BASKETBALL

The Junior Basketball Team of Monday High went out to Sunset last Friday night to meet the Sunset Junior Team on their court. A victory of 24 to 14 was made by our boys. Our Junior Team has not had much practice, but they plan to show a few teams in this district how good they really are later. Several boys are demanding a game with Grove.

The Senior boys are still working out with their coach, Mr. Coody. He is certain of a great improvement, and the boys are planning a game this week.

MID-TERM EXAMS!

There's a great day coming, boys and girls. It will probably be next Wednesday. The date is not decided, but in case the exams do not start Wednesday at noon they will begin Thursday morning. The exams will run through Friday afternoon.

NEW SUBJECTS OFFERED

Three new subjects will be offered the second semester: Civics will be followed by Economics which will be taught by Mr. Coody. It depends upon the number of students signing for Solid Geometry and Advanced Arithmetic as to the possibility of teaching both. If Mr. Hardegree accepts Solid Geometry, both subjects will be taught. In case he does not, Mr. Larimer will teach the subject most popular. Advanced Arithmetic will meet the seventh period.

Extemporaneous Speaking

Two new subjects have been announced in the "Interscholastic League" for the extemporaneous speaking contest. They are "The TVA Program" and "The AAA Program." Mary Anna Burnison, our representative in the girl's division, is working with Vinton, the boys' representative.

High School Ambition

To be Santa Claus—Clifford Brock. To understand the Einstein theory—Roy McNeill. To become a dazzling red-head—

Louise Ingram. To make carbon copies—Virginia Smith. To catch a whale—Ellen Frances Mauldin. To marry the boss—Gordon James Barnes. To pass typing—Mary Eva Riggsby. To learn the keyboard—Robert Layne. To be a sweet girl graduate—Betsy Reeves. To be a boy like his brothers—Everett Pruitt. To go to Mrs. Maple's kindergarten—Sylvia Barnes. To accompany Sylvia—Lucille Neff.

Campus Philosophy

Yesterday is dead—forget it. Tomorrow has not come—don't worry. Today is here—use it.

It does little good to put your best foot forward. People are so suspicious that the chances are they will look for the other foot.

SENIOR SCRAPBOOK

If you did not read the first part of Gordon James Barnes' story entitled "Answered," get out your last week's edition of The Munday Times and begin it. Each senior had to write a short story as an English assignment. Miss Couch picked Gordon James' out of twenty-one stories turned in to her.

The third part, printed below, is entitled "Why?" by the author.

ANSWERED

Part II—Why?
 Her first impulse was to run to him, to get him to speak to her. Then, moving like a mechanical woman, she turned, closed the door of that "room of horror," and slowly started the car. She realized that she must get help. She drove blindly to a nearby farm where she could telephone—first calling the undertaker, then her husband and friend. Her mind was a blank; the sight of her boy with a bullet through his head had thrown a dark shroud over her mind through which she could not penetrate. She hardly knew how she reached the ranch again. She was afraid to go into the house until someone came. The old house belied the fact that a dark tragedy had taken place within its walls. It had a sunny aspect with its large windows where the snow white curtains hung tranquilly, waiting for a gust of wind to send them fluttering about in a vain effort to free themselves from the troublesome curtain rods. But to the woman whose son was lying on that kitchen floor, the house was a dark and forbidding symbol of his death.

The undertaker was the first to reach the heart-broken mother. She ran to him crying, "Why! Oh, why did he do it?"

He took the shuddering form in his arms and did not try to stop the tears from running down his own cheeks.

"Why are you crying?" she asked. "He isn't your son, he's mine! Oh, why did he do this to me! He couldn't have been thinking."

Mr. Brown and the friend arrived. The undertaker went to look at the body, leaving Mr. Brown to comfort his distracted wife. He with the friend's aid picked up the small particles of flesh and hair from the floor which he would need when embalming the body.

They carefully went through the house. In suicide cases the victim usually left a note; this was no exception. On the table under the lamp which Mrs. Brown had lighted the night before was a note. It had been there then, but she had not seen it. Her son had been dead while she was enjoying the lovely glow of sunset.

The note did not answer his mother's insistent "why." It merely said: "This seems the best way out. —Tom."

But why had he killed himself? This question tormented Mrs. Brown.
