Rain Helps Farmers, Ranchers

PLENTY OF RAIN — The North Fork of the Double Mountain Fork of the Brazos River, east of Post, was running bank to bank Monday morning following the rains here. Gentle rains have fallen here since last Thursday and hopefully will continue throughout the week.

Chamber of Commerce Hosts July 4th

Big Day in the Park Planned

Plans for the annual Post July 4 celebration are in the final stages, according to Post Chamber of Commerce project chairman Mike Barber.

"We're planning a real old-fashioned Fourth of July event," Barber emphasizes,

"complete with the popular barbeque supper with Bob West and crew again cooking the beef in the pits at the park."

In addition to the annual fireworks display after dark, the July 4th celebration will feature booths from these organizations:

EMT - Coke wagon; Post Band Boosters - cold drinks, sno cones; Post Dispatch - old photos free; Church of God of Prophecy;

Assembly of God - food; Las Guadaluponas (Holy Cross Church); Holy Cross Youth; PHS Junior Class - bingo;

Post Booster Club - dunking booth and washer pitch; Post Rotary Club - popcorn, cold drinks, balloons and the Post Art Guild.

This year a cabrito cookoff is planned across the street from the park.

Musical entertainment will also be provided during the day.

The Way I See It...

It was nice to be able to take a week off and visit family and such.

The vacation we took included a family reunion with all of its warmth and feeling of security that families give each other.

This particular reunion is held in what used to be the First Presbyterian Church of Ladonia, Tex.

Now it is the Heritage Hall, where community groups meet regularly and many families hold their reunions.

It is nestled in the Northeast Texas area north of Greenville and south of Paris . . . where the land is green, wheat fields glow in the breeze and cattle graze on the lush grasses.

Humidity is high, temperatures in the 90s...and life is slow and easy.

The new editor of the Ladonia News says, "we watch the grass grow" for entertainment.

Which is fine for folks who are ready to slow down.

But for me, I'll take this fast-paced life in West Texas . . . where the wind blows dust at times and humidity is low and the grass is seldom lush.

There is something about the sparseness of the countryside in West Texas that draws a person closer to a neighbor.

I feel a sense of pioneering in this part of the country that I do not feel in the east...and that includes the people and towns I visited recently in North Louisiana, Southeastern Oklahoma and Southwestern Arkansas.

There is vitality there...but it is easy vitality...

Family members in Eastern Oklahoma were concerned about a drought . . . it hadn't rained in more than a week.

The moisture literally hangs in the air...the green stuff on the ground is not all grass...much of it is mold.

The big paper companies are destroying the massive forested hills with "clear-cutting" and the stench of the paper mills is not all that pleasant either.

But there is activity...it is just a little more "laidback" and a little easier to survive.

It's a different breed of folks who struggle for a livelihood out here in the West.

I choose to stake my future with the pioneers out West.

We may not have much rain . . .but if it does rain more than once a month... we celebrate.

Leaving that green and wet country, heading West through Oklahoma and into the Texas Red River country down the caprock and into Post I began to understand the folks who left that eastern country to settle here.

The openness is more than on the surface...it is in the very lives of the people.

It was great to get away for a few days...but it was even more fun to come home.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I take serious objection to your statement in your "The Way I See It" column of last week.

You make the remark that we must import an experienced, qualified city manager to "build a reputation and to grow with Post." Are you stating that not one single person already living in our city could possibly be qualified to undertake this responsibility. You do not sound as though you have the "faith" in our local citizens that you so readily ask to "bite the bullet."

Mrs. King was not an "experienced or trained city manager", however her education and knowledge in dealing with people and financial matters served her in good stead, and no one is denying that she has done a fine job. However, I believe there are many people in our city and county who are equally qualified in these same areas. Possibly with so many people unemployed in our area there are more qualified people here than ever before.

You and your newspaper are continually asking people to shop at home and then you turn around and contradict your own statement by asking the entire town to bring in an outsider who supposedly is better able to solve OUR problems than we are ourselves.

I have no personal preference as to who secures the job but I feel that the local applicants should be given priority consideration before we lose these valuable citizens to other areas who will appreciate them.

You also continually ask us to "climb from the depressed economics of the past few months." How do you propose we do this? Spending all the money in our city treasury to improve our town will not help one iota in putting food on the table of our local unemployed citizens. Let us be prepared to meet any specifications an incoming new industry would have when they select our area. However, let's not get ahead of ourselves by making too many improvements when we are not financially in a position to do so. Because quite frankly at this time we have too many people who simply can not afford a tax rate increase when they do not have a job market to look forward to.

Thank you for letting me state my opinions.

Thanks,
Connie Jones

Publisher's Note:

We appreciate your comments and agree that there might be a qualified candidate for city manager now living in Post.

The thrust of my comments was designed to encourage a continuation of the professional approach to the administration of city affairs which Mrs. King has established.

Your comments about "Putting food on the table" is exactly what I have in mind for our city.

Potential industries look at cities with forward thinking and looking administration and appearance.

And, if our city administration is not in the business of attracting industries, your fear of no food on the table for unemployed is justified.

I hope that seeking industries for Post is a number one priority for everyone... and our new city manager should be selected with this in mind.

As for your suggestion of a tax increase, I have no idea where that came from...the current city budget is strong enough to handle future needs without any tax increases and I have heard no talk or plans for new taxes.

In fact, the ability of our out-going city manager to secure federal and state grants for improvements is one more reason we can have improvements in our quality of life without new taxes.

Keep pushing for a better Post.

Dear Editor

The Post Art Guild Inc., has undertaken a large project.

We are in the process of restoring the old Algerita Hotel on Main Street into an Art Gallery and Studio and home for all the creative arts and crafts.

We will include the whole community and area in these plans for the use of this building by inviting everyone to take advantage of the classes and workshops that we will eventually schedule. We plan to be offering special projects aimed toward our youth and senior citizens.

Just to plan for a gallery and these activities is an awesome task but we have committed ourselves to preserving and occupying this historic building in downtown Post. Our finances will allow us to only partially complete one room at the present time.

We will be having various money raising activities and it occurred to us that lots of folks might like to help us put this building to good use. To help us plan for the future by preserving the past you will find a coupon in the next issue of The Post Dispatch to send in donations with or just give something to one of our Art Guild members. This will be something that the entire city and area will be proud of some day and each of you can be a part of it.

Thank you

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Wilson, Roaring Springs and Mrs. Adell Gannon, Post.

An archway of ivory tapers, flanked by spiral candelabras entwined with honeysuckle and gypsophelia, centered the nuptial area. On either side of the candle trees were baskets of larkspur, gypsophelia and honeysuckle.

The bride's bouquet and wedding invitation adorned with quilling by Miss Freda Keahy, centered the table.

The groom's table was covered with a lavender

A rehearsal dinner was hosted for the wedding party by Mrs. Adell Gannon Friday evening, May 25, at 8 p.m. in the Fellowship Hall of the First Baptist Church.

Tables arranged in a square were covered with white tablecloths and decorated with floral nosegays and lavender streamers. The head table held a candelabra surrounded by silk flowers in spring colors.

The menu consisted of baked ham, potato salad, red beans, tossed salad, fruit salads, French bread, watermelon and tea. Mrs. Thelma Bass assisted in the serving.

Barron-Hopper Vows Read

Glyna Joy Barron and Lee Edward Hopper were united in marriage Saturday, June 16 at 7:30 p. m. in a candlelight ceremony at Belaire Baptist Church in Bossier City, Louisiana.

Glyna is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glynn Barron of Bossier City, La., and the granddaughter of Mrs. Willie Mason of Post. Lee is the son of Mrs. Eldora Hopper of El Monte, Ca., and the grandson of Mrs. Ethel Wood of Davenport, Iowa.

The bride wore a gown fashioned of snow white satin, cloudy and chantilly lace and intricate appliques of silk venise lace. Defining the classic Queen Anne neckline was silk venise lace dotted with dainty seed pearls and iridescent sequins. More silk venise motifs accented with fitted bodice of ivory lace and the sheer lace Juliet sleeves.

Appliques of silk venise decorated the upper portion of the A-line cluny lace skirt. Rich bridal satin formed the lower half of the skirt and swept around to form the semi-cathedral length train. Gracing the hemline was a band of chantilly lace. Completing the bridal ensemble was a two-tier circular veil sprinkled with flower shaped embroidered appliques and tiny iridescent stones. A tiara of embroidered organza accented with pearls and iridescents held the fingertip length veiling in place. The bridal bouquet was a cascade of white orchids, baby's breath and English ivy. The bouquet was draped with strings of pearls and white satin lace.

The bride carried her mother's Bible; maternal grandmother's, Mrs. Willie Mason's ruby engagement ring and maternal great-grandmother's, the late Mrs. J. F. Mason, white handkerchief. The bride wore a garter of blue satin, white lace and seed pearls made by her maternal grandmother. She wore pearl earrings belonging to her aunt, Mrs. Jackie Hutton and a necklace of three single pearls. Her father gave her a penny in the year of her birth to wear in her shoe.

Michele Mason, cousin of the bride, served as maid of honor. She wore a suede rose dress with front and back yokes, stand up collar and peplum waist of scalloped lace and satin ribbon. The V-neck insert was of point d'esprit lace. She carried a cascade of mauve and burgundy flowers with pink and yellow daisies, blue bachelor buttons and baby's breath.

Bridesmaids were Mrs.

MRS. LEE EDWARD HOPPER

back collar and bow tie.

Groomsmen were Rhon Barron, brother of the bride, Charlie Freeman and Fred Smith both of Shreveport.

The altar was decorated with a large arch with two small arches extending from either side. The arch was decorated with fresh English ivy. A seven candle brass candleabra stood on either side of the arch. Large ferns placed on white pedestals stood beneath the candleabras.

"This Is Love" and "The Lord's Prayer" were sung by Mrs. Joy Rowe of Bossier City, La., while the couple lit the unity candle, Michele Mason sang "Wither Thou Goest."

Glaucoma: Could You Be A Victim?

Glaucoma: It's been called the sneak thief of sight. Of the two million Americans who now have the disease—the nation's leading cause of irreversible blindness—half do not know they have it. There is, however, good news: glaucoma can now be detected through a quick and painless test. When it's caught in time, treatment can prevent vision loss.

The reason most people don't know they have glaucoma unless a doctor tells them is that common glaucoma has no symptoms until it's pretty far advanced. Warning signs include loss of peripheral vision, difficulty in adjusting the eyes to dark rooms, blurred or foggy vision or the appearance of halos around lights.

In glaucoma, the fluid circulating through the front portion of the eye does not drain properly. It backs up, causing pressure that eventually damages the retina—and destroys sight.

The best defense against glaucoma, experts say, is an eye examination at least once every two years, especially for people over 35.

First Christian Church
 Two centuries have passed since the death of the French philosopher Voltaire. He championed the humanistic cause in a proud, self-sufficient manner. God was to him a distant and impersonal being with no real concern in the affairs of man. He made the bold prediction that within a century the Bible and Christianity would disappear.

Voltaire underestimated the power of the Word of God. We also do much the same in our own way when we opt for the wisdom of the world before that of God.

Some sixty translations of at least portions of the Bible existed at the time of Voltaire's death in 1778. But protestant missions were just beginning. Bible translation was increasing as a tool of evangelism. Today nearly 1800 language groups have at least one complete book of scripture. And the bulk of that work has been in the last half century.

No other book has nor will exert such a great influence upon the world. The Bible, though ancient, is as fresh as today. It has surpassed all tests of time. Critics of the Word have been disproven if not silenced.

While the book is not the object of our worship, it is unique among all books. It is God-given. God Himself has given to man His Word. Sixty-six books written by about 40 different authors over a period of 1500 years give us our Bible. Its freedom from error or contradiction attests to its inspiration by God.

SKATING FOR CANCER — Jeff and Brad Ferguson, left and right, were snapped as they topped the Caprock last Thursday on their roller skates. The brothers left California May 18 on a cross country skate-a-thon which they hope will end in New York August 17. The two were caught in a thunderstorm on top of the cap Thursday afternoon and took time out to tell why they were skating. The boys' mother died last year from cancer and they, with their father, Jim, have started the LYFe Foundation which distributes information concerning cancer. The boys' father follows close behind the two on a motorcycle. Jeff is an instructor at Mesa Community College in Mesa, Arizona, where Brad is a student.

Your home freezer can be a real time-saver for today's busy lifestyle. Besides storing meats, fruits and vegetables, you can use your freezer for make-ahead items such as casseroles, main dishes, food for entertaining, snacks or even entire meals packaged in individual portions.

A frozen food item will only be as good as the original product, so choose vegetables, fruits and meats of good quality. Be sure to follow recommended procedures for preparing foods for freezing, such as blanching fresh vegetables.

Also take the following precautions: - Check the temperature of your freezer with a freezer thermometer to be sure it is 0 degrees F or below.

Hiring Summer Youth

By: R. S. 'Syd' Conner County Extension Agent Agriculture Help A Youth and Earn Tax Credit

A business that hires a qualified youth this summer can earn tax credit as well as help the youth earn some income. Calendar-year taxpayers may claim a tax credit of their 1984 federal income tax return for 85 percent of the first $3,000 in wages paid to qualifying youth employees for any 90-day period between May 1 and September 15.

This opportunity for helping youth and helping your business is the 'Qualified Summer Youth Employee' provision of the Tax Equity and Responsibility Act of 1982.

To qualify for the tax credit, the youth employee must: - Perform services during May 1 and September 15. - Be age 16 or 17 when hired. - Be a member of an economically disadvantaged family. - Not have previously worked for the employer.

A designated local agency, the Texas Employment Commission (TEC), must certify the youth's age and family economic status before the youth begins work. The employer will keep the approved certificate on file as a basis for completing IRS Form 5884, the Jobs Credit Form.

To be classed as a member of an 'economically disadvantaged family', the TEC will determine whether the youth's family annual income, based on the six months before the month of the hiring date, is 70 percent or less of the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower living standard.

Assuming an hourly wage of $4 and with the first $3,000 of wages qualifying for tax credit, the business would obtain 750 hours of labor from a qualifying youth. From the employer's tax benefit standpoint, the $4 hourly wage provides an income tax credit of $3.40, with the remaining wage of 60 cents deductible as a labor expense on Schedule C or Schedule F. The business cannot claim the entire $4 as labor expense but only the difference between the $4 and the $3.50 tax credit.

If a business cannot use all of the jobs credit in 1984, the excess can be carried back three years and forward 15 years, up to the tax liability limit for each year. For more information on the Summer Youth Employee program and the accompanying tax credit, or advice on how to list job openings and obtain referrals of qualified vouchered youth, call the local Employment Commission Office. Refer to IRS Publication 906 and Form 5884, or contact your tax advisor for additional details regarding the jobs credit provisions.

Wind Damages Crop Land

Wind damaged a record breaching 5.7 million acres of land in Texas from November through May.

Billy C. Griffin, state conservationist for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Soil Conservation Service, said wind damaged more than three times as much land this year than during the 1982-83 blow season when 1.8 million acres were damaged.

'The 5.7 million acres damaged breaks the record for the 30 years we have been keeping wind erosion records,' Griffin said. 'Previous highs were 2.77 million acres in 1970-71, 2.72 million in 1955-56, and 2 million in 1964-65 and 1973-74.'

No records are available for land damaged during the Dust Bowl days of the 1930's.

Some 4.5 million acres of cropland and one million acres of rangeland were damaged. About 7 million acres are in condition to blow and much of this land could be damaged if wind velocities increase during the next few weeks.

Counties reporting the most cropland damaged were Gaines, 595,000; Dawson, 415,000; and Terry, 300,000.

The major contributing factors to wind erosion were lack of moisture and high winds, Griffin said. Lack of protective cover from last year's crop residues was also a factor.

Griffin said, however, cropland protected with cover from conservation tillage farming systems or wind strips had little or no damage despite the drought and high winds.

SCS rates land as damaged if enough soil has been removed or deposited to subject the land to further erosion hazard or to impair its productive capacity. A bi-monthly report is compiled from 147 counties in Texas from November through May.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Friend:

Sunday, July 22, 1984, has been proclaimed as GAR-LYNN DAY at Post, Texas, and we will celebrate in the Community Center.

You will probably hear James and Artie leading the official "GAR-LYNN BASKET BALL CHEER LEADERS" yell!

Ralph will, more than likely, show the many blue ribbons he won as an outstanding athlete.

Harold and Paul want to continue the argument of who ran faster from home to school.

J. C. and Bishop will deny, again, any knowledge of reasons for the "pungent" odor coming from the heating stove.

The "Howard Technique of Bell Ringing" will be demonstrated by Curtis.

Howard is expected to come from Montana to show slides on "The Building of a Model 'T' Ford".

Enid will sing her famous version of "Walking a mile and a half to hear A.V. Price lecture".

Katherine, Vynomma, Renell and Oleta have requested sufficient time to model the bathing suits they wore in the "Miss Gar-Lynn Beauty Contest".

Preston has preserved the "Ruler Scars" and, if prompted, will give a brief history of each scar.

About a dozen of us will entertain you, at length, on the subject of "April Fools Day and the Hollar Treatment".

W.C. and Lillie Bell, Vada and Gene, Dub and Dorothy, Consie and L.G., Otis and Cornelia, Charles and Desie, Cecil and Marvel and Roy and Susie may debate the pros and cons of "Marrying a Gar-Lynn-ite."

Tom and Hal will offer "A look at education as it was 70 years ago".

MANY, MANY MORE IDEAS FOR ENTERTAINMENT ARE BEING CONFIRMED DAILY.

DON'T MISS IT!!!

PUC approves increase

The Public Utility Commission of Texas has approved a slight increase in charges for intrastate long-distance calls within the regional calling areas called local access and transports areas (LATA) established by the federal judge overseeing the divestiture of AT&T and the Bell operating companies.

The new charges, effective June 1, do not apply to intrastate calls made between the regional calling areas which are carried by the long-distance carriers rather than the local telephone companies.

The new rates apply to customers of all local telephone companies, including General Telephone, since the local companies are joint providers of long-distance service within each of the regional calling areas.

Hi, We're all so happy that it has been raining. It is sure been nice but were all about to get water logged now.

It's hard to believe that the 13th of this month we have been open for 24 years. A lot of things have changed since we opened our doors, but we have to go forward with time.

We would like to thank Martha Compton for the delicious cake that she made and brought to us. We sure enjoyed it. We would also like to thank Juanita Dean for the apricots that she brought to us. The cobbler that Anna Mason made for us out of them was delicious. Maude Dobbs also made us a cake we are all enjoying the delicious cakes and want to thank everyone for them.

We have a new resident with us, she is Agnes Odom. We would like to welcome her and hope that she enjoys living with us.

Visitors this week were Mary Goodwin, Ruth Mathis, Maude Dobbs, Charelene Nelson, Matt and Francis Matthews, Martha Compton, Chana and Karen Byrns, Inez Ritchie, Mary Roberts, Maria Vasquez, Annie V. Gilbert, Arthur Pettet, Charlie and Myra Cooper, Ozelle and George Walters from Calif. Lorrye Ledbetter, Mack and Lola Ledbetter, and Juanita Dean.

Our thought for the week... When we keep our mind on Christ, we can be at peace. See ya next week...

Welcome to Post Mr. and Mrs. Randy Willis and daughter. Hope you like it here and we're looking for great things from the Black and Gold Band.

Glad to see Marj Compton is back home after a stint in the hospital.

You realize the summer olympics are coming up the latter part of July. Well now there's some interest connected with Post folk to keep you watching.

Energas man, Willie Johnsons' sister, Merry, will be a participant in the track and field events. Seems she qualified in the 400, so that's something to keep your eye on.

Also a big welcome to Rev. Wayne Norman and wife Becky to town and also their children, Laura and Angela. They come to us from Quitaque and hope they enjoy the friendliness of Post.

And then I'm sorry that Jack King doesn't get to carry out his threat of the Petro Appreciation Day. If we could have only come up with 200 more people.

Actress loves role

HONOLULU (AP) — Early on, actress Gillian Dobb inquired about Agatha Chumley. "Is Agatha a spinster? Is she a wealthy widow?"

The director replied, "I just want you to look at Mr. Hillerman as if you were a teenager looking at Tom Selleck."

Agatha Chumley, as it happens, is the newest continuing character on TV's "Magnum P.I." and Ms. Dobb is playing her. Agatha is a dash of salt in the show — a somewhat crusty British woman obviously aflutter over Jonathan Higgins, the also somewhat crusty British gentleman who often finds Magnum the bane of his existence.

For Ms. Dobb, the whole business is an actress-style Cinderella story. For the last 10 years, she's been in Honolulu, juggling a job as a legal secretary by day and sometimes acting at night, mostly at the Honolulu Community Theater and with the Hawaii Performing Arts Company.

'Marrying governor' kept busy

AGANA, Guam (AP) — He marries people because he feels it's a part of his social contract with the voters. He does it on weekdays, weekends, at the beach, in the park, at his official residence and in the governor's office.

He doesn't accept money for it, though some try to give it to him, and though he flubbed the first one, he's been improving his delivery ever since.

Ricardo J. Bordallo, the $45,000-a-year chief executive of America's most remote territory, marries his constituents "because they think it's something special to be married by the governor of Guam," said Cathy Sablan Gault, a Bordallo aide who handles the marriage arrangements.

He has been averaging one ceremony a week this year, and performed about 30 marriages last year, the first year of his four-year second term as governor of Guam, an American island territory important to the United States as a defense and communications center 1,500 miles east of the Philippines.

The first marriage he performed after taking office last year was a hurried affair in the governor's office, Ms. Gault said.

At the end, the girl was left holding the groom's ring — the staff had prepared a one-ring ceremony. Bordallo tried to smooth it over, ad libbing, and had the girl place the ring on the groom's finger after the ceremony.

Bordallo's wife, Madeleine, a statesider and stickler for protocol, had the staff develop a new five-page ceremony which can handle one-or-two-ring ceremonies, any number of witnesses, and can be performed in almost any locale.

Bordallo's marriage service started when he was asked by friends and relatives to officiate at weddings in his first administration, 1975-1978.

Now the practice has branched out and the list of those who can claim to be married by the governor of Guam includes U.S. sailors and American civilians working on Guam, as well as Chamorros, descendants of the original inhabitants of the island, which now has 120,000 people.

Most of those he marries remain friends of the governor. In addition to the governor's office, the ceremonies are held at the palatial Government House, the chief executive's official residence on San Ramon Hill overlooking Agana, the capital of the island. He has also married people at some of the swank Japanese tourist hotels on Tumon Bay, Guam's young but steadily growing equivalent of Hawaii's Waikiki Beach.

One of these was the site for the most challenging — a double wedding — in which the governor had each set of couples say their vows simultaneously. That was a little long and exhausting, and Bordallo asked his staff to avoid double ceremonies.

Time stands still in old cafe

LANTANA, Fla. (AP) — A step inside Ye Tower Restaurant on U.S. 1 here is a nostalgic journey into the past — not because someone tried to duplicate a local “beanery” of the 1920s, but because that’s the way Paul Dunbar has operated the place all these years.

Some things have changed since 1925 when this 82-year-old Gloversville, N.Y., native opened the diner’s doors to serve its first meals. Four small tables have joined the 11 stools at the L-shaped counter; the French doors that automobiles plowed through on three occasions are gone; and an 85-foot frame tower that stood in front of this plain single-story stucco building is missing.

“The 1928 hurricane did that,” recalls Dunbar. “The storm just laid the tower right down the side of the road.”

It was that tower that gave the place its name. It was built by a development company so potential customers could view nearby subdivisions. A small bell tower now adorns the front roof.

“I won’t tell you how many years I’ve been eating here because then you’ll know how old I am,” said Ruth Brock as she ordered lunch from waitress Ann Bumiller, “but the food is good or I wouldn’t be here.”

The menu hasn’t changed much over the years and neither has the quality of food that’s kept customers coming back for decades. One of the more popular items is the “hot bar-b-cue sandwich” — pork, beef or ham — for $1.50.

“I make four kinds of cream pies from scratch,” Dunbar explains proudly. They go for 75 cents a hunk and there’s rarely any left over for the following day.

There’s nothing fancy about Ye Tower. The walls are painted blue-green and the menu hung on the wall is one of those old ones Coca Cola provided with a set of small letters and numbers to arrange on a slotted black felt background.

A small plaque with the words “Since 1925” hanging by the soda fountain is the local Chamber of Commerce’s way of acknowledging Ye Tower is the town’s oldest business in continuous operation.

And from the soda fountain comes Dunbar’s

“piece de resistance” — rich, creamy malted milks of a bygone era.

“I use real milk,” he says, pouring one into an antique fountain glass.

Without video games, recorded music or other accouterments, Dunbar’s eating place attracts the old as well as the young.

Child advocate likes his work

CLEVELAND (AP) — Nearly 10 years ago, James J. Lardie walked away from a 20-year career in marketing and sales and a steady income to try to fulfill one of his strongest beliefs — the right of every child to have a family.

He realized his volunteer efforts over the previous six years to improve the plight of homeless children weren't enough. He would have to become a full-time child advocate if he was ever to see any of his goals achieved.

So with just a telephone and a typewriter stand, the native Clevelander began sowing the seeds of what would evolve into the Institute for Child Advocacy, a privately funded activist group concerned with the welfare of children.

It was their own experience with the adoption process that drew Lardie and his wife, Diane Davis, into the advocacy movement. After the birth of their daughter, Maureen, now 23 and a Peace Corp volunteer in Kenya, the couple considered expanding their family through adoption.

One adoption led to another and the Lardies, who are white, soon had five adopted children, including three interracial girls and a black boy. The family lives in suburban Shaker Heights.

"We didn't set out to adopt interracially," said Lardie. "We really wanted to respond to children who needed families. That was really our orientation."

Lardie said his work as executive director of the institute was guided by the same concerns.

"It's really just considering the alternatives for children," he said. "It has little to do with race or condition. It's a belief that every child should have a right to a loving, nurturing family."

Lardie says he initially shared what are still common myths about adoption — that people who want children stand in line to get "white, healthy infant geniuses."

"The truth of the matter is that the majority of children who need families are older, have some handicapping conditions ... and are minorities," Lardie said.

"What we have are ships passing in the night. We have a large number of white families without children wanting to adopt a relatively young, healthy white child, and children who are older and handicapped, often part of a sibling group, in large numbers, meaning over 100,000."

Consequently, most of these children grow up in foster care or institutions, Lardie said. Excluding those placed temporarily in foster care because of a family emergency, the average stay in foster care is five years, he said.

"The bottom line for any of us is to feel good about yourself. It's very difficult to do that if you're moved from place to place," said Lardie.

While seeking children to adopt, Lardie said he and his wife were disturbed by labels attached to some of the homeless children, some of whom were described as "unadoptable" because of physical, mental or emotional handicaps.

"Why would anyone decide that a child would not have a family, a place and some people to call their own?" Lardie said.

That issue brought the Lardies in contact with a few other local families in 1969. Together they formed "Adopt a Child Today," which Lardie described as a citizen movement that "told stories about children who were waiting for families."

Within a short time, ACT groups popped up in more than 20 communities around Ohio and began focusing attention on state laws affecting homeless children.

Lardie said it was while he was seeking passage of a particularly significant piece of legislation that he had considered a career change.

"I just began to grow more and more angry about the lack of accountability for the kids, personally to the point where the adoption movement wasn't enough and the volunteer system wasn't enough," said Lardie of his decision to quit his job in 1974. The institute is supported by foundations and donations.

CITATION BY NORGE

Man trades politics for tropics

HONOLULU (AP) — At first glance, Fletcher Knebel's living room seems conventionally decorated in what designers call "tropical contemporary." But could that be a body behind the sofa? It at least is a pair of female legs in sheer black hose with a red garter and very high-heeled sandals, sprawled on the carpet.

"You like it?" Knebel inquires. "No, it's not conceptual art, it's just the bottom half of a mannequin that I put there. It's supposed to make you think of foul play. Life is so tame, and it adds a little excitement."

Knebel moved to Hawaii last summer, partly to get away from the East Coast glitz and partly for the weather, and lives in a house at the back of Hahaione Valley in suburban Hawaii Kai. For a best-selling author, that's pretty tame.

Twenty-two years ago,

Knebel and co-author Charles W. Bailey II wrote "Seven Days in May," one of the first in a long procession of contemporary political novels written by a variety of authors about life in Washington, D.C., and skulduggery in high places. "Allen Drury's 'Advise and Consent' was the first," Knebel said. "We were soon after, and dozens of others have been written since."

"Now the participants are writing. (John Ehrlichman has written three, and I think they're very good. (William) Buckley is in the spy-novel business and Margaret Truman has written a couple of mysteries."

"My publishers wanted me to stay with the Washington theme — they get a good thing going, and they won't quit. But I can't write about another president, another Capitol novel. My readership has fallen off as a result."

Since 1965, beginning with "Night of Camp David," Knebel has been writing alone. "Chuck and I had a harmonious relationship because neither of us knew anything about fiction writing so neither of us could afford to become a prima donna with the other. But a collaboration only works for so long."

"Our first book, 'No High Grounds,' was non-fiction and we just split it in half. For the fiction, I wrote the first draft and Chuck, who enjoys the finesse of writing, finished it. We remain good friends — he became editor of the Minneapolis Tribune and then quit last year to freelance."

Knebel was a newsman before he became an author, starting with the Coatesville, Pa., Record in 1934, the year he graduated from Miami University of Ohio. In 1937 he moved to Washington as correspondent for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and later for Look magazine, the Des Moines Register and the Minneapolis Tribune.

From 1951 to 1964 Knebel wrote a syndicated column, "Potomac Fever," and then with the making of a hit film from "Seven Days in May," he gave up the newspaper business to become a full-time novelist. A second novel, "Vanished," was made into a successful movie in 1970, and both occasionally show up on latenight TV.

He has written nine novels on his own, "and the only non-success was one about Kauai called 'Dave Sulkin Cares,'" he added. "It was a terrible title — an editor should have argued me out of it."

Knebel's most recent book, "Poker Game," was published last year and since then the 72-year-old author has written travel articles for the New York Times and a piece for American Health about living with a colostomy that resulted from rectal cancer eight years ago.

Accident did not stop logger

SCEARCYVILLE, Minn. (AP) — Ripping through a plot of land on a tree skidder, Gene Cayler looks right at home in the woods. He grew up learning the logging trade, and to this day says it's the only thing he really knows.

But this isn't the story of your average logger. When Cayler was 18 years old he became a victim of the trade he knows and loves so well.

On Feb. 2, 1968, Cayler was working near Mora, cutting down two trees standing next to each other.

As one of the trees began to topple, it caused the top of the other to break loose and swing toward Cayler. Although it didn't land on him, it did strike him, knocking him to the ground.

"I was instantly paralyzed from the waist down and was taken to the hospital. Later, infection set in and I lost both of my legs," he said.

Cayler vividly remembers his days in the hospital following his accident. "I had a broken back and they (the hospital staff) did everything for me. But once, when I was moved to the rehabilitation center, a nurse came in with a back brace and told me I was going to put it on myself.

"We argued a couple of hours before I did it. She proved to me I could do things by myself. I owe a lot to this nurse."

Now 35, Cayler continues to work in the woods, operating a skidder and caterpillar and overhauling and repairing engines.

"I've worked in the woods since I was 14 years old, ever since I was big enough to run a saw. I've always been in the woods. It's the only thing I know," he explained.

Cayler now operates his own business and usually employs two people to work with him. The caterpillar and skidder are his, as well as a truck and trailer he uses to pull the heavy equipment to various logging sites.

Most of the heavy equipment Cayler operates comes equipped with hand controls, so he has no problem operating them. But his over-the-road vehicles are equipped with customized hand controls.

At the work site, Cayler depends mostly on moving from one machine to the other with his wheelchair, although there are times when he needs to be lifted from one area to another.

Cayler is a self-taught mechanic and does most of his own mechanical work. "I went to a school for machinists, but I learned mechanics all on my own," he said. "You learn by doing and by making mistakes."

Cayler married Mary Schwantes last December, and the couple now live near Searcyville, a small community west of Brainerd. Mrs. Cayler, at times, also logs with her husband.

Their house has had nothing special done to it to accommodate Cayler.

Cayler says he enjoys fishing and building model cars during his spare time.

Cultured pearl venture a 'first'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Some 250,000 irritated mussels are reluctantly growing a crop of pearls for John Latendresse in unpolluted lakes at secret locations in Louisiana, Texas and Tennessee.

It is the first commercial cultured pearl venture in this country, the result of years of research that started in Tennessee in 1963.

"For security reasons, I can't say where the lakes are," Latendresse says. "Everyone wants to learn our secrets. And we are afraid of losing some of our pearl farms due to toxicity."

What he means is that an unfriendly competitor could dump chemicals into the water and foul up production. Mussels choke in polluted water — one reason 23 species are on the endangered species list.

Latendresse's American Pearl Farms, of Camden, Tenn., looks forward to harvesting pearls by the bushel. He sells most of them at prices ranging from $2 to $150 each.

"We have taken some already — nothing great," says Latendresse. "We sold them to collectors. They were clamoring to buy the first fresh water pearls grown in America."

The 250,000 mussels were gathered from rivers or lakes in Kentucky or Tennessee by scuba divers who work at depths of up to 93 feet.

In the nucleating laboratory in Camden, each mussel chosen to become the "mother" of a pearl is carefully pried open by one of the firm's 41 employees. A tiny bit of matter, either a chunk of meat cut out of a "sacrifice" mussel or a bead of shell, is placed inside.

It takes 10 to 15 minutes. After that, the mother mussel goes back into the holding trough to rest and recuperate and to be transferred later to a lake.

There the mothers spend the rest of their life, two or three years, suspended on a net, pampered and monitored, doing their best to ease the irritation caused by the foreign material placed within their body by coating it with layers of calcium and lustrous nacre.

In two or three years, each mother mussel has made a pearl, hopefully a nice round one, since they are preferred over the egg shapes, baroques and "sticks."

Latendresse says a harvest is scheduled for fall, with the first major harvest to come in 1986. He says a well-managed farm of 30 surface acres will produce about 5 million pearls.

Preparations called key to enjoying trip

CHICAGO (AP) — Families planning a summer camping trip should make reservations from two to eight weeks in advance, especially for campsites in the most popular locations, the National Park Service advises.

Using a modern method to help people enjoy an old-fashioned kind of vacation, the service makes reservations by computer, through Ticketron.

Whether you're setting your sights on the Colorado Rocky Mountains, the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia or Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming, you'll find they all have something special to offer visitors. More than a third of the 300 areas in the National Park system have camping facilities available.

To make reservations at the park areas through Ticketron, visit sporting goods and department stores or automobile clubs and ask for the National Park Ticketron reservation form. Or write: National Park Service, Ticketron Reservation Office, Box 2715, San Francisco, CA 94126 (no phone reservations).

Reservations may also be made by visiting the park sites or by contacting the National Park Service offices in San Francisco, Atlanta, Denver, Philadelphia, Los Angeles or Phoenix. For more information on the National Parks, write to: Division of Public Information, National Park Service, Washington, DC 20240.

With destination in mind, assembling the necessary equipment is the next priority in preparation for the camping trip, notes a spokesman for a major camp equipment manufacturer.

"Line everything up where you can take a look at it and determine whether repair or additional equipment is needed," suggests Beverly Crown, marketing vice president of the Chicago-based Henderson Camp Products, which produces the White Stag, Trail Blazer and Base Camp lines.

The tent is a good place to start, she points out, since it is also the most important to overall "creature" comfort.

"If the tent's seams have stretched loose or nicks appear, allowing rain seepage, these may be filled with beeswax or wax sticks available at campstores," she says. "If, however, seams, holes and cracks are beyond repair, a tent may be item No. 1 on the shopping list."

She offers these tips in selecting a new tent.

—Decide if you will use the tent for general purpose camping only, or if you will use it for camping and backpacking. If you are backpacking you may want to give up some inside room for extra pounds off. Most tents today are made of lightweight synthetic blends, with fast rigging, aluminum and fiberglass poles and stakes.

—Decide if privacy is important. Would you rather have one tent for four people, or two smaller tents, for instance? Tents are available in many sizes and shapes, from geodesic dome, to cabin, and A-frame tents.

—When checking for quality, look carefully at zippers and detail of seaming around windows and door. Make sure there is adequate ventilation using "no-see-um" mosquito netting.

—Allow about 3 by 8 feet per person for space. A typical four-person dome tent, for camping and backpacking, may be 10 feet by 12 feet with 6 foot headroom, weighing 13 pounds overall, including fly, poles and stakes, and costing $110 to $200 and up.

Sleeping bags are also an essential part of the equipment lineup. Wash sleeping bags with mild soap by hand, when needed, suggests Ms. Crown. Dry cleaning is not recommended because of close breathing proximity, and unpredictability of solvents used.

Make sure the insulation or "loft" is suitable for the temperatures where the bags are being used. While children's sizes are often hard to find, several manufacturers provide children's designs.

Upon arrival, check at the Ranger Station for assignment location. User fees average $4-$6 per family per day.

Wine business is improving

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — When the first batch of unpretentiously labeled "Rhodesian white wine" was almost ready for bottling 12 years ago, someone, by mistake, poured it all into four large vats used to store vinegar.

Red-faced vintners canceled a tasting party for dignitaries. And cynics suggested that vinegar probably improved the flavor of the first commercially produced wine in the former British colony.

Efforts to create a wine industry in a high-altitude African country of hot, rainy summers and dry winters — the reverse of the ideal climate — were dismissed as a joke. But today viticulturists and vintners are having the last laugh.

The multimillion-dollar wine industry in Zimbabwe, which changed its name from Rhodesia at independence April 18, 1980, is sparkling.

"The grape growing here is rather haphazard," concedes Tom Southwell, 69, who produces grapes on his 40-acre Chikanga farm in the eastern highlands. "We muddle through."

But Helmut Becker of West Germany's Geisenheim Research Institute said after a recent visit to Zimbabwe that the country had the potential to produce high-quality wine.

"They just need to experiment and find out the right sorts of grapes to match the climate and ground conditions," Becker said.

Ian Sieg, South African-born cellar master for Monis Wineries' Mukuyu estate near Marondera 62 miles east of Harare, says that Zimbabwe wines are getting better all the time.

"In the past, we lacked the expertise, the knowledge and the technology," Sieg says. "But by research, modern techniques and experience we are overcoming our special problems."

Buildings 'roll with punches'

TOKYO (AP) — When the strongest earthquake and construction methods especially tailored for an earthquake-prone environment like Japan's.

Japan's Meteorological Agency said the quake had registered 7.9 on the Richter scale, calling that the highest reading since 1968 when a quake in northern Japan killed 45, and equal to the "Great Kanto Earthquake" of 1923.

Despite the seeming power and duration of the quake — some Tokyoites, accustomed to frequent tremors, said it was the longest they'd ever experienced — damage was negligible and only one person died, a woman who suffered a heart attack in her Yokohama home.

This nation is hit by some 1,000 tremors a year strong enough to be felt. Three times this century, in 1923, 1946 and 1948, quake deaths have climbed into the thousands, topped by the Sept. 1, 1923, "Great Kanto Earthquake" that leveled vast areas of Tokyo and Yokohama, killing some 140,000.

Safer heating and cooking equipment, sturdier homes and government safety campaigns have reduced the danger of fire, the primary killer when those quakes struck Japan's largely wooden cities.

In May 1983, a big sea-quake off northern Japan killed 104 people in Japan and two in South Korea, almost all of them washed out to sea by tsunami, or tidal waves, generated by the subterranean shock.

Ninety-nine were injured in a 1982 tremor on the northern island of Hokkaido and 27 died in the northern city of Sendai in 1978.

But not one death in any of those recent quakes has resulted from the collapse of a large building.

After this year's March 6 quake, Tokyo metropolitan government officials said they had received no reports of significant damage to the city's 181 buildings of 12 stories or more.

All of those have been erected since 1963 when a decades-old law was amended to allow buildings to exceed the previous limit of 102 feet.

Generally primarily credited with the quake-resistant highrise design is Dr. Kiyoshi Muto, now a retired 80-year-old Tokyo University professor, who in the early 1960s developed a technique of building flexible structures in place of the "rigid construction concept" that had been favored for decades.

Dr. Yorihiro Ohsaki, 62, president of Ohsaki Research Institute Inc., a major Japanese firm conducting architectural research and development, said Muto had brought a "revolution to Japan's, and the world's, seismic architecture."

"Theoretically, buildings as tall as 3,300 feet can be built in this earthquake-prone nation, thanks to the 'flexible construction' concept developed by Dr. Muto," said Ohsaki.

Policy aims at new image

LONDON (AP) — The 28 colleges of historic Oxford University have approved a simplified admission procedure that may draw more students from statefunded schools and counter Oxford's image as a domain of the privately educated upper class.

The main change will eliminate private school students' extra term to cram for the Oxford entrance exam, putting them on more equal footing with graduates of state-maintained schools, said Edward Baskerville, secretary of the colleges' admissions office.

"The aim was really to simplify the application procedure, but it may also have the effect of attracting more applications from (state-) maintained schools," he told The Associated Press in an interview.

Despite efforts to recruit students from working-class backgrounds, about half of the some 2,700 applicants annually accepted by Oxford come from the privileged 7 percent of the population educated in private secondary schools.

An Oxford degree retains much of its value as an uppercrust credential giving entry to the higher levels of the civil service and diplomatic service.

But Baskerville rejects the colleges' elitist image recalled in the television series "Brideshead Revisited."

"Our record of admission of students from the (state-) maintained sector is already good," he said. "The 'Brideshead Revisited' image just is not representative of modern Oxford."

The balance of state and private school students admitted roughly reflects the proportion who apply, Baskerville said. Of those who applied for admission in 1983, 4,000 were state students and 3,000 private.

"Whether the new procedure makes us more egalitarian in the eyes of those who spent too much time watching 'Brideshead' remains to be seen," Baskerville said.

The change adopted by the colleges in December goes into effect for students applying for admission in September 1986.

Most British students headed for the college apply in the autumn of their last year and are accepted contingent on performance in essay achievement tests called Advanced Level exams taken at the end of that year.

Candidates for Oxford and Cambridge, however, must take special entrance exams in November on the subjects they hope to study.

Private school applicants have been able to spend an extra autumn term after their "A-levels" specifically cramming for the entrance test. State schools do not offer such a term.

"May God's Love Be Reflected in Your Face"

Group urges better education

WASHINGTON (AP) — Too little science is taught in elementary schools, too few high school teachers are well grounded in chemistry, and even college courses in chemistry fail to fill the needs of students, according to a special task force of the American Chemical Society.

In a recent report they offered 40 recommendations to help solve these and other pressing problems of chemistry education.

"One of the most important changes that must be made is a reemphasis of laboratory work," says Dr. Peter Yankwich, a chemistry professor at the University of Illinois, Urbana, and chair of the task force. "Students are expected to learn from watching a teacher demonstrate a principle like neutralization of an acid with a base, but it's just not the same as giving a student 'hands on' experience."

Laboratory exercises have been used less and less in recent years because they are expensive and the logistics, such as scheduling time for each student to use a limited number of instruments, can be difficult, according to the report.

The task force emphasizes that laboratory work is important for students at all levels, from kindergarten to graduate school. In high school, the report says, 30 percent of class time should be dedicated to laboratory work.

Another major recommendation is for "vigorous and large expansion of National Science Foundation and other federal programs to upgrade the quality of science instruction through direct service to teachers." According to the report, only a quarter of elementary school teachers feel confident in teaching what little science is in their curriculum.

At the high school level, says Yankwich, the vast majority of students are not being taught chemistry by certificated teachers of chemistry. They are being taught by persons who have minimal background in chemistry and little if any qualifications to maintain and advance their working familiarity with the subject.

"We need to encourage teachers to keep up with the advances in their subjects, to expand their understanding of the sciences," he says. As recently as 1977, almost half of all high school science teachers had taken part in NSF-sponsored education programs, but those programs no longer exist and the number of teachers taking part in continuing education programs has declined significantly.

The task force also recommends establishing guidelines for college-level chemistry courses aimed at non-science majors.

"Chemistry is a neglected liberal art with an important role in contemporary society," Yankwich says.

"Understanding it is fundamental, particularly because our society must make many important decisions about technical questions on energy, health, disposal of toxic wastes.

Row house showcase for plan

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A century-old brick row home that fell into disrepair after housing a corner grocery and a candy shop has a new coat of paint and a new role as a showcase for energy conservation.

The two-bedroom Germantown home is a working display on how to save energy and money, yet live comfortably during winter cold and summer heat.

Known as the Energy House, the old home was selected for the conservation project because it is similar to 78 percent of the housing in Philadelphia, a city with over 370,000 row houses, according to Hap Haven, founder of the project.

Each Saturday, people tour the house to learn about insulation, weatherstripping, and other energy saving measures, such as furnace vent dampers and window quilts that can be lowered like shades. A slide show demonstrates the step-by-step process of making the house more energy efficient.

"A lot of people will discuss problems they are having in their own homes and we try to suggest solutions," says Linda Knapp, a volunteer.

The tours teach people how to take natural orientation of their houses to get the most from sunshine, shade and breezes and give them a better understanding of the heating and structural systems of their homes. Disadvantaged could get exposure to energy conservation.
