Remember the Alamo?

۲

Members of Jack Lott's family sure do. The First of their ancestors to settle in Texas, George Webb Slaughter, carried a message from Houston to the Alamo during its attack by Santa Anna. He was one of the last persons to escape the building before it fell.

Slaughter came from Mississippi to Sabine County, Texas, in 1830. He became a circuit rider in 1845, and moved to Palo Pinto County with his family in 1857. His son, John B. Slaughter, followed the westward progression of settlers, and established the U Lazy S Ranch in Garza and Borden Counties.

The ranch name and its brand, are a mixture of Slaughter's whimsey and the "Lazy S" brand of his brother C.C. Slaughter. John added a "U" to the "Lazy S" and said with a grin, "Well, that's us."

By this time the Slaughter family, all ranchers, had expanded. The family owned ranches spread out across Texas from Palo Pinto County in Texas to Socorro, New Mexico.

Like Slaughter, Jack Lott, a fifth neration Slaughter rancher, raises Herefords on the U Lazy S Ranch. Lott runs 3,000 cattle on the 54,000-acre ranch and rents 4,000 acres to farmers. Like most old Texas ranches, in fact, like most of Texas itself, legends surround the 82-year-old ranch. It is said that Indians stampeded herds of buffalo off a cliff on the ranch. They then scavenged the bones, meat and hide. Today for this reason, the cliff is known as "Buffalo Point."

where I'm going to double you." Established in 1906 and owned today by the Post-Montgomery joint venture, the Double U Hereford Ranch encompasses some 55,000 acres in Garza, Lynn and Hockley Counties. Each October the Double U holds its production sale, offering cattle from both its commercial and registered breding operations. About 80 commercial heifers are sold each year, along with 60 registered bulls and 30 registered heifers.

In addition, the ranch also produces about 12,000 acres of cotton.

many changes in the cattle business, including the public demand for leaner beef, which the ranch has met through selective breeding.

But even as things change, things stay the same. According to foreman Kenneth Marts, two of the biggest challenges today are brush control and drought, the same challenges which faced the ranch's original owners.

Ranch work is hard work, Marts asserts, and cowboys spend as much time with general chores as they do working cattle. "You have to really want to be a

Pets can cause sore

throats

Sometimes the family pet is just so lovable that it's hard to resist planting a big kiss on his snout or giving him an occasional bear hug.

Well, better try to control your impulses because researchers have recently discovered that family cats and dogs are four-footed hotbeds of strep infections, though they show no ill effects themselves.

American Health magazine reports that Dr. Stuart M. Copperman, a suburban New York pediatrician, was baffled by the way strep infections seemed to persist among certain children he treated, despite long-term antibiotic treatment. Finally, he decided to play a longshot: He had family cats and dogs examined for strep bacteria. Sure enough, more than 40 percent of the pets were harboring the organisms.
