Congress sprucing up for its 101st two-year session

WASHINGTON - Congress is sprucing up for its 101st two-year session and the celebration of 200 years of constitutional government. One more monumental as the "century" years close, the chamber will have a fresher look when it convenes Jan. 3.

A new carpet has been installed on the House floor with marble tiles, and the staff benches in the rear have been reupholstered in bright crimson. It should give the chamber a flashier look on television.

A few months ago, the staff moved the benches back to the front corners of the Senate chamber to accommodate seating for larger audiences. That was done with television in mind.

Some senators with desks in the rear of the chamber had complained that when they rose to speak, the television camera at the front of the speech showed them with rows of dangling feet and crossing legs.

The level of their own heads. The new look provides a more senatorial visual backdrop.

The taking up of the old carpet, which had been in place for more than a decade and was barely worn in places, was an event in itself.

Workmen in jams and casual clothing took the places of senators in crisp three-piece, pin-striped suits.

They tore up the carpet, one bystander said.

West boarded the lead. South felt he had enough extra values to shoot out the slam and did so directly. With West’s well-judged diamond lead, South no longer had time to set up the clubs. Fortunately South had one last chance. After winning the diamond lead and drawing two rounds of trumps, South felt the spades were vulnerable against a club discard. Exercise benefits greater for males
NEW YORK (AP) — Men benefit even more than women by exercising regularly, according to the Nutri-System Health & Fitness Information Bureau. It’s because physical activity not only helps to control weight but also extends, life span by counteracting the effects of testosterone, the male hormone that causes LAL (the loss of hair). Women get that cholesterol-protection naturally from estrogen.

Poll: Reagan's policies are not as popular

NEW YORK (AP) - Ronald Reagan's personal popularity still rank ahead of all other major public figures, but Americans are not as enthusiastic about his policies as they were when he first took office, a new poll has found.

The findings, released Monday, show that Reagan's overall favorability - which includes his policies - slipped 12 points since January, to 43 percent. But his personal popularity remains high - 78 percent of Americans expressed confidence in his ability to handle the job.

The poll, conducted from Nov. 18-21 by the Reuters poll organization, found that Americans were not as enthusiastic about his policies as they were when he first took office.

"There's been a shift in terms of policy," said John Zaller, a political scientist at the University of California at Berkeley. "There's a lot of evidence that people are not happy with his policies."

But he added that Reagan's popularity remains high - 78 percent of Americans expressed confidence in his ability to handle the job.

The poll found that 78 percent of Americans approved of Reagan's handling of the federal budget, a 12-point increase from January. But 38 percent of respondents said they agreed with the policy excluding Soviet relations, a 10-point increase from January.

Policy excluding Soviet relations, personal qualities: 'Two-thirds of the public approves of the president's handling of the federal budget, a 12-point increase from January. But 38 percent of respondents said they agreed with the policy excluding Soviet relations, a 10-point increase from January.

New congressional budget chairmen await conflicts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressman who has been a perennial budget worrier and a mayor who has spent his career focusing on other issues will be among lawmakers in Washington who should be one of 1989's most colorful political battles: how to cut the federal deficit.

Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., and Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., such as becoming chairman of their chamber's budget committees. The two have been in the thick of everything from welfare to tax cuts to immigration, and Panetta's leadership in the House is already being felt.

But one key to the future of the federal deficit is how to cut the budget and still keep the nation's economic engines running. Sasser is the clear leader in the Senate on budget issues, and Panetta is a strong contender for the job of chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, which is responsible for the nation's tax laws.

In the year ahead you are likely to be hearing about the budget more than you have in recent years. You might secretly resent having to do what you consider to be unnecessary chores today, but if you're like the rest of America, you'll have to get used to the idea of paying taxes.

People are looking for ways to make ends meet, and they're not happy with the way government is spending their money. The budget deficit is a major issue, and it's going to be debated in every area of government, from foreign policy to domestic affairs.

The budget deficit is a problem for everyone, but it's especially hard on those who are already struggling to make ends meet. The Tennesseean is best known for speaking out against administration policies in Central America and picking through government spending looking for waste and fraud. He was chosen to deliver his party's response to the Reagan speech on Nicaragua in early 1988, but for the most part he has received little national attention.

Sasser says he believes the Reagan administration's budget cuts may not be enough to address the budget deficit. He has proposed a budget that would cut spending on defense and domestic programs, but he is not sure if the public will support his proposal.

"I want to come up with an approach that will be consistent with the committee's certain budget priorities," he says.
