Taking Examinations

Do you dread exams? Do your test grades make you shudder? If you can answer "yes" to the preceding questions, maybe you need to improve your technique for studying and taking examinations. Read the following self-check list and see how you rate.

Do I listen carefully to find out what is emphasized during each class period before the exam?

Do I take notes during class periods to save for study and review?

Do I ask questions during class if I don't understand something?

Do I do enough daily study so that I don't have to cram before the test?

Am I on time for the test? Do I have needed paper, pencil, pen, etc.?

 Am I calm and ready for the exam?
 When I receive the questions, do I look over the entire test to relieve my curiosity and to get an idea of how much time to give each part?
 Do I complete the easiest ones first and then go back to the more difficult questions instead of using a great deal of time over puzzling questions?
 Do I read directions carefully?
 Do I write plainly?
 Do I recheck my paper?
 Try some or all of the tips and maybe your next test grade will be one to be proud of!

Cheating Is Dishonest

Cheating is dishonest. It is in the category with stealing and lying. In fact, it partakes of both.
 The cheat deprives his classmates of fair evaluation of their honest work, thus steals from them. He implies a lie to his instructor in pretending that he is submitting his own work.
 It is strange that a person guilty of such things is not ashamed of his activities. On the contrary, he frequently boasts of them.
 It is even stranger that other students feel constrained to pretend that they approve of his behavior or at least are indifferent to it.
 Strangest of all is the fact that it is embarrassing to a student to decline to allow his neighbor to copy his work. If he does decline, he often finds himself an outcast.
 When doing the right thing is embarrassing or causes one to be shunned, society is sick.
 It is folly to pretend that we can have a great university or a great nation when dishonesty is accepted as a way of life.
 Anyone can see that individuals frequently flourish not just in spite of but because of dishonesty. But the society in which it is tolerated is a jungle.—Copied from West Texas State College.

Congratulations, Stage Band

The student body would like to offer its congratulations to the stage band for winning the Showmanship Award at the Brownwood Stage Band Festival for the third consecutive year.
 For a complete write-up of the activity, refer to the front page.

Senior Personality

This senior has blue eyes, brown hair, and a height of 5' 8". Football is his favorite sport. John Wayne and Elizabeth Taylor are his favorites at the movies. His favorite foods are steak and french fried potatoes. Listening to the radio and riding around are his favorite pastimes. "Don't Worry About Me" is his favorite song, and "Gunk! Gunk!" is his favorite expression.

 Is his name on the tip of your tongue? Well, I'll tell you that his name is Charlie Gidney. His easiest subject is V. A., his hardest is bookkeeping. He played football for three years. For three years he has been a member of FFA. Charlie's parents have influenced him most in life. "Somebody that doesn't know what he is talking about—Bryant Thompson"—was the answer he gave when asked his pet peeve. Ha! He is undecided about what he will do after graduation.
 Best of luck in whatever you decide to do, Charlie.

Crowell Loses to James Bowie

Well, this ends the basketball season for Crowell High School in 1960-61. This year Crowell won 17 out of 22 games to claim the bi-district championship. The Crowell Wildcats defeated Midlothian at Henrietta, but they were defeated by James Bowie, a consolidated school at Simms, when they played in the tournament at Denton last week end.
 Boys attending the tournament were Boob Carpenter, Wesley Cummings, Claude Sellers, Guy Todd, Edward Kaja, James Gaffard, Bill Smith and Junior Hopkins. Four of these boys, Carpenter, Cummings, Todd and Smith, will not be back next year. Ronnie Bradford could not attend because of illness.
 We, of course, wish we could have gone on to the finals—but we are proud of the good record our boys set.

Student Council Report

The Student Council meeting on February 27 was called to order by President Jackie Hickman. Wendell Callaway led the group in prayer.
 Plans were made concerning the intramural basketball games which will be held March 13 and 14. The committees were assigned to prepare for the contest, and the senior class was chosen to sponsor the concession stand.
 So as not to interfere with the daily school schedule, the games will be held at night from 7 to 9 p. m. There will be two games each night.
 In order to even the chances of winning, the first eight boys on the basketball team will not be allowed to play.
 The next council meeting will be held March 13 during the last half of the second period.

Library Suggestions

Life magazine is publishing books to give the American reader a clear and comprehensive picture of what life is like in a number of the greater countries of the world. Therefore, it is only fitting that the first volume should deal with Russia. The experience of two world wars has proved Russia to be outstanding. This book is to help us see into the heart of Russia—its schools, home life, work, entertainment, and social life.
 The second volume deals with France—its government, people, culture, scenery, entertainment and home life.
 Both books have excellent pictures accompanying each story. Try reading for information—you'll enjoy what you read!

The Final Assault

by Wendell Callaway

(Editor's note: The following short story was written by Wendell Callaway as a class assignment.)
 The cheers of the enthusiastic crowd brought me back to reality. Then all becoming quiet, I concentrated on the words of the speaker, "On behalf of the citizens of Washington, D. C., I, Mayor John Higgins, wish to present this award to Captain James Hillmore for his achievement in being the first to conquer mountain Catuya."
 As Captain Hillmore stepped to the microphone, my mind wandered back to that day—the day we had begun our final assault of Catuya, which, translated into English, means "Mountain of the Dead." The name of this mountain had not been given just to attract tourist trade as had most of the fearful-sounding names in that mountain chain. Seven men had lost their lives on the treacherous slopes of that unconquerable peak.
 All of us had seemed to sense that the vicious monsoons would soon strike, forcing us to give up the expedition. We knew that if we should be caught on the peak when the monsoons struck, we would become four more victims of Catuya.
 I was already awake when Captain Hillmore entered my tent calling in his British accent, "Let's roll out, Roy; today is the day!" Captain Hillmore, a natural leader, was the kind of man that all men look up to. Grim determination was etched into his features, and this determination had carried him to the tops of many previously unconquered peaks. However, this was not his first expedition on Catuya. Two previous expeditions had ended in failure and tragedy. His friends were among the victims of the mountain. After seven hard weeks of climbing, he again was within striking distance, and he wanted to conquer the mountain more than to do anything else.

 As for my twin brother and me, we were part of the expedition for one primary purpose: to find and to photograph the elusive snow creature of Catuya. Being identical twins had kept Captain Hillmore and Eli Mazutu, our guide, completely confused most of the time.
 Eli was a native of the little village located in the shadow of Catuya, a small speck in the vast Himalayan chain of mountains. Eli was short, but very strong, and he was an excellent guide. His English vocabulary was very limited, so he was usually silent.
 The night before as we had been sitting around the fire in our tent planning the details of the next day's climb, a weird howling noise had penetrated the eerie wind that seemed to haunt the mountain. At that Eli jumped with a start, and with his eyes wide open with fear, he muttered, "Yeti, yeti!" This was one word we all knew. It was the natives' name for the "snow creature."
 At the breaking of the silence, Captain Hillmore exclaimed, "You men don't actually believe in this, this 'snow creature,' do you?"
 "We wouldn't be here if we didn't, sir," I replied, speaking for Roy and me. There has to be some explanation for all the villagers who have mysteriously disappeared, and many reliable people claim to have seen the creature.
 "I believe that it is this blasted snow and wind playing tricks on their eyes and ears," said Captain Hillmore.
 "Tell us some more of your war stories about your experiences in the R. A. F.," urged Coy, changing the subject in order to avoid an argument.
 "Well, there was this battle," and the stories continued until late that night.
 The next morning after we had put on our clothing—tons of it—and had gotten our oxygen masks, we met to discuss the final details of our course. We then related the information to Eli by sign language. As we gathered our gear, the first flakes of a new snow storm began to fall. We knew that if we did not make it to the top that day, we would have to turn back, for the frequent snow storms were a sign that the winds would soon strike. Coy and I then would also have failed, for we had not even seen the snow creature.
 Captain Hillmore had given us our information. We were to scale the south face of the mountain, reach a momentary ledge, and then climb the last twenty feet on frozen, slippery rock at nearly

 As we moved out from camp, we could see only a few feet ahead as the snow became denser and denser. Then it happened! A sudden scream from up front warned us of sudden tragedy. Eli, who had been in the lead, had fallen into a snow covered crevice. Cautiously we edged to the opening and staring into its depths, we could see his mangled body, lying motionless. I gazed questioningly at Captain Hillmore. Would we go on or turn back? Then, Captain Hillmore motioned us onward.
 It was late afternoon when we reached the last rocky point which led to the top. We were running low on oxygen, and we were all nearly exhausted. If all of us went to the top, we might not have enough oxygen to return to camp. Thus, we decided to elect one man to go onward. Captain Hillmore was chosen by a two to one margin.
 After seeing Captain Hillmore begin his trudge up the treacherous climb, we waited for his return. Each minute seemed like an hour, and we began to be concerned for his safety. Then, suddenly a huge form appeared. At first, only a silhouette against the blanket of snow, it came closer and closer. It must have been eight feet tall, and it was covered with dark brown hair. Its face was amazingly like a man's. It was the "snow creature!" As we stared in frozen horror, the creature turned quickly as if it had heard something; then it disappeared suddenly. Had it been an illusion? Was the cold, thin air too much for us? Since we had failed to photograph the creature, we decided to let this remain a secret.
 Then, we sighted Captain Hillmore coming toward us triumphantly. He had made it!
 "I would like to recognize my two companions on my conquest, Coy and Roy Davis," were the last words of Captain Hillmore's speech as I was suddenly brought back to the present by the vigorous roar of the crowd. Then I thought, "Maybe some day man will solve the mystery of the 'snow creature' of Catuya!"

Fashions!

There are not many new fashions at this time of the year because we all know about the winter fashions, and it is still too early for the spring and summer fashions.
 One thing that is good for any time of the year and can be made from most any kind of material is the bishop jacket. This jacket is long and most often has slits up the sides. The bishop jacket may be worn with slim-jims, skirts, or shorts.

 Another sensational clothing for '61 is the Anyons from thirty years on has probably worn a before. For those who have seen them, culottes are half and half pedal pusher or maica shorts—depending on length you want them.
 These two fashions are great for 1961, especially spring.
