The happy, young couple will remain guests at the hotel a few days when they will start East. We wish them a pleasant journey through life.

Choose A Safe Ride During The Labor Day Weekend

DPS wants drivers and passengers to make the wise, and least expensive choice, of finding a sober ride to their destinations during the Labor Day weekend.

All available troopers will be on duty starting Friday, Sept. 4, through midnight, Monday, Sept. 7, looking for drunk drivers, speeders and seat belt violators.

"Drivers and their passengers should choose a safe ride to wherever they're going this weekend," said Assistant Director David Baker, who oversees the Texas Highway Patrol. "Calling a cab or sober friend for a ride is much cheaper than getting arrested for DWI and going to jail."

A DWI conviction stays on an offender's criminal and driving record forever. For the first offense, the law allows a maximum of six months in jail, a $2,000 fine and a one-year driver license suspension. A DWI conviction also carries a $1,000 surcharge for three years, in addition to any other fines or costs associated with the arrest.

DPS supports the "Drink. Drive. Go to Jail". campaign and is also a participant in Operation CARE- Combined Accident Reduction Effort- a nationwide effort by police agencies to reduce fatalities on major interstate highways during holiday weekends.

During Labor Day last year, DPS troopers arrested 623 people for driving while intoxicated and issued more than 10,000 speeding citations and 2,500 seat belt and child restraint tickets. In all, troopers wrote almost 20,000 tickets in an effort to make driving safer during the Labor Day holiday last year.

"Choose a sober driver this weekend," said Assistant Director Baker. "Otherwise, the Texas Highway Patrol will choose your ride for you."

American Life In Poetry

Column 232

BY TED KOOSER, U.S. POET LAUREATE, 2004-2006

I've built many wren houses since my wife and I moved to the country 25 years ago. It's a good thing to do in the winter. At one point I had so many extra that in the spring I set up at a local farmers' market and sold them for five dollars apiece. I say all this to assert that I am an authority at listening to the so small voices that Thomas R. Smith captures in this poem. Smith lives in Wisconsin.

Baby Wrens' Voices

I am a student of wrens.
When the mother bird returns to her brood, beak squirming with winged breakfast, a shrill clamor rises like jingling from tiny, high-pitched bells.
Who'd have guessed such a small house contained so many voices?
The sound they make is the pure sound of life's hunger. Who hangs our house in the world's branches, and listens
when we sing from our hunger?
Because I love best those songs that shake the house of the singer,
I am a student of wrens.

Mozart

I hear yon clarions note from curtained past
Who broke from shackled crib of yore
To be met as primitive face, madly shouting to gain thy place
Though mocking and lewd the projected forecast
Those private hurts ye bravely bore.

Your skillful inventions surmounted the blame
Though none would tamper nor erase
Or move to quiet troubled breast, though mans dull ear would soon attest
To the existence of such absorbing strains
Which mirrored fame yet left no trace.

Such anthems did surely call such bawdy head
To being by your shameful birth
Wearing thy souls sullen breath, with anticipation of death
Denying thirst with apologies instead
Of nudging the blindness of earth.

Graceful swan who from ugly duckling did spring
Ascended from such wounds compiled
Your battered horn sang sweetest note, whose lines appeared though angels wrote
The rustic notes which surge forth for King and Queen
'Til firma dubs thee reconciled.

We have enjoyed the poetry of Mr. Weldon Smith of Eastland, Texas, for some time. Here we are re-publishing two recent poems that were transcribed incorrectly when they first appeared. Take pleasure in this poet's works!

Sweet William

Sweet William was the blossom, that I found along the lane
Where fragrant flowers called as I walked by Never toiling, never spinning, never joining in the games
Of others toiling hard before they die.

I found you there Sweet William, while strolling along the road
And there you helped to brighten up my day
By lifting from my shoulders, such a hurtful
heavy load
And helping me to find a better way.

Your sweetness seems to com so naturally While lifting your bouquet from off the ground

Your purple flowers glow so beautifully
And help to spread your beauty all around.

I wish that I could capture, your beauty and spread it 'round
So that the world could share your point of view
And when the world should take a look, Sweet
Williams would abound
And lives so lost as mine could be renewed...
by helping all to do what all can do.

Surpassing The Self Through The Self

A close reading of Louise Bogan's early poem, "A Tale."

By Caitlin Kimball

Poetry Media Service

"That woman will be able to do anything," declared Robert Frost after reading Louise Bogan's "A Tale," the opening poem in her first book, Body of This Death. At the time of the book's publication in 1923, Bogan was just 26 but had already experienced marriage, motherhood, estrangement, and widowhood, as well as launched a career as an incisive critic and technically masterful lyric poet. Frost's assessment was high praise, but as a casual prediction it seems impossible to fulfill. When Bogan's definitive collected works, The Blue Estuaries, appeared in 1968, just two years before her death, the volume contained 105 poems—hardly a negligible output, but evidence that her periods of creative frustration far outnumbered those of productivity. She could "do" anything—and did a great deal—but she did most of it with that first volume and even, arguably, with that first poem.

Bogan's loyalty to conventional meters, rhyme schemes, and imagery may give a superficial impression of starchy high-mindedness set to music. In her first volume, you won't find a lot of imagistic razzle-dazzle or ornamentation. The poems are relentlessly austere, scattered with shards, echoes, withdrawing tides, and mowed-down fields. She mistrusted the lily-gliding and lush sighs of the Romantic and Victorian verse that had nourished her as an adolescent, and she was equally suspicious of what she saw as the high-strung and erotic expressions of fellow "lady poets" she otherwise admired. She kept a tight lid on the emotional occasions of her poetry. Her poetic personae are often found in aftermaths, playing out the brittle affections left after the sensuous assaults of passion. A poem, Bogan wrote in a 1923 issue of The New Republic, "must... be the mask, not the incredible face" and "can never be more than a veil dropped before a void." In her view, this isn't just a statement of poetic taste but a psychological necessity: the poem can't embody rage or love—that's already been done by the poet. "The poem is always a last resort," she insists. By the time of its composition, the intellect must be involved. She didn't want her art to aggrandize sensation, but to subdue and transform it. Her language of restraint belies a passionate ambition for "surpassing the self through the self," as she once described it.

Her "tale" is actually a short lyric framed as a fable-in-progress, rather than a recounting. As such, it feels both immediate and remote. We know the male protagonist not through his thoughts but through his actions: he is a symbolic figure rather than a habitable persona. His journey is rendered in short, small words that propel the mostly iambic rhythm. But Bogan's careful linguistic counterpoints and echoes balance and enrich this terse quality. Rhymes of sound are also rhymes of meaning: "break" and "make" are opposites; "together" (unity, consistency) plays against "weather" (change); "lock" and "clock" are containers; "waits" and "gates" both suggest measure and control. Such delicate, careful word choices particularize the protagonist's situation: he is not all youth, yet Bogan reveals little of his story's origins or effects. His quest is described almost casually:

He goes to see what suns can make
From soil more indurate and strange.

He is not fleeing, but he is also not heading off on a carefree adventure. "He goes to see" suggests both decisive action and passive curiosity. But this is not spring break. It is a breaking-off.

He cuts what holds his days together

And shuts him in, as lock on lock:
The arrowed vane announcing weather.

The tripping racket of a clock:
Seeking, I think, a light that waits

Still as a lamp upon a shelf,
A land with hills like rocky gates

Where no sea leaps upon itself.

The first three stanzas propose a disturbing paradox: Mutability is monotonous. Change—of an hour or an era—has a cumulative effect of stasis (or, as the saying goes, the more things change, the more they stay the same). In this "land of change" tides, weather, and the days themselves are oppressive, and made even more so by measurements. Bogan's balking youth wants out of this place where he is doomed to witness and mark patterns in chaos. He cannot hold change back, so he puts his hope in total escape. The otherwise omniscient narrator's arresting "I think" feels like a distancing technique, a way to hold the youth's distress at arm's length and remind us that this is, actually, a "tale." But the self-consciousness of the brief gesture betrays Bogan's investment in this crisis. Is this carefully compressed story one of her "last resorts"?

The narrator reaches the youth's stark conclusion for him: this paradox really has no resolution. Striving toward enlightenment lands you in a kind of hell.

But he will find that nothing dares

To be enduring, save where, south

Of hidden deserts, torn fire glares

On beauty with a rusted mouth,—

Where something dreadful and another

Look quietly upon each other.

The final passage is a travesty of the hardscape outside of time that the youth first envisioned: the sun-baked ground now splits open and threatens to swallow the soul that dares to venture so far. Bogan's inferno is actively sinister, with a face (glaring fire, rusted mouth) to mock our own. What "beauty" is being scorned? It may be the very idea of beauty, or is it the youth's energy and desire to throw off consciousness, the root of desire itself?

The concluding couplet, with its lilting polysyllabic words and feminine rhymes (another/other), is both pat and riddling. The words gesture toward the resolution often found in the final lines of a sonnet, but what (or who) are these dreadful "somethings"? The two spooky figures could evoke a standoff—eternity as a confrontation—or they could suggest conspirators, looming over the young man in silent judgment of his attempt to shirk his fate. The youth (and the reader) will be denied any consoling insight or even a concrete vision. Bogan has placed her carefully staged drama so close to the void, perhaps as close as she could get.

"I broke my life, to seek relief / From the flawed light of love and grief," declares Bogan's persona in "The Alchemist," another poem from her first volume. It is a more direct, intimate expression of the desire to surpass the self that she first approached in "A Tale." Those "flawed light[s]," the emotions and surface tensions that govern our worldly, subjective experience, are fragments of an ultimate, unknowable tension. If she could indeed break her life, surpass the self and be absorbed into the force that outlasts it, would the force be benign or malignant? Or both? Or... nothing?

If Bogan really did see a poem as a last resort, her task would place her, again and again, at this limit. The compulsion to make language both convey experience and transcend it, not knowing what waited on the other side, could provoke a poet or stop her in her tracks. Perhaps this first poem enacts Bogan's struggle to create all the poems that followed it.

The Idle American

Commentary by Don Newbury

Deck Walks and Talks...

Uncle Mort would have called it a "Kodak moment," had he been aboard Carnival's Miracle cruise ship on that beautiful July afternoon. I'll update his predictable observation by a few decades and label it a "digital moment." Cameras hung from straps around the necks of the gawkers, and photos snapped as we chugged toward the Atlantic were many.

My wife and I were among a crowd of folks, mostly New Yorkers, waving good-bye to the always breath-taking skyline of New York City.

It's a special time when cruisers hear the ship's lingering horn blast--the signal that vacations have begun. Its message that the luxurious vessel is about to put out to sea is a welcome sound to the ears of vacationers, most of whom have already been on board for two or three hours....

I thought of my 97-year-old Uncle Mort who lives down in the East Texas thicket. Upon my return, I knew he would want a "blow-by-blow" account of our leisurely cruise down to San Juan.

My lips "mouthed" what I knew would be his exact words: "I hope you took your Kodak." I would tell him that I "never leave home without it," fully expecting him to "mouth" my words back to me.

Cruises always hold unexpected adventures. At the rail nearby stood a man with eyes locked on the Empire State Building as it faded from sight. He appeared to be about my age, but, more surprisingly, looked like a "young Uncle Mort." A lively conversation followed....

"Sir, your name wouldn't happen to be 'Mort,' would it?" I asked. "You're a carbon copy of my uncle who lives down in the thicket of East Texas."

"Nope," he answered, "My name's Mortimer, and I live up in the Adirondacks of New York."

Asked if this was his first cruise vacation, he paused before offering a studied, laborious answer--the kind my uncle would give....

"Well, I told my wife a while back that we might consider remaining at home this summer for a 'staycation,'" he began.

His face told me that his words were misspent. She was "dead set" on cruising, her decision padded by "rock bottom prices." She added, "We'll even be able to take my mother."

Wilting, Mortimer decided that it was not a vacation or a "staycation." Confessing that he's "always liked his wife's mother-in-law heaps more than he likes his own," he confided that perhaps the trip could more accurately be called an "obli-cation."....

Later, my wife and I perused materials about the ports we'd visit, nightly entertainment we'd enjoy and sumptuous meals we'd consume. Then, we read about Camp Carnival's programs for youngsters from ages 2-11 to keep them happy throughout each day. (No wonder so many young parents smiled broadly at the prospect of turning their young charges over to the camp staff!)

Then, an initiative new to us grabbed our attention. At mid-week, there'd be an "On Deck for the Cure" walk, with proceeds directed to the Susan G. Komen Foundation, an organization dedicated to breast cancer research, education, screening and treatment.

My wife is a cancer survivor, having undergone a double mastectomy three months ago. We signed up immediately.

On the day of the walk, we wore our trademark pink-trimmed t-shirts. Brenda joined a couple of dozen others to lead the one-mile parade. The rest of us, perhaps 150, followed along. We all wound up at the pink lemonade stand. Our cruise director explained that the fund-raiser has been enthusiastically received, and that the deck walk on his ship raises $2,000-$2,500 on every cruise....

Turns out that five cruise lines now participate in the program, with such deck walks providing more than three million dollars to the Komen Foundation.

Cancer is never a cake walk, but ongoing deck walks help as notable strides are made against the disease each year.

We smile at the thought of this project being so much an "American thing," voluntarily and enthusiastically supported by the masses. And, from the standpoint of folks who love to cruise, it's pleasant to think of upcoming glorious meals that are next on the agenda. We can put away the groceries with a lessened sense of guilt if we walk first. I thought also of the "Uncle Mort look-alike," and how unexpected grand adventures occur every time we cruise....

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. THE RANGER STORY, a not-so-brief retelling of the beginning of the fabulous 1917 oil well blow-in that launched the equally famous Ranger Texas oil boom, with photos and detailed information of "how it was" back in those unbelievable times. The village became a thriving metropolis overnight and hotel beds were rented by the hour and teams of oxen pulled vehicles through the non-existent mudflat streets. PAINTING FOR FREEDOM, the story of a Texas Artist, by H.V. and Gaynell O'Brien, tells the complete story of talented artist Anna Laurie Harle's efforts to secure the release of her son Dr. Charles Harle from a Mexican prison where he had been convicted of an insurance scheme fraud. Through Mrs. Harle's many efforts including painting beautiful oil on tapestry paintings and selling through out the Southwest during Oil Boom days, she was able to contact and provide funds which eventually got to infamous Mexican bandit (or hero) Poncho Villa, who eventually was instrumental in helping secure Dr. Harle's release. It reads like fiction, but all is true including the detailed documents from the trials, court records and correspondence that involved high government officials on both sides of the border. Mary Ann Jones

CROSS PLAINS- Mary Ann Jones, 72, of Cross Plains, died Friday, August 28, 2009 at an Abilene hospital.

Memorial services were held at 2 p.m. Sunday, August 30, 2009 at the First Baptist Church in Cross Plains with Rev. Ronnie White and Rev. Kerry Mann officiating, under the direction of Bailey-Howard Funeral Home of Clyde.

Mrs. Jones was born January 7, 1937, in Topeka, Kansas, to Lawrence Everett and Mary Maxine (Losh) Mathey. She graduated from Berryton High School in Berryton, Kansas. She moved to Cross Plains from Florence, Texas in 2003, and remarried George Richard Jones on January 16, 2007, in Cross Plains. She was a member of the First Baptist Church in Cross Plains.

After moving to Texas in 1974, Mary worked as an administrative assistant for Valley Faucet and Delta Solvents and Chemical. She then worked full time helping her husband run their business, WestX Dental. After selling their business and retiring, Mary's love for cooking led her to open her restaurant, Mary's Place, in Brownwood. She then cooked for Citizens National Bank in Brownwood, and later for the Cross Plains Senior Citizens Center. Mary's biggest enjoyment was cooking for family and friends. Two of her specialties, coconut cream pie and homemade egg noodles and chicken will be greatly missed.

Survivors are her husband, George, Richard Jones of Rising Star; four children, Albert R. Petrusky and wife Rebecca of Ponder, Stan A. Petrusky and wife Glenda of Clyde, Leisa R. Petrusky of Mesquite, and Steven W. Jones and wife Lauri of Ponder; five sisters, Margaret Ann Blackwell of Plattsmouth, Nebraska, Sarah Lou Salyer of Dinuba, California, Venita Marks of Phoenix, Arizona, Lorene Sandry of Davenport, Iowa, and Marsha Sue Gager of Prairie Grove, Arkansas; one brother, Galen Matney of Big Fork, Montana; 14 grandchildren; and 3 great-grandchildren.

Sweet Relief For Sore Throats

NAPS- Anyone who has suffered with a sore throat during cold and flu season might find a honey-based organic throat drop a sweet idea.

According to the World Health Organization, tens of millions of people contract influenza every winter, and even more catch the common cold.

Fortunately, a throat drop does not have to taste awful to be effective. Organic honey drops, such as Bee M.D., taste sweet and smooth like the honey from which they are created without the harsh medicinal taste of other name-brand drops. Made without artificial ingredients or preservatives, it comes in two varieties: Natural Honey and Honey Lemon.

Not only are the drops healthy for families, but the company that makes them is friendly to honey's creators, the bees, and to the environment. Bees play a vital role, acting as pollinators for flowers, trees, fruits and crops. With every purchase, the company donates money to protecting endangered bees.
