed to pay more than $10,000 in unauthorized charges.

Across the country at Pope AFB, N.C., where delinquent card payments total more than $200,000, 23rd Wing commander Brig. Gen. James E. Sandstrom ordered all cards held by staff sergeants and below stored at their unit until the cards are needed for a TDY or deployment.

The Tiger Talk, Pope's base newspaper, quoted Sandstrom: "Abuse of the American Express card has become a readiness issue. We can not afford to have our people losing the authorized use of the card through abuse; it affects our ability to deploy and accomplish our mission."

Officials at Scott AFB, Ill., said no base member had yet received nonjudicial punishment or had been court-martialed for charge card abuse. However, they said some had received letters of reprimand and that two other cases are currently under investigation.

Disciplinary action is not limited to servicemembers and actions against civilian employees could range from reprimands to removals. At Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio — which has a large Air Force civilian work force — several civilian workers have been disciplined for misusing credit cards, Weber said.

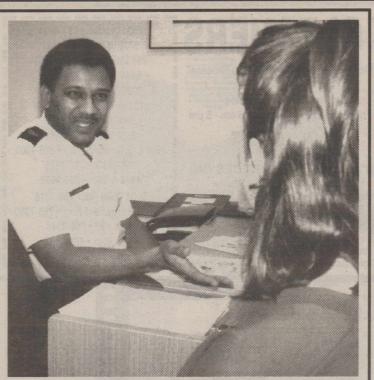

All card abusers also face legal action by American Express. Larry Gilbertson, American Express senior vice president and general manager of the government program, said late payment is the second biggest problem with the Air Force account. Though American Express has an active outside collection agency, it isn't enough, he said.

"The delinquency rate is high," Gilbertson said. "We're at the point where we've exhausted all prudent efforts to collect funds. Now is that point in time where we'll have no choice but to sue people. "

Congratulations

Wanda Bruns, 64th Services Squadron, receives her retirement certificate from Col. Terry Weimer, 64th Support Group commander, here Dec. 7. Bruns completed more than 30 years of government service, 24 years at Reese. Brun's husband, Richard, retired from the 64th Security Police Squadron in 1969.

MSgt. Luis Lynch, Air Force Aid Society advisor, explains the society's education grant program to a prospective applicant.

Education grants offered by Air Force Aid Society

Reese prep students looking for scholarship assitance for college may be able to get that help from the Air Force Aid Society

According to MSgt. Luis Lynch, Air Force Aid Society advisor here, the Air Force Aid Society awarded $5 million in education grants for this school year.

The education grant program began six years ago and provides $1,000 grants to sons and daughters of activeduty, retired or deceased Air Force, Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard members.

This year 5,000 young men and women received grants to help them pursue their educational goals.

The grant program, named in honor of General Henry H. (Hap) Arnold, was initiated by the society's trustees in 1988 in response to the rising costs of education. Over 24,000 individual awards have been made during the brief history of the program. The Society hopes to award another 5,000 Education Grants for the upcoming academic year, said Sergeant Lynch.

The overall success of the program has led the society to expand program parameters for next year by including spouses of active-duty members and Title 10 Reservists on extended active duty. Eligible spouses must reside and attend school within the continental United States during the academic year and must meet all other qualifying criteria.

Sergeant Lynch stressed that in the past, too many applicants began but did not complete the entire application process because part two of the application required completion of a cumbersome financial statement to assess relative need.

"This year's process will clearly be different and certainly easier to complete because a new, simpler financial questionnaire form will be used in assessing need," said Sergeant Lynch.

Applications for the Air Force Aid Society's Education Grant Program may be obtained by seeing Sergeant Lynch in the Reese Family Support Center. Applications can also be obtained by writing to: HQ AFAS, Education Assistance Department, 1745 Jefferson Davis Highway, Suite 202, Arlington, VA 22202.

For additional information on education grants or other Air Force Aid Society programs call Sergeant Lynch at 3305.

Four majors selected for promotion to 0-5

Four Reese majors were among those selected for promotion to lieutenant colonel by the calendar 1994 Central Lieutenant Colonel Board.

The Reese selectees are Maj. Melinda Edwards, 64th Logistics Squadron commander; Chaplain (Maj.) Stephen Hess, 64th Flying Training Wing Chapel; Maj. Jim Mont, 64th Operations Group; and Maj. Steven Rakel, 54th Flying Training Squadron.

The board selected 2,168 majors for promotion to lieutenant colonel.

The selection board convened at the Air Force Military Personnel Center, Randolph AFB, Texas, Oct. 11 to consider 9,761 officers.

Air Force annouces civilian cuts

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -About 11,700 civilian jobs will be eliminated from the Air Force work force this fiscal year, Air Force officials announced Dec. 8.

The announcement will affect about 60 stateside bases. The cuts result from the National Performance Review, the Federal Workforce Restructuring Act and previously programmed reductions, officials said.

phase of nearly 38,000 civilian attrition and retirements. Inreductions expected through the year 2001.

Air Force Secretary Sheila E. Widnall has directed a comprehensive review — now in its initial stages — to ensure the reductions carefully balance the relationship between operational needs and the support infrastructure.

Officials stressed the Air Force hopes to achieve the reductions through voluntary They constitute the first incentive programs, normal voluntary reductions would become necessary only if those means fail to yield the required civilian manning levels.

Whether civilians leave the Department of the Air Force through voluntary or involuntary means, officials said, every effort will be made to help them find new jobs through the Department of Defense Priority Placement Program and referrals to other federal and state agencies.
