

Colonel Reynolds to join AFMPC staff

Col. Bill Reynolds, 64th Flying Training Wing vice commander, will be reassigned to the Military Personnel Center at Randolph Air Force Base, Texas, in November.

Reynolds, who is also the wing Inspector General, will be succeeded here by Col. Henry Horton, presently the chief of the Air Education and Training Command Inspector General's Inspection Team.

At MPC, Reynolds will work in the Personnel Data Systems directorate. The directorate oversees the implementation and operations of personnel computer systems.

Reynolds has been the 64th FTW vice commander since June, 1993. He previously served as 323rd Operations Group commander, Mather

AFB, Calif.

During his tenure at Reese, Reynolds was instrumental in the implementation of Specialized Undergraduate Pilot Training and then Joint SUPT.

He has also been a key force for upgrading the wing's computer system, including the installation of several local area networks and establishing the framework for the use of fiber optics.

A 27-year Air Force veteran, Reynolds is a command pilot with more than 3,000 flying hours in the F-16, O-2, F-4, T-37, T-38 and the T-1A.

He is a graduate of Florida State University and St. Mary's University, San Antonio. He earned his wings at Laredo AFB, Texas.

Not pictured are Capts. Harry Edwards and Oswald Johnson, 64th Medical Group. Wing members are invited to congratulate the new selectees at the Reese Club today at 4 p.m.

Secretary and Chief get tough on accountability

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — The Secretary of the Air Force approved the Chief of Staff's recommendations to remove from flying duties five officers involved in the shutdown of two U.S. Army helicopters.

Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman also gave seven officers a letter of evaluation for "failure to meet Air Force standards in job knowledge, judgment and leadership."

The evaluations, and any responses by the officers to them, will become a permanent part of each officer's record.

The actions, announced Aug. 15, came after Air Force

Secretary Sheila E. Widnall directed Fogleman to evaluate administrative and personnel actions taken against officers involved in the incident.

The general found inconsistencies during his evaluation.

The study came in the wake of growing concern by Air Force senior leaders over standards and accountability in this incident. In the shutdown, 26 people — including 15 Americans — died.

Fogleman shared his concern in a message to Air Force commanders last month, saying, "We cannot tolerate actions which appear to condemn inappropriate conduct one moment, condone it the next, or even worse, reward it."

The review was directed by Widnall after a request from Deputy Secretary of Defense John P. White. In a memorandum to Fogleman July 24, Widnall asked him to review all the disciplinary and admin-

Week 3

The Air Education and Training Command Inspector General Quality Air Force Assessment Team is scheduled to arrive at Reese on Sept. 11.

This condensed checklist will help prepare for the visit by highlighting key areas to clean up on a day-by-day basis. For more information call Lt. Col. John Shackelford at 3033.

✓ Unit inspection

Unit IGs review self-inspection/self-assessment program results. Work on open discrepancies, suspenses and continuity folders.

Tuesday

✓ Cross talk again

Visit counterparts again. Double team each other's units.

Wednesday

✓ More cross talk-- again

Open your shop to counterparts. Dig deep.

Thursday

✓ Assessment Day II

Take a deep breath. Look at your own documentation. Compare where you are to where you were. Document problems you can't fix and why.

Friday

✓ Paperwork polish

Dress up continuity folders. Catch up on anything you found last week but didn't get to fix.

Hard Choices

Readiness, base closure and national security

by John P. White
Deputy Defense Secretary

Many of the facts about the latest round of military base closings have been ignored. But the facts won't go away.

The Department of Defense depends on the base closure process. We have more bases than we need, and for years Congress simply wouldn't let us close any of them. This process, established by law, is finally permitting us to close bases, saving a projected $65 billion required for readiness and force modernization.

Nonetheless, both military and civilians in the Pentagon disagreed with some key actions of the 1995 base closure commission (BRAC '95). It's worth explaining why.

Fact 1: The Defense Department spent thousands of hours and more than a year weighing the issues and deciding which bases to recommend for closure or realignment. By law, our recommendations must rely on public information and follow objective criteria. They reflect the best judgment of the secretary, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the military services.

The commission's job is to review those recommendations. It is not easy: commissioners are pressured by mayors, governors, senators, representatives and many wellheeled lobbyists. And commissioners have only four months to complete the job. In the end they substituted their judgment for ours in more than 30 cases. The commission protected 23 bases that the Defense Department said we couldn't afford. To compensate, they added nine facilities to the closure list bases we believe are more critical to military readiness.

This was the largest alteration to defense recommendations in the history of the process. However, neither the president nor the department has the power to change a BRAC recommendation—only to accept or reject the entire list. Since we believed that it was far more important to preserve the process than to correct every commission misjudgment, we recommended that the president accept the list. In our judgment, the BRAC '95 list was far from perfect—but it was infinitely better than having no base closings at all.

Fact 2: Job losses do matter. Ever since the first round of base closings, economic impact on communities has been a required part of selection criteria. In some cases that impact has been severe, and California turns out to be a special case. It is a large state with a large share of government defense jobs—about one in every six. But the impact of closings on California has been massive and disproportionate—over half of all prior BRAC job losses nationwide were in California alone. Despite this, the commission proposed approximately 38,000 more job cuts in California communities that were already reeling. During the cumulative BRAC process, California has been harder hit than the next 10 states combined. That is not fair.

Fact 3: BRAC is about running the Defense Department well on a reduced budget, not about politics. Many tongues have wagged about the department's concern over the closures of McClellan Air Force Base in California and Kelly Air Force Base in Texas, implying that those concerns are political. Not so.

In fact, it was Air Force military leadership that recommended keeping these bases open. Because the aircraft maintenance facilities at those bases are critical to combat readiness, it would be excessively costly to move the equipment and people to other facilities, and doing so would disrupt all such operations nationwide.

Fact 4: We've worked out a good solution: "privatization in place." For several years, the commission—and others—has recommended that the Pentagon transfer its facilities to private sector management. The Air Force has already begun to do so at Newark Air Force Base in Ohio.

We intend to apply that approach at other large defense industrial facilities. By privatizing work in these communities, we cut costs through the elimination of excess facilities—and without losing local skilled workers and specialized equipment. We avoid the disruption and cost of relocating thousands of workers and gain the benefits of private sector practices and efficiencies.

Privatization in place at Kelly and McClellan means we'll maintain Air Force readiness. It will mitigate the heavy toll on communities affected by base closures. It helps us with the post-Cold War military downsizing. And it helps us ensure we maintain the best trained, best equipped, most effective fighting forces in the world.

We make this commitment because we have a stake in the success of this approach.

I recommended privatization as chairman of the congressionally mandated Commission on Roles and Missions of the Armed Forces.

Now, working with all of the military services, we are putting it into action. And that's a fact. From The Washington Post. Reprinted with permission.

General Fogleman issues evaluations

Administrative actions taken against the Air Force people involved in the shutdown.

"Take (or recommend) further action with respect to this incident, if appropriate; and take action to correct deficiencies in the Air Force system," Widnall said in her memorandum, and asked for a full report by Wednesday.

"My review focused on the accountability of those involved in the Black Hawk accident; however, accountability does not end there," Fogleman said in his reply to the secretary, and outlined the results of his investigation and his proposals for change.

"As a result, I have decided, with your authority, to take additional actions concerning a number of those involved in the chain of causation which ultimately led to the mistaken shutdown," Fogleman said in his report.

Part of that action was taking the two F-15 pilots involved in the April 14, 1994 incident over Northern Iraq — Lt. Col. Randy W. May and Capt. Eric Wickson — off flying status for at least three years. Additionally, Capt. Jim Wang, the senior director of the airborne warning and control aircraft guiding the two fighters, and two other AWACS officers, Capt. Joseph M. Halcli and 1st Lt. Ricky L. Wilson, were disqualified from controlling aircraft for the same period of time.

Wang was the only person involved that was brought to trial. A court-martial found him not guilty of dereliction of duty.

Fogleman said he was "comfortable with the military justice actions" taken and didn't recommend changes.

"I have great faith in the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and nothing in my review has altered that," he stated in his review.

But the general said he issued the evaluations because the "failures" of the officers "to meet Air Force standards were not appropriately reflected in their performance evaluation."

While assessing the records, Fogleman said he was looking to see if "those who failed to meet Air Force standards had been held appropriately responsible."

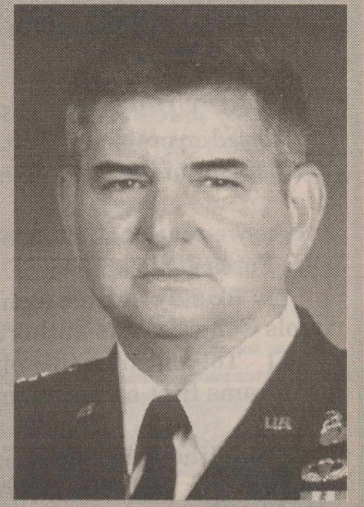

"The fact that the conduct of some individuals did not give rise to criminal prosecution should not end the inquiry into the appropriateness of their actions. Air Force standards require far more than mere compliance with the law.

"They require that people display the extraordinary discipline, judgment and training that their duties require and the American people expect," he said in his report.

The general said there were several issues that needed to be addressed concerning Air Force policies and procedures related to administrative and personnel actions.

Gen. Ronald Fogleman

He tasked personnel and operations officials to determine and make recommendations on:

□ Whether current procedures and guidance on documenting adverse actions in unfavorable information files, officer selection records and performance reports are adequate.

□ Whether the current procedures and guidance are adequate to ensure that adverse actions are brought to the attention of those responsible for preparing performance evaluations.

□ Whether the procedures and guidance concerning flying evaluation boards are adequate as they relate to actions involving deficiencies in judgment.

"I'm also concerned about the actions of senior officers who failed to appropriately record in performance evaluations the conduct of those involved," Fogleman said in his report. "I have personally expressed my deep concern and dissatisfaction to each of the senior officers involved in the rating chain."

In a letter to White, Widnall said Fogleman's review "ensures there has been accountability for this tragic incident."

"I am also confident that the actions he has taken and recommendations he has made will ensure that accountability is consistent throughout the Air Force and will reaffirm the faith and confidence of the American people in the leadership of the Air Force," the secretary said.

Widnall said there will be consistency among disciplinary, administrative and personnel actions. "Air Force actions will be uniformly known, consistently applied and non-selectively enforced," Widnall said.

The secretary said the "vast majority" of Air Force people "have and uphold very high standards" but that it must be "unequivocally clear" that "those standards apply to everyone and in every circumstance."

"We owe no less to the Air Force and to the American people," Widnall said.

To reinforce and ensure that all Air Force and civilian members fully understand the need to adhere to high standards of performance and be held accountable for those standards, Fogleman made a video in which he describes his views on standards and accountability.

The video tape will be mandatory viewing for all officers, senior NCOs and senior executive service members. Copies of the tape were sent to all Air Force agencies Tuesday.

AETC commander seeks support for new survey

by Gen. Billy J. Boles
AETC commander

Feedback is a critical tool you and your leaders use to guide quality improvement in all organizations.

Because we believe that everyone in Air Education and Training Command has a stake in our mission of recruiting, training, and educating men and women for the world's best Air Force, it is vitally important that commanders at all levels have feedback from you our internal customers.

To facilitate the feedback process, we've developed a quick, easy, anonymous survey tool.

It is designed to take a minimum amount of your time, but provide feedback to commanders in several key areas. We will use the results to guide our next steps.

This is your opportunity to voice your opinion on work environment, job satisfaction, mission, and other key areas. Your Quality Air Force office will be distributing the computerized survey in August 1995.

The survey is voluntary. However, it will only reach its full potential if it represents all our members.

Therefore, we encourage every airman, NCO, officer, and civilian in AETC to participate. It's that important.

(Editors note: According to Reese Quality Air Force Office officials, the AETC survey will be distributed in the next few weeks. The office expects to use a distribution system similar to that used for the recent Air Force quality of life survey initiated by Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Ronald Fogleman.)

PEOPLE FIRST

Military personnel drawdown

Based on projected military personnel strengths, about 90 percent of the Air Force military drawdown is behind us.

As we reach the "home stretch" of the drawdown the Air Force goals are:

- To stay flexible using the drawdown management tools Congress has authorized and

- To continue the philosophy of using voluntary programs first and involuntary programs only as a last resort

- Although congressional authority for the Temporary Early Retirement Authority programs extends through FY99, funding constraints may preclude or make its use extremely limited

- If the TERA option is not available, we plan to reinstitute our past policy of continuing majors (twice deferred) to 20-year retirement

- Again, the Air Force remains committed to its people

See your local military personnel flight for the latest information.

More assignment opportunities for enlisted

The Air Force has a continuing need for master sergeants to become first shirts

- Interesting, challenging and always exciting career opportunity

- Openings projected at Vandenberg, Lackland, Langley, and New Windsor, N.Y., just to name a few

Three officers may study overseas

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AFNS) — The Air Force is offering three officers the opportunity to study overseas for two years.

The Olmsted Scholar Program scholarships will provide the officers an in-depth understanding of a foreign culture so they will become sensitive to the viewpoints and concerns of people around the world. The program includes studying at a university using the native language.

In past years, according to Air Force Military Personnel Center officials, the Olmsted Foundation felt there was an over-concentration of scholars in Western Europe. Therefore, it encourages applicants to consider more diverse areas for study, including the Middle East, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America or countries of the former Soviet Union. The officers selected will begin study for the 1996-1997 school year.

All applications must be received at AFMPC by Nov. 3. Applicants should process applications through their servicing military personnel flight and not mail them directly to AFMPC, officials said.

Basic but not all inclusive qualifications include being a regular officer with between three and 11 years' total service by March 1. Officers must have a minimum of a 3.0 grade point average for their undergraduate degree and have achieved at least a 550 on each portion (verbal and quantitative) on the Graduate Record Examination.

For more information about the program, contact Maj. Pam McCollom or Tech. Sgt. Elaine Friese at DSN 487-2103 or commercial 210-652-2103.

Secretary Widnall opposes High-1

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Secretary of the Air Force Sheila E. Widnall has joined other top military officials in opposing the "High-1" proposal.

Widnall sent a letter Aug. 9 to the Senate and House budget committees stating concerns about High 1 and how it could affect readiness and quality of life.

She also sent a copy of the letter to the Senate Armed Services Committee and the House National Security Committee.

The letter stated:

"With the help of Congress, we've made tremendous progress in the last few years on military readiness and quality of life. However, I am extremely concerned that the proposed change to the military retirement system known as 'High-1' will reverse a very positive trend.

"This proposal will affect about 28 percent of our active-duty force, including those who served in Vietnam, the Gulf War, Somalia, Haiti, and Bosnia. It impacts the core leadership of the Air Force who stayed with the military during some very turbulent times to include the most significant drawdown in the modern history of the armed forces. I'm referring to the technical sergeants and the entire senior noncommissioned officer corps, and the lieutenant colonels and colonels who execute the Air Force mission on a daily basis and inspire the young troops to stick with the Air Force.

"This is unprecedented — for the first time the Congress is neglecting to grandfather those career people who are relying on a promise made at the time of their enlistment. This proposed change breaches a promise Air Force people have counted on for their entire career.

"The military retirement system is the Air Force's single most effective career retention incentive. Our troops are already anxious about the future due to the ongoing drawdown and base closings. This proposal could not surface at a worse possible time when we've been asking more and more of our troops with increased deployments and worldwide commitments.

"If our people perceive their government will abandon longstanding promises, even after they have served more than 20 years in good faith, we'll certainly have a difficult time attracting and retaining the quality airman upon which our military readiness depends.

"Please help us avoid serious retention and readiness difficulties by reconsidering this proposal and its long-term consequences. I stand ready to help you build alternatives to avert the need for this legislation."

High 1 changes the way military retired pay is calculated in an effort to help reduce the national deficit.

Air Force officials said High 1 could cut from 3 percent to 9 percent from the pay of people who entered the service before Sept. 8, 1980.

Last week, Secretary of Defense William Perry and the Joint Chiefs of Staff sent separate letters to Congress opposing High 1, which congressional budget officials say will save $649 million over the next seven years.

Pentagon officials, however, say the savings will be much lower than projected since military people may stay in the service longer to take advantage of longevity pay increases.

AETC program to improve customer service

Special training team to visit Reese in late September

by Capt. Byron James
AETC Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AETCNS) — When most people think of customer service, they think about front line employees providing goods or services for payment.

Many of the command's employees don't believe they serve "real" customers because money does not change hands during their business transactions. To change this perception, Air Education and Training Command has launched a new training program.

The goal of the AETC Customer Service Training Program is to foster a stronger service culture by reminding every employee, both military and civilian, that they have customers — whether they hand out keys at billeting, stock and track materials in a warehouse, turn wrenches on the flight line, or anything in between — and the level of service they provide each customer is key to the success of the AETC mission.

"Good customer service is a product of true professionals who know their business," said Gen. Billy J. Boles, AETC commander. "And they don't get that way by accident either. They have received thorough training on how to take good care of their customers."

To facilitate the training, members of the headquarters staff developed a customer service "road show." Beginning this fall, team members will travel to all AETC installations. According to Bill Middleton, training manager for AETC Services and project officer for the program, two-person "mobile training teams" will spend three days at each base providing orientation and training volunteer facilitators. The facilitators will then use the information and materials left by the team to train the base populace.

Middleton said this training is unlike many of the formal training classes people have taken before. "These classes are designed to be fun!" said Middleton. "Our MTT members, themselves volunteers, include games and personal stories in their presentations. We believe these inputs enhance training and help people enjoy the half-day class. They will have fun as they learn that great customer service is becoming a way of life in AETC."

The MTT is scheduled to visit Reese in late September. Anyone interested in volunteering to be a facilitator here or wanting more information, should contact Second Lt. Sean Bittner at 6492.

IM sluggers hit diamond for base softball playoffs

Airman 1st Class Lloyd Dehnert gets a hit as he tries to lead the 64th CS to the intramural softball title.

The regular season of intramural softball has come to an end, and the playoffs were scheduled to begin Monday.

The 52nd Flying Training Squadron finished the regular season atop the American League and posted the best record, 13-2.

The 52nd FTS shares Building 105 with the 54th FTS, 8-6. The teams were scheduled to battle Monday for bragging rights to the building.

The 64th Communication Squadron, 11-4, is the second seeded team in the AL. It was scheduled to open the playoffs against the 64th Logistics Squadron, 10-5, the third seeded team from the National League.

The following game was to feature the second seeded team from the NL, the 64th Medical Group-A, 11-4, against the defending champions, the 64th Security Police Squadron, 10-5.

The top seeded team from the NL, the 35th FTS, 12-3, was scheduled to close out the night against the 64th Communication Squadron, 11-4.

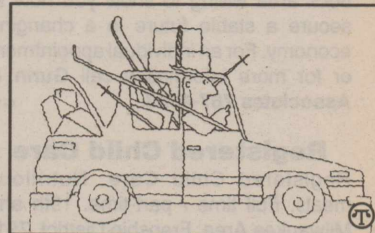

The double-elimination playoffs were scheduled to conclude Thursday.

Pointers For Parents

Tips On Getting Good Grades In Back-To-School Packing

(NAPS)—Wondering how to get your college kids' school stuff back to school? Rather than packing everything into the family car for a long, crowded drive to school, many parents are choosing to ship their kids' belongings and then fly or drive in comfort. This alternative can save time, money—and even your sanity. Consider the following:

- Shipping saves time. There's no hassling with packing and unpacking the car, and everything's there waiting for you and your child when you arrive at school.
- Shipping saves money. It's more economical to ship than to rent a trailer and drive.
- Shipping saves stress. Sending your son or daughter off to college is an anxious time for families. Knowing that your child's belongings will be safely packed and shipped is one less thing to worry about. Then you can drive leisurely or put the student on a plane.
- Shipping saves your stuff. In

Rather than packing everything in the family car, there's a growing trend to shipping back-to-school necessities.

the past, clothes and a popcorn popper were the staples of college life. "Necessities" for today's college student may include a TV, VCR, personal computer, stereo or other expensive—and fragile—equipment. Shippers, such as Pak Mail Centers of America, can specially package everything so that it arrives safely and in one piece.

For a free checklist of what to take to college, call your local Pak Mail store.
