Terracing Is A Conservation Practice . . .

Terracing has been a conservation practice for controlling water erosion on cropland for many years. Farmers wanted to step water from cutting across their fields, taking away the top soil and cutting gullies too deep to cross with their farm equipment so they built terraces following the contour of the land.

These terraces did their jobs well, but here were some things about them that made farming harder. There were the many point rows between each terrace there were yet spots along the channel or in front of the ter-race that hampered planting or tillage operations, and as the tracters became larger and could handle larger equipment like handle larger equipment like six and eight rew planters and cultivators these systems have become more and more out of

Farmers co-operating with the Wichita-Brazos Soil Conser vation District are replacing ome of these old terrace systems with new Parallel Terraces reports Wesley Robbins, technician with the Soil Conservation

Parallel terraces can be con structed on any land that is tillable, whether it is to be row cropped or planted to drill-crops.

Prior to the actual construction of a parallel terrace system technicians of the Soil Conservation Service come out to the farm and by the use of surveythe Rev. Cecil E. Foster, pas-raphy or "topog" map as they done by taking an elevation reading at 100 foot intervals over the entire farm. From this topog map the terrace system can then be designed on paper. This gives the interested party an opportunity to see where the terraces would be, how many feet required and the approximate cost of construction.

It also makes it possible to space the terraces at intervals that will fit the farmers equip ment. Other features of parallel terraces that have met the farm ers approval are: no wet spots in front of the terrace to hamper planting and tillage operations, the elimination or point rows between the terraces, better alignment of terraces making for more straight rows, and the terraces are emptied into protected areas to eliminate soil erosion in the end of the ter-

Completed Parallel Terraces may be seen on the J. A. Hill farm east of Munday, Lee Smith farm west of Knox City, Lambert Holub farm south of Rhineland, and C. P. and K. H. Baker farm south of Goree. Parallel terraces under construction may be seen on the Oates Golden farm north of Goree.

Technical belp and cost-sharing assistance from the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture Soil Conservation Service is available to assist in the establishment of a parallel terrace system.

As a rule, a cat's victim can collect damages only by showing some previous vicious conduct by the cat. Such conduct puts the owner on notice that his pet is dangerous.

For example:

A shopper, accompanied by her dog entered a market. The proprietor's cat, which had recently had kittens, promptly tore into the dog. When the wo man tried to protect her dog, she herself was mauled by the

In this case the woman did collect. The court pointed out that a cat with kittens is likely to attack a dog, that customers often brought dogs to the market and that another customer had been attacked earlier in the same manner. Miss Andreia Hudson Shower Honoree

Miss Andreia Hudson, brideelect of Henry Gail Norris of Amarillo, was honored with a shower Monday afternoon in the Fellowship Hall of the First Methodist Church.

Former classmates Carol Tankersley, Kitty Larson, and Ginny Branham registered and served guests.

Miss Hulson's chosen colors of red and white were used. The refreshment table was beautifully covered with a white cloth, and centered with an arrangement of antiqued red roses in a copper bowl with matching SCHOOL TODAY! candlesticks and red tapers.

Miss Husson and her mother Mrs. W. B. Hudson were presented in the receiving line.

The wedding will take place on Jamary 29, in the Methodist Chapel on the campus of the University of Texas, where the future bridegroom is a senior pre-med student.

Junior Class News --By MIKE GLENN

We Juniors have about de eided that we are beginning to get tired of the snow, but at least it did get us out of a day of school last Friday, so maybe we can stand it until it melts It kinds looks like we'll have to anyway whether we want to or not, doesn't it?

Two of our Junior boys will be making several journeys during the next two weeks. Jerry Myers and Mike Tankersley will take their hogs, sheep and cattle to the Port Worth Pat Stock Show. Mike will take his stoer to Abilene os Tuesday, and to Fort Worth Jerry will take his hogs and sheep to Fort Worth on Friday. Good luck to both of these boys!

We got our report carde last week, but if you will pardon us we don't wish to comment on that subject now!! Well, maybe we can do better next semester.

We have a new Junior in our midst. She is Marthe Foulk who comes to by from Anson. We give her our warmest welcome, and hope that she enjoys Knor
